| — | Viel tausend Blümlein auf der Au (Siehst Du am Weg ein Blümlein blühn) (A. Traeger), partsong, early; S B/18, 3 |
| — | Gurre-Lieder (J.P. Jacobsen, trans. R.F. Arnold), solo vv, choruses, orch, March 1900–March 1901, orchd Aug 1901–1903, July 1910–Nov 1911 (1912) |
| 13 | Friede auf Erden (C.F. Meyer), SSAATTBB, insts ad lib, Feb–March 1907, acc. Oct 1911; S A/18 |
| — | Der deutsche Michel (O. Kernstock), male vv, 1914 or 1915; S A/18 |
| 27 | Vier Stücke, SATB: Unentrinnbar (Schoenberg), Sept 1925; Du sollst nicht, du musst (Schoenberg), Oct 1925; Mond und Menschen (Tschan-Jo-Su, trans. H. Bethge), Oct 1925; Der Wunsch des Liebhabers (Hung-So-Fan, trans. Bethge), with cl, mand, vn, vc, Nov 1925; S A/18 |
| 28 | Drei Satiren (Schoenberg), SATB: Am Scheideweg, Nov 1925; Vielseitigkeit, Nov–Dec 1925; Der neue |

| | |
|---|---|
| | Klassizismus, with va, vc, pf, Nov–Dec 1925; pubd with appendix of three canons (see Canons below); S A/18 |
| — | Three folksongs, SATB, Jan 1929 (1930): Es gingen zwei Gespielen gut; Herzlieblich Lieb, durch Scheiden; Schein uns, du liebe Sonne; S A/18 |
| 35 | Sechs Stücke (Schoenberg), male vv: Hemmung, Feb 1930; Gesetz, March 1930; Ausdrucksweise, March 1930; Glück, March 1929; Landsknechte, March 1930; Verbundenheit, April 1929; S A/18 |
| 39 | Kol nidre (Jewish liturgy in Eng. with alterations and introduction), speaker, chorus, orch, Aug–Sept 1938; S A/19 |
| 44 | Prelude 'Genesis' (textless), SATB, orch, Sept 1945; S A/19 |
| 46 | A Survivor from Warsaw (Schoenberg), narr, male vv, orch, Aug 1947; S A/19 |
| 49 | Three folksongs, SATB, June 1948: Es gingen zwei Gespielen gut (Two comely maidens); Der Mai tritt ein mit Freuden (Now May has come with gladness); Mein Herz in steten Treuen (To her I shall be faithful); S A/19 |
| 50a | Dreimal tausend Jahre (D.D. Runes), SATB, April 1949; S A/19 |
| 50b | De profundis (Ps cxxx in Heb.), SSATBB, June–July 1950; S A/19 |
| 50c | Moderner Psalm (Schoenberg), speaker, chorus, orch, Oct 1950, inc.; S A/19 |

fragments

| | |
|---|---|
| — | Wann weder Mond noch Stern am Himmel stehn (L. Pfau), male vv,wind ens, June 1897; 54 bars; S B/18, 3 |
| — | Darthulas Grabgesang (J.W. von Goethe), 14vv, orch, April 1903; vocal score, 66 bars; S B/18, 3 |
| — | Wie das Kriegsvolk von Georg von Fronsberg singt (Des Knaben Wunderhorn), male vv, summer 1905; 33 bars; S B/18, 3 |
| — | Symphony with choral movements, 1914–15; sketches; M (extracts) |
| — | Die Jakobsleiter (orat, Schoenberg), solo vv, choruses, orch, June 1917–July 1922, rev. begun Oct 1944 and abandoned after bar 104; first half only composed in draft; text pubd 1917 and in A. Schönberg: Texte (Vienna, 1926); vocal score, arr. W. Zillig (1975); orchd by W. Zillig; S A/29 |
| — | Israel Exists Again (Schoenberg), chorus, orch, March–June 1949; short score, 55 bars; S A/19 |

ORCHESTRAL

| | |
|---|---|
| — | Adagio, v, harp, str, ?1896 |
| — | Gavotte und Musette (im alten Style), str, March 1897 |
| 4 | Verklärte Nacht, arr. str orch 1917, 2nd version 1943; S A/22 |
| 5 | Pelleas und Melisande, sym. poem, after M. Maeterlinck, July 1902–Feb 1903 |
| 9 | Kammersymphonie no.1, arr. full orch Nov 1922, 2nd version April 1935; S A/12 |
| 10 | String Quartet no.2, arr. S, str orch. ?1919 |
| 16 | Fünf Orchesterstücke: no.1 May 1909, nos.2–3 June 1909, no.4 July 1909, no.5 Aug 1909; S A/12; arr. reduced orch, Sept 1949; S A/14, 1 |
| 31 | Variationen für Orchester, May 1926, July–Aug 1928; S A/13 |
| 34 | Begleitungsmusik zu einer Lichtspielszene, Oct 1929–Feb 1930;S A/14, 1 |
| — | Cello Concerto, Nov 1932–Jan 1933 (1935); S A/27; red. by Schoenberg for vc, pf; S B/27, 1 [after Monn: Clavicembalo Concerto in D, 1746] |
| — | Concerto, str qt, orch, May–Aug 1933 (1963); S A/27 [after Handel: Concerto grosso op.6 no.7] |
| — | Suite, G, str, Sept–Dec 1934 (1935) |
| 36 | Violin Concerto, 1935–Sept 1936; S A/15 |
| 38 | Kammersymphonie no.2, Aug 1906–Dec 1916, Aug–Oct 1939; S A,B/11 |
| 42 | Piano Concerto, July–Dec 1942; S A/I5 |
| 43a | Theme and Variations, band, completed July 1943; S A/13; arr. orch as op.43b, summer 1943; S A/14, 1 |

fragments

| | |
|---|---|
| — | Waltz, str, early; 10 sections completed |
| — | Serenade, small orch, 1896; 1st movt completed, the other three inc. |
| — | Frühlings Tod, sym. poem, after Lenau, 1898; 260 bars of which 137 fully scored |
| — | Symphony, G, Feb 1900; Introduction, g, pf score, 73 bars |
| — | Passacaglia, March 1926; sketches; M |
| — | Symphony, Jan–Feb 1937; short score, 30–50 bars of each of the 4 movts |
| — | untitled work, Oct–Nov 1946; short score, 28 bars |
| — | untitled work, April 1948; short score, 25 bars |

CHAMBER

| | |
|---|---|
| — | 'Alliance' Walzer, 2 vn, early |
| — | 'Sonnenschein' Polka schnell, 2 vn, early |
| — | 3 Lieder ohne Worte, 2 vn, early |
| — | untitled work, d, vn, pf, early |
| — | Presto, C, str qt, ?1894; S A/20 |
| — | String Quartet, D, summer–autumn 1897 (1966); S A/20 |
| — | Scherzo in F and Trio in a, str qt, July–Aug 1897; rejected 2nd movt of preceding; S A/20 |
| 4 | Verklärte Nacht, after R. Dehmel, 2 vn, 2 va, 2 vc, completed Dec 1899; S A/22 |
| 7 | String Quartet no.1, d, summer 1904–Sept 1905;S A/20 |
| 9 | Kammersymphonie no.1, 15 insts, completed July 1906; S A,B/11 |
| 10 | String Quartet no.2, with S in movts 3 'Litanei' and 4 'Entrückung' (S. George), March 1907–Aug 1908; S A/20 |
| 16 | Fünf Orchesterstücke, arr. 11 insts, 1920; S A/13 |
| — | Three untitled pieces, wind qnt, org/harmonium, cel, str qt, db, Feb 1910, no.3 inc. (*c*1965) |
| — | Die eiserne Brigade, march, pf qnt, 1916 (1978) |
| 24 | Serenade, cl, b cl, mand, gui, vn, va, vc, with B in movt 4 'O könnt' ich je der Rach' an ihr genesen' (Petrarch, trans. K. Förster), Aug 1920–April 1923 |
| – | Weihnachtsmusik, 2 vn, vc, harmonium, pf, Dec 1921 (1975) |
| 26 | Wind Quintet, April 1923–Aug 1924; S A/22 |
| 29 | Suite, E♭-cl/fl, cl, b cl/bn, pf, vn, va, vc, Jan 1925–May 1926 |
| 30 | String Quartet no.3, Jan–March 1927; S A/21 |
| 37 | String Quartet no.4, April–July 1936; S A/21 |
| 45 | String Trio, Aug–Sept 1946; S A/21 |
| 47 | Phantasy, vn, pf, March 1949 |

fragments

| | |
|---|---|
| — | Clarinet Quintet, d; 28 bars |
| — | Toter Winkel, after G. Falke, 2 vn, 2 va, 2 vc, ?before op.4; 34 bars; S A/22 |
| — | String Quartet, d, summer 1901–summer 1904; fugue 80 bars, scherzo, 26 bars; S A, B/20 |
| — | String Quintet, D, winter 1904–5; 22 bars |
| — | Ein Stelldichein, after Dehmel, ob, cl, pf, vn, vc, Oct 1905; 90 bars (1981) |
| — | Kammersymphonie, a, ? before op.9; 22 bars |
| — | String Septet, March 1918; 25 bars; S A/22 |
| — | Tempo zwischen langsamen Walzer und Polacca, movt intended for op.24, Aug 1920; 40 bars; M |
| — | Gerpa, F, for Schoenberg's son Georg (hn + vn + pf) and himself (vn + pf + harmonium), Nov 1922; theme and 3 variations completed |
| — | Sonata, vn, pf, Jan-Feb 1928; 43 bars |
| — | String Quartet, C, *c*1930; 51 bars; S B/21 |
| — | String Quartet, June 1949; openings of all 4 movts; S B/21 |

SOLO VOCAL

for 1v, pf unless otherwise stated

Songs, 1893–97, S A, B/2, listed in approximate chronological order suggested there: In hellen Träumen hab ich Dich oft geschaut (A. Gold), 1893; Drüben geht die Sonne scheiden (Schilflied) (N. Lenau), 1893; Einst hat vor deines Vaters Haus (Pfau); Ich hab' zum Brunnen ein Krüglein gebracht (Das zerbrochene Krüglein) (M. Greif); Dass gestern eine Wespe Dich; Juble, schöne junge Rose; Warum bist du aufgewacht (Nachtblumen) (Pfau); War ein Blümlein wunderfein (Vergissmeinnicht) (Pfau); Lass deine Sichel rauschen (Lied der Schnitterin) (Pfau); Im Fliederbusch ein Vöglein sass (Zwiegesang) (R. Reinick); Dass schon die Maienzeit vorüber (Herbst) (A. Christen); Könnt ich zu dir, mein Licht (Erste Wünsche) (Pfau); Mein Schatz ist wie ein Schneck (Pfau); Gott grüss dich, Marie (Nach einem Tanzlied) (Pfau); Der Pflanze, die dort über dem Abgrund schwebt (Pfau); Einsam bin ich und alleine (Pfau); Nur das tut mir so bitterweh' (O. von Redwitz); Du kleine bist so lieb und hold (Zweifler) (Pfau); Du kehrst mir den Rücken

(Pfau); Ich grüne wie die Weide grünt (Die Trauerweide) (W. Wackernagel); Mein Herz, das ist ein tiefer Schacht; In meinem Garten die Nelken (Mädchenlied) (E. Geibel) 1896; Als mein Auge sie fand (Sehnsucht) (J. C. von Zedlitz) 1896; Duftreich ist die Erde (Ekloge) (J. Vrchlicky, trans. F. Adler), ?1895, rev. ?1897; Sang ein Bettlerpärlein (Mädchenlied) (P. Heyse), ?1897; Waldesnacht, du wunderkühle (Waldesnacht) (Heyse), ?1897; Aprilwind, alle Knospen (Mädchenfrühling) (Dehmel), Sept 1897; Mädel, lass das Stricken (Nicht doch!) (Dehmel), Sept 1897

Es ist ein Flüstern in der Nacht (T. Storm), T, str qt, ?1895–6; S A/24

1 — Zwei Gesänge (K. von Levetzow), Bar, pf, 1898: Dank; Abschied; S A/1

— Sie trug den Becher in der Hand (Die Beiden) (H. von Hofmannsthal), April 1899; S A/2

— Du musst nicht meinen (Mannesbangen) (Dehmel), April/May 1899; S A/2

— Zwischen Weizen und Korn (Mailied) (Goethe), May 1899, S A/2

2 — Vier Lieder: Erwartung (Dehmel), Aug 1899; Schenk mir deinen goldenen Kamm (Dehmel), 1899; Erhebung (Dehmel), Nov 1899; Waldsonne (J. Schlaf), *c*1900; S A/1

— Dunkelnd über den See (Gruss in die Ferne) (H. Lingg), Aug 1900; S A/2

— Lied der Waldtaube [from Gurre-Lieder], arr. Mez, 17 insts, 1900, arr. Dec 1922 (1923); S A/3

— Brettl-Lieder: Der genügsame Liebhaber (H. Salus), April 1901 (1975), S A/2; Einfältiges Lied (Salus), April 1901 (1975), S A/2; Nachtwandler (G. Falke), S, pic, F-tpt, side drum, pf, April 1901 (1969), S A/24; Jedem das Seine (Colly), June 1901 (1975), S A/2; Mahnung (G. Hochstetter), July 1901 (1975), S A/2; Galathea (F. Wedekind), Sept 1901 (1975), S A/2; Gigerlette (O. Bierbaum), 1901 (1975), S A/2; Seit ich so viele Weiber sah (Aus dem Spiegel von Arcadia) (E. Schikaneder), 1901 (1975), S A/2

— Deinem Blick mich zu bequemen (Goethe), Jan 1903; S A, B/2

3 — Sechs Lieder, Mez/Bar, pf: Wie Georg von Frundsberg von sich selber sang (Des Knaben Wunderhorn), March 1903; Die Aufgeregten (G. Keller), Nov 1903; Warnung (Dehmel), May 1899, autumn 1903; Hochzeitslied (Jacobsen, trans. Arnold), *c*1901; Geübtes Herz (Keller), Sept–Nov 1903; Freihold (H. Lingg), Nov 1900, autumn 1903; S A/1

6 — Acht Lieder: Traumleben (J. Hart), Dec 1903; Alles (Dehmel), Sept 1905; Mädchenlied (P. Remer), Oct 1905; Verlassen (H. Conradi), Dec 1903; Ghasel (Keller), Jan 1904; Am Wegrand (J.H. Mackay), Oct 1905; Lockung (K. Aram), Oct 1905; Der Wanderer (F. Nietzsche), April–Oct 1905; S A/1

8 — Sechs Orchester-Lieder: Natur (H. Hart), Dec 1903–March 1904; Das Wappenschild (Des Knaben Wunderhorn), Nov 1903–May 1904; Sehnsucht (Des Knaben Wunderhorn), completed April 1905; Nie ward ich, Herrin, müd' (Petrarch, trans. Förster), June–July 1904; Voll jener Süsse (Petrarch, trans. Förster), completed Nov 1904; Wenn Vöglein klagen (Petrarch, trans. Förster), completed Nov 1904; S A/3

12 — Zwei Balladen, March–April 1907: Jane Grey (H. Ammann), Der verlorene Haufen (V. Klemperer); S A/1

14 — Zwei Lieder: Ich darf nicht dankend (George), Dec 1907; In diesen Wintertagen (K. Henckel), Feb 1908; S A/1

15 — Das Buch der hängenden Gärten (George), ?March 1908–Feb/March 1909; Unterm Schutz von dichten Blättergründen; Hain in diesen Paradiesen; Als Neuling trat ich ein in dein Gehege, March 1908; Da meine Lippen reglos sind und brennen, March 1908; Saget mir, auf welchem Pfade, March 1908; Jedem Werke bin ich fürder tot, April/May 1908; Angst und Hoffen wechselnd mich beklemmen, April 1908; Wenn ich heut nicht deinen Leib berühre, April 1908; Streng ist uns das Glück und Spröde; Das schöne Beet betracht ich mir im Harren; Als wir hinter dem beblühmten Tore; Wenn sich bei heiliger Ruh in tiefen Matten; Du lehnest wider eine Silberweide, Sept 1908; Sprich nicht immer von dem Laub, Sept 1908, Feb/March 1909; Wir bevölkerten die abend-düstern Lauben, Feb 1909; S A/1

— Am Strande (?Rilke), Feb 1909; S A/1

20 — Herzgewächse (Maeterlinck, trans. K.L. Ammer and F. von Oppeln-Bronikowski), high S, cel, harp, harmonium, Dec 1911; S A/24

21 — Dreimal sieben Gedichte aus Albert Girauds Pierrot lunaire (trans. O.E. Hartleben), speaker, fl + pic, cl + b cl, vn + va, vc, pf, 1912: Part i: Mondestrunken, April; Colombine, April; Der Dandy, April; Eine blasse Wäscherin, April; Valse de Chopin, May; Madonna, May; Der kranke Mond, April; Part ii: Nacht, May; Gebet an Pierrot, March; Raub, May; Rote Messe, April; Galgenlied, May; Enthauptung, May; Die Kreuze, June (?May)–July; Part iii: Heimweh, May; Gemeinheit, April–June; Parodie, May; Der Mondfleck, May; Serenade, April; Heimfahrt, April–May; O alter Duft, May; S A/24

22 — Vier Lieder, 1v, orch: Seraphita (Dowson, trans. George), completed Oct 1913; Alle welche dich suchen (Rilke), Nov–Dec 1914; Mach mich zum Wächter deiner Weiten (Rilke), Dec 1914–Jan 1915; Vorgefühl (Rilke), July 1916; S A/3

— Allein Gott in der Höh' sei Ehr' (N. Hovesch), chorale arr., A, pf trio, between 1918 and 1925

— Four folksongs, Jan 1929 (1930): Der Mai tritt ein mit Freuden; Es gingen zwei Gespielen gut; Mein Herz in steten Treuen; Mein Herz ist mir gemenget; S A/1

41 — Ode to Napoleon (Byron), reciter, pf, str qt/str orch, March–June 1942; S A/24

48 — Drei Lieder (J. Haringer), A/B, pf: Sommermüd, Jan 1933; Tot, Feb 1933; Mädchenlied, Feb 1933; S A/1

fragments

— Gethsemane (Dehmel), Bar, orch, May 1899; vocal score, 88 bars; S B/3

— Jeduch (H. Löns), ballad intended for op.12, March–April 1907; 82 bars; M (part), S A/2

— Mignon (Kennst du das Land) (Goethe), autumn 1907; 54 bars; M, S B/2, 2

— Friedensabend (George), intended for op.15, April–May 1908; 28 bars; M, S B/2, 2

spurious

— Es steht ein Bild noch immer da (Gedenken); S A/1

KEYBOARD

— Three Ländler, pf, early

— Lied ohne Wörte (Nocturne), pf, early; arr. small orch, lost

— Drei Klavierstücke, Oct 1894; S A/4

— Sechs Stücke, pf duet, ?1896; S A/5

9 — Kammersymphonie no.1, arr. pf duet before 1912; S A/5

11 — Drei Klavierstücke, nos.1–2 Feb 1909, no.3 Aug 1909; S A/4

19 — Sechs kleine Klavierstücke, nos.1–5 Feb 1911, no.6 June 1911; S A/4

23 — Fünf Klavierstücke, nos.1–2 and beginning of 4, July 1920, rest Feb 1923; S A/4

25 — Suite, pf, Prelude and beginning of Intermezzo July 1921, rest Feb–March 1923; S A/4

33a — Klavierstück, Dec 1928–April 1929; S A/4

33b — Klavierstück, Oct 1931; S A/4

38b — Kammersymphonie no.2, arr. 2 pf Dec 1941–Jan 1942; S A/5

40 — Variations on a Recitative, org, Aug–Oct 1941; S A/5

fragments

— Scherzo, f♯, pf, early; 80 bars; S B/4

— Zwei Stücke, pf duet, early; no.2 inc.; S B/5

— Untitled piece, c♯, pf, early; 77 bars; S B/4

— Untitled piece, A♭, pf, Dec 1900–Feb 1901; 46 bars; S B/4

— Untitled piece, B♭, pf, winter 1905–6; 26 bars; M; S B/4

— Untitled piece, G, pf, ?spring 1925; 41 bars; S B/4

— Klavierstück, Feb 1931; 35 bars; S B/4

— Untitled piece, C, July 1931; 25½ bars; S B/4

— Phantasia, pf duet, Jan 1937; 25 bars; S A/5

— Stück, 2 pf, Jan 1941; 17 bars; S A/5

— Organ Sonata, Aug 1941; openings of first 2 movts, 50 and 25 bars; S A/5

— Untitled piece, American period; 22 bars; S B/4

— Alla marcia, E♭; complete 2-staff sketch intended for instrumentation, 22 bars

CANONS

all published in S A, B/18

4-pt canon 'O dass der Sinnen doch so viele sind!' (Goethe), ?April 1905; 4-pt canon 'Wenn der schwer Gedrückte klagt' (Goethe), ?April 1905; 'Wer auf die Welt kommt' (Goethe), 1916; 'Getretner Quark' (Goethe), 1916; 'Dümmer ist nichts zu ertragen' (Goethe), 1916; 'Einen Helden mit Lust' (Goethe), 1916; 4-pt mirror canon for Georg Valker, *c*1922

'Eyn doppelt Spiegel- und Schlüssel-Kanon', 4 pts, Feb 1922; 'Ein Spruch und zwei Variationen über ihn: O glaubet nicht, was ihr nicht könnt, sei wertlos', op.28 App.1, 4 pts (Schoenberg), Dec 1925–Jan 1926; Canon for str qt, op.28 App.2, Feb 1926; 'Legitimation als Canon: Wer Ehr erweist, muss selbst davon besitzen', op.28 App.3, 6 pts (Schoenberg), April 1926; 4-pt canon by augmentation and diminution, April 1926; 4-pt canon for Erwin Stein 'Von meinen Steinen' (Schoenberg), Dec 1926; 'Arnold Schönberg beglückwünscht herzlichst Concert Gebouw', 5 parts (Schoenberg), March 1928; Canon in 3 keys for the Genossenschaft deutscher Tonsetzer, 5 pts, April 1928; Mirror canon for str qt, April 1931; 4-pt mirror canon, Dec 1931; 2-pt mirror canon for Herrmann Abraham 'Spiegle Dich im Werk' (Schoenberg), Dec 1931

Mirror canon for str qt, *c*1932; 4-pt mirror canon for Carl Moll, Dec 1932; 3-pt puzzle canon for Carl Engel 'Jedem geht es so (No man can escape)' (Schoenberg in Ger. and Eng.), April 1933, text 1943; 3-pt puzzle canon for Carl Engel 'Mir auch ist es so ergangen (I, too, was not better off)' (Schoenberg in Ger. and Eng.), April 1933, text 1943; 4-pt perpetual canon, April 1933; 4-pt mirror canon, April 1933; 4-pt mirror canon, Dec 1933; 3-pt puzzle canon, March 1934; 4-part puzzle canon by augmentation and diminution, March 1934; 3-pt canon for D.J. Bach 'Wer mit der Welt laufen will' (Schoenberg), March 1926 (text), July 1934; 4-pt puzzle canon, March 1934; 4-pt puzzle canon for Rudolph Ganz 'Es ist zu dumm' (Schoenberg), Sept 1934

4-pt mirror canon, Sept 1934; 4-pt mirror canon, 1934; 7-pt perpetual canon, 1934; 4-pt mirror canon, 1934; 4-pt perpetual canon with free bass for Alban Berg 'Darf ich eintreten' (Schoenberg), Feb 1935; 4-pt mirror canon for Frau Charlotte Dieterle, Nov 1935; 4-pt mirror canon, Jan 1936; 4-pt double canon, 1938; 4-pt canon 'Mr Saunders I owe you thanks' (Schoenberg), Dec 1939; 3-pt mirror canon, *c*1940; 4-pt mirror canon, June 1943; 4-pt canon for Artur Rodzinsky 'I am almost sure, when your nurse will change your diapers' (Schoenberg), March 1945; 4-pt double canon for Thomas Mann on his 70th birthday, June 1945; 4-part canon 'Gravitationszentrum eigenen Sonnensystems' (Schoenberg), Aug 1949; 4-pt canon, American period

fragments

'Gutes thu rein aus des Guten Lieben' (Goethe), ?April 1905, lacking coda; 'Wer geboren in bös'sten Tagen' (Goethe), ?April 1905, lacking coda

ARRANGEMENTS

H. Susaneck: Irmen Walzer, 2 vn; R. Waldman: So wie du, 2 vn; Wiener Fiakerlied, 2 vn; all early

A. Zemlinsky: Sarema, parts of vocal score, summer 1897

H. Schenker: Vier syrische Tänze, orchd 1903

J.S. Bach: Chorale Prelude 'Komm, Gott, Schöpfer, heiliger Geist' BWV631, orchd April 1922 (1925); S A/25

J.S. Bach: Chorale Prelude 'Schmücke dich, O liebe Seele' BWV654, orchd April–June 1922 (1925); S A/25

Johann Strauss (ii): Kaiserwalzer op.437, fl, cl, pf qnt, April 1925 (*c*1960)

J.S. Bach: Prelude and Fugue, E♭, BWV552, orchd May–Oct 1928 (1929); S A/25

J. Brahms: Piano Quartet, g, op.25, orchd May–Sept 1937; S A/26

Hack-work (in early years Schoenberg scored some 6000 pages of operettas by Zepler and others; the following examples of his hack-work, except for the second, were published): H. van Eyken: Lied der Walküre (F. Dahn), orchd ?1901, S A/25; B. Zepler: Mädchenreigen, orchd April 1902, S A/25; A. Lortzing: Der Waffenschmied von Worms, pf duet, ?1903; G. Rossini: Il barbiere di Siviglia, pf duet, ?1903; F. Schubert: Rosamunde: overture, entr'actes and ballet, pf duet, rev. Schoenberg, ?1903

Continuo realizations, 1911 or 1912: M.G. Monn: Sinfonia a 4, A (1912); M.G. Monn: Vc Conc., g (1912) also arr. vc, pf (1913) and cadenzas, S B 27, 1; M.G. Monn: Cembalo Conc., D (1912); C. Monn: Divertimento, D (1912); F. Tůma: Sinfonia a 4, e (1968); F. Tůma: Partita a 3, A (1968); F. Tůma: Partita a 3, c (1968); F. Tůma: Partita a 3, G (1968)

Songs orchd for Julia Culp: L. van Beethoven: Adelaide op.46, Feb 1912; C. Loewe: Der Nöck op.129 no.2, autumn 1912, S A/25; F. Schubert: Three songs, Sept 1912

Arrs. for the Society for Private Musical Performances (Schoenberg had a hand in various reductions for ensemble, but very few are wholly his): Mahler: Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen; Johann Strauss (ii): Rosen aus dem Süden op.388, harmonium, pf qnt, May 1921; Johann Strauss (ii): Lagunenwalzer op.411, harmonium, pf qnt, May 1921

Instrumentation exercises for teaching purposes, summer 1921: F. Schubert: Ständchen D889, 1v, cl, bn, mand, gui, str qt (1988); L. Denza: Funiculì, funiculà, cl, gui, mand, str trio (1988); J. Sioly: Weil i a alter Dreher bin, cl, gui, mand, str trio (1988)

Principal publishers: Universal, Belmont, Dreililien, Hansen, G. Schirmer, Schott

MSS in Arnold Schönberg Center, Vienna (composer's collection), US-Wc, DN, Universal Edition (Vienna), Robert Owen Lehman collection (US-NYpm)

WRITINGS

TEXTS WITHOUT MUSIC

Totentanz der Prinzipien, Jan 1915 [for Sym. sketched 1914–15]; pubd in A. Schönberg: Texte (Vienna, 1926)

Wendepunkt, ? Dec 1916 or earlier [for melodrama in Kammersymphonie no.2]; pubd in Maegaard, i (1972)

Requiem, first section 1920 or 1921, rest Nov 1923; pubd in A. Schönberg: Texte (Vienna, 1926)

Der biblische Weg, drama, June 1926–July 1927; ed. with Eng. trans., M. Lazar, Journal of the Arnold Schoenberg Institute, xvii (1994)

Psalmen, Gebete und andere Gespräche mit und über Gott, Sept 1950–July 1951 (Mainz, 1956) [16 pieces, orig. entitled 'Moderne Psalmen', the last inc., the first partly composed as op.50c]

Fragments: Aberglaube, opera lib, early, 2 acts and beginning of 3rd: Odoaker, opera lib, early, 3 opening scenes; Die Schildbürger, comic opera lib, after G. Schwab, June–July 1901, 2 of 3 acts

THEORETICAL AND PEDAGOGICAL

Harmonielehre, spring 1910–July 1911 (Vienna, 1911, 3/1922; Eng. trans., abridged, 1948, complete, 1978)

Models for Beginners in Composition, completed 12 Sept 1942 (Los Angeles, 1942, enlarged 2/1943, rev. 3/1972 by L. Stein)

Structural Functions of Harmony, completed March 1948, ed. H. Searle (London, 1954, rev. 2/1969 by L. Stein)

Preliminary Exercises in Counterpoint, 1936–50, ed. L. Stein (London, 1963)

Fundamentals of Musical Composition, 1937–48, ed. G. Strang and L. Stein (London, 1967)

(fragments)

Das Komponieren mit selbständigen Stimmen, June 1911, ed. R. Stephan, AMw, xxix (1972), 239–46

Zusammenhang, Kontrapunkt, Instrumentation, Formenlehre, April 1917 (with insertion of 1926), ed. and trans. C.M. Cross and S. Neff (Lincoln, NE, 1994)

Die Lehre vom Kontrapunkt, Oct 1926

Der musikalische Gedanke und die Logik, Technik und Kunst seiner Darstellung, main MS June 1934–Aug 1936, ed. and trans. P. Carpenter and S. Neff (New York, 1995)

ESSAYS, LETTERS ETC

Style and Idea, ed. D. Newlin (New York, 1950) [15 essays]

Briefe, selected and ed. E. Stein (Mainz, 1958; Eng. trans., enlarged, 1964)

Schöpferische Konfessionen, ed. W. Reich (Zürich, 1964)

Testi poetici e drammatici, ed. L. Rognoni (Milan, 1967)

Arnold Schönberg–Franz Schreker: Briefwechsel, ed. F.C. Heller (Tutzing, 1974)

Berliner Tagebuch, ed. J. Rufer (Frankfurt, 1974); Eng. trans. in Journal of the Arnold Schoenberg Institute, ix (1986), 7–15

F. Busoni: Entwurf einer neuen Ästhetik der Tonkunst, mit handschriftlichen Anmerkungen von Arnold Schönberg (Frankfurt, 1974)

Style and Idea, ed. L. Stein (London, 1975) [104 essays]

Gesammelte Schriften, ed. I. Vojtěch (Frankfurt, 1976)

The Arnold Schoenberg–Hans Nachod Collection, ed. J. Kimmey (Detroit, 1979) [letters and early compositions]

Arnold Schönberg–Wassily Kandinsky: Briefe, Bilder und Dokumente einer aussergewöhnlichen Begegnung, ed. J. Hahl-Koch (Salzburg, 1980; Eng. trans., 1984)
The Berg–Schoenberg Correspondence: Selected Letters, ed. J. Brand, C. Hailey and D. Harris (New York, 1987)
Arnold Schoenberg Self-Portrait: a Collection of Articles, Program Notes, and Letters by the Composer about his own Works, ed. N. Schoenberg-Nono (Pacific Palisades, CA, 1988)
Arnold Schoenberg Correspondence: a Collection of Translated and Annotated Letters Exchanged with Guido Adler, Pablo Casals, Emanuel Feuermann and Olin Downes, ed. E.M. Ennulat (Metuchen, NJ, 1991)
Wassily Kandinsky und Arnold Schönberg: der Briefwechsel, ed. J. Hahl-Koch (Stuttgart, 1993)
Alexander Zemlinsky: Briefwechsel mit Arnold Schönberg, Anton Webern, Alban Berg und Franz Schreker, ed. H. Weber (Darmstadt, 1995)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

CATALOGUES, BIBLIOGRAPHIES

J. Rufer: Das Werk Arnold Schönbergs (Kassel, 1959, 2/1974; Eng. trans., 1962)
R. Brinkmann: Arnold Schönberg: Drei Klavierstücke Op.11 (Wiesbaden, 1969) [incl. bibliography of published writings]
J. Maegaard: Studien zur Entwicklung des dodekaphonen Satzes bei Arnold Schönberg, i (Copenhagen, 1972) [incl. catalogue of works 1900–33]
Journal of the Arnold Schoenberg Institute, i/1 (1976), 45–8; i/2 (1977), 111–13; i/3 (1977), 174–8; iii/1 (1979), 89–92; v/2 (1981), 213–25; ix/1 (1986), 84–107; xv/1 (1992), 111–59; xv/2 (1992), 101–33 [cumulative bibliography]
T. Satoh: A Bibliographic Catalog with Discography and a Comprehensive Bibliography of Arnold Schoenberg (Tokyo, 1978)
R.W. Shoaf: The Schoenberg Discography (Berkeley, 1986, rev. 2/1994)
Mitteilungen der Internationalen Schönberg-Gesellschaft, no.1 (1986), 10–14; nos.3–4 (1989), 19–23 [cumulative bibliography]
J. and J. Christensen: From Arnold Schoenberg's Literary Legacy: a Catalog of Neglected Items (Warren, MI, 1988)
Mitteilungen aus der Schönberg-Forschung (1992–)
A Preliminary Inventory of Correspondence to and from Arnold Schoenberg, Journal of the Arnold Schoenberg Institute, xviii–xix (1995–6)

MONOGRAPHS

E. Wellesz: Arnold Schönberg (Leipzig, 1921; Eng. trans., 1925/R)
P. Stefan: Arnold Schönberg: Wandlung, Legende, Erscheinung, Bedeutung (Vienna, 1924)
H. Wind: Die Endkrise der bürgerlichen Musik und die Rolle Arnold Schönbergs (Vienna, 1935)
R. Leibowitz: Schönberg et son école (Paris, 1947; Eng. trans., 1949/R)
D. Newlin: Bruckner, Mahler, Schoenberg (New York, 1947, 2/1978)
T.W. Adorno: Philosophie der neuen Musik (Tübingen, 1949, 3/1967; Eng. trans., 1973/R)
R. Leibowitz: Introduction à la musique de douze sons (Paris, 1949, 3/1981)
H.H. Stuckenschmidt: Arnold Schönberg (Zürich, 1951, rev. 2/1957; Eng. trans., 1959)
J. Rufer: Die Komposition mit zwölf Tönen (Berlin, 1952; Eng. trans., 1954/R, 4/1969)
L. Rognoni: Espressionismo e dodecafonia (Turin, 1954, enlarged 2/1966 as La scuola musicale di Vienna; Eng. trans., 1977)
A. Payne: Schoenberg (London, 1968)
W. Reich: Arnold Schönberg oder der konservative Revolutionär (Vienna, 1968; Eng. trans., 1971, as Schoenberg: a Critical Biography)
R. Leibowitz: Schoenberg (Paris, 1969)
J. Maegaard: Studien zur Entwicklung des dodekaphonen Satzes bei Arnold Schönberg (Copenhagen, 1972)
E. Freitag: Arnold Schönberg in Selbstzeugnissen und Bilddokumenten (Reinbek, 1973)
H.H. Stuckenschmidt: Schönberg: Leben, Umwelt, Werk (Zürich, 1974; Eng. trans., 1977)
G. Manzoni: Arnold Schönberg: l'uomo, l'opera, i testi musicali (Milan, 1975)
C. Rosen: Arnold Schoenberg (New York, 1975)
G. Schubert: Schönbergs frühe Instrumentation (Baden-Baden, 1975)
M. Macdonald: Schoenberg (London, 1976)
J. Maegaard: Praeludier til musik af Schönberg (Copenhagen, 1976)
K. Velten: Schönbergs Instrumentation Bachscher und Brahmsscher Werke als Dokumente seines Traditionsverständnisses (Regensburg, 1976)
M. Pfisterer: Studien zur Kompositionstechnik in den frühen atonalen Werken von Arnold Schönberg (Neuhausen-Stuttgart, 1978)
A. Lessem: Music and Text in the Works of Arnold Schoenberg: the Critical Years, 1908–1922 (Ann Arbor, 1979)
U. Thieme: Studien zum Jugendwerk Arnold Schönbergs: Einflüsse und Wandlungen (Regensburg, 1979)
D. Newlin: Schoenberg Remembered: Diaries and Recollections (1938–76) (New York, 1980)
J. Kallir: Arnold Schoenberg's Vienna (New York, 1984)
M. Vogel: Schönberg und die Folgen: die Irrwege der neuen Musik, i: Schönberg (Bonn, 1984)
W. Bailey: Programmatic Elements in the Works of Schoenberg (Ann Arbor, 1984)
M. Mäckelmann: Arnold Schönberg und das Judentum: der Komponist und sein religiöses, nationales und politisches Selbstverständnis nach 1921 (Hamburg, 1984)
J.A. Smith: Schoenberg and his Circle: a Viennese Portrait (New York and London, 1986)
E. Haimo: Schoenberg's Serial Odyssey: the Evolution of his Twelve-Tone Method, 1914–1928 (Oxford, 1990)
A.L. Ringer: Arnold Schoenberg: the Composer as Jew (Oxford, 1990)
M. Sichardt: Die Entstehung der Zwölftonmethode Arnold Schönbergs (Mainz, 1990)
W. Thomson: Schoenberg's Error (Philadelphia, 1991)
S. Milstein: Arnold Schoenberg: Notes, Sets, Forms (Cambridge, 1992)
N. Nono-Schoenberg: Arnold Schoenberg, 1874–1951: Lebensgeschichte in Begegnungen (Klagenfurt, 1992)
W. Frisch: The Early Works of Arnold Schoenberg, 1893–1908 (Berkeley, 1993)
W. Sinkovicz: Mehr als zwölf Töne, Arnold Schönberg (Vienna, 1998)

COLLECTIONS OF ARTICLES AND ESSAYS

Der Merker, ii/17 (1910–11) [Schoenberg issue]
Arnold Schönberg mit Beiträgen von Alban Berg, Paris von Gutersloh [and others] (Munich, 1912); Eng. trans. in Schoenberg and his World, ed. W. Frisch (Princeton, NJ, 1999), 195–261
Arnold Schönberg zum fünfzigsten Geburtstage, Musikblätter des Anbruch, vi, suppl. (Vienna, 1924)
'Schönberg und seine Orchesterwerke', Pult und Taktstock, iv (1927), March–April
Arnold Schönberg zum 60. Geburtstag (Vienna, 1934)
M. Armitage, ed.: Schoenberg (New York, 1937/R)
The Canon, iii/2 (1949–50) [Schoenberg issue]
Stimmen, no.16 (1949) [Schoenberg issue]
The Score, no.6 (1952) [Schoenberg issue]
E. Stein: Orpheus in New Guises (London, 1953/R)
A. Webern: Der Weg zur neuen Musik, ed. W. Reich (Vienna, 1960; Eng. trans., 1963)
B. Boretz and E.T. Cone, eds.: Perspectives on Schoenberg and Stravinsky (Princeton, NJ, 1968, 2/1972/R)
'Toward the Schoenberg Centenary', PNM, xi/1–xiii/2 (1972–5)
E. Hilmar, ed.: Arnold Schönberg: Gedenkausstellung 1974 (Vienna, 1974)
Internationale Schönberg-Gesellschaft: Kongress I: Vienna 1974
ÖMz, xxix/6 (1974) [Schoenberg issue]
Zeitschrift für Musiktheorie, v/1 (1974) [Schoenberg issue]
Journal of the Arnold Schoenberg Institute (1976–96) [index to i–xii in xiii/1]
Mf, xxix/4 (1976) [Schoenberg issue]
C. Dahlhaus: Schönberg und andere: gesammelte Aufsätze zur neuen Musik (Mainz, 1978)
Arnold Schoenberg, Musik-Konzepte (1980) [special issue]
Schönbergs Verein für musikalische Privataufführungen, Musik-Konzepte, no.36 (1984)
E. Lafite and M. Diederichs-Lafite, eds.: 'Die Wiener Schule in der Musikgeschichte des 20. Jahrhunderts', ÖMz, xxxix/6 (1984)
Die Wiener Schule in der Musikgeschichte des 20. Jahrhunderts: Vienna 1984
C. Dahlhaus: Schoenberg and the New Music (Cambridge, 1987)
JM, xi/3 (1993) [Schoenberg issue]

M. Andersen, N.B. Foltmann and C. Røllum-Larsen, eds.: Festskrift Jan Maegaard (Copenhagen, 1996)
J. Brand and C. Hailey, eds.: Constructive Dissonance: Arnold Schoenberg and the Transformations of 20th-Century Culture (Berkeley, 1997)
Numerous articles in In Theory Only, Theory and Practice and Music Theory Spectrum

SEPARATE ARTICLES

A. Nadel: 'Arnold Schönberg', Die Musik, xi/3 (1911–12), 353–60
C. Somigli: 'Il modus operandi di Arnold Schönberg', RMI, xx (1913), 583–606
P. Bekker: 'Schönberg', Melos, ii (1921), 123–9
L. Henry: 'Arnold Schönberg', MO, xliv (1921), 420–24, 511
C. Gray: 'Arnold Schönberg: a Critical Study', ML, iii (1922), 73–89
F. Wohlfahrt: 'Arnold Schönbergs Stellung innerhalb der heutigen Musik', Die Musik, xvi (1923–4), 894–9
R. van den Linden: 'Arnold Schönberg', ML, vii (1926), 322–31; viii (1927), 38–45
K. Westphal: 'Schönbergs Weg zur Zwölfton-Musik', Die Musik, xxi (1928–9), 491–9
A. Machabey: 'Schönberg', Le ménestrel (21 Feb 1930, 30 May 1930, 6 June 1930)
A. Weiss: 'The Lyceum of Schönberg', MM, ix (1931–2), 99–107
H. Gerigk: 'Eine Lanze für Schönberg', Die Musik, xxvii (1934–5), 87–91
D.J. Bach: 'A Note on Arnold Schoenberg', MQ, xxii (1936), 8–13
R.S. Hill: 'Schoenberg's Tone-Rows and the Tonal System of the Future', MQ, xxii (1936), 14–37
H. Jalowetz: 'On the Spontaneity of Schoenberg's Music', MQ, xxx (1944), 385–408
D. Milhaud: 'To Arnold Schoenberg on his Seventieth Birthday: Personal Recollections', MQ, xxx (1944), 379–84
R. Sessions: 'Schoenberg in the United States', Tempo, no.9 (1944), 2–7; rev. in no.103 (1972), 8–17
D. Newlin: 'Arnold Schoenberg's Debt to Mahler', Chord and Discord, ii/5 (1948), 21–6
R. Leibowitz: 'Besuch bei Arnold Schönberg', SMz, lxxxix (1949), 324–8
D. Newlin: 'Schoenberg in America', Music Survey, i (1947–9), 128–31, 185–9
W.H. Rubsamen: 'Schoenberg in America', MQ, xxxvii (1951), 469–89
R. Vlad: 'L'Ultimo Schönberg', RaM, xxi (1951), 106–29
A. Duhamel: 'Arnold Schoenberg, la critique, et le monde musical contemporain', ReM, no.212 (1952), 77–85
H. Keller: 'Unpublished Schoenberg Letters: Early, Middle and Late', Music Survey, iv (1951–2), 499–71
G. Perle: 'Schoenberg's Late Style', MR, xiii (1952), 274–82
T.W. Adorno: 'Arnold Schönberg 1874–1951', Neue Rundschau, lxiv (1953), 80–104; repr. in T.W. Adorno: Prismen (Frankfurt, 1955, 3/1969; Eng. trans., 1967/R), 147–72
H. Eisler: 'Arnold Schönberg', Sinn und Form, vii (1955), 5–15
W. Reich: 'Alban Berg als Apologet Arnold Schönbergs', SMz, xcv (1955), 475–7
T.W. Adorno: 'Zum Verständnis Schönbergs', Frankfurter Hefte, x (1955), 418–29
J. Birke: 'Richard Dehmel und Arnold Schönberg: ein Briefwechsel', Mf, xi (1958), 279–85; xvii (1964), 60–62
'Letters from Webern and Schoenberg to Roberto Gerhard', The Score, no.24 (1958), 36–53
H.H. Stuckenschmidt: 'Stil und Ästhetik Schönbergs', SMz, xcviii (1958), 97–104
P. Gradenwitz: 'Schönbergs religiöse Werke', Melos, xxvi (1959), 330–33; Eng. trans. in MR, xxi (1960), 19–29
D. Kerner: 'Schönberg als Patient', Melos, xxvi (1959), 327–9
W. Reich: 'Ein unbekannter Brief von Arnold Schönberg an Alban Berg', ÖMz, xiv (1959), 10 only
H. Oesch: 'Hauer und Schönberg', ÖMz, xv (1960), 157 only
L. Rognoni: 'Gli scritti e i dipinti di Arnold Schönberg', Approdo musicale, no.12 (1960), 95–102
F. Glück: 'Briefe von Arnold Schönberg an Adolf Loos', ÖMz, xvi (1961), 8–20
J. Maegaard: 'A Study in the Chronology of opp.23–26 by Arnold Schoenberg', DAM, ii (1962), 93–123
G. Marbach: 'Schlemmers Begegnungen mit Schönberg, Scherchen und Hindemith', NZM, Jg.123 (1962), 530–36
N. Notowicz: 'Eisler und Schönberg', DJbM, viii (1963), 8–25
T.W. Adorno: ' Über einige Arbeiten Arnold Schönbergs', Forum, x (1963), 378–81, 434–6
R.U. Nelson: 'Schoenberg's Variation Seminar', MQ, l (1964), 141–64
F. Prieberg: 'Der junge Schönberg und seine Kritiker', Melos, xxxi (1964), 264–9
G. Schuller: 'A Conversation with Steuermann', PNM, iii/1 (1964), 22–35
R. Steiner: 'Der unbekannte Schönberg: aus unveröffentlichten Briefen an Hans Nachod', SMz, civ (1964), 284–6
D. Dille: 'Die Beziehungen zwischen Bartók und Schönberg', Documenta bartókiana, ii (1965), 53–61
I. Vojtěch: 'Arnold Schönberg, Anton Webern, Alban Berg: unbekannte Briefe an Erwin Schulhoff aus den Jahren 1919–26', MMC, no.18 (1965), 30–83
P. Friedheim: 'Rhythmic Structure in Schoenberg's Atonal Compositions', JAMS, xix (1966), 59–72
V. Fuchs: 'Arnold Schönberg als Soldat im ersten Weltkrieg', Melos, xxxiii (1966), 178–9
R. Jung: 'Arnold Schönberg und das Liszt-Stipendium', BMw, viii (1966), 56–62
P. Odegard: 'Schönberg's Variations: an Addendum', MR, xxvii (1966), 102–21
L. Stein: 'The Privataufführungen Revisited', Paul A. Pisk: Essays in his Honor, ed. J. Glowacki (Austin, 1966), 203–7
'Unveröffentlichte Briefe an Alfredo Casella', Melos, xxxiv (1967), 45–51
D. Lewin: 'Inversional Balance as an Organizing Force in Schoenberg's Music and Thought', PNM, vi/2 (1967–8), 1–21
D. Newlin: 'The Schoenberg–Nachod Collection: a Preliminary Report', MQ, liv (1968), 31–46
E. Klemm: 'Der Briefwechsel zwischen Arnold Schönberg und dem Verlag C.F. Peters', DJbM, xv (1970), 5–66
H. Byrns: 'Meine Begegnung mit Arnold Schönberg', Melos, xxxviii (1971), 234–6
R. Vlad: 'Arnold Schönberg schreibt an Gian Francesco Malipiero', Melos, xxxviii (1971), 461–4
R. Stephan: 'Ein unbekannter Aufsatz Weberns über Schönberg', ÖMz, xxvii (1972), 127–30
V. Lampert: 'Schoenbergs, Bergs und Adornos Briefe an Sándor (Alexander) Jemnitz', SM, xv (1973), 335–55
A.L. Ringer: 'Schoenbergiana in Jerusalem', MQ, lix (1973), 1–14
F. Glück: 'Briefe von Arnold Schönberg an Claire Loos', ÖMz, xxix (1974), 203–9
K. Hicken: 'Schoenberg's "Atonality": Fused Bitonality?', Tempo, no.109 (1974), 27–36
A. Lessem: 'Schönberg and the Crisis of Expressionism', ML, lv (1974), 429–36
J. Maegaard: 'Schönberg hat Adorno nie leiden können', Melos, xli (1974), 262–4
J. Meggett and R. Moritz: 'The Schoenberg Legacy', Notes, xxxi (1974–5), 30–36
J. Samson: 'Schoenberg's "Atonal" Music', Tempo, no.109 (1974), 16–25
E. Schmid: 'Ein Jahr bei Schönberg in Berlin', Melos, xli (1974), 190–203
E. Steiner: 'Schoenberg's Quest: Newly Discovered Works from his Early Years', MQ, lx (1974), 401–20
R. Stephan: 'Hába und Schönberg', Festschrift für Arno Volk (Cologne, 1974), 125–38
W. Szmolyan: 'Schönberg in Mödling', ÖMz, xxix (1974), 189–202
J. Maegaard: 'Zu Th.W. Adornos Rolle im Mann/Schönberg-Streit', Gedenkschrift für Thomas Mann, ed. R. Wiecker (Copenhagen, 1975), 215–22
A. Dümling: '"Im Zeichen der Erkenntnis der socialen Verhältnisse": der junge Schönberg und die Arbeitersängerbewegung', Zeitschrift für Musiktheorie, vi/1 (1975), 11–21; rev. in ÖMz, xxxvi (1981), 65–73
J. Harvey: 'Schönberg: Man or Woman?', ML, lvi (1975), 371–85
J. Maegaard: 'Der geistige Einflussbereich von Schönberg und Zemlinsky in Wien um 1900', Alexander Zemlinsky: Tradition im Umkreis der Wiener Schule, ed. O. Kolleritsch (Graz, 1976), 34–43
C. Dahlhaus: 'Schönbergs musikalische Poetik', AMw, xxxiii (1976), 81–8; Eng. trans. in Schoenberg and the New Music (Cambridge,1987), 73–80
E. Hilmar: 'Arnold Schönbergs Briefe an den Akademischen Verband für Literatur und Musik in Wien', ÖMz, xxxi (1976), 273–92

N. Nono-Schoenberg: 'Mon père Schoenberg', SMz, cxvi (1976), 77–80
W. Szmolyan: 'Schönbergs Wiener Skandalkonzert', ÖMz, xxxi (1976), 293–304
E. Steiner: 'Ein Schönberg-Konzert in Berlin', ÖMz, xxx (1975), 105–10
J. Maegaard: 'Schönbergs Zwölftonreihen', Mf, xxix (1976), 385–425
G. Mayer: 'Arnold Schönberg im Urteil Hanns Eislers', BMw, xviii (1976), 195–214
J. Rufer: 'Schoenberg: Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow', PNM, xvi/1 (1977–8), 125–38
B. Simms: 'New Documents in the Schoenberg–Schenker Polemic', ibid., 110–24
J. Theurich: 'Briefwechsel zwischen Arnold Schönberg und Ferruccio Busoni 1903–1915 (1927)', BMw, xix (1977), 163–211
A. Ashforth: 'Linear and Textural Aspects of Schoenberg's Cadences', PNM, xvi/2 (1977–8), 195–224
A. Forte: 'Schoenberg's Creative Evolution: the Path to Atonality', MQ, lxiv (1978), 133–76
F. Schneider: 'Schönberg und die "politische Musik"', BMw, xx (1978), 23–7
W. Szmolyan: 'Schönberg und Eisler', ÖMz, xxxiii (1978), 439–44
C.M. Cross: 'Three Levels of "Idea" in Schoenberg's Thought and Writings', CMc, no.30 (1980), 24–36
M.M. Hyde: 'The Roots of Form in Schoenberg's Sketches', JMT, xxiv (1980), 1–36
M.M. Hyde: 'The Telltale Sketches: Harmonic Structure in Schoenberg's Twelve-Tone Method', MQ, lxvi (1980), 560–80
A. Ringer: 'Weill, Schönberg und die Zeitoper', Mf, xxxiii (1980), 465–70
J.A. Smith: 'Schoenberg's Way', PNM, xviii/2 (1979–80), 258–85 [contemporaries' recollections of Schoenberg and his circle]
P. Stadlen: 'Schoenberg's Speech-Song', ML, lxii (1981), 1–11
W. Szmolyan: 'Die Konzerte des Wiener Schönberg-Vereins', ÖMz, xxxvi (1981), 82–104, 154–7
A. Lessem: 'Schoenberg, Stravinsky, and Neo-Classicism: the Issues Reexamined', MQ, lxviii (1982), 527–42
M. Hyde: 'The Format and Function of Schoenberg's Twelve-Tone Sketches', JAMS, xxxvi (1983), 453–80
J. Christensen: 'The Spiritual and the Material in Schoenberg's Thinking', ML, lxv (1984), 337–44
S. Schibli: 'Ein Stück praktisch gewordener Ideologie: zum Problem der komplexen einsätzigen Form in Frühwerken Arnold Schönbergs', AMw, xli (1984), 274–94
A. Goehr: 'Schoenberg and Kraus: the Idea behind the Music', MAn, iv (1985), 59–71; rev. in idem: Finding the Key (London, 1998), 124–41
A. Mead: 'Large-Scale Strategy in Arnold Schoenberg's Twelve-Tone Music', PNM, xxiv/1 (1985–6), 120–57
G. Phipps: 'The Tritone as Equivalency: a Contextual Perspective for Approaching Schoenberg's Music', JM, iv (1985–6), 51–69
M. Hansen: 'Arnold Schoenberg: Lehrer in Berlin', Berliner Begegnungen: ausländische Künstler in Berlin 1918 bis 1933 (Berlin, 1987), 371–82
D. Lambourn: 'Henry Wood and Schoenberg', MT, cxxviii (1987), 422–7
C.O. Lewis: 'Mirrors and Metaphors: Reflections on Schoenberg and Nineteenth-Century Tonality', 19CM, xi (1987–8), 26–42; repr. in Music at the Turn of Century, ed. J. Kerman (Berkeley, 1990), 15–31
C.M. Schmidt: 'Zur Theorie und Praxis der Zwölftonkomposition Arnold Schönbergs', Musiktheorie, ii (1987), 73–85
L. Finscher: 'Arnold Schönbergs Brahms-Vortrag', Neue Musik und Tradition: Festschrift Rudolf Stephan, ed. J. Kuckertz and others (Laaber,1990), 485–500
J. Brown: 'Schoenberg's Early Wagnerisms: Atonality and the Redemption of Ahasuerus', COJ, vi (1994), 51–80
J. Covach: 'The Sources of Schoenberg's "Aesthetic Theology"', 19CM, xix (1995–6), 252–62
E. Haimo: 'Developing Variation and Schoenberg's Serial Music', MAn, xvi (1997), 349–65
S.M. Feisst: 'Henry Cowell und Arnold Schönberg, eine unbekannte Freundschaft', AMw, lv (1998), 57–71
S.M. Feisst: 'Arnold Schoenberg and the Cinematic Art', MQ, lxxxiii (1999), 93–113

STUDIES OF PARTICULAR WORKS

operas

H. Keller: 'Schoenberg's "Moses and Aron"', The Score, no.21 (1957), 30–45
H. Keller: 'Schoenberg's Comic Opera', The Score, no.23 (1958), 27–36
K.H. Wörner: Gotteswort und Magie: die Oper 'Moses und Aron' von Arnold Schoenberg (Heidelberg, 1959; Eng. trans., enlarged, 1963, as Schoenberg's 'Moses and Aron')
T.W. Adorno: 'Sakrales Fragment', Quasi una fantasia: musikalische Schriften II (Frankfurt, 1963; Eng. trans., 1992), 306–38
K.H. Wörner: '"Die glückliche Hand", Arnold Schönbergs Drama mit Musik', SMz, civ (1964), 274–83
H. Buchanan: 'A Key to Schoenberg's Erwartung', JAMS, xx (1967), 434–49
K.H. Wörner: 'Schönberg's "Erwartung" und das Ariadne-Thema', Die Musik in der Geistesgeschichte: Studien zur Situation der Jahre um 1910 (Bonn, 1970), 91–117
J. Crawford: 'Die glückliche Hand: Schoenberg's Gesamtkunstwerk', MQ, lx (1974), 583–601
H. Boventer, ed.: 'Moses und Aron': zur Oper Arnold Schönbergs (Bensberg,1979)
E. Budde: 'Arnold Schönbergs Monodrama "Erwartung": Versuch einer Analyse der ersten Szene', AMw, xxxvi (1979), 1–20
S. Mauser: 'Forschungsbericht zu Schönbergs "Erwartung"', ÖMz, xxxv (1980), 215–19
A. Serravezza: 'Critica e ideologia nel "Moses und Aron"', RIM, xv (1980), 204–29
E. Steiner: 'The "Happy" Hand: Genesis and Interpretation of Schoenberg's Monumentalkunstwerk', MR, xli (1980), 207–22
J.M. Garcia Laborda: Studien zu Schönbergs Monodram 'Erwartung' op.17 (Laaber, 1981)
O. Steck: Moses und Aron: die Oper Arnold Schönbergs und ihr biblischer Stoff (Munich, 1981)
R.L. Weaver: 'The Conflict of Religion and Aesthetics in Schoenberg's "Moses and Aaron"', Essays on the Music of J.S. Bach and other Divers Subjects: a Tribute to Gerhard Herz, ed. R.L. Weaver (Louisville, KY, 1981), 291–303
P. Truman: 'Synaesthesia in "Die glückliche Hand"', Interface, xii (1983), 481–503
O. Neighbour: 'Veraltete Sentimentalität: Arnold Schoenberg in Defence of Richard Strauss', Festschrift Albi Rosenthal, ed. R. Elvers (Tutzing, 1984), 253–7 [on Von heute auf morgen]
E. Weissweiler: '"Schreiben Sie mir doch einen Operntext, Fräulein!": Marie Pappenheims Text zu Arnold Schönbergs "Erwartung"', NZM, Jg.145, no.6 (1984), 4–8
P. White: Schoenberg and the God-Idea: the Opera Moses und Aron (Ann Arbor, 1985)
H. Mäckelmann: '"Die glückliche Hand": eine Studie zu Musik und Inhalt von Arnold Schönbergs "Drama mit Musik"', HJbMW, x (1988), 7–36
C.M. Schmidt: Schönbergs Oper Moses und Aron: Analyse der diastematsichen, formalen und musikdramatischen Komposition (Mainz, 1988)
L. Wickes: 'Schoenberg, "Erwartung", and the Reception of Psychoanalysis in Musical Circles in Vienna until 1910/1911', SMA, xxiii (1989), 88–106
M. Cherlin: 'Dramaturgy and Mirror Imagery in Schönberg's Moses und Aron: Two Paradigmatic Interval Palindromes', PNM, xxix/2 (1991), 50–71
R. Falck: 'Marie Pappenheim, Schoenberg, and the Studien über Hysterie', German Literature and Music: an Aesthetic Fusion 1890–1989, ed. C. Reschke and H. Pollack (Munich, 1992), 134–44
J. Auner: 'In Schoenberg's Workshop: Aggregates and Referential Collections in "Die glückliche Hand"', Music Theory Spectrum, xviii (1996), 77–105
T. Beck: 'The Literary Sources of "Die glückliche Hand"', Tempo, no.189 (1994), 17–23

choral works

A. Berg: Arnold Schönberg, Gurrelieder: Führer (grosse Ausgabe, Vienna, 1913; kleine Ausgabe, 1914)
G. Strecke: 'Arnold Schönbergs op.XIII', Melos, i (1920), 231–3
S. Günther: 'Das trochäische Prinzip in Arnold Schönbergs op.13', ZMw, vi (1923–4), 158–77
H. Nachod: 'The Very First Performance of Schoenberg's "Gurrelieder"', Music Survey, iii (1950–51), 38–40

W. Zillig: 'Notes on Arnold Schoenberg's Unfinished Oratorio "Die Jakobsleiter"', The Score, no.25 (1959), 7–18
H. Pauli: 'Zu Schönbergs "Jakobsleiter"', SMz, cii (1962), 351–4
R. Lück: 'Arnold Schönberg und das deutsche Volkslied', NZM, Jg.124 (1963), 86–91
K.H. Wörner: 'Schönbergs Oratorium "Die Jakobsleiter": Musik zwischen Theologie und Weltanschauung', SMz, cv (1965), 250–57, 333–40
C.M. Schmidt: 'Schönbergs Kantate "Ein Überlebender aus Warschau"', AMw, xxxiii (1976), 174–88
F. Hamao: 'On the Origin of the Twelve-Tone Method: Schoenberg's Sketches for the Unfinished Symphony (1914–1915)', CMc, no.42 (1986), 32–45
M. Mäckelmann: '"Israel Exists Again": Anmerkungen zu Arnold Schönbergs Entwurf einer Israel-Hymne', Mf, xxxix (1986), 18–29
H. Lück: 'Arnold Schönbergs Kol Nidre', ÖMz, xlviii (1993), 138–46
M. Gervink: 'Schönbergs "Drei Satiren für gemischten Chor": die Standortbestimmung des Komponisten', ÖMz, l (1995), 398–406
M.C. Strasser: '"A Survivor from Warsaw" as Personal Parable', ML, lxxvi (1995), 52–63
B.A. Föllmi: '"I cannot remember ev'rything": eine narratologische Analyse von Arnold Schönbergs Kantate "A Survivor from Warsaw" op.46', AMw, lv (1998), 28–56

orchestral works

A. Berg: Arnold Schönberg: Pelleas und Melisande, op. 5: thematische Analyse (Vienna, 1920)
C. Dahlhaus: Schönberg: Variationen für Orchester, op.31 (Munich, 1968)
E. Doflein: 'Schönbergs Opus 16 Nr.3: der Mythos der Klangfarbenmelodie', Melos, xxxvi (1969), 203–5
P. Förtig: 'Analyse des Opus 16 Nr.3', Melos, xxxvi (1969), 206–9
J. Rufer: 'Noch einmal Schönbergs Opus 16', Melos, xxxvi (1969), 366–8
C. Dahlhaus: 'Das obligate Rezitativ', Melos/NZM, i (1975), 193–5; Eng. trans. in idem: Schoenberg and the New Music (Cambridge, 1987), 144–8
P. Gülke: 'Über Schönbergs Brahms Bearbeitung', BMw, xvii (1975), 5–14
M. Mäckelmann: Fünf Orchesterstücke op.16 (Munich, 1987)
T. Mäkelä: 'Schönbergs Klavierkonzert Opus 42: ein romantisches Virtuosenkonzert? Ein Beitrag zur Analyse der kompositorischen Prinzipien eines problematischen Werkes', Mf, xlv (1992), 1–20
D. Puffett: '"Music that Echoes within one" for a Lifetime: Berg's Reception of Schoenberg's "Pellas und Melisande"', ML, lxxvi (1995), 209–64
J.H. Auner: 'Schoenberg's Handel Concerto and the Ruins of Tradition', JAMS, xlix (1996), 264–313

chamber works

'Arnold Schönbergs fis-moll-Quartett: eine technische Analyse', Erdgeist, iv (1909), 225–34; repr. in Journal of the Arnold Schoenberg Institute, xvi (1993), 295–304; Eng. trans., ibid., 305–21
A. Berg: Arnold Schönberg: Kammersymphonie, op.9: thematische Analyse (Vienna, 1918)
F. Greissle: 'Die formalen Grundlagen des Bläserquintetts von Arnold Schönberg', Musikblätter des Anbruch, vii (1925), 63–8
T.W. Adorno: 'Schönbergs Bläserquintett', Pult und Taktstock, v (1928), May–June, 45–9; repr. in T.W. Adorno: Moments musicaux (Frankfurt, 1964), 161–5
E. Schmid: 'Studie über Schönbergs Streichquartette', SMz, lxxiv (1934), 1–7, 84–91, 155–63
P. Gradenwitz: 'The Idiom and Development in Schoenberg's Quartets', ML, xxvi (1945), 123–42
W. Hymanson: 'Schoenberg's String Trio (1946)', MR, xi (1950), 184–94
O.W. Neighbour: 'Dodecaphony in Schoenberg's String Trio', Music Survey, iv (1951–2), 489–90
O.W. Neighbour: 'A Talk on Schoenberg for Composers' Concourse', The Score, no.16 (1956), 19–31 [on op.37]
W. Pfannkuch: 'Zu Thematik und Form in Schönbergs Streichsextett', Festschrift Friedrich Blume, ed. A.A. Abert and W. Pfannkuch (Kassel, 1963), 258–71
E. Klemm: 'Zur Theorie der Reihenstruktur und Reihendisposition in Schönbergs 4. Streichquartett', BMw, viii (1966), 27–49
J. Lester: 'Pitch Structure Articulation in the Variations of Schoenberg's Serenade', PNM, vi/2 (1967–8), 22–34
E. Staempfli: 'Das Streichtrio Opus 45 von Arnold Schönberg', Melos, xxxvii (1970), 35–9
M. Pfisterer: 'Zur Frage der Satztechnik in den atonalen Werken von Arnold Schönberg', Zeitschrift für Musiktheorie, ii/1 (1971), 4–13 [on op.10]
U. von Rauchhaupt, ed.: Schoenberg, Berg, Webern: the String Quartets, a Documentary Study (Hamburg, 1971)
R. Gerlach: 'War Schönberg von Dvořák beeinflusst?', NZM, Jg.133 (1972), 122–7 [on the D major Quartet]
A. Whittall: Schoenberg Chamber Music (London, 1972)
A. Whittall: 'Schoenberg and the "True Tradition": Theme and Form in the String Trio', MT, cxv (1974), 739–43
C. Raab: 'Fantasia quasi una Sonata: zu Schönbergs "Phantasy for Violin with Piano Accompaniment" op.47', Melos/NZM, ii (1976), 191–6
C. Möllers: Reihentechnik und musikalische Gestalt bei Arnold Schönberg: eine Untersuchung zum III. Streichquartett op.30 (Wiesbaden, 1977)
R. Swift: '1/XII/99: Tonal Relations in Schoenberg's Verklärte Nacht', 19CM, i (1977–8), 3–14; repr. in Music at the Turn of Century, ed. J. Kerman (Berkeley, 1990), 3–14
M. Hyde: Schoenberg's Twelve-Tone Harmony: the Suite op.29 and the Compositional Sketches (Ann Arbor, 1982)
N. Dietrich: Arnold Schönbergs Drittes Streichquartett op.30: seine Form und sein Verhältnis zur Geschichte der Gattung (Munich, 1983)
E. Haimo and P. Johnson: 'Isomorphic Partitioning and Schoenberg's Fourth String Quartet', JMT, xxvii (1984), 47–72
C.M. Schmidt: 'Arnold Schönberg: Streichtrio op.45', Melos, xlvii/3 (1985), 67–89
R. Butz: 'Untersuchungen zur Reihentechnik in Arnold Schönbergs Bläserquintett op.26', AMw, xlv (1988), 251–85
C. Dahlhaus: 'Arnold Schönberg: Drittes Streichquartett, op.30', Melos, l/1 (1988), 32–53
C. Dahlhaus: 'Liszt, Schönberg und die grosse Form: das Prinzip der Mehrsätzigkeit in der Einsätzigkeit', Mf, xli (1988), 202–13 [on op.7]
R. Boestfleisch: Arnold Schönbergs frühe Kammermusik: Studien unter besonderer Berücksichtigung der ersten beiden Streichquartette (Frankfurt, 1990)
H.H. Hattesen: Emanzipation durch Aneignung: Untersuchungen zu den frühen Streichquartetten Arnold Schönbergs (Kassel, 1990)
C. Dale: Tonality and Structure in Schoenberg's Second String Quartet, op.10 (New York,1993)
C.S. Mahnkopf: Gestalt und Stil: Schönbergs Erste Kammersymphonie und ihr Umfeld (Kassel, 1994)
M. Jestremski: '"Ich glaube, das ist doch ein Irrtum, diese Solobesetzung …" Die Fassungen von Arnold Schönbergs Kammersymphonie op.9', AMw, liii (1996), 259–89
M. Schmidt: '"Der ungelöste Rest als Differenz": zu Schönbergs kompositorischer Mozart-Rezeption', AMw, lvi (1999), 163–97 [on op.37]

solo vocal works

R. Tenschert: 'Eine Passacaglia von Schönberg', Die Musik, xvii (1924–5), 590–94 [on op.21 no.8]
K.H. Ehrenforth: Ausdruck und Form: Schönbergs Durchbruch zur Atonalität in den George-Liedern op.15 (Bonn, 1963)
K.H. Ehrenforth: 'Schönberg und Webern: das XIV. Lied aus Schönbergs Georgelieder op.15', NZM, Jg.126 (1965), 102–5
C. Dahlhaus: 'Schönbergs Lied "Streng ist uns das Glück und spröde"', Neue Wege der musikalischen Analyse, ed. R. Stephan (Berlin, 1967), 45–52
H. Kaufmann: 'Struktur in Schönbergs Georgeliedern', Neue Wege der musikalischen Analyse, ed. R. Stephan (Berlin, 1967), 53–61
W. Stroh: 'Schoenberg's Use of the Text: the Text as a Musical Control in the 14th Georgelied, Op.15', PNM, vi/2 (1967–8), 35–44
R. Brinkmann: 'Schoenberg und George: Interpretation eines Liedes', AMw, xxvi (1969), 1–28 [on op.15, no.14]
H. Weber: 'Schoenbergs und Zemlinskys Vertonung der Ballade "Jane Gray" von Heinrich Ammann: Untersuchungen zum Spätstudium der Tonalität', IMSCR XI: Copenhagen 1972, 705–14
A. Lessem: 'Text and Music in Schoenberg's "Pierrot Lunaire"', CMc, no.19 (1975), 103–12
K. Bailey: 'Formal Organization and Structural Imagery in Schoenberg's Pierrot Lunaire', Studies in Music [Canada], ii (1977), 93–107
B. Simms: 'Line and Harmony in the Sketches of Schoenberg's Seraphita, op.22, no.1', JMT, xxvi (1982), 291–312

W. Ruf: 'Arnold Schönbergs Lied Herzgewächse', AMw, xli (1984), 257–73
F. Lesure and others, eds.: Dossier de presse de Pierrot lunaire d'Arnold Schönberg (Geneva, 1985)
S. Larson: 'A Tonal Model of an "Atonal" Piece: Schoenberg's opus 15, number 2', PNM, xxv (1987), 418–33
R. Brinkmann: 'Was uns die Quellen erzählen: ein Kapitel Werk-Philologie', Das musikalische Kunstwerk: Festschrift Carl Dahlhaus, ed. H. Danuser and others (Laaber, 1988), 679–94 [on op.21]
J. Dunsby: '"Pierrot Lunaire" and the Resistance to Theory', MT, cxxx (1989), 732–6
H. Krebs: 'Tonalität in Schönbergs "atonaler" Musik: die Aussage der Skizzen', Musiktheorie, iv (1989), 223–34 [on op.15, nos.6, 15]
D. Mack: 'Der französische "Pierrot": ein Kapitel aus Schönbergs Kampf um die moderne Musik', ÖMz, xliv (1989), 25–32
W.B. Bailey: 'Prophetic Aspects of Musical Style in the Early Unpublished Songs of Arnold Schoenberg', MQ, lxxiv (1990), 491–520
R. Brinkmann: 'The Lyric as Paradigm: Poetry and the Foundation of Arnold Schoenberg's New Music', German Literature and Music: an Aesthetic Fusion 1890–1989, ed. C. Reschke and H. Pollack (Munich, 1992), 95–129
J. Dunsby: Schoenberg: Pierrot Lunaire (Cambridge, 1992)
A. Forte: 'Concepts of Linearity in Schoenberg's Atonal Music: a Study of the opus 15 Song Cycle', JMT, xxxvi (1992), 285–382
A. Lessem: 'Sound and Sense: the Search for a Unified Expression in the Early Songs of Arnold Schoenberg', German Literature and Music: an Aesthetic Fusion 1890–1989, ed. C. Reschke and H. Pollack (Munich, 1992), 85–94
C. Raab: 'Der Fleck im "Mondfleck": zu den Takten 8 bis 12 der Nr.18 in Arnold Schönbergs "Pierrot lunaire" op.21', Mf, xlvi (1993), 411–16
J. Brown: 'Schoenberg's Musical Prose as Allegory', MAn, xiv (1995), 161–91 [on op.15 no.1]

piano works

L. Welker: 'Arnold Schönbergs Op.11', Die Musik, xii/1 (1912–13), 109–13
H. Leichtentritt: 'Arnold Schönberg: opus 11 and opus 19', Musical Form (Cambridge, MA, 1951), 425–50
T. Tuttle: 'Schoenberg's Compositions for Piano Solo', MR, xviii (1957), 300–18
A. Forte: 'Context and Continuity in an Atonal Work: a Set-Thematic Approach', PNM, i/2 (1962–3), 72–82 [on op.19]
W. Rogge: Das Klavierwerk Arnold Schönbergs (Regensburg, 1964)
R. Travis: 'Directed Motion in Schoenberg and Webern', PNM, iv/2 (1965–6), 85–9 [on op.19/2]
R. Wille: 'Reihentechnik in Schönbergs Opus 19, 2', Mf, xix (1966), 42–3
G. Krieger: Schönbergs Werke für Klavier (Göttingen, 1968)
R. Brinkmann: Arnold Schönberg: Drei Klavierstücke Op.11: Studien zur frühen Atonalität bei Schönberg (Wiesbaden, 1969)
J. Graziano: 'Serial Procedures in Schoenberg's Opus 23', CMc, no.13 (1972), 58–64
H. Oesch: 'Schönberg im Vorfeld der Dodekaphonie', Melos, xli (1974), 330–39 [on op.23 no.3]
K. Bailey: 'Row Anomalies in op.33: an Insight into Schoenberg's Understanding of the Serial Procedure', CMc, no.22 (1976), 42–60
J. Glofcheskie: '"Wrong" Notes in Schoenberg's op.33a', SMC, i (1976), 88–104
D. Gostomsky: 'Tonalität-Atonalität: zur Harmonik von Schönbergs Klavierstück op.11 Nr.1', Zeitschrift für Musiktheorie, vii/1 (1976), 54–71
J. Maegaard: 'Om den kronologiske placering af Arnold Schönbergs klaverstykke op.23 nr.3', Musik & forskning, iii (1977), 5–10
W. Grangjean: 'Form in Schönbergs op.19, 2', Zeitschrift für Musiktheorie, viii/1 (1977), 15–18
T. Bond: 'Schoenberg's Sonata for Organ', MT, cxix (1978), 984–5, 987
N. Schoffman: 'Schoenberg opus 33a Revisited', Tempo, no.146 (1983), 31–42
K.L. Hicken: Aspects of Harmony in Schoenberg's Six Little Piano Pieces, Op.19 (Winnipeg, 1984)
M. Hyde: 'Musical Form and the Development of Schoenberg's Twelve-Tone Method', JMT, xxix (1985), 85–143 [on opp.23, 25]
C. Morrison: 'Syncopation as Motive in Schoenberg's op.19, nos.2, 3 and 4', MAn, xi (1992), 75–93
A. von Massow: 'Abschied und Neuorientierung: Schönbergs Klavierstück op.19, 6', AMw, l (1993), 187–95
H. Klumpenhouwer: 'An Instance of Parapraxis in the Gavotte of Schoenberg's opus 25', JMT, xxxviii (1994), 217–48
D.S. Lefkowitz: 'Listening Strategies and Hexachordal Combinatorial "Functions" in Schoenberg's Op.23 No.4', MAn, xvi (1997), 309–48

theoretical works, etc

E. Stein: Praktischer Leitfaden zu Schönbergs Harmonielehre (Vienna, 1923)
R. Lück: 'Die Generalbass-Aussetzungen Arnold Schönbergs', DJbM, viii (1963), 26–35
C. Parmentola: 'La "Harmonielehre" di Schoenberg nella crisi del pensiero moderno', NRMI, ii (1968), 81–95
L. Richter: 'Schönbergs Harmonielehre und die "freie Atonalität"', DJbM, xiii (1968), 43–71
D. Rexroth: Arnold Schönberg als Theoretiker der tonalen Harmonik (Bonn, 1971)
J. Spratt: 'The Speculative Content of Schoenberg's "Harmonielehre"', CMc, no.11 (1971), 83–8
R. Stephan: 'Schönbergs Entwurf über "Das Komponieren mit selbständigen Stimmen"', AMw, xxix (1972), 239–56
C. Dahlhaus: 'Schoenberg and Schenker', PRMA, c (1973–4), 209–15; repr. in Schoenberg and the New Music (Cambridge, 1987), 134–40
A. Goehr: 'The Theoretical Writings of Arnold Schoenberg', PRMA, c (1973–4), 85–96
P. Schubert: '"A New Epoch of Polyphonic Style": Schoenberg on Chords and Lines', MAn, xii (1993), 289–319
J. Boss: 'Schoenberg on Ornamentation and Structural Levels', JMT, xxxviii (1994), 187–216
P.C. van den Toorn: '"What's in a Motive?" Schoenberg and Schenker Reconsidered', JM, xiv (1996), 370–99

painting

J. Rufer: 'Schönberg als Maler: Grenzen und Konvergenzen der Künste', Aspekte der neuen Musik, ed. W. Burde (Kassel, 1968), 50–57
W. Hofmann: 'Beziehungen zwischen Malerei und Musik', Schönberg, Webern, Berg: Bilder, Partituren, Dokumente (Vienna, 1969), 103–13
A. Sustris, ed.: Zu Arnold Schoenberg als Maler (Klagenfurt, 1991)
T. Zaunschirm, ed.: Arnold Schönberg: das bildnerische Werk (Klagenfurt, 1991)

O.W. NEIGHBOUR

Schoendorff [Schondorpp, Scherndorp], Philipp (b Liège, 1565–70; d in or after 1617). Flemish composer and trumpeter, resident mainly in Bohemia. He was a choirboy at the court of Archduke Matthias. After his voice broke he was sent to continue his education in the household of Jacob Chimarrhaeus, chaplain and later almoner of the imperial court. It was probably on Chimarrhaeus's recommendation that he was appointed musician and trumpeter at the Prague court of the Emperor Rudolf II, to whom he had already dedicated a mass in 1587; he also taught the pages and choirboys. The Bohemian treasury awarded him an annual pension of 52 florins for life in 1617, after which he is not heard of again. He was one of the lesser Flemish composers who worked in the orbit of Philippe de Monte, Jacob Regnart and Franz Sales and composed only masses, motets and Magnificat settings. His Veni Sancte Spiritus, which has survived in several sources, is conservative. He edited Odae suavissimae, a collection of works, mostly by Habsburg court musicians, in honour of Chimarrhaeus. It is undated and has been assigned to about 1610 in Eitner and RISM. But the tenor partbook includes a portrait of Chimarrhaeus dated 1601, showing him at the age of 59. The collection must therefore have been published in 1601 or 1602 for Chimarrhaeus's 60th birthday. Eitner also confused Schoendorff with the imperial violinist Philipp Schoendorffer (*d c*1664–5), who may have been his son.

WORKS

SACRED VOCAL

2 Magnificat, 4, 5vv; 4 motets, 5, 6vv: 1593[1], 1600[1], 1600[2], 1610[18] [recte 1601 or 1602]

2 masses, 6vv, CZ-Pnm, D-Nla

Veni Sancte Spiritus, 5vv (from 1600[2], in PL-GD, ed. in Musica sacra, xxvii (Regensburg, 1886); PE (intabulation), facs. in AMP, ii (1964), incipit in AMP, i (1963)

EDITIONS

Odae suavissimae in gratiam et honorem admodum reverendi ac illustris Domini D. Jacobi Chimarrhaei, 5, 6vv (n.p., *c*1610[18] [recte 1601 or 1602]) (incl. 2 works by Schoendorff, see above)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; VannesD

A. Smijers: 'Die kaiserliche Hofmusik-Kapelle von 1543–1619 IV', SMw, ix (1922), 43–81, esp. 67; pubd separately (Vienna, 1922)

G. Pietzsch: 'Zur Musikkapelle Kaiser Rudolfs II', ZMw, xvi (1934), 172–5

W.H. Rubsamen: 'The International "Catholic" Repertoire of a Lutheran Church in Nürnberg (1574–1597)', AnnM, v (1957), 229–327, esp. 278

K.W. Niemöller: 'Die musikalische Festschrift für den Direktor der Prager Hofkapelle Kaiser Rudolfs II. 1602', GfMKB, [Bonn 1970], ed. C. Dalhaus and others (Kassel, 1972), 520–23

J. Snížková: 'Einige Bemerkungen zur Mehrstimmigkeit in Böhmen', Mf, xxiv (1971), 278–82

J. Snížková: 'Kutnohorský sborník mší ze sklonku 16. století' [The Kutná Hora collection of masses from the end of the 16th century], Časopis Národního muzea, cxli (1972), 49–55

HELLMUT FEDERHOFER

Schoenfield, Paul (b Detroit, 24 Jan 1947). American composer and pianist, active in Israel. He studied at Converse College (Spartanburg, South Carolina), Carnegie Mellon University and the University of Arizona (DMA 1970). His principal teachers include Ozan Marsh and Rudolf Serkin (piano), and Robert Muczynski (composition). Although he has composed for virtually all media, he has shown a special affinity for solo piano works and chamber music with piano. His brilliant piano writing often requires enormous technical facility on the part of the performer; textures are invariably contrapuntal, regardless of tempo, and rhythms are vital and varied with frequent changes of metre. His works often evoke a frenzied state through climaxes, rapid harmonic motion and breakneck speed. He has remarked that his 'is not the kind of music to relax to, but the kind that makes people sweat; not only performer, but audience'. His interest in folk music stems largely from his desire to explore his own Jewish roots.

WORKS
(selective list)

3 Country Fiddle Pieces, 1980; 4 Parables, pf, orch, 1982–3; Klezmer Rondos, male v, fl, orch, 1986; other works, incl.: Achat Sha'alti, fl, pf; Tales from Chelm, str qt; Two Can Tango, 2 pf; Ufaratsta, fl, pf; Vaudeville, pic tpt, orch

ANTHONY PHILIP PATTIN

Schoening, Alwina. See VALLERIA, ALWINA.

Schoenstein. American family of organ builders. Felix Fridolin Schoenstein (b Villingen, Baden, 23 Feb 1849; d San Francisco, 29 March 1936), the youngest son of a clock maker, was apprenticed to the orchestrion maker Hubert Blessing in Germany and emigrated to California in 1868. After working eight years in San Francisco for Joseph S. Mayer, he founded his own firm in 1877. By the early 20th century three of his sons, Louis, Otto and Erwin, had joined him, the firm becoming known as Schoenstein & Sons: another son, Leo F. worked briefly with the family firm before leaving to work for other builders. Felix Schoenstein's early work was largely maintenance and rebuilding; his first entirely new organ was that for St Mary's, Stockton, California (1881). The firm has continued to produce a small but steady number of organs, the earliest of which had mechanical action; a form of tubular-pneumatic action was patented in 1890, and since the early 20th century only electro-pneumatic action has been used. Louis Schoenstein (1884–1980) retired in 1962 and was succeeded by his grandson Terrence, his nephew Paul, and Jack M. Bethards. In 1977 Bethards became the sole owner, president and tonal director of the firm, under the name of Schoenstein & Co. Under his leadership the firm grew to become a leading builder of high quality electro-pneumatic organs with tonal designs influenced by both the French Romantic and 'American classic' styles. Notable instruments include those at St Joseph's Basilica, San Francisco (1981), St Francis de Sales Cathedral, Oakland, California (1984), and Wynne Chapel, Dallas (1992).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

O. Ochse: The History of the Organ in the United States (Bloomington, IN, 1975)

L.J. Schoenstein: Memoirs of a San Francisco Organ Builder (San Francisco, 1977)

BARBARA OWEN

Schöffer, Peter. See SCHOEFFER, PETER, JR.

Schöffler, Paul (b Dresden, 15 Sept 1897; d Amersham, Bucks., 21 Nov 1977). Austrian bass-baritone of German birth. After studying various aspects of music at the Dresden Conservatory he concentrated on singing, his teachers including Staegemann at Dresden, Grenzebach at Berlin and Sammarco at Milan. He was a member of the Dresden Staatsoper from 1925 to 1937, when he joined the Vienna Staatsoper. He was first heard at Covent Garden in 1934 (Donner, Schwanda), and in the following years London heard him as Gunther, Scarpia, Kurwenal, Figaro, Don Giovanni and Jochanaan, and also as the Rheingold Wotan. He sang Hans Sachs at Bayreuth in 1943–4 and the Dutchman in 1956, and during the Vienna Staatsoper 1947 London season he was heard as Don Giovanni, Don Alfonso and Pizarro: he returned in 1953 to sing Hans Sachs. He was invited to the Metropolitan, New York, in 1949, and at Salzburg in 1952 he created the role of Jupiter at the first public performance of Strauss's Die Liebe der Danae. He was a notable exponent of Hindemith (Cardillac, Mathis), and among the roles he created was Danton in Von Einem's Dantons Tod (Salzburg, 1947). He continued to be associated with small character parts such as the Music Master (Ariadne auf Naxos) and Antonio (Le nozze di Figaro) when well over 70.

Schöffler's careful musicianship and fine stage presence were supported by a warm, expressive voice which, though not large, could ride the full orchestra easily and without tiring. Although remembered particularly as an opera singer, he appeared frequently and with success as a concert and recital artist.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GV (R. Celletti; R. Vegeto)

H. Christian: Paul Schöffler: Versuch einer Würdigung (Vienna, 1967) [with discography]

PETER BRANSCOMBE

Schol, Dirk. See SCHOLL, DIRK.

Schola Cantorum (i). A term applied principally to the choir that sang during solemn papal ceremonies in the Middle Ages. Architectural historians sometimes use 'schola cantorum' to refer to a large marble choir enclosure that stood in the nave of some medieval Roman churches, but these structures had no connection with the papal singers.

The origins and early history of the Schola Cantorum are obscure. Its foundation has been associated since the 9th century with Pope Gregory I (pontificate 590–604), but most modern scholars are sceptical of these legends. Neither the Liber pontificalis nor the earliest biographies of the pope mention a 'schola cantorum'. The first reference to an organized body of singers at Rome occurs in the biography of Pope Sergius I (687–701), who was assigned to the 'priori cantorum' for his education. Liturgical reforms implemented in the 670s, just at the time when Sergius first arrived in Rome, might have included provisions for a permanent choir of papal singers. The Schola Cantorum certainly existed by the beginning of the 8th century, since its liturgical functions are described in detail in the ceremonial books known as the Ordines romani. The Schola Cantorum was associated with an orphanage, and it is likely that it served as a training institute for musically talented young boys, who might also be preparing for clerical careers.

The organization of the Schola resembled that of other Roman bureaucracies. Its chief administrative officer was the prior, but the quartus (also called archiparaphonista) seems to have exercised primary musical responsibility for directing the singers. The secundus and tertius are mentioned much less frequently in the Ordines; presumably they performed the solo portions of graduals, alleluias and offertories. Isolated instances in the Ordines of the term paraphonistae and paraphonistae infantes do not imply the singing of polyphonic music, although later sources attest that on some occasions the Schola sang chant with improvised organal embellishment.

The Schola Cantorum took a leading role in the transmission of Roman chant to the Frankish kingdom during the reign of Charlemagne (see PLAINCHANT, §2(ii)). Italian chroniclers claimed that the Franks corrupted the authentic Roman tradition they received from the Schola, while Frankish writers accused the Romans of sowing discord by teaching different chant repertories in different places. The manner in which the Schola communicated its musical repertory to the Franks has become a topic in the modern scholarly discussion of oral transmission of chant repertories.

The Franks adopted the term 'schola cantorum' for institutions founded after the Roman model, and in modern times the name has been revived by educational institutions, for example, the Parisian Schola Cantorum (Vincent d'Indy, 1894) and the Schola Cantorum Basiliensis (August Wenzinger, 1933), as well as by choirs specializing in the performance of music from the Renaissance and earlier periods.

See also ROME, §II, 1.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG2 (J. Dyer)

F.X. Haberl: 'Die römische "schola cantorum" und die päpstliche Kapellsänger bis zur Mitte des 16 Jahrhunderts', VMw, iii (1887), 189–296

J. Smits van Waesberghe: 'Neues über die Schola Cantorum zu Rom', Katholische Kirchenmusik II: Vienna 1954, 111–19

S.J.P. Van Dijk: 'Papal Schola "versus" Charlemagne', Organicae voces: Festschrift Joseph Smits van Waesberghe angeboten anlässlich seines 60. Geburtstag, ed. P. Fischer (Amsterdam, 1963), 21–30

J. Dyer: 'The Schola Cantorum and its Roman Milieu in the Early Middle Ages', De musica et cantu: Helmut Hucke zum 60. Geburtstag, ed. P. Cahn and A.-K. Heimer (Hildesheim, 1993), 19–40

P. Bernard: Du chant romain au chant grégorien (Paris, 1996)

JOSEPH DYER

Schola Cantorum (ii). See PARIS, §VII.

Scholes, Percy A(lfred) (b Headingley, Leeds, 24 July 1877; d Vevey, 31 July 1958). English writer on music and encyclopedist. He had little formal schooling and was largely self-taught; he spent some years as a music teacher in Canterbury and South Africa, then as a university extension lecturer on music appreciation at Manchester, meanwhile taking his ARCM, and the BMus degree at Oxford. In 1907 he formed the Home Music Study Union, whose journal the Music Student (later the Music Teacher) he edited until 1921. In 1912 he moved to London, where he began to make his way as a journalist (Evening Standard, 1913–20) and university extension lecturer. During World War I he organized the 'music for the troops' section of the YMCA, work which resulted in his Listener's Guide to Music (1919). From 1920 to 1925 he was music critic of The Observer, where he became an early champion of broadcasting, the gramophone and the player-piano. He gave fortnightly impromptu radio reviews of musical broadcasts; from 1926 to 1928 he was music editor of the Radio Times.

A contract to provide annotations for pianola rolls enabled him to move to Switzerland in 1928. There, while at work simultaneously on several books, he gained the doctorat ès lettres from Lausanne University in 1934 with his dissertation (examined in French) on The Puritans in Music, which refuted allegations of their unmusicality. He organized Anglo-American conferences of musical educationists in Lausanne in 1929 and 1931. When the pianola market collapsed with the Wall Street crash in 1929, a generous settlement of his contract gave him the means to concentrate on a longer-range project. This was a popular dictionary of music, at first tentatively called 'Everyone's Musical Encyclopedia', which aimed at the practical needs of his particular audience of 'new' listeners. The book appeared in 1938 as the Oxford Companion to Music, 'the most extraordinary range of musical knowledge, ingeniously "self-indexed", ever written and assembled between two covers by one man' (Grove's Dictionary, 5th edn). In this, Scholes's unusual combination of teacher, popularizing lecturer, journalist, critic and scholar was displayed in a way that has remained unrivalled.

In 1940 he made his way to Britain just before the fall of France, and lived at first in Aberystwyth. This was near the wartime home of the British Museum Printroom, and he took the opportunity to procure microfilms of virtually every print of musical interest for his own use. Later he lived in Oxford, where he was elected to the board of the Faculty of Music. He completed his work on Burney, a first-rate source for the history of music in England in the 18th century and a model biography (1948), two further dictionaries and detailed though less significant studies of Hawkins, and God Save the Queen.

He had a house built to his own specifications in Clarens, in which he lived for only two years before devaluation of the pound made him move back to Oxford in 1950. Finally, in 1957, he moved once more to Switzerland, and died there the following year. His library is now in the National Library of Canada.

Scholes's awareness of the musical needs of the common man was one aspect of a general humanitarian concern, wide-ranging interests and robust common sense. Oxford awarded him in 1943 an Hon. DMus and in 1950 a DLitt; other distinctions included an Hon. DLitt (Leeds, 1953); he was made an Hon. Fellow and Trustee of St Edmund Hall, Oxford, and an Officer of the Star of Romania (1930); he was an FSA (1938) and in 1957 he was made an OBE.

WRITINGS

The Listener's Guide to Music (London, 1919, 10/1942)
The Complete Book of the Great Musicians (London, 1923, 11/1984)
The Listener's History of Music (London, 1923–9, 7/1954)
The Columbia History of Music through Ear and Eye (London, 1930–38) [five albums of records with disc notes]
The Puritans and Music in England and New England (diss., U. of Lausanne, 1934; London, 1934/R)
Music: the Child and the Masterpiece (London, 1935)
The Oxford Companion to Music (London, 1938, 9/1955, rev. 10/1970 by J.O. Ward, enlarged 1983 by D. Arnold as The New Oxford Companion to Music)
ed.: The Mirror of Music 1844–1944: a Century of Musical Life in Britain as Reflected in the Pages of the 'Musical Times' (London, 1947/R) [selected extracts from MT]
The Great Dr Burney: his Life, his Travels, his Works, his Family and Friends (London, 1948/R)
The Concise Oxford Dictionary of Music (London, 1952, 2/1964 ed. J.O. Ward, rev. 4/1996 by M. Kennedy and J. Bourne)
The Life and Activities of Sir John Hawkins, Musician, Magistrate, and Friend of Johnson (London, 1953/R)
The Oxford Junior Companion to Music (London, 1954, rev. 2/1979 by M. Hurd)
God Save the Queen! The History and Romance of the World's First National Anthem (London, 1954)
Dr. Burney's Musical Tours in Europe (London, 1959) [annotated edn of Burney's The Present State of Music in France and Italy and The Present State of Music in Germany, the Netherlands, and the United Provinces, incorporating his unpubd travel diary]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DNB (J.O. Ward)
P. Lewis: 'Let me Introduce Dr Percy Scholes who Wrote a Bestseller', Yorkshire Evening News (5 Sept 1955)
'Percy Scholes, Pioneer of Musical Appreciation', The Times (2 Aug 1957)
Obituary, New York Times (3 Aug 1958)
K. Simpson, ed.: Some Great Music Educators (London, *c*1976)

JOHN OWEN WARD

Scholl, Andreas (b Eltville, 10 Nov 1967). German countertenor. He studied singing at the Schola Cantorum Basiliensis with Richard Levitt and René Jacobs. His first recital was in Paris in 1993, since when he has been in constant demand, singing with many of the leading early music ensembles. He has worked with, among others, René Jacobs, Christophe Coin, William Christie and Philippe Herreweghe, and has appeared at several of the leading international festivals, including Ambronay, Beaune, Glyndebourne (where he sang a memorable Bertarido in Rodelinda in 1998), the BBC Promenade Concerts and Saintes. Scholl has been widely admired for his liquid, warmly coloured, evenly projected voice and control of line and nuance. His recordings include Monteverdi's Vespers, Bach cantatas, the B minor Mass and Christmas Oratorio, Handel's Messiah and Solomon, English and German Baroque songs, and Vivaldi's Stabat mater, for which he won a Gramophone Award.

NICHOLAS ANDERSON

Scholl, Dirck (Janszoon) (b ?Brielle, nr Rotterdam, 1640/1; d Delft, 31 March 1727). Dutch organist, carillonneur and composer. He must have received his early musical training from his father, Jan Scholl, who was carillonneur at Brielle. In 1661 Scholl was appointed organist and carillonneur at St Eusebius, Arnhem, where he also became a member of the local collegium musicum. In 1665 he moved to Delft and worked at the Nieuwe Kerk, where on his death he was succeeded by his son Hubertus. Scholl was also active as a carillon and organ expert, inspecting instruments all over the country. His essay 'Toegift op (Quirinus) Cis en Dis' was published in Pieter Hemony's De on-noodsakelijkheid en ondienstigheid van Cis en Dis in de bassen der klokken (Delft, 1678/R). His only surviving compositions are the simple French dances printed in Vrede-triomph ofte Thalia's lust-hoff (1678).

Dirck Scholl is not to be confused with his younger brother Cornelius (1650–1733), who was organist and carillonneur in The Hague and Delft, and whose sole printed instrumental collection, Landvrugten in four parts, is lost.

WORKS

lost, except op.6; all lost works listed in Wind

INSTRUMENTAL

Den spelende kus-hemel (over 200 pieces), 3 vn, bc, op.1 (Delft, 1669)
Delfs-Engels, sonatas, 2 vn, va da gamba, bc, op.2 (Delft, 1671)
Hollandsche en Engelsche vredevreugt, i, 2 scordatura vns, 2 bc, op.3 or 4 (Delft, 1676)
Hollandsche en Engelsche vredevreugt, ii, vn, va da gamba, bc, op.4 (Delft, 1676)
Vermakelijck tijt-verdrijf, 2 vn, 2 bc, op.5 (Delft, 1677)
Vrede-triomph ofte Thalia's lust-hoff (6 suites of Fr. dances), 3 scordatura vns (a–e′–a′–c♯″), bc (always doubling 1 of the vns), op.6 (Delft, 1678)
Koningklijke airs, i, vn, va da gamba, bc, op.7/8 (Delft, 1683)
Koningklijke airs, ii, vn, va da gamba, bc, op.8 (Delft, 1684)
Kermis-werk, bestaende in gigen, balletten en sarbanden, vn, ?va da gamba, bc, op.9 (Delft, before 1695)
Royaal thee-desert, a 3 (before 1708)
Somer- en winter-ooft, a 3 (before 1708)
Vorstelijk snarenspel, a 3 (before 1708)

VOCAL

Olypodigro, ofte mengelmoes, 1v, bc (Delft, 1669)
Rouw- en liefde-tranen, 1v, 2 vn, va da gamba, bc (Delft, 1695)
Troost in ouderdom … en tegenzang voor de jonkheyd, 1v, bc (Delft, 1717)
D'onnaspeurlijke naspeuring, bestaande in vraag, antwoord en toesang, 1v, bc (Delft, 1717)

WRITINGS

reproduced in Meilink-Hoedemaker

'Toegift op (Quirinus) Cis en Dis', in P. Hemony: De On-Noodsakelijkheid en Ondienstigheid van Cis en Dis in de Bassen der Klokken (Delft, 1678)
Weergalm op het onderste gedeelte van de quintessence des nouvelles van der 14 maart 1695, no.21 (Delft, 1695)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GoovaertsH; Vander StraetenMPB
W.H. Thijsse: 'Dirck Scholl (1641–1727)', Mens en melodie, x (1955), 306–10
L.J. Meilink-Hoedemaker: Luidklokken en Speelklokken in Delft (diss., U. of Utrecht, 1985)
R. Verhagen: Sybrandus van Noordt, organist van Amsterdam en Haarlem 1659–1705 (Amsterdam, 1989)
T. Wind: 'Muziek in een Delftse catalogus uit 1708: het instrumentale oeuvre van Dirck Scholl', Tijdschrift voor oude muziek, v/3 (1990), 19–23

THIEMO WIND

Schollenberger, Kaspar (b Höchstädt an der Donau, nr Donauwörth, 1673; d Ulm, 31 Aug 1735). German composer. He attended the school attached to St Ulrich, Augsburg, where he was a choirboy for five years, and then entered a monastery at Wengen bei Ulm. The abbot there, recognizing his unusual ability, arranged for him to study at the University of Dillingen, where he went in 1697. In 1705 he returned to the monastery as philosophy teacher. The first of his three publications appeared in 1713.

Schollenberger was one of the few south German composers to publish church music before the 1720s, when the boom in simple liturgical music for parish choirs began. His scoring and style are quite different from that of later publications by composers such as Rathgeber and show that his music was intended only for experienced performers and well-found establishments. His orchestra includes an essential viola part, and sometimes also requires oboes and bassoons, as well as the customary violins, trumpets and drums.

Most of Schollenberger's psalms and offertories are divided into six or more separate movements. In his solo arias and duets, he often indulged in vocal elaboration apparently for its own sake; his choral writing is solidly contrapuntal, and since the violins often have independent parts, making six in all, the textures in the choral movements tend to be thick. Schollenberger, though a skilled craftsman, had little gift for melodic or harmonic invention, so his music lacks a sense of purpose, and, however well-constructed, is often dull.

WORKS

Psalmodia ariosa tripartita (3 Vespers), 4vv, 2 vn, vle, org, op.1 (Augsburg, 1713)

Thymiama ariosa-ecclesiastica (38 offs), 4vv, vn, va, vle, org, opp.2, 5, 6 (Ulm, 1718, 1720, 1723)

Gaudia et luctus (5 masses, 1 requiem), op.3 (Augsburg, 1718)

Mariale ariosum, op.4 (Augsburg, 1719)

Lost works: Antiphonarium romanum, 1719, 4vv, bc; Vesperae de Dominica, 4vv, 2 vn, 2 tpt, timp, org; Vesperae de B.V.M., 4vv, 2 vn, 2 ob, org; Confitebor tibi, 4vv, 2 vn, org; Missa S Rainaldi, 1724, 4vv, 2 vn, 2 va, org

ELIZABETH ROCHE

Schöllhorn, Johannes (b Murnau, 30 June 1962). German composer and conductor. He studied at the Freiburg Musikhochschule (1983–91), where his teachers included Klaus Huber, Emanuel Nunes, Mathias Spahlinger and Peter Förtig. He also participated in conducting courses with Peter Eötvös. A specialist in contemporary music conducting, he has taught composition and music theory at the Winterthur Conservatory and chamber music at the Institute for New Music of the Freiburg Musikhochschule (from 1996). His honours include the Rome Valentino Bucchi composition prize (1985, 1987), the Förderpreis of Baden-Württemberg (1991), first prize in the Basle Kammerkunst competition (1993) and stipendiums from the Heinrich Strobel Foundation (1988), the Darmstadt summer school (1988), the Gaudeamus Foundation (1989) and the Baden-Württemberg Art Foundation (1993).

An important element of Schöllhorn's music is its confrontation with tradition. His quotations of music and text range from Francesco Landini madrigals to noises and speech fragments from everyday life. Musical and spoken strata question and comment on each other as the tone switches rapidly between irony and seriousness. His music often seems close to speech in its ability to conjure up vivid scenes; this is especially apparent in the chamber opera Les petites filles modèles.

WORKS

Stage: Der Vorhang geht auf. Das Theater stellt ein Theater vor (melodrama, L. Tieck), female spkr, vn, cl, hn, vc, perc, 1989; Les petites filles modèles (chbr op, C. Gautier, after the Comtesse de Ségur), 4vv, 2 dancers, hp, pf, 2 perc, 1994–6; Les Vacances (incid music, Gautier, after the Comtesse de Ségur), female vv, hp, pf, 2 perc, 1996; Vittoria accorombona (monodrama, Tieck), Mez, orch

Inst: musarion, va, 1985; Windmaschine, 4 rec, 1985; Hand-Stücke, perc, 1987; Hexagramm, 3 gui, 1987–9; Schlussvignette & Retraiteschuss, (vn, va, vc)/(va, vc, db)/3 vc, 1987; phanias, vn, 1989; les ombres – die Schatten, 2 perc, 1990; Pentagramm, 4 perc, pf, 1990–91; Ralentir-travaux, ens, 1992–3; vom Ende bis, 9 str, 1993; bis, vn, va, vc, 1995; rondo, vn, orch, 1996–7; under one's breath, fl, va, hp, 1996

Vocal: brandung, 2 S, 2 A, 2 T, 2 B, 1983–4; Septet, S, A, Bar, vn, 2 va, vc, 1986–7; Marien-Lieder, 3 A, 1991–2; vor Augen (M. Kaltenecker), spkr, fl, vc, pf, 1993; Damenstimmen (G. Stein), spkr, pf, 1995; Schöne Stellen, S, A, T, B, str qt, 1997; l'autre poème, Mez, hn, pf

Arrs.: incl. works by P. Boulez, G. Frescobaldi, J.M. Hauer, M. Kowalski, F. Landini, E. Satie, A. Schoenberg, F. Schreker, S. Wolpe

Principal publishers: Una corda

ERIKA SCHALLER

Schollum, Robert (b Vienna, 22 Aug 1913; d Vienna, 30 Sept 1987). Austrian composer. He studied theory and composition with Joseph Marx (i) and Egon Lustgarten, and the organ and piano with Carl Lafite. After serving in the armed forces during World War II, he became an organist and choirmaster in Linz (from 1945). In this role, and as a teacher and organizer, he sought to improve and rejuvenate cultural life, working in conjunction with the Viennese section of the ISCM and the Jeunesses Musicales. He directed the musical administration of Vienna (1951–3) and later served as chair of the Österreichischer Komponistenbund (1965–70). In 1972 he was appointed professor at the Vienna Akademie für Musik und Darstellende Kunst.

As a composer, Schollum was initially influenced by the music of Debussy and by aspects of folksong. Following the war, he turned increasingly to neo-classicism. He eventually adopted 12-note techniques, maintaining a serial orientation even when he incorporated aleatory elements and sound planes into his style. Among his most important works are Gespräche written for chamber orchestra (1959), Alle Musik ist Stimme for soprano and orchestra (1964–5), Mosaik for oboe, percussion and piano (1967–8), Szenen und Gebärden for chamber ensemble (1972) and the Markuspassion (1973–7).

WORKS
(selective list)

Ops: Mirandolina (E. Thanner, after C. Goldoni), 1945–6; Nacht der Verwandlung (chbr op), op.48, Linz, 1952

Orch: Conc. grosso, op.34, cl, orch, 1948; Serenade, op.39a, 1952; Sym. no.1, op.50, 1953–5; Vc Conc., op.52, 1954; 8 Augenblicke, op.54c, 1956–8; Kontraste, op.56, no.1, 1957; Konturen, op.59b, str, 1958; Sym. no.2 'Istrianische', op.60, 1958–9; Gespräche, op.62, chbr orch, 1959; Vn Conc. no.2, op.65, 1961; Sym. no.3, op.67, 1962; Sym. no.4, op.74, 1964; Sym. no.5, op.77, 1969; Spiele, op.82, 1970; Rufe, op.90, 1972

Vocal: Im Frühtau zu Berge, vv, orch, 1950; Gesang im brüderlichen Raum (cant., J.L. Stern), 1953; Gesang aus der Nacht (K. Kleinschmidt), S, vv, orch, 1957; Alle Musik ist Stimme (Jesus Sirach, W. Shakespeare, J. von Eichendorff and others), op.69b, S, orch, 1964–5; Chorfantasie, op.86 (after Dante), solo vv, vv, pf, orch, 1971; Markuspassion, op.100, 1973–7; songs

Chbr and solo inst: Sonata, op.36, bn, pf, 1949; Str Qt no.1, op.40, 1949; Sonata, op.38, va d'amore, pf, 1950; Sonata, op.42a, cl, pf, 1950; Sonata, op.42b, va, pf, 1950; Sonata, op.42c, vn, pf, 1950; Oktett in 8 Skizzen, op.63, 1959; Str Qt no.2, op.72, 1966; Mosaik, op.75, ob, perc, pf, 1967–8; 5 Stücke, op.83, wind qnt,

1970; Szenen und Gebärden, op.87, chbr ens, 1972; Die Ameisen, op.93, vc, pf, 1974; kbd works

Principal publisher: Doblinger

WRITINGS

Musik in der Volksbildung (Vienna, 1962)

Die Wiener Schule: Entwicklung und Ergebnis (Vienna, 1969)

Singen als menschliche Kundbegung: Einführung in die Arbeit mit den 'Singblättern zur Musikerziehung' (Vienna, 1970)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. Szmolyan: 'Neue Werke von Robert Schollum', ÖMz, xxviii (1973), 403–5

G. Brosche, ed.: Robert Schollum (Vienna, 1981)

SIGRID WIESMANN

Scholz, Bernhard (Ernst) (b Mainz, 30 March 1835; d Munich, 26 Dec 1916). German conductor and composer, father of HANS SCHOLZ. He first studied music with Heinrich Esser and Ernst Pauer and, after a trip to Paris to learn lithography at his father's request, took further instruction from S.W. Dehn (composition) and Sangiovanni (singing) in Milan. He taught theory at the Royal School of Music in Munich from 1856, then conducted the opera in Zürich and Nuremberg before becoming assistant court Kapellmeister to Marschner in Hanover (1859–65). Subsequently he conducted the concerts of the Società Cherubini in Florence (1865–6) before his activity as a conductor in Berlin, where he directed the Philharmonic Concerts and the Cäcilienverein and taught at Kullak's and Stern's conservatories. From 1871 he directed the concerts of the Breslau Orchestral Society. He succeeded Raff as director of the Hoch Conservatory in Frankfurt in 1883, a position he retained until his retirement in 1908; he also conducted the choral union founded by F.W. Rühl (from 1884). Scholz was a promoter of the use of art in a patriotic and social context, and in 1897 founded the first workers' Volkschor in Germany. On retirement he went first to Florence and then settled in Munich in 1914. The University of Breslau awarded him an honorary doctorate in 1883.

Scholz belonged to the circle of Brahms, Joachim and Clara Schumann, and was among those who signed the famous manifesto of March 1860 against the New German School. He worked assiduously to promote the works of Brahms, whose influence is most evident in his compositions. His late chamber music, which shows a concern with form and finish in detail, represents the highpoint of his output. His String Quartet in G op.46 won the Florentine Quartet Prize in 1877, and his String Quintet in E minor op.47 was awarded a prize by a St Petersburg society the following year. Scholz was also distinguished as an author and compiler of textbooks.

WORKS

OPERAS

Carlo Rosa (komische Oper, 3, B. Scholz), Nuremberg, Staat, 16 Dec 1858

Ziethen'sche Husaren (komische Oper, 3, T. Rehbaum), Breslau, 26 Nov 1869

Morgiane (romantische Oper, 3, Rehbaum), Munich, Hof, 18 Sept 1870

Der Nachtwächter (1, Rehbaum), 1871

Golo (romantische Oper, 4 Scholz), Nuremberg, 4 April 1875

Der Trompeter von Säckingen (komische Oper, 4, Rehbaum), Wiesbaden, 20 Jan 1877

Die vornehmen Wirte (komische Oper, 3, P. Schumacher), Leipzig, 10 March 1883

Gustav Wasa, Kassel, 1886

Ingo (4, Scholz), Frankfurt, 27 Feb 1898

Anno 1757 (3, R. Scholz), Berlin, Kgl, 18 Jan 1903

Mirandolina (3, Rehbaum), Darmstadt, Hof, 1 March 1907

OTHER WORKS

Vocal: Requiem; Das Lied von der Glocke, solo vv, chorus, orch; Das Seigesfest; Sylvesterglocken; partsongs and solo songs

Orch: 2 syms.; Pf Conc.; Capriccio, pf, orch; Capriccio all'ungarese, vc, orch; Wanderung, suite; Im Freien; Iphigenie, ov.

Chbr and pf: Pf Qnt; Str Qnt; Pf Qt; 2 str qts; 2 pf trios; vn and vc sonatas and other works; Pf Sonata; many other pf works, incl. preludes and fugues, variations, sonatinas, ländler, waltzes (4 hands) and variations (2 pf)

WRITINGS

ed.: S.W. Dehn's Lehre vom Contrapunkt, dem Canon und der Fuge (Leipzig, 1859)

Wohin treiben wir? Betrachtungen eines Musikers (Frankfurt, 1897)

Musikalisches und Persönliches (Berlin and Stuttgart, 1899)

Lehre vom Kontrapunkt und den Nachahmungen (Leipzig, 1904)

Verklungene Weisen: Erinnerungen (Mainz, 1911)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. Altmann, ed.: Johannes Brahms: Briefwechsel, iii (Berlin, 1908, 2/1912)

Johannes Joachim and A. Moser, eds.: Briefe von und an Joseph Joachim (Berlin, 1911–13; Eng. trans., abridged, 1914/R)

H. Behr: Denkschrift zum Feier des 50jährigen Bestehen des Breslauer Orchestervereins 1862–1912 (Breslau, 1912)

W. Nagel: Obituary, Neue Musik-Zeitung, xxxviii (1917), 123

B. Litzmann, ed.: Clara Schumann, Johannes Brahms: Briefe aud den Jahren 1853–1896 (Leipzig, 1927; Eng. trans., 1927/R)

S. von der Schulenburg: 'Briefe Wilhelm Diltheys an Bernhard und Luise Scholz', Sitzungsberichte der Preussischen Akademie (Berlin, 1933), 416–71

W. Altmann: Handbuch für Klavierquartettspieler (Wolfenbüttel, 1937)

P. Cahn: Das Hoch'sche Konservatorium in Frankfurt am Main (Frankfurt, 1979)

GAYNOR G. JONES/R

Scholz, Hans (b Breslau [now Wrocław], 7 March 1879; d Munich, 20 Oct 1953). German writer on music, son of BERNHARD SCHOLZ. He was enrolled at the Hoch Conservatory in Frankfurt before studying musicology from 1903 at the universities of Berlin and Rostock. He completed his studies at Munich University where he also taught theory between 1910 and 1924. With his translation of Berlioz's memoirs Scholz's reputation as a writer was established; later he was active as a music critic in Frankfurt. In 1928 he returned to Munich as a critic for the Münchner Zeitung.

WRITINGS

Johann Sigismund Kusser (Cousser): sein Leben und seine Werke (Leipzig, 1911)

Lebenserinnerungen (Munich, 1914, 2/1929) [trans. of H. Berlioz: Mémoires (Paris, 1870)]

Harmonielehre (Leipzig and Berlin, 1920)

ed.: Richard Wagner an Mathilde Maier (Leipzig, 1930)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

S. von der Schulenburg, ed.: 'Briefe Wilhelm Diltheys an Bernhard und Luise Scholz', Sitzungsberichte der Preussischen Akademie der Wissenschaften: philosophisch-historische Klasse (Berlin, 1933), 416–71

W. Altmann: Handbuch für Klavierquartettspieler (Wolfenbüttel, 1937)

W. Zentner: 'Hans Scholz: 60 Jahre', ZfM, Jg.106 (1939), 293–4

A. Würz: 'Abschied von Hans Scholz', ZfM, Jg.114 (1953), 730–31

GAYNOR G. JONES/BERND WIECHERT

Scholze, Johann Sigismund. See SPERONTES.

Schönbach, Dieter (b Stolp [now Słupsk], Pomerania, 18 Feb 1931). German composer. After studies in Detmold and Freiburg with Bialas and Fortner (1949–59), he served as music director at the Bochum Schauspielhaus (1959–73). He also worked in theatres in Münster, Westphalia and Basle; he took part in the artistic arrangements for the 1972 Olympic Games in Munich and lectured in India and South America for the Goethe Institute. In 1972 he was joint winner of the Stamitz Prize of Stuttgart with Otte and Steffen.

One of the foremost German exponents of mixed-media composition, Schönbach has engaged in many collaborative ventures with visual artists, choreographers and film directors. Even in his 'pure' works he has made use of Wasily Kandinsky's theory of elements in pictorial form, disposing his materials as 'surfaces', 'points', 'silences' and 'curves'. Many of his pieces require graphic projections, sometimes prepared by other artists. Apart from his self-sufficient compositions, he has worked on advertising films, a multi-vision programme for the tourist office at Cologne, a programme of graphic compositions for underground railways and reconstructions of a number of Baroque operas. Also a painter, his visual works have been shown in several exhibitions.

WORKS
(selective list)

DRAMATIC AND MIXED MEDIA

Geometrie, Sprache der Formen (film), 1958; Aktionsmusik I, elec rec, audience, 1967, collab. G. Weseler; Canzona da sonar 5, S, environment, 1968, collab. O. Piene; Die Geschichte von einem Feuer (mixed-media op, after E. Borchers), 1968, collab. E. Kieselbach, O. Piene, B. Völkle, Weseler; Aktionsmusik II, audience, 1969; Canzona da sonar 5 (film), 1970; Canzona da sonar 6 (mixed-media show with puppets), 1970, collab. Weseler; Hymnus I, spkrs, singers, choruses, pop group, tapes, visuals, 1970

Der Sturm (mixed-media show, after W. Shakespeare), spkrs, musicians, tapes, visuals, 1970, collab. Kieselbach; Bedrohung und Uberleben (multi-media op), 1971, collab. Kieselbach and Piene; Hysteria–Paradies schwarz (mixed-media op), 1971, collab. D. Wellershoff, Kieselbach, K. Geldmacher, K. Göhling, P. Brühning, Weseler; Hymnus II–Morgen nach dem Feuer (mixed-media show), spkrs, singers, choruses, 3 pop groups, tapes, visuals, 1972; Die chöre des Oedipus (speech composition for radio, after F. Hölderlin), 1973; Metro Media, kinetic sound formations for underground railways, 1973; Der Sturm (radio scenes, after Shakespeare), 1973

Zum Beispiel Krönungsmesse von Mozart zusammen machen (TV film), 1974, collab. E. Schoener and J. Lord; Come S Francesco (chbr op), spkrs, singers, dancers, projections, 1975–6; Wie die signori Scarlatti, Cesti und Cavalli die göttliche Komödie in Versailles aufführten (Spektakl), 1984 [after frags. of Scarlatti, Cesti, Cavalli and Lully]; Fläche und Raum zur Musik (film), 1996 [after W. Kandinsky]

OTHER WORKS

Orch: Conc., D/F-tpt, chbr orch, 1957 [after A. Scarlatti]; Orchesterstück 1 'Farben und Klänge', 1958; Pf Conc., 1958; Orchesterstück 2 'Ritornelle', 1961; Orchesterstück 3 'Pour Varsovie', 1962; Orchesterstück 4 'Entre', 1963; Canzona da sonar 1, str, 1965; Canzona da sonar 17, 1992; Überdecken, pf, 2 orch, 1996 [after Mozart: Pf Conc., c, K491]

Vocal: Canticum psalmi resurrectionis, S, insts, 1957; Come S Francesco predico agli uccelli, conc., S, insts, 1959; Lyrische Gesänge I (Borchers), S, insts, 1961; Lyrische Gesänge II (Borchers), S, 2 pf, 1962; Canticum psalmi ad laudes, S, insts, 1964, collab. Weseler; Chant liturgique, hommage à Perotin, chorus, orch, 1964, collab. Kieselbach; Canzona da sonar 8 'Birds', S, birdcalls, 1974; Canzona da sonar 9–16, vv, insts, 1982–9

Inst: 4 kleine Klavierstücke, 1957; Str Qt, 1957; Kammermusik 1960, 14 insts, 1960; Hoquetus, 8 wind, 1964, collab. Weseler; Canzona da sonar 2, ens, 1966, collab. Weseler; Canzona da sonar 3, tr rec, prep pf, tape, 1967; Canzona da sonar 7, t sax, pf, tape, 1971

Principal publishers: Moeck, Peters, Süddeutscher Musikverlag

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Grove6 [incl. further bibliography]

D. Gojowy: 'Multimedia und graphische Komposition', Musik und Bildung, ii (1970), 273–8

D. Gojowy: 'Die U-Bahn fährt plötzlich durch Wasser', Melos, xli (1974), 10–16

DETLEF GOJOWY

Schönberg, Arnold. See SCHOENBERG, ARNOLD.

Schönberg, Claude-Michel (b Vannes, 6 July 1944). French composer. He supported himself while at the Ecole Supérieure de Commerce in Nantes by playing the piano in a popular group called Les Venètes (1963–7). After graduation he was employed as a producer and junior artistic director for Pathé-Marconi.

In 1972 he resigned to compose, with the lyricist Alain Boublil (b Tunis, 5 March 1941), the historically based musical La révolution française, which was released in the following year as a double album before performances on stage in Paris at the Palais des Sports. In 1974 Le premier pas became a hit song in France, and during the following years Schönberg, who had sung the role of Louis XVI in his first musical, continued to record his own songs. A second collaboration with Boublil, begun in 1979, led to another popular recording of a concept album, this time based on Hugo's epic novel Les Misérables, which in staged form extended considerably beyond its originally limited engagement in Paris in the next year. In 1982 the British producer Cameron Mackintosh joined forces with the director Trevor Nunn and John Caird and several additional librettists and lyricists to produce for the Royal Shakespeare Company a successful English version in 1985. Its Broadway début the following year claimed virtually all possible awards and a run of over ten years. Within a few years the show appeared in dozens of international productions and became arguably the greatest global success of the musical stage.

Schönberg rejoined Boublil and Mackintosh in 1989 to create a second international hit, Miss Saigon. This adaptation of Madama Butterfly, set against the backdrop of the Vietnam War and the fall of Saigon in 1975, was a stirring drama that brought the realities of a still-controversial war to the popular stage in a classic love story. In 1996 a third Schönberg-Boublil-Mackintosh musical received its first performance in London, Martin Guerre, loosely based on events in a small village in southern France in 1560, and set against the backdrop of the escalating conflict between Protestants and Catholics.

In contrast to his distant musical relative, Arnold Schoenberg, Schönberg is a self-taught composer who can play and record his melodies but not notate them. His musicals are almost entirely through-sung and, in addition to their generic popular character, attempt to evoke dramatically appropriate styles ranging from French patriotic tunes in Misérables to Asian scales and timbres in Miss Saigon and Renaissance modality in Martin Guerre.

WORKS
(selective list)

all are musicals: writers shown as (lyricist; book author)

La révolution française (A. Boublil; J-M. Rivière), Paris, Palais des Sports, 2 Oct 1973, collab. R. Jeannot

Les Misérables (Boublil and J-M. Natel; Boublil after V. Hugo), Paris, Palais des Sports, 17 Sept 1980; rev. Eng. version (H. Kretzmer), orchd J. Cameron, London, Barbican, 8 Oct 1985

Miss Saigon (Boublil and R. Maltby jr; Boublil), orchd W.D. Brohn, London, Drury Lane, 20 Sept 1989

Martin Guerre (Boublil, E. Hardy and S. Clark; Boublil and Schönberg), orchd J. Tunick, London, Prince Edward, 10 July 1996

BIBLIOGRAPHY
E. Behr: The Complete Book of Les Misérables (London, 1989)
E. Behr and M. Steyn: The Story of Miss Saigon (London, 1991)

GEOFFREY BLOCK

chonberg, Harold C(harles) (b New York, 29 Nov 1915). American music critic. He was educated at Brooklyn College (BA 1937) and at New York University (MA 1938), and served as music critic and record reviewer for the New York Sun (1946–50) and the Musical Courier (1948–52). He became associated with the New York Times in 1950, and was the paper's senior music critic, 1960–80. He has also contributed articles to many American magazines. He was awarded two honorary doctorates (Temple University, 1964; Grinnell College, 1967) and was the first music critic to be awarded the Pulitzer Prize for criticism (1971), a category established in 1970. In 1980 he retired as senior music critic at the New York Times, but continued there as cultural critic for the next five years; he remains an active contributor to other publications.

In his reviews and articles of the 1960s, Schonberg argued for a revival of 19th-century performing practice, which he felt had been sacrificed to the search for a perfect technique, resulting in a loss of both personality in the performance and contact with the audience. He was also highly critical of total serialism, an attitude which when initially expressed was unpopular but which has since gained some acceptance. His writings combine a profound knowledge of music with fine journalistic writing to reach a wide audience; he is also an expert on chess and painting.

WRITINGS

Chamber and Solo Instrument Music (New York, 1955)
The Collector's Chopin and Schumann (Philadelphia, 1959/R)
The Great Pianists (New York, 1963, 2/1987)
The Great Conductors (New York, 1967)
The Lives of the Great Composers (New York, 1970, 3/1997)
Facing the Music (New York, 1981)
The Glorious Ones: Classical Music's Legendary Performers (New York, 1985/*R*1988 as The Virtuosi)
Horowitz: his Life and Music (New York, 1992)
Contribution to 'Writers/Critics on Bernstein', Conversations about Bernstein, ed. W. Westbrook Burton (New York, 1995), 33–9

BIBLIOGRAPHY
E. Berk: An Analysis and Comparison of the Aesthetics and Philosophy of Selected Music Critics in New York: 1940–1975 (diss., New York U., 1978)

PATRICK J. SMITH/R

ꞩchondorpp, Philipp. See SCHOENDORFF, PHILIPP.

ꞩchöne, Lotte (b Vienna, 15 Dec 1891; d Paris, 23 Dec 1977). Austrian soprano, later naturalized French. She studied in Vienna, made her début at the Volksoper in 1915, and sang at the Staatsoper from 1917 to 1926 and at the Salzburg festivals from 1922 to 1935. Hearing her there, Bruno Walter engaged her for the Berlin Städtische Oper, where she remained from 1926 to 1933. In Vienna and Berlin she was especially famous in all the lighter Mozart roles, as Adele in Die Fledermaus and Norina in Don Pasquale, as Verdi's Gilda and Oscar, and as Strauss's Sophie and Zerbinetta. Among several Puccini roles she excelled as Liù, which she sang with great success at Covent Garden in 1927. The latter part of her artistic life was disrupted by the coming to power of the Nazis in 1933. Thereafter she made her home in Paris, where her Mélisande was much admired, but she was obliged to go into hiding in southern France during the war. A beautiful woman, Schöne had a charming stage presence, of which her light and well-schooled soprano seemed the natural counterpart. The best of her many recordings are those made in Berlin between 1927 and 1931. They reveal her skills as a lieder interpreter as well as chronicling the charm of her style in operatic roles.

BIBLIOGRAPHY
A. Tubeuf: 'Lotte Schoene', Record Collector, xx (1971–2), 75–89 [incl. discography]

DESMOND SHAWE-TAYLOR/R

Schoneck. See SCHÖNIG family.

Schonenberger, Georges (b Mitlödi, Glaris, Switzerland, 22 July 1807; d Pfäfers, Switzerland, July 1856). Swiss publisher, active in France. His earliest advertisement dates from 10 April 1830, and his first address, 10 boulevard Poissonnière, Paris, was that of Dufaut & Dubois, whose business he acquired and many of whose publications he reissued. The house number was changed, or a move was made, first to no.20 in November or December 1841, and then to no.28 boulevard Poissonnière between December 1842 and January 1843. From 1837 Schonenberger's brother-in-law Jost Wild (1793–1875) was a partner in the firm. In the 1860s Wild's name was usually added to or substituted for that of Schonenberger in the imprints. In June 1875, on Wild's death, the business was advertised for sale for 250,000 francs.

Schonenberger is interesting for his enterprise in publishing full scores and orchestral parts of four Donizetti operas, including La fille du régiment (1840). He put out full scores of some 27 other operas, all but a handful of which were reissues from the plates of other publishers (including Pleyel, Dufaut & Dubois and Bochsa). He published about 50 operas in vocal scores, including several little-known works by Rossini and Donizetti. Among his other publications should be noted Berlioz's Grand traité d'instrumentation (1843), piano concertos in parts by Hummel, Mendelssohn and Thalberg, numerous piano works by J.S. Herz and Hünten, new editions or reissues of a large proportion of Bochsa's harp music, violin music by Delphin Alard and Paganini, a highly successful piano method by Henri Bertini, a certain amount of Spanish music, and translations into Spanish of didactic works published by the firm.

BIBLIOGRAPHY
DEMF [includes a list of plate nos.]; HopkinsonD
Catalogue des ouvrages composant les fonds de musique de Schonenberger (Paris, *c*1832–3)

RICHARD MACNUTT

Schönfeld, Johann Philipp (b Strasbourg, 1742; d Strasbourg, 5 Jan 1790). Alsatian composer and conductor. He attended the Protestant Gymnasium in Strasbourg, studied theology and received his early musical instruction from J.F. Brück. By 1770 he was court steward and tutor to the Münchhausen family in Brunswick. During this period he called himself a musical amateur and published three collections of songs. In August 1777 he became assistant Kapellmeister at the New Church, Strasbourg. The city granted him a leave of absence with a small stipend in 1779 so that he could study in Italy. After his return he was Kapellmeister at the New Church and also concert director for the city from 1781 (assisted by Ignaz Pleyel). His plans of 1787 for the reorganization of the city concerts were abandoned because of the French Revolution. Schubart described Schönfeld as 'a composer of vocal music, who in the most recent times has begun to achieve recognition. He chooses poems by our best poets and often successfully gets at the sense of the poems in his settings; but his taste is too harsh, his shading too brilliant, and the expression of his feelings often too affected'. According to Fétis he left several operas in manuscript, but only one stage work is known.

WORKS

Song collections: Recueil de quelques pièces pour le chant (Nuremberg, *c*1769); [10] Neue Lieder auf das Clavier, i (Hamburg and Brunswick, *c*1776); Neue Freymäurer Lieder mit Melodien (Brunswick, before 1778); [17] Lieder aus der Iris und 1 Arie mit Begleitung einer Violine zum Singen beym Claviere (Berlin, 1778); lieder, 2–4vv, kbd, B-Bc [perhaps from Lieder aus der Iris]; several pubd in contemporary anthologies and periodicals

Other vocal: Das Milchmädchen und die zween Jäger (comic operetta), D-Bsb [incl. arias by Pacini and Duni]; Gelobet seyst du, Herr (cant.), S, chorus, orch, F-Pn; Herr Gott, dich loben wir (cant.), S, B, chorus, orch, Pn; Cantata per il Venerdi Santo, 2 S, 2 choruses, orch, Pc [inc.]; Cantate auf die Feyerliche Einsenkung Grafen Moritz von Sachsen, 1777, lost; other cants. cited by Vogeleis, lost

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Choron-FayolleD; FétisB; GerberL; SchillingE
C.F.D. Schubart: Ideen zu einer Ästhetik der Tonkunst (Vienna, 1806/R)
M. Friedlaender: Das deutsche Lied im 18. Jahrhundert (Stuttgart and Berlin, 1902/R)
M. Vogeleis: Quellen und Bausteine zu einer Geschichte der Musik und des Theaters im Elsass 500–1800 (Strasbourg, 1911/R)

ELLWOOD DERR

Schönfelder, Gerd (b Köttewitz, nr Dresden, 27 April 1936). German musicologist. He studied musicology with Vetter, E.H. Meyer and Knepler at the Humboldt University, Berlin (1955–7), modern Chinese at Peking University (1957–9) and Chinese music and drama with Yang Yin liu and Liao Fu Shu at the Peking Academy of Music (1959–62); from 1962 he continued his studies while teaching at the universities of Berlin and Leipzig. In 1969 he took the doctorate at Leipzig with a transcription, translation, commentary and analysis of a traditional Chinese Peking opera, and in 1972 he took the DSc at Halle with a study on the music of socialist realism. He became deputy director of teaching and research at the Dresden Hochschule für Musik (1972), where he was later appointed lecturer in musicology (1974). From 1984 to 1990 he was Intendant at the Staatsoper, Dresden. His chief areas of research are Chinese music theatre, contemporary German and Swedish music, 19th-century music aesthetics and the history of the Dresden Opera.

WRITINGS

'Chinesische Oper', BMw, iii/3 (1961)
'"Die Beschwörung des Ostwinds", (Jie Dong Feng) aus dem Zyklus: Die Schacht bei der Roten Wand', BMw, v (1963), 183–212
'Die melodische Gerüstgestalt des Örlhuangs und ihre Realisation', GfMKB: Leipzig 1966, 561–71
'Das ban-Prinzip der Peking-Oper', Jb für musikalische Volks- und Völkerkunde, iv (1968), 98–105
Die schlagrhythmische und formstrukturelle Gestalt des 'yue mu ci zi' (diss., U. of Leipzig, 1969)
'Zum Gebrauch der Schlaginstrumente im traditionellen chinesischen Theater', SMH, xiii (1971), 137–76
Die Musik der Peking-Oper (Leipzig, 1972)
Untersuchungen zum Begriff des Neuen in der zeitgenössischen Musik: … Erscheinungsformen nichtwortgebundener Musik des sozialistischen Realismus (diss., U. of Halle, 1972)
'Zur Frage des Realismus bei Mendelssohn', BMw, xiv (1972), 169–83; repr. in Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy, ed. G. Schuhmacher (Darmstadt, 1982), 354–75
'Analyse: Fritz Geisslers "Schöpfer Mensch"', MG, xxiii (1973), 408–12; see also 'Analyse: VII. Sinfonie von Fritz Geissler', ibid., xxiv (1974), 199–202
'Der sozialistische Realismus in der Sinfonik Fritz Geisslers', Sammelbände zur Musikgeschichte der Deutschen Demokratischen Republik, iii, ed. H.A. Brockhaus and K. Niemann (Berlin, 1973), 124–90
'Zu einigen stilkundlichen Fragen der Instrumentalwerke von Fred Lohse', Sammelbände zur Musikgeschichte der Deutschen Demokratischen Republik, iv, ed. H.A. Brockhaus and K. Niemann (Berlin, 1975), 299–318
Taschenbuch der Künste: Musikgeschichte (Leipzig, 1977)
'Episodik und Monothematismus als Gestaltungsprinzipien romantischer Musik', Romantikkonferenz [II]: Dresden 1982, 17–24
'Dresdner Operntradition', Dresdner Operntradition: Dresden 1985, 7–16
'Befreiung aus Enge und Zwang: Webers Schaffen im historischen Umfeld', MG, xxxvi (1986), 562–7
'Die Dresdner Oper: Dorado der Uraufführungen', Höhepunkte der Dresdner Operngeschichte im 20. Jahrhundert: Dresden 1989, 851–66 with H. Åstrand and H.-G. Ottenberg: Beiträge zur Biographie J.G. Naumanns: zur Tonsetzung vom Gustav Wasa (Stockholm, 1991)
ed., with H. Åstrand: Contemporary Swedish Music through the Telescopic Sight (Stockholm, 1993)

Schönfelder, Jörg [Georg, Gregorius] (b 2nd half of the 15th century). German composer. The six extant German songs which can be ascribed to him are in Schoeffer's Liederbuch of 1513 (RISM 1513[2]/*R*1908; 3 ed. in Eitner, 2 ed. in Cw, xxix, 1934) in a group of pieces by musicians of the Stuttgart Hofkapelle. This and the style of his songs suggest that he had connections with the Stuttgart Kapelle, although he is not known to have been a member. Of his settings (mainly based on conventional court songs with equally conventional texts) only one became widely known, Von edler Art, which appears in six further prints and four manuscripts (ed. in EDM, 1st ser., xx, 1942). Its broad melody and style of composition recall the most important songs of Hofhaimer and Adam von Fulda. (Moser in fact claimed that it was by Hofhaimer.) Eitner accurately described Schönfelder's songs as 'deeply personal yet of great simplicity'.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Eitner: 'Das alte deutsche mehrstimmige Lied und seine Meister', MMg, xxvi (1894), 1–135
H.J. Moser: Paul Hofhaimer (Stuttgart and Berlin, 1929, enlarged 2/1966)

HANS-CHRISTIAN MÜLLER

Schönherr, Max (b Marburg an der Drau [now Maribor], 23 Nov 1903; d Vienna, 12 Dec 1984). Austrian conductor, composer and musicologist. He studied with Hermann Frisch in Marburg and Roderich von Mojsisovics (composition) at the Graz Conservatory. From 1924 to 1928 he was double bass player, répétiteur and conductor at the Stadttheater in Graz and then successively conductor of a touring opera company (1928–9), at the Theater an der Wien and Vienna Stadttheater (1929–33) and at the Vienna Volksoper (1933–8). From 1931 to 1968 he conducted for Vienna Radio, giving many concerts with the Vienna SO during the 1930s and founding a radio orchestra in Vienna in 1945; he also made guest appearances on foreign radio stations. He came to specialize in light music, and his radio performances of Viennese operetta and dance music displayed a rare sense of Viennese style. He received the title of professor in 1952, and in 1954 won a Joseph Marx composition prize with his Divertimento. As a composer he relied, even in more serious compositions, on clear melodic lines: his Bauernmusi' aus Österreich (1936) and Tänze aus Österreich (1937), based on traditional Austrian dances and intended as an Austrian counterpart to the national dances of Brahms, Dvořák, Granados and Grieg, have achieved international popularity in concerts of light Viennese music. His skill as an orchestrator was also employed in many practical editions of classical Viennese dance music, presenting the original orchestration edited for modern performing practice with alternative scoring for various instrumental combinations. After retiring from Vienna Radio he took up musicology and graduated at Vienna University in 1973 with a study of Ziehrer (published in 1974). Here and in his other writings he combined extensive practical experience with a critical judgment and orderly presentation of material unique in studies of popular musical forms.

Schönherr's grandfather Franz (1821–86) and father Max (1873–1955) were military bandmasters, and his brother Wilhelm (1902–75) was an opera and theatre conductor.

WORKS
(selective list)

Ballet: Hotel Sacher (partly after Hellmesberger), Vienna, Staatsoper, 1957

Orch: 4 pieces, str, 1959; Pf Concertino, 1964

Other vocal, orch, inst and theatre compositions, incl. much light music [for fuller list see LaMusicaD]

Arrs. of music by Strauss family, Lehár, Ziehrer and others

Principal publishers: Bosworth, Doblinger, Ludwig Krenn, Universal

WRITINGS

with K. Reinöhl: Johann Strauss Vater: ein Werkverzeichnis (Vienna, 1954)

Various articles on Johann Strauss (ii) in ÖMz (1964–8); list in ÖMz, xxxi (1976), 127 only

Franz Lehár: Bibliographie zu Leben und Werk (diss., U. of Vienna, 1970); summary in ÖMz, xxv (1970), 330–33

Carl Michael Ziehrer: sein Werk, sein Leben, seine Zeit (Vienna, 1974)

Kompendium zu Band 1–120 der Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich (Graz, 1974)

'Modelle der Walzerkomposition', ÖMz, xxx (1975), 273–86

'Ästhetik des Walzers', ÖMz, xxxi (1976), 57–120

Articles in MGG1, RiemannL12, Grove6

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Lamb, ed.: Unterhaltungsmusik aus Österreich: Max Schönherr in seinen Erinnerungen und Schriften/Light Music from Austria: Reminiscences and Writings of Max Schönherr (New York, 1992)

ANDREW LAMB

Schönig [Schoneck]. German family of printers. Valentin Schönig (b Gnodstadt, 1544; d Augsburg, 1614) acquired Augsburg citizenship in 1567 through his marriage to Barbara Kriesstein, a daughter of the Augsburg printer Melchior Kriesstein, whose business Schönig probably inherited. With his purchase of Philipp Ulhart's workshop in 1581, he established an efficient printing firm and, in spite of his adherence to Reformation teaching, worked continually for the episcopal court. Gumpelzhaimer's Compendium musicae (1591) was one of his most successful publications. The Thirty Years War and unfavourable economic conditions prevented his descendants Hans Ulrich Schönig (1589–1655) and Johann Schönig (1616–80) from extending the firm. Only Johann Jakob Schönig (1657–94), who had married a daughter of the Augsburg music publisher Andreas Erfurt, succeeded in giving it fresh impetus. Valentin Schönig, unlike his predecessors Kriesstein and Ulhart, had restricted himself to printing works of composers active in the city of Augsburg, but Johann Jakob printed mainly Catholic church music. After his early death his widow married J.C. Wagner, who then took over the workshop. In 1710 Johann Jakob's son Johann Matthias Schönig (1685–1753) acquired his own printing business, which published individual editions of songs.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

T. Wohnhaas: 'Die Schönig, eine Augsburger Druckerfamilie', Archiv für Geschichte des Buchwesens, v (1964), 1473–83

THEODOR WOHNHAAS

Schonsleder [Schönsleder], Wolfgang [Volupius Decorus] (b Munich, 21 Oct 1570; d Hall, Austria, 17 Dec 1651). German composer, teacher and music theorist. He became a student at the university in Ingolstadt on 16 October 1587, and he entered the Jesuit order on 14 May 1590. In 1593 he sang under the direction of Lassus in the Kantorei of the court at Munich. From 1596 to 1597 he taught at the University of Dillingen and at the same time became an instructor in rhetoric and ancient languages at the Jesuit college in Munich. The only musical composition he is known to have written is a Missa super 'Laudate' (now lost) for the festival of St Ignatius of Loyola held at Dillingen in 1619. After 1628 he went to Wildenau, Upper Pfalz, to join in the establishing of a Jesuit mission. He spent his final years, after 1648, as an instructor in Greek at the Jesuit college at Hall.

Schonsleder's only surviving work on music is the Architectonice musices universalis (Ingolstadt, 1631, 2/1684), which he published under the name of 'Volupius Decorus, Musagetes'. It was not well known to his contemporaries, nor has it become well known in more recent studies of 17th-century German music theory; yet it is an impressive and valuable work. Published in two parts, it was planned as a complete manual for learning the art of vocal composition. It begins with instruction and exercises forming chords over both regular and irregular bass progressions. Although Schonsleder never referred to thoroughbass practice it is clear that his approach to composition was similar to the rules of thoroughbass realization, particularly for unfigured basses in which patterns of movement determine chord progressions. The final sections of part i illustrate methods of ornamenting chordal structure with particular emphasis on how the contrapuntal style, in from two to eight parts, should be applied.

Part ii expands on the rules of counterpoint and is profusely illustrated with extensive music examples taken from many well-known composers. Chapter 8, 'De Textu', suggests four categories of words that should receive special musical treatment: (i) words of affect ('to lament', 'to rejoice', 'to weep', 'to fear', 'to smile' etc.); (ii) words of motion and place ('to stand', 'to run', 'to jump', 'to ascend', 'to descend' etc.); (iii) adverbs of time and number ('fast', 'slow', 'twice', 'thrice' etc.); (iv) conditions of man (childhood, youth, old age etc.). Schonsleder took this classification from the earlier treatise of Johann Nucius, Musices poeticae (Neisse, 1613). The importance of this section of Schonsleder's work lies in the many illustrative examples showing how others have set these words, including long excerpts from such composers as Felice Anerio ('laughter'), Binaghi ('rejoicing'), Lassus (childhood and the tedium of old age, among many), Massaino ('jumping') and many more.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B.V. Rivera: 'The Seventeenth-Century Theory of Triadic Generation and Invertibility and its Application in Contemporaneous Rules of Composition', Music Theory Spectrum, vi (1984), 63–78

W. Werbeck: 'Zum Tonartenverständnis der deutschen Musiktheorie in der ersten Hälfte des 17. Jahrhunderts', Stand und Aufgaben der Schütz-Forschung: London 1989 [Schütz-Jb 1990], 131–49

GEORGE J. BUELOW

Schonthal, Ruth (b Hamburg, 27 June 1924). American composer and pianist of German origin. She studied at the Sternsches Konservatorium, Berlin, from the age of five until her expulsion in 1935. On her family's emigration to Sweden in 1938, she was admitted to the Swedish Royal Academy of Music in Stockholm, despite restrictions on Jewish refugees, studying composition (with Ingemar Liljefors) and piano there until early 1941. The family then travelled to Mexico City, via the USSR, where Schonthal studied composition with Rodolfo Halffter and Manuel Ponce, and piano with Pablo Castellanos. She gave an acclaimed performance of her own piano concerto in Mexico City, and in 1946, after Hindemith heard her playing her own works, she entered Yale University on his recommendation (AB, composition, 1948).

Virtually all of Schonthal's study and much of her subsequent compositional career have taken place in situations of exile and in relative isolation from other composers and creative artists. To support herself and her family she played the piano in bars and wrote popular songs and music for TV commercials, and from 1952 held many part-time teaching positions and taught privately in New York. Schonthal is a prolific composer whose works are widely performed and recorded and consistently well received. Her many awards include a Delta Omicron International Award for her first string quartet.

Like others of his students, Schonthal struggled to establish her creative independence from Hindemith. Her music is expressionist, her forms ingenious. In Jocasta, a feminist retelling of the Oedipus story that was produced in New York (1998), both main characters are represented by an actor, a singer and a dancer. She conceives of music as a tapestry, 'a dense network of musical associations ... in which the individual elements are linked to one another in multiple, symbiotic relationships' (Helmig).

WORKS
(selective list)

Ops: The Courtship of Camilla (1, A.A. Milne), 1979–80; Princess Maleen (2, J.L. Grimm and W.C. Grimm, Schonthal, W. Wood), 1988; Jocasta (H. Cixous, trans. C. Makward and J.G. Miller), 1996–7

Orch: Conc. romantico, pf, orch, 1942; Pf Conc. no.2, 1977; The Beautiful Day of Aranjuez, hp, str orch, 1981, rev. 1983; Evening Music (Nocturnal Fantasy with Ocean Waves), 1992; Soundtrack for a Dark Street, orch, elec gui, 1994

Chbr and solo inst: Str Qt no.1, 1962; Sonata, vn, pf, 1962, arr. cl, pf, 1975; Sonata concertante (vc, pf)/(cl, pf)/(va, pf), 1973; 4 Epiphanies, va, 1975; Fantasia in a Nostalgic Mood, gui, 1978; Music for Horn and Piano, 1978, arr. hn, chbr orch, 1979; Love Letters, cl, vc, 1979; Letters to Cunegonde, cl, vc, 1979, rev. as Sonata in 2 Movts, vc, pf, 1989; Str Qt no.2 'in the Viennese manner', 1983, rev. 1996; A Bird's Song about ..., fl, pf, 1991; A Bird over Jerusalem, fl, pf, tape, 1992; Abendruhe mit süssem Traum, vc, pf, vib, timp, 1993, rev. 1996; Improvisation in 3 Interconnected Sections, vn, 1993; Fantasy-Variations on a Jewish Liturgical Theme, elec gui, 1994, rev. 1997; Abendruhe mit süssem Traum, vc, pf, vib, perc, 1996; Improvisation vc, 1997; Bells of Sarajevo, cl, prep pf, 1997; Divertimenti for Diverse Insts, duets and trios, 1997; Str Qt no.3 'Holocaust in Memoriam', 1997; Tristana, vn, pf, 1999

Vocal: 6 Early Songs (R.M. Rilke), S, 1939–42; 2 Songs (F. García Lorca), 1946; Hommage à García Lorca (García Lorca), S, fl, va, vc, hp, 1956, rev. 1993; 9 Lyric-Dramatic Songs (W.B. Yeats), Mez, chbr orch/pf, 1960; Totengesänge (Schonthal), S, 1963; By the Roadside (W. Whitman), S, pf, 1975; Songs of Love and Sorrow (various authors), S, pf, 1977; The Young Dead Soldiers (A. MacLeish), SATB, 10 insts, 1986; Six Times Solitude (Milne), S, pf, 1987, rev. 1990; Collages (from Des Knaben Wunderhorn), S, fl, 2 cl, 2 perc, vc, pf, synth, 1990; Wildunger Liederzyklus (I. Olbricht, L. Kottek), medium v, pf, 1992, rev. 1997; Die Mauer: vorher und nachher (Schonthal), nar, fl, vn, vc, pf/synth, perc, 1993; Trompeten Gesänge (Schonthal), medium v, tpt, vn, vc, pf, small drum, 1993; 3 Liebeslieder (Kottek), Mez, pf, 1994

Pf: Sonatina, a, 1939; Sonata, E♭, 1947; Sonata, b, 1950; Fiestas y danzas, 1961; Preludes in Blue, 1963; Nachklänge, pf with added timbres, 1971; Sonata brève, 1973; Variations in Search of a Theme, 1974; Gestures, 1978; In Homage of ... 24 preludes, 1978; Fragments from a Woman's Diary, 1982; Canticles of Hieronymus, 1975; Self-Portrait of the Artist as an Older Woman, 1991; 65 Celebrations, 1993–4; Heidelberger Fanfare and Variations, 1995–6; Japanese Sketches, 1997

Other kbd: The Temptation of St Anthony, fantasy-suite, org, 1990

MSS in D-Bda, US-NYamc, Archiv des Arbeitkreises Frau und Musik (Kassel)

Principal publishers: Carl Fischer, Furore, Galaxy, Hildegard, Lundgren, OUP, Sisra, Yorktown

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveW (C.P. Smith) [incl. further bibliography]

C. Bisda: The Piano Works of Ruth Schonthal (diss., Manhattan School of Music, New York, 1991)

M. Helmig: Ruth Schonthal: ein kompositorischer Werdegang im Exil (diss., Freie U., Berlin, 1993; Hildesheim, 1994)

S. Epstein and D. Hayes: 'Composer Interview: Ruth Schonthal', ILWC Journal (1994), Feb, 5–8

CATHERINE PARSONS SMITH

Schönwald, Albert. See SIKLÓS, ALBERT.

School drama. See SCHULDRAMA.

School fugue. See FUGUE, §7.

School of English Church Music. London college founded in 1927 and renamed the Royal School of Church Music in 1945. See LONDON, §VII, 4.

School opera. See SCHULOPER.

Schools. Music is one of the oldest of school subjects – the long tradition of musical studies as a valued component of a liberal or general education can be traced back to the earliest civilizations and classical cultures – yet its place in education has often been uncertain and sometimes the topic of controversy. At certain periods in history the performing arts have been thought of as social rather than educational activities, and therefore of only marginal significance in schools. On occasion, influential figures have voiced strong opposition to music on the grounds that the arts are mere entertainment and do not warrant attention in institutions where the chief concern should be the cultivation of intellectual capacity.

A survey of national educational systems reveals that it is now surprisingly rare to find schools where musical pursuits, of one sort or another, do not feature as part of the regular programme. In most countries children are likely to receive some type of musical instruction within the context of their general education. During the 20th century there was a worldwide expansion in instrumental tuition and increasing opportunities for pupils of all ages to participate in a range of corporate activities; many schools are known for their choirs, orchestras and bands, some of which perform to a very high standard. Even so, provision is extremely variable both within and across systems. Opinion remains divided over the educational value of music; consequently, any consideration of its position in schools not only raises issues about how the subject is organized and taught, but also more general questions about the nature and purpose of education itself.

I. Ancient traditions

The earliest types of schools, established in Egypt and the city-states of Mesopotamia during the 3rd millennium BCE, provided a strict form of vocational education and training for scribes and priests. These groups comprised an intellectual élite who, as guardians of knowledge and religious tradition, played a vital role in ensuring social and economic stability and the perpetuation of the culture. For the small number of children from the ruling classes chosen to receive a formal education, elementary programmes of study consisted of reading, writing, religion and mathematics; higher forms of education included practical sciences, law, medicine and astrology. To what extent musical studies might have formed part of school curricula is far from certain. Archaeological and historical research findings indicate that, in the Old World civilizations, vocal and instrumental performance together with dancing and drama featured strongly in rites and ceremonies; indeed, there is sufficient evidence to support the view that the arts constituted powerful forms of experience and meaning, and that musical activities often had greater social import than in modern times. However, the idea that education should reflect all aspects of the culture had limited relevance at a time when educational processes were necessarily utilitarian and bound up with the technical and religious demands of society. During the first Egyptian dynasties, singing and dancing of a devotional nature appear to have been given some attention in the upbringing of aristocratic and royal persons, but only as 'additional' pursuits. And in spite of their undoubted enjoyment of the arts, the Egyptian nobility always remained slightly nervous of active participation in music and dancing. Too much direct involvement could be dangerous since it might easily promote a certain weakness of character and even a tendency towards effeminacy.

Throughout the ancient world musical pursuits became specialisms; young men and women were trained, often as apprentices, to be professional performers and would have found employment in a variety of religious and secular settings. Liturgical practices called for systematic musical instruction. Ancient Sumerian texts reveal choir training in the temple of Ningarsu at Lagash as early as 3000 BCE; in Babylonian times (19th–13th centuries BCE) responsorial temple chanting became increasingly elaborate, and ceremonies also included instrumental elements which must have required expert tuition and direction. By the beginning of the New Kingdom in Egypt (1580 BCE) music was being acknowledged as a moral force, and it therefore acquired a new educational significance. Of course, those holding positions of power and influence demanded that young children be exposed to the sort of musical experiences that would foster virtuous behaviour; not surprisingly, programme content, and especially the song repertory, came under the strict control of the priesthood. During the Chaldean period (7th–6th centuries BCE) music became associated with the more academic and speculative studies of astrology and mathematics; it is possible that the emerging theories of harmonics were known in the late 6th century to Pythagoras, who travelled widely in Mesopotamia and Egypt.

Ancient Chinese education was always characterized by its essentially secular nature and strongly influenced by powerful groups of scholars. The concept of the educated man became the morally sensitive citizen who would serve his ruler faithfully, recognize his duty towards the people over whom he had authority, and be equipped with the administrative skills required for the task of government. Such a view may have underpinned educational practices well before the Zhou dynasty (1122–256 BCE). It became the foundation of the educational system established and disseminated in the 6th century BCE by Confucius and his followers, who, believing in the direct relationship between rigorous academic studies and harmonious social order, built on what they regarded as worthy scholastic traditions. The pattern of an ideal, school-based education, largely for the ruling classes but open to others who demonstrated an appropriate aptitude, focussed on the promotion of the six Virtues and the six Good Actions through the study of the six Arts; these comprised rituals, music, archery, charioteering, writing and mathematics. All elements of the Great Learning (Daxue) were essential components of an education which aimed at the harmonious integration of mind, soul and body, with the principles of harmony and order applying to the individual, the family and the state. Within the Confucian system corporate music-making was valued as a means of promoting the disciplined character. Dancing and singing fostered refinement, with the learning of particular dances becoming part of the educative process at certain key stages. It is likely that Confucius used folk and dynastic songs contained in the Classic of Odes (Shijing) for the purpose of instruction; tuition on flutes, bells, zithers and percussion also probably formed part of the curriculum.

Inevitably, parallels will be drawn between Chinese and Greek traditions. The education of the Homeric knight in arms and horsemanship, sports, dance, singing and instrumental performance may be compared to the Confucian pattern, but the Greek ideal (at its best) is the man of valour who is well informed, objective in his thinking, gracious of manner and appreciative of artistic beauty. For the Greeks, music and instruments were the invention and gift of the gods and therefore to be respected and cherished. From about 2000 BCE an extensive and sophisticated culture existed on the isle of Crete, where choral and instrumental music together with dancing became indispensable features of both religious and secular ceremonies and festivals. Crete was well known for its rich artistic life. Lycurgus, the partly mythical legislator, is said to have introduced many of its traditions to Sparta, and musical activity flourished during the 7th century BCE. Spartan musicians and music teachers of the period enjoyed a high reputation throughout the Greek world. The preservation of the heroic past through song was central to the process of education, often for both boys and girls, and the growth of choral instruction probably contributed to the establishment of schools. Even during the harsh years of the 6th century when Spartan education was highly militaristic, musical studies remained important, though as an aspect of character training rather than a form of aesthetic experience.

Playing the lyre, singing and dancing continued to be included in a course of instruction designed for the purpose of moulding the young citizen. The fact that music was retained as part of the educational process in such unlikely circumstances is an indication of its deep significance in the ancient Greek psyche.

From the 7th century BCE the education of the Athenian youth included dance and choral singing as well as tuition on the lyre and aulos. The learning and performing of heroic songs accompanied by the lyre was a long-established custom and was valued as both a musical and a spiritual experience. Methods of teaching relied largely on imitation and repetition, with the education of the aristocracy usually being provided for on an individual basis; group tuition for a wider middle-class population became increasingly common and well established by the 5th century. Plato's emphasis on the value of musical studies is well known and is frequently cited by present-day educationists as a justification for the subject within the curriculum, although presumably few would subscribe to the metaphysical and social aspects of his educational theory. It is also necessary to recognize that the Greek mousikē often has a wider meaning, but references to melody and rhythm clearly denote music in the modern sense. In the Platonic scheme, education of the Guardians would focus in the early years on literature, music and gymnastics with the ultimate aim of producing the balanced, well-rounded and reasoning individual. Association with artistic beauty during childhood would prepare the student, almost unconsciously, to recognize and value the beauty of reason itself (Republic, iii, 401). Music also served an important social function since it contributed to the formation of character (ēthos). Consequently, at the Academy certain types of music were favoured and others proscribed; words of songs had to be carefully chosen and combined with fitting mode and rhythm so as to foster courage and moderation and avoid the possibility of corruption. Like Plato, Aristotle saw music as having the power to 'induce certain conditions of the mind', but he offered a broader and less prescriptive view of musical education based on two guiding principles. First, in the Lyceum, music should be regarded not as useful or necessary, as reading and writing were, but as a way of providing an occupation for leisure (scholē). This was no mere recreation but an activity which could be regarded as 'elevated and gentlemanly' and involved working at something intrinsically worthwhile. Secondly, singing and the playing of the lyre and kithara would enable the individual to make properly informed musical appraisals: 'it is difficult, if not impossible, for those who do not themselves perform to become good judges of others' (Politics, viii).

Plato and Aristotle were committed to preserving what they regarded as a noble tradition of non-specialist pursuits and saw no educational merit in the growing tendency towards individual instrumental virtuosity, much acclaimed in musical circles. As aristocrats, they emphasized liberal studies and the development of persons; they thoroughly opposed any form of specialized education directed towards some extrinsic end such as a career in politics. Many of their ideas came to fruition during the Hellenistic age, although practical music lost its earlier significance and was replaced by studies in rhetoric. Choral singing remained popular, but the teaching of music as a discipline tended to become increasingly theoretical. The focus moved to a study of Pythagorean principles which would be further developed as a component of the medieval Quadrivium. Aristoxenus, a pupil of Aristotle, and one of the most important of the Greek music theorists, regretted that harmonics had assumed such a place in education and at the expense of practical activities; once again, music-making became more the business of the professional and remained so during the Greco-Roman period.

Roman attitudes towards music in a system of education founded on family values, the interests of the state, a respect for the great figures of the past and military training, were always markedly different from those of the Greeks. Schools had existed from the 5th century BCE, but it is unlikely that musical studies formed part of the curriculum until some 300 years later when Greek ideals started to influence the outlook of the Roman conquerors. Some pupils received music theory lessons and kithara tuition. Music was never compulsory, although it appears to have been taken quite seriously since pupils who opted for the subject were required to sit for regular examinations. Musicians enjoyed a relatively high status in Roman society and teachers received good salaries. Nevertheless, the aristocracy looked upon music with some reservation since it continued to be regarded essentially as a form of entertainment provided by professional performers. Consequently, musical pursuits could hardly be considered suitable in the education of upper-class young men destined to assume positions of authority. Women of noble families might sing and play instruments, but only in a limited and modest way. By the beginning of the Empire, however, many wealthy Romans had come to regard instrumental performance as a skill worth cultivating. Nero, Hadrian, Verus and Commodus were all accomplished amateurs; their public commitment and approval must have further raised the status of music and musicians. Even so, practical music-making received little attention as an educational activity; it was theoretical music that became the focus for more serious studies.

II. From the Middle Ages to the end of the 18th century

1. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION. There was a tendency among members of early Christian communities to view the 'old' classical education with a certain suspicion because of its association with the study of what was judged to be a pagan mythology. In consequence, the first monastic schools did not offer a liberal education but concentrated mainly on an ascetic form of moral and spiritual training. Other groups within the church, particularly the Christian Platonists, emphasized the need for scholarly studies as a necessary means of cultivating a mature and deeper understanding of the faith. Although practical music was not valued as it had been by the Greeks, and therefore seldom featured in formal courses of instruction, the Judeo-Christian tradition of psalm and hymn singing always provided an important medium for worship; and the founding of the Schola Cantorum in Rome during the 4th century ensured firm and lasting connections between music, the liturgy and education. The song schools subsequently set up throughout Europe for the purpose of disseminating Roman church music were to have a permanent effect on the general development of music teaching in educational institutions.

Between the 5th and 8th centuries frequent invasions led to the partial collapse of the Western Empire, and a consequent decline in educational provision, but even in those dark and troubled times Christian scholars kept alive and promoted classical learning. Following Martianus Capella, Boethius and Cassiodorus in Rome, Isidore in Spain and Bede in England re-emphasized the fundamental importance of the seven liberal arts and the special value of music in philosophical and theological studies. Boethius (*c*480–*c*524), a key figure in the evolution of musical education, translated a number of Greek philosophical writings and thereby forged a link between classical ideals and medieval thinking. In the celebrated treatise De institutione musica he establishes the distinctions between musica mundana, *musica humana*and musica instrumentalis. Music is an essential part of the human condition and a means of blending soul and body: 'music is so naturally united with us that we cannot be free from it even if we so desired' (bk 1, 181). In the spirit of Plato, Boethius draws attention to music's power to ennoble or corrupt, and therefore advocates for educational purposes the experience of those modes which are 'vigorous and simple'. But the highest form of musical study is 'rational speculation' – that is, gaining knowledge of universal harmony through the faculty of reason. Thus music studies became theoretical or, more precisely, numerical. The writings of Boethius were acknowledged as standard texts and had a major impact on the teaching and learning of music for at least 1000 years.

Missionary teachers trained in Rome founded schools in Ireland, England and other parts of Europe. Monastic and song schools often existed side by side. In the former, prayers, contemplation and the learning of Latin grammar constituted the core programme, although even at the most austere institutions a certain amount of instruction and practice in the singing of the services was often part of the course of study. Famous song schools were established at Canterbury, York, Metz and Rouen, with rigorous choral and liturgical training as the central components of the curriculum. Until the Reformation such schools were necessities for all monasteries and cathedrals. Life for the students was often hard and highly disciplined. A demanding schedule of services and basic academic studies left little time for any sort of recreational activity: choristers needed to be fully acquainted with liturgical practices and procedures, and a relatively complicated repertory of psalms, antiphons, Ordinaries and Propers had to be learnt by rote. It was not until the 11th century that music teaching and learning moved away from a purely oral and aural tradition.

The general instability of society during the early Middle Ages adversely affected academic standards in the schools for clergy. On his accession to the Frankish throne in 768, Charlemagne determined to improve the scholastic achievements of those in holy orders. Musical reforms featured as part of the development plan and included the creation of several new song schools. In his capitulary of 789 Charlemagne charged that the 'psalms, the notes, the chant' should be taught throughout the kingdom. In order to realize his aims he imported foreign scholars, one of the most illustrious being Alcuin (*b c*735) of York, whose reputation as a teacher and a man of letters was well known throughout the Christian world. Serving as master of the Palace School and later as abbot of Tours (796–804), Alcuin organized monastic schools for clergy and laity. Steeped in classical principles, he naturally subscribed to the view that strong minds would heighten understanding of the scriptures. Consequently, his educational programmes focussed on a thorough and systematic study of the seven liberal arts, thereby establishing the Trivium and Quadrivium as the standard curriculum for medieval institutions. Alcuin placed stress on the need for preparation in liturgical chant as part of a priest's education, but it is apparent that he valued theoretical and practical music as a means of enhancing not only worship but also the quality of daily life. The tradition of scholarly and musical pursuits continued to be promoted by his pupils, especially at the monasteries of Ferrières, Auxerre, St Amand, Reichenau and St Gallen.

After Charlemagne the empire suffered further destabilization as a result of renewed invasion and internal conflicts. In spite of the damaging consequences for education and educational institutions, the monks maintained an interest in theoretical music and the practice of psalmody, and constantly strove to improve standards of worship. Some taught choristers to sing intervals using the monochord, and a number experimented with various types of notation. The Benedictine Guido of Arezzo (*c*991–1034 or later) made an important contribution to the development of the notational system with the extension of the staff, and through his far-sighted use of solmization choirboys came to read melodies accurately. Musical instruction, often based on question and answer methods, expanded to include the study of the modes and mensural notation. Guido's creative innovations were to influence the teaching of music for the following six centuries, and his pedagogical techniques formed the basis of the movable doh system, which was to become an integral part of various teaching methods in the 19th century and beyond.

The founding of universities throughout western Europe from the 12th century onwards led to an increase in grammar and song schools; many were associated with cathedrals, collegiate churches and chantries as well as the universities themselves. Schools were also endowed by craft and merchant guilds, and some were attached to hospitals. With a growing secularization of education, musical studies in the grammar schools were often reduced; however, theoretical music remained part of the Quadrivium, and the need to prepare pupils adequately for the divine services meant that a certain amount of liturgical singing continued to be included in the curriculum. For boys of high rank education often took place at the courts of the nobility. Here the aim was to inculcate the intellectual, personal and social qualities expected of the worthy Christian knight. In addition to classical studies, instruction typically included singing, lute playing and poetry reading; such practices were in keeping with the rise of humanist thought at the end of the Middle Ages. The notion of artistic accomplishment as a mark of the educated aristocrat finds full expression in Baldassare Castiglione's Il libro del cortegiano (1528).

2. Renaissance and Reformation. The Renaissance ideal of the educated man as one who would display a sense of grace and elegance as well as good artistic taste gained wide approval throughout Europe. In a desire to move away from medieval principles and the influence of the church, educational innovators sought to combine classical learning with the needs of contemporary society. Music teaching tended to focus more on practical than on speculative studies. The Spanish humanist and teacher Juan Luis Vives (1492–1540), a pupil of Erasmus but with a broader educational vision than his famous master, commended the study of music and declared that young men should receive both theoretical and practical tuition (Tradentis disciplinis, 1531, bk 4, chap.5). Vives visited England on several occasions, and his ideas led to the introduction of musical instruction in a number of the prominent new grammar schools. Richard Mulcaster (1530–1611), headmaster of the renowned Merchant Taylors' School in London, was one of several leading educational reformers who advocated singing, together with tuition on the virginals and lute, as part of a liberal curriculum. In his educational treatise Elementarie (1582) Mulcaster outlined a comprehensive programme, and his classically inspired views on the content of education might have appeared to augur well for the future development of musical instruction in English schools. However, religious and political conflicts were having dramatic effects on educational policies and practices. One outcome of the Reformation was that provision for music started to decline, largely as a result of the closure of song schools and institutions associated with monasteries and chantries. Choir schools attached to the Oxford and Cambridge colleges, St George's Chapel, Windsor, and a number of other foundations were not affected, but for the majority of those young people to whom schooling was available opportunities for learning music were severely curtailed. In spite of Mulcaster's vision and enthusiasm, the grammar schools, apart from such notable exceptions as Christ's Hospital and Penrith Grammar, had neither the resources nor the inclination to include music in their curricula.

Although the Reformation can be said to have inhibited the growth of school music teaching throughout England, the situation in other Protestant countries proved to be markedly different. Because of the close bond between church and community, music became a foundation subject with singing and worship forming a central part of the regular curriculum in Lutheran and Calvinist schools. Philipp Melanchthon, who was charged with the organization of the Lutheran educational system, ensured proper and systematic musical instruction with lessons usually being held during the first hour after the midday meal. For Luther, music was not only essential to the praise of God but worthwhile in itself, and a powerful spiritual activity which could ward off the forces of darkness. A fine example of the expected course of study is Martin Agricola's Ein kurz deudsche Musica (1528). Intended for the boys at the Lateinschule in Magdeburg, the programme comprises musical theory and progressive exercises to be followed over a period of ten years. The importance attached to music as both a curriculum subject and an extra-curricular pursuit in the Lutheran schools was to have a powerful influence on national musical developments over the following two centuries.

School music teaching in Catholic countries from the mid-16th century often remained tied to medieval practices. The French and Spanish choir schools maintained high standards, and curricula included counterpoint studies and instrumental tuition, but in such rural areas where schools existed provision for music varied considerably and was often little more than singing by rote. In Bohemia, a country with strong musical traditions, choral training and instrumental teaching were both regular components of the school programme, and all elementary teachers were expected to have a certain level of musical expertise. At the Ospedale della Pietà in Venice, founded during the 16th century, orphaned and abandoned girls were educated at the city's expense, with talented students receiving intensive vocal training and instrumental tuition. Vivaldi composed orchestral and choral works for them, and the high standards achieved by the figlie di coro were widely recognized and applauded. Edward Wright, a British visitor during the 1720s, spoke highly of the music in the school, and Charles Burney was impressed by performances he attended some 50 years later. Burney also commented favourably on the fine singing of choirs for poor children in southern Germany established by members of the Jesuit order. The Jesuits are not generally known for an interest in the arts, and it is sometimes suggested that they were contemptuous of music. In fact, musical studies related to liturgical practices prospered during the 16th century at the Collegio Germanico in Rome. Music was never a standard subject in the Jesuit pre-university schools, but extra-curricular dramatic productions involving music became very popular especially in Italy, France and the German-speaking Catholic states. By the middle of the 17th century there were over 300 Jesuit schools throughout Europe at most of which it became common practice to stage a play, usually based on a biblical story or the life of a saint, at some stage of the academic year. Songs and choruses, often with orchestral accompaniment, that brought together opera and church music styles, and even ballet at times, became important features of these productions, many of which were technically innovatory and elaborate. The Society of Jesus was always a controversial order and a strong Counter-Reformation force. Dramatic performances had educational, religious and propagandist functions, but through these presentations students and a wider congregation remained in contact with music. As part of their overseas mission the Jesuits introduced music and drama in Brazil, Venezuela, Peru and other Latin American countries during the 16th and 17th centuries.

3. 17TH AND 18TH CENTURIES. Although the teaching of music in English schools received little support during this period, Renaissance ideals continued to influence the middle and upper classes. Singing and instrumental competence, especially for young women, came to be regarded as desirable social skills. Such publications as Morley's Plaine and Easie Introduction (1597) and Charles Butler's Principles of Musik (1636) were welcomed by amateurs as useful introductions to practical music and remained popular for almost two centuries. However, English educational thought during the Enlightenment years was characterized by utilitarian and materialistic tendencies. The arts were often looked upon as mere diversions, and some people considered musical activities to be trivial and time-wasting. John Locke's decision to give 'last place' to music in his list of accomplishments (Some Thoughts concerning Education, 1693) illustrates the changing attitude of many British academics. Even Burney, nearly 100 years later, was describing music as nothing more than 'an innocent luxury, unnecessary indeed to our existence' ('Definitions', A General History of Music). Similarly, Cardinal Newman thought of musical activity as a pleasant recreation but not educational since it did not 'cultivate the intellect' (Discourse VI, Discourses on the Scope and Nature of University Education, 1852). These attitudes have been remarkably influential, and it could be argued that, in spite of subsequent advances during the 19th and 20th centuries, such views continue to permeate modern educational thinking and contribute to music's relatively lowly status as a curriculum subject.

The Pilgrims and Puritans arriving in the New World during the first decades of the 17th century organized schools to provide basic instruction in reading and religion. They brought with them a tradition of worship that included singing, and they valued music as a secular pursuit. But education had to be practical and directed towards survival in a frequently hostile environment; consequently, there was no place for music as a school subject. By the beginning of the 18th century, however, a concern for better congregational singing, in a rapidly expanding society, led to the formation of singing schools in New England, New York and Pennsylvania. These consisted of occasional classes conducted by peripatetic instructors in churches, people's homes or whatever other accommodation might be available. As well as vocal training the teacher dealt with rudiments of music and sight-reading. The singing-school movement, which marked the beginnings of North American music education, appealed to large numbers of the population and continued in some places into the early years of the 20th century.

In spite of the popularity of amateur music-making throughout Europe the 18th century could not be described as a period of growth with regard to school music. Negative attitudes were by no means confined to England, and some of the previously flourishing European centres were fast declining. Music in the German Lateinschulen was often impoverished and marginalized as a result of an emphasis on languages and sciences. The content of educational programmes reflected growing business and commercial interests and the arts subjects suffered neglect. There were, of course, important schools that were well known for their musical traditions, one of the most notable being the Thomasschule in Leipzig. Even so, when Bach was appointed Kantor (1723) he found social, professional and financial conditions far from satisfactory. Schools for the poor in Italy and France that had previously concentrated on music now turned their attention to other matters.

Towards the end of the century the idea of universal education and the need for national systems was attracting support from an increasing number of politicians and social reformers. Such a policy had been widely advocated by several leading intellectuals for well over 100 years. The most significant figure was the religious leader and educational theorist Jan Ámos Komenský (1592–1670), who had outlined plans for universal primary and secondary education in which music would play a major part at all stages. Although Komenský's proposals had been well received and were influential in several countries, it was not until the 19th century that serious attempts were made, on a wider scale, to translate these educational theories into policy and practice.

III. From the 19th century: the growth of music in schools

1. National systems of education. 2. 19th-century methods. 3. 20th-century innovations. 4. Postwar developments. 5. Theory, research and curriculum development. 6. Professional issues.

1. National systems of education. During the 19th century most European governments started to assume greater responsibility for educational policy and provision and subsequently established national systems. At a time of rapid industrial advancement, basic literacy and numeracy became a priority for the growing numbers of people engaged in new types of employment, but universal education was seldom conceived as a purely instrumental enterprise. Emerging theories and ideologies led to fundamental changes in attitudes towards children, the nature of teaching and the purposes of schooling. It was in a climate of social reform and educational expansion that music became established as a school subject and the foundations were laid for modern patterns of curriculum organization and teaching.

Links between religious and educational practices remained strong at the beginning of the century. In Russian elementary schools, for example, the reading of the scriptures and practice of liturgical chant were curriculum requirements after legislation of 1819. Church leaders, especially those in Britain, the USA, Denmark, Norway and Sweden, regularly referred to the need for school singing classes as a way of improving congregational participation at divine worship. Certainly, contemporary accounts portray standards of singing as being depressingly low, and no doubt many people of a musical disposition would have agreed with Thomas de Quincey's cynical observation that 'the psalmody in most [English] parish churches is a howling wilderness'. There is evidence to support the view that the teaching of music did have some positive effects on the quality of congregational singing in Britain and America, but to what extent the reformers achieved their goals is debatable. Nevertheless, the almost unquestioned acceptance of a correlation between class singing in schools and enhanced church worship continued to influence the choice of lesson repertory for at least the next 150 years.

For many 19th-century European reformers, musical studies were associated with the strengthening of moral values and the improvement of social behaviour. In his Manual of Instruction in Vocal Music (1833) the Englishman John Turner set out to clarify the rudiments of music as a way of assisting people to understand and perform church music, but he also saw the study of music and engagement in musical activities as healthy leisure pursuits for the working classes which could provide much needed alternatives to the 'vicious indulgences' of the day. Music was thus conceived as a useful agent of social change and control and as such warranted a place in elementary education. Related to moral development was the notion of transfer of learning. Goethe, proposing a type of education suited to the 'new' times in Wilhelm Meisters Wanderjahre (1821–9), argued that the study of music could be a way of cultivating not only moral awareness but also ability in writing and number. Similarly, the French music teacher Guillaume Louis Bocquillon Wilhem held that children who have learnt music exhibit 'greater powers of application' as well as the agreeable personal qualities of courtesy and good conduct (Manuel musical, ?1836). That the study of music is of benefit to general academic performance is a theme that appears frequently in 19th-century educational writings. It is a compelling 'theory', and one that continues to receive support from musicians and educationists. Music was also valued as a way of preserving the cultural heritage and promoting a sense of national identity. This was particularly so in east European states, although the practice of singing nationalistic and patriotic songs appealed to many politicians of the period.

Ideas about the importance of musical experience as part of a general education received endorsement from Jean-Jacques Rousseau, Johann Heinrich Pestalozzi (1746–1827) and F.W.A. Froebel (1782–1852), all of whom had a strong impact on educational thought and policies. Music, in their schemes of 'child-centred' education, was valued not so much for its possible contribution to moral development, but as a form of experience and self-expression in an education designed to extend children's intellectual potential, imaginative powers and sense of the aesthetic.

2. 19TH-CENTURY METHODS. Many of the group teaching methods of the 19th century were informed by three basic principles derived from the theories and practices of Rousseau and Pestalozzi. First, the acquisition of musical literacy skills was regarded as prerequisite to the growth of musical understanding. Secondly, sounds were to be introduced before symbols. Thirdly, children needed a form of instruction suited to their age and stage of intellectual maturity; this usually involved the use of an 'interpreting' notation such as Rousseau's figure system. These various ideas influenced the methods of the Swiss teachers Michael Traugott Pfeiffer and Hans Georg Nägeli and also Carl August Zeller (1774–1846) in some of the German states. The American educator Lowell Mason, inspired by Pestalozzian principles, played a prominent role in establishing music in public schools between 1830 and 1860. As a result of Mason's determined advocacy the Boston School Committee (1838) included music as a regular elementary-school subject on the grounds of its intellectual, moral, physical and recreational benefits; other major American cities gradually adopted a similar policy.

French methods for teaching sight-singing were often based on the rather more formal and traditional approach of Wilhem, who employed monitors to instruct groups using carefully graded songs and exercises. He achieved much success in popularizing sight-singing throughout France; British administrators and educationists, impressed by the methods of continental teachers, invited John Hullah to introduce programmes of musical instruction in schools and teacher-training institutions. Hullah modified the fixed-doh system of music reading used by Wilhem and organized classes for teachers and pupils across the country; his stylish demonstration lessons proved highly successful and generated considerable public interest. As a teacher and school inspector Hullah made a notable contribution to the founding of class music teaching, and his ideas were also taken up by the Australian educators William Wilkens and George Allan. However, Hullah's much publicized method was eventually superseded by those that made use of the seemingly more manageable movable doh. The French challenge to the fixed doh came from the pedagogy devised by Pierre Galin and further developed and promoted by Aimé Paris with his sister Nanine and her husband, Emile Chevé. Galin employed a figure notation similar to that of Rousseau, and the GALIN-PARIS-CHEVÉ METHOD was adopted throughout Europe for over 50 years. It found particular approval with teachers in Scandinavian countries, where hymnbooks were often published in figure notation. One of the lasting innovations of the method was the LANGUE DES DURÉES, or 'French time names' as they are now known, which have been incorporated into several other teaching systems. The best-known literacy methodologist of the 19th century, and probably the most influential, was John Curwen. A 'progressive' educator of great insight but without specialist musical expertise, Curwen drew on and adapted a number of teaching techniques, especially those concerned with pitch discrimination evolved by the Norwich schoolmistress SARAH ANNA GLOVER and published in her Scheme for Rendering Psalmody Congregational (1835). TONIC SOL-FA became the standard method not only throughout Britain, but also in many Australian, Canadian, American and South African schools; at a later stage teachers in Switzerland, Germany and Denmark used it in a revised form. The method has been supported by amateur and professional musicians throughout the world, although like all systems which rely on an 'interpreting' notation it is not without its opponents and critics. Advocates of Tonic Sol-fa usually maintain that criticisms arise out of misunderstandings over the aims of the method and the purpose of the alternative notation. The publication of the New Curwen Method by the Curwen Institute in 1980 suggests that, for those who subscribe to an approach to music teaching which emphasizes the cultivation of aural and literacy skills as central to the furthering of musical understanding, Curwen's principles are still relevant and practicable. Internationally, opinion is divided over the use of fixed and movable doh; where the latter is not accepted, the Curwen system and others like it have no place in the schools.

By the end of the 19th century class singing and music reading were 'officially' established elementary-school activities throughout Europe, Australia, New Zealand, Canada and the USA. Repertory had become more inclusive and less dominated by church music. However, the inconsistency of provision is clearly shown in reports by Hullah (Time and Tune in the Elementary School, 1874) and John Spencer Curwen (School Music Abroad, 1901), who travelled widely to investigate the state of music teaching. In England, Belgium, Switzerland and Bohemia they found that the teaching of sight-singing skills, using a variety of methods, received much attention. German schools were giving less time to music as a curriculum subject: although compulsory at the primary level, lessons were often little more than the singing of chorales and folksongs learnt by rote. Among reformist and innovatory educationists there appeared to be a growing realization that music curricula required an injection of new ideas; there was also a need for clearer aims, as well as improved content and methods and better forms of organization.

3. 20TH-CENTURY INNOVATIONS. The Swiss musician and educator EMILE JAQUES-DALCROZE provided a different approach and attitude to group music teaching through his system of 'gymnastique rythmique' (eurhythmics). Finding traditional conservatory forms of training mechanical and uninspiring, he devised exercises that would help students to respond physically and aesthetically to music and thereby gain a genuine 'feeling' for the discipline as well as conventional skills. Jaques-Dalcroze's ideas were adopted by his followers for school use in several countries and continue to be employed, often in modified forms such as music and movement and creative dance. A thriving Dalcroze Society with branches in several countries ensures that the original principles and methods are still widely disseminated.

In the USA a broadening of music programmes followed the rise of the appreciation movement. Listening to music, in addition to singing and the learning of music reading skills, became more practicable with the invention of the gramophone. In 1911 the Victor Gramophone Company invited Frances E. Clarke, a practising school music teacher, to prepare special recordings and teaching materials for use in elementary- and high-school classrooms; thus began a new era of school music teaching. In Britain the distinguished educator Stewart Macpherson, who was committed to what he called discriminating listening, argued in favour of teaching music as a 'language and a literature'. His seminal publication Music and its Appreciation (1910) sets out detailed principles of 'true listening' and how it may be achieved through structural analysis of works and a knowledge of their historical and social contexts. While the appreciation movement undoubtedly added a new dimension to music curricula, it has also been regarded as one of the causes of those disparaged lessons which focus on facts and information rather than direct musical experience. That, of course, was never the intention of Macpherson and his colleagues. The turning of class music lessons into a form of silent 'musicological studies' is probably due to a number of factors, one of which may be an attempt by some members of the teaching profession to improve the academic status of the subject. Listening to music was further advanced by the advent of broadcasting. The BBC, founded in 1922, soon established music programmes for schools, as did its Australian counterpart. Broadcast music lessons on radio and television remain an important resource for many teachers. In Japan, for example, educational broadcasts are nowadays closely linked to the National Course of Study and planned to complement class programmes. The percussion band, introduced into English schools by Marie Salt in 1909, was also associated with the appreciation movement; this popular form of class music-making, warmly commended by several eminent members of the musical establishment, again increased the scope of the subject.

During the 1920s in Britain Margaret James encouraged the making and playing of bamboo pipes; these activities were taken up with much enthusiasm especially by elementary-school teachers. At the same time, the revival and reconstruction of the recorder by Arnold Dolmetsch and its introduction into schools by Carl Dolmetsch and Edgar Hunt heralded an innovation that was to have a permanent effect on music teaching worldwide. In the USA Satis Coleman (1878–1961) related the making of instruments to activities which would enable children to participate creatively in music. The notion of creativity also featured in the teaching methods formulated by the British educators Thomas Henry Yorke Trotter and Walford Davies, both of whom maintained that by making their 'own' music within a structured framework pupils would gain in apprehension of the musical language and its expressive qualities.

The expansion of school choirs, bands, orchestras and instrumental tuition during the early part of the 20th century constituted another important stage in the growth of musical education. Instrumental tuition had been offered in Austrian schools since the beginning of the 19th century, and even earlier in those of Bohemia, as Burney noted on his travels during the 1770s. So impressed was he by the number of students receiving instruction on a range of orchestral instruments that he referred admiringly to that country as the 'conservatoire of Europe'. School bands and orchestras became widespread in American high schools and part of the regular school programme with students eventually gaining high-school graduation credit for choral and instrumental activities. British 'public' (independent, private) schools started to make provision for instrumental teaching during the latter part of the 19th century, and many formed choirs and orchestras. Music was rarely taught as a class subject. Musical activities were strictly extra-curricular and conducted out of school hours, thereby reinforcing the view of music as a desirable social accomplishment but not a serious part of education. Opportunities for children to learn keyboard and orchestral instruments have been gradually extended throughout the British state system, with tuition being provided by visiting, or peripatetic, teachers employed by local education authorities, the schools themselves or an agency offering an instrumental teaching service. Many countries adopted a similar policy in the second half of the 20th century; this has led to the formation of local and national youth orchestras and bands, some of which perform to a near professional standard. Such musical achievements have received recognition and acclaim well beyond the educational community. However, some music educators express concern that because high-level performance groups are the public image of school music there may be a tendency to invest time and resources in these areas and neglect other equally important components of the subject programme.

4. Postwar developments. In the years following World War II the teaching of music in many countries has been much influenced by two composer educators, Orff in Germany and Kodály in Hungary. The Orff-Schulwerk system brings together choral singing, aural training, movement, improvisation and activities that use specially designed pitched and non-pitched percussion instruments. Orff himself described Schulwerk as a 'wild flower', meaning that it was never part of any preconceived plan but a series of teaching ideas that prospered in advantageous circumstances. Five books of teaching materials, Musik für Kinder (1950–54), exemplify ways of making what is called 'elementary music'; this is not 'easy' music but a style which utilizes 'basic elements' and is practicable and challenging for children. The various arrangements of folksongs and traditional melodies are intended as models or suggestions for teachers rather than a comprehensive scheme. Staff at the Orff Institute in Salzburg continue to offer courses publicizing the composer's ideals and pedagogical strategies. Kodály's principles of music teaching are in many ways similiar to those of Orff, but the Hungarian's approach is more fundamentally choral. Concerned with the development of inner hearing and musical literacy, and determined to improve the musical life of the nation, Kodály drew on his country's folksong tradition, which he combined with art music using the pitch teaching principles of Curwen, hand signs and the rhythmic language of the Galin-Paris-Chevé movement. The books of songs and exercises known collectively as the 'Kodály choral method' (although Kodály, like Orff, never fashioned any method) have transformed music teaching in Hungarian schools and made their mark on the country's musical and educational institutions at all levels. Worthy of comment in the present Hungarian system are the music schools, which provide a specialized training for selected children at both primary and secondary levels within the context of a general education. Standards of singing and aural training are outstandingly high, and the schools have earned their reputation as centres of excellence in music pedagogy. Another educator who has had a worldwide influence is the American Justine Ward (1879–1977). Her system combines vocal, pitch and rhythm training with creative work and incorporates a distinctive use of bodily gesture and movement. The method is intended primarily for use by non-specialist class teachers of young children and is used widely throughout Europe, East Asia, Africa and Latin America. These three systems of class music teaching are underpinned by the strong conviction that musical education should be available to all pupils and not merely the specially talented. This viewpoint has been constantly emphasized by most modern music educators, who have been anxious to dispel the mistaken yet commonly held belief that musical activity can be profitably undertaken only by those with a particular aptitude.

During the 1960s and 70s a number of educators introduced styles of music teaching that concentrated on creativity and composition as integral parts of general music programmes. It was suggested that children should be given the opportunity to explore the basic materials of music and express their musical ideas; this often involved types of music-making that did not depend on pupils having acquired notational and technical skills. George Self (New Sounds in Class, 1967) and Brian Dennis (Experimental Music in Schools, 1970), both teachers and composers, designed materials and activities, often using graphic notation, which could be related to contemporary music and especially the styles of the avant garde. A similar rationale informed other initiatives such as the American Contemporary Music Project (1971) and the Composer-in-Schools scheme in New Zealand. The Canadian composer R. Murray Schafer, in his publications The Composer in the Classroom (1965) and Ear Cleaning (1967), encouraged teachers and pupils to ask searching questions about the nature of music and musical experience and investigate the 'sound environment' as ways of identifying material for use in composition. One of the most celebrated and original publications of this period was Sound and Silence (1970) by the composers John Paynter and Peter Aston, who were members of the music staff at the University of York. They outlined a number of creative projects, covering a variety of musical styles and traditions, and recommended group and individual composition activities. Teachers responded positively to these various innovations, and 'creative music-making' became an international movement. As with all new forms of pedagogy there was often misinterpretation and misunderstanding of underlying principles. Innovators were frequently accused of being unclear about their aims; some teachers felt unsure of contemporary musical trends, while others found it difficult to change role from instructor to facilitator. Although creativity in music education remains a contentious issue, the idea that all children should have experience of composition as part of their musical education has gained universal approval and owes much to the highly imaginative curriculum developers of the 1960s and 70s.

Sociological theories of music and musical meaning have had some bearing on the choice of curriculum content and methods of teaching. Among others, John Charles Shepherd, Graham Vulliamy, Phil Virden and Trevor Wishart (Whose Music? a Sociology of Musical Languages, 1977), drawing on the 'new' sociology and the sociology of knowledge, challenged long-held assumptions regarding the supremacy of the 'classical' traditions. They attempted to demonstrate that what is considered to be worthwhile music is determined largely by those in positions of control or power, and proceeded to argue that many types of popular music deserved much more serious attention from members of the musical and educational establishments. Ethnomusicologists with an interest in music education have pointed to the wide diversity of styles and genres that constitute the world of music and contributed to thinking about the content of school programmes; their views have been particularly welcomed in those countries where there is a variety of cultures and ethnic groupings and a strong commitment to the ideal of education in, and for, a pluralist society. Recognition of indigenous traditions and new ideas regarding what 'counts' as music have also highlighted the dominance of Western conceptions of music education and the realization that these do not necessarily have a universal applicability.

Another factor determining curriculum content has been the move towards teaching music as part of a combined arts programme. Various strands of thinking inform this type of curriculum organization. It is frequently suggested that teachers of music become isolated and have much to learn from the more adventurous pedagogical strategies adopted by their colleagues in other arts disciplines. Some educators emphasize the arts as a realm of meaning or form of knowledge and point to the procedural and conceptual connections between music, visual art, dance, film studies and literature. Such a view is promoted by the British writers Malcolm Ross (Arts and the Adolescent, 1975) and Peter Abbs (Living Powers, 1987), who argue (though in different ways) that the arts constitute a unity, with each discipline representing a form of aesthetic understanding. One consequence of this position is that in some schools music teachers are members of subject teams and work collaboratively with staff in 'expressive' or 'creative' arts departments. The principles and practices of combined arts teaching raise aesthetic, pedagogical, professional and managerial issues that generate wide-ranging discussion and much disagreement within the music teaching profession (see §5 below).

Music teaching in schools reflects not only changing theoretical perspectives and methodological innovations but also the growth and availability of new resources. Sound and video recordings provide access to an ever widening repertory; new electronic instruments enable pupils to engage in a greater variety of performance and compositional activities. Remarkable technological developments have led to great changes in organization and practice. Personal computers with MIDI connections to electronic keyboards provide facilities for sequencing, editing and notating, and offer radically different forms of music presentation, instruction and learning. Opportunities for musical studies through networks and computer conferences are relatively unexplored at the school level but will probably lead eventually to completely new styles of teaching. The technological revolution appears to be generally welcomed by music teachers, although some express the concern that traditional yet valuable types of musical experience may be overlooked or simply discarded; this could lead, it is argued, to the neglect of conventional skills, so inhibiting and even stifling creativity and imagination.

At the end of the 20th century there were many more initiatives designed to enable children to be in more direct contact with professional musicians. Orchestral and choral concerts for young people were successfully introduced in Britain, the USA and Australia during the 1920s by Robert Mayer, Frederick Stock and Bernard Heinze, and there are now greater opportunities for children to experience high-level professional performances at first hand. Over a long period many composers have taken an interest in music for schools and contributed to what is now a large and popular repertory of works for young performers. More recently professional orchestras and opera companies have developed educational departments and outreach programmes that allow their members to work regularly with children and teachers. School and community projects that draw on the expertise of those in the fields of jazz, pop, rock and non-Western musics provide experiences that further enrich the normal curriculum programme. On the whole these various initiatives are having beneficial effects and augur well for the future of music in schools.

5. Theory, research and curriculum development. During the second half of the 20th century a number of music educationists developed new theoretical perspectives, often as bases for school practices, and concentrated on conducting research into various aspects of music teaching. Earlier studies had been largely in the field of psychology, with investigators showing a particular interest in the nature of musical aptitude. The pioneer figure was the American Carl Seashore, whose Seashore Measures of Musical Talent (1919) was used widely for many years. Tests of musical ability devised by the British educationist Arnold Bentley (1966) have often been employed by teachers, mostly for the purposes of diagnosis and selection. The writings of James Mursell (1893–1963) were rooted in psychology but represented a broader view and influenced music teaching throughout the USA and Europe over a long period. Mursell stressed the importance of fostering the growth of musicality and musical values and recommended programmes that would include a range of musical experiences with less concern for the acquisition of skills and factual knowledge. Psychological theories of learning and instruction have also been applied to the teaching of music. J.S. Bruner's famous instructional theory (1966) underpinned the Manhattanville Curriculum Program (1970) and is an example of how some music educators have constructed curricula based on more general theories of teaching, learning and cognitive operations. The curriculum theory of 'behavioural objectives' has had a certain impact on the teaching of music, although the original model is usually regarded as being unsuitable for the design and implementation of arts curricula. An interest in the study of aesthetics as a basis for more ordered and coherent practice was stimulated by the publication of Bennett Reimer's A Philosophy of Music Education (1970) and has contributed to the conception of music education as aesthetic education. In a series of books the British music educationist Keith Swanwick has advocated general music programmes that combine performing, composing and 'audition' (listening in audience) and has constructed a well-known curriculum model based on aesthetic theories and psychological findings relating to children's musical development. Research, academic and professional studies of music education were greatly facilitated by the formation in 1953 of the ISME, which makes provision for international exchange and dialogue. The society, now representing over 70 countries, has promoted and reported on a wide range of research studies through its numerous publications, especially the yearbooks and the International Journal of Music Education. Writers on music teaching in schools frequently make a plea for more research, but, while research and theoretical studies carried out by members of the academic community undoubtedly may have beneficial effects on practice, some observers comment that there can be a considerable gap between theory and practice. It is argued that the improvement of practice is also dependent on teachers adopting a research orientation to their professional work, although the 'teacher as researcher' movement has not attracted the attention of music educators to a significant degree.

During the 19th and 20th centuries music teachers encountered a plethora of theories, methodologies and innovations resulting in the present wide diversity of practices both within and across educational systems. This situation is seen by some as damaging to the development of music in schools and society. Many governments are moving towards the institution of national frameworks for curricula as a way of providing for more structured and consistent programmes. Specifications vary considerably in their detail. In Britain, the National Curriculum for Music, introduced in 1992, has a legal status and sets out attainment targets and programmes of study for all state school pupils between the ages of five and 14. National schemes in the USA, Australia, Japan and Denmark, while outwardly prescriptive, allow for more flexibility. In general, centralized curricula are regarded as a useful means of ensuring that all pupils receive some musical instruction as an entitlement during their school years. However, the introduction of national specifications coincides with calls for greater teacher and school accountability at a time when cost-effectiveness is demanded of educational services. There is a growing expectation that pupils should be able to demonstrate certain standards of achievement in all curriculum subjects. Consequently, while prescribed curricula are seen as serving a worthwhile educational function they are also sometimes viewed as instruments of bureaucratic evaluation and control.

6. Professional issues. At the beginning of the 21st century teachers of music are required to be increasingly versatile, to acquire new forms of musical expertise and to further their professional knowledge of curriculum design, evaluation, assessment, organization, management and administration. Teacher education and training has, in consequence, become a matter for concern among members of the music education community. Whereas the training of music teachers for secondary schools has become more advanced, it is often the case that primary-school teachers do not receive substantive music tuition during their pre-service education and training. Research findings indicate that generalist primary-school teachers sometimes lack the necessary knowledge and skills to teach music competently and that the quality of learning in the early years is therefore uneven. Some teacher educators maintain that, provided generalist teachers have adequate in-service training and can draw on curriculum support services, they are able to apply their generic pedagogical skills and techniques to the teaching of music in an effective manner. Debates about the most suitable forms of teacher education continue to reflect a variety of opinions.

Many arts educationists express the view that at a time when there is a strong tendency to relate education to economic growth and advancement their subjects are not sufficiently valued and are in danger of becoming marginalized. This is by no means a new concern; the educational status of music has often been insecure, and in some countries provision is still limited. The future development of school music is obviously dependent on adequate resources; some observers fear that the advances made during the postwar years cannot be sustained without more financial and professional support. With demands for more qualified teachers, specialist accommodation and new types of sophisticated equipment, music has become an expensive school subject. In a number of countries opportunities for children to receive instrumental tuition in school are reported to have declined owing to financial constraints.

It is to be expected that music education, like every other area of the curriculum, will have its own inherent problems and areas of controversy. In spite of these difficulties there is now far more publicity for music and the arts, and a greater acknowledgment that these subjects provide for special types of experience which are a necessary and valuable part of a contemporary liberal education.

IV. Contemporary issues

1. Education and training. 2. Music and liberal education. 3. Teaching and learning. 4. Music and the school community.

1. Education and training. The term 'music education' is nowadays widely used in both musical and educational contexts, but it is an ambiguous one, open to different interpretations. In the most comprehensive sense it describes an enterprise that encompasses all those types of musical instruction which take place in schools, colleges, universities, conservatories and other institutions. Music education, broadly conceived, will also be provided by private studio teachers, and furthered through membership of any number of organizations that have no formal links with educational establishments. In a large and increasing number of countries, school programmes include general class lessons which children will experience for at least part of their period of compulsory education; it is often the case that there will be additional opportunities for pupils to learn a variety of instruments and participate as members of choirs, orchestras, bands and other ensembles. These performance activities may be available as curriculum options or electives for those pupils with a particular talent or interest; in some educational systems such activities will be classed as extra-curricular, since they are organized and taught at times beyond the regular school schedule.

Traditionally, the word 'training' has been used with reference to certain kinds of musical tuition, and it would not sound out of place to say that a performer had received his or her training (rather than education) at a conservatory or college of music. Although differences between training and education can be difficult to define, it is generally accepted that the former is related to the development of some specified competence or skill whereas education implies a process concerned with growth of knowledge and understanding, a broadening of experience and a commitment to certain values. There is also the expectation that the educated person will view things with a critical eye; he or she will not simply acquire different kinds of knowledge but will develop an approach to knowledge involving reasoning, questioning, debating and reflecting in the course of gaining a depth and breadth of understanding together with a degree of intellectual autonomy.

When singers or instrumentalists are spoken of as being trained, the implication is that they are mastering certain musical techniques and aiming to achieve recognized standards of performance. However, there appears to be a growing tendency to include this type of study under the heading of education for at least two reasons. First, high-level performance is a multi-dimensional accomplishment and demands far more than simply the acquisition of an advanced technique; it is a complex decision-making process. Secondly, courses for performing musicians are by no means as narrow as is suggested by reference to training, for as well as following a specialist route, students experience a range of related activities that contribute to their sense of taste, imaginative style, critical faculties and a deepening understanding of music in its many forms. A shift from 'training' to 'education' is to be found in many fields. It is commonplace now to talk of teacher education, whereas at one time preparation for a schoolteaching career was undertaken at a teachers' training college. Teachers nowadays are expected to have extensive professional knowledge and a greater understanding of their educational function; their training in pedagogical techniques is only one of several areas of study. The adoption of such terms as vocational education, physical education and driver education suggests in each case a move from a concern with specified ends to an appreciation of wider issues. In the light of current thinking and practice it is becoming more appropriate to talk of the education of singers and instrumentalists. One might continue to differentiate between musical education and training when the latter term is used to denote a limited (but not necessarily simple) objective such as skill acquisition. The obvious example would be aural training; indeed, in many societies it would still sound slightly strange to speak of 'aural education'.

In making the concept of music education more inclusive it becomes necessary to distinguish between specialist and general forms; the main difference is essentially one of intention. There are schools in some countries that have been set up for the express purpose of preparing talented young people for a career in the music profession. These institutions provide for intensive instrumental and vocal instruction with the aim of promoting pupils' performing capabilities to an advanced level. Although it may no longer be acceptable to refer to this type of schooling for musicians as training, it is nevertheless geared to specific ends, and for that reason can be regarded as a specialist type of music education.

Mainstream school pupils might occasionally acquire equally high standards of musical expertise, but there is no direct intention on the part of school staff to equip pupils for a musical career. Whatever might be achieved by the individual is, first and foremost, part of his or her general education. Of course, teachers of both specialist and general music education programmes share some common aims. Although their ultimate intentions may differ, all teachers attempt to use strategies which enable pupils to internalize and value the rules, methods and procedures that constitute the discipline of music. General class lessons are never specialist pursuits, but they are required to be musical. Class lessons which did not focus on the proper methods of the discipline and the development of pupils' musical behaviour, or musicianship, might be types of relaxation or entertainment; but they could not be classed as legitimate forms of education. Specialist music education may be seen, at least to some extent, as a means to a particular end: pupils are being educated for the music profession. Musical activities that are part of a liberal or general education require a different justification since they have to be accommodated within a wider educational framework.

2. Music and liberal education. Because of music's often uncertain and marginal status a number of rather lofty and ambitious statements have been made, and continue to be made, to justify its inclusion in the curriculum. It is frequently suggested that music makes children more imaginative, improves overall academic performance, instils transferable life skills, increases self-esteem and helps them to become better people. Concrete evidence to support such claims is rarely forthcoming, but even if music does engender all these positive qualities there is no reason to assume that the same would not apply to other curriculum subjects; the claims are, in fact, simply general educational aims. The selection of curriculum content cannot be satisfactorily justified in these terms; the choice of content is dependent on many factors and, most significantly, the particular view of education which provides a background to the curriculum. Ideas as to what is important in education and how music might be of value in educational programmes differ widely, and there is also a variety of opinions about the place of choirs, orchestras and bands in schools.

As a result of much theoretical input and numerous practical innovations over the past 150 years, the contents and methods of present-day class music programmes are extremely diverse. International research studies reveal wide-ranging practices in almost all countries. In addition to the well-established activities of choral singing, music reading and aural training, children might compose their own music using acoustic and electronic instruments, listen to and evaluate music of different styles and genres, learn about composers, study music theory and explore music through information technology. Although it may never be formally stated (in school or other official documentation), the importance attached to any one, or combination, of these different pursuits will be related to how music is seen as fitting into the whole curriculum. It is readily apparent that there are alternative and often conflicting ideas about the aims, contents and methods of music education at the school level.

Programmes of study that focus on performance activities, the learning of aural and literacy skills, and acquaintance with compositions of the great masters, have come to be regarded as representing a traditional approach to music teaching. It is an approach that is closely tied to the commonly held view, often expressed by national governments, that the purpose of education is to prepare young people for a life consisting of work and leisure by equipping them with certain skills and knowledge. Language, mathematics, science and technology are 'work' subjects; music and the arts are seen as future 'cultural' leisure pursuits. It is probably true, and highly commendable, that many pupils do acquire some musical expertise during their school years which they then develop further at a later stage. While it would seem likely that participation in community activities will be more directly related to previous experience of choirs, orchestras and the like, it can be argued that through general class programmes children develop knowledge and musical skills that enrich their lives. They should, at least, become informed and intelligent listeners, conscious of their cultural heritage, and maybe even keen concert-goers. The notions of education as preparation and education for leisure are, of course, notoriously troublesome; both give rise to a number of distinct and curious problems. First, if the purpose of musical studies is to prepare children for the future, then it could be quite reasonably concluded that for those who were actively involved in school but did not continue in later life, musical education had somehow been wasted; that would be an odd way of looking at any educational activity. Secondly, although much talk of leisure education centres on the arts and crafts it is impossible, and perhaps morally objectionable, to prescribe how people should use their time. A wide range of interests may be acquired as a result of a general education; there is no reason to assume that adult leisure time will necessarily be confined to, or even include, artistic activity. Thirdly, the very meaning of leisure has changed greatly over the years: the Aristotelian tradition of intrinsically worthwhile pursuits has been replaced in modern times by thoughts of relaxation and freedom from pressure. Leisure 'parks' and 'centres' are places of fun and entertainment, and nobody needs to be 'educated' in their use. Advocates of leisure education often appear to overlook the fact that those who engage in music-making do so because they see their activities as having some point and meaning. They commit themselves to demanding responsibilities; the pursuits are leisure only in so far as they are separate from employment. In terms of curriculum content and practice, the ideal of preparation for work and leisure leads to the old conflict between core studies that are of vocational importance and peripheral studies that might occupy time at some future date. Musical studies are likely to be consigned to the latter category, particularly in an age when emphasis is placed on the direct links between education, the economy and personal vocational advancement. It might be held that this view of music and arts education is yet another manifestation of powerful and deeply embedded Enlightenment attitudes.

The 'progressive' style of music education is associated with those theorists and practitioners who maintain that the arts provide a medium through which children are able to express themselves and develop their finer feelings. Although this rationale is formulated in several different ways, one central theme, derived in part from Dewey's aesthetic and educational theories, is that the creative arts have an essential function as that part of an education which nurtures the growth of feeling and knowing. Education is a form of adaptation that depends on the affective and cognitive modes being in a state of equilibrium. Proponents of this position favour the exploration of expressive media through creative or compositional activities. Performance and listening are not ruled out, but 'creating' is taken to be central to the educational process. Many progressive music educators support combined arts programmes, arguing that since all the arts are concerned with the expression of human feeling, to teach them as separate and isolated disciplines inevitably restricts children's artistic growth and aesthetic awareness. Such a view represents one version of what is known as 'aesthetic' education.

Progressive arts educators come under fire from many quarters and are frequently accused (usually unjustly) of ignoring the past and placing too much faith in creativity, self-expression, experiment, freedom and individuality. A particular criticism relates to the dualistic theory of mind, which separates knowing and feeling. Although artistic endeavour is strongly associated with the expressive life, certain philosophers and aestheticians maintain that it is misguided to think of mathematics and science as 'cold' intellectual forms of inquiry which can be contrasted with the 'warmth' of the expressive arts subjects. All knowledge and experience has something of the affective about it, all artistic pursuits are highly cognitive.

For some educationists, traditional and progressive ideologies represent irreconcilable positions. Both are, of course, 'ideal' types and are unlikely to exist in a pure form; indeed, most practising teachers would probably regard them as complementary. In recent years there have been moves by members of the music education community to unite different teaching methods and practices within a new theoretical framework. This 'eclectic' view of music education is informed by an underlying conception of education central to which is the development of mind through the acquisition of different types of knowledge and experience. In post-Renaissance times music and the arts have usually been regarded not as ways of knowing but rather as pleasurable forms of activity which rely on different types of experience and sensation but do not have a genuine semantic content. Theory of knowledge has been dominated by positivist schools of thought; knowledge is either practical 'know-how' or, more important, that which can be stated as a logically or empirically verifiable proposition. New directions in epistemology and aesthetics, often much influenced by the writings of philosophers and curriculum theorists, including John Dewey, Susanne K. Langer, Louis Arnaud Reid, Philip Phenix and Elliot Eisner, have led to broader views. The arts have come to be regarded as unique 'languages', 'realms of meaning' or 'forms of knowledge'. Complementing these changes in theory of knowledge are newly emerging theories of intelligence and societal structures in which it is acknowledged that cognitive operations are not confined to linguistic and logico-mathematical modes of thought. Through the process of evolution, men and women have acquired a capacity, or cognitive apparatus, not only for discursive language but for a whole range of symbolic modes or intelligences. All societies have artistic systems, since the artistic mode of thinking is basic to the human condition. Such theories provide a justification for music that is in keeping with the traditions of liberal education and leads to a form of practice which focusses on the development of musical intelligence, to be achieved by 'initiating' pupils into the techniques and methods of music through the experiential modes of performing, composing and listening. Musical thinking and understanding depend on awareness of those traditions that provide the background to innovation and experiment. There is no one 'world' of music, and programmes will therefore be designed to expose pupils to a range of musical styles so that they become acquainted with the deep structures of the discipline. Many who subscribe to this position, which in some countries has become an official basis for general music education, point to the close connections between the arts disciplines and the need to recognize these connections when constructing and implementing school curricula.

That the arts constitute a realm of meaning or a way of knowing and thinking provides the basis for another version of music education as aesthetic education. Music, drama, literature, poetry, dance and visual art are seen as bringing together cognitive and affective operations in a unique manner. Peter Abbs (The Educational Imperative, 1994) is one exponent of aesthetic education who describes the arts as a 'generic community'. The different disciplines have their own methods and techniques but are united by a form of 'sensuous' knowing and also by procedural factors: making, presenting, responding, evaluating. Consequently, the teaching and learning of music contribute to a broader aesthetic education. Supporters of this position are inclined to favour various types of combined arts programmes which enable children to make connections between the different subject areas, thus enhancing their learning and aesthetic intelligence. The principle of aesthetic education does not receive universal approval. While not wishing to deny the obvious links between the various arts, some educators, particularly in Europe and the USA, have cast doubt on whether the knowledge gained in painting pictures, writing poetry or composing songs is of the same kind. The British philosopher David Best (1992), for example, refers to the idea of the generic community of the arts as nothing more than an 'expedient myth' and goes on to argue that there is no rational basis for the claim that there exists a unifying factor in these different activities; furthermore, curriculum planning based on a misconceived philosophical position is likely to be contrived and of dubious educational value. A similar view has been expounded by David Elliott (1995) in North America. Nevertheless, the conception of music education as aesthetic education has become a popular orthodoxy and is likely to remain so for the foreseeable future. The sceptic might be moved to observe that acceptance of the aesthetic mode of understanding could mean that there would be no need to teach music at all, since education in any one art form would suffice. Presumably, few music educators would accept this seemingly logical conclusion no matter how committed they were to the principle of aesthetic education. In practice, views about aesthetic education and combined arts programmes will be determined just as much by organizational, managerial and professional considerations. The apparent 'merging' of subjects changes their curriculum status and the position of those who teach them; being a member of an arts team may carry less prestige than having sole charge of a subject area. The combining of the disciplines might also be interpreted as a convenient way to give each individual discipline less time on the curriculum and thus to undermine their educational importance.

3. Teaching and learning. Whatever type of organizational framework might be adopted for music education, the implementation of curricula is dependent on the teaching force. Critical observers of educational systems and services often point out that the success or failure of a school is largely determined by the quality of its teachers. Few professional educationists would disagree; there has always been a lively debate about the roles, duties, responsibilities and training of teachers, and the conditions under which they carry out their many functions.

In the most fundamental sense, teaching may be described as a series of intentional activities whose aim is to bring about learning. The central purpose of music teaching is to engage pupils in practical activities through which they will come to learn and internalize the skills, techniques and procedures of the discipline and thereby develop musical thinking or musicianship. All these things have to be taught, but a distinctive feature of the musical realm is that people come to understand its rules and methods by working alongside others already inside the discipline. Much musical knowledge and understanding is 'caught' just as much as it is taught. This applies both to individual instrumental teaching and to corporate activities. The expert (teacher) assumes the role of a 'model' who demonstrates, often quite unconsciously, various aspects of musical behaviour in his or her actions which are gradually assimilated by the learner. In the classroom the onus is on the teacher to exhibit this behaviour in his or her pedagogy and thereby establish an appropriate musical environment for learning to take place. The teacher of music (like any other teacher) has to display authority within his or her specialist field. And it is the issue of authority which is the cause of so many disputes about music teaching at the primary stage in countries where class teachers are expected to cover the whole range of curriculum subjects. Generalists are often apprehensive about their ability to teach music because of what they see as their lack of musical authority. However much it is claimed that all general practitioners can teach music provided they have suitable in-service training and support materials, it remains an inescapable point of logic that, in order to effect learning, the teacher is required to be an authority, at least in relation to his or her pupils.

While bringing about learning is central to teaching it is also an educational requirement that what is being learnt is both worthwhile and appropriate to the ages and abilities of the pupils. It is a further requirement that any method of instruction be in accordance with accepted educational principles. Learning may result from conditioning or indoctrination, but such techniques are contrary to the spirit of education. These observations may seem obvious enough, but they need to be borne in mind in the attempt to determine what might be classed as effective teaching. There may be a measure of agreement among educationists as to what constitutes the basis of good practice, but there will always be differences of opinion, and even serious differences, over what is worthwhile content or desirable pedagogy. Disputes are likely to arise over many aspects of curriculum content. Even with a fairly tightly prescribed central or national curriculum there can be conflicting ideas about song repertory or what types or items of music are suitable for listening purposes. Methods of teaching may be still more contentious. Pedagogical techniques associated with traditional methods find favour with some educationists while others espouse progressive approaches. The existence of differences over content and methods suggests that the identification of effective music teaching will depend, to some extent, on who is making any judgment of practice. This factor of uncertainty has important implications for teacher appraisal, a process which has assumed considerable educational importance and may be used for a variety of purposes. Appraisal might be seen as a means of identifying incompetent teachers or as a way of helping practitioners further develop their pedagogy. Whatever its purpose there is an assumption that it is possible to recognize good teaching, but that is clearly not as straightforward as is sometimes supposed. It does not follow that all judgments of teaching are relative and that there can be no agreement about good and bad practice, but the common and often unquestioned belief that it is possible to establish a formula for the evaluation of teaching that can be neatly applied to every classroom is to misunderstand and oversimplify the complex nature of educational transactions.

In those countries where the school music teacher is responsible for general class programmes as well as choirs, orchestras and other extra-curricular activities he or she is required to assume a dual role. On the one hand a teacher is a classroom practitioner while being expected on the other to operate as a 'director of music'. There is no reason why the two roles should not be combined, but in such circumstances teachers have to respond to many different musical demands, not only within but often beyond the school. They are expected to be all-round musicians with a range of skills, broad expertise and a certain type of approach to music-making. Their style of musicianship is characterized by its versatility and an ability to adapt and modify practice in a variety of situations; it calls for a special type of creative or problem-solving attitude towards music and musical pedagogy. In many instances the modern music teacher assumes a multi-faceted role not unlike that of the Kapellmeister. How far teachers of music are adequately trained for these diverse musical, pedagogical and administrative duties remains a topic of some professional controversy.

4. Music and the school community. Music in schools is not only a pedagogical and intellectual system; like any other area of teaching and learning it is also a social system whose functioning is governed by a complicated network of forces and messages. One issue that occupies the minds of music educators the world over (as it did Plato and Aristotle) is the balance between high-level performance activities, which in mainstream schools do not cater for all pupils, and general or class programmes of music education that are available to everybody. It is frequently claimed that resources, both human and material, are too often concentrated on the former. There is a view that choirs, bands and orchestras 'represent' school music and therefore receive greater support from those who manage and exercise control within the institution. To what extent this view is justified is unknown. The main educational arguments in favour of extra-curricular or elective activities can only be that they provide for worthwhile musical experiences which are part of a broader programme of music education. A critical question is whether these activities are so perceived within the school or the wider community. Musical and other artistic events can be effective public-relations exercises, and many schools enjoy a good reputation because of their pupils' achievements in choirs and orchestras. In an age of accountability, and competitiveness in some countries, musical activities may be valued as ways of advertising a school's accomplishments, and teachers themselves might be inclined to concentrate on those areas that will attract public recognition. If schools are presenting concerts and musical events for such extrinsic purposes then it could be claimed, with some justification, that pupils are in danger of being manipulated and exploited rather than educated. That view of performance activities would of course be rather cynical and suggestive of conspiracy, though perhaps not without some foundation. There are more positive interpretations of the ways in which public presentations function as part of a music programme. One of the most valuable outcomes of school concerts is that children's musical and social experiences fuse together. Pupils of different ages and abilities work as a group in a cooperative venture and share a commitment to a common set of values; they come to know music and understand it as a 'form of life' in ways that can never be fully appreciated through formal instruction.

It has long been recognized by politicians, school administrators, parents, pupils and members of the public that musical and other artistic pursuits add a special quality to the character and general ethos of educational institutions. Although a great deal of attention is given to the importance of academic achievement, it is very rarely the case in any country that schools are concerned solely with formalized instruction. Schools are communities, and they establish their identities through a whole range of corporate activities. Choirs, orchestras, bands and other performing groups together constitute one of the many forces that permeate the social life of institutions and thereby contribute to their cultural style and sense of cohesion. Without these musical activities schools would be very different places.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A Ancient traditions. B Middle Ages – end of 18th century. C From the 19th century: growth of school music. D Contemporary issues. E Specialist journals.

A: ANCIENT TRADITIONS

J.F. Dobson: Ancient Education and its Meaning to Us (New York, 1932/R)
H.I. Marrou: Histoire de l'éducation dans l'antiquité (Paris, 1948, 6/1965; Eng. trans., 1956/R)
T. Woody: Life and Education in Early Societies (New York, 1949/R)
C.C.J. Polin: Music of the Ancient Near East (New York, 1954/R)
E. Wellesz, ed.: Ancient and Oriental Music, NOHM, i (1957)
E.B. Castle: Ancient Education and Today (Harmondsworth, 1961)
W.D. Anderson: Ethos and Education in Greek Music (Cambridge, MA, 1966, 2/1968)
M.I. Finley: Aspects of Antiquity: Discoveries and Controversies (London, 1968, 2/1977)
P. Fletcher: Education and Music (Oxford, 1987)
B. Rainbow: Music in Educational Thought and Practice (Aberystwyth, 1989)
W.D. Anderson: Music and Musicians in Ancient Greece (Ithaca, NY, 1994)

B: MIDDLE AGES – END OF 18TH CENTURY

ReeseMR
A.F. West: Alcuin and the Rise of the Christian Schools (New York, 1892/R)
A.F. Leach: English Schools at the Reformation, 1546–8 (London, 1896/R)
F. Watson: The Curriculum and Text-Books of English Schools in the First Half of the Seventeenth Century (London, 1902)
A. Schweitzer: J.S. Bach, le musicien-poète (Leipzig, 1905; Ger. trans., enlarged, 1908; Eng. trans., 1911/R)
F. Watson: The English Grammar Schools to 1660: their Curriculum and Practice (Cambridge, 1908/R)
A.F. Leach: The Schools of Medieval England (London, 1915/R)
W.A. James: An Account of the Grammar and Song Schools of the Collegiate Church of Blessed Mary the Virgin of Southwell (Southwell, Notts., 1927)
F. Eby: Early Protestant Educators (New York, 1931/R)
P.A. Scholes: The Puritans and Music (London, 1934/R)
B. Pattison: Music and Poetry of the English Renaissance (London, 1948)
F.W. Sternfield: 'Music in the Schools of the Reformation', MD, ii (1948), 99–122
J. Lawson: Mediaeval Education and the Reformation (London and New York, 1967)
T.D. Culley: Jesuits and Music, i: A Study of the Musicians Connected with the German College in Rome during the 17th Century (Rome, 1970)
I. Lawrence: Composers and the Nature of Music Education (London, 1978)
M.L. Mark: Contemporary Music Education (New York, 1978, 3/1996)
R. Rastall: The Notation of Western Music (London, 1983)
G. Huppert: Public Schools in Renaissance France (Urbana, IL, 1984)
P. Fletcher: Education and Music (Oxford, 1987)
B. Rainbow: Music in Educational Thought and Practice (Aberystwyth, 1989)
A.C. Santosuosso: Letter Notations in the Middle Ages (Ottawa, 1989)
S. Shahar: Childhood in the Middle Ages (London, 1990)
C.S. Jaeger: The Envy of Angels: Cathedral Schools and Social Ideals in Medieval Europe, 950–1200 (Philadelphia, 1994)
P.F. Grendler: Books and Schools in the Italian Renaissance (Aldershot and Brookfield, VT, 1995)

C: FROM THE 19TH CENTURY: GROWTH OF SCHOOL MUSIC

S. Macpherson: Music and its Appreciation (London, 1910, 2/1941)
T.H. Yorke Trotter and S. Chapple: The Yorke Trotter Principles of Musicianship (London, 1933)
C.E. Seashore: Psychology of Music (New York, 1938/R)
P.A. Scholes, ed.: The Mirror of Music 1844–1944 (London, 1947/R)
J. Mursell: Developmental Teaching (New York, 1949)
W. Keller: Einführung in 'Musik für Kinder' (Mainz, 1954, 2/1963; Eng. trans., 1974)
N.B. Henry, ed.: Basic Concepts in Music Education (Chicago, 1958)
C. Orff: 'Orff-Schulwerk: Past and Future', Music in Education, xxviii (1964), 209–14
F. Sándor, ed.: Zenei nevelés Magyarországon [Music education in Hungary] (Budapest, 1964; Eng. trans., 1966, 3/1975)
R.M. Schafer: The Composer in the Classroom (Toronto, 1965)
A. Bentley: Musical Ability in Children and its Measurement (London, 1966)
J.S. Bruner: Toward a Theory of Instruction (Cambridge, MA, 1966)
R.M. Schafer: Ear Cleaning (Don Mills, ON, 1967)
G. Self: New Sounds in Class (London, 1967)
R. Shuter-Dyson and C. Gabriel: The Psychology of Musical Ability (London, 1968, 2/1981)
B. Dennis: Experimental Music in Schools (London, 1970)
J. Paynter and P. Aston: Sound and Silence (London, 1970)
B. Reimer: A Philosophy of Music Education (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1970, 2/1989)
R.B. Thomas: Manhattanville Music Curriculum Program Synthesis (New York, 1970)
The Selected Writings of Zoltán Kodály (London, 1974)
M. Ross: Arts and the Adolescent (London, 1975)
K. Simpson, ed: Some Great Music Educators (Borough Green, Kent, 1976)
I. Lawrence: Composers and the Nature of Music Education (London, 1978)
M.L. Mark: Contemporary Music Education (New York, 1978, 3/1996)
D. Taylor: Music Now (Milton Keynes, 1979)
W.H. Swinburne: The New Curwen Method (London, 1981–4)
J. Southcott: The Lineage of Current Ideas: Early Thought and Figures in the Creativity Movement in Music Education (thesis, U. of London, 1983)

H.F. Abeles, C.R. Hoffer and R.H. Klotman: Foundations of Music Education (New York, 1984, 2/1994)
P. Abbs, ed.: Living Powers: the Arts in Education (London, 1987)
J.T. Gates, ed.: Music Education in the United States: Contemporary Issues (Tuscaloosa, AL, 1988)
D. Kabalevsky: Music and Education: a Composer Writes about Musical Education (London, 1988)
L. Lepherd: Music Education in International Perspective: the People's Republic of China (Darling Heights, Queensland, 1988)
B. Rainbow: Music in Educational Thought and Practice (Aberystwyth, 1989)
R.J. Colwell, ed.: Basic Concepts in Music Education, ii (Boulder, CO, 1991)
J. Jennings: Music at Canterbury (Christchurch, NZ, 1991)
E. Oehrle: 'Emerging Music Education Trends in Africa', International Journal of Music Education, no.18 (1991), 23–9
D. Allsobrook: Music for Wales (Cardiff, 1992)
R. Colwell, ed.: Handbook of Research on Music Teaching and Learning (New York, 1992)
A.E. Kemp, ed.: Some Approaches to Research in Music Education (Reading, 1992)
T. Takizawa, ed.: Perspectives of Music Education in Japan and ASEAN Countries (Tokyo, 1992)
J. Dobbs: 'International Society for Music Education: Forty Years Old', International Journal of Music Education, no.22 (1993), 4–8
M. Comte, ed.: Music Education: International Viewpoints: a Symposium in Honour of . . . Frank Callaway (Melbourne, 1994)
L. Lepherd: Music Education in International Perspective: Australia (Toowoomba, Queensland, 1994)
K. Swanwick: Musical Knowledge: Intuition, Analysis and Music Education (London, 1994)
P.S. Campbell and C. Scott-Kassner: Music in Childhood: from Preschool through the Elementary Grades (New York, 1995)
L. Lepherd, ed.: Music Education in International Perspective: National Systems (Toowoomba, Queensland, 1995)

D: CONTEMPORARY ISSUES

J. Dewey: Art as Experience (New York, 1934/R)
S.K. Langer: Philosophy in a New Key: a Study in the Symbolism of Reason, Rite, and Art (Cambridge, MA, 1942, 3/1957)
P. Phenix: Realms of Meaning: a Philosophy of the Curriculum for General Education (New York, 1964)
R.S. Peters: Ethics and Education (London, 1966, 2/1970)
P.H. Hirst: Knowledge and the Curriculum (London, 1974)
R.W. Witkin: The Intelligence of Feeling (London, 1974)
E.W. Eisner, ed.: The Arts, Human Development and Education (Berkeley, 1976)
M. Ross: The Creative Arts (London, 1978)
H. Gardner: Frames of Mind: the Theory of Multiple Intelligences (New York, 1983, 2/1993)
L.A. Reid: Ways of Understanding and Education (London, 1986)
P. Abbs: Living Powers: the Arts in Education (London, 1987)
Artistic Intelligences: Implications for Education: Columbia, SC, 1989
R.J. Colwell: Basic Concepts in Music Education, ii (Boulder, CO, 1991)
C. Plummeridge: Music Education in Theory and Practice (London, 1991)
D. Best: 'Generic Arts: an Expedient Myth', Journal of Art and Design Education, xi (1992), 27–44
B. Reimer and R.A. Smith, eds.: The Arts, Education, and Aesthetic Knowing (Chicago, 1992)
P. Walsh: Education and Meaning (London, 1993)
P. Abbs: The Educational Imperative: a Defence of Socratic and Aesthetic Learning (London, 1994)
K. Swanwick: Musical Knowledge: Intuition, Analysis and Music Education (London, 1994)
D.J. Elliott: Music Matters: a New Philosophy of Music Education (New York, 1995)
D. Lawton: Beyond the National Curriculum (London, 1996)
M. Reichling: 'On the Question of Method in Philosophical Research', Philosophy of Music Education Review, iv (1996), 117–27

E: SPECIALIST JOURNALS

American Music Teacher (1951–)
Australian Journal of Music Education (1967–)
British Journal of Music Education (1984–)
Council for Research in Music Education Bulletin (1963–)
Canadian Music Educator (1959–)
International Journal of Music Education (1983–)
International Music Education: ISME Yearbook (1973–?88)
Journal of Aesthetic Education
Journal of Research in Music Education (1953–)
Music Educators Journal (1934/5–)
Musik in der Schule (1949/50–)
Musik und Bildung (1969–)
Neue Musikzeitung (1969–)
Philosophy of Music Education Review (1993–)
Psychology of Music (1973–)
South African Music Teacher (1931–)

CHARLES PLUMMERIDGE

Schools Music Association. British organization for the promotion of music in education. It was formed in 1938 as a result of the success of non-competitive schools' music festivals that had been held since 1927, initially in Shropshire but later through much of the country, mostly directed by Geoffrey Shaw. The first national festival was held in the Royal Albert Hall, London, in 1938, and its success led to the formation of the association to coordinate the festivals' activities. A leading member was Cyril Winn, inspector of schools for the Board of Education and a pioneer in the development of school music in the 1930s. The administrative decentralization that resulted from the 1944 Education Act resulted in a larger number of local music advisers who helped enlarge the association's activities. In 1946 the National Youth Orchestra was founded by Ruth Railton with the support of Shaw and other members of the association. In 1956 the association founded the British Schools Orchestra, later renamed the British Youth Symphony Orchestra in order to admit a higher age range. In 1968 the British (later National) Youth Wind Orchestra was founded.

In 1951 the association's second national festival was held in the Royal Albert Hall as the first musical event of the Festival of Britain; Vaughan Williams's The Sons of Light was written for the occasion. National festivals were also held in 1956 and 1959, and subsequently these gave way to regional festivals. Other activities of the association have included the foundation of an advisory and research sub-committee, which has produced numerous reports including, at the request of UNESCO, a survey of music in the United Kingdom; an annual conference on music in schools (1964–) to maintain links with other music education bodies; the publication of the journal Music (from 1966, later replaced by a termly bulletin); national conducting courses; and courses for primary school music teachers. In 1970 it introduced the Suzuki method to Britain by organizing a concert and workshop at the Royal College of Music, London. In the 1990s the establishment of regional committees ensured that its activities covered the entire country. Links with government departments enabled the association to take part in discussions concerning the music curriculum.

□

Schop. German family of musicians.

(1) Johann Schop (i) (d Hamburg, 1667). Composer and violinist. In 1614 Duke Friedrich Ulrich made him a probationary musician in the Hofkapelle at Wolfenbüttel. His performances as a lute, cornett and trombone player and in particular as an excellent violinist led to his being engaged permanently in 1615. Nevertheless, in the same year he responded to a summons to join the flourishing musical establishment of King Christian IV of Denmark in Copenhagen. Here he met the English viol player William Brade, who had earlier been in the service of the city of Hamburg and may have taught him there (at this time there were close connections between English and German musicians). In 1619 Schop and Brade left Copenhagen to escape the plague. Schop had acquired such a high reputation that he soon obtained a post as Kapellmeister, although it cannot be established where this was. In 1621 he became the leading municipal violinist in Hamburg. The city offered him a substantial income for his participation in the church music and the festivities of the council and citizens, yet allowed him the freedom to undertake journeys to German and foreign courts. In 1634 he travelled to Copenhagen with Heinrich Schütz and Heinrich Albert for the wedding of Crown Prince Christian: during the splendid festivities he won a contest with the French violinist Jacques Foucart. He had by now become famous, and the Danish king attempted several times to lure him back to his musical establishment, but he stayed in Hamburg until his death.

Frontispiece to 'Frommer und Gottseliger Christen Alltägliche Haussmusik' (Lüneburg: Stern, 1654), including settings by Johann Schop of sacred poems by Johann Rist

Schop was a solid and versatile musician in a notable German tradition and showed himself to be a forward-looking player and composer. Through his close contact with the highly accomplished English string players and his encounter with early Italian violin masters, he became the leading exponent of the earliest German violin music: as late as 1740 Mattheson noted that one did not often find artists of his calibre in royal or princely establishments (MatthesonG). He contributed greatly to the flourishing cultivation of music in Hamburg in the mid-17th century. With his well-loved dance pieces he furthered the composition of suites in Germany between the time of Valentin Haussmann and that of Johann Rosenmüller. His sacred concertos occupy a special place alongside those of Schütz, particularly in their treatment of liturgical melodies. As a composer of solo songs, he was, together with Thomas Selle, the founder of a Hamburg school of songwriting. Many of his melodies to sacred texts by Johann Rist – e.g. Lasset uns den Herren preisen, Werde munter, mein Gemüte and O Ewigkeit, du Donnerwort (in Thomas, p.155) – for long remained in the Lutheran repertory (see illustration).

WORKS

13 wedding songs to sacred texts, 4–8vv, bc (Hamburg, 1627–52)
Erster Theil newer Paduanen, Galliarden, Allemanden, Balletten, Couranten, Canzonen, a 3–6, bc (Hamburg, 1633)
Zweiter Theil newer Paduanen, Galliarden, Allemanden, Balletten, Couranten, Canzonen, a 3–6, bc (Hamburg, 1635)
Erster Theil geistlicher Concerten, 1–8vv, bc (Hamburg, 1643–4) [contains composer's portrait]; 1 piece ed. in NM, lxix (1930)
1 suite, a 3 in Hochszeitmusik für D. Penshorn (Hamburg, 1640); 19 dance pieces, 2–3 vn, bc, 1646[11]
Many vocal works in 1642[9]; 1651[5]; 1652[5]/*R*1974; 1653[5]; Frommer und gottseliger Christen alltägliche Haussmusik, ed. J. Rist (Lüneburg, 1654); Passion und Bues-Lieder, ed. J.B. Schupp (Hamburg, 1655); Morgen- und Abendlieder, ed. J.B. Schupp (Hamburg, 1655); 1655[3]; Salomonis des Ebreischen Königs geistliche Wohl-Lust, oder hohes Lied, ed. P. von Zesen (Amsterdam, 1657); 1660[3]; Suscitabulum musicum (Greifswald, 1661); 1670[6]

(2) Johann Schop (ii) (b Hamburg, bap. 5 Oct 1626; d after 1670). Viol player and composer, son of (1) Johann Schop (i). About 1670 he was a viol player at the Schwerin court under Duke Christian Ludwig, in whose entourage he more than once visited Paris and took part in performances of operas. Later he may have gone to England. In addition to a three-part funeral song for his sister (Hamburg, 1654) he also wrote 13 songs published in two collections in Hamburg in 1655–6 (RISM 1655[3] and 1656[7]); they are modelled on those of his father.

(3) Albert Schop (b Hamburg, bap. 6 July 1632; d ?after 1667). Organist and composer, son of (1) Johann Schop (i). He studied with Scheidemann and about 1655 was court organist at Güstrow. Like his brother he wrote a number of songs not unlike those of his father: 29 appeared in collections in Hamburg in 1655–6, others were published at Rostock in 1666. Ten of his psalms for solo voice and continuo appeared in Exercitia vocis (Hamburg, 1667); another for three voices and continuo survives in manuscript.

WORKS

Many songs in Morgen- und Abendlieder, ed. J.B. Schupp (Hamburg, 1655); Passion und Bues-Lieder, ed. J.B. Schupp (Hamburg, 1655); 1656[7]; Erster Theil musikalischer Andachten (Rostock, 1666)
10 psalms, 1v, bc, 1667[7]; 1, 3vv, bc, S-Uu

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MoserGV
W. Krabbe: Johann Rist und das deutsche Lied (diss., U. of Berlin, 1910)
A. Moser: 'Johann Schop als Violinkomponist', Festschrift Hermann Kretzschmar (Leipzig, 1918/R), 92–5
K. Stephenson: Johann Schop: sein Leben und Wirken (diss., U. of Halle, 1924)
L. Krüger: Die hamburgische Musikorganisation im 17. Jahrhundert (Strasbourg, 1930)
R.H. Thomas: Poetry and Song in the German Baroque: a Study of the Continuo Lied (Oxford, 1963), 38, 67ff, 75, 155
D.D. Boyden: The History of Violin Playing from its Origins to 1761 (London, 1965/R), 136, 167–8
F. Krummacher: Die Überlieferung der Choralbearbeitungen in der frühen evangelischen Kantate (Berlin, 1965)
F. Krummacher: Die Choralbearbeitung in der protestantischen Figuralmusik zwischen Praetorius und Bach (Kassel, 1978)
J.L. Brauer: Instruments in Sacred Vocal Music at Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel: a Study of Changing Tastes in the Seventeenth Century (diss., CUNY, 1983)
T. Baranova: 'Rekopismienna tabulatura lutniowa ze zbiorów Biblioteki Akademij Nauk ZSSR w Leningradzie' [A lute tablature manuscript from the Biblioteka Academii Nauk USSR, Leningrad], Muzyka, xxxiv/1 (1989), 49–56
F. van Ingen: 'Philipp van Zesen und die Komponisten siener Lieder', Studien zum deutschen weltlichen Kunstlied des 17. und 18. Jahrhunderts, ed. G. Busch and A.G. Harper (Amsterdam, 1992), 53–82
J. Kremer: Das norddeutsche Kantorat im 18. Jahrhundert: Untersuchungen am Beispiel Hamburgs (Kassel, 1995)
J. Kremer: 'Johann Schop: Der Lob-Gesang . . . 1642', 'Johann Schop: Musicalische Freuden . . . 1640', Die Kunst der Stadtmusikanten, ed. H.W. Schwab (forthcoming)

KURT STEPHENSON

Schopenhauer, Arthur (b Danzig, 22 Feb 1788; d Frankfurt, 21 Sept 1860). German philosopher. His masterpiece, Die Welt als Wille und Vorstellung ('The World as Will and Representation'), was written while he was in his twenties and published in 1818 (dated 1819). It was almost unsold, unreviewed and unread. But he remained convinced that it contained 'the real solution of the enigma of the world' and for the rest of his life continued to work on and develop the ideas contained in it without altering them in any essential. In his last decade he experienced the beginnings of fame. Since his death he has probably had greater influence on more creative artists of the front rank than any other philosopher.

Schopenhauer saw his philosophy as the correction and completion of Kant's. Kant had held that the entire world of experience is a world of appearances only: that objects as they are in themselves, unmediated by our sensory apparatus, are inaccessible to us, and must remain permanently unknown. Schopenhauer's point of departure was the assertion that there is one vital exception to this, one physical object in the world for each man which he has direct access to, and knowledge of, from inside: his own body. This gives him the key to the inner nature of the world. For what is experienced from the outside, like any other piece of matter, through the representations of sense, is experienced from the inside as a will to live. This leads to the insight that matter as such is the embodiment of blind, irrational will to exist, of mindless force. (Schopenhauer would have taken Einstein's demonstration of the equivalence of mass and energy as triumphant corroboration of this on the scientific level.) His whole system is devoted to a many-sided consideration of this one thought: that the world, which is experienced as representation, is, in itself, Will.

Schopenhauer took over Plato's doctrine of Ideas as the permanent forms of reality underlying phenomena, but saw them as standing between the one Will and its differentiated manifestations in the world of sense; so for him they were intermediaries, not ultimates. In his view Ideas (in Plato's sense) are manifested in works of art, which is how the arts, with one exception, come to express the unchanging realities below the surface of life. But Ideas are the permanent forms behind our representations, and there is one art which is inherently non-representational: music. This is, as it were, a super-art which, without the intermediacy of Ideas at all, directly articulates ultimate reality, which is Will.

> In a language intelligible with absolute directness, yet not capable of translation into that of our faculty of reason, it expresses the innermost nature of all life and existence ... the composer reveals the innermost nature of the world, and expresses the profoundest wisdom in a language that his reasoning faculty does not understand.

If, per impossibile, we could put what music expresses into concepts, this would be the final revelation in words of reality as it is in itself, independent of all representation, and would thus be the true philosophy.

The philosophers most notably influenced by Schopenhauer were Nietzsche and Wittgenstein; the novelists, Tolstoy, Turgenev, Proust, Mann and Hardy; the composer, above all others, Wagner, who described his having read Die Welt als Wille und Vorstellung in 1854 as the most important event of his life. Everything he did subsequently was influenced by it; from that point his practice as an opera composer departed from the notion of Gesamtkunstwerk in which the various arts were to combine on equal terms, and he accorded music a dominating position (see J. Stein: Richard Wagner and the Synthesis of the Arts, Detroit, 1960). For the rest of his life Wagner's prose works abounded in passages which were little more than paraphrases of Schopenhauer (usually unacknowledged). Most important of all, his next wholly new artistic venture after his reading of Die Welt als Wille und Vorstellung, Tristan und Isolde, is almost an attempt to create the operatic equivalent of that book; Schopenhauer's philosophy is assimilated at every level, not only in the role of the music and in the detailed verbal imagery of the text but in the drama itself, and the whole view of life and death which that presents.

WRITINGS

Die Welt als Wille und Vorstellung (Frankfurt, 3/1859; Eng. trans., 1958)
A. Hübscher, ed.: Sämtliche Werke (Wiesbaden, 2/1946–50)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Sans: Richard Wagner et la pensée schopenhauerienne (Paris, 1969)
C. Dahlhaus: 'Das unterbrochene Hauptwerk: zu Wagners Siegfried', Das Drama Richard Wagners als musikalisches Kunstwerk (Regensburg, 1970), 235–8
C. Dahlhaus: 'Ernst Blochs Philosophie der Musik Wagners', JbSIM 1972, 179–88
E. Sans: 'Wagner, Schopenhauer et L'Anneau', L'avant-scène opéra, no.8 (1977), 4–13 [Die Walküre issue]
M. Gregor-Dellin: 'Schopenhauer und die Musiker nach ihm', Schopenhauer-Jb, lxiv (1983), 51–60

B. Magee: The Philosophy of Schopenhauer (Oxford, 1983, 2/1997)
C. Dahlhaus: Klassische und romantische Musikästhetik (Laaber, 1988)

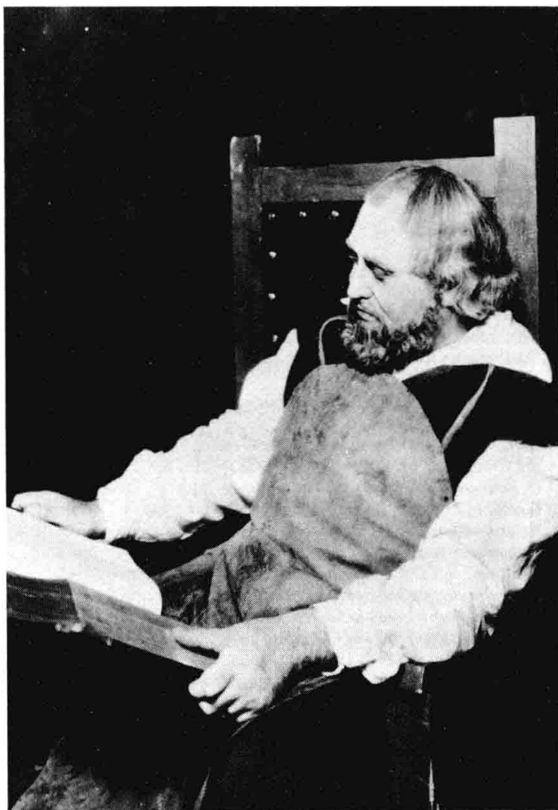
BRYAN MAGEE

Schornburg, Heinrich (b Echteld or Tiel, nr Utrecht, 1533; d Bad Schwalbach, 1596). German theorist, teacher and physician of Netherlandish birth. He studied at Kraków and Basle Universities from 1566 to 1569 and went to Cologne in 1570 where in 1575 he received the degree of bachelor of medicine. After several years spent elsewhere he returned to Cologne and in 1583 became professor of medicine at the university, a post he held for the rest of his life. There are indications that he visited France and Italy.



In addition to treatises on logic and astronomy, Schornburg produced a highly unconventional booklet on music, the Elementa musica ... qualia nunquam antehac ordine, brevitate, perspicuitate, et firmitate visa, cum vera monochordi descriptione, hactenus desiderata, instrumenta musica fabricare volentibus ante omnia cognitu necessaria, published in Cologne in 1582 (ed. A. Friedrich, Beiträge zur rheinischen Musikgeschichte, lxvii, Cologne, 1966). Although this didactic manual is essentially of the musica practica type, presenting the fundamentals of music (notation, solmization and mensuration), there are some important differences. First, topics such as the conventional definition, divisions, uses and inventors of music, normally discussed in treatises of this kind, are omitted; second, Schornburg employed his own formulations throughout, rather than borrowing from other treatises as was customary. Finally, and of great significance, about half the treatise is devoted to tuning and temperament, a subject usually reserved for a treatise on musica theorica; the presentation here is in terms of the monochord. Using as a basis the Pythagorean ratios for the different musical intervals, Schornburg, by an individual method of successively and alternately adding and subtracting lengths of the monochord's string in accordance with these ratios, arrived at a two-octave system of 44 notes that avoids the Pythagorean comma. The great variety of intervals involved, however, would have made the practical application of this system problematical.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Hüschen: 'Der Kölner Artzt Heinrich Schornburg und seine Musikabhandlung', Festschrift Friedrich Blume, ed. A.A. Abert and W. Pfannkuch (Kassel, 1963), 189–99
R. Klein: Die Intervallehre in der deutschen Musiktheorie des 16. Jahrhunderts (Regensburg, 1989), 70–79

F.E. KIRBY

Schorr, Friedrich (b Nagyvarád, 2 Sept 1888; d Farmington, CT, 14 Aug 1953). Hungarian bass-baritone, naturalized American. He studied with Adolf Robinson, sang some small roles in Chicago in early 1912, and made his true début in Graz on 20 June 1912 as Wotan in Die Walküre. After brief engagements in Graz, Prague and Cologne, he came to wider prominence when engaged by the Berlin Staatsoper in 1923. During his seven Berlin years and thereafter, he was to tackle roles from a surprisingly wide repertory, including Strauss's Barak, Meyerbeer's Nélusko and Busoni's Doktor Faust; but it was above all in the great Wagnerian bass-baritone parts that he excelled, not only in Berlin, but at Bayreuth (1925–31), at Covent Garden (1925–33), and especially at the Metropolitan (every season from 1924 to 1943), where he also sang Pizarro, Strauss's Orestes and John the Baptist. His Wotan and Hans Sachs long dominated the international operatic scene; he was beyond question the leading exponent of these and of numerous other Wagnerian roles, especially the Dutchman. His voice had majesty and unfailing beauty; he never fell into the notorious 'Bayreuth bark', but maintained a steady legato flow of tone even in declamatory passages. The most important part of his recorded legacy consists of the extensive Wagnerian excerpts made in his prime, in which his impeccable enunciation plays an important part in the impression of authority that he conveys. One can believe in the grandeur of a Wotan whose utterances are so commandingly distinct, and in the poetic sensibility of a Hans Sachs to whom words are of such evident importance.

Friedrich Schorr as Hans Sachs in Wagner's 'Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg'

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GV (L. Riemens; R. Celletti; R. Vegeto)
D. Shawe-Taylor: 'Friedrich Schorr', Opera, xvi (1965), 323–7
A. Frankenstein, E. Arnosi and B. Semeonoff: 'Friedrich Schorr', Record Collector, xix (1970–71), 243–84 [incl. discography by J. Dennis]

DESMOND SHAWE-TAYLOR/R

Schott. German firm of music publishers. It was founded by Bernhard Schott (b Eltville, 10 Aug 1748; d Sandhof, nr Heidesheim, 26 April 1809) in Mainz. Eitner gave 1770 as the year of foundation, and the firm celebrated its bicentenary in 1970, but the publishing house was probably not founded until 1780, when Schott was granted a privilegium exclusivum and the title of music engraver to the court of the elector at Mainz. Schott had studied from 1768 to 1771 at the University of Mainz (graduating as magister artium), was clarinettist in a Strasbourg regiment from 1771 to 1773 and travelled in the Netherlands and England; in addition to his musical education, he gained a knowledge of copperplate engraving and particularly of music engraving. He was thus more thoroughly trained for the profession of music publishing than many of his contemporaries. He began his publishing venture with editions of the works of Abbé Vogler and his circle and with the composers for the Hofkapelle at Mainz, especially the works of G.A. Kreusser and J.F.X. Sterkel. Above all he brought out music for which there was a popular demand, such as piano scores and arrangements of popular operas; he published the first piano scores of Mozart's Die Entführung aus dem Serail (1785) and Don Giovanni (1791). He frequently reprinted the works of popular composers, especially Pleyel, and boasted that his own editions were of superior quality. The numerous flute duets and other pieces published in the 1790s are evidence of a marked leaning towards salon music.

Bernhard's sons Johann Andreas (1781–1840) and Johann Joseph (1782–1855), who gave the name 'B. Schott's Söhne' to the firm, enlarged the enterprise both by increasing the scope of the publishing programme and by taking over other publishers. By 1818 they had absorbed partly or completely the firms of Amon of Heilbronn, Falter of Munich and Kreitner of Worms (together with a part interest in Götz of Mannheim and Worms), as well as the firms of Karl Zulehner of Mainz and Georg Zulehner of Eltville. Subsequently the firm established branches in Antwerp (1824, transferred to Brussels in 1843 by Peter Schott, a son of Johann Andreas, where it has been independent from 1889 under the name of Schott Frères), Paris (1826), London (1835; managed by Bernhard's third son Adam Joseph Schott, 1794–1864) and Leipzig (*c*1840). The firm first achieved eminence through the connection it formed with Beethoven in 1824 and through its first publication of such late works as the Missa solemnis, the Ninth Symphony (see illustration) and the string quartets opp.127 and 131. The firm continued its tradition of publishing popular works by issuing the compositions of Italian and French opera composers, including Bellini, Donizetti, Rossini, Adam, Auber, Gounod and Halévy. In addition it brought out many works for piano by Leo Ascher, Henri Herz, Franz Hünten, Sydney Smith and Thalberg, and works for violin by C.-A. de Bériot, Charles Dancla and Paganini. From 1824 to 1848 it published the music periodical Cäcilia, which was continued until 1869 as the Süddeutsche Musikzeitung. From 1835 it published, together with the Brussels firm of Leroux, Fétis's Biographie universelle des musiciens et bibliographie générale de la musique.

From 1855 until his death Franz Philipp Schott (1811–74), the son of Johann Andreas, carried on the publishing house as sole proprietor. Under him a connection with Wagner was formed in 1859, after which the firm published the latter's music dramas Der Ring des Nibelungen, Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg and Parsifal. Other composers of Wagner's circle turned to Schott, including Liszt, with whom there had already been a slight connection since 1837, as well as Cornelius, Wolf and Humperdinck.

After the death of Franz Philipp Schott the publishing house was bequeathed to Ludwig Strecker (1853–1943), who came from an old Hessian civil service family not related to the Schotts. From 1920 he made his sons

Title-page of the first edition of the score of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, published by Schott in 1826

Ludwig (1883–1978) and Willi (1884–1958) partners in the publishing house. With the publication of Stravinsky's Fireworks (1908) it began to encourage modern music, and this is still an important part of the firm's policy. 20th-century composers whose works have been published by Schott include Hindemith, Orff, Fortner, Egk, Françaix, Henze, Schoenberg, Zimmermann, Weill, Ligeti and Penderecki, as well as Goehr and Tippett in association with the English branch of the firm.

In 1907 Willi Strecker assisted Max Eschig in the foundation of his publishing house in Paris, and in 1910 he took over the London firm of Augener; both were expropriated during World War I. Heinz Schneider-Schott (1906-88), Ludwig Strecker's son-in-law, became a director of the firm in 1952, and Arno Volk (the founder of the publishing firm Volk), who had held a leading position in the firm since 1957, was chairman of the board of directors from 1974 to 1977. In 2000 the directors of the firm (known as Schott Musik International GmbH & Co. KG since 1995) were Peter Hanser-Strecker (president), Ludolf Freiherr von Canstein and Rolf Reisinger.

The more important works of musicology published by Schott since World War II include the 12th edition of the Riemann Musik Lexikon and the Haydn thematic catalogue edited by Anthony van Hoboken. In addition Schott has undertaken critical editions of the complete works of Wagner, Hindemith and Schoenberg.

The firm has also been much involved in music education. It publishes a number of periodicals including Neue Zeitschrift für Musik, Musik & Bildung (formerly Musik im Unterricht), Das Orchester and Darmstädter Beiträge zur neuen Musik, and formerly published Melos, Forschung in der Musikerziehung (originally a supplement to Musik & Bildung, though it continued for a while as an independent yearbook) and The World of Music. In 1946 Schott bought the publishing house of Ars Viva, in 1957 the firm of Ernst Eulenburg, and in 1971 the gramophone record company of Wergo. It cooperates with Universal Edition, Vienna, with which the joint publishing house of Wiener Urtext Edition was formed in 1972, and has continued to revise and expand its list. Musifactory, a subsidiary firm which publishes light music, was founded in 1975, and in 1977 Schott and Universal Edition established a joint agency in the USA, the firm European American. In 1981 Schott bought the firm of Fürstner (London), for whose Richard Strauss edition it had been the German agent; it took over the firm of Cranz of Wiesbaden in 1992 and both Panton International and Hohner in 1998.

The firm survived World War II almost unscathed and is still in possession of its largely complete archives. Some 600 letters of Beethoven and other 19th-century composers were donated by Franz Philipp Schott to the Mainz Stadtbibliothek (now D-MZs).

The London branch of the firm was managed, after the departure in 1840 of A.J. Schott, by Johann Baptist Wolf, to be followed by Charles G.J. Volkert (1854–1929), who had joined the staff in 1873 and who took over the management in 1887. Under his direction the firm began to develop independently. In 1914 Volkert acquired the firm, and it became a limited company in 1924. After his death in 1929 his son-in-law Max R.B. Steffens took over as joint director with Willi Strecker; Strecker was succeeded on his death by Heinz Schneider-Schott. During the early 1960s the firm entered on a period of expansion; additional premises were built at Ashford, Kent, in 1965, to house a new printing works, warehouse and distribution centre, and the Great Marlborough Street premises, purchased in 1909, were redesigned in 1966 to include a retail showroom. Though autonomous from 1914 until 1980, when Schott of Mainz resumed control, Schott & Co. Ltd kept close links with the parent firm while maintaining a publishing policy of its own, which it continues to pursue. Contemporary music is strongly represented (Banks, Bryars, Casken, Maxwell Davies, Fricker, Gilbert, Goehr, Hamilton, Martland, Sackman, Searle, Seiber, Tippett and Turnage), and educational and school music are an important feature, with an extensive list of recorder music. The firm has taken a special interest in the recorder and early music revival.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ
M. Seiffert: 'Das Haus Schott', AMz, xx (1893), 557–8
E. Istel, ed.: 'Elf ungedruckte Briefe Liszts an Schott', Die Musik, v/3 (1905–6), 43–52
W. Altmann, ed.: Richard Wagners Briefwechsel mit seinen Verlegern, ii: Briefwechsel mit B. Schott's Söhnen (Mainz, 1911/R)
M. Unger: 'Zu Beethovens Briefwechsel mit B. Schott's Söhnen in Mainz', NBeJb 1926, 51–61
B. Ziegler: 'Zur Geschichte des Privilegium exclusivum des Mainzer Musikstechers Bernhard Schott', Festschrift für Georg Leidinger, ed. A. Hartmann (Munich, 1930), 293-305
K. Schweickert: Die Musikpflege am Hofe der Kurfürsten von Mainz im 17. und 18. Jahrhundert (Mainz, 1937)
L. Strecker: Richard Wagner als Verlagsgefährte (Mainz, 1951)
A. Gottron: Mainzer Musikgeschichte 1500 bis 1800 (Mainz, 1959)
C. Dalhaus, ed.: Festschrift für einen Verleger: Ludwig Strecker zum 90. Geburtstag (Mainz, 1973)
H.-C. Müller: Bernhard Schott, Hofmusikstecher in Mainz: die Frühgeschichte seines Musikverlages bis 1797, mit einen Verzeichnis der Verlagswerke 1779–1797 (Mainz, 1977)
Ludwig van Beethoven: der Briefwechsel mit dem Verlag Schott, ed. Beethoven-Haus, Bonn (Munich, 1985)
M. Twyman: Early Lithographed Music (London, 1996)

HANS-CHRISTIAN MÜLLER, FRANK DAUNTON, CLIFFORD CAESAR

Schott, Georg Balthasar (b Schönau, nr Eisenach, 22 Oct 1686; d Gotha, 25 March 1736). German organist and composer. After attending the Gotha Gymnasium, he studied at the Universities of Jena (1709–14) and Leipzig. On 9 August 1720 he succeeded J.G. Vogler as organist at the Neukirche in Leipzig and director of the city's collegium musicum. Following the death of Johann Kuhnau (5 June 1722), Schott applied for Kuhnau's position as Kantor at the Thomaskirche in Leipzig. As part of the application process he performed cantatas on 29 November 1722 (at the Neukirche) and 2 February 1723. The position, though, went to J.S. Bach, who began his duties on 16 May 1723. During the next several years Schott deputized for Bach, possibly for four consecutive weeks in the summer of 1725. Schott's collegium may also have taken part in performances of secular cantatas by Bach during these years. Schott's position at the Neukirche was hardly ideal: his salary was only 50 thaler (Bach earned over ten times this amount) and when in July 1723 he requested a raise, the city council merely admonished him to pay closer attention to the church's organ, which had recently been renovated. But, as Bach wrote, 'the dear Lord provided for the honest Mr Schott', and in March 1729 he returned to his native Thuringia to become Kantor in Gotha, a position he held until his death. As a token of its appreciation, the Leipzig city council granted him 24 thaler as a leaving present. Upon Schott's departure, Bach 'willingly' assumed directorship of the collegium and had C.G. Gerlach appointed as organist at the Neukirche.

Schott must have composed numerous works, but none has survived. In Gotha and Leipzig he performed pieces (all presumably of his own composition) in honour of the Saxon royal family. One such work was the 'drama' Der richtende Paris, which the Leipzig collegium performed in 1722 in recognition of Maria Josepha's first visit to Leipzig. Another was the ode Landesvater! Held August!, to words by the Leipzig professor J.C. Gottsched, performed by the ensemble in 1728 to celebrate the birthday of August the Strong. Of Schott's music for the Neukirche, there is documentation only of two Pentecost cantatas, Du unbegreiflich höchstes Gut and Komm heiliger Geist, heiliger Gott.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (D. Härtwig)
H.T. David and A. Mendel, eds.: The Bach Reader: a Life of Johann Sebastian Bach in Letters and Documents (New York, 1945, 2/1966)
U. Siegele: 'Bachs Stellung in der Leipziger Kulturpolitik seiner Zeit', BJb 1983, 7–50; 1984, 7–43; 1986, 33–67
A. Glöckner: Die Musikpflege an der Leipziger Neukirche zur Zeit Johann Sebastian Bachs (Leipzig, 1990)
A. Glöckner: 'Bemerkungen zu den Leipziger Kantatenaufführungen vom 3. bis 6. Sonntag nach Trinitatis 1725', BJb 1992, 73–6

RUSSELL STINSON

Schott, Johann Georg (b Niederkleen, nr Butzbach, *c*1548; d Butzbach, 9 Jan 1614). German composer. He studied at Marburg, and from 1594 in Heidelberg, probably at the instigation of Nicolaus Rosthius, with whom he had lodged for three months late in 1590 and early in 1591. Later he entered the service of the Count of Nassau in Ottweiler (Saar), and rose to the position of an imperial notary and town clerk in Butzbach. In 1610 he described himself as 'Director musices' in charge of the collegium musicum there. Schott's last years coincided with a period when the city was at its most prosperous: in 1609 it became the seat of a branch of the Hessian line, the sole regent of which was Landgrave Philipp (1609–93), an extremely cultured prince.

Schott's only printed work, Psalmen und Gesangbuch darinn die geistlichen Lieder D.M. Lutheri und anderer Christen begrieffen, zu 4 Stimmen. Contrapunkts weiss ... gesetzet (Frankfurt, 1603 [RISM, B/VIII 1603[06]]) belongs, as its title indicates, to the Lutheran chorale-book tradition established by Lucas Osiander; with its 196 four-voice settings it is one of the largest extant collections. Among the versions of the psalms of Middle and High German origin in the first part, there are 20 rhyming paraphrases from Johannes Magdeburg's Psalter Davids gesangsweis (Frankfurt, 1565, lost). Nearly all Schott's settings are based on existing tunes.

Three works by Schott in manuscript are no longer extant: two, for eight voices, were written 'in honorem Ludovici Hassiae Landgraf' – Paraphrasis brevis et perspicua super psalmum xlv (a wedding motet), and Acclamatio musicalis (cited in J. Steuber: Catalogi und Nachrichten von der Marburger und Giessener Bibliothek, D-GI); the third, Das neugeborne Kindelein, is known from an old Butzbach music list.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 ('Butzbach'; F. Kaiser); ZahnM

S. Kümmerle: Encyklopädie der evangelischen Kirchenmusik, iii (Gütersloh, 1894)

K. Dotter: 'J.G. Schott: ein Butzbacher Komponist des 17. Jahrhunderts', Die Heimat im Bild, Giessener Anzeiger (1926), suppl.1, p.200

WALTER BLANKENBURG/CLYTUS GOTTWALD

Schottische (from Ger. schottisch: 'Scottish'). A round dance, like a polka, but slower. Any connection with the écossaise has been denied by some writers, but according to Sachs the schottische arose from the incorporation of waltz-like turns into the écossaise, and after the disappearance of the latter lived on as a waltz in 2/4 time. It was known in Bavaria as the 'Rheinländer' and introduced into England in 1848 as the 'German Polka'. In the USA the 'military' schottische was a popular variant, and through the popularity of Tom Turner's Dancing in the Barn Schottisch (1878) became known in Britain as the 'barn dance'. It involved the couple first advancing along the line of the dance and then doing a complete waltz turn. During the 20th century this further evolved into the progressive barn dance, which included changes of partners. The Schottische bohème, or Polka tremblante, was a particular kind of polka introduced in Paris in the 1840s.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Sachs: Eine Weltgeschichte des Tanzes (Berlin, 1933; Eng. trans., 1938/R)

P.J.S. Richardson: The Social Dances of the 19th Century (London, 1960)

MICHAEL TILMOUTH/ANDREW LAMB

Schousboe, Torben (b Copenhagen, 6 Oct 1937). Danish musicologist. He studied the organ with Peter Thomsen and took the organists' examination at the Royal Danish Conservatory of Music in 1960. His début took place with a recital in Odense Cathedral in 1961, after which he became organist at Emdrup Church in Copenhagen (1961–96). He studied musicology at the University of Copenhagen (MA 1966) and then held a lecturership there in the history and theory of music from 1966 to 1996, when he was obliged to retire for reasons of health. He was also a lecturer in church music at the Pastoral Seminary in Copenhagen (1986–93). His research has been mainly concerned with church music, both pre- and post-Reformation, and with Danish musical history. He has done valuable archival studies of 19th-century concert life in Copenhagen and in particular established himself as an authority on the music of Carl Nielsen, which his scientific studies, editions, revisions (especially of the operas) and award-winning record productions have done much to promote. He was one of the founders of the Danish Carl Nielsen Society in 1966, and its secretary until 1982, and has also served on the executive committees of Samfundet Dansk Kirkesang (1962–93), Selskabet Dansk Tidegaerd (1966–92) and Selskabet for Dansk Teaterhistorie, of which he was chairman (1984–90).

WRITINGS

with D. Fog: Carl Nielsen, kompositioner: en bibliografi (Copenhagen, 1965)

'Carl Nielsens praeludier for orgel', Organist-Bladet, xxxii (1966), 20–27

'Koncertforeningen i København', DAM, vi (1968–72), 171–209

'Barn af huset – ?', Dansk kirkesangs årsskrift 1969–70, 75–91 [on Carl Nielsen's Salmer og aandelige sange]

'Foreningen symfonia – sin tids DUT', DMt, xlv (1970), 156–68

'Dänische musikwissenschaftliche Publikationen seit 1958: eine Übersicht', AcM, xliv (1972), 1–11

'Gregoriansk sang på modersmål', Festskrift Jens Peter Larsen, ed. N. Schiørring, H. Glahn and C.E. Hatting (Copenhagen, 1972), 401–14

'Protestant Church Music in Scandinavia', in F. Blume: Protestant Church Music: a History (New York, 1974), 609–36

'"Det skulde vaere jaevne viser…": Notater om et skelsaettende samarbejde mellem Carl Nielsen og Thomas Laub', Festskrift Henrik Glahn, ed. M. Müller (Copenhagen, 1979), 151–82

'Tre program-noter af Carl Nielsen om "Sinfonia espansiva"', Musik & forskning, vi (1980), 5–14 with S. Høgel: '"I kølende Skygger": en ukendt romance af Carl Nielsen', Musik & forskning, vii (1981), 177–90

ed., with I.E. Møller: Carl Nielsen: dagbøger og brevveksling med Anne Marie Carl-Nielsen, i–ii (Copenhagen, 1983)

'Musik-dramatisk person-karakteristik i Carl Nielsens to operaer', Den danske Tilskuer, i, ed. K. Neiendam (Copenhagen, 1990), 173–204

'Carl Nielsen-forskningen', Arven efter Carl Nielsen: Copenhagen 1990, Musik & forskning, xvi (1990–91), 24–35

JOHN BERGSAGEL

Schrade, Leo (b Allenstein, 13 Dec 1903; d Spéracèdes, 21 Sept 1964). American musicologist of German birth. From 1923 he studied musicology at the universities of Heidelberg with Halbig (while also taking courses at the Mannheim Conservatory), Munich with Sandberger and Leipzig with Kroyer; he also studied art history, philosophy, literary history, history and economics. He took the doctorate at Leipzig in 1927 with a dissertation on early organ music and then taught in the musicology seminar at Königsberg University, where he completed the Habilitation in 1929 with a work on the notation of early instrumental music. From 1932 he taught at Bonn University, being appointed lecturer in the history of medieval music in 1935. After leaving Germany for the USA he taught at Yale University, as assistant professor (1938), associate professor (1943) and professor of music history (1948), and as director of graduate studies in music (1939–58) instituted a course noted for its comprehensive coverage of music history. In 1958 he succeeded Handschin as professor and director of the musicology institute at Basle University; he held these posts until his death. In 1962–3 he was Charles Eliot Norton Professor of Poetry at Harvard, lecturing on 'Tragedy in the Art of Music'. He founded and edited (1947–58) the Yale Studies in the History of Music and the Yale Collegium Musicum series of performing editions; he was also co-editor of the Journal of Renaissance and Baroque Music (1946–7), of Annales musicologiques (from 1953) and of Archiv für Musikwissenschaft (from 1958).

The most prominent characteristic of Schrade's work, manifest equally in his publications and his teaching, was his striving for universality, and in this, rather than in work in any one area, lay his chief importance as a musicologist. While he valued the precision of a specialist, he felt it both a responsibility and an opportunity to be involved in the whole history of music. He was always ready to undertake an important study, irrespective of its period; while refusing to be limited to merely technical issues, he invariably brought specialist attitudes to bear. Concern with the ideas of history and art is evident in such articles as 'Renaissance: the Historical Conception of an Epoch', and in less obvious ways throughout his work. His interest in method and philosophy permeates even the studies in which his specialist involvement was strongest – medieval polyphony (e.g. in 'Political Compositions in French Music of the 12th and 13th Centuries'). And humanist values motivated and illuminated his important critical editions, the series Polyphonic Music of the Fourteenth Century. In his teaching Schrade always complemented awareness of philosophic issues with a clear sense of musical style. He required that a perception of cultural and historical contexts be balanced against a sensitivity to the uniqueness of the individual composer, whether Philippe de Vitry, Monteverdi, Mozart or Stravinsky. His lively enthusiasm for musical performance was particularly evident in the collegium musicum which he fostered and in which he took part.

WRITINGS

Die ältesten Denkmäler der Orgelmusik als Beitrag zu einer Geschichte der Toccata (diss., U. of Leipzig, 1927; Münster, 1928)
'Die Darstellungen der Töne an den Kapitellen der Abteikirche zu Cluni', DVLG, vii (1929), 229–66
Die handschriftliche Überlieferung der ältesten Instrumentalmusik (Habilitationsschrift, U. of Königsberg, 1929; Lahr, 1931, enlarged 2/1968 by H.J. Marx)
'Das propädeutische Ethos in der Musikanschauung des Boethius', Zeitschrift für Geschichte der Erziehung und des Unterrichts, xx (1930), 179–215
'Die Stellung der Musik in der Philosophie des Boethius als Grundlage der ontologischen Musikerziehung', Archiv für Geschichte der Philosophie, xli (1932), 368–400
'Studien zu Händels Alexanderfest', HJb 1932, 38–114
'Von der "Maniera" der Komposition in der Musik des 16. Jahrhunderts', ZMw, xvi (1934), 3–20, 98–117, 152–70
'Die Messe in der Orgelmusik des 15. Jahrhunderts', AMf, i (1936), 129–75
Beethoven in France: the Growth of an Idea (New Haven, CT, 1942/R)
'The Organ in the Mass of the 15th Century', MQ, xxviii (1942), 329–36, 467–87
'Bach: the Conflict between the Sacred and the Secular', Journal of the History of Ideas, vii (1946), 151–94; pubd separately (New York, 1954/R)
'Herder's Conception of Church Music', The Musical Heritage of the Church, ii, ed. T. Hoelty-Nickel (Valparaiso, IN, 1946), 83–95
Monteverdi, Creator of Modern Music (New York, 1950/R)
'Das Rätsel des Rhythmus in der Musik', Melos, xviii (1951), 305–9
'Renaissance: the Historical Conception of an Epoch', IMSCR V: Utrecht 1952, 19–32
'Political Compositions in French Music of the 12th and 13th Centuries', AnnM, i (1953), 9–63; repr. in De scientia musicae studia atque orationes, ed. E. Lichtenhahn (Berne, 1967), 152–211
'The Mass of Toulouse', RBM, viii (1954), 84–96
'The Chronology of the Ars Nova in France', L'Ars Nova: Wégimont II 1955, 37–59
'A Fourteenth Century Parody Mass', AcM, xxvii (1955), 13–39
'Unknown Motets in a Recovered Thirteenth-Century Manuscript', Speculum, xxx (1955), 393–412
La représentation d'Edipo tiranno au Teatro Olimpico (Vicence 1585) (Paris, 1960)
'The Cycle of the Ordinarium Missae', In memoriam Jacques Handschin, ed. H. Anglès and others (Strasbourg, 1962), 87–96
Tragedy in the Art of Music (Cambridge, MA, 1964)
W.A. Mozart (Berne and Munich, 1964)
ed. E. Lichtenhahn: De scientia musicae studia atque orationes (Berne, 1967) [articles, incl. '"Herkules am Scheideweg": zur neuen Musik der Nachkriegsjahre', 592–608; complete list of publications and bibliography to 1965, 609–23]

EDITIONS

Luys Milàn: Libro de musica de vihuela de mano intitulado El maestro, Publikationen älterer Musik, ii (Leipzig, 1927)
Guillaume de Machaut: Works, PMFC, ii–iii (1956/R)
The Roman de Fauvel; The Works of Philippe de Vitry; French Cycles of the ordinarium missae, PMFC, i (1956)
Francesco Landini: Works, PMFC, iv (1958/R)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Musik und Geschichte/Music and History: Leo Schrade zum sechzigsten Geburtstag (Cologne, 1963)
K. von Fischer: 'Leo Schrade (13. Dezember 1903 – 21. September 1964)', AcM, xxxvi (1964), 187–8
K. von Fischer: 'Leo Schrade † 21. September 1964', AMw, xxi (1964), 161–2
J. Jacquot: 'Leo Schrade', Le lieu théâtral à la renaissance: Royaumont 1963, ed. J. Jacquot (Paris, 1964, 2/1968), 511–12
E. Lichtenhahn: 'Leo Schrade zum Gedächtnis', Mf, xviii (1965), 121–6
W.G. Waite: 'Leo Schrade', JAMS, xviii (1965), 3–4 [obituary]
Leo Schrade in memoriam (Berne and Munich, 1966) [incl. tributes by R. Stamm, E. Lichtenhahn and A. Schmitz]
W. Arlt and others, eds.: Gattungen der Musik in Einzeldarstellungen: Gedenkschrift Leo Schrade (Berne, 1973)
C.E. Steinzor: 'Leo Franz Schrade', American Musicologists, c.1890–1945 (New York, 1989), 228–41

RICHARD L. CROCKER

Schrader, Barry (b Johnstown, PA, 26 June 1945). American composer of electro-acoustic music. He studied English literature (BA 1967) and musicology (MA 1970) at the University of Pittsburgh where he also served as an organist at Heinz Chapel; while in Pittsburgh, he studied composition with Robert Griswold (1965–7) and Subotnick (1969–70). In 1970 he moved to Los Angeles to attend the California Institute of the Arts (MFA in composition, 1971), where he became a member of the composition faculty. He has also taught at California State University (1975–8) and at the University of California, Santa Barbara (1996). Schrader founded and directed Currents, a series of international electro-acoustic music programmes held in Los Angeles (1973–9), was director of the CalArts Electro-Acoustic Music Marathon (1983–7) and has participated in various festivals overseas. He has received awards from the Groupe de Musique Expérimentale de Bourges, ASCAP and other organizations, and in 1982 was elected to the board of directors of the American New Music Consortium. He was made president of the Society for Electro-Acoustic Music in the United States on its founding in 1984, and continues as a member of the board of directors and as an associate editor of Journal SEAMUS. In 1985 he founded the Southern California Resource for Electro-Acoustic Music, a consortium of colleges and universities that presented concerts and broadcasts of electro-acoustic music up to 1997. In 1988 he was invited by the Chinese Ministry of Culture to present concerts and lectures at Beijing and Shanghai conservatories.

Most of Schrader's music is electro-acoustic, much of it purely electronic. Beginning with Bestiary (1972–4), he has concentrated on the systematic development of new timbres and timbral transformations. The latter take on a structural significance in Trinity (1976), a work which also marks the beginning of a more sophisticated exploration of timbre. His compositional approach is a personal one derived more from an understanding of the human perception of sound and music as a kinetic phenomenon than from any abstract theory. Several of his larger works, such as Lost Atlantis, are based on literary or other extramusical themes.

While Schrader's early works were composed with analog synthesizers, his later music, beginning with Bachahama (1986), has been composed using computers and digital equipment. This has influenced his musical style, particularly those works which include live interaction such as Dance Suite for Harp and Computer (1987) and Excavations (1992), which exhibits greater use of tonality and event-based compositional thinking. Many of his electro-acoustic works of the 1990s, such as Beyond and 816, still exhibit the concerns for timbre and musical gestalts found in his earlier compositions.

WORKS

El-ac: Serenade, tape, 1969; Incantation, tape, 1970; Sky Ballet (O. Piene), sound environment, 1970; Elysium, hp, dancers, tape, projections, 1971; Celebration, tape, 1971; Bestiary, tape, 1972–4; Soundvironments I–II, tape, 1974; Trinity, tape, 1976; Classical Studies (3 on a Patch), tape, 1977; Lost Atlantis, tape, 1977; Moon-Whales and other Moon Songs (T. Hughes), S, tape, 1982–3; Electronic Music Box I, sound installation, 1983, II, 1983, III, 1984; Bachahama, 1986; California Dream, 1986–7; Dance Suite, hp, computer, 1987; Extreme Variations on a Theme and Variations by Mel Powell, 6 computer-controlled kbds, 1987; Triptych, 1987; Twilight, live elecs, 1988; Dance from the Outside, 1989; Love, In Memoriam (M. Glück), Ct, tape, 1989, collab. F. Royon le Mée; Remonstrance (Philodemos, trans. Fitts), Ct, tape, 1989, collab. Royon le Mée; Night, 1v, computer, live elecs, 1990, collab. Royon le Mée; Two: Square Flowers Red: Songs (P. Levitt), SATB, tape, 1990; Beyond, 1992; Excavations, hpd, tape, 1992; '816', 1997; Ground, 1997

Film and video scores: How to Make a Woman (A. Fiering), 1972; Death of the Red Planet (D. Pelton), 1973; Heavy Light (A. Beckett), 1973; Exploratorium (J. Borstin), 1974; The Glory Road West (T. Sanders), 1976; Mobiles (J. Engel), 1978; Along the Way (S. Eagle), 1980; Galaxy of Terror (B.D. Clark), 1981; Gallery 3 (Engel), 1988; California Dream (M. Scroggins), 1987–9; '1921–1989' (Scroggins), 1989

Signature for Tempo (A. MacLeish), S, pf, 1966

Principal publisher: Ex Machina

Principal recording companies: CIRM, Laurel, Opus One, SEAMUS

WRITINGS

Introduction to Electro-Acoustic Music (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1982)

'Alternating Currents: the Future of Electro-Acoustic Music', American Music Center Newsletter, xxvii/4 (1985)

'Electro-Acoustic Music', GroveA

'The Development of Personal Compositional Style', On the Wires of Our Nerves, ed. R. Heifetz (Cranbury, NJ, 1989), 76–82

'Live/Electro-Acoustic Music: a Perspective from History and California', Contemporary Music Review, vi/1 (1992), 91–106

'Electronic Studio Art and the Internet', Oregon Law Review, lxxv/1 (1996), 339–46

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Pelton: 'Death of the Red Planet', American Cinematographer, liv (1973), 842

G. Wager: '"Night": Avant-Garde Vocals at Sonic Series', Los Angeles Times (8 March 1973)

M. Chion and G. Reibel: Les musiques électroacoustiques (Aix-en-Provence, France, 1976)

D. Bradfield: 'Lost Atlantis', Journal SEAMUS, ii/1 (1987), 10

I. Mowitz: '11th Annual CalArts Contemporary Music Festival', Journal SEAMUS, ii/2 (1987), 8

E. Cheslow and B. Cassidy: An Interview with Barry Schrader (Waltham, MA, 1998) [unpublished video available from the authors at Brandeis University]

STEPHEN MOSKO

Schradieck, (Carl Franz) Henry [Heinrich] (b Hamburg, 29 April 1846; d Brooklyn, NY, 25 March 1918). German violinist and teacher. After less than two years' study with his father he appeared in public at the age of five. In 1854 Teresa Milanollo took an interest in him and placed him under Léonard at the Brussels Conservatory, where he gained a premier prix in 1858. He then studied with David at Leipzig (1859–61), obtaining his first important solo engagement in the Privatkonzerte in Bremen in 1864. The next year he was appointed violin professor at the Moscow Conservatory but returned in 1868 to lead the Hamburg Philharmonic Society orchestra, as Auer's successor. From 1874 to 1882 he worked in Leipzig, leading the Gewandhaus concerts and teaching at the conservatory. He then went to the Cincinnati College of Music as conductor and teacher until 1889, but returned to his former position in Hamburg for the next eight years. In 1898 he moved permanently to the USA, first for a year as principal violin professor at the National Conservatory in New York, then at the South Broad Street Conservatory in Philadelphia from 1899 to 1912, when he returned to New York, to the American Institute of Applied Music.

Schradieck's systematic stress on fingering technique ensured his importance in the founding of modern violin teaching methods. His pedagogical works include 25 Studies op.1 (Leipzig, 1877), Der junge Violine-Spieler op.2 (Leipzig, 1882), The First Position (New York, 1897) and Chord Studies (New York, n.d.); he also edited concertos by Mendelssohn, Spohr, Viotti and Molique, as well as studies by Campagnoli, Polledro and Kreutzer. Among his pupils was the violinist Maud Powell.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Dörffel: Geschichte der Gewandhausconcerte zu Leipzig (Leipzig, 1884/R)

E. van der Straeten: The History of the Violin (London, 1933/R)

S.M. Nelson: The Violin and Viola (London, 1972)

W.W. COBBETT/ DAVID CHARLTON

Schramm, Johann Jacob (b Mülsen St Jacob, 18 Jan 1724; d Mülsen St Niclas, 7 June 1808). German organ builder. He lived as a wealthy houseowner in Mülsen St Niclas, and there carried on the tradition of the carpenter Georg Eger (d 10 March 1750), who had built small organs at Stenn (1726) and Mülsen St Niclas (1736). According to Kretschmar he first worked as a miller (like his father), but also made all kinds of mechanical devices, including positive organs and other keyboard instruments. Eventually he received proper training with Johann Jacob Donati of Zwickau. He is also said to have studied with Gottfried Silbermann, and was artistically close to him; his instruments, however, possess an individuality of timbre. He favoured narrower pipe-scaling (thereby securing a new type of sound) and tended, like J.C.G. Donati, to tune in equal temperament. A characteristic of his specifications is the inclusion of a 1′ Flageolet on the manual. He was a famed craftsman, whom the Duke of Altenburg wished to appoint court organ builder. The quality of his work shows in solid construction, the use of choice materials, lightness of touch, ease of maintenance, keen voicing, and fresh, silvery tone with tasteful nuances, well balanced between manuals. His organs in Stangengrün (1766–9) and Wechselburg (St Otto, 1774–81; two manuals and pedal, 26 speaking stops, manual and pedal couplers) survive; only the impressive case remains of the organ built in Mülsen St Niclas (1796–1800).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C.F. Kretschmar: Lebenslauf weiland Herrn Johann Jacob Schramms (MS, 1808, Pfarrarchiv Mülsen St Niclas)
W. Hüttel: Musikgeschichte von Glauchau und Umgebung (Glauchau, 1995)

WALTER HÜTTEL

Schramm, Melchior (b Münsterberg, Silesia [now Ziębice, Poland], *c*1553; d Offenburg, Baden, 6 Sept 1619). German composer and organist. He is first heard of in 1565 as a chorister in the Hofkapelle of Archduke Ferdinand of the Tyrol. He left in 1569 with a three-year scholarship and became a student of the Innsbruck court organist, Servatius Rorif. In 1571 and 1572 he was organist of a convent at Halle. In 1574 he became Kapellmeister and organist of the court at Sigmaringen; from 1594 he was organist only. From 1605 until his death he was civic organist of Offenburg, at the Heilig Kreuz Kirche. Inventories of the period show that his works were widely known, and the appearance of individual pieces in anthologies is a measure of their popularity. As a composer of German madrigals he ranks with Jacob Meiland as one of the most important forerunners of Hans Leo Hassler.

WORKS

Sacrae cantiones, 5, 6vv (Nuremberg, 1576)
Neue auserlesene teutsche Gesäng, 4vv (Frankfurt, 1579)
Cantiones selectae, 5, 6, 8vv (Frankfurt, 1606)
Cantiones selectae pars II (Frankfurt, 1612)
2 masses, 6vv, lost (mentioned in the inventory of Count Eitelfriedrich IV; see Schmid, 558)
Other works, A-Wn, D-Rp

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; SennMT
W. Senn: Aus dem Kulturleben einer süddeutschen Kleinstadt: Musik, Schule und Theater der Stadt Hall in Tirol in der Zeit vom 15. bis zum 19. Jahrhundert (Innsbruck, 1938), 175, 321, 332, 449
E.F. Schmid: Musik an den schwäbischen Zollernhöfen der Renaissance (Kassel, 1962), 30–34, 41–2, 52–4, 655–68

THEODOR WOHNHAAS

Schrammel, Johann (b Neulerchenfeld, nr Vienna, 22 May 1850; d Vienna, 17 June 1893). Austrian violinist and composer. He studied the violin with Ernst Melzer (first violin at the Carltheater in Vienna) and then with Heissler and Hellmesberger at the Vienna Conservatory (1862–6). He played in the Harmonie and Josephstadt theatre orchestras and, after military service (1866–70), in the salon orchestra of K. Margold. His brother Joseph Schrammel (b Ottakring, nr Vienna, 3 March 1852; d Vienna, 24 Nov 1895), a violinist and composer, was also a pupil of Hellmesberger (1865–7) and became the leader and manager of the Schrammel Trio (later a quartet), founded in 1878 with his brother and the bass guitarist Anton Strohmayer to play at inns and private gatherings. Both brothers composed songs and dances for the ensemble, Joseph's being less successful than those of Johann, whose Wien bleibt Wien (1887) remains one of the most popular Austrian marches.

After the occasional addition from 1879 of a G clarinet played by Georg Dänzer the ensemble was formalized as a quartet (1886) and gained wide popularity in Vienna, not least with musicians such as Brahms, Johann Strauss and Hans Richter. Guest appearances in Berlin (1888) and elsewhere in Germany (1889) were followed by a visit to the Chicago World's Fair (1893), where the Schrammel brothers were replaced because of illness. Dänzer died on the return journey and the G clarinet was replaced by an accordion; in this form 'Schrammel quartets' have survived and flourished. In 1964 the Klassische Wiener Schrammelquartett was formed by soloists from the Vienna SO, using the original instrumental combination and arrangements.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Mailler: Schrammel-Quartett (Vienna, 1943)
R.A. Moiss: Die Schrammel-Dynastie (St Pölten, 1943)
K. Dieman: Schrammelmusik: das erste grosse Buch über die Brüder Johann und Josef Schrammel, ihr legendäres Quartett und ihre Musik (Graz, 1981)
G. Stradner: 'Die Instrumente der Wiener Schrammeln', Studia organologica: Festschrift für John Henry van der Meer, ed. F. Hellwig (Tutzing, 1987), 445–52
M. Egger: 'Schrammeln' in ihrer Zeit (Vienna, 1989)
A. Böck: Das Werk der Brüder Schrammel: Einführung und Verzeichnis mit Illustrationen. I/1: Die Märsche (Tutzing, 1993)

ANDREW LAMB

Schrammel quartet. See SCHRAMMEL, JOHANN.

Schratt, Hans Rauch von. See RAUCH VON SCHRAAT.

Schreiarien (pl.). See SCHREYERPFEIFE.

Schreiber, Johann Evangelist [Johannes Evangelista] (b Arth, bap. 4 April 1716; d St Urban, 18 April 1800). Swiss composer. After studying rhetoric and logic in Lucerne (1733–5), he entered the Cistercian monastery of St Urban in 1737, took his vows in 1738 and was ordained priest in 1741; he was Kapellmeister there in 1750–53 and Kantor in 1753–5. Between 1748 and 1755 he composed music for three stage productions. He then went to other Cistercian monasteries: until about 1770 he served at Lützel in the Jura, initially as an instructor, and he was briefly in charge of the parish of Oberlarg (1758–60), where his German sacred songs were sung before their publication; he also worked at Stürtzelbronn in Lorraine, as organist (1762), at Salem and Kaisheim (1772) and in Tennenbach (1773–5). He died in St Urban after years of mental illness.

With F.J.L. Meyer von Schauensee, Schreiber was the only 18th-century Swiss composer of sacred music whose works found their way into print. His arias, masses and offertories are in the south German tradition that later reached its height with Haydn and Mozart and employ clear, straightforward harmonies, agreeable, pleasing melodies, concise forms and occasional parlando. Schreiber's profession of adherence to the Italian style probably referred to his extensive cantabile arias, which offer scope to virtuoso singers. He uses alternating tutti and solos in the manner of a concerto grosso; polyphonic writing is chiefly confined to the impressive choral fugatos. The straightforward German sacred songs of 1761 already display the spirit of the Enlightenment. In old age Schreiber concentrated on choral theory and practice; his treatise Fundamenta pro cantu plano seu chorali cisterciens survives in manuscript (CH-E, Lz).

WORKS

Sacred: Fasciculus ariarum 24 gloriosae virgini Mariae (12 duets, 12 arias), vv, 2 vn, va, bc, op.1 (Fribourg, 1747); Missale cisterciense musicum (6 masses, 2 requiem settings), solo vv, 4vv, orch, bc, op.2 (Fribourg, 1749); Adoratio Dei per 15 offertoria solennia, 4vv, orch, bc, op.3 (St Gall, 1754); Neue und annehmliche

Arietten (32 sacred arias and duets), vv, org (Fribourg, 1761); 15 Mag, 4 Regina coeli, 6 Salve regina, vv, str, org, CH-SGs (inc.)
Stage: Pseudo-propheta (comoedia), Lucerne, 1748, lib Lz; Sigeric (Trauer-Spiel), Zug, 1751, lib Zug, Stadt- und Kantonsbibliothek; melodrama [untitled], Neu St Johann, 25 Sept 1755, lib SGs

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ
W. Jerger: 'Die Musikpflege in der ehemaligen Zisterzienserabtei St. Urban', Mf, vii (1954), 386–96, esp. 390
D. Ruckstuhl: 'P. Johann Evangelist Schreiber (1716–1800): ein Schweizer Klostermusiker im Zeitalter der Aufklärung', Der Geschichtsfreund, cxlv (1992), 115–71 [incl. detailed list of works]

DIETER RUCKSTUHL

Schreiber, Ottmar (b St Goarshausen am Rhein, 16 Feb 1906; d Bad Soden am Taunus, 7 Oct 1984). German musicologist. He studied organ with Heinrich Boell at the Cologne Staatliche Hochschule für Musik (1926–9), and after working as an organist, he moved to Munich, where he studied composition and music theory with Gustav Geierhaas at the academy (1929–31). He then studied musicology at Berlin, where his lecturers included Schering, Erich Schumann, Sachs and Hornbostel. He took the doctorate at Berlin in 1938 with a dissertation on the German orchestra between 1780 and 1850. From 1931 until his military service in 1941 he taught at various musical institutions in Berlin. In 1947 he was entrusted by Reger's widow Elsa with running and expanding the Max-Reger-Institut, which she had set up in Bonn. The institute moved from Bonn to Karlsruhe in 1996 and a catalogue of its Reger autographs was published in Schreiber's Festschrift (Festschrift für Ottmar Schreiber, ed. G. Massenkeil and S. Popp, Wiesbaden, 1978) on the occasion of Schreiber's 50th birthday. As director of the institute (1948–81) he edited its Mitteilungen (1954–74) and a number of publications, including sketches, letters and the hitherto unpublished original manuscript of the Violin Sonata op.139 and that of the Responsories, originally published in 1914 in Philadelphia. He played a crucial part in Breitkopf & Härtel's complete edition of Reger's works (1950–84). Schreiber was also a lecturer at the Musikhochschule in Frankfurt (1960–71). He was awarded the Bundesverdienstkreuz in 1984 for his contributions to Reger scholarship.

WRITINGS

Orchester und Orchesterpraxis in Deutschland zwischen 1780 und 1850 (diss., Humboldt U., Berlin, 1938; Berlin, 1938/R)
'Elsa Reger zum Gedächtnis', Mitteilungsblatt der Joseph-Haas-Gesellschaft, no.7 (1952), 12–13
ed.: Max Reger: Briefe zwischen der Arbeit (Bonn, 1956, 1973)
'Max Regers musikalischer Nachlass', Musikwissenschaftlicher Kongress: Vienna 1956, 563–70
'Unbekannte geistliche Reger-Chöre', Mitteilungen des Max-Reger-Instituts, no.5 (1957), 8–26
'Zum Werdegang von Regers Mozart-Variationen', Mitteilungen des Max-Reger-Instituts, no.6 (1957), 2–17
'"Freier Jenaischer Stil": Regers Violinsonate op.139 und ihre erste Form', Mitteilungen des Max-Reger-Instituts, no.13 (1962), 30–55
ed., with G. Sievers: Max Reger zum 50. Todestag ... eine Gedenkschrift (Bonn, 1966)
'Max Regers Responsorien', Musik und Kirche, xl (1970), 341–2
ed.: Sonderheft 1973 zu Max Regers Werk (Wiesbaden, 1973)
ed., with I. Schreiber: Max Reger in seinen Konzerten, i–iii (Bonn, 1981)

EDITIONS

Max Reger: Sämtliche Werke, iv–vi: Orchesterwerke (Wiesbaden, 1958–65); xxi: Werke für Klavier und Streicher III, Werke für Klavier und Bläser (Wiesbaden, 1968); xxxv: Sologesänge mit Orchester (Wiesbaden, 1970)

HELMUT WIRTH/SUSANNE SHIGIHARA

Schreider, Christopher. See SHRIDER, CHRISTOPHER.

Schreier, Peter (b Meissen, 29 July 1935). German tenor and conductor. After training in the Dresden Kreuzchor and private study, he joined the Dresden Staatsoper school in 1959, making his début as the First Prisoner in Fidelio in 1961. His operatic career soon took him to La Scala and the Metropolitan (Tamino, 1967) in addition to the leading houses in Germany and Austria. After the untimely death of Wunderlich in 1966, Schreier was acclaimed as the leading Mozart tenor of the day, his singing notable for its keen line and diction, allied to a suitably ardent manner. His Belmonte, Idamantes, Ferrando and Titus, all stylish, characterful interpretations, are preserved on recordings under Böhm, his Tamino on Colin Davis's Zauberflöte. Among his other notable roles were Nicolai's and Verdi's Fenton, Rossini's Almaviva, Massenet's Des Grieux, Strauss's Leukippos (Daphne) and Dancing-Master (Ariadne auf Naxos), both of which he recorded, and, in Wagner, Loge (an interpretation confirming the character as the Ring's sole intellectual), Mime and David: all three, captured on disc, evince his ability to characterize through an acute treatment of tone and text.

At the same time Schreier developed a distinguished career in oratorio and lieder. He was among the most affecting Evangelists of his day in the Bach Passions, a superbly accomplished soloist in the cantatas and an exemplary soloist in the choral works of Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven and Mendelssohn. He was the most significant tenor lieder interpreter of his age, probably of any age, his readings noted for his distinctive, slightly reedy tone, fine legato and expressive phrasing drawn from subtle enunciation of the text; yet he never lost a certain simplicity of approach. His finest recordings include Mozart and Beethoven songs, the three cycles of Schubert (shattering versions of Winterreise with both Richter and András Schiff among them), Schumann's Dichterliebe and Eichendorff Liederkreis, and Wolf's Italienisches Liederbuch. Since the 1980s Schreier has appeared frequently as a conductor, especially in Bach, and in the dual capacity of soloist and conductor has recorded the St Matthew Passion, B minor Mass and several cantatas. He announced his retirement from singing in 1999, but has continued to appear occasionally as the Evangelist in his own performances of the Bach Passions.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Schmiedel: Peter Schreier: für Sie porträtiert (Leipzig, 1976)
A. Blyth, ed.: Song on Record 1 (London, 1986)

ALAN BLYTH

Schreierpfeife. See SCHREYERPFEIFE.

Schreker, Franz (August Julius) (b Monaco, 23 March 1878; d Berlin, 21 March 1934). Austrian composer, teacher, conductor and administrator. He is a central figure in that remarkable flowering of opera in Austria that included the works of Zemlinsky, Berg and Korngold. Integrating his aesthetic plurality (a mixture of Romanticism, naturalism, symbolism, Impressionism, Expressionism and Neue Sachlichkeit), timbral experimentation, strategies of extended tonality and conception of total music theatre into the narrative of 20th-century music has contributed to a more differentiated understanding of central European modernism.

1. LIFE. Schreker was the oldest of four surviving children born to Ignaz Schrecker, a court photographer of Jewish birth, and Eleonore von Clossmann, a member of the Catholic aristocracy of eastern Styria. Ignaz Schrecker's restless travels took him and his family from Vienna to Monaco, Spa, Brussels, Paris, Trieste and Pola before he settled at last in Linz in 1882. After his death in 1888 the family moved to Vienna, where in 1892, with the help of a scholarship, Schreker entered the Conservatory. There he graduated as a violinist (under Ernst Bachrich and Arnold Rosé) in 1897 and as a composer (under Robert Fuchs) in 1900. His first public performance took place in London in July 1896, when the Budapest Opera orchestra performed his Love Song for strings and harp, a work now lost. In 1900 the Andante from a symphony in A minor and a setting of Psalm cxvi (his graduation exercise) were performed by the conservatory orchestra, and during the following two seasons he achieved notable performances with the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde (Psalm cxvi under Loewe), the Konzertverein (Intermesso under Loewe), the Vienna PO (Ekkehard under Hellmesberger) and the Singakademie (Schwanensang under his own direction), as well as the concert première with piano of his first opera, Flammen, in the Bösendorfer-Saal on 24 April 1902. Several of his early works and most of his songs were published (by this time he had dropped the second 'c' in his surname), and his Intermezzo won first prize in a competition sponsored by the Neue musikalische Presse. Probably in the midst of this flurry of early success, though possibly as late as 1904, he began Der ferne Klang, for which, as with all his subsequent operas, he wrote his own libretto.

He had begun conducting in 1895, when he had founded the Verein der Musikfreunde Döbling, whose orchestra and chorus he had led until 1899. After graduating from the conservatory he had applied unsuccessfully for a number of theatre positions until a year spent as a rehearsal coach and assistant conductor at the Vienna Volksoper (March 1907 to March 1908) cured him of any lingering illusions about a career in the opera house. In 1907 he formed the Philharmonic Chorus, which became a leading forum for new music in Vienna. He conducted the group until 1920, and among its many premières were Zemlinsky's Psalm xxiii and Schoenberg's Friede auf Erden and Gurrelieder.

Franz Schreker: drawing by Emil Orlik

The success of his pantomime Der Geburtstag der Infantin, commissioned by Grete Wiesenthal for the opening of the 1908 Kunstschau, called attention to his development as a composer. In 1909 he signed a general contract with Universal Edition and resumed work on Der ferne Klang, whose Act 3 interlude, 'Nachtstück', was first performed on 25 November that year by Oskar Nedbal and the Vienna Tonkünstlerorchester. The opera was completed at the end of 1910 and given its première on 18 August 1912 in Frankfurt under Ludwig Rottenberg, an event that overnight established Schreker's fame. This auspicious première coincided with his appointment as a professor of counterpoint, harmony and composition at the Music Academy in Vienna. His next opera, Das Spielwerk und die Prinzessin, which was given simultaneous premières in Frankfurt and Vienna on 15 March 1913, was less well received, and the outbreak of World War I the following year interrupted the continuing success of Der ferne Klang, which had been performed in Leipzig, Hamburg and Munich, and accepted for production in Prague and Paris.

With the première of Die Gezeichneten (Frankfurt, 25 April 1918) Schreker moved to the front ranks of contemporary opera composers. A monograph on his work by the influential Frankfurt critic Paul Bekker unleashed a firestorm of controversy when Bekker compared his talent with that of Wagner. The première of Der Schatzgräber (Frankfurt, 21 January 1920) was the highpoint of his career, and in March that year he was appointed director of the Hochschule für Musik in Berlin, where he took up his duties the following autumn. Together with his vice-director Schünemann, he transformed a distinguished but tradition-bound institution into the pre-eminent conservatory of its day, with a renowned faculty that included Schnabel, Flesch, Feuermann, Edwin Fischer and Hindemith. As a teacher Schreker was remarkably undogmatic. His emphasis on technical fluency and creative individuality produced an exceptionally diverse school of students, among them Victor Babin, Max Brand, Paul Breisach, Jerzy Fitelberg, Walther Gmeindl, Berthold Goldschmidt, Wilhelm Grosz, Alois Hába, Paul Höffer, Horenstein, Krenek, Alois Melichar, Petyrek, Paul A. Pisk, Karol Rathaus, Artur Rodzinski, Joseph Rosenstock, Hans Schmidt-Isserstedt, Ignace Strasfogel, Herbert Windt and Grete von Zieritz.

Schreker's fame and influence were at their peak during the politically and economically unstable early years of the Weimar Republic. He toured widely to supervise and conduct productions of his operas, often with his wife, the soprano Maria Schreker, whom he had married in 1909. During the later 1920s he developed expertise in both recording and broadcasting technologies and followed with interest developments in the Hochschule's electronic music laboratory, the Rundfunkversuchstelle. His Kleine Suite was the first work commissioned specifically for German radio, and his Vier kleine Stücke for film were part of the same project as Schoenberg's op.34. In 1932 he supervised the development of the first concert films, featuring performances conducted by Blech, Busch, Kleiber, von Schillings, Stiedry and Walter.

The decline of Schreker's artistic fortunes began with the lukewarm reception of his sixth opera, Irrelohe (Cologne, 1924), and the failure of Der singende Teufel (Berlin, 1928). The process was accelerated by the economic turmoil of the late 1920s, which threw German opera houses into crisis. Right-wing demonstrations marred the première of Der Schmied von Gent (Berlin, 1932), and National Socialist pressure forced the cancellation of the scheduled Freiburg première of Christophorus. In June 1932 Schreker was forced to resign his position at the Hochschule. He took up a masterclass at the Prussian Academy of the Arts, but was placed on leave in May 1933 and officially dismissed in September that year. In December 1933 he suffered a stroke, to which he succumbed two days before his 56th birthday.

2. WORKS. By nature Schreker was drawn to dramatic music, and even as a child he was fascinated by the associative properties of harmony and timbre. His earliest works display a propensity for modal ambiguities and non-chordal tones, but this predisposition for colouristic effect was balanced by the strict conservatory education that imbued him with the aesthetic and technical precepts of the Viennese classical tradition. Most of his student works, such as the Violin Sonata (1898) and Psalm cxvi (1900), are Brahmsian in their formal balance, motivic interrelationships, bass-led harmonies, and rhythmic and contrapuntal refinements. His songs, most of which were written before 1902, and his first opera, Flammen, add to this mixture an increasing chromaticism and such devices of harmonic dislocation as chordal elision. Schreker's early works won praise for their craftmanship but were thought to lack originality, a criticism with which the composer himself concurred. His struggles to find his own style preoccupied him for most of the first decade after his graduation and bore their first fruit in the pantomime Der Geburtstag der Infantin, one of a series of dance-related instrumental works that reveal a freer harmonic language of rapidly shifting tonal centres and polytonal chordal constructions, long-breathed melodies of irregular phrase lengths, and a new assurance in timbral combinations. Significant, too, is the use of neo-classical forms and a contrapuntal texture of twisting, angular lines. Still more harmonically daring are the Fünf Gesänge (1909, orchestrated 1922), which were written after he had become personally acquainted with Schoenberg.

The principal document of Schreker's self-discovery is Der ferne Klang, whose social and ethical concerns, including a critique of art-for-art's-sake idealism and a frank exploration of the enigmas of sexuality and eroticism, would remain central to his output for the stage. As in most of his subsequent operas, the plot springs from and is encapsulated by a musical-dramatic symbol. His bold heterogeneity of dramatic devices and musical means, in addition to the sheer fecundity of his timbral imagination, make Der ferne Klang one of the seminal works of 20th-century opera. The collage of onstage and offstage vocal and instrumental ensembles, polyrhythmic juxtapositions, layering of styles and improvised sounds in the second act bears comparison with contemporaneous experiments by Ives and with the emerging visual vocabulary of the cinema. The mix is also a prime example of Schreker's lifelong preoccupation with 'Raumwirkung', the interaction of timbral effect and acoustic space. Schoenberg cited the opera's nonfunctional chord progressions in his Harmonielehre, and in its formal structure, orchestration, declamation and dramatic characterization Der ferne Klang had a profound influence on Berg, who prepared the vocal score in 1911. The poor reception of Schreker's next opera, Das Spielwerk und die Prinzessin, had more to do with the obscure symbolism of its libretto than with any musical weakness. The opera's succession of contrasting atmospheric scenes, meticulously differentiated lighting directions and heightened sensitivity to timbral subtleties suggest a proximity to the stage works of Dukas, Delius and Debussy. In turn, the work influenced Szymanowski, who heard the Vienna première. The one-act revision, Das Spielwerk (Munich, 1920), clarified and tightened the libretto and resulted in significant changes in the closing scene.

Schreker's mature style is most closely associated with a trio of works completed during World War I: Die Gezeichneten, the Kammersymphonie and Der Schatzgräber. All three employ an orchestra whose colours are defracted and reconstituted through divided strings, delicate use of percussion and subtle doublings that tend to obscure the identity of individual instruments. In his harmonic language Schreker continued to juxtapose tonal with chromatic and polytonal passages, often heightening his effects by omitting the roots of chords in the bass. At the same time the vocal lines in these works have greater focus and, as Schreker's sketches suggest, serve as the central inspiration for his fundamentally linear style, a quality that is brought out in his own recordings of his music, as well as in radio performances from the 1950s and 1960s by a generation of conductors such as Heger, Rosbaud, Scherchen and Zillig who were still familiar with the style. In this middle period Schreker's works have an undeniable element of Wagnerian harmony and dramaturgy. This is particularly true of Der Schatzgräber, his most popular opera, in which he achieved a balance of harmonic languages resembling that achieved by Strauss in Der Rosenkavalier.

His next opera, Irrelohe, is in many ways a turning point. The libretto is dramatically taut, and in keeping with the menacing subject matter the orchestra is harder edged and more opaque. The score's writhing linear counterpoint and chordal juxtapositions, which are close to late Mahler and the Strauss of Elektra, produce a high level of dissonance, without, however, undermining overall tonal structure. Particularly striking is a second-act love duet in the form of a canon. In the years of crisis following Irrelohe Schreker's style was transformed by a number of influences, including the aesthetic climate of Neue Sachlichkeit and his interest in technology. The orchestral Kleine Suite and Vier kleine Stücke employ the sparse textures and contrapuntal style – an angular linearity that had been present in his music since Der Geburtstag der Infantin – so ideally suited to the limitations of the contemporary microphone. Among his other non-operatic works of the 1920s, his settings of Whitman texts (Zwei lyrische Gesänge, 1923, orchestrated as Vom ewigen Leben in 1927) must be counted his supreme masterpiece, characterized by an assured synthesis of pliant vocal lyricism, supple and sinewy accompaniment, and a harmonic language suspended between functional and non-functional tonality.

These same elements are present in the later operas. Christophorus, oder die Vision einer Oper is a Zeitoper that parodies contemporary styles, including jazz, the popular chanson, Neue Sachlichkeit and the radical avant garde. It is at the same time a deeply felt document of Schreker's own struggles with his times. Dedicated to Schoenberg, the score contains Schreker's most advanced harmonic language alongside passages of diatonic and modal harmony, broad cantilenas alongside spoken dialogue and Sprechgesang. The complexity of the work's dramaturgy, in which vision and reality intertwine, invites comparison with the most advanced constructions of contemporary film and theatre. The dramaturgy of Der singende Teufel, by contrast, is far more traditional, but its brooding, medieval setting inspired an austerely archaic musical language that ranges from simple modal counterpoint and sharp timbral detail to massed, clustered effects for the full orchestra.

Superficially Der Schmied von Gent, based on a folktale by Charles de Coster, belongs to that genre of comic Zauberoper made popular by Weinberger's Schwanda der Dudelsackpfeifer (1927), but the underlying themes of individual destiny and social responsibility cause it to resonate profoundly with other works of the period, such as Hindemith's Mathis der Maler, Schoenberg's Moses und Aron and Krenek's Karl V. It is a vibrant piece, whose occasionally raw tone and grim satire helped provoke the politically inspired demonstrations at its première. Musically it combines the lush harmonic and timbral palette of Schreker's earlier operas with folk material and the more dissonant, neo-baroque contrapuntal forms of the later works.

The rise of National Socialism brought an end to performances of Schreker's works and began the systematic corruption of secondary sources that haunts Schreker reception to this day. Performances in the postwar period were sporadic, and a genuine revival of interest in the composer did not begin until the 1970s.

WORKS

STAGE

Flammen (op, 1, D. Leen), op.10, 1901–2, concert perf., Vienna, Bösendorfer-Saal, 24 April 1902
Der ferne Klang (op, 3, Schreker), *c*1903–1910, Frankfurt, 18 Aug 1912
Der Geburtstag der Infantin (pantomime, Schreker, after O. Wilde), chbr orch, 1908, Vienna, 27 June 1908; rev. as Spanisches Fest, 1926, Berlin Staatsoper, 22 Jan 1927
Der Wind (Tanzallegorie, G. Wiesenthal), cl, hn, pf, vn, vc, 1908, Vienna, 2 March 1910
Rokoko (ballet, Schreker: Ein Tanzspiel), 1908
Das Spielwerk und die Prinzessin (op, prol, 2, Schreker), 1908–12, Frankfurt and Vienna, Hofoper, 15 March 1913; rev. in 1 act as Das Spielwerk (Mysterium, 1, Schreker), 1915, Munich, National, 30 Oct 1920
Die Gezeichneten (op, 3, Schreker), 1913–15, Frankfurt, 25 April 1918
Der Schatzgräber (op, prol, 4, epilogue, Schreker), 1915–18, Frankfurt, 21 Jan 1920
Irrelohe (op, 3, Schreker), 1919–22, Cologne, 27 March 1924
Der singende Teufel (op, 4, Schreker), 1924, 1927–8, Berlin, Staatsoper, 10 Dec 1928
Christophorus, oder Die Vision einer Oper (op, prol, 2, epilogue, Schreker), 1925–9, Freiburg, 1 Oct 1978
Der Schmied von Gent (Grosse Zauberoper, 3, Schreker, after C. de Coster: Smetse Smee, from the Flemish folktale), 1929–32, Berlin, Städtische Oper, 29 Oct 1932

ORCHESTRAL

Love Song, str, hp, *c*1896, lost; Scherzo, 1899; Sym., a, op.1, 1899; Scherzo, str, *c*1900; Intermezzo, op.8, str, 1900, incl. in Romantische Suite; Ekkehard, sym. ov., after V. von Scheffel, op.12, orch, org, 1902–3; Romantische Suite, op.14, 1903; Phantastische Ouvertüre, op.15, 1904; Festwalzer und Walzerintermezzo, *c*1908; Valse lente, *c*1908; Vorspiel zu einem Drama, 1913, abridged as prelude to Die Gezeichneten; Kammersymphonie, 23 insts, 1916; Der Geburtstag der Infantin, suite, 1923; Kleine Suite, chbr orch, 1928; 4 kleine Stücke, 1929–30; Das Weib des Intaphernes (E. Stucken), spkr, orch, 1932–3; Vorspiel zu einer grossen Oper, 1933 [for uncomposed Memnon]

CHORAL

Der Holdestein (R. Baumbach), S, B, SATB, orch, before 1898; Versunken (Baumbach), male vv, pf, *c*1898; Schlehenblüte (Baumbach), male vv, *c*1898; Auf dem Gottesacker, SATB, *c*1898; Meereswogen (E. Scherenberg), male vv, *c*1898, inc.; König Tejas Begräbnis (F. Dahn), male vv, orch, 1899; Ps cxvi, op.6, female vv, orch, org, 1900; Schwanensang, op.11 (D. Leen), SATB, orch, 1902; Gesang der Armen im Winter (F. von Saar), SATB, 1902; Vergangenheit (N. Lenau), SATB, 1906

SONGS

for 1 voice, piano unless otherwise stated

Die Rosen und der Flieder (O. Gruppe), 1894; Des Meeres und der Liebe Wellen (R. Weitbrecht), 1894; Allegro-Lied der Fiorina, 1896; Waldeinsamkeit (J.P. Jacobsen), 1897; Überwunden (anon.), 1897
Fünf Lieder (M. Holm), before 1898: O Glocken, böse Glocken [op.5/1], Kennt Ihr den Sturm, Heute Nacht, als ich so bange, Ich hab' in Sorgen, Durch die Fenster zitternd sacht
Zwei Lieder auf dem Tod eines Kindes (M. Holm), op.5, before 1898: O Glocken, böse Glocken, Dass er ganz ein Engel werde
Drei Lieder (V. Zusner), 1899: Ein Rosenblatt, Noch dasselbe Keimen, Vernichtet ist mein Lebensglück
Das hungernde Kind (Des Knaben Wunderhorn), before 1900
Auf die Nacht (P. Heyse), before 1900, inc.
Fünf Gedichte (Heyse), op.3, before 1900: In alten Tagen, Im Lenz, Das Glück, Es kommen Blätter, Umsonst
Fünf Lieder, op.4, before 1900: Frühling (K. v. Lemayer), Unendliche Liebe (L. Tolstoy), Wohl fühl ich wie das Leben rinnt (T. Storm), Die Liebe als Recensentin (J. Sturm), Lenzzauber (Scherenberg)
Acht Lieder, [op.7], 1898–1900: Wiegenliedchen (Sturm), Zu späte Reue (Sturm), Traum (Leen), Spuk (Leen), Rosentod (Leen), Ach, noch so jung (Scherenberg), Rosengruss (Scherenberg), Lied des Harfenmädchens (Storm)
Zwei Lieder, op.2, after 1901: Sommerfäden (Leen), Stimmen des Tages (F. von Saar)
Ave Maria, 1v, org/hmn/pf, 1902; Ave Maria, 1v, org/pf, 1909
Entführung (S. George), 1909
Fünf Gesänge, A, pf, 1909: Ich frag' nach dir jedwede Morgensonne (The Thousand and One Nights), Dies aber kann mein Sehnen nimmer fassen (E. Ronsperger), Die Dunkelheit sinkt schwer wie Blei (Ronsperger), Sie sind so schön, die milden sonnenreichen (Ronsperger), Einst gibt ein Tag mir alles Glück zu eigen (Ronsperger); version for A, orch, 1922
Das feurige Männlein (A. Petzold), 1915
Und wie mag die Liebe (R.M. Rilke), 1919
Zwei lyrische Gesänge (W. Whitman), S, pf, 1923: Wurzeln und Halme sind dies nur, Ein Kind sagte: 'Was ist das Gras?'; version for S, orch, Vom ewigen Leben, 1927

OTHER

Chbr: Sonata, vn, pf, 1898
Pf: Melodie, *c*1895; Apassionata, 1896; Adagio, F, before 1900; 2 Walzerimpromptus, *c*1901
Orch arrs.: Wolf: Heimweh, Verschwiegene Liebe, 1916; Liszt: Hungarian Rhapsody no.2, 1933
MSS in A-Wn, US-NH, D-Bsb

Principal publishers: Alkor, Heinrichshofen, Universal

BIBLIOGRAPHY

KdG (S. Rode-Breymann)
P. Bekker: Franz Schreker: Studie zur Kritik der modernen Oper (Berlin, 1919, 2/1983)
Musikblätter des Anbruch, ii/1–2 (1920) [Schreker issue]
R.S. Hoffmann: Franz Schreker (Leipzig, 1921)
J. Kapp: Franz Schreker: der Mann und sein Werk (Munich, 1921)
P. Bekker: Klang und Eros (Stuttgart and Berlin, 1922)
Musikblätter des Anbruch, vi/2 (1924) [Schreker issue]
'Franz Schreker zum 50. Geburtstag', Musikblätter des Anbruch, x (1928), 81–118
G. Neuwirth: Franz Schreker (Vienna, 1959)

T.W. Adorno: 'Schreker', Quasi una fantasia: musikalische Schriften II (Frankfurt, 1963), 181–200; repr. in T.W. Adorno: Gesammelte Schriften, vi (Frankfurt, 1984), 272–5; Eng. trans., 1992
W. Zillig: 'Schreker's Der ferne Klang', MT, cv (1964), 652–4
H. Schreker-Bures: El caso Schreker (Buenos Aires, 1968); Ger. trans., rev., with contributions by H.H. Stuckenschmidt and W. Oehlmann, as Franz Schreker (Vienna, 1970)
H. Schreker-Bures: Hören, denken, fühlen: eine kleine Studie über Schrekers Operntexte (Buenos Aires, 1970/R)
P. Granzow: Franz Schrekers Kompositionsstil in seiner Oper Die Gezeichneten (diss., U. of Innsbruck, 1972)
G. Neuwirth: Die Harmonik in der Oper 'Der ferne Klang' von Franz Schreker (Regensburg, 1972)
N. Chadwick: 'Franz Schreker's Orchestral Style and its Influence on Alban Berg', MR, xxxv (1974), 29–46
S. Döhring: 'Franz Schreker und die grosse musiktheatralische Szene', Mf, xxvii (1974), 175–86
F.C. Heller, ed.: Arnold Schönberg – Franz Schreker: Briefwechsel (Tutzing, 1974)
F.C. Heller, ed.: Der Franz-Schreker-Fonds in der Musiksammlung der Österreichischen Nationalbibliothek: Katalog (Vienna, 1975)
O. Kolleritsch: Franz Schreker. Am Beginn der Neuen Musik (Graz, 1978)
R. Blackburn: 'Franz Schreker, 1878–1934', MT, cxix (1978), 224–8
C. Hailey: 'Franz Schreker in seinen Schriften', ÖMz, xxxiii (1978), 119–27
R.A. Zondergeld: 'Traum und Klang: zum Phantastischen in den Operndichtungen Franz Schrekers', Phaïcon 3: Almanach der phantastischen Literatur (Frankfurt, 1978), 131–43
Franz Schreker: Berlin 1978
E. van den Hoogen: Die Orchesterwerke Franz Schrekers in ihrer Zeit (Regensburg, 1981)
H. Schreker-Bures: Spaziergang durch ein Leben (Buenos Aires, 1981)
P. Franklin: 'Style, Structure and Taste: Three Aspects of the Problem of Franz Schreker', PRMA, cix (1982–3), 134–46
R. Ermen, ed.: Franz Schreker (1878–1934) zum 50. Todestag (Aachen, 1984)
L. Wickes: 'A Jugendstil Consideration of the Opening and Closing Sections of the Vorspiel to Schreker's Opera Die Gezeichneten', Art Nouveau and Jugendstil and the Music of the Early 20th Century: Adelaide 1979 [MMA, xiii (1984)], 203–22
P. Franklin: 'Schreker's Decline', The Idea of Music: Schoenberg and Others (London, 1985), 139–60
C. Theobald: Das Frühwerk Franz Schrekers bis zum 'Fernen Klang' (diss., Free U. of Berlin, 1985)
U. Rügner: 'Traum als tönendes Bild: ein Versuch über Franz Schreker',Traum, Texte und Bilder, ed. K. Oesterle (Tübingen, 1986), 125–43
P.C. Snook: Franz Schreker and Alban Berg (diss., RNCM, 1987)
M. Brzoska: Franz Schrekers Oper 'Der Schatzgräber' (Stuttgart, 1988)
K.H. Cochran: Franz Schreker's 'Der ferne Klang' and its Relationship to Alban Berg's 'Wozzeck' (diss., U. of North Carolina, 1988)
C. Thiede: Untersuchungen zu Franz Schrekers Oper 'Das Spielwerk' in ihren beiden Fassungen (diss., U. of Cologne, 1988)
L. Wickes: Studies on Aspects of Schreker's Opera 'Die Gezeichneten' (diss., Technical U. of Berlin, 1990)
P. Franklin: 'Distant Sounds – Fallen Music: Der ferne Klang as "Woman's Opera"', COJ, iii (1991), 159–72
C. Hailey: Franz Schreker (1989–1934): a Cultural Biography (Cambridge, 1993) [incl. further bibliography]
M. Brzoska: 'Franz Schrekers Diskurs', Visionen und Aufbrüche: zur Krise der modernen Musik 1908–1933, ed. G. Metz (Kassel, 1994), 303–20
C. Hailey, ed.: Der Briefwechsel zwischen Paul Bekker und Franz Schreker (Aachen, 1994)
W. Krebs: 'Terzfolgen und Doppelterzklänge in den Gezeichneten von Franz Schreker: Versuch einer energetisch-psychoanalytischen Betrachtungsweise', Mf, xlvii (1994), 365–83
U. Kienzle: Das Traum hinter dem Traum: Franz Schrekers Oper 'Der ferne Klang' und die Wiener Moderne (Schliengen, 1998)

CHRISTOPHER HAILEY

Schreyber, Heinrich. See GRAMMATEUS, HENRICUS.

Schreyer, Gregor (b Kirchenpingarten, nr Bayreuth, *c*1720; d Andechs, nr Munich, 6 June 1768). German composer. In 1740 he entered the Benedictine house at Andechs, one of the most musical German monasteries at the time, where he had ample opportunity to study music, and eventually became choirmaster. He may have spent some time at the monastery of St Emmeram in Regensburg in the early 1750s, but was certainly at Andechs as choirmaster in 1756, the year of his first publication.

Unlike many composers of church music in the mid-18th century, Schreyer does not seem to have had the needs of the small and comparatively inexperienced parish choir in mind. The eight masses of his op.1, Jubilus musicus, for four voices, two violins, trumpets, drums and organ (Augsburg, 1756), apparently originally written for the 1000th anniversary celebrations at Andechs, are on a large scale; the Kyrie, Gloria and Credo are each treated as a succession of separate movements, often with difficult solo arias. Moreover, the six masses of Sacrificium matutinum for four voices, two violins and organ, op.2 (Augsburg, 1763), though described as 'breves', are with one exception on an almost equally large scale. His op.3, Sacrificium vespertinum, containing vesper psalms for four voices, two violins and organ, was published at Augsburg in 1766. Almost all Schreyer's arias contain much elaborate coloratura and are heavily ornamented; his violin parts are among the most complex to be found in contemporary published church music, making much use of multiple stopping and recurrent demisemiquaver figurations. For the most part, however, Schreyer's ability to devise elaborate vocal and instrumental figuration is not matched by his powers of musical invention, especially in contrapuntal choral movements; but he occasionally shows himself capable of expressive word-painting at appropriate points. (E. Kraus: Weltenburg und die Musik des Bayerischen Barock, Weltenburg, 1971)

ELIZABETH ROCHE

Schreyerpfeife [Schreierpfeife, Srayffaiff, Schreiarien (plural), Schryari (plural)] (Ger.: 'shouting pipe'). A loud wind-cap shawm (see WIND-CAP INSTRUMENTS) of the 16th and 17th centuries, with expanding conical bore, but without a markedly flared bell, and having seven finger-holes and a thumb-hole. Ten such instruments survive in Berlin (Musikinstrumenten-Museum; see illustration) and Prague (Národní Muzeum). The Berlin instruments came from St Wenzel, Naumburg, where they were listed in inventories dating from 1658, *c*1720 and 1728 as 'Schreiarien' (also 'Schrey-Arien', 'Schreyarien'); the Prague instruments came from the castle at Rožmberk (Rosenberg) in Bohemia, in whose inventories of 1599 and 1610 they appear as 'Srayffaiff'. These instruments represent four sizes pitched a 4th or 5th apart, each with a range of a 9th; the highest sounds f' as its lowest note. On the largest two sizes the lowest sound hole is fitted with a key, and all sizes have two vent-holes on opposite sides (left and right) of the bell. Two instruments of uncertain date and origin survive in the Musikinstrumenten-Museum, University of Leipzig; they are equivalent in size to the soprano and alto instruments of the other group and are similar except that they have no thumb-holes.

The earliest occurrence of the name, in 1523, shows that Schreyerpfeifen were made in Nuremberg, probably by Sigmund Schnitzer the elder; and Arsazius Schnitzer of Munich, who died in 1557, is also recorded as a maker.

Schreyerpfeifen: (a) and (b) tenor – (a) with wind cap missing; (c) and (d) alto; (e) soprano (Musikinstrumenten-Museum, Berlin)

A number of German town and court inventories list Schreyerpfeifen, usually in sets of three or four sizes. They went out of general use during the later 17th century though they are still listed in the Naumburg inventories in the 1720s, and Fuhrmann mentioned them, together with contemporary instruments, in 1706. 'Schryari' suggests an Italian form of the German Schreyerpfeifen, but the name is not documented outside Germany, though wind-cap shawms are (e.g. the French cléron pastoral, mentioned by Trichet). Considerable confusion has been caused by Praetorius's use of the plural forms 'Schryari' and 'Schreyerpfeifen' for a group of loud wind-cap instruments of quite different type (see SCHRYARI).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

PraetoriusSM, ii; PraetoriusTI
M. Fuhrmann: Musicalischer-Trichter (Frankfurt an der Spree, 1706)
D. Krickeberg: 'Die Alte Musikinstrumentensammlung der Naumburger St. Wenzelskirche im Spiegel ihrer Verzeichnisse', Jahrbuch des Staatlichen Instituts für Musikforschung Preussischer Kulturbesitz (1977), 7–30
B.R. Boydell: The Crumhorn and Other Renaissance Windcap Instruments (Buren, 1982)

BARRA R. BOYDELL

Schrider, Christopher. See SHRIDER, CHRISTOPHER.

Schritt (Ger.). See STEP.

Schröder. German family of musicians.

(1) Karl Schröder (i) (b Oberbosa, Thuringia, 17 March 1816; d Berlin, 21 April 1890). Violinist and viola player. He studied at the Eisleben training college with G. Siebeck and A.B. Marx, becoming first a town musician at Quedlinburg and then the music director at Neuhaldensleben. He played the viola until 1866 in the family quartet which included (2) Hermann Schröder, Franz and (3) Karl Schröder (ii).

(2) Hermann Schröder (b Quedlinburg, 28 July 1843; d Berlin, 30 or 31 Jan 1909). Violinist and teacher, son of (1) Karl Schröder (i). He studied music first with his father, then at Magdeburg with W. Sommer and A.G. Ritter. In 1873 he opened a music school in Berlin which he continued to direct after his appointment as violin and harmony teacher at the Institut für Kirchenmusik (1885), of which he later became assistant director. He wrote chamber music for didactic purposes and small works for orchestra; he also published several essays on the physics and aesthetics of sound and a Kunst des Violin-Spiels (Leipzig, 1887).

(3) Karl Schröder (ii) [Carl Schroeder] (b Quedlinburg, 18 Dec 1848; d Bremen, 22 Sept 1935). Cellist, composer and conductor, son of (1) Karl Schröder (i). He studied with his father, with Karl Drechsler in Dessau and later with Friedrich Kiel and was only 14 when he was appointed to the Sondershausen Hofkapelle. With the family quartet he toured Europe, from Paris to St Petersburg, acquiring a high reputation. In 1872 he was Kapellmeister of the Kroll Oper in Berlin; late that year, the quartet was disbanded on his appointment to the Brunswick Hofkapelle commencing in 1873. A year later he became solo cellist of the Leipzig Gewandhaus Orchestra and professor at the conservatory. He returned to Sondershausen in 1881, replacing Max Erdmannsdörffer as Hofkapellmeister and founding a music school; this he sold to A. Schultze in 1886 when he was appointed conductor of the Duitse Opera in Rotterdam. He held similar posts in Berlin (1887) and in Hamburg (1888), where he succeeded Joseph Sucher at the Neues Stadt Theater. His former music school having become a state conservatory, he returned to Sondershausen in 1890 as its director, remaining until 1909. In 1911 he took up his last post, as professor at the Stern Conservatory in Berlin, where he remained for more than a decade before retiring to Bremen. In addition to his compositions and educational works he produced careful editions of Classical cello pieces.

WORKS

Stage and inst: 2 ops, 3 syms., 6 vc concs., 2 str qts, Str Trio; numerous didactic works, incl. 2 sets of vc studies
Pedagogical: Führer durch den Violoncell-Unterricht (Leipzig, 1880), Katechismus des Dirigierens (Leipzig, 1889), Katechismus des Violoncell-Spiels (Leipzig, 1890), Katechismus des Violin-Spiels (Leipzig, 1899)

(4) Alwin Schröder [Schroeder] (b Neuhaldensleben, Saxony, 15 June 1855; d Boston, 17 Oct 1928). Viola player and cellist, son of (1) Karl Schröder (i). He studied the piano with his father and the violin with his brother (2) Hermann Schröder from the age of seven; later he studied at the Berlin Hochschule für Musik with Heinrich de Ahna and Wilhelm Tappert; he was only 11 when he replaced his father as viola player in the family quartet. On its dissolution he joined Karl Liebig's orchestra. Encouraged by his brother (3) Karl Schröder (ii) he began teaching himself the cello, and when Liebig offered to renew his orchestral contract in 1875 Schröder accepted – with the proviso that it should be as a cellist. Liebig suspected a joke, but an audition immediately convinced him and Schröder was appointed principal cellist. After several years in Hamburg he went to Leipzig in 1880 as

(3) Karl Schröder (ii)'s deputy, becoming joint principal with Julius Klengel at the Gewandhaus and teacher at the conservatory when his brother left the next year. Ten years later Alwin Schröder settled in Boston where he remained for the rest of his life (apart from short visits to Frankfurt and Geneva), becoming an American citizen. He joined the Boston SO, became a member of the Kneisel (1891–1907) and Hess (1904–10) quartets, and acquired a distinguished reputation as both performer and teacher. He edited Classical works for the cello and published some study material.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Lutze: Die fürstliche Hofkapelle zu Sondershausen von 1801 bis 1901 (Sondershausen, 1901)

F.W. Beinroth: Musikgeschichte der Stadt Sondershausen von ihren Anfängen bis zum Ende des 19. Jahrhunderts (Innsbruck, 1943), 140

LYNDA MACGREGOR

Schröder, Friedrich (b Näfels, 6 Aug 1910; d Berlin, 25 Sept 1972). Swiss composer. He was educated at the universities of Münster and Berlin and at the Berlin Hochschule für Musik. From 1934 he was a conductor and arranger at the Metropoltheater in Berlin, and began to make a name with popular songs, dances and film music. He wrote songs for some 50 films, including Ich tanze mit dir in den Himmel heinen (Sieben Ohrfeigen, 1937) and Gnädige Frau, wo war'n Sie gestern? (Fortsetzung folgt, 1939). He then achieved particular success with the operetta Hochzeitsnacht in Paradies (Berlin, 24 September 1942), which has remained a standard work in the German repertory. His later operettas include Nächte in Schanghai (Berlin, 1947), Chanel Nr. 5 (1947), Lucrezia in Stockholm (Berlin, 1949), Isabella (Nuremberg, 1949) and Das Bad auf der Tenne (Nuremberg, 1955). Schröder was one of the most successful and inventive of the composers of dance-band flavoured German songs of the late 1930s and early 40s, combining melodic fluency with rhythmic piquancy.

ANDREW LAMB

Schröder, Hanning [Hans] (b Rostock, 4 July 1896; d Berlin, 16 Oct 1987). German composer and viola player. He studied composition and musicology in Freiburg, where his teachers included Julius Weismann and Willibald Gurlitt. After serving as solo viola player at the Düsseldorf Schauspielhaus (1924–5), he played in a number of orchestras in Berlin. He attracted considerable attention during the early 1930s as a member of the Harlan-Trio (other members included his wife, the musicologist Cornelia Schröder (née Auerbach), and instrument maker Peter Harlan), an ensemble that performed medieval and Renaissance music on historical instruments. In 1935, because of his wife's Jewish heritage and his connections with the workers' music movement, Schröder was excluded from the Reichsmusikkammer. Although special permission allowed him to work as a violist at a Berlin theatre, his political difficulties continued after 1945, as he worked in East and lived in West Berlin. In 1965 he became adviser to the Gruppe Neue Musik Berlin. His honours include the Johann-Wenzel-Stamitz prize (1983).

Schröder's compositions of the 1920s and 30s are stylistically close to the Neue Sachlichkeit; after 1949 he freely integrated 12-note techniques into his compositional style. Linear part-writing, supported by unresolved dissonances and chromaticism, plays a central role in his works. His later compositions are characterized by rougher melodic lines and an economic use of material.

WORKS

(selective list)

Dramatic: Der Vogel Phönix (H. Much), fl, ob, cl, bn, tpt, hp, 2va, 2vc, perc, 1926; Marizzebill (H.W. Hillers), A, Bar, chbr orch, 1933; Hänsel und Gretel (F. Enke and L. Foellbach), S, A, 6vv, 4 vn, perc, 1951; film scores

Inst: Sonata, vn, pf, 1922; Qt, vn, 2va, vc, 1925; Qt, fl, vn, va, bn, 1926; Suite, pf, 1927; Schlürf Trio, 3 va, 1928, rev. 1959; Musik, 3 vn, rec, drums, 1947; Sonata, fl, va, 1947; Klaviermusik, pf, 1950; Divertimento, fl, ob, cl, bn, hn, 1956; Musik, bn, orch, *c*1959; Serenade pastorale, ob, bn, hpd, *c*1959; Varianten, fl, orch, *c*1968; Nonet, fl, ob, cl, bn, hn, vn, va, vc, db, 1970; Trio, 2 vn, perc, 1970; Sinfonia, tam-tam, str orch, 1972; Musik, a fl, vn, vc, hpd, 1977; Musik, org, 1982; Trio, fl, va, gui, 1983–4; Musik, ob, perc, *c*1984; many duets, 3 str trios, 5 str qts, works for rec, works for solo insts, solo pf works

Vocal: Advenisti desiderabilis (lat.), SATB, 1922; 5 Lieder (E. Fuhrmann), S, va, 1922; Mond und Menschen (H. Bethge), Mez, fl, pf, 1922, rev. 1958; Magnificarit Dominus (Ps cxxv), 3 male vv, 1923; Rilke-Kantate (R.M. Rilke), S, fl, cl, va, vc, 1925; Pflanzenkantate (Much), S, fl, va, 1926, rev. 1946; Briefe (C. Morgenstern), S, str qt, 1931; Reigen (T. Storm, O.J. Birnbaum, Rilke), SAB, 1945; Eine kleine Winterkantate (H. von Veldeke), S, SAB, rec/ob, str orch, 1946; Weihnachtskyrie (J. Klepper), 2vv, 1946; Ein geistlich Bittlied um den Frieden (C. Querhammer), SAB, 1951; Drachensteigen (W. Layh), 2vv, 1953; 3 Lieder (E.L. Hähne), Mez, fl, va, vib, hp, pf, 1966; Völker der Erde (N. Sachs), A, fl, cl, 1966–7; workers' songs, many other works

MSS in D-Bsb

Principal publishers: Breitkopf & Härtel, Friedrich Hofmeister, Lienau, Peters, Ries & Erler, Strube Verlag, Walter Wollenweber

BIBLIOGRAPHY

KdG (G. Eberle)

N. Schüler: Hanning Schröder: Dokumente, kritisches Werkverzeichnis (Hamburg, 1996)

N. Schüler, ed.: Zwischen Noten und Gesellschaftssystemen (Frankfurt, 1996)

NICO SCHÜLER

Schröder, Johannes (d Copenhagen, bur. 25 Sept 1677). Danish organist and composer, possibly a son of Lorentz Schröder. He became organist of St Petri, the German church at Copenhagen, in 1647, and he was also court organist to King Frederik III. In 1664 he was made deputy director of court music and in about 1667 he took over the post (though apparently not the title) of director abandoned by Kaspar Förster. Among his pupils was Johann Philipp Krieger. Schröder was greatly admired as both a performer and composer, but Adesto virtutum, for four-part chorus, two violins and bass (at S-Uu), is the only piece by him known to survive.

JOHN BERGSAGEL

Schröder, Lorentz (d Copenhagen, before 1647). Danish maker of keyboard instruments, writer on music and organist, of German origin. He was organist of Helligaandskirke, Copenhagen, but is more interesting for his work in other areas. He established himself as a maker of keyboard instruments, for which in 1632 he received a royal privilege affording him the protection of King Christian IV against possible interference from the guild of master joiners. When this protection was reaffirmed in 1636 it was made clear that his privilege was limited to the making of keyboard instruments and that he was not to undertake other kinds of joinery: hence the making of keyboard instruments was recognized, apparently for the first time in Denmark, as an independent industry. Schröder's Ein nützliches Tractätlein vom Lobe Gottes, oder Der hertzerfrewenden Musica (Copenhagen, 1639) is a defence of music, which, of the seven liberal arts, was the one that he considered was held in the lowest esteem by the general public in his day. A notable exception, however, was provided by Christian IV, to whom Schröder dedicated his book and of whose musical interests and accomplishments he gave some interesting details, for example that the king was competent personally to audition musicians seeking positions in his employ. He also praised his generosity as a patron of music: he described the lavish musical productions under the direction of Schütz that celebrated the marriage of Prince Christian of Denmark to Princess Magdalena Sibylla of Saxony in 1634. He observed that the lot of church musicians was better in Denmark than in Germany.

JOHN BERGSAGEL

Schröder-Devrient [née Schröder], Wilhelmine (b Hamburg, 6 Dec 1804; d Coburg, 26 Jan 1860). German soprano. She was the eldest of four children of the baritone Friedrich Schröder (1744–1816), the first German Don Giovanni, and the actress Sophie Schröder, née Bürger (1781–1868). As a child she appeared in ballet in Hamburg, and in Vienna (15 March 1816). In Vienna she further appeared as Aricida in Schiller's Phädra (13 October 1819) and as Ophelia in Hamlet at the Hoftheater, being carefully schooled in movement and diction by her mother. She also studied singing with Giuseppe Mozatti. Her first operatic appearance was at the Kärntnertortheater as Pamina (20 January 1821), when the freshness and confidence of her singing made a great impression. She followed this with Emmeline (Weigl's Schweizerfamilie) and Marie (Grétry's Raoul Barbe-Bleue, in German); she also sang Agathe in Der Freischütz on 7 March 1822 with Weber conducting. However, her greatest triumph, and the performance that laid the foundations of her international fame, was as Leonore in Fidelio on 3 November 1822 (see illustration). She first sang in Dresden that year, and in 1823 was given a two-year contract to sing at the Hoftheater: she remained associated with Dresden until 1847. There she also had further singing lessons with the chorus master Aloys Mieksch. She married the actor Carl Devrient (1797–1872); they had four children, but the marriage was dissolved in 1828.

Schröder-Devrient impressed audiences everywhere with the dramatic power of her performances, especially as Donna Anna, Euryanthe, Reiza, Norma, Romeo, Valentine and Desdemona (in Rossini's Otello). She had an outstanding success in Berlin in 1828, though she offended Spontini by refusing to sing the title role of La vestale (she sang it a year later in Dresden). In Weimar in 1830 she sang to Goethe, who wrote some lines in her praise. Travelling on to Paris, she triumphed in appearances with Joseph Röckel's German company (Agathe, 6 May; Leonore, 8 May). She returned to sing Italian opera in 1831 and 1832, appearing with Malibran in Don Giovanni and Otello. In 1832 she also appeared at the King's Theatre in London ten times monthly during May, June and July, in Fidelio, Don Giovanni and Macbeth (by the season's conductor, Chelard). In the following season she was heard in Der Freischütz, Die Zauberflöte, Euryanthe and Otello, less successfully owing to the rival attractions of Marie Taglioni and Fanny Elssler. When, on the death of Malibran in 1836, the English press hailed her as the only artist to take Malibran's place, she was encouraged to return to London in 1837, and sing in Fidelio, La sonnambula and Norma. But her English was poor, her health was failing, and she was paid nothing since the company was found to be bankrupt.

From that time a decline in Schröder-Devrient's vocal powers was noticeable. She seemed tired of the stage and prone to mannerisms, including a tendency to drag the tempo and to declaim rather than sing. Many passing love affairs further dispirited her (the Memoiren einer Sängerin (Altona, 1861) attributed to her are a pornographic fabrication). Nevertheless, she continued to have successes in Germany, creating Adriano (Rienzi), Senta and Venus, in Dresden, and singing Gluck's Iphigenia (Aulide). Her last appearance was at Riga on 17 December 1847. Her second marriage was to a Saxon officer, Von Döring, with whom she visited St Petersburg and Copenhagen, and who embezzled her earnings. The marriage was dissolved, and in 1850 she married a Livonian baron, Von Bock, who took her to his estate at Trikaten. Having returned to Dresden she was arrested for the sympathy she had publicly expressed with the 1848 revolution; she was banned by a Berlin court from returning to Saxony, and also from re-entering Russia. With difficulty her husband succeeded in overturning these sentences. Her last known concerts were in Germany in 1856.

Wilhelmine Schröder-Devrient as Leonore in Beethoven's 'Fidelio': lithograph by Wilhelm Santer

All accounts agree on the dramatic powers of 'The Queen of Tears', as Schröder-Devrient was dubbed when observed actually to be weeping on stage. In an age when few singers matched their vocal prowess with equal dramatic skill, she impressed audiences especially with her interpretation of Leonore. In this role, Moscheles preferred her to Malibran, and many reports give details of the dramatic effect of her performance. Beethoven, who had rehearsed her, thanked her personally, and promised to write an opera for her. According to Eduard Genast, whose wife accompanied her, she persuaded Goethe of the merits of Schubert's setting of his Erlkönig when a poor performance had previously caused him to dismiss it. Weber thought her the best of all Agathes, and to have disclosed more in the part than he had believed was there; however, on hearing her sing Leonore in 1822 he discerned the deficiencies that later (1842) disturbed Berlioz, who deplored her exaggerated acting, her vehement declamation and her failures of style. According to Chorley, 'Her voice was a strong soprano ... with an inherent expressiveness of tone which made it more attractive on the stage than many a more faultless organ. ... Her tones were delivered without any care, save to give them due force. Her execution was bad and heavy'. However, he praised her acting, even though she exaggerated her characterization as time went on. It was Schröder-Devrient who roused the 16-year-old Wagner to his sense of vocation as a dramatic composer, as he recounted in Mein Leben. He dedicated Über Schauspieler und Sänger to her memory, and in it gave a moving and detailed critical evaluation of her art, observing that she sang 'more with the soul than with the voice'. Schumann wrote Ich grolle nicht for her; he called her singing of it 'nobly projected' and declared that she was the only singer who could survive with Liszt as an accompanist. Her vocal deficiencies were partly due to erratic training, initially under her mother and insufficiently pursued under other teachers; as a singing actress who brought new dramatic powers to the art of opera she was influential on the course of German Romantic opera.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BerliozM
L. Rellstab: 'Wilhelmine Schröder-Devrient', Gesammelte Schriften, ix (Leipzig, 1844), 365–408
H.F. Chorley: Modern German Music: Recollections and Criticisms (London, 1854/R)
H.F. Chorley: Thirty Years' Musical Recollections (London, 1862/R, abridged 2/1926/R by E. Newman)
E. Genast: Aus dem Tagebuch eines alten Schauspielers (Leipzig, 1862)
C. von Glümer: Erinnerungen an Wilhelmine Schröder-Devrient (Leipzig, 1862, 3/1904)
A. von Wolzogen: Wilhelmine Schröder-Devrient (Leipzig, 1863)
R. Wagner: 'Über Schauspieler und Sänger', Gesammelte Schriften und Dichtungen, ix (Leipzig, 1873; Eng. trans., v, 1896), 157–230
G. Bonacci: 'Guglielmina Schröder-Devrient e Gasparo Spontini', Nuova antologia, cxc (1903), 306–19
L. Eisenberg: Grosses biographisches Lexicon der deutschen Bühne im XIX. Jahrhundert (Leipzig, 1903)
C. Hagemann: Wilhelmine Schroeder-Devrient (Berlin, 1904, 2/1947)
J. Bab: Die Devrients (Berlin, 1932)
M. Gregor-Dellin, ed.: Richard Wagner: Mein Leben (Munich, 1963)

JOHN WARRACK

Schroeder. See SCHRÖTER family.

Schroeder, Hermann (b Bernkastel, 26 March 1904; d Bad Orb, 7 Oct 1984). German composer, teacher and organist. On his mother's side he had common ancestry with Beethoven (Hans Peter Schetter, b Traben on the Moselle, 1623, and his wife Eva, née Jonas, who was christened in Cologne in 1625). He studied at the Cologne Musikhochschule (1926–30); teachers who influenced him particularly were Heinrich Lemacher and Walter Braunfels (composition), Hermann Abendroth (conducting) and Hans Bachem (organ). He was a teacher of theory at the Rheinische Musikschule in Cologne (1930–38), was cathedral organist in Trier (1938–45) and from 1940 he was director of the Trier School of Music. In 1946 he started to teach theory at the Cologne Musikhochschule (he became a professor in 1948). Schroeder was also reader at Bonn University (1946–73) and a lecturer at the University of Cologne (1956–61). He was director of Cologne's Bach Society (1947–62) and deputy director of the Cologne Musikhochschule (1958–61). In 1952 he was awarded the Robert Schumann Prize of the City of Düsseldorf, and in 1956 he received an Arts Prize from the state of Rheinland-Pfalz.

Schroeder's importance as a composer is in the sphere of Catholic church music, which he did much to reform. By combining stylistic techniques from the Middle Ages (fauxbourdon, Gregorian modes etc.) and 20th-century polyphony, he attempted to break the monopoly of Romantic music in the Catholic Church. The linear, atonal writing of his chamber music has much in common with that of Hindemith. With Heinrich Lemacher, Schroeder wrote several textbooks which have gained wide currency in German-speaking countries.

WORKS
(selective list)

SACRED CHORAL
mixed chorus except where otherwise stated

Mass, 1927; Mass, 1930; Mass, c, male chorus, 1931; Missa dorica, 1932; Missa brevis, 1935; Missa simplex, male chorus, 1936, rev. mixed chorus, 1957; Pauliner Orgelmesse, 1945; Missa 'Regina caeli', chorus, org, 1950; Requiem, 1952; Marienmesse, female chorus, org ad lib, 1952; Missa psalmodica, 1953; Missa coloniensis, chorus, org, 1954; Missa ambrosiana, 3vv, 1957; Missa gregoriana, 1957

Missa 'Lux et origo', female chorus, 1958; Missa figuralis, chorus, insts, org, 1959; Missa eucharistica, 3vv, 1961; Missa melismatica, 1961; Missa syllabica, 1962; Ordinarium X, chorus, org, 1965; Deutsches Ordinarium, chorus, org, 1965; St Caecilia Mass, chorus, orch, org, 1966; Deutsches Ordinarium no.2, chorus, org, 1966; Lateinisches Ordinarium, 1967; Vinzenz Palotti-Messe, chorus, org, wind, 1983

TeD, 1933; Carmen mysticum (J.W. von Goethe), S, Bar, spkr, chorus, orch, 1949; Johannes-Passion, 1964; Matthäus-Passion, 1965; many Latin motets, incl. De Profundis, 1983; German motets and cants.

OTHER WORKS

Hero and Leander (op), 1950

Concs. for str orch, 1937; vc, 1937; org, 1938; ob, 1955; pf, 1955; vn (no.1), 1956; fl, 1958; 2 vn, 1965; va, 1970; cl, 1973; vn (no.2), 1975; tpt, 1977; Concertino, cl, str, 1978; Concertino, org, str, 1981

Sym., d, orch, 1942; Symphonische Hymnen, orch, 1945; Capriccio a due tempi, orch, 1972

Str Trio, e, 1933; Str Qt no.1, c, 1939; Str Trio, g, 1942; Str Qt no.2, 1952; Pf Trio no.1, 1954; Sextet, pf, wind qnt, 1957; Qt no.3, ob, vn, va, vc, 1959; Pf Trio no.2, hn, vn, pf, 1964; Pf Trio no.3, cl, va, pf, 1967; Concertino, vn, ob, 1968; Str Qt no.4, 1968, rev. 1976; Conc., ob, org, 1972; Cl Qnt, 1974; Intrada and Fugato, 2 tpt, 2 trbn, 1974; Wind Qnt, 1974, rev. 1981; Sextet, op.59, wind, 1975; Str Trio no.3, 1976; Str Qt no.5, 1978; Quartett-Sonate, 4 hn; several solo and duo sonatas

Kbd (org unless otherwise stated): Fantasy, 1930; Prelude and Fugue 'Christ lag in Todesbanden', 1930; Little Preludes and Intermezzi, 1932; 6 Org Chorales, 1934; 5 Ger. Christmas Carols, pf (4 hands), 1936; Minnelieder, pf, 1939; Pf Sonata no.1, pf, 1946; Susani, pf, 1948; Pf Sonata no.2, 1953; Die Marianische Antiphone, 1954; Praeambeln und Interludien, 1954; Org Sonata no.1, 1957; Partita 'Veni Creator Spiritus', 1959; Kleine Intraden, 1960; Orgel Ordinarium 'Cunctipotens genitor Deus', 1964; Orgelchoräle mit Kirchenjahr, 1964; Org Sonata no.2, 1966; Duplum, (hp, org)/2 pf, 1967; Org Sonata no.3, 1970; Variations on the 'Tonus Peregrinus', 1975; Conc. piccolo, 1977; 5 Skizzen, 1978

Many secular choral pieces and folksong arrs.

Principal publishers: Gerig, Orbis, Schott, Schwann

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (H. Lemacher)

K.G. Fellerer: 'Das kirchenmusikalische Schaffen Hermann Schroeders', Musik und Altar, vi (1953–4), 60–62

H. Lemacher: 'Schroeder, Hermann', Rheinische Musiker, ii, ed. K.G. Fellerer (Cologne, 1962)

D. Kämper, ed.: Hermann Schroeder (Cologne, 1981)

R. Keusen: 'Kirchenmusik = geistlich = liturgisch: Hermann Schroeder 80 Jahre am 26. März 1984', Musica sacra, civ (1984), 3–13

R. Mohrs: Hermann Schroeder (1904–1984): Leben und Werk unter besonderer Berücksichtigung seiner Klavier- und Kammermusik (Merseburger, 1987)

RUDOLF LÜCK/ERIK LEVI

Schroeter. See SCHRÖTER family.

Schroeter [Schröter], Leonhard [Leonhart] (b Torgau, *c*1532; d Magdeburg, *c*1601). German composer. In about 1538 or 1539 he was at school in Torgau where Johannes Walter, a colleague of his father, was one of his teachers. Afterwards he attended school in Annaberg in Erzgebirge until 1545, and then, for at least two years, the ducal school in Meissen. From 1561 (at the latest) to 1576 he was town Kantor in Saalfeld (Thuringia) except for a period of two years between 1571 and 1573 when he was dismissed from his post on account of his sympathy with the Philippists (supporters of the doctrines of Melanchthon), who were not considered sufficiently strict Lutherans. During this period he was librarian at the Wolfenbüttel court. From his first years at Saalfeld he was associated in Mühlhausen with Ludwig Helmbold, probably the most important Protestant poet of his day. Schroeter was Kantor at the Altstadt Lateinschule in Magdeburg from 1576 to 1595, a highly regarded position in view of such eminent predecessors as Martin Agricola and Gallus Dressler.

Schroeter continued the Magdeburg academic tradition representative of mid-German Lutheranism. (This tradition came to an end with Heinrich Grimm in 1631 when Magdeburg was sacked in the Thirty Years War.) His works comprise mainly chorale settings, both of the traditional type reminiscent of the Reformation polyphonic style (especially in the Hymni sacri), and some of a more homophonic variety with closer alliance between music and text. The chorale settings for eight-voice double choir are exceptional in being almost entirely homophonic. His few psalm settings make an important contribution to the early Protestant motet; an example such as Psalm cxxvii for double choir is a fine example of the early German polychoral style.

WORKS

55 geistliche Lieder, 4vv (Wittenberg, 1562) [title-page missing]

Cantiones suavissimae, 4vv, tomus 1 (Erfurt, 1576[2])

Der schöne Lobgesang Te Deum laudamus durch D. Martin Luther verdeutscht, 8vv (Magdeburg, 1576); ed. O. Kade in A.W. Ambros: Geschichte der Musik, v (Leipzig, rev. 3/1911)

Der 12. und 124. Psalm Davids, 4vv (Magdeburg, 1576)

Cantiones suavissimae, 4vv, tomus 2 (Erfurt, 1576)

Ein Hochzeitgesang ... zu Ehren ... Galli Dressleri, 5vv (Magdeburg, 1577)

Canticum sanctorum Ambrosii et Augustini Te Deum laudamus, 8vv, inc. (Magdeburg, 1584)

Newe Weinachtliedlein, 4, 8vv (Helmstedt, 1586–7 [RISM, B/VIII 1587[14]]); ed. B. Engelke (Leipzig, 1914, 3/1953)

Epithalamion ... Joanni Schwanbergero (Magdeburg, 1587)

Epithalamii cantilena ... in honorem nuptiarum ... Melchioris Papae, 10vv (Magdeburg, 1587)

Hymni sacri, 4–6vv (Erfurt, 1587); 2 ed. Antiqua Chorbuch, i/2 (Mainz, 1951–2), ed. in Gissel, 3 ed. von Winterfeld

Ostergesenge Lateinisch und teutsch, 4–6, 8vv Magdeburg, 1590 [RISM, B/VIII 1590[13]]

6 school songs in Tobias: eine schöne tröstliche Comoedia ... durch G.

Rollenhagen (Magdeburg, 1576); ed. R. von Liliencron, VMw, vi (1890), 377

Homo quidam erat dives, 5vv, 1583[24]

Psalm cxxvii, 8vv, D-Z; ed. in Chorarchiv, i (Kassel, 1933, 3/1953)

Sacred works in A-Wgm, D-As, Bsb, Dl, Ngm, Rp, Z

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 ('Schröter, Leonart'; M. Geck); WinterfeldEK

G. Hofmann: Leonhart Schröter: ein lutherischer Kantor zu Magdeburg (1532–1601) (Altdorf, 1934)

G. Hofmann: 'Die freien Kompositionen L. Schroeters', ZMw, xvi (1934), 344

O. Riemer: Musik und Musiker in Magdeburg (Magdeburg, 1937)

H. Haase: 'Der erste herzogliche Bibliothekar, ein Musiker: Bemerkungen über den Kantor und Komponisten Leonhart Schröter', Wolfenbütteler Beiträge, i (1972)

S. Gissel: Untersuchungen zur mehrstimmigen protestantischen Hymnenkomposition in Deutschland um 1600 (Kassel, 1983)

WALTER BLANKENBURG

Schröter [Schroeter, Schroeder]. German family of musicians.

(1) Johann Friedrich Schröter (b Eilenburg, 1724; d Kassel, 1811). Oboist and teacher. He was an oboist in Count Brühl's regiment when he married at Guben in 1748. The family moved first to Warsaw (*c*1755) and then to Leipzig (*c*1763). His wife died shortly after the birth of their youngest daughter, (5) Marie Henriette Schröter, in 1766, but he spared no effort in the development and advancement of his musically gifted children. They all appeared in Leipzig concerts and from 1771 he took them on extended tours to Germany, the Netherlands and England, where the three eldest children performed in the Bach-Abel concerts on 2 May 1772. His only known publication, six duets for violin and cello, were printed in London about 1772. The family returned to Leipzig in 1773 or 1774. He was subsequently a court musician and teacher at Hanau (1779–86) and Kassel, where he remained as a pensioner.

(2) Corona Elisabeth Wilhelmine Schröter (b Guben, 14 Jan 1751; d Ilmenau, 23 Aug 1802). Singer, actress and composer, daughter of (1) Johann Friedrich Schröter. Her earliest instruction was from her father; she studied various instruments, including keyboard and guitar, but was most successful as a singer. When the family moved to Leipzig she continued her studies with J.A. Hiller (whose wife was probably her godmother) and from 1765 she appeared in Hiller's Grand Concerts. She became the darling of Leipzig musical audiences, although she shared the limelight with Gertrud Schmeling (later Mme Mara) until 1771. Schröter's voice lacked the strength and italianate agility of her rival but the purity of sound and her delivery gave her the advantage in the eyes of many admirers. After her family returned from London (1773/4) she became ever more prominent in Leipzig musical circles but also gained acclaim as an actress in amateur theatricals. She was the dedicatee of the 1775 Chronologie des deutschen Theaters (H. Schmid and J.G. Dyck), an acknowledgment of her growing reputation as an actress. In 1776 Goethe, who had earlier seen and admired her, met her again and arranged her appointment as chamber musician to the Duchess Anna Amalia at Saxe-Weimar, where she first performed on 23 November that year. While there she also created many of the leading roles of Goethe's early dramas (one of her most heralded being in Iphigenica, 1779), often playing opposite Goethe in the amateur court theatre. She not only created the title role in his Singspiel Die Fischerin (1782) but also composed music for it, including Der Erlkönig, which opened the play. This first setting of Goethe's famous ballad is simple, folklike and strophic, and (unlike Schubert's later setting) does not attempt to dramatize the poem's inherent dialogue. (In his eulogy Auf Miedings Tod, 1782, for the deceased theatre director, Goethe immortalized Schröter's contribution to the Weimar stage and implicitly acknowledged her impact on his own development in drama).

When the court theatre was replaced by a professional company in 1783, Schröter sang in more informal salons and taught singing, as well as acting, and also devoted herself to poetry, drawing and painting, for which she had a respectable talent. She had withdrawn from the court altogether by about 1788. During these years she formed a warm friendship with Schiller, some of whose poems she set. About 1801 she went to Ilmenau with her lifelong companion Wilhelmine Probst in the hope of alleviating a respiratory disease, but she died in the following year. Ten of her letters, 1774–1802, survive (in D-WRgs).

Schröter composed and published two collections of lieder, the first (including Der Erlkönig) in 1786, the second in 1794. The first reflects the strophic simplicity of the folksong revival, but was evidently more successful than the second, which contains more artistically elaborate works and includes French and Italian songs. Several other vocal works, among them her settings of Schiller, are lost.

WORKS

Lieder: 25 Lieder in Musik gesetzt, 1v, pf (Weimar, 1786), ed. L. Schmidt (Leipzig, 1907) [incl. facs.]; [16] Gesänge, 1v, pf (Weimar, 1794)

Other vocal: music for Die Fischerin (J.W. von Goethe), 1782, inc., D-WRdn, WRtl; further music for stage works, incl. Der Taucher and Die Würde der Frauen (F. von Schiller), lost; anthology of 360 It. arias and duets, cited in GerberNL, lost; single works in contemporary anthologies

(3) Johann Samuel Schroeter (b ?Guben, *c*1752; d London, 2 Nov 1788). Pianist and composer, brother of (2) Corona Schröter. He received his earliest musical instruction from his father, and studied with J.A. Hiller in Leipzig from about 1763. Early chroniclers suggested he studied with C.P.E. Bach, but there is no evidence to support this. He sang in Hiller's concerts until his voice broke, after which he appeared as a pianist (from 1767). When the rest of the family returned from London to Leipzig (1773/4), Johann Samuel remained behind and published several collections of chamber music in rapid succession, including his opp.1–2, which had already appeared in Amsterdam. He served for some time as organist at the German Chapel in London and found a patron in the musical dilettante Count Brühl (with whom both the Schröter family and Hiller had had previous connections). His sonatas op.1 are dedicated to Brühl and may have served as models for the count's own published sonatas.

Through the intervention of J.C. Bach, Schroeter gained the protection and interest of the English court, where he made a great impression. On Bach's death in 1782 he was promptly named music master to Queen Charlotte. His public career was cut short, however, when he eloped to Scotland with one of his students. Her wealthy family, apparently distraught by the marriage, settled a yearly allowance of £500 on Schroeter with the proviso that he abandon his career as a public performer. Nevertheless, he subsequently held an appointment with the Prince of Wales (later George IV), regularly performing in his semi-private concerts, as well as in occasional benefits or concerts of the nobility. Schroeter's health, apparently never robust, deteriorated rapidly so that he lost his voice altogether and died of a lung disease while still young. His widow, Rebecca Schroeter, later became a student and admirer of Haydn during his first London visit. Her affectionate letters were carefully kept by the composer, who dedicated to her his piano trios HXV:24–6.

Schroeter's importance lies, Burney wrote, in his being 'the first who brought into England the true art of treating [the piano]' (Rees's Cyclopaedia). His playing was not without bravura, and he astounded audiences by the graceful ease with which he performed rapid passage-work. Indeed the impression he made owed much to the delivery: 'His touch was extremely light and graceful so that just to watch him play became a pleasure in itself' (Musikalisches Wochenblatt). His compositions helped to popularize in England a natural 'singing-allegro' style and his concertos opp.3 and 5, which were among the earliest in England designed specifically for the piano, enjoyed particular success and influence. (Mozart was sufficiently impressed with op.3 to write cadenzas for three concertos.) They now seem to lack brilliance in their modest ensemble and chamber character, as opposed to the expanded symphonic and dramatic concept of Mozart's mature works. However, significant affinities with Mozart's concerto style, notably in the handling of keyboard passages, have been traced (see Wolff).

WORKS

all printed works published in London unless otherwise stated

Inst (with hpd/pf unless otherwise stated): 6 kbd sonatas, op.1 (Amsterdam, ?1772), 1 in Five Eighteenth Century Piano Sonatas, ed. S. Lincoln (London, 1975); 6 sonatas, kbd, vn, vc, op.2 (Amsterdam, ?1773); 12 kbd concs. with str, 6 as op.3 (1774), also as opp.4, 5 (Berlin and Amsterdam), 1 ed. K. Schultz-Hauser (Mainz, 1964), 6 as op.5 (*c*1777), also as op.6 (Paris), as opp.7, 8

(Berlin and Amsterdam); 6 sonatas, kbd, fl/vn, op.4 (*c*1775), as op.6 (The Hague); 6 sonatas, kbd, vn, vc, op.6 (*c*1786), as opp.8, 9 (Paris and Mainz); Sonata, B♭, kbd, vn, vc (1788), as op.11 (Paris); 2 sonatas, pf, vn, op.7 (Edinburgh, 1789); 2 qnts, kbd, ob/fl, str, in 3 Quintettos (*c*1778); La bataille fantasie, pf (Vienna, *c*1786), also as The Conquest of Belgrade (1789) and The Field of Battle (1797), doubtful

Vocal: 12 Favorite Scotch Songs, 1v, hpd, vn/fl (*c*1777), as Petits airs d'une exécution facile, arr. hpd, vn/fl ad lib, op.5 (Paris, 1777); Epithalamium, 1v, pf (*c*1785)

Kbd arrs.: L. Borghi: Vn Conc., 3 sonatas; J.C. Fischer: Ob Conc.; further arrs. of ovs., vocal qts etc.

(4) (Johann) Heinrich Schröter (b Warsaw, *c*1760; d after 1784). Violinist and composer, brother of (2) Corona Schröter. He played a violin concerto by Dittersdorf in Leipzig in 1770, when his birth year may have been misrepresented by his father to make the prodigy's talents seem more impressive. After the family's successful concert tours he did not remain in London with (3) Johann Samuel Schroeter, contrary to some accounts. He went to Hanau with his father in 1779, and performed with his sister (5) Marie Henriette in Frankfurt (1780) and Leipzig (1782). In the Leipzig concerts he also played the nail violin and is said to have toured France and Germany in the same year playing that instrument. He subsequently may have visited his brother in London, as publications by him appeared there and in Paris. In 1784 he went to Rotterdam, where he organized concerts with the flautist Zentgraff in the hall in the Bierstraat during the 1784–5 season. Little is known of his whereabouts after this and his disappearance is given poignancy by an 1805 letter of his aged father complaining that he still did not know what had become of Heinrich. His only known compositions are six violin duets (London, *c*1772), six Duo concertans op.1 for two violins (Paris, *c*1785) and six string trios op.3 (London and Paris, *c*1786).

(5) Marie Henriette Schröter (b Leipzig, 1766; d ?Karlsruhe, after 1804). Singer, sister of (2) Corona Schröter. Trained by her father and (probably) J.A. Hiller, she appeared in concerts in Leipzig and with her brother (4) Heinrich Schröter in a concert in Frankfurt (1780). Although only 13 years old, she was included as a music teacher in her father's appointment to the Hanau court. She became a chamber singer to the Darmstadt court, where she married the court official J.J. Rühl in 1788. A letter from her sister Corona in 1794 (see Stümcke) suggests that Marie led a life of quiet domestic tranquillity, but she remained on the court rolls as a singer until 1804.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ADB (H.M. Schletterer); Choron-FayolleD; EitnerQ; FétisB; GerberL; GerberNL; SainsburyD; SchillingE; SchmidlD

ABC Dario Musico (Bath, 1780)

Obituary [Johann Samuel Schroeter], Gentleman's Magazine, lviii (1788), 1030–31

'Nachrichten von Johann Samuel Schröter', Musikalisches Wochenblatt, i (1791–2), 89–90 [? Eng. orig., C. Burney]; repr. in F.L.A. Kunzen and J.F. Reichardt, eds.: Studien für Tonkünstler und Musikfreunde (Berlin, 1793/R), i

C. Burney: 'Schroeter, John Samuel', Rees's Cyclopaedia (London, 1819–20)

R. Keil: Vor Hundert Jahren, ii: Corona Schröter: ein Lebensskizze mit Beiträgen zur Geschichte der Genie-Periode (Leipzig, 1875)

H. Düntzer: Charlotte von Stein und Corona Schröter: eine Vertheidigung (Stuttgart, 1876)

A. Dörffel: Geschichte der Gewandhausconcerte zu Leipzig (Leipzig, 1884/R)

V.D. Broughton, ed.: Court and Private Life in the Time of Queen Charlotte: being the Journals of Mrs. Papendiek (London, 1887)

H. Burkhardt: 'Das Grabmal der Corona Schroeter in Ilmenau', in C. Schröter: Funf Volkslieder, ed. M. Friedlaender (Weimar, 1902)

P. Pasig: Goethe und Ilmenau mit einer Beigabe: Goethe und Corona Schroeter (Weimar, 2/1902)

H. Stümcke: Corona Schröter (Bielefeld, 1904, 2/1926)

L. Schmidt: Afterword to C. Schröter: Funf und zwanzig Lieder (Leipzig, 1907) [facs.]

H. Holle: Goethes Lyrik in Weisen deutscher Tonsetzer bis zur Gegenwart (Munich, 1914)

E. Herrmann: Das Weimarer Lied in der 2. Hälfte des 18. Jahrhunderts (diss., U. of Leipzig, 1925), 251ff

K. Wolff: 'Johann Samuel Schroeter', MQ, xliv (1958), 338–59

R.R. Kidd: The Sonata for Keyboard with Violin Accompaniment in England (1750–1790) (diss., Yale U., 1967), 241

M.J. Citron: 'Corona Schröter: Singer, Composer, Actress', ML, lxi (1980), 15–27

Z.E. Pixley: The Keyboard Concerto in London Society, 1760–1790 (diss., U. of Michigan, 1986)

T. Wind: 'Tussen Stads Doele en Bierstraat: Rotterdams musikleven in die 18e eeuw', Tijdschrift voor oude muziek, iii/2 (1990), 16–20

F.J. Schwarz: "Ihr Werth des Beyfalls!" die Schröters: Studien zu einer Musikerfamilie des späten 18. und frühen 19. Jahrhunderts (diss., U. of Mainz, 1992)

A.J. Randall: 'The Mysterious Disappearance of Corona Schröter's Autobiography', JMR, xiv (1994), 1–15

K. Komlós: Fortepianos and their music: Germany, Austria, and England, 1760–1800 (New York, 1995)

A.J. Randall: Music and Drama in Weimar 1776–1782: a Social-Historical Perspective (diss., U. of Cincinnati, 1995)

RONALD R. KIDD

Schröter, Christoph Gottlieb (b Hohnstein, Saxony, 10 Aug 1699; d Nordhausen, 20 May 1782). German organist, composer, keyboard instrument designer and music theorist.

1. Life. 2. Writings. 3. Piano manufacture.

1. LIFE. After early training in music from his father, he was sent in 1706 to nearby Dresden, where he joined the royal chapel as a soprano and took keyboard lessons from the Kapellmeister, J.C. Schmidt. In 1709 ill health forced him to live for a while with his godfather Hentschel in Bischofswerda. Returning to Dresden in 1710, on Schmidt's recommendation he was appointed, together with the slightly younger C.H. Graun, Ratsdiskantist (town discantist). With his change of voice he enrolled at the Kreuzschule, where according to his autobiography (see Marpurg) he studied, among other subjects, fugue with Schmidt. He did not say, however, with whom he studied the organ, but he reported practising on the instruments in the Kreuz- and Sophienkirchen as well as on an organ in the royal residence. In 1717 at his mother's wish he went to Leipzig to study theology, but after her death he returned in 1718 to Dresden, where Schmidt obtained for him the position of music copyist to Antonio Lotti. In 1719, as secretary and musical companion to an unidentified baron, he began five years of travel which took him to the Netherlands and England as well as to many German courts. In 1724 he went to Jena, where he gave lectures at the university on Mattheson's Neu-eröffnete Orchestre (Hamburg, 1713) and the mathematical basis of music theory, and formed a collegium musicum: he was one of the first in Germany to reintroduce music to the university curriculum. He became organist at the principal church in Minden in 1726, and in 1732 accepted a similar position in Nordhausen. For the next 50 years he remained in this post, composed sacred music and wrote a large number of theoretical essays and books. In 1739 he was accepted as the fourth member of Mizler's Societät der musikalischen Wissenschaften, a Leipzig corresponding society of music scholars and composers which later included J.S. Bach, Handel and Telemann. On 23 August 1761 the French army occupied Nordhausen, plundered Schröter's home and destroyed his library: among the losses incurred were manuscripts of unpublished works such as a Historie der Harmonie und Melodie and the second volume of his thoroughbass treatise. None of Schröter's compositions was published, and practically none seems to survive: a considerable loss since in his autobiography he listed a quantity of works including five cantata cycles (to poetry by Neumeister, Rambach and Scheibel), four Passions, a Sieben Worte Jesu and various instrumental works.

2. Writings. Schröter's most important work is the thoroughbass treatise Deutliche Anweisung zum General-Bass (1772), which had been completed as early as 1754. It remains a valuable mid-18th-century source of information on thoroughbass practice (see Arnold) and is also a manual for composers; Schröter considered the triad as the source of all harmony, an adaptation of Rameau's theory of fundamental harmonies, which had a decisive impact on German theoretical writing after 1730. Like many of his contemporaries, Schröter wrote with a sarcastic, frequently bitter critical tone, and he delighted in attacking those he considered personal enemies or misguided theorists, like G.A. Sorge, who earlier had criticized his theory of equal temperament (which Sorge proved was actually 'unequal'). Schröter also joined the battle over Scheibe's criticism of J.S. Bach's musical style, and his least successful published essays are those (in Mizler's Musikalische Bibliothek) attempting to diminish the value of Scheibe's work, Der critische Musikus.

As a member of Mizler's corresponding society he contributed a large number of papers on theory to the Musikalische Bibliothek. In 1749, at the request of J.S. Bach (who clearly respected his judgment), he agreed to review for publication, under Bach's supervision, Rector Biedermann of Freiburg's Programma de vita musica, which had attacked the use of music in church. Schröter's review appeared in a seriously altered form, and he condemned Bach for sanctioning the changes; but apparently they were made by the printer, not guided by the ailing Bach. Curiously, the Kantor and music director at Frankenhausen, G.F. Einike, who had been Bach's correspondent with Schröter, was credited by an unidentified Dresden reviewer as the author of the revised essay. Einike attempted to unravel this double embarrassment for himself and Bach in their relationship with Schröter by reporting the details of the entire affair in Mattheson's Gespräche der Weisheit und Musik (partly reprinted by David and Mendel).

3. Piano manufacture. Schröter's letter of 1738 in Mizler's Bibliothek (iii, 464ff) states that in 1717 he commissioned 'a model of a new keyboard instrument with hammers, partly with and partly without springs' to be built. In Marpurg's Kritische Briefe (iii, letters 139–41), he explained that this model of both an up-striking and a down-striking action was presented without result to the Dresden court in 1721 and never returned. This belated claim as the inventor of the piano has been negated by the earlier date of Cristofori's hammer action (of which he was apparently unaware), but he was possibly the first to arrive at the concept independently in Germany. One notable detail of Schröter's drawings in Marpurg, however, is the iron pressure bar serving as a top bridge across the strings, between the nut and the striking point, in both the up-striking action and the tangent action substituted for the less successful down-striking action. No instruments using Schröter's action survive; the illustrations in Harding are from working models in the Stuttgart Landesmuseum. Welcker von Gontershausen attributed to Schröter two actions that seem to have no relation to his drawings. Certain individual features of the up-striking model can be recognized in the pianos of Zumpe, Senft, J.M. Schmahl and Taskin, but evidence is lacking that these makers were directly influenced by Schröter, and there is no certain connection between his and Späth & Schmahl's tangent actions. Schröter himself attributed the difference between his actions and those of his 'second-rate imitators' to their imperfect understanding of his invention. He also invented a device that enabled organists to make sudden changes of dynamics, on manuals and pedals, without altering the registration.

WORKS

Choral-Buch [21 chorales with bc, 4 fugues, and 5 chorale preludes, org], D-Bsb

5 cant. cycles to texts by Neumeister, Rambach, Scheibel; 4 Passions; Sieben Worte Jesu; serenades, concs., sonatas, fugues etc.: all lost, all listed in Schröter's autobiography

WRITINGS

Epistola gratulatoria de musica Davidica et Salomonica (Dresden, 1716)

Sendschreiben an Sr. Hoch Edlen, den Herrn Magister Lorenz Mizler, in welchem I. der bevorstehender Reformation der Musik; II. einer Aufgabe wegen der Temperatur; III. einiger nützlicher Erfindungen gedacht; und etliche nöthige Erinnerungen für die Tonkünstler so bescheiden als freymüthig eingeschaltet worden (Nordhausen, 1738); repr. in L. Mizler: Neu eröffnete musikalische Bibliothek, iii (Leipzig, 1746–52/R), 464–77

Poem in praise of Mizler, ibid., i/4 (Leipzig, 1738/R), 87–8 [under anagram Reschtore]

'Die Nothwendigkeit der Mathematik bey gründlicher Erlernung der musikalischen Composition' [review of J.A. Scheibe: Der critische Musikus], ibid., iii (Leipzig, 1746–52/R), 201–76, 409–63

Christliche Beurtheilung des Herrn M. Bidermann, Freybergischen Rectore, im Monat May des 1749sten Jahres edirten Programmatis De vita musica (n.p., 1749); repr. in J. Mattheson: Sieben Gespräche der Weisheit und Musik … als die dritte Dosis der Panacea (Hamburg, 1751), 181–8

'Beurtheilung der zweyten Auflage des critischen Musici' [by Scheibe], in L. Mizler: Neu eröffnete musikalische Bibliothek, iii (Leipzig, 1746–52/R), 726–54

'Beurtheilung des neuen musikalischen Systems Herrn Telemanns, auf Verlangen aufgesetzet', ibid., 720–26

'Der musikalischen Intervallen Anzahl und Sitz', ibid., 685–713

'Sendschreiben an die Verfasser der kritischen Briefe', Kritische Briefe über die Tonkunst, ed. F.W. Marpurg, ii (Berlin, 1761–3/R), 417–18

'Herrn C.G. Schröters Bedenken über Herrn Sorges schmähend angefangenen Streit wider Herrn Marpurgs harmonischen Sätze', ibid., 448–50

'Christoph Gottlieb Schröter', ibid., 456–60 [autobiography and work-list]

'C.G. Schröters umständliche Beschreibung seines 1717 erfundenen Clavier-Instrumentes, auf welchem man stark und schwach spielen kann', ibid., iii (Berlin, 1763–4/R), 81–8

Deutliche Anweisung zum General-Bass, in beständiger Veränderung des uns angebohrnen harmonischen Dreyklanges (Halberstadt, 1772)

Letzte Beschäftigung mit musicalischen Dingen, nebst sechs Temperatur-Plänen und einer Noten-Tafel (Nordhausen, 1782)

LOST

Historie der Harmonie und Melodie [summary in preface to Deutliche Anweisung zum General-Bass]

Vom vollstimmigen und unbezifferten General-Bass [part ii of Deutliche Anweisung zum General-Bass]

Euclides von der Harmonie aus dem Griechischen übersetzet und mit Beispielen erläutert

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Mattheson: Sieben Gespräche der Weisheit und Musik ... als die dritte Dosis der Panacea (Hamburg, 1751); inc. repr. in H.T. David and A. Mendel, eds.: The Bach Reader (New York, 1945; rev. 2/1966 with suppl.)
J. Adlung: Anleitung zu der musikalischen Gelahrtheit (Erfurt, 1758/R, 2/1783)
F.W. Marpurg, ed.: Kritische Briefe über die Tonkunst (Berlin, 1759–64)
H. Welcker von Gontershausen: Der Flügel oder die Beschaffenheit des Piano's in allen Formen (Frankfurt, 1856), 26–7
O. Paul: Geschichte des Claviers (Leipzig, 1868/R), 85ff
F.T. Arnold: The Art of Accompaniment from a Thorough-Bass (London, 1931/R)
R.E.M. Harding: The Piano-forte: its History Traced to the Great Exhibition of 1851 (Cambridge, 1933/R, 2/1978), 17ff
P. Benary: Die deutsche Kompositionslehre des 18. Jahrhunderts (Leipzig, 1961)
R.N.: 'Schroeter's Piano Action', MO, lxxxvii (1963–4), 573–5
K. Restle: Bartolomeo Cristofori und die Anfänge des Hammerclaviers: Quellen, Dokumente und Instrumente des 15. bis 18. Jahrhunderts (Munich, 1991)

GEORGE J. BUELOW (1, 2), MARIBEL MEISEL, PHILIP R. BELT (3)

Schröter, Johann Georg (b Berlstedt, nr Weimar, 20 Aug 1683; *d c*1749). German organ builder. A citizen of Erfurt from 1712, he obtained a monopoly on organ building in the area. He was probably the first organ builder to issue a printed advertising pamphlet (1723). He built only small and medium organs, but these had 8′ Open Diapason, 16′ Quintadena and 8′ Trompete in the Great organ, 8′ Gedackt, 4′ Open Diapason and 8′ Vox humana in the second manual; and 16′ Sub-bass, 8′ Octave and 16′ Posaune in the pedal. He usually featured a Glockenspiel stop, and many wooden stops. The manuals had a wide selection of foundation stops and a complete diapason chorus, except that if mutations were included (an option normally available only on the second manual), the corresponding diapason chorus would be omitted; the pedal had few stops. Schröter's most important organ was in the Augustinerkirche in Erfurt, begun by J.F. Stertzing (1716; three manuals, 39 stops). It met the approval of J.S. Bach. Schröter's reliability was also recognized by Adlung, J.H. Buttstedt and Walther. Cases and some stops, from 11 of his many organs, including those at Andisleben (1737) and Wandersleben (1724, restored 1999), survive. Among Schröter's pupils were J.N. Ritter of Hof, J.P. Trampeli of Adorf and FRANCISCUS VOLCKLAND of Erfurt. The latter became Schröter's rival.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GerberNL; MGG1 (S. Orth)
S. Orth: 'Der Erfurter Orgelbauer Johann Georg Schröter', BMw, vii (1965), 57
G. Löbling: Leben und Werk des Erfurter Orgelbauers Johann Georg Schröter (Leipzig, 1986)
H. Fischer and T. Wohnhaas, eds.: Lexikon süddeutscher Orgelbauer (Wilhelmshaven, 1994)

HANS KLOTZ/FELIX FRIEDRICH

Schroyens, Daniël (b Mechelen, 4 May 1961). Belgian composer. After initial tuition in piano, harpsichord and chamber music at the Mechelen Conservatory and composition lessons with Westerlinck, he studied at Trinity College, London (1979–84; piano with Joseph Weingarten, composition with Tučapsky) and in 1984 attended the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, where his tutors included Harbison, Antoniou and Schuller. This experience steered him towards a compositional career. After a brief spell back in Belgium he settled in London (1986). There he rounded off his compositional education with a postgraduate course at the Guildhall (1991–3). However, in spite of his formal training, he is to a large extent self-taught.

His youthful career first received media attention with the prize-winning A Small Symphony of Variations (1974) and further established itself through two radio commissions. The early compositions are indebted to Bartók and Britten, with elements of neo-Classicism and some traces of post-war serialism. They demonstrate an intuitive, non-systematic approach to music, and typically use 4th-based harmonies as a support for freely chromatic melody lines; while the harmonic vocabulary, though consistent and assured, remains within clear confines. Suhail (1987) reveals a more sustained development, wedded to greater exploration and a quest for harmonic expressiveness. Often a sense of improvisation prevails. In some of the more recent works a playfulness comes to the surface (e.g. Tango and Collateral), complementing the earlier introspectiveness and seriousness. The opposing forces in his slowly developing output – attention to detail and concern for aural logic, a desire to avoid harmonic norms and, recently, a rediscovery of triadic contexts – often express themselves most readily in single-movement works.

His works are frequently broadcast on Belgian Radio and he has received several awards, including the Yehudi Menuhin and Lutosławski prizes (UK) and the 'Tenuto' Prize (BRT).

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: A Small Sym. of Variations, str, 1974; Tableaux, 1983; R coronae Variations, chbr orch, 1986; Fresco, 1990; On a Crest of Liquid Silence, 1997
Chbr: 5 pieces, pf, 1975; Rhapsody, 4 cl, 1976; Study in Transparent Colours, hpd 4 hands, cel, hp, 1976; Melofonie, 12 str, 1980; Chanson, vn, pf, 1982; Poema, 12 str, 1982; Dance Choreography, 1992; Collateral, 2 tpt, hn, tbn, tuba, 1993; pf Qnt 1993; Tango, 7 pfmrs, elecs, 1993; Berceuse, pf, 1997; Prélude non-mesuré, org, 1998
Vocal: Boeket, song cycle, Mez, fl, pf, 1979; The Life that I Have, chorus, 1984; Suhail, S, chbr orch, 1987; 2 songs, high v, pf, 1994–7
Principal publisher: CeBeDeM (Brussels)

DIANA VON VOLBORTH-DANYS

Schryari (from Ger. Schreyerpfeifen: 'shouting pipes'). (1) An alternative name for the SCHREYERPFEIFE, used in the 17th century and occurring only in the plural form.

(2) A group of WIND-CAP INSTRUMENTS described by Praetorius as similar to his CORNAMUSA (i); he illustrates three Schryari, which he also calls 'Schreyerpfeifen' (see illustration). The tenor (alto) and bass have bodies that taper towards the bottom. The bores may also taper, but this is unclear. Praetorius states that the alto and tenor are identical except that the alto has two closed keys which increase the range upwards. The bass has a key for the lowest soundhole. The compasses are: bass, F–b♭; tenor, c–d′; alto, c–f′. The soprano Schryari appears to have a bore doubled back within the body of the instrument. Praetorius states that 'although the soprano is closed at the bottom, it has many holes on the side through which the wind can come out', some of these being covered 'with the balls of the hands' as on the wind-cap KORTHOLT. He gives only the bottom note of the soprano's compass, which is g.

Praetorius characterizes the sound of Schryari as 'loud and fresh'. He must have been describing a rare group of instruments (they are known from no other source),

Schryari as illustrated by Praetorius: woodcut from 'Theatrum instrumentorum' (1620): (a) bass; (b) tenor (alto); (c) soprano which may explain his evident confusion over both names and descriptions.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

PraetoriusSM, ii; PraetoriusTI
B.R. Boydell: The Crumhorn and Other Renaissance Windcap Instruments (Buren, 1982)

BARRA R. BOYDELL

Schuback, Jacob (b Hamburg, 8 Feb 1726; d Hamburg, 15 May 1784). German lawyer and musician. The son of Hamburg's mayor, he attended the Johanneum Lateinschule, where Telemann was Kantor, and from 1743 to 1747 the classical school, obtaining at the same time a thorough training in music. He studied law in Göttingen and took up the legal profession on his return to Hamburg in 1750, becoming secretary-archivist of the senate within two years. By 1760 he was trustee of the senate, and from 1771 acted as representative of the Hanseatic Republic to the Reichstag in Regensburg.

Schuback's interest in music certainly exceeded the usual scope of musical amateurism. He composed several large-scale works, some of them to his own texts, and collaborated on an inauguration cantata with C.P.E. Bach, whom he befriended. His choral works are admirable for their text-declamation, while reflecting the conservative taste of their composer; his songs are sensitive and folklike but his symphonies more mediocre. His importance to music, however, lay primarily in his participation in Hamburg's musical life: he was a skilled choral conductor, directed one of the earliest performances in Hamburg of Handel's Messiah, organized public concerts and established a programme of choral music in a local charity school. He also played the keyboard, corresponded with Metastasio on the subject of text-setting, and published anonymously a treatise on musical declamation that gained some currency.

WORKS

MSS mainly in Berlin and Schwerin

Die Grossmuth des Scipio (drama, D. Schiebeler)
Orats (perf. Hamburg): Der für die Sünde der Welt sterbende Jesus (Passion orat, B.H. Brockes), *c*1750; La passione di Gesù Cristo (after P. Metastasio, trans. Schuback), 1763, D-Bsb, ROu; Betulia liberata (after Metastasio, trans. Schuback), 1773, Bsb; Gioas, ré di Giuda (after Metastasio, trans. Schuback), 1777, lost, formerly DS; Die Jünger zu Emaus (Schuback) (Hamburg, 1778–9)
Other vocal: Vierstimmige gesetzte Kirchenchoräle, biblische Sprüche, geistliche und moralische Lieder für die Rumbaumsche Armenschule (Hamburg, 1779–81); Versuch in Melodien, songs, 1v, kbd (Hamburg, 1779); *c*12 sacred cants., solo vv, chorus, orch; 2 secular It. cants. (Metastasio); inauguration cant., 1771, collab. C.P.E. Bach, Bsb; other ceremonial music; duets; 2 arias; 2 canons Inst: 3 syms.

WRITINGS

Von der musikalischen Declamation (Göttingen,1775); excerpts in J.N. Forkel: Musikalisch-kritische Bibliothek, iii (1779/R)
Nachricht von dem Singe-Institut bey der Rumbaumschen Armen-Schule (Hamburg, 1780)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ADB ([O.] Beneke); GerberL
C.F. Cramer, ed.: Magazin der Musik, ii (1784/R)
H. Schroeder and A.H. Kellinghusen, eds.: Lexikon der hamburgischen Schriftsteller, iii (Hamburg, 1879)
J. Sittard: Geschichte des Musik- und Concertwesens in Hamburg (Altona and Leipzig, 1890/ R)
K. Stephenson: Hundert Jahre Philharmonische Gesellschaft in Hamburg (Hamburg, 1928)
S. Voss: 'Die Metastasio-Vertonungen des Hamburger Syndikus Jacob Schuback: ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des Oratoriums im Hamburg des 18. Jahrhunderts', HJb 1999, 173–85

EUGENE HELM

Schubart, Christian Friedrich Daniel (b Obersontheim, Swabia, 24 March 1739; d Stuttgart, 10 Oct 1791). German poet, journalist, writer on music and composer. Although his literary and musical talents manifested themselves in early youth, his parents decided that he should study theology. He received his preparatory education in Nördlingen and Nuremberg, music instruction from his father and the Nuremberg composer G.W. Gruber, and entered Erlangen University in 1758. At Erlangen he was often in trouble with the university authorities, and in 1760 he returned to his parents' home in Aalen. From 1763 to 1769 he was organist and preceptor in Geisslingen. In 1769 he obtained an organist position in Ludwigsburg, the residence of the Duke of Württemberg, and he was also employed by the court as harpsichordist at the opera house and instructor in music. However, he led a dissolute life, and in 1773 was banished from Württemberg. In 1774 he moved to Augsburg, where he established his Deutsche (or Teutsche) Chronik, a periodical devoted to politics, literature and music. The next year he moved to Ulm, where he successfully continued the venture for three years. However, his criticisms of policies pursued by the Catholic Church and various courts aroused the wrath of the nobility. In 1777 Duke Carl Eugen of Württemberg ordered Schubart's imprisonment at the fortress Hohenasperg, apparently for insulting his mistress (Strauss, 1849, i, 344–5). Schubart's confinement lasted ten years, during which he wrote several of his most important works: in 1778 and 1779 he dictated his autobiography, Leben und Gesinnungen, von ihm selbst im Kerker aufgesetzt (Stuttgart, 1791–3/R), to a fellow prisoner; and his Ideen zu einer Ästhetik der Tonkunst (Vienna, 1806/R) dates from 1784–5. Most of his extant compositions were also written during his imprisonment; he published many in Musicalische Rhapsodien (Stuttgart, 1786; ed. P.A. Merbach, Leipzig, 1924) and in other collections. On his release in 1787 he was appointed court and theatre poet at Stuttgart. He resumed publishing his periodical (as Vaterlandschronik, 1787–9, Chronik, 1790–?1793), but ill-health caused by his confinement forced him to abandon plans for a collected edition of his poetry and writings on music.

Schubart was a distinguished performer on the organ, harpsichord and clavichord, and many critics, including Burney, praised his virtuosity. He achieved considerable success as a lied composer, and several of his lieder remained popular well into the 19th century. Most are set to his own texts, and strophic form and a folklike melodic idiom predominate. In setting complex poems he occasionally utilized strophic variation techniques, rondo-like patterns and cantata-like structures. Though exhibiting a strong melodic gift, his songs are frequently marred by awkward harmonic progressions and inept part-writing. Similar characteristics are evident in the works that Schubart composed on a larger scale. Two church cantatas written to his own texts appear to be early works composed in Aalen and Geisslingen. He also wrote a significant amount of keyboard music while imprisoned at the Hohenasperg, including three sonatas for solo clavier and one for clavier, four hands.

Schubart's Ideen zu einer Ästhetik der Tonkunst, his essays on music in the Chronik, his prefaces to the Musicalische Rhapsodien and his autobiography present vivid accounts of German musical life during the second half of the 18th century and are of considerable value to the music historian. His aesthetic views reflect the proto-Romantic concepts then prevalent in Germany: he considered expression to be the 'golden axle around which the aesthetics of music turn', and emphasized the concept of musical genius. A well-known section in the Ideen subjectively describes the characteristics of individual tonalities, expressing the widely held belief that sharp keys portray strong passions and flat keys gentle feelings. Beethoven, Schubert and Schumann were interested in Schubart's opinions, though they disagreed with him in several respects. Schubart maintained that folksong represents the true musical expression of a people, and he devoted much attention to this subject. His comments on the works of individual composers show an exceptionally keen critical faculty. He praised the profoundly expressive compositions of C.P.E. Bach and his followers and denounced as superficial the galant idiom of Piccinni, Paisiello and most of their Italian contemporaries. He also expressed an appreciation of the works of composers of earlier periods and was one of the few writers of his generation to comprehend the true worth of J.S. Bach's works.

Schubart's poetry was frequently set by his contemporaries and by composers of the following generation. The most important of these settings are the four lieder composed by Schubert; two of these, Die Forelle and An mein Klavier, have achieved a permanent place in the lieder repertory.

WORKS

Edition: Christian Friedrich Daniel Schubart (1739–1791): sämtliche Lieder, ed. H. Schick, Denkmäler der Musik in Baden-Württemberg, vii (forthcoming)

Lieder: 4 in Deutsche (Teutsche; Vaterländische) Chronik (1774–91); 12 in Neue Blumenlese für Klavierliebhaber, ed. H.P. Bossler (Speyer, 1782–5); Die Macht der Tonkunst (cant.), 1v, hpd, in Neue Blumenlese für Klavierliebhaber, ed. H.P. Bossler (Speyer, 1783), repr. in Etwas für Klavier und Gesang von Schubart (Winterthur, 1783); 4 in Schwäbischer Musenalmanach, ed. G.F. Stäudlin (Tübingen, 1783–4); 1 in Zweite Sammlung neuer Klavierstükke mit Gesang für das deutsche Frauenzimmer (Dessau, 1784); 3 in Musikalische Monatschrift für Gesang und Klavier (Stuttgart, 1784); 14 in C.F.D. Schubart: Musicalische Rhapsodien (Stuttgart, 1786); 2 Lieder für das nach dem Kap bestimmte von Hügelsche Regiment (Stuttgart, 1787); 1 in Musikalische Real-Zeitung (Speyer, 1789); 3 in Musikalischer Potpourri für Liebhaberinnen und Freunde des Gesangs und Claviers (Stuttgart, 1790); 2 in Vermischte Gedichte von D.E. Friedrich Hübner, mit Klaviermelodien von Schubart und Abeille, ii (Stuttgart, 1791); 57 in Sang und Spiel, 1759–84, D-Sl; 23 in J.J. Wagner's notebooks, Us; 70 in Liedersammlung für Phillippina Freyinn, 1783, private collection, Ludwigsburg

Other vocal: Rondo für Freudenfeste (cant.), S, A, T, B, chorus, orch, Bsb; Psalm cxviii (cant.), S, A, T, B, orch, MG, Stadtkirche, Blaubeuren

Kbd: 2 minuets in Neue Blumenlese für Klavierliebhaber (Speyer, 1782–4); 3 solo sonatas, 1 sonata, kbd 4 hands, in Etwas für Klavier und Gesang von Schubart (Winterthur, 1783); Minuet, Rondo, in C.F.D. Schubart: Musicalische Rhapsodien (Stuttgart, 1786); 13 variations (Speyer, 1788); Chorale, Jesus meine Zuversicht, in Musikalische Korrespondenz der Teutschen filharmonischen Gesellschaft (1791), Notenblätter, 134; 3 chorale preludes, org, B-Bc; 14 pieces in Liedersammlung für Phillippina Freyinn, private collection, Ludwigsburg

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BurneyGN; FriedaenderDL

L. Schubart, ed.: C.F.D. Schubart: Gesammelte Schriften und Schicksale (Stuttgart, 1839–40/R)

D.F. Strauss, ed.: C.F.D. Schubart's Leben in seinen Briefen (Berlin, 1849/R)

E. Holzer: Schubart als Musiker (Stuttgart, 1905) [incl. detailed list of works]

R. Hammerstein: Christian Friedrich Daniel Schubart, ein schwäbisch-alemannischer Dichter-Musiker der Goethezeit (diss., U. of Freiburg, 1940) [with complete list of writings]

D.C. Ossenkop: The Earliest Settings of German Ballads for Voice and Clavier (diss., Columbia U., 1968)

T.A. DuBois: Christian Friedrich Daniel Schubert's Ideen zu einer Ästhetik der Tonkunst: an Annotated Translation (diss., U. of Southern California, 1983)

R.K. Steblin: A History of Key Characteristics in the 18th and Early 19th Centuries (Ann Arbor, 1983)

C.F.D. Schubart: Briefe, ed. U. Wertheim and H. Böhm (Munich, 1984)

K. Honolka: Schubart, Dichter und Musiker, Journalist und Rebell: sein Leben, sein Werk (Stuttgart, 1985) [incl. detailed list of works]

J.W. Smeed: German Song and its Poetry, 1740–1900 (London, 1987)

L. Porhansl: 'Schuberts Textvorlagen nach Friedrich Wilhelm Gotter und Christian Friedrich Daniel Schubart', Schubert durch die Brille, no.10 (1993), 69–74

DAVID OSSENKOP

Schubaur, Johann Lukas (b Lechfeld, bap. 23 Dec 1749; d Munich, 15 Nov 1815). German composer. He attended the theological seminary in Neuburg an der Donau, where he also acquired a comprehensive musical education. He gave up the monastic life because of illness, and studied medicine in Vienna, making a living by giving piano lessons and writing short occasional compositions. From 1775 he practised in Neuburg an der Donau; soon afterwards he settled in Munich and held several important medical posts.

Schubaur's activities as a dilettante composer were linked with the efforts of the Palatine court in Munich to develop an independent German Singspiel alongside Italian and French comic opera. His first attempt, Melide, oder Der Schiffer, translated freely by Schubaur himself from a French model and performed in 1782 in Munich, failed utterly and aroused discussion only after the success of his next Singspiel, Die Dorfdeputierten. For this work Schubaur chose a lighter text which had already been set by E.W. Wolf and later appeared in a well-known setting by Dieter and Teyber. It was his greatest artistic and commercial success (largely because of the vocal score, which he published himself) and is said to have received over 100 performances in Munich alone, as well as frequent stagings throughout Germany as late as 1813. After the resounding failure of Das Lustlager (1784) and the only moderate success of Die treuen Köhler (1786) Schubaur gave up writing for the theatre. Among his works only Die Dorfdeputierten and Die treuen Köhler are extant; additional works, mentioned by Eitner and Lipowsky, cannot be authenticated as Schubaur's.

WORKS

first performed at Munich, Nationaltheater

Melide, oder Der Schiffer (Spl, Schubaur, after F. de Falbaire), 24 Sept 1782

Die Dorfdeputierten (Spl, 3, G.E. Heermann, after C. Goldini: Il feudatorio), 8 May 1783, vs (Mannheim and Munich, *c*1783)

Das Lustlager (Spl, 2, F.M. Babo), 4 Aug 1784

Die treuen Köhler (Spl, 2, Heermann), 29 Sept 1786, vs (Munich, 1786)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; LipowskyB

E. Reipschläger: Schubaur, Danzi und Poissl als Opernkomponisten (Berlin, 1911)

A. Layer: 'Johann Lukas Schubaur: Stadtphysikus, Hofarzt und Komponist (1749–1815)', Lebensbilder aus dem Bayerischen Schwaben, xii (1980), 135–51

GERHARD ALLROGGEN

Schubert. German family of musicians active in Dresden in the 18th and 19th centuries. Many sources incorrectly give LOUIS SCHUBERT and JOSEPH SCHUBERT as members of this family.

(1) Franz Anton Schubert (b Dresden, 20 July 1768; d Dresden, 5 March 1827). Double bass player and composer. The younger brother of Anton Schubert (b Dresden, 28 June 1766; d Dresden, 12 Oct 1853), a double bass player in the Dresden orchestra from 1790 until his retirement in 1840, he became the director of the Italian Opera in 1808 and was appointed royal church composer in 1814. He gave some useful assistance to Weber. He is remembered chiefly for his contemptuous remarks when by mistake a copy of Franz Peter Schubert's Erlkönig was sent to him by Breitkopf & Härtel: he retorted, in a letter of 18 April 1817, that the 'cantata' was not his but that he would retain the copy 'so as to learn if possible who has so impertinently sent you that sort of rubbish and also to discover the fellow who has thus misused my name'. His own numerous works are chiefly liturgical settings.

(2) Franz Schubert (b Dresden, 22 July 1808; d Dresden, 12 April 1878). Violinist and composer, eldest son of (1) Franz Anton Schubert. He first studied music with his father, then with C.P. Lafont in Paris (where he became a friend of Chopin) before returning to Dresden in 1833. In 1861 he succeeded Karol Lipiński as leader of the Dresden orchestra. His music for violin includes some duos with cello, written in collaboration with F.A. Kummer, and a set of 12 bagatelles op.13, of which no.9, Die Biene, was once popular. His wife Maschinka (b Reval, 25 Aug 1815; d Dresden, 20 Sept 1882), the daughter of the Kapellmeister Georg Abraham Schneider (1770–1839) and the singer Caroline Portmann, was a coloratura soprano who studied with her mother and with Giulio Bordogni; she made her début in London in 1832 and was later a valuable, versatile member of the Dresden Opera, her range including soubrette and tragic roles.

(3) Georgine Schubert (b Dresden, 28 Oct 1840; d Strelitz, 26 Dec 1878). Soprano, daughter of (2) Franz Schubert. She studied first with her mother, then with Jenny Lind and Manuel Garcia. She made her début in La sonnambula in Hamburg in 1839, and had a successful international career, including performances at the Monday Popular Concerts in London.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FürstenauG; GerberNL

M. Fürstenau: Beiträge zur Geschichte der königlich sächsischen musikalischen Kapelle (Dresden, 1849)

H. Schnoor: Dresden: vierhundert Jahre deutsche Musikkultur, ed. E. Bunkowsky (Dresden, 1948)

JOHN WARRACK

Schubert, Ferdinand (Lukas) (b Vienna, 18 Oct 1794; d Vienna, 26 Feb 1859). Austrian composer and teacher, brother of Franz Schubert. He received his first music lessons from his father, and after training in the Normalhauptschule in Vienna (1807–8) he became a teacher in his father's school. In 1810 he was appointed assistant teacher at the orphanage in the suburb of Alsergrund and made a full teacher in 1816. He was appointed headmaster at the Normalhauptschule in 1824. Admired in educational circles in Vienna for his efficient service as inspector of schools, he was appointed director of the Normalhauptschule in 1851. He was twice married, first to Anna Schüler (1816) and, after her death, to Therese Spazierer (1832).

A composer of small talent, he frequently drew on his brother's music for help in his daily work, passing it off as his own. The most famous instance of this appropriation is the Deutsches Requiem D621, which he submitted to the examiners of the Alt-Lerchenfeld school; on its strength he was appointed organist and choirmaster (1820). His brother also composed the antiphons for Palm Sunday, D696, for his installation in this post. He wrote vocal music almost exclusively, including two Singspiels, four masses and a requiem. As a custodian of his brother's manuscripts his record is mixed; he continued to appropriate the lesser, earlier works for school music books and choral test pieces (so that a list of his compositions must be suspect). But he also did all in his power to obtain the publication of Schubert's larger works, and in this task he was more or less successful.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

SchillingE

O.E. Deutsch: 'Ferdinand Schuberts "Deutsches Requiem" von Franz Schubert': introduction to F. Schubert: Deutsche Trauermesse (Vienna, 1928) [Ger. and Eng. texts]

O.E. Deutsch with D.R. Wakeling: Schubert: Thematic Catalogue of all his Works (London, 1951/R; Ger. trans., enlarged 1978, Neue Ausgabe sämtlicher Werke, viii/4, as Franz Schubert: thematisches Verzeichnis seiner Werke)

F.R. van Hoorickx: 'Schubert's "Pastoral" Mass', ML, xlii (1961), 53–5

MAURICE J.E. BROWN

Schubert, Franz (Peter) (b Vienna, 31 Jan 1797; d Vienna, 19 Nov 1828). Austrian composer. The only canonic Viennese composer native to Vienna, he made seminal contributions in the areas of orchestral music, chamber music, piano music and, most especially, the German lied. The richness and subtlety of his melodic and harmonic language, the originality of his accompaniments, his elevation of marginal genres and the enigmatic nature of his uneventful life have invited a wide range of readings of both man and music that remain among the most hotly debated in musical circles.

1. LIFE.

(i) Background and childhood. Schubert's Vienna was a polyglot city, more than a fifth of whose population comprised Hungarians, Czechs, Italians, Croatians, Poles, Germans, Turks, Greeks and other nationalities. Most of Vienna's most celebrated musicians – Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Gluck, Salieri, Hummel – had been born in other parts of the Austro-Hungarian Empire or outside it. As a native Viennese, Schubert became the direct beneficiary of its musical offerings. He was born in the district of the Himmelpfortgrund just north-west of the Ring, the bustling, overcrowded centre of the capital of the empire. His paternal ancestors were Moravian farmers; his father, Franz Theodor Florian (1763–1830), moved when he was 20 to Vienna from Neudorf (Nová ves) in the Altstadt (Staré Město) district of Moravia (today part of the Czech Republic). He followed his oldest brother Karl, who had become the headmaster of the Carmelite School in the suburb of Leopoldstadt. He took up the position of schoolteacher, one that offered little social standing or financial reward; education was an enterprise supported only meagrely by the imperial government. Within a year Franz Theodor met Elisabeth Vietz (1756–1812) whose father, a locksmith and gunmaker, spent time in prison for embezzlement. Her family had also migrated to Vienna from the northern provinces. In January of 1785 Franz and Elisabeth married; one reason may have been the birth of their first child two months later. Of 14 births, nine children died in infancy – only slightly worse than the 50% infant mortality rate common in Europe before the discovery of germ theory. The survivors included Ignaz (b 1785), Ferdinand (b 1794), Karl (b 1795), Franz Peter (b 1797) and Maria Theresia (b 1801). All of the children were born in a one-room apartment in a house called 'Zum roten Krebsen', a surviving building now bearing the address 54 Nussdorferstrasse. Schubert's birth in the early afternoon of 31 January 1797 took place in a kitchen alcove whose fireplace provided the family's only source of heat. He was baptized the next day, with his uncle Karl Schubert named as godfather. Schubert thereby became the only one of the canonic quartet (with Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven) of Viennese Classical composers to be born in Vienna – although many natives of the city have been quick to point out that he was only first-generation Viennese.

Less than a year after Maria Theresia's birth, Franz Theodor moved his family to a house ('Zum schwarzen Rössel') in the nearby Säulengasse (today no.3) on which he had taken out a mortgage a few months earlier. The bottom floor of this two-storey structure with courtyard served as the school; the upstairs served as the family's living quarters. Here Franz Theodor, an industrious, devout Catholic, built his student population steadily until he had 40 students in 1804, peaking to 300 students in 1805. Most of the scant information we possess about Schubert's childhood comes from later reminiscences by his father and his brother Ferdinand. Six-year-old Franz became a pupil at the school in 1803 and by all accounts he was a high achiever, although in a system that, by imperial decree, depended almost entirely on rote learning. The Schubert family were great music lovers, and although musical training played no role in formal education, there was plenty of it after hours. Schubert received his first piano lessons from his older brother Ignaz, but soon left him behind, averring that he 'would continue on his own'.

When Schubert was seven he was sent for an audition to Antonio Salieri; presumably his father made the arrangements. Salieri's reputation as a composer had peaked years before, but in his 50s he still enjoyed the power and prestige of the court music director. He was sufficiently impressed with Schubert to include him as a mezzo-soprano on a list of nine singers fit to sing for services in the imperial Hofkapelle. At the age of eight Schubert received his first violin lessons from his father. He also took lessons in counterpoint, figured bass, singing and organ from Michael Holzer, the organist at the Schuberts' parish church in Lichtental. Schubert's brother Ferdinand reported that Holzer acknowledged, with tears in his eyes, that 'whenever I wished to impart something new to him, he always knew it already'. Ferdinand also noted that Schubert was already composing songs, string quartets and piano pieces. When vacancies in the Hofkapelle choir opened up in 1808, Schubert passed the highly competitive audition easily. Perhaps the biggest perk was his free tuition-and-board admission into the Kaiserlich-königliches Stadtkonvikt (Imperial and Royal City College), which as the principal Viennese boarding school for non-aristocrats offered Schubert his best possible opportunity for a quality education. The 130 all-male students ranged from 11 to university age and were tutored by Piarist monks whose order was founded in the 17th century to educate the poor. A few months after entering the college, Schubert cowered while Napoleon's bombardment of Vienna sent a shell through the roof of the Stadtkonvikt. Nonetheless, he was to stay at the college for five full years, receiving the kind of education usually reserved for titled Viennese.

Encouraged by its principal, Dr Innocenz Lang, music played a sizable role in the life of the college. Its student orchestra was first-rate, and Schubert was soon invited to join the second violins. Here he became acquainted at first hand with the orchestral works of Haydn, Mozart, early Beethoven and their lesser Viennese contemporaries. The orchestra's founder and leader of the second violins was a law student named Josef von Spaun. Eight years Schubert's senior, Spaun soon befriended the impressionable youth, and the friendship flourished, in spite of interruptions, until the composer's death. At the end of the school year Spaun graduated; he left Vienna in September 1809 to join the civil service at Linz. According to Spaun, Mozart's Symphony no.40 in G minor and Beethoven's Second Symphony made a particularly strong impression on Schubert. From these years come the earliest of his surviving compositions. During his first two years he received permission to take regular lessons with Salieri, who urged him to find his models in Italian opera, a directive that conflicted sharply with Schubert's enthusiasm for the music of Mozart, Haydn and Beethoven, as well as his growing interest in the poetry of Goethe and Schiller as material for songs. By the time he was 13 Schubert seems to have interrupted his regular lessons with Salieri. Yet by the end of 1813 he had, largely under the tutelage of Spaun, seen half a dozen staged operas, including Mozart's Die Zauberflöte, Weigl's Die Schweizerfamilie and Cherubini's Médée. According to Spaun, upon attending a January 1813 performance of Gluck's Iphigénie en Tauride, with Johann Michael Vogl and Anna Milder-Hauptmann in the leading roles, Schubert 'was totally beside himself over the effects of this magnificent music and asserted that there could be nothing more beautiful in the world'. In spite of Schubert's heavy involvement with musical activities, his report cards from the first four years show him to have earned regular grades of 'good' or 'very good' in all his academic subjects.

(ii) The adolescent composer. We do not know whether Schubert began composing even earlier than brother Ferdinand reported. Although many of the dates assigned by scholars to his early works are speculative, Schubert's first surviving compositions appear to date from his 13th year. In the Fantasie in G for piano duet (D1; 8 April – 1 May 1810) and the song Hagars Klage (D5; 30 March 1811) Schubert seized on two marginal genres that over a lifetime he would transform into pillars of his output. A four-hand fantasy would have proved less intimidating to a precocious young composer than the more settled standards for a two-hand sonata. The Fantasie merits notice for its sheer length (more than 1000 bars) and modulatory brashness, averaging more than a new section per minute over its 20-minute duration. Its one-movement, multi-sectional plan was to spawn a chain of audacious experiments that extends over Schubert's entire career; and it is significant that both the Fantasie and Hagars Klage end in a key different from that in which they begin.

In the same month that Schubert completed what was probably his first song, his friend Spaun returned to Vienna, where he would remain in close contact with the composer for a decade. Partsongs and an overture round out the categories of finished works. The early years produced more than a dozen fragmentary works (including sketches for a symphony, several sacred vocal works, three string quartets and one complete act of a three-act Singspiel) – a pattern that was to accompany the composer throughout his career. These sketches rarely point to a compositional impasse; rather, Schubert seems either to have intended merely to dip his toe in the water or to have simply lost interest. During his school holidays from around 1811, Schubert took on the role of viola player in a family quartet that included brothers Ignaz and Ferdinand as violinists and his father on the cello. Shortly afterwards – following several earlier false starts – he composed his first string quartet (in D, D94), and then completed three more quartets (D32, 36 and 46) between September 1812 and early March 1813. The slow, chromatic opening of D46, in C major, suggests Schubert's acquaintance with Mozart's 'Dissonance' Quartet, K465, in the same key. Schubert was equally blessed with a symphonic laboratory at the Stadtkonvikt, and in October of 1813 he completed his first symphony (D82, in D), in which Schubert would have had the pleasure of both conducting and playing among the violins.

Yet the musical style of the early adolescent Schubert was largely an amalgam of the grammar of Haydn and Mozart sprinkled with flashes of Rossini and Bach (the latter expressed loosely in a series of student fugues and compositional exercises for piano or organ, some showing corrections in the hand of Antonio Salieri). The 16-year-old Schubert's style at the phrase level would have been scarcely distinguishable from scores of other turn-of-the-century Austrian composers. While occasional phrases are worthy of the best of Viennese Classicism, Schubert's style as it began to coalesce – especially in the instrumental works – conveyed a post-Classical looseness and freedom of structure that would set him permanently apart from his great predecessors. Indeed, one could argue that Schubert's very earliest works are less inventive, for example, than those of Mozart at a more tender age and less assured structurally than the early keyboard variations and sonatas of Beethoven.

In May 1812 Schubert's mother died at the age of 55, perhaps from a typhus infection. We have no evidence to help us gauge the impact of Elisabeth's death on the 15-year-old Schubert. Less than a year later (25 April 1813) Schubert's father married 30-year-old Anna Kleyenbock, who bore Franz Theodor five more children. Schubert seems to have enjoyed a cordial if not close relationship with his stepmother. In the summer of 1812, after a performance of a mass by Peter Winter, Schubert's voice broke, memorialized by the composer's entry on his part: 'Schubert, Franz, crowed for the last time, 26 July 1812'. Although he could no longer sing in the choir, Schubert remained at the Stadtkonvikt for a fifth year. His increasing preoccupation with composition precipitated an inevitable decline in his academic performance, and he received warnings in both Latin and mathematics. In October 1813 Schubert was offered a scholarship for further study on the condition that he bring his academic subjects up to standard, 'since singing and music are but a subsidiary matter . . . '. Perhaps sensing that he was at a crossroads, perhaps believing that five years of serious study was sufficient, Schubert declined. Whatever paternal input he received, the decision must have been largely his.

(iii) Finding a career. Schubert's decision to return the very next month to his father's home and take up a ten-month course of study at the St Anna Normalhauptschule that would certify him as a teacher seems in conflict with his decision to leave the Stadtkonvikt. Yet both his brothers were, like their father, teachers. At this stage Schubert could not expect to make a living pursuing the activity that engaged him most – composition. A teaching position might function as a 'day job' that would meet his modest overheads until he was sufficiently independent to strike out on his own. At all events, it is very unlikely that he saw his teacher training as leading to a lasting career. Six days a week he travelled from the Säulengasse house into the Ring district (the inner city) to receive instruction. The explosion in his compositional output suggests that the workload at the Normalhauptschule was not as great as that at the Stadtkonvikt. Schubert also found time to resume twice-weekly composition lessons with Salieri. In August 1814 he passed the final teaching examinations with strong marks in German and arithmetic but a poor grade in religion. His father had attempted to gain another position at the 'Scottish Monastery', but when that effort failed he engaged his son as his sixth assistant in the prosperous Säulengasse school that Schubert himself had attended. Schubert's responsibilities were apparently for the youngest students; Kreissle reports that he was strict, somewhat irascible and prepared to enforce discipline with a slap on the head. There is also evidence that Schubert the schoolteacher harboured sympathies for the student riots protesting against the oppressive Metternich regime that had became a regular part of the Viennese landscape. One of his classmates at the Stadtkonvikt, Johann Senn, lost his scholarship after trying to free a fellow student from prison. Some six years later he and Schubert were picked up from Senn's lodgings and held for questioning. While Schubert got off with a warning, Senn was deported. In May 1814 Schubert also completed his first opera, a three-act Singspiel, Des Teufels Lustschloss. It received its première half a century after Schubert's death. Of Schubert's passionate and abiding interest in opera there can be no doubt. From 1811 until 1823 there is no year in which he was not involved in an operatic project.

By the middle of 1813 the 16-year-old Schubert already boasted an impressive compositional catalogue. Nonetheless, few of Vienna's musical elder statesmen would have predicted a major career. Beginning in the summer of 1814, Schubert's confidence and productivity took a quantum leap forward. Near the end of July he completed his first mass (in F, D105), written for the centenary of the Lichtental church he had attended since a child. Although Schubert's spirituality was never in doubt, his freedom with the text (including the omission of 'Et in unam sanctam catholicam et apostolicam ecclesiam') suggests that the church as an institution was not sacrosanct to him. Musically the mass displays a deep familiarity with the masses of Haydn and Mozart, and Beethoven's Mass in C, a particular favourite of the composer's. Schubert conducted the first performance himself in October. Ten days later the mass received another performance at the Augustinerkirche in the city. The first soprano soloist at the première was Therese Grob, another offspring of a schoolmaster (Schubert's brother Ignaz eventually married into her family) and presented by numerous biographers as the great love of Schubert's life. Two years Schubert's junior, she possessed a clear and pleasing high soprano voice. In a biographical note penned 26 years after Schubert's death, the composer's friend Anselm Hüttenbrenner recalled a conversation in which he had noted that the composer 'was so cold and unforthcoming towards the fair sex at parties'. According to Hüttenbrenner, Schubert responded by saying that 'I loved someone very dearly and she loved me too . . . . For three years she hoped I would marry her; but I could not find a position which would have provided for us both'. Only meagre corroborative evidence of a romantic relationship survives. Anton Holzapfel testified that Schubert had written of Therese in a long and enthusiastic letter to him that he unfortunately lost. Grob told Schubert's first biographer, Kreissle von Hellborn, that in her father's house Schubert 'was like an adopted son', but offered nothing about a more intimate relationship. Kreissle himself concluded that Schubert 'was somewhat indifferent to the charms of the fair sex'. The final Schubert song from Therese's album dates from 1816, the same year in which he wrote in a diary entry (8 September): 'To a free man matrimony is a terrifying thought these days; he exchanges it either for melancholy or for crude sensuality . . .'. Although not yet 20, Schubert never spoke of marriage again.

(iv) The miracle years. In the autumn of 1814, after a promising but unspectacular adolescence, Schubert exploded into a burst of creative activity that over the next 15 months was virtually unrivalled in the history of Western music. He also introduced patterns of composition that prevailed for the rest of his life. Until 1814 Schubert had drawn on almost ten different poets for the texts of some two dozen solo songs and fragments. Beginning in the spring/summer of 1814, he devoted 13 of his next 15 songs to texts by a single poet, Friedrich von Matthisson. Throughout 1815 he set groups of between two and more than a dozen songs dominated by a single poet – Goethe, Körner, Hölty, Kosegarten, Baumberg, Ossian, Klopstock, Mayrhofer and Stoll. This intense focus on one poet at a time may help explain the composition of almost 150 songs in Schubert's 18th year – an average of more than one every three days. Schubert had encountered Goethe's Faust in the second half of 1814, and it made an indelible impression (fig.1). His first Goethe song (the first of a group of four) produced the extraordinary Gretchen am Spinnrade (D118; 19 October 1814), remarkable not only for its conjuring up of a spinning wheel and its waves of crescendos but for Schubert's empathetic representation of a woman's feelings. Towards the end of the following year he returned to Goethe for Erlkönig (D328), bringing astonishingly vivid and frantic life to a father, his feverish son and the figure of Death. In the same period he made the acquaintance through Spaun of the civil servant and poet Johann Mayrhofer (1787–1836), whose Am See (D124, December 1814) Schubert may have already set at Spaun's suggestion. Schubert doubtless relished the chance to meet a German-language poet, a counterpoint to Salieri's narrow emphasis on Italian. He set another Mayrhofer poem in 1815, as many as ten more in 1816, and more than 40 over his career. Almost ten years Schubert's senior, Mayrhofer was a gifted poet, a disturbed eccentric, a misogynist and ultimately a suicide. He and Schubert enjoyed a close if intermittent relationship. Mayrhofer was a member of the Viennese branch of a Linz 'circle of friends' established in 1811, and his participation in this self-improvement group, or 'Bildung Circle', probably led to Schubert's subsequent joining. German literature and poetry were major themes of the group's meetings and doubtless helped to spur Schubert's song production. Between the autumn of 1814 and the end of 1815 Schubert also wrote two string quartets (D112 and D173, in nine and eight days respectively) and two symphonies (nos.2 and 3, D125 and D200), as well as his second and third masses (in G, D167; in B♭, D324). In addition, he completed no fewer than four Singspiele (Der vierjährige Posten, D190; Fernando, D220; Claudine von Villa Bella, D239, whose second and third acts were apparently burnt in 1848 by servants of Schubert's friend Josef Hüttenbrenner; and Die Freunde von Salamanka, D326). In the autumn the bassoonist, violinist and conductor Otto Hatwig took over the private concerts that had grown out of musical gatherings at the Schubert home and that had taken place briefly at the house of a merchant, Franz Frischling.

In all of his combined categories, Schubert averaged an almost superhuman rate of at least 65 bars of new music each day, roughly half of which included an orchestra. The average may indeed have been higher, for we cannot assume that all of Schubert's works from this period have been preserved. And such figures assume that he was a full-time composer, although in fact he was a full-time, year-round teacher at his father's school. He was also taking composition lessons twice weekly with Salieri, attending numerous concerts and operas, doing a modicum of private teaching, and socializing with his friends from the Stadtkonvikt. In 1815 Schubert entered into long-term friendships with two very different kinds of men. He met the ever industrious Anselm Hüttenbrenner (1794–1868) while both were studying with Salieri. Though Hüttenbrenner was ostensibly a law student, their shared passion (fig.2) for music and composition soon brought them close.

1. Autograph MS of version a of Schubert's 'Szene aus Goethe's Faust' ('Wie anders, Gretchen, war dirs') D126, composed December 1814 (F-Pn)

Hüttenbrenner offered a memorable portrait of Schubert at 18:

> Schubert's outward appearance was anything but striking or prepossessing. He was short of stature, with a full, round face, and was rather stout. His forehead was very beautifully domed. Because of his short-sightedness he always wore spectacles, which he did not take off even during sleep. Dress was a thing in which he took no interest whatever . . . and listening to flattering talk about himself he found downright nauseating.

Schubert inscribed his Trauerwalzer (D365, 1818) with 'written down for my dear fellow coffee, wine and punch drinker Anselm Hüttenbrenner, the world-famous composer'. In 1821 Hüttenbrenner was forced to leave Vienna to take over his family's estate in Styria; in that same year he married and eventually fathered nine children. A respectable pianist, he also became a prolific composer who played an important, if not entirely understood, role in the saga of Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony (D759).

In the same year that he met Hüttenbrenner, Schubert was introduced by Josef von Spaun to a highly charismatic yet profligate dabbler in the arts, Franz von Schober (1797–1882). Although his father died when Schober was six, the family remained prosperous enough for him to attend private schools for the nobility (the family had been ennobled only in 1801) in both Germany and Austria. He began law studies in Vienna in 1816 but failed to complete the course. From his mother's spacious apartment in the Tuchlauben, Schober's warm hospitality cast its spell on members of a growing literary and musical circle, which soon included Schubert. In 1858 a friend from Schubert's youth, Josef Kenner, wrote unmistakably about Schober without naming him:

> Schubert's genius subsequently attracted . . . the heart of a seductively amiable and brilliant young man, endowed with the noblest talents, whose extraordinary gifts would have been so worthy of a moral foundation and would have richly repaid a stricter schooling than . . . the one he unfortunately had. But shunning so much effort as unworthy of genius and summarily rejecting such fetters as a form of prejudice and restriction, while at the same time arguing with brilliant and ingratiatingly persuasive power, this scintillating individuality . . . won a lasting and pernicious influence over Schubert's honest susceptibility.

The nature of this influence cast its shadow over the rest of Schubert's life. Although the unparalleled productivity of 1815 tapered off slightly the following year, 1816 was nonetheless a remarkable year in Schubert's creative life. He composed more than 110 songs, largely in clusters of poems by Salis-Seewis, Goethe, Ossian (in translation), Schiller, Hölty, Matthisson, Klopstock, Jacobi and Mayrhofer. For the meetings of the 'Bildung Circle', Schubert's friends would search through volumes of poetry and present their favourites to Schubert – some of which he would subsequently set. He also completed another mass (D452, in C), two acts of his first attempt at a three-act opera (Die Bürgschaft, D435), two symphonies (D417, in C minor, later given the somewhat misleading subtitle 'The Tragic' by Schubert; and in B♭, D485, the most popular of the youthful symphonies), a string quartet (D353, in E) and three sonatas (published as 'sonatinas') for violin and piano (D384, 385, 408). Still conspicuously missing are any significant works for solo piano. In mid-April Spaun sent a first volume of Schubert songs based on texts by Goethe to the ageing poet, hoping to secure his permission for dedications; Goethe returned the package unopened. In April Schubert applied for the post of music teacher at the teachers' training college in Laibach (now Ljubljana). The attractions probably included a higher salary and more time available for composition. Might he also have hoped to make himself appear more acceptable to Therese Grob's family? Not until September did Schubert learn that the post had gone to another applicant – about the same time that he made the diary entry appearing to renounce marriage. In mid-June Schubert participated in the celebrations marking the 50th anniversary of Salieri's arrival in Vienna, contributing both the text and the music of a vocal quartet, aria and three-part canon (D407). Although his lessons had been intermittent, the large number of instrumental and compositional exercises from his 11th to his 19th year attest to the thorough, if ultimately limited, training he received from Salieri. On 24 July Schubert conducted his (lost) cantata Prometheus (D451) at Heinrich Josef Watteroth's house; among the participants was the lawyer Leopold von Sonnleithner (probably in the title role), the son of a music-loving family and himself an accomplished musician, whose new-found enthusiasm led him to become one of Schubert's most ardent and influential supporters.

2. Franz Schubert (right) with Anselm Hüttenbrenner and Johann Baptist Jenger: drawing by Josef Teltscher (private collection)

(v) Independence. In the autumn of 1816 Schubert would have been pondering his return for a third year of teaching at his father's school. His youthful resentment of major claims on his time would have been understandable, and his failure to attain the Laibach position may have further soured his attitude to teaching. Some time that autumn Schubert refused to return to his father's school, left home and moved to the lodgings of Franz von Schober, who lived with his sister and mother in the inner Ring. He could not have left his father's household because of its hostility to his music, for the Schuberts were among his most enthusiastic supporters; and the symbolism of leaving the modest, pious household of his father for the dandified Schober and the luxurious Persian décor of the inner city must have been painful for the elder Schubert. In 1876 Schober remarked somewhat self-servingly that 'I shall always retain the eternally uplifting feeling of having freed this immortal master from the constraint of school, and of having led him on his predestined path of independent, spiritual creation'. For the first few months after the move, Schober was himself in Sweden. He returned towards the end of the year and Schubert was to remain with him until the following August. Around the time of his move Schubert's Fifth Symphony (D485) received its first performance at one of Otto Hatwig's house concerts. It is ironic to note that the not quite 20-year-old composer of five symphonies, over 300 solo songs (more than half of the surviving total), several dozen partsongs, four Singspiele, four masses, seven string quartets and innumerable smaller works had not yet received a single public performance in Vienna, a single public notice in a newspaper, or enjoyed a single publication. Now, gradually, these circumstances would begin to change.

3. Page from Schubert's diary (10 June 1816) containing references to Mozart (A-Wgm)

It was inevitable that Schubert's phenomenal rate of productivity throughout 1815–16 would prove unsustainable. About 60 solo songs, almost a third of them to texts by Mayrhofer, survive from 1817. They include some of the most popular and enduring: Der Schiffer (D536), Ganymed (D544), An die Musik (D547), Die Forelle (D550) and Gruppe aus dem Tartarus (D583). An die Musik was one of a pair of poems by Schober; together with Trost im Liede (D546), both songs and poems express the intense idealism of music as the ultimate balm for the burdens of life. They also express the most idealistic dimension of the Schubert-Schober relationship.

Another ambitious attempt at an opera, Die Bürgschaft (D435), faltered in the third and final act. In the early months of 1817 Schober presented Schubert to the highly regarded baritone Johann Michael Vogl, whom Schubert had admired in a performance of Gluck's Iphigénie en Tauride four years earlier (he may also have known Vogl's Pizarro in the 1814 première of Beethoven's Fidelio). Schober insisted that Vogl – who physically towered over Schubert – read some songs on the spot. The singer is said to have heard in them 'fine ideas' and 'something special'. It marked the beginning of an advocacy that lasted until Schubert's death.

Schubert's short-lived independence came to an end in the autumn of 1817, when he moved abruptly back to his father's house in the Himmelpfortgrund. The reversal may well have been triggered by financial difficulties and was perhaps hastened by his unenthusiastic resumption of teaching duties at the school. Countering this sobering development was growing public recognition. On 27 September Franz Xaver Schlechta, a member of Schubert's circle who had first met the composer at the Stadtkonvikt, published a poem, An Herrn Franz Schubert (Als seine Kantate Prometheus aufgeführt ward), in the Wiener allgemeine Theaterzeitung; it marked the first time that Schubert's name was mentioned in a periodical. On 1 March 1818 one of Schubert's two overtures 'im italienischen Stile' (D590–91) was performed at the inn Zum römischen Kaiser. It marked the first performance of a Schubert work at a public concert. 11 days later an overture (probably the same one) was performed, in an arrangement for piano eight hands, at a private entertainment at the same inn presented by the actor Karl Friedrich Müller; Schubert was one of the four pianists. About the performance Schlechta wrote: 'Each of his shorter or longer compositions is characterized by profound feeling, spontaneous but controlled force and appealing charm . . .'.

Only a few months after Schubert's return home, his father was finally transferred to a school in the Rossau district; the whole family moved there to 11 Grünetorgasse. Around this same time Schubert's Symphony no.6 (D589) received its première in a house concert at Otto Hatwig's. Nearly simultaneously, the song Erlafsee (D586) was published under the title of Am Erlaf-see in the Mahlerisches Taschenbuch für Freunde interessanter Gegenden, Natur- und Kunst-Merkwürdigkeiten der sterreichischen Monarchie (Vienna) – the very first publication of Schubert's to appear in print. On 5 March Schubert applied for membership as an accompanist in the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde. His catalogue now included more than 500 works and he doubtless believed that he was as qualified for membership in this prestigious amateur group as anyone in Vienna. Hence his rejection, ostensibly on the grounds that he was not an amateur, must have come as a deep disappointment – especially since the society already included professional musicians. However, to block his admission only a single member of the admissions committee would have needed to raise questions about Schubert's politics or social standing. All of the composer's resentments must have evaporated when he reapplied three years later and was accepted.

In the spring Otto Hatwig moved from the Schottenhof to the Gundelhof, where his private orchestra now met. When he fell ill the concerts were moved to the apartment of Anton von Pettenkoffer where, with Schubert frequently on the viola, it met on Thursday evenings for the next two years. Leopold von Sonnleithner reported that the informal performances came to an end when Pettenkoffer, a worker in the wholesale trade, won a lottery and moved from Vienna to his own country estate. For Schubert there was, alas, no lottery. His teaching duties at his father's school became more burdensome than ever and his relationship with his father grew increasingly strained. Works such as the Sixth Symphony or the Rondo in D (D608) seem to portray a certain stylistic indecision. Evenings spent drinking Bavarian beer at the inn Zur schwarzen Katze with friends such as Anselm Hüttenbrenner offered only temporary relief. On one of these evenings in February Hüttenbrenner claimed that Schubert, after helping empty several bottles of Hungarian red wine, 'composed the wonderfully lovely song' Die Forelle. But Hüttenbrenner was mistaken in claiming that Schubert had composed the work on the spot; he had set down the first version more than a year earlier. It was his frequent practice to write out multiple versions (Die Forelle, for example, exists in no fewer than five), sometimes in an effort to improve the work and other times simply to make a presentation.

(vi) Travel. In mid-1818 Schubert's gloomy spirits were lifted when he received an invitation from Count Johann Karl Esterházy of Galanta to tutor his two young daughters at his summer estate in Zseliz (today Želiezovce in Slovakia, then still in Hungary). Johann Karl Unger, a law professor at the Theresian Academy in Vienna, had suggested Schubert to his close friend Esterházy, and the composer quickly accepted. The two-day journey of more than 100 miles by stagecoach was easily the furthest the composer had ever ventured from Vienna. Schubert remained there for almost five months (July–November). He taught the piano and singing to his pupils Marie (aged 16) and Caroline (aged 12) and also provided musical entertainments for the family and their guests. Along with board and lodging he cleared some 75 florins a month. During that summer Esterházy introduced him to Baron Karl Schönstein (1797–1876), a senior official at the Hungarian ministry of finance who was also a passionate amateur singer. Although he had earlier expressed a marked preference for Italian music, upon making the acquaintance of Schubert's songs he quickly became an ardent advocate of German lieder and focussed on them almost exclusively for the rest of his career. Both Sonnleithner and Spaun praised him fulsomely, and Schönstein himself claimed that Schubert had told him on numerous occasions that he composed most of his songs with Schönstein's vocal range ('a noble-sounding tenor-baritone voice', according to Sonnleithner) in mind. Schubert's surviving letters to friends in Vienna portray a much more cheerful artist. Writing to a group of his friends, he exclaimed that 'Thank God I live at last, and it was high time, else I should have become nothing but a thwarted musician'. He staked out his place in the previously minor genre of the piano duet, composing, probably for his pupils, a sizable assortment of pieces including three Marches militaires (D733). But by September the mercurial Schubert had become disillusioned with the Zseliz scene as well. He wrote to his intimate friend Schober:

> At Zseliz I am obliged to rely wholly on myself. I have to be composer, author, audience and heaven knows what else. Not a soul here has any feeling for true art [this remark presumably extended to the Esterházy daughters], or at most the countess now and then (unless I am wrong). So I am alone with my beloved and have to hide her in my room, in my pianoforte and in my breast. Although this often makes me sad, on the other hand it elevates me the more. Have no fear, then, that I shall stay away longer than is absolutely necessary.

The merging of his art with the self-identity of an outsider was to become an ever more prominent theme.

Letters from his brother Ferdinand during the same summer show that the stultifying home atmosphere, especially where it concerned matters of religion, continued to worsen. It was hardly a surprise, then, that when Schubert returned with the Esterházys to Vienna during the third week of November he settled in with his friend Johann Mayrhofer rather than with his family. In his obituary of Schubert, Mayrhofer remarked that 'I wrote poems, he composed what I had written'. Schubert was never to undertake formal teaching duties again. He probably continued to teach the two Esterházy daughters through the winter. It had not been a productive year – a symphony, two fragmentary piano sonatas, a few pieces for piano duet and just over a dozen songs. Although he was never to regain the sheer level of output from the miracle years of 1815–16, 1818 marked a career low point. 1819 began more propitiously. On 8 January Schubert's cantata Prometheus received another performance at Sonnleithner's apartment in the Gundelhof. On 28 February the song Schäfers Klagelied (D121) was performed by Franz Jäger in a concert at Zum römischen Kaiser – the first documented performance of a Schubert song in a public concert. During this year Schubert began the remarkable Mass in A♭ major (D678), although he was not to complete it until 1822.

For the summer of 1819 the 22-year-old Schubert elected not to seek employment but to travel through Upper Austria in the company of Vogl, making extended stops in both Steyr and Linz. During this period he very probably composed one of his most famous chamber works, the Quintet for piano, violin, viola, cello and double bass known as 'The Trout' (D667). The work was apparently commissioned by a native of Styria, Sylvester Paumgartner, who was himself an amateur cellist. He is also supposed to have stipulated the unusual instrumentation and the use of Schubert's popular song Die Forelle as the basis of the theme-and-variations fourth movement. In Linz, Schubert met Anton Ottenwalt, a civil servant, dramatist and poet. Schubert had already set one of Ottenwalt's poems, Der Knabe in der Wiege (D579), in 1817. He was married to Josef von Spaun's sister Marie, and the music-making began almost immediately. Ottenwalt was described by all who knew him as a man of great industriousness, integrity and culture.

Some time during 1820 Schubert participated in a musical soirée at the apartment of Matthäus von Collin, a well-connected dramatist, poet and friend of Spaun's who introduced Schubert to, among others, Count Moritz Dietrichstein, Ignaz Franz von Mosel, Caroline Pichler, Baron Hammer-Purgstall and Johann Ladislaus Pyrker. According to Anselm Hüttenbrenner, the company heard Der Wanderer as sung by Vogel and the Eight Variations on a French Song for piano four hands (D624), played by Schubert and Hüttenbrenner. In mid-March the other side of Schubert's existence surfaced when he was present at the time his schoolfriend Johann Senn's room was searched by the police. Senn had been under suspicion since his activist days in the 'Bildung Circle' at the Stadtkonvikt. The assassination of the dramatist Kotzebue (a government sympathizer) by a radical student in 1819 had emboldened the oppressive police to harass suspected malcontents in even greater numbers. For his lack of contrition Senn was greeted with 14 months of detention without trial and then deportation to the Tyrol. Schubert, who somewhat disingenuously registered himself as the 'school assistant from the Rossau', escaped, in spite of alleged offensiveness, with a warning that was sure to have reinforced his feelings of being an outsider.

Performances continued to accumulate throughout the spring. In March an overture (probably D648) was performed at Anton von Pettenkoffer's. In April an overture (probably D648 as well) was performed at a concert in Graz – the first known public orchestral performance of a Schubert work outside Vienna. The work received a third performance in November at a Gesellschaft concert. At the beginning of April Schubert conducted a performance of Haydn's 'Nelson Mass' at the Alt-Lerchenfeld church. More importantly, on 14 June the première of Schubert's Singspiel Die Zwillingsbrüder took place at the Kärntnertortheater (Schubert had finished the work a year and a half earlier). Based on a French play, the tale turns around a young woman under contract from birth to marry a man (one of two identical twins, as it turns out) she does not love. In the original production Vogl played both twins, creating a challenge in the last scene, where both are on stage at the same time. Although it had six performances (more than average), Die Zwillingsbrüder received a mixed reception, and the shabbily dressed Schubert declined to acknowledge the audience's applause.

In July Schubert once again ventured outside Vienna, where he stayed as Schober's guest in the Atzenbrugg Castle, some 40 kilometres west of Vienna (fig.4). So agreeable did he find it that he returned there in both of the two succeeding summers. After his return to Vienna in August the melodrama Die Zauberharfe (D644), for which Schubert supplied on commission almost 3000 bars of music, was produced at the Theater an der Wien. It received eight performances between August and November. While playwright George von Hofmann's contribution was readily dismissed, critics were again divided on Schubert's contribution. But almost all of them acknowledged that his score contained numerous flashes of originality and brilliance. November also marked the marriage of Therese Grob to a baker, Johann Bergmann. If Schubert expressed any regrets at the time concerning this turn of events, they have not come down to us. At the beginning of December August von Gymnich performed Erlkönig at Ignaz von Sonnleithner's. On 9 December the fourth version of Die Forelle was published in the Wiener Zeitschrift für Kunst. Also in that same month Schubert set down the first movement (and fragments of a slow second movement) of a string quartet in C minor (D703, known as the 'Quartettsatz') that revealed an intensity and concentration only hinted at in his earlier work.

(vii) The professional composer. By the end of 1820 the stresses of sharing a single room with Mayrhofer had brought Schubert to breaking point. Early in 1821 Schubert moved to new lodgings in the same street (21 Wipplingerstrasse), although the two men remained on warm enough terms for Schubert to continue setting poems by Mayrhofer. Around this same time Schubert made the acquaintance of Moritz von Schwind, a philosophy student at the University of Vienna who had recently decided to become a painter (fig.5). Intelligent, witty, good-looking and ingratiating, Schwind (nicknamed 'Cherubin' after the character in Mozart's Le nozze di Figaro) became one of Schubert's closest confidants. He even referred to Schwind as his 'beloved'. Unlike Spaun, Schwind became considerably enamoured of Schober and maintained a lively correspondence with him after Schober moved to Breslau in 1823. Just before Schober's return to Vienna in 1825 Bauernfeld remarked that 'Moritz reveres him [Schober] like a god'. In February Schubert found brief employment as a répétiteur at the Hofoper, where he coached the contralto Caroline Unger in the role of Dorabella in Mozart's Così fan tutte. On a practical front, Schubert began gathering testimonials from Count Dietrichstein, Ignaz Franz von Mosel, Salieri and Josef Weigl, perhaps with the intention of seeking a post at the Hofoper or of soliciting a commission for an opera.

4. Charade at Atzenbrugg: watercolour by Leopold Kupelweiser, 1821 (Schubert-Museum, Vienna); Schubert is seated at the piano with Philipp Karl Hartmann to his left, Schober, Kupelweiser and Jenger (left and right) in the doorway, and Josef von Spaun seated second from the right

5. Franz Schubert: portrait by Moritz von Schwind (Akademie der Bildenden Künste, Vienna)

During 1821 performances of Schubert's vocal music increased rapidly. In January Joseph Huber wrote to his fiancée about his experience at the first documented Schubertiad:

> Last Friday [the 26th] I was excellently entertained; since [Fräulein] Schober was in St Pölten, Franz invited Schubert and 14 of his close acquaintances for the evening. Schubert sang and played a lot of his songs by himself, lasting until about 10 o'clock in the evening. After that we drank punch offered by one of the group, and since it was very good and plentiful the gathering, already in a happy mood, became even merrier; it was 3 o'clock in the morning before we parted.

In the same month Gymnich sang Der Wanderer (D489) at Ignaz von Sonnleithner's and Erlkönig at an 'evening entertainment' of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde. In February Josef Götz sang Sehnsucht (D636) at the Gesellschaft; in March Sophie Linhart sang Gretchen am Spinnrade at Sonnleithner's. In March, too, Vogl presented the first public performance of Erlkönig at the Kärntnertortheater. The same programme included the first public performances of the quartet Das Dörfchen (D598) and the octet Gesang der Geister über den Wassern (D174). Das Dörfchen was repeated in April at a Gesellschaft concert, while Die Nachtigall (D724) received its first public performance at the Kärntnertortheater. In June, Hérold's Das Zauberglöckchen (originally La clochette) received its première at the Kärntnertortheater with two additional numbers supplied by Schubert. He also completed the two Suleika songs (D717 and 720), to texts by Goethe, and possibly the Rückert song Sei mir gegrüsst (D741). Perhaps most importantly, April saw the publication, as opp.1 and 2, of Erlkönig and Gretchen am Spinnrade, underwritten through the generous support of Leopold von Sonnleithner and other of Schubert's friends. In 1821 he also published 36 dances (D365, among them the Trauerwalzer) and ten more Goethe songs, including Der König in Thule (D367), Heidenröslein (D257), Schäfers Klagelied (D121) and Wandrers Nachtlied (D224), in addition to such songs as Der Tod und das Mädchen (D531) and Der Wanderer (D489). By November at the latest he had been accepted as a member of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde. Almost simultaneously he was invited to compose an opera for the Hofoper (in fact, none of his operas was ever produced there). By now Schubert was not simply a prolific composer but, in Vienna, a widely performed, published and visible one as well.

In mid-September Schubert travelled with Schober to St Pölten (some 55 kilometres west of Vienna) and to nearby Ochsenburg Castle, where they spent some of their four weeks as the guests of Schober's relative Johann Nepomuk von Dankesreither, the Bishop of St Pölten. Here they collaborated closely on a new opera, Alfonso und Estrella (D732), for which Schober served as the librettist. They finished Act 1 and began Act 2 before returning to Vienna where, on 3 November, they attended a truncated version of Weber's Berlin sensation, Der Freischütz. That same autumn Spaun was transferred to the customs office in Linz; a few months later Schubert wrote a parody of an Italian opera aria (Herrn Josef Spaun, Assessor in Linz, D749) that castigates Spaun for not writing. Schubert's visibility in Linz grew substantially during Spaun's sojourn there. At the beginning of 1822 Schubert moved in with Schober at the family home (9 Spiegelgasse), where he remained until the summer of 1823 except for a stint at his father's house from late 1822 to the spring of 1823. On 21 January 1822, after accompanying Schwind to a party presented by Professor Vincentius Weinridt, Schubert sang some of his songs to an enthusiastic reception. Present at the same party was Eduard von Bauernfeld, whose friendship with Schubert was not to blossom until three years later. The composer continued to become a more visible part of Viennese musical life. In February he made the acquaintance of the visiting Weber, around the time that both of them (along with Spontini, Weigl and Umlauf) had been invited by Italian impresario Domenico Barbaia to submit works for the 1822–3 season at the Kärntnertortheater, of which he had taken control.

Schubert and Schober hastily finished Alfonso und Estrella in February and rushed it off to Barbaia – who then failed to send them any response. Schubert's persistent efforts in Berlin, Dresden and elsewhere to get a staging all failed. In his declining years Schober described his contribution as 'such a miserable, stillborn, bungling piece of work that even so great a genius as Schubert could not bring it to life'. Vienna had no shortage of competent and even gifted librettists, and Alfonso is perhaps one more example of Schober's hold over the composer. In mid-1822 Schubert scrawled in pencil a document that his brother Ferdinand later labelled Mein Traum. In the literary style of Romantics such as Novalis, it recounts the tale of a son who is twice expelled from his parental home and is reconciled with his father only at the graveside of a young maiden. The manuscript, which Ferdinand presented to Robert Schumann in 1839, has generally been interpreted as a 'literary effusion', but its very uniqueness and timing suggest that Schubert was grappling with fundamental issues of family, belonging and otherness. We should not demand direct parallels in Schubert's life in order for this document to shed light on his state of mind. Not only had Schubert become a much more visible part of Viennese musical life, he had climbed to a dramatically new level of creative expression. He completed the Mass in A♭ (D678), begun in 1819. Nothing in his previous church music prepares us for its sweep; in the Viennese tradition perhaps only Mozart's Requiem and C minor Mass can compare in scale and intensity (Beethoven's Missa solemnis was completed around the same time, although there is no reason to believe that Schubert knew it before completing his own mass). In November he completed two movements and sketched the third of a symphony in B minor (D759), which posterity later dubbed the 'Unfinished'. Again, the assurance, the focus and the sweep of both finished movements far exceeded anything that Schubert had previously achieved in the symphonic realm. Yet with their concentration on literature and drama, Schubert's circle of friends seem to have expressed little interest in his symphonic works. At almost the same time he put the finishing touches on the 'Wanderer' Fantasy (D760), a work for solo piano of such unusual virtuosity and construction that it fascinated Romantics (notably Liszt) for decades to come. Schubert also completed more than a dozen solo songs and partsongs to mixed texts, including the headlong Der Musensohn (D764) and the tender Geist der Liebe (D747). In terms of Schubert's creative growth the year 1822 has to rank with the miracle year of 1815. Moreover, for his compositions Schubert was now being paid closer to what he was worth. In the years 1821–2 he earned more than 2000 gulden from the publication of his opp.1–7 and 10–12; the annual salary of a minor civil servant – the social layer from which Schubert sprang – was about 400 gulden. In today's parlance we would describe Schubert as being 'at the top of his game'. Publications continued apace, including Eight Variations on a French Song for piano duet (D624); the vocal quartets Das Dörfchen (D598), Die Nachtigall (D724) and Geist der Liebe (D747); and the songs Der Alpenjäger (D524), Die Rose (D745), Geheimes (D719), Gesänge des Harfners from Wilhelm Meister (D478–80), Lob der Tränen (D711) and the first Suleika song (D720).

During the period of these miraculous achievements, more than one of his friends commented on Schubert's intense and potentially debilitating lifestyle. In 1820 Anselm Hüttenbrenner noted that Schubert 'used to sit down at his writing desk every morning at 6 o'clock and compose straight through until 1 o'clock in the afternoon. Meanwhile many a pipe was smoked'. Lunch included black coffee at a coffee house and another hour or two of smoking. Leopold von Sonnleithner, one of Schubert's biggest supporters, lamented that 'unfortunately, I must confess that I saw him in a drunken state several times', recalling in particular a party that Sonnleithner had left at 2 a.m.: 'Schubert remained still longer and the next day I learnt that he had to sleep there as he was incapable of going home. This happened in a house where he had not been known and where he had only been introduced a short time previously'. Accompanying these excesses were sharp changes of mood, frequent irritability and antisocial behaviour. Schober may have played an influential role in these developments; in December 1822 Schubert wrote to Spaun that 'we hold readings at Schober's three times a week as well as a Schubertiad'. A Schubertiad at Schober's in mid-January of 1823 probably brought down the curtain on Schubert's age of innocence.

(viii) Crisis. 25 years Schubert's senior, the composer and conductor Ignaz Franz von Mosel met Schubert at the dramatist Matthäus von Collin's around 1820. Spaun later recalled that, upon hearing Vogl sing some of Schubert's songs, Mosel declared Schubert to be 'by no means just a prolific inventor of melodies, but a thorough musician'. On 28 February 1823 Schubert wrote a letter to Mosel with which he enclosed the overture and third act of his now completed opera Alfonso und Estrella. First soliciting Mosel's opinion, he then asked if Mosel might write him a letter of recommendation to Weber in Dresden, where Schubert also hoped for a performance. But dwarfing the main text of this otherwise routine letter is the opening sentence, which contains the first surviving mention of a development that altered Schubert's life permanently: 'Kindly forgive me if I am compelled to inconvenience you with another letter so soon, but the circumstances of my health still forbid me to leave the house'. Although Schubert remained circumspect about the nature of his malady, the scattered references to its symptoms during his lifetime suggest that it was almost certainly the venereal disease syphilis. Syphilis was common in Europe throughout the 19th century; researchers have estimated that in some cities it afflicted as many as one in every five inhabitants. Those particularly unfortunate could contract syphilis through a single sexual encounter; more commonly, it gained a foothold in those practising a promiscuous lifestyle; and that such a lifestyle led to Schubert's illness is suggested by accounts from those who knew him personally. That Schubert's nature contained a strong element of sexual excess was long ignored or concealed by his biographers. Many of the relevant documents were known to biographers in the 1850s; but it was only in the late 1980s that scholars brought the contradictions in the composer's personality into the open.

References already exist in Schubert's lifetime; in a letter of 1825 from Anton Ottenwalt to Josef von Spaun, Ottenwalt wrote that 'of Schubert I could tell you nothing that is new to you and to us; his works proclaim a genius for divine creation, unimpaired by the passions of an eagerly burning sensuality . . .'. When Schubert became the object of intense biographical scrutiny from the 1850s onwards, several of his friends provided reminiscences that spoke of the paradoxes in his character. In 1857 Eduard von Bauernfeld wrote to the composer's biographer Ferdinand Luib that 'Schubert had, so to speak, a double nature, the Viennese gaiety being interwoven and ennobled by a trait of deep melancholy. Inwardly a poet and outwardly a kind of hedonist'. A dozen years later he wrote that 'the Austrian element, uncouth and sensual, revealed itself both in his life and in his art'. Expanding on the nationalist theme, he writes that 'the Austrian character appeared all too violently in the vigorous and pleasure-loving Schubert, there were also times when a black-winged demon of sorrow and melancholy forced itself into his vicinity'. In 1858 Josef Kenner wrote to his brother that '[Schubert's] body, strong as it was, succumbed to the cleavage in his – souls, I would put it, of which one pressed heavenwards and the other bathed in slime', appending an explanation that 'perhaps, too, it succumbed to frustration over the lack of recognition which some of his larger efforts suffered and to bitterness at the meanness of his publishers'. Schober – himself no model of virtue – attributed Schubert's illness to 'excessively indulgent sensual living and its consequences'.

These characterizations of Schubert's lifestyle from his close friends – their probity notwithstanding – leave little doubt as to his powerful sexual appetite. What remains strongly in contention, however, is the nature of Schubert's excesses, specifically whether they were heterosexual, homosexual or perhaps bisexual. Schubert's illness offers no help; syphilis can be contracted through either heterosexual or homosexual activity. Those who argue for Schubert's orthodox, if hyperactive, heterosexuality point first to the purported love affair in 1816 between Schubert and Therese Grob. Schubert's failure to marry her is explained by Metternich's Marriage Consent Law, which forbade marriages by males in Schubert's class unless they could verify their ability to support a family. Although lost, a 'long, enthusiastic letter' from Schubert to his friend Anton Holzapfel was said to have described Schubert's infatuation with Therese. And in a reminiscence from 1854, Anselm Hüttenbrenner described a walk with Schubert in which the composer again declared his love for Therese. During the 1820s both Schober and Bauernfeld mention Schubert's apparently unrequited love for Princess Caroline Esterházy. In 1841 Wilhelm von Chézy wrote in his memoirs that Schubert 'honoured women and wine'. On the other hand, it is difficult to explain away Schubert's pronounced preference throughout his life for the company of men. However congruent with contemporary practices in Viennese society, his most intimate expressions of sentiment are all directed to men. Not a single letter survives from Schubert to a woman, or to Schubert from a woman. Any homoerotic dimensions within Schubert's circle of friends would not have been openly aired but expressed through ambiguous codes known only to insiders. Even given Josef Kenner's near-puritanical uprightness, it is hard to imagine 'bathed in slime' as applying to orthodox heterosexuality. Hence we are left to ponder many ambiguities – for example, whether 'Greek' describes a homosexual or a devotee of ancient Greek culture, or whether 'young peacocks' refers to Schubert's need for young boys or for medicinal food. Moreover, the rigid distinction between 'straight' and 'gay', which solidified only at the end of the 19th century, would have been unknown to Schubert. It is possible that Schubert's passions encompassed a whole range of heterosexual and homosexual impulses that he was driven to fulfil.

Regardless of the direct cause, in the first stage of syphilis that followed about a month after contracting the disease Schubert would have developed genital chancres and swollen lymph nodes in the groin. Doctors urged patients in this phase to remain at home. A few months later – perhaps around the middle of April 1823 – he would have found himself covered with a pinkish rash accompanied by fever. By now Schubert, who was becoming increasingly well known in Viennese musical circles, would have had to decline social invitations. From the onset of his illness (probably no later than January 1823) until his death six years later, Schubert would live with frequent physical impairment and chronic anxiety. In Schubert's Vienna the contraction of syphilis was for all practical purposes a death sentence; the time interval between contracting the disease and entering its tertiary, and usually terminal, stage was typically three to ten years, although in some instances it might be a good deal more. Given the widespread ignorance about hygiene and disease transmission, sufferers from syphilis often succumbed to other maladies first. Just how devastated Schubert felt about his sudden misfortune can be gleaned from a rare poem that he penned in May entitled Mein Gebet. Its opening lines – 'With a holy zeal I yearn / Life in fairer worlds to learn' – sharpens in the third of the four stanzas: 'See, annihilated I lay in the dust, / Scorched by agonizing fire, / My life's martyr path, / Approaching eternal oblivion'. In the last of the four stanzas he finds the promise of redemption: 'And a pure, stronger being / Let, Almighty, it be consecrated'.

(ix) Despair and resolve. It is unclear to what extent medical care dominated Schubert's life over the next six years. Several friends refer to hospitalization (presumably at the Vienna general hospital) in 1823, which may have occurred in April/May or perhaps in the summer months of June/July, when red, pea-sized papules may have covered much of Schubert's body. Hospital conditions were unsanitary and often posed more threat to the patient than home care. In April Schubert was probably well enough to pass a few weeks with Schober and Josef Kupelwieser at the Bruchmann family's summer residence in Hütteldorf. By the end of July he was able to travel with Vogl on their annual trip to Steyr and Linz. Schubert wrote to Schober that he was 'constantly in touch' with his physician, Dr August von Schaeffer. During the stay at Steyr, however, Schubert apparently took ill; the liberal politician Anton Doblhoff wrote to Schober some months later that he 'found him [Schubert] seriously ill at the time'. Schubert's illness, and possibly his lifestyle, led to reclusiveness. During this summer Beethoven's nephew Karl, visiting his uncle in Baden where the composer was engrossed in his Ninth Symphony, wrote in a conversation book that 'they greatly praise Schubert, but it is said that he hides himself'. By the end of July Schubert was feeling well enough to perform with Vogl some of his songs for the Hartmann family in Linz. He and Vogl returned to Steyr for most of August. But his anxiety and foreboding persisted. In a letter to Schober from 14 August, Schubert wrote that 'I correspond busily with Schaeffer and am fairly well. Whether I shall ever quite recover I am inclined to doubt'. In that same month Schober left Vienna for Breslau in the apparent hope of succeeding as an actor; he did not return to Vienna for two years. Returning once again to Linz at the end of August, Schubert and Vogl were both inducted as honorary members of the Linz Musical Society, complementing the Diploma of Honour that Schubert had received from the Styrian Music Society in December of 1822. When he returned to Vienna in September he took up lodgings with Josef Huber, a civil servant known as 'tall Huber'. By now he was apparently suffering the symptoms of secondary syphilis, most visible from a papular rash that required him to shave his head. Now under the care of Dr Josef Bernhardt, his treatment (possibly again in hospital) was probably little more than a strict diet. Unlike Schaeffer, Bernhardt grew close to the Schubert circle; he and Schwind agreed to use the intimate Du form of address, and it may have extended to Schubert as well. By the year's end Schubert's health had rebounded once again; he was able, for example, to participate in a Schubertiad at Bruchmann's on 11 November. Two days earlier, Schwind wrote to Schober that 'Schubert is better, and it will not be long before he goes about with his own hair again, which had to be shorn owing to the rash. He wears a very cosy wig'. At this same time the reading parties, suspended since Schober's departure, resumed at the painter Ludwig Mohn's.

Perhaps most remarkable about this year is that in spite of life-threatening crises, Schubert's productivity maintained the pace and quality of previous years. Indeed, it could be argued that a sharpened sense of his own mortality would spur Schubert to even greater achievements. In March and April he completed his eighth opera, the Singspiel Die Verschworenen, based on a libretto by Ignaz Castelli. In his preface Castelli could not resist a boast: 'The German composer's complaint is usually this: "Indeed, we should gladly set operas to music, if only you would supply us with the librettos!" Here is one, gentlemen!'. Although it has proved to be Schubert's most frequently staged opera, the composer could not persuade the management of the Kärntnertortheater to perform it. The censors' suspicion that the title signalled seditious intentions led to a name change, Der häusliche Krieg. But the first, makeshift performance, with only piano accompaniment, did not take place until two years after Schubert's death. Between May and October the composer completed an even more ambitious project, Fierrabras, based on a libretto by Schubert's friend Josef Kupelwieser. Between 1821 and 1823 Kupelwieser was the secretary to the Kärntnertortheater, a circumstance that Schubert believed would facilitate the work's performance. But even with director Barbaia's purported interest in staging German operas, Fierrabras fared no better than Der häusliche Krieg. When Weber's Euryanthe, a heroic German opera commissioned by Barbaia, flopped, Schubert wrote on 30 November to Schober: 'Weber's Euryanthe turned out wretchedly and its bad reception was quite justified, in my opinion. These circumstances ... leave me scarcely any hope for my own opera'. Schubert may even have shared his reservations with Weber himself, leading to a greatly cooled relationship between the two composers. In spite of these discouragements, the two operas did not exhaust Schubert's dramatic output for the year. Around the beginning of December he was persuaded by Kupelwieser to provide incidental music to Helmina von Chézy's play Rosamunde, Fürstin von Zypern (D797), to be presented as a benefit for the actress Emilie Neumann, with whom Kupelwieser was in love. The première on 20 December suggests that Schubert had only a few weeks to complete his work; one confirmation of his tight schedule is his use in several numbers of previously composed music. Remarkably, Rosamunde proved to be one of his most unified dramatic works. In the two months before he composed Rosamunde Schubert was hard at work on the pathbreaking song cycle, Die schöne Müllerin, assembled from poems by Wilhelm Müller. During at least some of this time Schubert was probably hospitalized (and his head shaved); he may have indeed composed part of the tragic cycle while in hospital. Müller's cycle had its origins in an 1815–16 Berlin Liederspiel, a kind of party game in which group members take on different parts; Müller's narrative thread may include autobiographical elements. In addition to the protagonists, the dramatic role of the mill stream is reflected especially in Schubert's highly original accompaniments. To portray the full scope of feelings that climax in the young miller's drowning, Schubert employs everything from the folklike strophic form of the opening of Das Wandern to the through-composed mania of Eifersucht und Stolz. How Schubert became acquainted with the work of the Prussian poet Müller is unknown, but he found him congenial enough to return to him in 1827 for the poems for his next, and arguably greatest, song cycle, Winterreise. In February Schubert completed the Piano Sonata in A minor, D784, whose compact structure encompasses an explosive emotional range and novel keyboard techniques. 1823 also witnessed the publication of the 'Wanderer' Fantasy (D760) and more than a dozen important songs, including Auf dem Wasser zu singen (D774), Frühlingsglaube (D686), Gruppe aus dem Tartarus (D583) and Sei mir gegrüsst (D741). As he approached the first anniversary of his illness, Schubert had grappled repeatedly with depression and despair but maintained extraordinary resolve.

The year 1824 confirmed many changes in Schubert's life. Many of his best friends – among them Spaun, Stadler, Kenner, Schober and Kupelwieser – were now absent from Vienna either temporarily or permanently. Regular contact with Franz von Bruchmann, a troubled son of nobility, and with Schwind filled only part of the void. Bruchmann, who latter described the years 1823–6 as the most difficult of his life, shared with Schober a restless, often undisciplined, search for identity. He was drawn to the early Romantic outpourings of the Schlegel brothers, August and Friedrich. Schubert's relationship to Bruchmann may have extended back to the Stadkonvikt years; Bruchmann was also educated at a Piarist school and was associated with the unfortunate Johann Senn. Free of financial worries, he never trained for a profession, becoming a Redemptorist in 1826. The Bruchmann family hosted several Schubertiads between 1822 and 1824. But Schubert's strained friendship with Bruchmann ended abruptly around March 1825 when Bruchmann discovered his sister Justina's secret engagement with Schober. Bruchmann seems to have intervened in efforts that led to the breaking off of the engagement. Schwind, who had acted as an intermediary, and Schubert both turned against him, and there is no evidence that they ever had contact again. Regarding the talented Schwind, Schubert wrote to Kupelwieser in March that 'thus, joyless and friendless, I should pass my days, did not Schwind visit me now and again and turn on me a ray of those sweet days of the past'. In spite of Schwind's impressive credentials, he and Schubert were not enough to sustain the reading parties and Schubertiads that had migrated recently to Ludwig Mohn's. After a Schubertiad on 19 January, all activities were discontinued by April. In the same letter to Kupelwieser, Schubert writes that 'our society [reading circle], as you probably know already, has done itself to death because of an infusion of that rough chorus of beer drinkers and sausage eaters, for its dissolution is due in a couple of days, though I had hardly attended myself since your departure'.

Not all of Schubert's works from these months, however, were in a tragic vein. In February he had been commissioned by Count Ferdinand Troyer, a fine amateur clarinettist, to compose a chamber work incorporating the clarinet. Possibly in consultation with Troyer, Schubert modelled his work after Beethoven's equally youthful Septet, adding only another violin to create an ensemble of string quartet, double bass, clarinet, horn and bassoon. The sunny tone of the six-movement Octet in F major (D803) carries scarcely a whiff of despair. In the spring première at Count Troyer's, the count played the clarinet part himself. The particular ensemble can be seen as a chamber orchestra; in his same March letter to Kupelwieser, Schubert confided his compositional plans: 'I seem once again to have composed two operas for nothing [Die Verschworenen and Fierrabras]. . . . Of songs I have not written many new ones, but I have tried my hand at several instrumental works, for I wrote two quartets . . . and an octet, and I want to write another quartet; in fact I intend to pave my way towards a grand symphony in this manner'. Schubert had finally given up on any possibility of making it as an opera composer. Although instrumental music enjoyed a prestige below that of opera, Schubert may have been further stimulated in this direction by his attendance at the première on 7 May 1824 of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. To be sure, much of the programme was choral, including three movements from the Missa solemnis and the choral finale of the symphony itself. But it was both Vienna's and Schubert's first opportunity to hear a new Beethoven symphony in more than a decade, and Schubert cannot have failed to be moved by the sight of the ageing composer having to be turned around for a bow. Beethoven's means of creation, which generally involved starting with a modest idea (this can be said of the 'Joy' theme itself) that is raised by stages to sublimity, would have intrigued Schubert but not provided a model he could emulate.

After his 27th birthday at the end of January 1824, Schubert's health once again took a turn for the worse. Even though in February Schwind reported to Schober that Schubert had discarded his wig, the composer was confined to Huber's house as more symptoms of secondary syphilis descended on him in the form of 'lesions of the mouth and throat', aching bones, and, later, pains in his left arm that prevented him from playing the piano. Some time in February Dr Bernhardt introduced a new treatment, which in Schubert's time simply meant a new (and medically benign) diet. This one consisted of alternating days of pork cutlets and a dish called panada that combined flour, water, breadcrumbs and milk. Generous portions of tea and frequent baths completed the regimen. Taking advantage on the last day of March of the opportunity to 'wholly pour out my soul to someone', Schubert wrote to Kupelwieser:

> I find myself to be the most unhappy and wretched creature in the world. Imagine a man whose health will never be right again, and who in sheer despair continually makes things worse and worse instead of better; imagine a man, I say, whose most brilliant hopes have perished, to whom the felicity of love and friendship have nothing to offer but pain at best, whom enthusiasm (at least of the stimulating variety) for all things beautiful threatens to forsake, and I ask you, is he not a miserable, unhappy being? 'My peace is gone, my heart is sore, I shall find it nevermore'. I might as well sing every day now, for upon retiring to bed each night I hope that I may not wake again, and each morning only recalls yesterday's grief.

In response to his despair he kept an occasional journal; writing in March he appealed to the one thing whose loss would be even more devastating than his physical afflictions: 'O imagination! thou greatest treasure of man, thou inexhaustible wellspring from which artists as well as savants drink! O remain with us still, by however few thou are acknowledged and revered . . .'. Schubert can only have drawn great comfort from the circumstance that his imagination had not deserted him, for in the months from January to March 1824 he completed the Variations on Trockne Blumen for flute and piano (D802); the String Quartet in A minor (D804); the String Quarter in D minor (D810), 'Death and the Maiden' – the latter two among the greatest works in the chamber music repertory – and several songs to texts by Mayrhofer. Both of the quartets are marked by such a degree of pathos and poignancy that it is impossible not to presume a direct connection between Schubert's life and this music. In a highly unusual notebook entry from March Schubert seems to make the connection himself: 'What I produce is due to my understanding of music and to my sorrows'. One can only imagine the pleasure bordering on awe with which the Schuppanzigh Quartet (led by Vienna's most celebrated violinist) gave the first performance of the A minor Quartet on 14 March at the Musikverein.

Given Schubert's questionable health throughout the early months of the year, it is surprising that he agreed, after a six-year absence, to another lengthy summer sojourn in Zseliz as the music tutor to the two daughters of Count Johann Esterházy. He left Vienna for Zseliz on 25 May, less than three weeks after attending the première of Beethoven's Ninth. Aged 16 and 12 during Schubert's first tour, Marie von Esterházy was now 22 and Caroline 18. The second stay does not seem to have proved nearly as gratifying to Schubert as the first. He wrote in September to Schober, 'Now I sit here alone in the depths of the Hungarian countryside, to which I unfortunately allowed myself to be enticed a second time, without having a single person with whom I could speak a sensible word'. It is a challenge to reconcile these words with testimony from two of Schubert's friends and acquaintances concerning his interest in Caroline. Baron Schönstein, who visited Zseliz again for two weeks that summer, remarked in 1857 about the 'poetic flame that sprang up in [Schubert's] heart . . . for that he loved her [Caroline] must have been clear from a remark of Schubert's – his only declaration in words. Once, namely, when she reproached Schubert in fun for having dedicated no composition to her, he replied "What is the point? Everything is dedicated to you anyway"'. In an 1869 reminiscence the not always reliable Eduard von Bauernfeld wrote that Schubert was 'head over heels in love with one of his pupils, a young Countess Esterházy'. In a letter to Schwind of August 1824 Schubert himself remarked that 'I often long damnably for Vienna, in spite of the certain, attractive star'. As is the case with Therese Grob, nothing more specific can be traced directly to Schubert.

Perhaps as a homage to the high level of musicianship exhibited by his two pupils (who, according to Schönstein, needed coaching more than teaching), Schubert took up where he had left off in 1818, creating a trio of undisputed masterpieces for piano duet: the Sonata in C (D812; dubbed the 'Grand Duo' by its publisher Diabelli), the Variations in A♭ on an original theme (D813), and most of the six Grandes marches (D819). In Schubert's time music for piano four hands was not simply a convenient vehicle for arrangements of orchestral works and opera overtures (although Schubert arranged four of his own overtures in just this way). Rather, it was a form of music-making of considerable social significance that permitted its executants a semi-public form of physical and emotional intimacy unequalled by any other form of social intercourse. Two generations earlier Mozart had succeeded in raising music for piano duet to a level above most domestic forms; but it was Schubert who took it to a level where it stood shoulder to shoulder with the prestigious genres of the sonata, string quartet and symphony. If Schubert performed any of the Zseliz works with either of the Esterházy daughters then they must have been accomplished keyboard players, for both the primo and the secondo parts are equally demanding. The rapidity with which Schubert could compose a multi-voice work with ten individually set stanzas and piano accompaniment is related by Schönstein: 'One morning in September 1824 . . . Countess Esterházy invited Meister Schubert during breakfast . . . to set to music for our four voices a poem of which she was particularly fond . . . Gebet ['Prayer', by Friedrich de la Motte Fouqué]. Schubert read it, smiled inwardly . . . took the book and retired immediately in order to compose. In the evening of the same day we were already trying through the finished song at the piano from the manuscript'. In this same month, however, Schubert felt sufficiently alienated from the goings on at Zseliz (and, according to Schönstein, feared that he had taken poison) to entreat Schönstein to accompany him back to Vienna a full two months before the Esterházys' return. It is again difficult to reconcile his abrupt and premature departure with the posthumous reports of his deeply held love for Caroline. On his return to Vienna Schubert moved briefly – probably for financial reasons – for one last time into the Schubert family home in the Rossau. To be sure, it was the only place he ever lived in that contained a piano; Schubert never bought, leased or borrowed a piano of his own.

The only composition of any note during the remainder of 1824 was the Sonata for arpeggione and piano (D821); the arpeggione, a kind of bowed guitar, was invented in Vienna in 1814. It enjoyed only a brief vogue; and when the sonata was published in 1871 it already included an alternative cello part. How Schubert came into contact with the inventor Stauffer or his instrument is not known, but it shows the composer to have been friendly to new sounds. A compelling performance on an arpeggione today, although rare, shows that Schubert grasped immediately the instrument's plaintive, speaking quality. The soprano Anna Milder-Hauptman wrote at the end of the year offering to advance Schubert's operatic cause in Berlin. But when Schubert sent Alfonso und Estrella she rejected it, averring that she preferred a role for 'a queen, a mother or a peasant'. Nonetheless, in June 1825 she performed Erlkönig and the second Suleika song (D717) in a public concert in Berlin, and Schubert later dedicated Der Hirt auf dem Felsen (D965) to her. The publications of 1824, although not voluminous, are substantial. They include the String Quartet in A minor, the only one of Schubert's string quartets to be published in his lifetime; the vocal quartet Gondelfahrer (D809); the song An den Tod (D518), Axa's Romanze from Rosamunde (D797/3b); and the song cycle Die schöne Müllerin, which was issued in three parts (February, March and August). He also contributed, as he had in 1822, to a collection of shorter piano pieces published for the holidays by Sauer & Leidesdorf. These later became nos.3 and 6 from his popular collection of Moments musicaux (D780). Schubert may have spent part of January 1825 in hospital, presumably undergoing treatment once again for secondary-stage manifestations of syphilis.

(x) Respite: the summer of 1825. In the first two years of his illness Schubert had suffered symptoms that were intermittent and variable but occurred at relatively close intervals. Hence the symptom-free period from roughly February 1825 until the first half of 1826 was one for which the composer must have been extraordinarily grateful. He may have even concluded that he was cured (spontaneous cures were rare but not unheard of). The absence of both Schober and Kupelwieser may have stimulated new friendships in Vienna. In February Schwind took Schubert to a marathon visit with Bauernfeld, who remarked with satisfaction in his diary that previously he had been only 'distantly acquainted' with the composer. The three soon became a threesome. Late that same month Sophie Müller, a 22-year-old principal singer at the Burgtheater, invited Vogl, Schubert and Johann Baptist Jenger to lunch. When Schubert visited her alone on 20 April she sang at least three of his songs with the composer accompanying. Anselm Hüttenbrenner later remarked that she performed Schubert's songs 'most movingly'. They continued their pleasurable musical visits throughout 1825 and 1826. Schwind also introduced Schubert to his on-again, off-again flame Anna Hönig, the artistically untalented but well-educated and endearing daughter of a lawyer; in Schubert's circle she became known as 'die süsse Anne Page', an allusion to Shakespeare's The Merry Wives of Windsor.

In February Schubert moved to 9 Technikerstrasse, the house next door to Schwind and adjacent to the Karlskirche. Not too far away in the Wieden district, in the house where the composer Gluck had died, lived the painter Wilhelm August Rieder. Rieder had met Schubert around the time he fell ill at the end of 1822, and their friendship now grew closer. Rieder possessed a fine piano made by Anton Walter and encouraged Schubert to use it whenever he did not need quiet. According to an anonymous memoir of 1897, Schubert would walk frequently to Rieder's apartment looking for open curtains in prearranged window; if they were closed the chagrined composer returned home. In early May Rieder painted a three-quarter length watercolour portrait of Schubert that both Sonnleithner and Spaun praised as an extremely good likeness. Perhaps encouraged by the accessibility of Rieder's piano, Schubert worked during the spring on two ambitious piano sonatas. He completed the one in A minor (D845) but the C major Sonata (D840), dubbed 'Reliquie' by its publisher Whistling on the mistaken assumption that it was Schubert's last, broke off after three impressive movements (of which the third, a minuet, is almost complete) and 272 bars of an ineffectual finale.

Hence by the time Schubert left Vienna around 20 May for what was to be the most extended 'holiday' of his lifetime (four and a half months), he was in a compositionally expansive mood. His health had not been this robust for two and a half years. He and Vogl (who had preceded Schubert) met in Steyr, as they had in 1819. Together they then visited Linz, St Florian and Steyregg. On 6 June they reached the scenic lakeside town of

6. Franz Schubert: portrait by Wilhelm August Rieder, watercolour, 1825 (Historisches Museum, Vienna)

Gmunden, where they tarried for six weeks. As guests of the merchant and music patron Ferdinand Traweger, Schubert had easy access to Traweger's 'splendid piano' and lived 'like one of the family'. They were doubtless also captivated by the romantic rock cliffs that rim the swan-inhabited lake and seem to conjure up a distant horn call. It was indeed here that Schubert began the realization of what he had alluded to in his 1824 letter to Kupelwieser as 'grand symphony'. What became the 'Great' C major Symphony (D944, perhaps only serendipitously in the same key as the previously abandoned piano sonata) opens with a sustained solo horn passage that would have wafted effortlessly across the lake. Anton Ottenwalt later reported that Schubert 'had worked on a symphony at Gmunden'. A speculative reading of the date on its autograph led scholars to place the genesis of the 'Great' C major in 1828, necessitating a lost symphony from the summer of 1825. However, the paper used for the 'Great' C major and the works from that summer dated explicitly by Schubert makes clear that the 'Great' is the symphony from the summer of 1825.

From Gmunden, Schubert and Vogl made return visits to Linz and Steyr, taking in Kremsmunster and Salzburg as well. Even in the early 19th century the western portions of present-day Austria had long been known throughout the Austro-Hungarian Empire as enviable 'cure' destinations. On 10 August Schubert and Vogl arrived in the more remote, cliffside town of Bad Gastein, famous for its vertical drops and waterfalls. Here Schubert not only worked further on the 'Great' C major Symphony but also composed the Piano Sonata in D major (D850), a work of torrential energy in its first and third movements and of symphonic scope in its slow movement. The technical demands on a fully professional pianist such as its dedicatee Karl Maria von Bocklet were substantial. While at Bad Gastein Schubert also composed Die Allmacht (D852), an epochal hymn of praise to a deity described by the poet Johann Ladislaus Pyrker (whom he met there) in a series of powerful nature metaphors. Schubert himself described the environs of Gmunden as 'truly heavenly'; of Salzburg and Bad Gastein, whose 'mountains rise higher and higher', he wrote that 'the country surpasses the wildest imagination'. He was equally impressed with man-made triumphs, such as Salzburg Cathedral. Virtually everywhere that he and Vogl went they performed recent songs such as Ave Maria!, the third of the three Ellen songs on texts from the Lady of the Lake by Sir Walter Scott (D839); Schubert and Vogl both regularly performed songs specified for women. About their collaboration Schubert remarked to his brother Ferdinand: 'The manner in which Vogl sings and the way I accompany, as though we were one at such a moment, is something quite new and unheard-of for these people'. When Schubert finally returned to Vienna in early October he learnt that the month before he had been elected a representative (Ersatzmann) of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde. The publications of 1825 numbered more than half a dozen songs, including Die junge Nonne (D828), composed at the beginning of the year; two works for piano duet; and the Mass in C major (D452) – the only mass of his published in his lifetime.

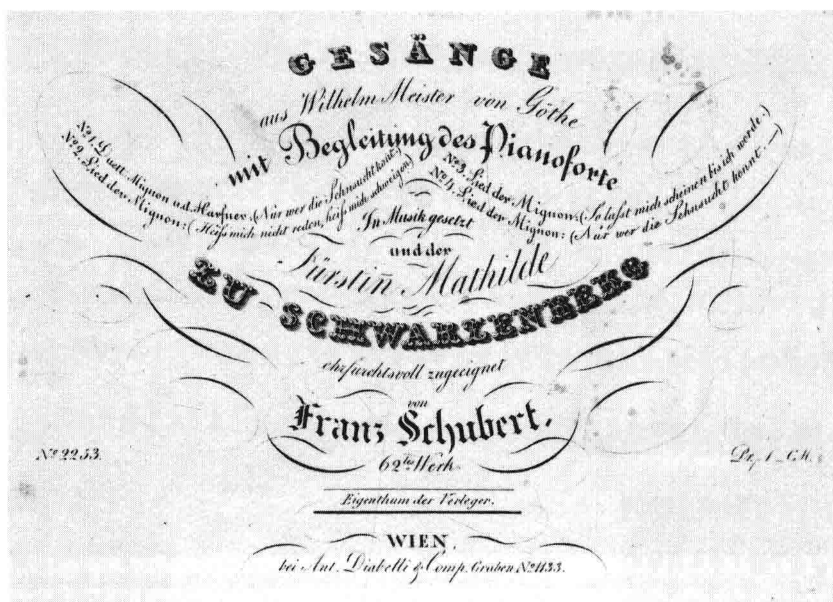
(xi) Return to reality. Schubert's lengthy summer sojourn of 1825 marked the happiest period of his brief life. Over the next three years his fortune, his finances and his health would wane steadily, yet during this time he would produce a string of works demonstrating his idiosyncratic mastery of instrumental as well as vocal music. In July 1825 Schober had returned from his two-year sojourn in Breslau; during much of 1826 Schubert was to live with Schober at two locations in the suburb of Währing and one in Vienna (6 Bäckerstrasse), moves necessitated by his family's loss of their luxury apartment in the Tuchlauben. Schober's financial situation deteriorated to the point where he had to take the previously unthinkable step of seeking employment. The Swiss publisher Nägeli approached Schubert about contributing a piano sonata to an anthology, but could not agree to the confident composer's healthy fee. In late January the Schuppanzigh Quartet rehearsed the D minor Quartet in Schubert's presence and then gave a private performance on 1 February in the rooms of the tenor Josef Barth. According to Franz Lachner, who hosted the rehearsal, Schuppanzigh, a keen advocate of new music, told Schubert: 'My dear fellow, this is no good, leave it alone; you stick to your songs!'. Schubert seems to have been little fazed; in June he began work on, and quickly completed, his last string quartet (in G major, D887), a work of striking originality. Throughout much of the year Schubert continued to expand and revise his C major Symphony with the hope of securing a performance by the Gesellschaft orchestra. In October he formally presented the work to the Gesellschaft with the idealistic dedication: 'Persuaded of the Austrian Musical Society's noble intention to support any artistic endeavour as far as possible, I venture, as a native artist, to dedicate to them this, my symphony, and to commend it most politely to their protection'. As a 'token of obligation' the Gesellschaft steering committee sent Schubert 100 florins and arranged for the copying of the parts. But they did not commit to what he longed for most – a performance. Performances of Schubert's smaller works continued at infrequent Schubertiads: one on 31 May at the apartment of Spaun's friend Karl Enderes, and a mammoth one at Spaun's on 15 December, at which Schubert played piano duets with Josef von Gahy and Vogl sang 'almost 30 splendid songs'. This is the event believed to be memorialized in the thickly populated sepia drawing of 1868 by Moritz von Schwind (fig.7). The 58-year-old Vogl had returned from Italy in April and announced his engagement to Kunigunde Rosa, the daughter of a curator of the Belvedere Art Gallery and 27 years his junior. Leopold Kupelwieser finally married his sweetheart Johanna Lutz, and both men were therefore less closely affiliated with Schubert's inner circle. In February Schubert heard performances of Beethoven's Second Symphony and Overture to Egmont, the Hallelujah Chorus from Handel's Messiah and chamber music by Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven performed by the Schuppanzigh Quartet – all on the same day.



Schubert's old teacher Salieri had died in May 1825 and his deputy Josef Eybler was eventually named to replace him. Hence in April 1826 Schubert applied for the vacant position of second court Kapellmeister. Not until January the following year did he learn that the position had been abolished and a court organist appointed instead. It is entirely possible that Schubert's lifestyle, politics and unreliability in keeping appointments prevented his obtaining this or any other regular post during his lifetime. Nor did Schubert's almost two-year respite from the symptoms of secondary syphilis continue. When Bauernfeld returned from Gmunden in July he found 'Schubert ailing (he needs "young peacocks", like Benvenuto Cellini), Schwind morose, Schober idle, as usual'. If the 'young peacocks' refer to adolescent boys rather than a dietetic antidote to syphilis, Schubert's friends would have been no more explicit. Bauernfeld had invited Schubert to join him in Gmunden, but the composer replied in characteristic fashion: 'I cannot possibly get to Gmunden or anywhere else, for I have no money at all, and altogether things go very badly with me. I do not fret about it, and am cheerful'. A final chapter in the history of Schubert's frustrated attempts to succeed in opera was played out in 1826. Early in the year Bauernfeld persuaded the composer to tackle Der Graf von Gleichen, the tale of a medieval count on a crusade who falls in love with a Saracen princess, Suleika, and then brings her into his home as a ménage à trois with his wife. It is almost inconceivable that both men could not have foreseen troubles with the censor, but Schubert charged ahead anyway. When the censor predictably banned the libretto in October, Schubert continued to work on it through parts of 1827, drafting almost 3000 bars in short score for the first two acts. His encounters with opera were finally over. Nor was he very successful in obtaining broader publication of his instrumental music. Breitkopf & Härtel – who eventually published the 'Great' C major Symphony and 39 volumes of his complete works – did not even answer Schubert's proposal. The publisher Heinrich Probst in Leipzig wrote back to Schubert that 'the public does not yet sufficiently and generally understand the peculiar, often ingenious, but perhaps now and then somewhat curious procedures of your mind's creations'. Nonetheless, 1826 saw the publication of two piano sonatas (in A minor, D845, and D major, D850), four works for piano duet and almost a dozen songs, including Du bist die Ruh (D776) and Lachen und Weinen (D777). In addition to the G major String Quartet, Schubert completed the spacious and meditative Piano Sonata in G major (D894), three exquisite Shakespeare settings (D888, 889, 891) and the four Gesänge aus Wilhelm Meister of Goethe (D877; fig.8). In October he also responded to the fresh presence in Vienna of the violin virtuoso Josef Slavík with the energetic Rondo for violin and piano in B minor (D895).

7. Schubert evening at the home of Josef von Spaun: sepia drawing by Moritz von Schwind, 1868 (Historisches Museum, Vienna); Schubert is at the piano, with Vogl on his right, and Spaun on his left

For the first few months of 1827 Schubert lived alone near the Karolinentor (opposite the present Stadtpark). The diary of the Hartmann brothers testifies to frequent parties as well as after-hour celebrations at Zum grünen Anker, a popular restaurant and tavern. In March Schubert moved in with Schober for the last time, remaining, except for a two-month holiday, at the new house on the Tuchlauben (where he had his own music room) until his final move to his brother Ferdinand's in August 1828. Early in the year at Artaria's Schubert heard the première of his splendid Rondo, written for and performed by Slavík and Bocklet. The most dramatic event in the first months of the year was the death of Beethoven on 26 March. He had contracted pneumonia in December of the previous year and by mid-January a failing liver and a stomach disorder had sealed his fate. The often fanciful Anton Schindler claimed to have set out in February to distract Beethoven from his fate by bringing to the composer, largely in manuscript, some 60 songs and vocal works. Beethoven expressed amazement that Schubert had already composed over 500 songs by the age of 30 and was even more astonished at the content of those he perused (they included Die junge Nonne and Viola). Beethoven, reported Schindler, cried out the oft-cited line: 'Truly in Schubert there dwells a divine spark'. Did he also predict that Schubert would yet 'make a great stir in the world'? Schindler's virtually wholesale forgeries in Beethoven's conversation books leaves us little choice but to be sceptical, yet the broad outlines of his story sound at least plausible. And what might Beethoven have thought if he had seen some of the mature piano sonatas, string quartets or the 'Great' C major Symphony? While it is tempting to imagine a face-to-face meeting between Vienna's two most distinguished composers, their combined reclusiveness would have made such a meeting extremely unlikely – a view reinforced by Spaun. Schubert was among the thousands who attended Beethoven's funeral a few weeks later, and his growing status was symbolized by his serving as a torchbearer. Following the ceremony, which culminated in an oration by Franz Grillparzer, Schubert, Schober, Schwind and Franz von Hartmann retired to the castle of Eisenstadt, where they reflected on Beethoven's achievements and passing until 1 a.m. A fellow torchbearer at the funeral was the German composer Johann Nepomuk Hummel, whose fame easily surpassed that of Schubert. While still in Vienna, Hummel, his precocious 16-year-old student Ferdinand Hiller, Schubert and Vogl were invited to dinner by Katharina Lászny, a former Viennese opera singer married, following several high-society liaisons, to a wealthy Hungarian nobleman. More than 50 years later Hiller recalled the magic of the evening: 'One song was followed by another . . . Schubert had but little technique, Vogl had but little voice, but they both had so much life and feeling, and were so completely absorbed in their performances, that the wonderful compositions could not have been interpreted with greater clarity and, at the same time, with greater vision'. So impressed was Schubert by Hummel that he dedicated his last three piano sonatas to him; by the time they were published in 1839, Hummel was dead, prompting Artaria to change the dedication to Schumann.

8. Title-page of Schubert's 'Gesänge aus Wilhelm Meister von Goethe' D877, published by Diabelli on 2 March 1827

After his frustrating experience with Probst, Schubert had considerably more success with Tobias Haslinger, who published 12 Valses nobles (D969) for piano in January, the G major Piano Sonata in April, and three Seidl settings in May. The proceeds from the sale may have facilitated Schubert's leaving for a two-month working holiday in Dornbach (probably often in Schober's company), a village a few kilometres north-west of Vienna. His principal creative activity was work on the unfinished opera Der Graf von Gleichen. While on holiday Schubert was also elected – at the age of only 30 – to full membership of the steering committee of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde; he responded in writing that 'I declare my gratification at the honour accorded to me by this election, and my entire readiness to fulfil all duties connected with the same'. In mid-April Schubert attended at the Musikverein the first public performance by an augmented Schuppanzigh Quartet of the Octet in F major. On 21 April Spaun presented a Schubertiad that, according to Franz von Hartmann's diary, enjoyed 'an enormous attendance'. Hartmann also wrote that 'at 12 o'clock we left . . . and a larger party went to Bogner's, where however for that very reason it was no longer particularly jolly, and the glorious impressions of the Schubertiad were lessened'. Another cause may have been Schubert's state of mind, which Bauernfeld noted in early June as depressed. Schubert must have realized that his respite from syphilitic symptoms could end at any time. In early September he accepted an invitation arranged by Johann Jenger, a fine pianist, to visit Marie Pachler (another pianist, commended by Beethoven) in Graz. They stayed for three weeks, sandwiching in a side visit to Wildbach Castle and attending a charity concert of the Styrian Music Society that included three of Schubert's vocal works. Upon his return to Vienna he wrote to Frau Pachler that 'my usual headaches [a classic symptom of secondary syphilis] are assailing me again'; indeed, while enjoying the Pachler family's hospitality in Graz, Schubert had cancelled an appointment with a music lover, probably for the 'usual' reason. Hartmann's diary made the blanket observation about the autumn of 1827 that 'every Wednesday and Saturday evening we go to the alehouse, where Enk, Schober, Schubert and Spaun can be found'.

Since February Schubert had been preoccupied with a melancholy cycle of poems by Wilhelm Müller, Die Winterreise. Its deeply interior, two-part tale of a young man unlucky in love who wanders across the frozen landscape had obvious parallels with Die schöne Müllerin of four years earlier, but Müller's new poems elicited even greater pathos from Schubert's pen. He apparently did not discover part 2 until October, probably completing the full 24-poem cycle before the end of the year. Spaun wrote that 'we were quite dumbfounded by the gloomy mood of these songs . . .. To which Schubert replied, "I like these songs more than all the others and you will get to like them too". They did, especially in Vogl's dramatic renditions. Spaun added that the songs of Winterreise 'were his real swansong. From then on he was a sick man, although his outward condition gave no immediate cause for alarm'. Gone for the most part are the spontaneous, arching melodies of Die schöne Müllerin, replaced by declamatory lines in a narrow range and repetitive rhythms that underscore the bleak landscape. Two thirds of the songs are in minor, and those in major, such as the subdominant-inflected Die Nebensonnen, are often heartbreakingly sad. Yet Schubert's personal gloom did not produce uniformly gloomy music. A flood of works were begun or completed in the autumn. Throughout much of 1827 he worked in spurts on the spacious and elated Piano Trio in B♭ major (D898). In November he began work on its equally convivial sibling, the Piano Trio in E♭ major (D929). One of them (probably D898) was performed at the Musikverein at the end of December. Both sets of the wide-ranging impromptus for piano (D899, D935) were completed by the end of the year. If we also take into account the Eight Variations on a theme from Hérold's opera Marie for piano duet (D908) of February, the Fantasia in C major for violin and piano (D934) of December, songs on texts by Leitner, Metastasio, Rochlitz and Schober, and the publication of almost 30 works, 1827 was an auspicious year.

9. Schubertiad, probably at the home of the Fröhlich sisters with Schubert and Josefine Fröhlich at the piano accompanying the baritone Johann Michael Vogl: drawing by Ferdinand Georg Waldmüller from his 1827 sketchbook (A-Wn)

(xii) Beginnings and the end (1828). Schubert began his final year with the familiar celebrations at Schober's. Along with friends such as Schober, Spaun, Schwind, Bauernfeld and the von Hartmann brothers, he made his way at 2 a.m. to Bogner's coffee house to celebrate and ponder the future. It seemed most promising. The reading sessions that had been suspended since 1824 were now revived at Schober's. On 20 January Slavík and Bocklet gave the première of the Fantasy for violin and piano at Slavík's private concert. On 15 January Spaun – Schubert's friend of longest standing – announced his long-awaited engagement. Schubert, although disappointed at the prospect of having to share his old friend, proposed a musical evening in honour of Spaun and his fiancée, Franziska von Ehrenwerth. On 28 January Bocklet, Schuppanzigh and Linke played one of the piano trios, after which Schubert and Bocklet played piano duets (including the magnificent A♭ Variations) so brilliantly that, Spaun recalled, 'everyone was enchanted and the highly delighted Bocklet embraced his friend [Schubert]'. It was not only the last Schubertiad at Spaun's, but the last one altogether. In the same month Schubert had begun work on the Fantasy in F minor for piano duet (D940), his most cathartic and structurally integrated work in that medium. The dedication to Caroline Esterházy testifies to the esteem in which he held her, although it stops short of being a clear-cut declaration of love. When two German publishers, Schott in Mainz and Probst in Leipzig, contacted Schubert about potential works, he replied with a varied list of largely instrumental compositions. Schott at first offered to take the second set of impromptus, but withdrew when his Paris office advised that they were 'too difficult for trifles'. Probst accepted and published the E♭ Piano Trio, including cuts in the finale that Schubert's friends had apparently urged.

For the first time in his career, Schubert felt emboldened to present a public concert devoted entirely to his own music. The Gesellschaft placed its concert hall in the Tuchlauben at his disposal. First planned for 21 March, it was changed to 26 March, the first anniversary of Beethoven's death. If the even-numbered verses of the one work composed especially for this evening, Auf dem Strom for tenor, horn and piano (D943), were meant to recall the Funeral March of Beethoven's 'Eroica' Symphony, then Schubert's homage could not have been more complete. Along with a group of songs (some recent, others as much as 12 years old), the Schuppanzigh Quartet played the first movement of the G major Quartet, and its members joined Bocklet in a performance of the E♭ Piano Trio. Those who commented on the evening all state that the hall was full to capacity; in the end Schubert netted the healthy sum of 800 florins – enough to sustain a civil servant for many months. Money, however, always slipped quickly through Schubert's fingers. Of their group finances, Bauernfeld wrote: 'Whoever was flush at the moment paid . . . for the others . . . among the three of us [Bauernfeld, Schwind and Schubert] it was Schubert who played the part of a Croesus and who, off and on, found himself swimming in money'. Schubert insisted on paying for tickets to hear Paganini, who gave several concerts in Vienna in 1828. After the concert Schubert treated him and Bauernfeld to several bottles of wine before moving on to the inn zur Schnecke for more celebrations with Franz von Hartmann.

Schubert's exploration of novel keyboard styles continued in May with the Drei Klavierstücke (D946); he may have expected the publisher to add fanciful titles. Around the same time he completed the passionate Allegro in A minor and the Rondo in A major, both for piano four hands. These two polarized works completed Schubert's extraordinary exploration of music for piano duet. An unrelated exception occurred the next month, when Schubert and his composer friend Lachner set off on a two-day excursion to Heiligenkreuz, where they hoped to hear the fine organ in the Cistercian monastery. In Baden, where they spent the night, Schubert proposed that each of them compose a fugue to be played at the monastery. By midnight, according to Lachner, they were finished, and at 6 o'clock the next morning they commenced the last leg of their journey. Both fugues were played in the presence of several monks, whose reactions are unrecorded. Diabelli's publication of Schubert's Fugue in E minor (D952) – saturated with pre-Wagnerian chromaticism – as a piano duet probably stemmed from his desire to make it more saleable. Meanwhile, Schubert continued to collect accolades, both in private correspondence (as from the University of Breslau music lecturer J.T. Mosewius on both Müller song cycles) and in print, as in a review in the Wiener Zeitschrift für Kunst praising part 1 of Winterreise and the Rondo in B minor for violin and piano. In June Schubert turned, without any apparent external stimulus, for the last time to the mass. The Mass in E♭ major (D950), while in some respects more restrained than the A♭ Mass begun almost a decade before, shows Schubert's mastery of a wide range of choral textures.

As summer approached Schubert investigated the possibilities of another holiday in Graz with Jenger at the Pachlers, or in Gmunden. The exact reasons for delays are not known, but it may be that Schubert already felt unwell enough to be wary of straying too far from Vienna. In July, perhaps commissioned by the cantor Salomon Sulzer, he set Psalm xcii (D953) for soloists and chorus. In August Schubert's physical distress was great enough for him to consult the court physician, Dr Ernst Rinna, who made the ultimately fatal recommendation that Schubert move in with his brother Ferdinand in the Viennese suburb of Wieden. On 1 September Schubert joined his brother in a new building on Kettenbrückengasse 6, whose cleaner air on the outside was unfortunately complemented by very damp air on the inside. Schubert's symptoms, which may have included giddiness and headaches, were not enough to deter him from composing or completing a rich array of ambitious works that included the songs posthumously published as Schwanengesang (D957, August and October), the last three piano sonatas (D958–60, September), the String Quintet in C major (D956, September–October) and Der Hirt auf dem Felsen (D965, October) for voice, clarinet and piano. The seven poems each by Rellstab and Heine that make up the posthumously titled Schwanengesang were probably intended for separate publication. From the rippling demisemiquavers of Liebesbotschaft to the languid triplets of Ständchen, from the ebullience of Abschied to the sprawling gloom of In der Ferne, the emotional range of the Rellstab settings is staggering. Five of the seven Heine poems are deeply tragic, and with a remakable economy Schubert plumbs the essence of images such as Ihr Bild and Der Doppelgänger. Even if we assume that Schwanengesang was begun earlier, the sheer quantity and quality of productivity in Schubert's last months point to a man who has by sheer force of will resolved not to acknowledge his failing body. But it could just as easily describe a man who knows that his time is almost up – or a man who, in his creative prime and, having survived worse bouts of illness, had no expectation of dying. Whatever the explanation, his productivity remains nothing short of miraculous. The rate of publication remained equally healthy, including the E♭ Piano Trio, some 20 songs to texts by Goethe, Leitner, Schulze, Scott, Seidl and Shakespeare, and part 1 of Winterreise.

It may have been Schubert's deeper study of the music of Handel (especially Messiah), or his attendance at the frequent colossal performances in Vienna of Handel oratorios that spurred him to seek counterpoint lessons with Simon Sechter, Vienna's most prominent music theorist and a strict advocate of the Fuxian tradition. It is hard to imagine why the composer of the E♭ major Mass or the Fantasy in F minor felt it necessary to study counterpoint, but on 4 November, accompanied by the violinist and composer Josef Lanz (who apparently made the arrangements for both of them), Schubert took his one and only lesson with Sechter. On 31 October Schubert had dined at the tavern zum roten Kreuz often frequented by the composer and his family. His reaction to the fish that he ate was to feel ill. According to Bauernfeld, he had felt this way 'from time to time and we attached no importance to it'. Around this time Schubert began sketches for a symphony in D major (referred to incongruously as 'Symphony no.10'). Each of its three movements open new paths for exploration; the B minor Largo, especially, projects an almost Mahlerian sense of foreboding alternating with salvation. Schubert very likely worked on the symphony until he became too delirious to write.

On 3 November he felt well enough to attend the performance of a Requiem by his brother Ferdinand, followed by a three-hour walk with Schubert family friend Josef Mayssen. A few days later Spaun visited Schubert to have him check a copy of a psalm setting he had prepared at Schubert's request for the Ladies Choral Society in Lemberg. The composer was in bed but protested that there was nothing wrong with him, 'only I am so exhausted that I feel as if I were going to fall through the bed'. His fate was now sealed, and his 13-year-old half-sister Josefa and Ferdinand's wife Anna prepared to care for him for the duration. On 12 November Schubert wrote an alarming letter to Schober, declaring that 'I am ill. I have eaten nothing for 11 days and drunk nothing, and I totter feebly and shakily from my bed and back again. Rinna is treating me. If I try to take anything, it comes right back up'. The same letter requests more novels by James Fennimore Cooper, the American author of, among others, The Last of the Mohicans and The Spy. One unconfirmed report states that on 14 November Beethoven's String Quartet in C♯ minor op.131 was performed at Schubert's bedside. Rinna now took ill himself, and Josef von Vering was called in. A bedside conference between Vering and another physician, Johann Wisgrill, led to a new course of treatment. We can only guess at the prescribed medications that Schubert imbibed at regular intervals using his stopwatch. Spaun, who visited Schubert during his last days, reported periods of delirium in which Schubert 'sang ceaselessly', alternating with periods of lucidity during which he corrected the proofs for part 2 of Winterreise. But on 18 November Schubert had to be restrained in his bed; by 3 o'clock the next afternoon he was dead.

10. Autograph MS of the end of 'Am Meer' and beginning of 'Der Doppelgänger' from book 2 of Schubert's 'Schwanengesang', composed August 1828 (US-NYpm)

The death certificate ascribed Schubert's death to Nervenfieber (nervous fever). For Otto Erich Deutsch, Schubert's great chronicler, this meant either typhus or typhoid fever. But later writers such as Eric Sams argue that the most probable cause was tertiary syphilis. Some of the symptoms, such as giddiness and headaches, could have been caused by mercury, the standard medication in Schubert's time for those afflicted with syphilis. Narrowing of the arteries in the brain – another symptom of tertiary syphilis – could have caused a stroke that led to Schubert's fever and delirium. With the stigma already attached to venereal disease in Schubert's time, it is easy to understand why his physicians and family would have wished to gloss over the true cause of death. Still others have posited malnutrition, the effects of alcoholism, and deterioration of the immune system. The imprecision of medical practice and the poor understanding of causality in Biedermeier Vienna will always preclude a definitive account. What is certain is that, even by the standards of his day, Schubert died far younger than the vast majority of his less gifted friends. Two days after Schubert's death a funeral service was held at the Josephskirche in the Margareten suburb. A semi-delirious conversation Schubert had with Ferdinand the evening before he died led the brother to believe that Franz wished to be buried near Beethoven. There in Währing cemetery, in blustery November weather, Schubert, having not quite reached his 32nd birthday, was laid to rest. A heavily attended memorial service was held at the Augustinerkirche on 23 December, followed by a bittersweet Schubert concert at Spaun's. In January and March of 1829 Anna Fröhlich organized two private memorial concerts at the Musikverein, with half of the receipts going towards the erection of a funeral monument. Not until the summer of 1830 was Ludwig Forster's monument with the bust by Josef Dialer placed at Schubert's grave; it was inscribed with the celebrated epitaph by Grillparzer: 'The art of music has entombed here a rich treasure but even fairer hopes'. Immortal as these words are, they also suggest that even Schubert's most ardent supporters had little idea what he had accomplished in his brief time on earth.

11. Schubert's death mask (Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia)

(xiii) Schubert's character and the reception of his works. In the decades following Schubert's premature death, his character – or at least the character that his friends and biographers constructed – was unavoidably linked to the reception of his music. Less than a week after Schubert's death, Josef von Zedlitz wrote in the Wiener Zeitschrift für Kunst that 'his private life was absolutely honourable and worthy, as is always the case with every true artist'. In the wake of Metternich's Europe, artists remained perhaps the one class that society could still idealize. Although less naive, the obituaries published by Sonnleithner, Spaun and Bauernfeld glossed over aspects of Schubert's life with which they must have been acquainted. Only Mayrhofer acknowledged in his notice that Schubert 'had long been seriously ill, had gone through disheartening experiences, and life for him had shed its rosy colour'. Three decades later one might have thought that a balanced assessment was possible – although not where Anton Schindler was concerned. Waging a rearguard action, Schindler wrote in 1857 'does not the inheritance left by our young master declare clearly and distinctly how matters stood in his case with regard to his mode of life and consequently with regard to his use of every hour of his time? And yet the false idea has spread and taken firm root that Schubert led a disorderly life, was addicted to drink and suchlike'. Heinrich Kreissle, Schubert's first biographer, presented a composite picture of Schubert in 1861 (with a much expanded second edition in 1865) as 'a good son, fondly attached to all his family, a firm friend, always ready to do a good turn for any he loved, free from all envy and hatred, high-minded . . .'. In 1873 the American Schubert biographer George Lowell Austin went one better than Kreissle: 'The evenness of his disposition, which bore a resemblance to the smooth surface of a mirror, was rarely ruffled by exterior matters, and there existed a perfect harmony between his spirit and action . . .. The important elements of Schubert's character were a love of truth, and a marked hatred of jealousy, tenderness with firmness, sincerity and affection. . .'.

The centenary of Schubert's death in 1928 prompted a spate of books that continued to reinforce the Schubertbild. In the English-speaking world Newman Flower's Franz Schubert: the Man and his Circle boasted of its grounding in the scholarship of Otto Erich Deutsch. Flower did not look kindly on those who threatened to tarnish his portrait of Schubert: '[Anselm] Hüttenbrenner later declared that Schubert had "an overruling antipathy to the daughters of Eve". But this is scarcely correct. That his love for Therese Grob was the great passion is beyond question'. More than a decade earlier Rudolf Bartsch's 1912 novel Schwammerl and Willner and Reichardt's 1916 Singspiel Das Dreimäderlhaus (English version, 1923, as Lilac Time) had spread the sentimentalized view of Schubert to every corner of the music world. With its brief span, remarkable productivity and lack of obvious turning-points, Schubert's biography facilitated just the kind of rewriting practised by biographers and novelists alike.

Between 1821 and Schubert's death in 1828 more than 100 opuses of his music had been published (or at least proofed by the composer), most by Viennese firms. This was a rate unequalled by any of Schubert's Viennese contemporaries. In terms of the sheer number of opuses, it almost doubles the total for Beethoven over the same period. The differences lay in the emphasis. In this period Beethoven saw seven symphonies and half a dozen overtures published; Schubert saw not one note of his orchestral music published. Schott published Beethoven's Missa solemnis shortly after its completion; Schubert could get only a handful of youthful sacred works into print. Almost two-thirds of Schubert's published opuses in his lifetime were devoted to lieder (more than 175 songs). The 50 Nachlass opuses published between 1830 and 1850 by Anton Diabelli were devoted entirely to 137 more lieder. More than 30 other Schubert opuses were divided equally between music for piano and piano duet. Of his greatest chamber works only the A minor Quartet and the E♭ Piano Trio appeared in his lifetime. At the time of Beethoven's death, virtually all of the music on which his posthumous reputation would rest had been published. Less than a quarter of Schubert's music had appeared in print when he died, and publication was heavily skewed towards the least prestigious genres.

Facilitated by Schubert's brother Ferdinand, Robert Schumann's Viennese encounter with the 'Great' C major Symphony led to Mendelssohn's celebrated Leipzig performance on 21 March 1839 and a publication of the parts the next year. Schumann's and Mendelssohn's roles were pivotal; previous attempts to mount performances in Vienna and Paris had failed because the musicians found the work too long and too difficult. But the publicity garnered by the symphony failed to have a major impact on the firms of Artaria, Diabelli, Leidesdorf, Schweiger and Spina, who continued to favour songs, partsongs and piano music. By 1865 only a single overture (D591) had been added to the orchestral list. Chamber music fared better, with the publication of the 'Trout' Quintet, the G major String Quartet, the Octet in F and the B♭ Piano Trio. Yet almost four decades after his death still less than half of Schubert's music was in print. In 1865 Anselm and Josef Hüttenbrenner were finally persuaded to go public with the 'Unfinished' Symphony, their legacy from Schubert's honorary 1822 diploma the Styrian Music Society in Graz. The first public performance of the symphony under Johann Herbeck finally put Schubert on the international map, leading quickly to performances in Germany, England, France and North America.

2. Works.

(i) Songs. Schubert's first surviving song dates from his 15th year, and he probably wrote the last of his more than 600 completed songs only a few weeks before his premature death. In terms of separate works, almost two-thirds of Schubert's are lieder, and during his lifetime they were the principal vehicle of his fame. The nearly 300 ballads and lieder of the Stuttgart court composer Johann Rudolf Zumsteeg provide one of the few visible lineages leading to Schubert. Spaun wrote that, from his Stadtkonvikt days, Schubert 'never ceased to do justice to Zumsteeg's songs, indeed he always expressed himself with the same warmth about their value . . .'. Schubert may have been attracted by Zumsteeg's attempt to enhance serious poetry (Schiller, Goethe) with music, by his use of through-composed as well as strophic procedures, and by the admixture of recitative and lyrical sections. Six of Schubert's songs between 1811 and 1816, including Hagars Klage, use texts set by Zumsteeg while emulating his general musical strategies as well. Yet from the beginning Schubert's accompaniments bore little relationship to the continuo-derived patterns of Zumsteeg, and his sense of both musical and dramatic coherence always transcended Zumsteeg's largely local phrasing. The lieder of the Berlin composer Carl Friedrich Zelter were probably even less of an influence, though the complexity of some of his accompaniments approach those of Schubert.

While his skill at setting verse grew throughout his lifetime, from the age of 17 onwards Schubert was composing masterful songs that ranked with the best produced over the next 100 years. Nothing in the Berlin school or in the songs of Haydn, Mozart or Beethoven could have prepared Schubert's admirers for his breakthrough lied, Gretchen am Spinnrade (D118), of October 1814. Not only do its freely modified strophes trace a mounting dramatic trajectory that unites the whole, but the spinning-wheel accompaniment serves as one of the protagonists. What may account partly for Schubert's great leap was his lifelong passion for poetry, in this instance his first encounter with Goethe. Schubert continually and assiduously sought out verse that both conveyed meaning(s) and was suited through its declamation for musical realization. His unrelenting search led him to more than 150 poets over a 17-year career. He set the greatest poets of his own and the preceding generations (Schiller, Goethe, Klopstock, Heine, Rückert) but also gave extraordinary voice to his friends (Mayrhofer, Schober, Bauernfeld, Ottenwalt, Spaun) as well as to a bewildering array of minor poets from Hölty (more than 30 songs, mostly from 1815–16) to Stolberg.

Schubert's uniqueness lay not only in his raising of the lied from a marginal to a central genre but in his ability to fuse poetry and music in ways that seem not only unique but inevitable. Like those of Wolf, but few others, Schubert's songs can withstand the closest scrutiny because they contain so many layers of meaning and stylistic intersection. He reinvented in dazzling variety the kind of kinetic, moto perpetuo accompaniment first found in Gretchen: the undulating waves of Auf dem Wasser zu singen (D774), the impetuous brook in Wohin? (no.2 from Die schöne Müllerin), the shimmering demisemiquavers of Liebesbotschaft (no.1 from Schwanengesang), or the gently rocking figuration of Nacht und Träume (D827). As Schubert's expressive range developed, the integration of melody (the reciter of the text), harmony and accompaniment increased steadily. In the laconic Am See (D124) of 1814, the folklike melody and simple oom-pah accompaniment seem reminiscent of Zumsteeg but already include passages where the piano and voice lines interact with one another. By Rastlose Liebe (D138) of the next year, Schubert had combined the moto perpetuo rhythm in the right hand with a slower but equally urgent rhythm in the left hand, both counterpoised to the breathless delivery of the voice. In Erlkönig (D328), from the autumn of 1815, he expanded this strategy into a large ballad structure unified by virtuoso triplet rhythms and concluding with an understated recitative that invests the death of the young boy with an almost unbearable poignancy.

Over the next dozen years Schubert invested every stylistic aspect of the lied with a richness that, dramatically speaking, rivalled and even surpassed opera. Although his harmonic language grew out of the chromaticism of Mozart, his harmonic daring in lieder could approach that of mid-century Wagner. In Stimme der Liebe (D412) of 1816, a hymn to love, Schubert passes through no fewer than six remote keys in the course of 30 bars. In the more expansive Ganymed (D544), he moves through three distantly related keys specifically linked to Goethe's irregular poetic structure. The ecstatic hymn to the almighty, Die Allmacht (D852), moves rapidly through highly chromatic sequences. Trost (D523), a premonitory song about death from January 1817 and headed 'mit schwärmerischer Sehnsucht' (with passionate longing), slips on the word 'tief' (deep) from B major down to the flattened sixth of G major, a relationship that Schubert would invoke repeatedly over his career. Schubert's rhythms, often overlooked, play an important role in defining the immediate character of a song, whether the energized syncopations of Der Musensohn (D764), the floating two-against-three rhythms of Frühlingsglaube (D686), or the static, hypnotic chords of Meeresstille (D216). In Der Jüngling und der Tod (D545) the slow dotted rhythms in the prelude signify the inevitable tread of death.

But it is as a melodist that Schubert formed and sustained his reputation as a song composer. Against the backdrop of Beethoven's predominantly instrumental style there is no doubt that Schubert's melodies stood out for his successors as well as for the generations that have followed. Yet the irony is that no Viennese composer's melodies depend as heavily on their accompaniments for their effect as Schubert's. The celebrated melody of Ave Maria! (D839) leans heavily on the regular triplets and deceptive cadences of the piano part. Each verse of An Sylvia (D891), one of Schubert's Shakespeare settings from 1826, makes ingenious use of bar form, in which the A′ phrase moves through the mediant and the culminating B phrase is the only one to cadence on the tonic note. But the undeniable appeal of this melody grows equally out of the imitation in the piano at phrase ends, the playfully staccato ascending figure in the piano's bass, and the independent melody in the piano's right hand at the culminating end of the B phrase. As Schubert matured this interdependency between melody and accompaniment only grew deeper.

The nearly 200 songs published in Schubert's lifetime are generally performed as if their groupings were of no consequence; but there is ample internal evidence that he compiled his opuses carefully. In op.59, a group of four songs published in 1826, Schubert opens with Du liebst mich nicht (D756) in A minor, followed by another heartbreak song, Dass sie hier gewesen (D775), in the relative major. The third song, Du bist die Ruh (D776), uses a similar form of address to the first song but in a different, comforting mood, signalled by the more distant common-tone shift from the key of Dass sie hier gewesen, C major, to E♭ major. Finally, the whimsical, bittersweet Lachen und Weinen (D777) is in A♭ major, to which the previous song's E♭ major serves as a retrospective dominant. Hence the opus skilfully groups two pairs of songs in contrasting moods but united by the general theme of love.

Schubert's ongoing interest in song groupings may help explain his receptivity in 1823 to Wilhelm Müller's narrative cycle of 23 poems with prologue and epilogue entitled Die schöne Müllerin, published as part of a larger volume entitled Seventy-Seven Poems from the Posthumous Papers of a Travelling-Horn-Player. The growth of Müller's poems out of literary party games in Berlin resonated with Schubert's experiences in Viennese reading circles in 1821–2. He was doubtless also influenced by Beethoven's song cycle An die ferne geliebte of 1815–16. After boiling Müller's verse down to 20 poems, Schubert set each one with a directness and urgency that place Müller's often elliptical or ironic emotions in sharp relief and heighten the sense of dramatic narrative. As set by Schubert, Die schöne Müllerin (D795) is less a tragic love story than a metaphor on the Romantic conviction that true love on this earth finds its fulfilment only in death. Four years later Schubert returned to Müller's 1821 volume and seized on the 24 poems of Winterreise, a more interior, emotionally more nuanced portrait of another lovesick wanderer. Though less immediately tuneful, the songs of Winterreise are structurally more complex and varied. Following his rejection in love, the protagonist ends up resigning himself to the chilling alienation experienced in the last song by 'the hurdy-gurdy man', a perspective that must have struck a sympathetic chord with Schubert.

Schubert's song forms – strophic, ternary, bar, through-composed, to name the most common – are often spoken of in defining terms, but they are invariably the by-product of his encounter with the chosen poetry rather than a pre-existing predilection. With the exception of some of the longer narrative poems, the vast majority of the poetry Schubert set was in some variant of stanzaic form, and his predecessors most often followed this cue with matching musical strophes. While Schubert was sensitive to the poetic form, he was more influenced by his assessment of a poem's emotional trajectory and dramatic possibilities. The result was a remarkable range of variations on a few formal types. While something like a third of Schubert's songs make use of strophic form, only a relatively small number utilize strict strophic form, in which the same music is repeated literally for each stanza. Among the mature works these include almost half of the songs in Die schöne Müllerin and both of the exquisite Shakespeare settings (D889, 891). All of these and other such songs contain level sets of verses (several with refrains) and often project a selfconscious folk quality. But even those in strict strophic form often transcend the folk pattern. The torrential triplets of the eight-bar introduction to Ungeduld, from Die schöne Müllerin, says more about impatience than Müller's four stanzas; the concluding refrain, with its two high As, provides an operatic climax entirely foreign to this genre. In other instances, such as An die Musik, Schubert writes out the music to the two stanzas, whose impact is cumulative rather than serial. More frequently Schubert's strophic forms are modified to suit the dramatic situation. Gebet während der Schlacht (D171) places an arioso/recitative before a written-out strophic form. His favourite variant is to turn from major to minor for the closing stanza, as in Der Wachtelschlag (D742), Tränenregen from Die schöne Müllerin, and Im Frühling (D882).

Schubert's predilection for major–minor contrast, and for minor-keyed inflections within a major context and vice versa, derives from Mozart but goes far beyond him. Along with Brahms, he ranks as the greatest major–minor colourist in Western music.

Ternary forms (An den Mond, D193), bar forms (Die Forelle, D550) and rondos (Der Einsame, D800) are scattered throughout Schubert's song output, always motivated by the dramas inherent in their texts. But the most frequent strategy adopted by Schubert over his song career has been described by Formenlehre theorists as 'through-composed' (German durchkomponiert), a catch-all for all those songs that do not fit preconceived schemes. From the impressionistic simplicity of the 32-bar Meeresstille (D216) to the cathartic dramatic scena Die junge Nonne (D828), Schubert responds in seemingly infinite ways to the inner drama of his chosen poems. In this freedom of structure he is approached only by Hugo Wolf at the end of the century.

In the end, perhaps no one summarized Schubert's achievement in song better than his lifelong friend Joseph von Spaun:

> In this category he stands unexcelled, even unapproached ... Every one of his songs is in reality a poem on the poem he set to music ... Who among those who had the good fortune to hear some of his greatest songs does not remember how this music made a long familiar poem new for him, how it was suddenly revealed to him and penetrated to his very depth.

(ii) Partsongs and choruses. Schubert's production of polyphonic songs and choruses extended chronologically almost as widely as that of the lied. At the age of 15 he modelled a comic trio, Die Advokaten (D37; TTB and piano), after a work by Anton Fischer (although in the tradition of Mozart's Das Bandel); only months before his death he composed Glaube, Hoffnung und Liebe (D954; two tenors, two basses, chorus and wind) for the dedication of the new bells in the Dreifaltigkeitskirche in the Alservorstadt. He completed more than 150 such works, amounting in length to some 30% of his lieder output. The fledgling tradition of part-singing in Vienna was consolidated in 1809 in Berlin with Zelter's founding of the Liedertafel, a men's organization modelled loosely on the Meistersinger guilds. The practice spread quickly throughout the German-speaking regions and Schubert became its most important Viennese representative. Almost two-thirds of Schubert's partsongs or choruses are for men's voices, reflecting the essential child-rearing duties assigned to women in Biedermeier Europe. About a fifth are for mixed voices, and only half a dozen call for women's voices. The remainder are either unison or unspecified. In practice, many works could be performed with either one, several or many voices to a part, blurring any hard and fast distinction between solo and choral partsongs. In these works Schubert presents a rich variety of dispositions, including SATB, SAT, STB, TTB, TTBB, TTBBB, TTTTBBBB, SA, SSA, SSAA, chorus, double chorus, often spiced with additional combinations of soloists. The songs divide almost evenly between unaccompanied and accompanied. Schubert had a particular gift for inventing apt and varied vocal sonorities; in Lied im Freien (D572; TTBB) the outer sections are set in sprightly homophony punctuated by appoggiaturas to celebrate the coming of May. The second stanza's focus on the play of light and shade is treated in imitation, while the leisurely strolling of the third stanza is set as a slow fugato. The accompaniments range from simple keyboard to groups of horns, strings, wind and even full orchestra.

Many of these songs and choruses are occasional pieces. Ten carry generic drinking-song titles such as Trinklied, Punschlied or Wein und Liebe, while others are titled Schlachtlied or Fischerlied. Yet in his partsongs Schubert was drawn to a similar array of poetry as in the solo songs. The fifth and last of his settings of Nur wer die Sehnsucht kennt (D877 no.1) is the only one to mirror Goethe's scene as a duet between Mignon and the Harper, and easily surpasses the solo settings in emotional range. A remarkably high percentage of these works received their premières in Schubert's lifetime, and a goodly number were published. With its elaborate piano accompaniment, the SSAA quartet, Gott in der Natur (D757, first performed in 1827), is a hymn of praise to nature on almost as grand a scale as its solo counterpart, Die Allmacht. The more intimate Des Tages Weihe (D763) uses an SATB quartet to create a sense of gratitude more compelling than could be achieved by a solo voice. Night songs especially stimulated Schubert's colour palette. Wehmut ('Die Abendglöcke tönet', D825, TTBB) contrasts the monotone chiming of the bell with the magic of sunset. Mondenschein (D875), on a text by Schober and which received its première in the last year of the composer's life, exemplifies the best of Schubert's chromatic and major–minor inflections, here in a skein of aching appoggiaturas. Nachtgesang im Walde (D913; first performed in 1827) uses the echo effect of four horns to exquisite effect. Both Die Nacht (D983*c*) and Nachthelle (D892; first performed in 1827) highlight the upper male range to portray vividly the allure of night. Nachthelle is built around an ethereal piano accompanment that invests the choral echoes of the solo tenor with a special glow.

Geist der Liebe, D747 (TTBB; first performed in 1822), easily surpasses Schubert's solo setting of the same Matthisson poem. Ständchen (D920; alto and TTBB chorus), written for Anna Fröhlich, is at least the equal of either of Schubert's more celebrated solo serenades. Certain texts lent themselves naturally to the partsong. The collective energy of Der Tanz (SATB; D826) seems to spring off the page; and the repeated references to battle in Friedrich de la Motte Fouqué's Gebet (SATB; D815), one of Schubert's most ambitious partsongs, call for an equally collective utterance. Mirjams Siegesgesang (D942), for soprano, chorus and piano (Schubert doubtless intended to orchestrate it), is Schubert's most direct homage to Handel, whose music was frequently performed in Vienna. When reading Handel's music at the piano, Schubert is supposed to have remarked to Hüttenbrenner: 'Oh, the daring of these modulations! Things like that do not occur to the likes of us even in a dream!' Amateur choruses and part-singing reached their peak of popularity during the 19th century, and it is to be regretted that Schubert's partsongs, which include some of his finest inspirations, are performed comparatively rarely today.

(iii) Sacred music. Schubert was occupied with the composition of music for the church from his 15th year until the end of his life. In volume his sacred output falls only slightly short of Mozart and greatly exceeds that of Beethoven. Schubert attended mass regularly as a child and probably continued the practice into his adulthood, especially while living with or visiting his family. As with other areas of his personal life, direct evidence concerning Schubert's religious beliefs is hard to come by. In an 1824

diary entry he wrote that 'It is with faith that man first enters the world. It comes long before reason and knowledge, for to understand something one must first believe something . . . Reason is nothing other than analysed faith'. After contracting syphilis Schubert made a number of heartfelt utterances in the ensuing years that may show him struggling to come to terms with his bleak destiny. Less than a decade earlier he had written in another diary that 'Man resembles a ball, to be played with by fate and chance'. Whether or not Schubert evolved a Christian humanism that combined elements of messianic Judaism and Platonism (with its view of life as an ascent towards divine perfection), his involvement with theological questions, broadly construed, seems to have been an important theme of his creative life.

Between 1812 and 1814 Schubert experimented with several Kyrie settings, as well as a Gloria, Credo, Sanctus and Salve regina. He wrote the first four of his six completed masses in close succession between 1814 and 1816, probably in response to a demand from the Lichtental church, his local parish, and perhaps in an effort to gain the attention of the soprano Therese Grob. They bear an obvious affinity to the Austrian Missa brevis tradition practised most conspicuously by Mozart. The first of these, that in F (D105) composed in 1814 for the centenary of the Lichtental church, shows an adolescent composer fully conversant with the Viennese church tradition. From the brilliant use of brass in the Gloria to the kinetic fugue (albeit one over-reliant on sequences) of the 'Cum Sancto Spiritu', Schubert writes with an assurance rivalled at this age only by Mozart. In maintaining a single tempo in both the Credo and the Sanctus, Schubert departs confidently from tradition. Not unlike Mozart before him, Schubert felt no obligation to present the mass text in its entirety. He habitually omits the Credo text: '[Credo] in unam sanctam catholicam et apostolicam Ecclesiam', which might suggest a lack of sympathy for the institutional church. But on other occasions Schubert omitted liturgical text in an unpredictable fashion, a practice that suggests a more relaxed, empirical approach congruent with the practices of several contemporaries. Schubert's Second Mass, in G (D167), was composed less than a year later; scored for only strings and organ, it is also his shortest and most intimate mass. If the dates on the autograph are reliable, he started and completed it in six days. Although its textures are on the whole more homophonic than those in the F major Mass, movements such as the Gloria of the G major Mass brim over with visceral rhythms, wide-ranging chord dispositions and a harmonic momentum that extends beyond mere sequence. By contrast, the Mass in B♭ (D324) is less personal, operating within a narrower expressive range. The last of Schubert's masses in the Missa brevis tradition, in C major (D452), invokes most strongly the examples of Haydn and Mozart, although with a wider harmonic spectrum. During this same period Schubert composed an ambitious German setting of the Stabat mater (based on the paraphrase by Klopstock) and several of his six settings of the Tantum ergo.

Following this burst of activity, Schubert then withdrew from large-scale sacred projects for several years. The most remarkable fact about the Mass in A♭ (D678), whose intended performance destination is unknown, is that Schubert finished it. He commenced work in the autumn of 1819, at a time when he was reaching beyond his seemingly effortless youthful style towards a more complex and personal mode of expression. The years between 1818 and 1822 produced, among others, four unfinished symphonies, an unfinished oratorio, an unfinished string quartet and three unfinished piano sonatas. Work on the mass extended over three years, parallelling very closely the gestation period for Beethoven's Missa solemnis op.123 (although nothing suggests that Schubert was aware of Beethoven's project). Comparisons are inevitable, and it makes sense to acknowledge at the outset that the scale of Beethoven's is epic, monumental and symphonic, while Schubert's mass is more human and intimate in tone (although his orchestra includes trombones), intrinsically spontaneous and harmonically more far-reaching, nowhere more so than in the visionary Sanctus. It is still possible to imagine Schubert's mass receiving a performance in a Viennese church, while Beethoven's demands the concert hall (where, in fact, it received its first, albeit partial, performance). Schubert's mastery of string figuration in the faster sections of the Gloria and Credo and the delicious use of pizzicato in the Benedictus provide an irresistible forward momentum. The opposition of female and male voices in the 'Hosanna' and the hushed opening of the Credo represent colours largely foreign to Beethoven's palette. The confident sweep of the Handelian 'Cum Sancto Spiritu' fugue that concludes the Gloria testifies to the lofty contrapuntal ambitions of a composer who, in the very last month of his life, sought out the instruction of Simon Sechter.

Lazarus (D689), begun in February 1820 without any apparent external stimulus, fits neatly into Schubert's experimental period, for its highly original blending of elements of cantata, oratorio and staged drama (Schubert's score includes stage directions). Although breaking off in the second of three planned acts (representing the death, burial and resurrection of the New Testament character), the highly flexible vocal delivery looks forward to the technique of Wagner's music dramas.

Elsewhere Schubert responded to the imploring of friends and associates. The eight chordal hymns plus epilogue of the Deutsche Messe (D872) fulfilled J.P. Neumann's (the librettist of Schubert's unfinished opera Sacontala) desire for liturgical music that could appeal to the broadest segment of the congregation. Schubert's setting of Psalm xlii (D953) in Hebrew was very probably commissioned by cantor Salomon Sulzer, whose rendition of Schubert's Der Wanderer had greatly impressed the composer. The synagogue in the Seitenstettengasse was only two years old, and Schubert's contribution doubtless strengthened the hand of the man responsible for diffusing historic anti-semitism in Vienna.

As with most of Schubert's mature sacred works, the Mass in E♭ (D950) seems to have been a response to inner need rather than external imperative. While building upon the foundation of the A♭ Mass, it integrates with remarkable success the symphonic organization of Beethoven with Schubert's seemingly limitless melodic and harmonic invention. Although more compact than that in the Gloria of D678, the concluding Gloria and Credo fugues, with their sharply chiselled subjects, suggest a composer who had studied Beethoven's Missa solemnis. The frequent changes in mood and tempo throughout are unified by closely spaced points of imitation (extended to impressive lengths in the 'Hosanna'). Original orchestral touches include the thematic role played by the timpani in the Credo. The 'Et incarnatus est', based on a long, arching, waltzlike melody, echoes the corresponding section of Haydn's Heiligmesse in being composed as a round, with each voice (two tenors and soprano) taking the melody in turn. The flowing but harmonically rich four-part solo writing of the Benedictus looks forward to Verdi's Requiem. The awesome modulations of the Sanctus and the anguished chromaticism of the Agnus Dei, based on an adaptation of the C♯ minor fugue subject from the first book of Bach's Das wohltemperirte Clavier, still retain their shock value today. In the E♭ Mass Schubert had reached his full stride as a composer of large-scale sacred works. The same assurance can be heard in the skilful blending of solo and choral writing in the Tantum ergo (D962) and in the rhapsodic oboe solo that drives the offertory Intende voci (D963), both composed a month before the composer's death.

(iv) Dramatic music. In no other arena of Schubert's artistic life did he encounter more frustration than in dramatic music. At first blush, the sense of drama evinced in songs like Erlkönig, not to mention his dazzling lyrical gift, would seem to have marked Schubert as an ideal composer of dramatic music. But like Haydn, Schubert lacked the instinct for long-range planning and cumulative dramatic development that came so naturally to a Mozart or a Verdi. Perhaps he could have learnt through experience, as exemplified by his growth in the realm of symphonic music. But the circumstances for a positive learning curve could not have been more disadvantageous during Schubert's lifetime. The two principal Viennese theatres, the Burgtheater and the Kärntnertortheater (both owned and controlled by the emperor), were in decline. The Burgtheater had ceased producing opera altogether, while the Kärntnertortheater faced financial difficulties. Nor did the three suburban theatres offer more opportunity. The enthusiasm for the operas of Rossini upon their introduction in Vienna in 1816 had turned by 1821 into what the Viennese called the 'Rossini Rummel' (Rossini craze). Strict censorship introduced by Metternich forbade any subjects challenging the imperial authority. Finally, the paucity of opportunities had drained Vienna of virtually all of its professional librettists. In all it was an extremely poor environment for any composer of German opera.

Schubert's enthusiasm for dramatic music nonetheless overcame any objective assessment of his chances for success. Opera, in particular, remained the surest path in Vienna (and throughout most of Europe) to fame and fortune. Between 1811 and 1827 Schubert began no fewer than 16 full-scale dramatic works (not including the two fine numbers added to Hérold's Das Zauberglöckchen and the incidental music to Helmina von Chézy's Rosamunde), completing half of them. Half of those he began are Singspiele growing out of the same tradition that produced Mozart's Entführung and Zauberflöte. Schubert's first two efforts, Der Spiegelritter (D11) and Des Teufels Lustschloss (D84), were composed before he was 18. Based on existing librettos by August von Kotzebue, a respected and successful Viennese dramatist, their magical plots (statues that move, seduction by an Amazon) stimulated Schubert's Romantic imagination only sporadically, as in the texture-based night music that opens Act 2 of D84. In 1815, the same year that produced some 160 lieder, the teenaged Schubert commenced no fewer than four Singspiele, completing at least three of them. The single act of Der vierjährige Posten (D190), Theodor Körner's improbable tale of a sentry who gets left behind by his comrades, required only 12 days to complete. Its spirited music includes a quartet in the form of a round that may have been inspired by Beethoven's 'Mir ist so wunderbar' from Fidelio. The next, and more serious, work, Fernando (D220), includes a heroine Eleanora who seeks and finds her lost husband, and whose name probably harks back to Beethoven's opera as well. Its one act was probably tossed off in a couple of weeks but includes a good example of storm music and a moving prayer. The one surviving act of the three-act Claudine von Villa Bella (D239) holds out little promise; if ever completed, the two final acts have disappeared without a trace. The libretto for the final member of the quartet of 1815 Singspiele, Die Freunde von Salamanka (D326), was penned by Schubert's lugubrious friend Mayrhofer. Its tortured tale of male-dominated match-making offered Schubert few opportunities for dramatic conflict, witnessed by its tedious and repetitive phrase structure.

In May 1816 Schubert embarked on his first opera on a classical theme, Die Bürgschaft (D435), based on a story about rebellion against the despotism of the King of Syracuse. Probably based on the ballad by Schiller, the anonymous libretto offered a number of opportunities for dramatic development, none of which Schubert responded to. His desire for operatic experience seems to have obliterated any sense of self-criticism that might have prompted him to abort the project well before the middle of the third act. This undisputed failure may account for the interval of almost three years before Schubert's next operatic project, the Singspiel Die Zwillingsbrüder (D647). Adapted by Georg von Hofmann from a French comedy, the story entangles the fortunes of two identical twins with that of two lovers, Lieschen and Anton. It holds a special place as the only opera of Schubert's to be performed in his lifetime (six times at the Kärntnertor-theater, starting on 14 June 1820). Perhaps more than in any other of his operas, Schubert mastered (with more than a nod to Mozart) the pacing and character development of ensembles, from duets to quartets. Even more promising musically are the eight complete and four sketched numbers of Adrast (D137), probably begun in the autumn of 1819. Presumably based on Mayrhofer's adaptation of Herodotus's account of King Croesus, it contains some of Schubert's most audacious writing. Why he abandoned such an intriguing project is a mystery, although it may have been to accept a commission in the summer of 1820 from the Theater an der Wien for the score to the melodrama Die Zauberharfe (D644). Almost half of its 13 numbers employ the technique of melodrama, with the voice speaking over an orchestral background. Schubert appears to have been quite stimulated by the orchestral freedom implied by this style. Without the lost libretto the full context for Schubert's score is difficult to see, but for originality its harmonic language can withstand comparison with any achievements to the middle of the century and beyond.

In the autumn of 1820 Schubert once again took on an operatic project (Sacontala, D701) subverted by a convoluted libretto, this one from the theologian J.P. Neumann; the composer was soon forced to abandon it. In spite of critical acclaim, the two fine numbers that Schubert contributed to Hérold's Das Zauberglöckchen in June 1821 doubtless did little to enhance his reputation. In the hopes of gaining the recognition he yearned for, Schubert finally tackled in the autumn of 1821 a full-scale grand opera (i.e. without spoken dialogue). Alfonso und Estrella (D732), on a barely plausible plot blending medieval chivalry and romantic nostalgia (influenced by the Walter Scott craze that was sweeping across Europe) by Schubert's confidant Franz von Schober, occupied Schubert for over five months. In spite of Schubert's best efforts, Schober's material (involving the usurpation of an 8th-century Spanish king) is too static and contains too few opportunities for ensembles that advance the drama. In spite of some interesting experiments with accompanied recitative, the work moves in slow motion. After completion, composer and librettist touted it around unsuccessfully. With some relief Schubert may have returned in 1823 to the medium of Singspiel in Die Verschworenen (D787). Castelli's loose adaptation of Aristophanes' Lysistrata makes considerable use of both choruses and ensembles, and Schubert responded with some of his most varied music and pointed characterization. This final effort in Singspiel probably holds the stage better than any of Schubert's other operas.

After Die Verschworenen Schubert plunged almost immediately into some 300 bars of Rüdiger (D791), only to leapfrog quickly into another grand opera, Fierrabras (D796). Based again on a libretto by a friend of Schubert's (Josef Kupelwieser), most of the opera's action takes place in the spoken dialogue between the musical items. In spite of several of the finest operatic numbers Schubert would pen, including a serenade, an impassioned rage aria for Fierrabras's daughter Florinda, the ravishing duet 'Weit über Glanz and Erdenschimmer' and several powerful sections of melodrama, Fierrabras cannot hold the stage. It was the last opera that Schubert would finish, although he continued to hunt for suitable librettos for the rest of his life. In the summer of 1827 yet another Schubert friend, Eduard von Bauernfeld, provided the composer with operatic fodder. Schubert sketched all but the final two numbers of the two-act Der Graf von Gleichen (D918) but could not bring himself to finish it, although he salvaged ideas from the first-act trio (no.3) for the first movement of his unfinished D major Symphony (D936*a*). There is considerable irony in the circumstance that Schubert's most acclaimed piece of dramatic music, Rosamunde (D797), was assembled hastily for a play at least as convoluted as any of his most problematic librettos. Helmina von Chézy's Rosamunde, Fürstin von Zypern was pilloried by the critics, but Schubert's ten numbers quickly took on a life of their own. With the composer given days rather than weeks to prepare the music, more than half of the numbers are recycled: for example, the overture is taken from Alfonso und Estrella, the Entr'acte in B♭ (no.6) is based on the song Der Leidende, and we cannot rule out the possibility that the Entr'acte in B minor (no.1) – a fully fledged sonata movement – was originally the finale for the unfinished Symphony in B minor. Given the speed with which Schubert mastered other genres, and given the promise scattered among his operatic failures, his lack of opportunity to learn from actual performances, and the absence of a Da Ponte or a Boito as a mentor, sentenced him to an undeserved fate.

(v) Piano music. Although Schubert may have learnt the violin first, the piano anchored his creative life. His first surviving work is a fantasy for piano duet (D1); among his last works (September 1828) are three incomparable piano sonatas (D958, 959, 960). He composed more than 700 vocal and instrumental works to include the piano, many of considerable complexity. Schubert's surviving sketches suggest that he composed as if at the keyboard. Although he made little use of the extra low notes available on larger Viennese pianos from 1816 (his borrowed instruments evidently did not include these notes), Schubert's exploitation of the piano's tone colour at least equals Beethoven's. His piano music is often described as of moderate technical difficulty, but many of the large-scale works (especially, but not only, the 'Wanderer' Fantasy) include passages that require considerable virtuosity; as to its interpretative demands, Schubert's keyboard music is as challenging as any composed in the 19th century.

Although Schubert returned periodically to the fantasy, his lengthiest involvement was with the solo piano sonata. His first effort, the Sonata in E major (D157), from which three of a projected four movements survive, dates from early 1815. That autumn two movements of the Sonata in C (D279) display a confidence and virtuosity scarcely to be expected in an 18-year-old. The opening sonata-form movement is the first to employ Schubert's characteristic device of a recapitulation beginning in the subdominant – a procedure found in earlier works such as Mozart's Sonata in C, K545, and Beethoven Coriolan overture. The Allegretto in C (D346) may have been intended as a finale. Five pieces comprising D459 and 459*a* have been posited as a single sonata in E from 1816. The autograph of the first (and the beginning of the second) movement is headed 'Sonate', but it is not clear how the other three movements might have related. In the otherwise lean year of 1817 Schubert nonetheless commenced at least five sonatas, of which the Sonata in A minor (D537) constitutes his first completed effort. Its magnificent first movement, alternately fierce and poetic, is followed by two movements of lesser significance. Schubert re-used the theme of the slow movement as the main theme in the finale of the late A major Sonata D959. Retrogressive in style are the three movements of the Sonata in A♭ (D557), which may constitute a complete work. Equally fragmentary is the three-movement Sonata in E minor (D566), for which Schubert may also have intended the Rondo in E, D506. The key of the Sonata in D♭ major (D567) is probably unprecedented; in the mid-1820s Schubert took it up once again, revising and augmenting it substantially while transposing it to the more orthodox key of E♭ major. Three movements (an Andante in A, D604, and the Scherzo in D and the Allegro in F♯ minor that comprise D570) may belong with a fragmentary Allegro moderato in F♯ minor (D571) to form a four-movement work. The piano-rich year of 1817 was crowned by the four-movement Sonata in B major (D575). The exposition of the first movement traverses no fewer than four separate keys in leisurely fashion, with all the material linked persuasively by a dotted rhythm upbeat. Only the short-breathed finale falls below the level set by this first movement.

During the years 1818 to 1822 Schubert left three other unfinished piano sonatas (D613, 625, 655). The most interesting and extensive is the second of these, in F minor. If a D♭ major Adagio (D505) was intended as the slow movement, then only the first movement requires conjectural completion. The compact finale (whose recapitulation exists as a single line in Schubert's draft) combines Chopinesque virtuosity and Beethovenian propulsion to impressive effect. Schubert's first sonata to maintain a consistently high level throughout is the 'little' Sonata in A major, D664 (so dubbed to distinguish it from the later A major sonata), all three of whose movements are in sonata form. In the first movement the serene, expansive lyricism of the opening theme and more assertive second group challenge gender stereotyping, in which the first theme is traditionally more 'masculine' and the second more submissively 'feminine'. The Andante, built on a gently sighing theme is, unusually, monothematic, whereas the finale contrasts the fleet opening theme with a halting second group which then turns into a rollicking ländler. Throughout the finale the pianistic figuration is both idiomatic and original.

Whereas Schubert completed only four of the dozen sonatas he began before 1822, he finished all but one of the eight he began after 1822. Before he began any of them he composed the unique 'Wanderer' Fantasy (D760), a product of the stylistic exploration and experimentation years around 1820. Exploiting every sonority Schubert could conjure up, the four movements are linked by similar dactyllic rhythms and constitute a novel and intriguing cyclic structure; the finale combines a recapitulation of elements of the first movement with strenuous fugato writing. The slow movement, with its elaborate pianistic figuration, is based on an episode from the song Der Wanderer (D489) – hence the work's nickname. The two A minor sonatas (D784 and D845) of 1823 and 1825 are studies in contrast. The earlier sonata was Schubert's most original keyboard sonata to date, bleak, compact yet teeming with ideas. A single dotted rhythm in the opening unleashes a torrent of dotted octaves in the development which are fused with a contrasting accompanying rhythm. After a modest start, the B section of the ternary slow movement soars to unexpected heights over a bed of triplets. The agitated finale alternates eerie whisperings with ferocious eruptions. The four-movement A minor Sonata D845 shares the thematic richness and variety of the shorter work but is conceived on a more symphonic, even Beethovenian, scale. The dramatic range suggests that Schubert had, at least psychologically, moved the piano sonata from the drawing room into the concert hall. Begun and abandoned shortly before Schubert's lengthy summer sojourn of 1825, the thematically more restrained C major Sonata (D840, known as the 'Reliquie') sports an expansive first movement whose deceptively gentle gait is belied by a harmonic audacity (especially in the astonishing transition to the second subject) found in no previous Schubert sonata. With its exuberant energy and rich, wide-spaced textures, no other work of Schubert's reflects his natural surroundings more vividly than the D major Sonata D850, composed during his stay in and around Bad Gastein in the summer of 1825. Fashioned for a professional pianist, Karl Maria von Bocklet, Schubert felt free to give the torrential yet dancelike triplets of the first movement full rein. The emotional range of the slow movement is unprecedented in Schubert's piano music; the seemingly innocuous syncopation that launches the subdominant second group rises to a thunderous fff climax. The driving five-note dotted upbeat of the hemiola-laden Scherzo is a perfect foil both to the trio, with its wide harmonic vistas, and the relaxed, playful rondo finale. The opening Molto moderato of the G major Sonata D894, in 12/8 time, shares its tempo marking and spirit of almost timeless contemplation by the first movement of the B♭ Sonata (D960). Perhaps taking a cue from the corresponding movement of Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto, Schubert 'orchestrates' every triad to maximize its sonority, drawing upon techniques from low-slung fifths to doubled and tripled thirds. The finale of the G major Sonata suggests another homage to Beethoven, here his Piano Sonata in G, op.31 no.1, of 1802.

Only their position at the end of Schubert's short life prompts us to label the final trilogy of piano sonatas (D958–60) as late. Now in his prime, Schubert laid out three independent solutions to the challenge of the keyboard sonata, the first opening with a blatant tribute to the theme of Beethoven's 32 Variations in C Minor. The coincidences end there, however; the ambiguities in the sonata peak in the much maligned finale, a frantic tarantella whose apparently rambling structure belies a strikingly original treatment of sonata form. In the A major Sonata Schubert replaces ambiguity with extroverted clarity. As in Beethoven's op.106, the magisterial opening proclaims the textural and formal spaciousness of the work. Yet it is not without discontinuities; beginning as a static barcarolle, the F♯ minor Andantino contains a central episode which comes as close to a nervous breakdown as anything in Schubert's output, while during the rapid play of registers in the Scherzo he torpedoes a placid passage in C major with a plummeting scale in C♯ minor. Although the last movement borrows its theme from the early A minor Sonata D537 and its schematic sonata-rondo layout and some of its textures from Beethoven's op.31 no.1, it transcends both these models and constitutes one of his most subtle and alluring finales. If Schubert invests the ostensibly confident A major Sonata with a tinge of sadness, the final Sonata, in B♭ major, is suffused by the composer's characteristic melancholy, mingled with a feeling of contemplative ecstasy. The stepwise elegiac opening alternates with disembodied trills in the bass, leading to remote keys, notably F♯ minor, before the exposition is over. The emphasis on F♯ minor (and the enharmonically related G♭ major) in this movement prepares listeners for the remote key of C♯ minor in the slow movement. The suspension of time in the A section gives way to a serene A major melody that mirrors in range and contour the theme with which the sonata opened, while conjuring up the sonorities of the preceding A major Sonata. Characteristically, Schubert's tune explodes in a catharsis out of which the opening stillness re-emerges. The opening of the finale again takes a cue from Beethoven, here the second finale of the String Quartet in B♭, op.130, published in May of the preceding year. Like Beethoven, Schubert feints mischievously at C minor before affirming the tonic key, B♭. But the movement's textures and emotional ambiguity are uniquely Schubertian.

During his career Schubert composed more than 400 waltzes, ländler and other dances for piano, publishing (and probably composing) them in sets. Most were improvised at social occasions or dance parties, then refined and written down later. Technically accessible, these predominantly 16-bar binary forms are rarely routine, and a surprising number withstand comparison with Schubert's finest work. The five Ländler (all in A major or minor) that open D366 encompass the playful leaps of nos.1 and 2, the sombre hymn of no.3, the poignant, appoggiatura-laden inner-voice melody of no.4 and the driving bass of no.5. Pianists such as Sviatoslav Richter have created mini-sets from these groupings, repeating one or more of the dances, perhaps much as Schubert did. The much smaller collection of Moments musicaux, impromptus and Klavierstücke that Schubert composed between 1823 and 1828 are examples of the favourite Romantic genre of the short, self-contained piano piece that became popular during the 1820s (precedents go back at least to Beethoven's op.33 bagatelles of 1802). The compositional freedom afforded by this new genre stimulated some of Schubert's most original creations. The six Moments musicaux, composed between 1823 and 1828, use familiar formal patterns such as the minuet and trio (nos.1 and 6) as a vehicle for enigmatic and sorrowful expression that is quintessentially Schubertian. The enduring popularity of no.3 in F minor, originally published as Air russe, derives at least partly from its anticipation of a pas seul by Tchaikovsky.

Perhaps in response to the 1821 publication of pieces of the same title by the Bohemian composer Jan Voříšek, Schubert's publisher Haslinger gave the title Four Impromptus to D899. In their ternary design the impromptus may have been influenced by Tomášek's 1807 'Eclogues', written in protest to the vapid variation compositions of the time. Only the first of Schubert's impromptus, a mixture of sonata, variation and through-composed elements, is not cast in ternary form. The bold opening dominant octaves act as the foil to a muted funeral march, which Schubert contrasts with an imitative, sensuously italianate closing theme. While less experimental formally, the remaining three impromptus are highly individual. The A section of no.2 is a fleet moto perpetuo, while no.3 (first published in the key of G for fear that amateurs could not navigate G♭) is the quintessence of the slow-moving Schubert melody over a flowing arpeggiated accompaniment. The last member of the group sports a key signature of A♭ major but moves for more than 30 bars through A♭ minor, C♭ major and B minor before finally arriving in the home key. The contrasting B sections of all three are highly dramatic. The final set of four impromptus (D935) was apparently meant as a continuation of the first set. They suggest a four-movement piano sonata in F minor, with the first movement a full-blown sonata, the second a tender minuet, the third a set of variations on the theme from Rosamunde also used in the Andante of the A minor Quartet, and the fourth a highly original finale containing some of Schubert's wittiest and most audacious piano writing. Although the posthumously published Drei Klavierstücke exist only in draft, they hold their own with the impromptus, of which they were perhaps a continuation. In all three sections of great urgency contrast with those in which time seems to stand still. Throughout the late piano pieces, Schubert explores a wide range of relationships between the tonic and the submediant in all its forms (major and minor, lowered and raised), an alternative to the Classical polarization of tonic and dominant, and one that was extensively cultivated by later Romantic composers.

Schubert's most original contribution to the keyboard repertory is arguably his music for piano duet. Although familiar from the 18th century, keyboard music for four hands was largely restricted to ephemeral pieces or utilitarian arrangements of orchestral works. Mozart invested the genre with more ambition but, as with the lied, it was Schubert who took a marginal genre and made it central. His earliest works for piano duet were three fantasies (D1, 9, 48), while a modest rondo (D608) from January 1818 and four polonaises (D599) and a sonata (D617) of Mozartian proportions composed in Zseliz during the summer of that year mark the beginning of Schubert's sustained interest in the genre. His first enduring success was a set of three Marches militaires (D733), possibly written during the summer or autumn of 1818, which was followed by a further 11 marches over the next decade. Schubert's unusual interest in the march scarcely stemmed from any enthusiasm for war but rather from the great range of stylistic possibilities it afforded, from funeral march to evocations of toy soldiers. The best of these marches (which include the six Grandes marches of 1824) exploit the full range of four hands while preserving a sense of intimate conversation.

The Grand Duo (D812) of June 1824 marked a watershed in Schubert's development, instantly raising the piano duet to a medium worthy of comparison with the string quartet or the symphony. Both the first and second movements feature leisurely three-key expositions, with Schubert's favourite submediant as the intermediate key. The massively scored Scherzo, with its minor-keyed trio, is a foil for the sly opening of the finale (initially in A minor rather than the expected C major), which grows again to heroic proportions. At this same period Schubert invested variation form with similar substance and prestige in the Variations in A♭ on an original theme (D813). The seventh variation is extraordinarily bold in its chromatic colouring, while the heavily dotted eighth and final variation leads to a poetic and ultimately triumphant coda. No work of Schubert's, incidentally, proclaims more clearly his love of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony. Shortly after returning from Zseliz for the last time, Schubert essayed the Divertissement à l'hongroise in G minor (D818), which has given rise to intriguing speculation as to the exact nature and degree of its Hungarian influence. This three-movement work is much more substantial than its title suggests, as is its companion probably composed the next year, the Divertissement sur des motifs originaux français (D823).

Between January and June of his last year Schubert created no fewer than three enduring works for piano duet. The Fantasy in F minor (D940) shares with the 'Wanderer' Fantasy a continuous four-section scheme. The haunting opening theme returns in the finale, setting the seal on a cyclic structure; in between comes a Largo which contrasts quasi-Baroque double-dotted rhythms with yearning lyricism, and a fleet Scherzo, both in the unlikely key of F♯ minor. The F minor finale is itself framed by the opening theme, between which Schubert unleashes a fugue based on a new theme. It matters little that the fugal texture gradually dissolves, for the momentum carries through until the final poignant recall of the opening. The masterly compression of the F minor Fantasy is in stark contrast to the passionate expansiveness of the Allegro in A minor D947, subtitled Lebensstürme when Diabelli published it in 1840. Few sonata movements by Schubert integrate so many diverse ideas so successfully. Because of its key, some commentators have suggested that the sublime Rondo in A major (D951) may have formed the finale of a larger work headed by D947.

Belonging to the same family as the finale to Beethoven's E minor Sonata op.90, Schubert's movement is likewise a sonata-rondo, with a central episode that functions as a development and a long coda in which one of the themes is heard in the tenor part.

(vi) Chamber music. Schubert's first instrument was the violin, and he began writing string quartets at the age of 13 or 14. The existence of a family quartet provided the impressionable teenager with a ready made laboratory. Yet the demands of the new medium perfected by Haydn, Mozart and the Beethoven of the Razumovsky quartets took Schubert almost a decade to assimilate fully. The youthful experiment of the quartet in mixed keys (D18) of 1810–11 was succeeded by a progressively more assured series of seven quartets over the next two to three years. In these works the influences of Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven are readily apparent. Between 1814 and 1816, years dominated by song composition, Schubert produced only three quartets whose movements are of widely varying quality. In many of these early quartets Schubert resorts, not always successfully, to quasi-orchestral textures.

It was another four years before he produced the first movement of a quartet in C minor, the so-called Quartettsatz (D703) of 1820, a work of furious intensity that heralded Schubert's maturity as a composer of instrumental music. Its concentration and variety of texture and register paved the way for the three great quartets of Schubert's last years. While the poignant, long-spanned theme-and-accompaniment opening of the Quartet in A minor (D804) (the first of a planned set of three) is rooted in the world of song, the movement as a whole reveals a new thematic economy, tautness of development and phrase-by-phrase logic. Schubert borrowed the theme of the Andante from his incidental music to Rosamunde; but the quartet movement is expanded into a more substantial ABAB form, plus a coda based on both A and B (D677). The minuet, which quotes Schubert's Schiller setting Die Götter Griechenlands, resumes the sombre pathos of the first movement. The ostensibly cheerful opening of the A major finale is undercut by a minor-mode second group and an ambivalent final cadence. Schubert followed the A minor immediately by the Quartet in D minor (D810), nicknamed 'Death and the Maiden' because the theme of the second movement draws on the song of that name. The first movement uses full, almost orchestral textures with a previously unthinkable power and intensity. Yet there is almost no doubling, with Schubert relying instead on an extraordinary range of widely spaced double and triple stops. The celebrated G minor slow movement takes the chorale-like theme through a series of five variations in which, except for the exquisite variation in the major, harmony dominates melody. The explosive dotted-rhythm scherzo is seemingly modelled on the first few bars of a German dance (D790 no.6). The grimly inexorable sonata-rondo finale is cast as a saltarello, and may have been in Mendelssohn's mind when he wrote his Italian Symphony. Schubert's final quartet, in G major, D887 (fig.12), dates from almost two years later, and is contemporary with Beethoven's last quartet, op.135. Although Schubert's quartet is formally less sophisticated than Beethoven's, it is revolutionary in the way it makes the contrast between major and minor modes the basis of much of the structure. Schubert's harmonic language was fuelled from the outset by the frequent equivocation between major and minor; but during the course of his career local colouring was gradually supplanted by longer-range strategies, of which D887 provides the most far-reaching and disturbing example. The modal interplay is reinforced by contrasts of dynamics, spacing and texture, with a telling use of pizzicato.

Between 1816 and 1827 Schubert composed eight works for piano and a single wind or string instrument. The four sonatas for violin and piano (D384, 385, 408, 574; the first three were published as sonatinas, perhaps to enhance their appeal to an amateur market) are compact, graceful works whose unassuming character conceals an intimate understanding of the medium's conversational potential. In 1826–7 Schubert returned to this same combination for the Rondo in B minor (D895), easily his most impressive work for this medium, and the Fantasy in C, D934. The technical demands of both works are considerable, but equally evident is Schubert's penchant for formal experimentation. Generations of flautists have celebrated Schubert's decision to write his ingratiating set of variations for flute and piano (D802) on Trockne Blumen from Die schöne Müllerin. The Sonata for arpeggione and piano (D821), is often underrated, although its cause is not helped by modern arrangements for various instruments, from the cello to the flute. The arpeggione's soulful, almost speechlike upper register was clearly in the forefront of Schubert's mind when he composed this idiosyncratic work.

Apart from a youthful movement for piano trio, Schubert's three principal works for piano and strings are all products of his last decade. The five movements of the 'Trout' Quintet (1819) suggest a looser, divertimento-like structure, while the presence of the double bass gave Schubert the opportunity to exploit open, airy textures. The recapitulation of the opening movement, beginning in the subdominant, is a compressed transposition of the exposition, while the second and last movements make considerable use of transposed repetition, all factors suggesting that the work was composed rapidly. The variation fourth movement is based on Die Forelle, the popular song composed two years earlier, with the song's A phrase repeated to give the quintet theme added weight. In spite of its modest technical demands and accusations that its appeal is only of the surface, the 'Trout' Quintet projects a timeless freshness that has ensured its perpetual popularity.

Schubert probably composed, or at least began, both of his expansive piano trios in the autumn of 1827. His recent friendships with the pianist Bocklet, the violinist Schuppanzigh and the cellist Linke may have rekindled his interest in the medium after a gap of some 15 years. In the first movement of the B♭ Trio (D898), Schubert creates delightfully fluid textures, with the strings now playing in unison, now engaged in conversational interplay, while piano accompaniments invariably include thematic elements. The approach to the second group – the emotional centre of the movement – employs a favourite Schubertian device in which a sustained single tonic note (here, A in the cello) is suddenly redefined as the mediant of the secondary key (F). The intensely lyrical but disjunct theme is expanded to ten bars, with the melodic peak reserved for the final statement in the piano. In the ensuing Andante, cast in a free ternary design, the serene A section encloses a volatile central episode. The trio of the Scherzo, a movement of almost symphonic scope, features a sighing stepwise melody that passes from violin to cello before concluding in a poignant duet. Labelled a rondo, the sonata-form finale opens playfully before launching into an ambitious series of thematic developments crowned by a rhythmic transformation of the opening theme in triple metre. A Notturno in E♭ major (D897) was probably intended as the original slow movement of the B♭ Trio. Its turbulently imitative B section, contrasting with the timelessness of the opening, has a volcanic power found in many of Schubert's later slow movements. The sheer length of this ABABA movement may have led the composer to replace it by the present Andante. The E♭ Trio (D929) opens with a triple-time triadic theme reminiscent of Beethoven's 'Eroica' but soon moves, via virtuoso runs in the piano, to a plaintive second group in the quite unexpected key of B minor. The exposition and recapitulation sustain much of their interest by constantly inflecting the major mode with the minor, enabling Schubert to draw out the descent from B minor to the dominant a semitone below. After reaching a fff climax in the coda, the movement ends with witty and touching piano reference to the second group. The marchlike Andante, based on a C minor theme that derives from a Swedish folksong, employs the same ABABA form as the Notturno but in an even freer fashion. Schubert accompanies the first return of the A theme with explicitly marked tremolandos that lead to a shattering climax in B minor, the key that had played a crucial role in the first movement. The lilting Scherzando, written in close canon, makes one wonder how Schubert could have doubted his own contrapuntal skills. The movement ends with a truncated return of the trio, recalling the final allusion to the second theme in the opening movement. As in the B♭ Trio, the huge finale (totalling 748 bars) frequently changes metre (from 6/8 to 2/2) here to accommodate a hypnotic repeated-note theme. More novel is the varied return of the first theme from the slow movement, creating the kind of cyclic structure that would prove irresistible to composers of the next generation. Perhaps under pressure from friends, Schubert acknowledged the problematic length of his finale and authorized two cuts generally adopted today.

*12. Autograph MS of the first page of Schubert's String Quartet in G (*D*887), composed 20–30 June 1826 (A-Wn)*

Schubert composed two chamber works for unusual combinations of instruments. The Octet in F (D803; string quartet plus double bass, clarinet, horn, and bassoon) was commissioned by Count Troyer, who played the clarinet at the first performance. The work contains a few orchestral-style tuttis, none of which, however, undermines the work's essential chamber style. Except for passing shadows in the coda of the Adagio and the minuet, the first five movements, which include a set of brilliant variations on a jaunty theme from the operetta Die Freunde von Salamanka, are almost entirely free from the sombre colours found in much of Schubert's later music. Only in the introduction to the finale, with its eerie tremolandos, does darkness fall unexpectedly before evaporating in a breezy quickstep march. An internal impulse seems to have fuelled the composition of what many regard as Schubert's crowning achievement in chamber music, the String Quintet in C (D956), whose genesis overlaps with the late piano sonatas. Schubert's choice of a second cello rather than the second viola preferred by Mozart was prompted by his evident affection for the cello's plangent tenor range and by the increased textural possibilities offered by the extra cello. Unlike Boccherini in his quintets with two cellos, Schubert gave each of the instruments virtually equal prominence. In only a few other works, notably the G major Quartet, does Schubert derive a large-scale structure so cogently from the opening material, heard in the first movement as a deeply felt struggle between minor and major; in a masterly stroke of ambiguity, the apparent slow introduction here turns out to have been in the movement's basic Allegro tempo all along. The achingly beautiful cello duet that forms the intermediate stage of the three-keyed exposition derives much of its poetic effect from the reinterpreted G in the second cello that sinks flatwards to E♭. Perhaps the most astonishing feature of the movement is its range of textures (including liberal use of pizzicato), with the instruments often grouped into two pairs plus one single voice. Remarkably, the movement seems to expand the sonorities of chamber music rather than veering towards an orchestral style of writing.

The ethereal, disembodied melody of the Adagio creates an illusion of time suspended. Major–minor contrasts continue to colour the harmonic discourse at both the local and structural levels, the latter most evident in the abrupt juxtaposition of the A section in E major with the anguished B section in F minor. With the return of the A section haunted by distant echoes of the earthly struggles in the B section, it is not surprising that musicians such as the pianist Artur Rubinstein – not to mention the writer Thomas Mann – expressed a wish to die while listening to this movement. Extreme contrasts continue in the Scherzo, where the manic energy of the Scherzo itself provides a haunting foil for the wraithlike stillness of the D♭ trio, which, like the F minor episode of the Adagio, is placed a semitone above the movement's main tonality. For his finale Schubert took refuge in the Viennese dance music he had known since a child, all the while counterpoising the pronounced lilt of the main theme with ppp textures of the most transparent delicacy. In a bittersweet, disquieting ending that only Schubert could have conceived, the Quintet ends with the notes D♭–C, leaving the question of mode as ambiguous as in the opening chords of the first movement.

(vii) Orchestral music. Of all the genres in which Schubert worked, the one that interested his friends and supporters least was orchestral music. When Antonio Salieri reportedly said: 'He is a genius! He can write anything: songs, masses, string quartets ...' it is no accident that he omitted any mention of symphonic music. Along with Salieri, the Schubert circle, with its poets, playwrights, painters and philosophers, was far more involved with the more intimate forms of music-making, especially the lied. Nonetheless, Schubert's interest in composing for orchestra dates back to his mid-teens and dominated his deathbed. He began more symphonies (13) than Beethoven, and completed seven. Schubert's first six symphonies, most of them written for performance by a private orchestra which had grown out of the family string quartet, are apprentice works, full of ingratiating touches and, less frequently, genuine originality. It is worth remembering that at the age when Beethoven finished his First Symphony, Schubert had little over a year to live. Born at just the right moment to inherit the full symphonic flowering of Mozart and Haydn, as well as the intimidating assaults of Beethoven, Schubert took full advantage of his legacy. Although his first essay, an Allegro in D (D2*b*), calls, unusually, for trombones, his First Symphony (D82) adopts the formal outline and scoring of Haydn's second set of London symphonies: a slow introduction leading to a sonata-form Allegro, a spacious slow movement, a symphonic minuet in the tonic key of the work, and a lighter, scurrying finale that opens softly before a tutti explosion. Mozartian touches can be heard, especially in the slow movement with its echoes of the 'Prague' Symphony; but the reappearance of part of the slow introduction immediately before the first movement's recapitulation is an impressive and individual stroke. Although he may already have been familiar with Beethoven's first six symphonies, Schubert rarely betrayed a direct influence in these early works; one obvious exception is the use of the Eroica Symphony's 'Prometheus' theme in the opening movement of the First Symphony. From the syncopated, scampering thematic material of the opening Allegro, through the theme-and-variations slow movement and the off-tonic (C minor) minuet to the use of three distinct key centres in the exposition of the finale, the Second Symphony, in B♭ major (D125), displays considerably more nerve and ambition. The Third Symphony (in D, D200) looks back to no.1 in its tonality and its Mozartian patina, although the jaunty themes of the first movement, and the buffo-style finale, have a whiff of Rossini. Schubert's Fourth Symphony (in C minor, D417) betrays no influence of Beethoven's epic Fifth Symphony in the same key, harking instead back to Mozartian chromaticism. In spite of the title of 'Tragic' added by Schubert as an afterthought, the dominant moods are those of pathos and agitation rather than tragedy. The groping chromaticism of the slow introduction owes much to the opening of Mozart's 'Dissonance' Quartet; but the second group of the main Allegro gravitates to the submediant – a characteristically Schubertian stroke – and the movement ends nonchalantly in the major. Of the two major-mode inner movements, the A♭ Andante includes two troubled sections in the minor, while the minuet, in E♭ major, is disturbingly chromatic. The finale, which also moves to the submediant for the second group, recasts the recapitulation entirely in the major, although the effect is more colouristic than a true resolution of preceding conflicts.

The popularity of Schubert's Symphony no.5 in B♭ (D485) derives on the surface from its amiable themes (the first subject launched exquisitely by an in-tempo four-bar introduction) and transparent, chamber musical textures (the orchestra includes neither clarinets, trumpets nor drums). Its deeper appeal stems from its classical balance of thematic and structural elements. In the first movement Schubert abandons his hitherto usually perfunctory recapitulations for a genuine resolution, adding 16 new bars that prepare for the final cadence. The three remaining movements repeatedly invoke Haydn and, especially, Mozart: the slow movement, for instance, virtually quotes the theme of the minuet finale from

13. Autograph sketches for the projected scherzo of Schubert's Symphony no.8 in B minor D759 ('Unfinished') composed October 1822 (A-Wgm)

Mozart's Violin Sonata in F, K377, while the minuet is clearly indebted to the G minor Symphony K550. Schubert's final youthful symphonic venture, the Sixth Symphony, in C (D589), suggests a composer looking for new directions but not sure where to strike out. There are pre-echoes of the 'Great' C major, but also the unmistakable influence of Rossini, one that also permeates the two overtures 'im italienischen Stile' composed by Schubert at the same period as the symphony.

Written within just over four years of each other, the first six symphonies portray a gifted apprentice largely content to embellish – with a dash of Rossini and his own more relaxed phrase structure – the exalted legacy of Haydn, Mozart and, to a lesser degree, Beethoven. During the years 1818–22 he strove to evolve a more individual, subjective conception of the four-movement sonata ideal; and his struggles are betrayed by the fact that all of the symphonies he began at this period remained torsos. Sketches for the outer movements of a symphony in D (D615, May 1818) were abandoned, in spite of promising ideas. Some two years later a more ambitious symphonic project, also in D (D708*a*), suffered the same fate, although extensive piano score sketches for four movements reveal some original ideas, including a daring choice of the key of the tritone (A♭ major) for the second group in the first movement. The following year, 1821, Schubert completed a draft of a symphony in E (D729) that finally makes a decisive break with Haydn and Mozart. Following a bold minor-mode introduction to the first movement, Schubert eschews the repeat of the exposition. Three of the movements employ his characteristic three-key exposition, and the thematic structure is highly unified. Yet Schubert's full scoring (for an orchestra including trombones and four horns) of less than a third of the opening movement betrays his dissatisfaction with a work that was quickly abandoned, although its completion has proved irresistible to conductors and scholars from Weingartner onwards.

For all these promising efforts, nothing really prepares us for the mournful rise and fall of the bass theme that opens the famous 'Unfinished' Symphony (D759). Unlike his previous symphonic attempts, Schubert fully orchestrated the first two movements, together with part of the Scherzo (fig.13). Orchestral works in B minor were almost unheard of in 1822; and originality informs every aspect of the work. The startling move to the submediant, G major, is accomplished with shattering swiftness. The soaring cello theme that follows and its syncopated accompaniment, are treated at length in the latter part of the exposition; the development works the opening theme to a pitch of almost hysterical anguish before recalling the syncopated accompaniment in isolation from the cello melody – an effect of indescribable poignancy. At the start of the recapitulation the main theme is withheld in order to enhance the dramatic force of its reappearance in the coda. With its towering climaxes, its subjective, almost confessional, tone and its extreme contrasts between violence and lyrical pathos this movement is unprecedented in the symphonic literature.

In the E major Andante con moto Schubert uses a familiar structural pattern (ABABA) to uniquely poetic ends, from the assuaging opening theme, exquisitely shared between horns, strings and woodwind, through the haunting clarinet and oboe melody over a syncopated accompaniment (shades of the first movement) and the volcanic tutti explosions, to the coda, with its miraculous harmonic sleights-of-hand. Nowadays Schubert's two completed movements are sometimes performed with an orchestral completion of the Scherzo and, as a finale, the imposing B minor Entr'acte from Rosamunde, which makes at least a plausible conclusion.

Having failed to complete four successive symphonies Schubert might have given up on symphonic ventures. Yet Schubert's travels in Upper Austria in the summer of 1825 seem to have unleashed an astonishing creative energy and optimism that found expression in the 'Great' C major Symphony (D944). Few works have such unquenchable rhythmic vitality or seem more expressive of their direct surroundings, from the opening horn call which returns as a triumphant apotheosis in the coda, to the brisk step of the stoical, marchlike Andante con moto, from the joyous alfresco dance of the vast sonata-form Scherzo, saturated by its opening motif, to the surging triplets of the gargantuan finale. Having found his symphonic voice – a voice at once lyrical, colouristic and expansive – Schubert was understandably eager to undertake more symphonic projects. The so-called Symphony no.10 (D936*a*) was the principal work to occupy the composer on his deathbed. He lived long enough to sketch a three-movement work in which the last movement was apparently to combine the function of scherzo and finale. The first movement exhibits structural gaps that challenge any projected completion. Like the 'Unfinished' of six years earlier, the first movement includes a second group whose lyrical main theme forms the movement's emotional and structural centre – so much so that the development opens with a slowed version of it. The last revisions appear to have been made in the remarkable slow movement (again in B minor!), which has an uncanny foretaste of Mahler. As perhaps the last music Schubert composed, its mingled serenity and sense of loss may have grown out of his acceptance of his own fate. Originally labelled 'Scherzo', the third movement soon developed into a kind of contrapuntal rondo, sporting fugato, canon, double counterpoint, and even augmentation, all testimony to Schubert's renewed contrapuntal studies in the last weeks of his life.

(viii) Schubert's style and influence. 19th- and earlier 20th-century commentators struggled to define Schubert's style, confining their arguments largely to whether he fitted more into a Viennese Classical or a Romantic mould. In practice, Schubert borrowed freely from the traditions of Haydn, Mozart and, eventually, Beethoven while simultaneously developing his own strategies to new, subjectively expressive ends. Perhaps most significant here was Schubert's extension of the polarized tonic–dominant Classical harmonic discourse to a full range of flat-side relationships – subdominant, flat mediant, submediant and, especially, flat submediant. With its flat-side staging posts, the well-documented three-key exposition attenuated the pull of the dominant. Though Schubert was by no means the inventor of this strategy (well-known precedents include the first movement of Beethoven's Waldstein Sonata), he raised it to extraordinary levels of subtlety. Along with this came both a blurring and an intensified colouristic use of the major–minor modal system. In its simplest form this might involve converting a major-mode theme into the minor (an extension of Mozart's practice), or it might involve a systematic rhetoric of ambiguity, as in the first movement of the C major Quintet. If Schubert's use of rhythm has received less attention, its generally looser, post-Classical structure proved eminently capable of supporting the arching melodic periods for which he is justly known. Although Schubert's melodic gift has long been celebrated, it resists generalization. But his characteristic fingerprints include a predilection for themes that revolve around the mediant, that move mostly by steps but are defined by a telling leap, in which each phrase carries the impetus for the next, and in which closure (often on to the tonic) is delayed until the last possible moment.

In line with this broadened expressive range, Schubert's style can best be understood as a series of four discrete styles. There is first of all the openly popular manner, captured in works like the Octet (D803), songs from Die schöne Müllerin and the 'Trout' Quintet. Schubert's popular tone is even more pervasive than Mozart's, surfacing in substantial as well as occasional genres. Counterpoised to this is what might be called the ambitious style – works (and passages) that openly declare their complexity. While weighted towards the last half of Schubert's career, they include works from every genre in which he worked. The late symphonies, masses, string quartets and piano sonatas contain only the most obvious examples. An extension of the ambitious style is the learned style, found primarily in contrapuntal passages ranging from the elaborate palindrone in Die Zauberharfe, the mirror counterpoint in the 'Wanderer' Fantasy, the extended fugal passages in both late masses, to the quasi-fugal writing in the F minor Fantasy for piano duet (D940). Finally, Schubert penned passages that can only be described (albeit unhistorically) as avant garde. These include music best described as 'unhinged', such as that in the slow movements of the G major Quartet and the A major Piano Sonata (D959), or the so-called Lebensstürme for piano duet. But they also include the Wagnerian pre-echoes in Lazarus and the Count's recitative (no.2) in Der Graf von Gleichen, or the Mahlerian premonitions in the Andante of Symphony no.10.

Schubert's direct influence on the course of 19th-century music arguably exceeded that of Beethoven. That, like Beethoven, he exercised no influence over opera, the dominant form of public music for the duration of the century, does not diminish his contribution. The flood of lieder by composers such as Franz, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Brahms, Wolf and Mahler are quite unimaginable without the extraordinary precedent of Schubert. Of these, it was perhaps Wolf who came closest to replicating the vast emotional range of Schubert. While Schubert's writing for piano was less obviously innovative than that of Chopin, Schumann and Liszt, its influence was by no means neglible. The ability to exploit and extend the singing qualities of the Viennese piano, the wealth of innovative accompanimental textures, the formal experimentation, and the cultivation of new single-movement genres, including miniatures such as the Moments musicaux, were all to leave their mark on subsequent generations. While the only mature symphony of Schubert's known between 1839 and 1868 was the 'Great' C major, its impact on Schumann, Mendelssohn and, much later, Brahms and Mahler (who also knew the 'Unfinished') was profound. It is hard to imagine Brahms at all without the example of Schubert. Mahler's sense of spacious Austrian countryside draws directly from the Schubert of the 'Great' C major. The gradual publication of Schubert's works throughout the 19th century meant that new discoveries were constantly being made, affording numerous opportunities for influence. These cropped up in unexpected places: the harmonic vocabulary of the King of Ragtime, Scott Joplin, is lifted in almost textbook fashion directly from Schubert, while unmistakable Schubertian gestures such as the ubiquitous flat sixth chord pop up in, say, the Beatles' I saw her standing there. Indeed, the very language of musical theatre, from Siegmund Romberg to Andrew Lloyd Webber, is saturated with Schubertian melodic and harmonic syntax.

WORKS

Editions: Franz Schuberts Werke: Kritisch durchgesehene Gesamtausgabe, ed. E. Mandyczewski, J. Brahms and others (Leipzig, 1884–97/R) [SW, ser./vol.,p.; Rb – Revisionsbericht]

Franz Schubert: Neue Ausgabe sämtlicher Werke, ed. W. Dürr, A. Feil, C. Landon and others (Kassel, 1964–) [NSA, ser./vol.]

Theatrical texts: Franz Schubert: Bühnenwerke: kritische Gesamtausgabe der Texte, ed. C. Pollack (Tutzing, 1988) [P, p.nos.]

Items are ordered by D number as enumerated in W. Dürr, A. Feil, C. Landon and others: Franz Schubert: Thematisches Verzeichnis seiner Werke in chronologischer Folge von Otto Erich Deutsch, Neue Ausgabe sämtlicher Werke, viii/4 (Kassel, 1978); where, exceptionally, numbers have been changed in this edition, a cross-reference is given. Numbers in parentheses following a title refer to separate settings of the same text.

THEATRICAL

first performed in Vienna unless otherwise stated

| D | Title | Genre, acts | Librettist | Composed | First performance | Published | SW; NSA; P |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 11, 966 | Der Spiegelritter | Spl, 3; only ov. and most of Act 1 complete | A. von Kotzebue | Dec 1811 – late 1812 or early 1813 | Swiss Radio, 11 Dec 1949 | 1893 | xxi/1, 1, xv/7, 107; ii/11; 357–415 |
| 84 | Des Teufels Lustschloss [1st version] | Zauberoper, 3 | Kotzebue | 30 Oct 1813 – 15 May 1814 | Musikvereinsaal, 12 Dec 1879 (as pubd in 1888) | 1888 | xv/1; ii/1*a*; 15–74 |
| | [2nd version] | | | completed 22 Oct 1814 | | 1990 | —; ii/1*b* |
| 137 | Adrast [ov., see also ORCHESTRAL, 648] | Oper, 2 or 3; unfinished | J. Mayrhofer | ?late 1819 – early 1820 | Redoutensaal, 13 Dec 1868 | 1893 | xv/7, 315; ii/11; 417–32 |
| 190 | Der vierjährige Posten | Spl, 1 | T. Körner | 8–19 May 1815 | Dresden, 23 Sept 1896 | 1888 | xv/2, 1; ii/2; 75–91 |
| 220 | Fernando | Spl, 1 | A. Stadler | June – 9 July 1815 | 13 April 1907 | 1888 | xv/2, 109; ii/2; 93–116 |
| 239 | Claudine von Villa Bella | Spl, 3; only ov. and Act 1 survive | J.W. von Goethe | begun 26 July 1815 | Gemeindehaus Wieden, 26 April 1913 | 1893 | xv/7, 1; ii/12; 433–92 |
| 326 | Die Freunde von Salamanka | komisches Spl, 2 | Mayrhofer | 18 Nov – 31 Dec 1815 (?early 1816) | Halle, 6 May 1928 | 1888 | xv/2, 169; ii/3; 117–45 |
| 435 | Die Bürgschaft | Oper, 3; Acts 1 and 2 only | | 2 May 1816 – ?late sum. 1816 | 7 March 1908 | 1893 | xv/7, 201; ii/12; 493–508 |
| 644 | Die Zauberharfe | Zauberspiel mit Musik (melodrama), 3 | G. von Hofmann | ?May–Aug 1820 | An der Wien, 19 Aug 1820 | 1891 | xv/4, 1; ii/4, 3; 147–64 |
| 647 | Die Zwillingsbrüder | Posse, 1 | Hofmann, after Les deux Valentins | ?Dec 1818 – Jan 1819 | Kärntnertor, 14 June 1820 | 1889 | xv/3, 1; ii/5; 165–96 |
| 701 | Sacontala [Sakuntala] | Oper, 3, sketches for Acts 1 and 2 only | J.P. Neumann, after Kalidasa | Oct 1820 – early 1821 | 12 June 1971 | — | —; ii/13; 531–54 |
| 723 | Duet and aria for Herold's Das Zauber-glöckchen (La clochette) | | E.G.M. Théaulon de Lambert, trans. F. Treitsche | spr. 1821 | Kärntnertor, 20 June 1821 | 1893 | xv/7, 365; ii/14; 267-31 |
| 732 | Alfonso und Estrella | Oper, 3 | F. von Schober | 20 Sept 1821 – 27 Feb 1822 | Weimar, Hof, 24 June 1854 | 1892 | ov. xv/4; xv/5, 1; ii/6; 197–244 |
| 787 | Die Verschworenen (Der häusliche Krieg) | Spl, 1 | I.F. Castelli, after Aristophanes: Lysistrata and Ecclesiazusae | ?late 1822 – April 1823 | Frankfurt, 29 Aug 1861 (concert perf., Vienna, Musikvereinsaal, 1 March 1861) | 1889 | xv/3, 113; ii/7; 245–83 |
| 791 | Rüdiger | Oper, sketches for nos.1–2 only | ?I. von Mosel | begun May 1823 | Redoutensaal, 5 Jan 1868 | 1867 | —; ii/14; 555–9 |
| 796 | Fierrabras | heroisch-romantische Oper, 3 | J. Kupelwieser, after J.G.G. Büsching and F.H. von der Hagen's story in Buch der Liebe (1809), and F. de la Motte Fouqué: Eginhard und Emma (1811) | 25 May – 2 Oct 1823 | Karlsruhe, Grossherzögliches Hof, 9 Feb 1897 | 1886 | xv/6, 1; ii/8; 285–346 |
| 797 | Rosamunde, Fürstin von Zypern | incid music to romantic play, 4 | H. von Chézy | aut. 1823 | An der Wien, 20 Dec 1823 | 1891 | xv/4, 345; ii/9; 347–53 |

| D | Title | Genre, acts | Librettist | Composed | First performance | Published | SW; NSA; P |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 918 | Der Graf von Gleichen | romantische Oper, 2, sketches only | E. von Bauernfeld | 19 June 1827–1828 | — | (Tutzing, 1988) [facs.] | —; ii/14; 561–615 |
| 966 | [see 11 above] | orch interlude to 11/3, frag. | | | | | |
| 981 | Der Minnesänger | Oper, unfinished, lost | — | — | — | — | — |
| 982 | [Sophie] | Oper, sketches, 3 nos. only | — | ?spr. 1821 | — | — | —; ii/14; 617–22 |

SACRED

| D | Title | Forces | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 24e | Mass, ?F, frag. | SATB, orch, org | ?1812 | — | —; i/5 |
| 27 | Salve regina, F | S, orch, org | 28 June 1812 | 1928 | —; i/8 |
| 31 | Kyrie, d | S, T, SATB, orch, org | 25 Sept 1812 | 1888 | xiv, 175; i/5 |
| 45 | Kyrie, B♭ | SATB | 1 March 1813 | 1888 | xiv, 226; i/5 |
| 49 | Kyrie, d | S, A, T, B, SATB, orch | April 1813 | 1888 | xiv, 189; i/5 |
| 56 | Santus, canon with coda, B♭ | 3vv | 21 April 1813 | 1892 | xix, 89; i/8 |
| 66 | Kyrie, F | SATB, orch, org | 12 May 1813 | 1888 | xiv, 203; i/5 |
| 71a | Alleluja, F, canon | 3vv | ?July 1813 | 1956 | —; i/8 |
| 105 | Mass no.1, F [see also 185] | S, S, A, T, T, B, SATB, orch, org | 17 May – 22 July 1814 | 1856 | xiii/1, 1; i/1 |
| 106 | Salve regina, B♭ | T, orch, org | 28 June – 1 July 1814 | 1888 | xiv, 47; i/8 |
| 136 | Offertory: Totus in corde langueo, C | S/T, cl/vn, orch, org | ?1815 | 1825, op.46 | xiv, 1; i/8 |
| 167 | Mass no.2, G | S, T, B, SATB, str, org | 2–7 March 1815 | 1846 | xiii/1, 121; i/1 |
| 175 | Stabat mater, g | SATB, orch, org | 4–6 April 1815 | 1888 | xiv, 101; i/8 |
| 181 | Offertory: Tres sunt, a | SATB, orch, org | 10–11 April 1815 | 1888 | xiv, 23; i/8 |
| 184 | Gradual: Benedictus es, Domine, C | SATB, orch, org | 15–17 April 1815 | *c*1843, op.150 | xiv, 29; i/8 |
| 185 | Dona nobis pacem, F [alternative movt for 105] | B, SATB, orch, org | 25–6 April 1815 | 1887 | xiii/1, 931; i/1 |
| 223 | Salve regina (Offertorium), F | S, orch, org | | | |
| | version a | | 5 July 1815 | — | —; i/8 |
| | version b | | 28 Jan 1823 | 1825, op.47 | xiv, 9; i/8 |
| 324 | Mass no.3, B♭ | S, A, T, B, SATB, orch, org | begun 11 Nov 1815 | *c*1837, op.141 | xiii/1, 157; i/2 |
| 379 | Deutsches Salve regina (Hymne an die heilige Mutter Gottes), F | SATB, org | 21 Feb 1816 | 1859 | xiv, 215; i/8 |
| 383 | Stabat mater (orat), F/f | S, T, B, SATB, orch | begun 28 Feb 1816 | 1888 | xiv, 109; i/7 |
| 386 | Salve regina, B♭ | SATB | early 1816 | 1833 | xiv, 224; i/8 |
| 452 | Mass no.4, C [see also 961] | S, A, T, B, SATB, orch, org | June–July 1816 | 1825, op.48 | xiii/1, 209; i/2 |
| 453 | Requiem, c, frag. | SATB, orch | July 1816 | — | —; i/5 |
| 460 | Tantum ergo, C | S, SATB, orch, org | Aug 1816 | 1888 | xiv, 39; i/8 |
| 461 | Tantum ergo, C | S, A, T, B, SATB, orch | Aug 1816 | 1935 | —; i/8 |
| 486 | Magnificat, C | S, A, T, B, SATB, orch, org | 15 Sept 1815 | 1888 | xiv, 77; i/8 |
| 488 | Auguste jam coelestium, G | S, T, orch | Oct 1816 | 1888 | xiv, 59; i/8 |
| 607 | Evangelium Johannis VI, E | 1v, bc | 1818 | 1920 | —; i/8 |
| 621 | Deutsches Requiem (Deutsche Trauermesse), g | S, A, T, B, SATB, org | Aug 1818 | 1826 | —; i/6 |
| 676 | Salve regina (Offertorium), A | S, str | Nov 1819 | 1845, op.153 | xiv, 17; i/8 |
| 678 | Mass no.5, A♭ | S, A, T, B, SATB, orch, org | Nov 1819 – Sept 1822 | | |
| | version a | | | 1875 | —; i/3 |
| | version b | | | 1887 | xiii/2, 1; i/3 |
| 696 | 6 antiphons for Palm Sunday: Hosanna filio David; In monte Oliveti; Sanctus, sanctus, sanctus; Pueri hebraeorum; Cum angelis et pueris; Ingrediente Domino | SATB | March 1820 | 1829, op.113 | xiv, 218; i/8 |
| 730 | Tantum ergo, B♭ | S, A, T, B, SATB, orch, org | 16 Aug 1821 | 1926 | —; i/8 |
| 739 | Tantum ergo, C | SATB, orch, org | 1814 | 1825, op.45 | xiv, 37; i/8 |
| 750 | Tantum ergo, D | SATB, orch, org | 20 March 1822 | 1888 | xiv, 43; i/8 |
| 755 | Kyrie, a, sketch | S, A, T, B, SATB, str, org | May 1822 | — | —; i/5 |
| 811 | Salve regina, C | TTBB | April 1824 | 1850, op.149 | xiv, 220; i/8 |
| 872 | Deutsche Messe | | late sum. 1827 | | |
| | version a | SATB, org | | — | —; i/6 |
| | version b | SATB, orch, org | | 1870 | xiii/2, 325; i/6 |
| | Appx: Das Gebet des Herrn | | | 1845 | xiii/2, 340; i/6 |
| 950 | Mass no.6, E♭ | S, A, T, B, SATB, orch | begun June 1828 | 1865 | xiii/2, 167; i/4 |
| 961 | Benedictus, a [alternative movt for 452] | S, A, T, B, SATB, orch, org | Oct 1828 | 1829 | xiii/1, 247; i/2 |

| D | Title | Forces | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 962 | Tantum ergo, E♭ | S, A, T, B, SATB, orch | Oct 1828 | 1890 | xiv, 227, xxi, 269; i/8 |
| 963 | Offertory: Intende voci, B♭ | T, SATB, orch | Oct 1828 | 1890 | xxi, 277; i/8 |
| 992 | [sketches for 383] | | | | |

MIXED VOICES

NSA numbers refer to volume in series 3 unless otherwise stated

| D | Title | Forces | Text | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 17 | Quell'innocente figlio | | P. Metastasio | c1812 | | —; viii/2 |
| | version 3 | S, A, T | | | 1940 | |
| | version 4 | S, A, T, B | | | 1940 | |
| | version 5 | S, A, T | | | 1940 | |
| | version 6 | S, A, T | | | 1940 | |
| | version 7 | S, A, T, B | | | — | |
| | version 8 | S, A, T, B | | | 1940 | |
| | version 9 | S, A, T, B | | | 1940 | |
| 33 | Entra l'uomo allor che nasce | | Metastasio | Sept–Oct 1812 | 1940 | —; viii/2 |
| | version 3 | S, A, T | | | | |
| | version 4 | S, A, T, B | | | | |
| | version 5 | S, A, T, B | | | | |
| | version 6 | S, A, T, B | | | | |
| 34 | Te solo adoro | S, A, T, B | Metastasio | 5 Nov 1812 | 1940 | —; viii/2 |
| 35 | Serbate, o dei custodi | | Metastasio | Oct 1812 | 1940 | —; viii/2 |
| | version 1 | S, A, T, B | | | | |
| | version 2 | SATB | | | | |
| 47 | Dithyrambe (Der Besuch), frag. | T, B, SATB, pf | F. von Schiller | 29 March 1813 | — | —; ii |
| 168 | Nun lasst uns den Leib begraben (Begräbnislied) | SATB, pf | F.G. Klopstock | 9 March 1815 | 1872 | xvii, 241; ii |
| 168a | Osterlied [formerly 987] | SATB, pf | Klopstock | 9 March 1815 | 1872 | xvii, 244; ii |
| 232 | Hymne an den Unendlichen | SATB, pf | Schiller | 11 July 1815 | 1829, op.112/3 | xvii, 167; ii |
| 294 | Namensfeier für Franz Michael Vierthaler (Gratulations Kantate) | S, T, B, STB, orch | | 27 Sept 1815 | 1892 | xvii, 142; i |
| 329a | Das Grab (1), sketch | SATB | J.G. von Salis-Seewis | ?28 Dec 1815 | — | —; ii |
| 439 | An die Sonne | SATB, pf | J.P. Uz | June 1816 | 1872 | xvii, 218; ii |
| 440 | Chor der Engel | SATB | Goethe | June 1816 | 1839 | xvii, 245; ii |
| 451 | Prometheus (cant.), lost | S, B, chorus, orch | P. Dräxler von Carin | 17 June 1816 | — | — |
| 472 | Kantate zu Ehren von Josef Spendou | 2 S, B, SATB, orch | J. Hoheisel | Sept 1816 | 1830, op.128 | xvii, 109; i |
| 609 | Die Geselligkeit (Lebenslust) | SATB, pf | J.K. Unger | Jan 1818 | 1872 | xvii, 225; ii |
| 642 | Viel tausend Sterne prangen | SATB, pf | A.G. Eberhard | ?1812 | 1937 | —; ii |
| 643a | Das Grab (5) | SATB | Salis-Seewis | 1819 | 1972 | —; ii |
| 665 | Im traulichen Kreise [part of 609] | | | | | |
| 666 | Kantate zum Geburtstag des Sängers Johann Michael Vogl (Der Frühlingsmorgen) | STB, pf | A. Stadler | 10 Aug 1819 | 1849, op.158 | xix, 37; ii |
| 689 | Lazarus, oder Die Feier der Auferstehung (orat, 3), only 1st act and part of 2nd complete | 3 S, 2 T, B, SATB, orch | A.H. Niemeyer | Feb 1820 | 1865 | xvii, 1; ii/10 |
| 748 | Am Geburtstag des Kaisers (cant.) | S, A, T, B, SATB, orch | J.L.F. von Deinhardstein | Jan 1822 | 1822; 1849 as op.157 | xvii, 138; ii |
| 763 | Des Tages Weihe | SATB, pf | | 22 Nov 1822 | 1842, op.146 | xvii, 212; ii |
| 815 | Gebet | SATB, pf | F. de la Motte Fouqué | Sept 1824 | 1840, op.139 | xvii, 198; ii |
| 826 | Der Tanz | SATB, pf | ? K. Schnitzer von Mecrau | early 1828 | 1892 | xvii, 228; ii |
| 875a | Die Allmacht (2), sketch | SATB, pf | J.L. Pyrker von Felsö-Eör | Jan 1826 | — | —; ii |
| 920 | Ständchenversion a [for version b see FEMALE OR UNSPECIFIED VOICES] [formerly 921] | A, TTBB, pf | F. Grillparzer | July 1827 | 1891 | xvi, 108; iii |
| 930 | Der Hochzeitsbraten | S, T, B, pf | F. von Schober | Nov 1827 | 1829, op.104 | xix, 14; ii |
| 936 | Kantate für Irene Kiesewetter | 2 T, 2 B, SATB, pf 4 hands | anon. It. text | 26 Dec 1827 | 1892 | xvii, 231; ii |
| 942 | Mirjams Siegesgesang | S, SATB, pf | Grillparzer | March 1828 | c1839, op.136 | xvii, 170; ii |
| 953 | Der 92. Psalm: Lied für den Sabbath | S, A, T, Bar, B, SATB | Heb. text | July 1828 | 1841 | xvii, 247; ii |
| 954 | Glaube, Hoffnung und Liebe | 2 T, 2 B, SATB, wind inst/pf | F. Reil | Aug 1828 | 1828 | xvii, 152; i, ii |
| 985 | Gott im Ungewitter | SATB, pf | Uz | ?1827 | 1829, op.112/1 | xvii, 156; ii |
| 986 | Gott der Weltschöpfer | SATB, pf | Uz | ?1827 | 1829, op.112/2 | xvii, 164; ii |

| D | Title | Forces | Text | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 987 | Osterlied [see 168a] | | | | | |

MALE VOICES

NSA numbers refer to volume and page in series 3

| D | Title | Forces | Text | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 37 | Die Advokaten [based on a previous setting by Anton Fischer] | TTB, pf | Baron Engelhart | 25–7 Dec 1812 | 1827, op.74 | xix, 2; iii |
| 38 | Totengräberlied (1) | TTB | L.C.H. Hölty | ?1813 | 1892 | xix, 76; iv, 3 |
| 43 | Dreifach ist der Schritt der Zeit (1) | TTB | F. von Schiller | 8 July 1813 | 1897 | xxi, 337; iv, 4 |
| 51 | Unendliche Freude (1) | TTB | Schiller | 15 April 1813 | 1897 | xxi, 330; iv, 8 |
| 53 | Vorüber die stöhnende Klage | TTB | Schiller | 18 April 1813 | 1892 | xix, 61; iv, 10 |
| 54 | Unendliche Freude (2), canon | BBB/TTB | Schiller | 19 April 1813 | 1873 | xix, 78; iv, 12 |
| 55 | Selig durch die Liebe | TTB | Schiller | 21 April 1813 | 1892 | xix, 67; iv, 14 |
| 57 | Hier strecket der wallende Pilger | TTB | Schiller | 29 April 1813 | 1897 | xxi, 331; iv, 15 |
| 58 | Dessen Fahne Donnerstürme wallte | TTB | Schiller | May 1813 | 1892 | xix, 63; iv, 18 |
| 60 | Hier umarmen sich getreue Gatten | TTB | Schiller | 3 Oct 1813 | 1892 | xix, 65; iv, 33 |
| 62 | Thronend auf erhabnem Sitz | TTB | Schiller | 9 May 1813 | 1956 | xxi, 334; iv, 22 |
| 63 | Wer die steile Sternenbahn | TTB | Schiller | 10 May 1813 | 1892 | xix, 68; iv, 24 |
| 64 | Majestätsche Sonnenrosse | TTB | Schiller | 10 May 1813 | 1897 | xxi, 335; iv, 26 |
| 65 | Schmerz verzerret ihr Gesicht, canon, sketch | TTB | Schiller | 11 May 1813 | 1892 | xix, 94; iv, 180 |
| 67 | Frisch atmet des Morgens lebendiger Hauch | TTB | Schiller | 15 May 1813 | 1897 | xxi, 335; iv, 27 |
| 70 | Dreifach ist der Schritt der Zeit (Ewig still steht die Vergangenheit) (3), canon | TTB | Schiller | 8 July 1813 | 1928 | —; iv, 177 |
| 71 | Die zwei Tugendwege | TTB | Schiller | 15 July 1813 | 1892 | xix, 69; iv, 32 |
| 75 | Trinklied (Freunde, sammelt euch im Kreise) | B, TTB, pf | F. Schäffer | 29 Aug 1813 | 1850 | xvi, 128; iii |
| 80 | Zur Namensfeier meines Vaters | TTB, gui | F. Schubert | 27 Sept 1813 | 1892 | xix, 48; iii |
| 88 | Verschwunden sind die Schmerzen, canon | TTB | Schubert | 15 Nov 1813 | 1892 | xix, 77; iv, 35 |
| 110 | Wer ist gross? | B, TTBB, orch | | 24–5 July 1814 | 1891 | xvi, 205; i |
| 129 | Mailied (Grüner wird die Au) (1) | TTB | Hölty | c1815 | 1892 | xix, 72; iv, 37 |
| 132 | Lied beim Rundetanz, 1 part only | ? TTB/TTBB | J.G. von Salis-Seewis | 1815 or 1816 | 1974 | —; iv, 177 |
| 133 | Lied im Freien, 1 part only | ? TTB/TTBB | Salis-Seewis | 1815 or 1816 | 1974 | —; iv, 178 |
| 140 | Klage um Ali Bey (1) | TTB, ?pf | M. Claudius | 1815 | 1850 | xviii, 32 |
| 147 | Bardengesang | TTB | Ossian, trans. E. de Harold | 20 Jan 1816 | 1892 | xix, 70; iv, 42 |
| 148 | Trinklied (Brüder! unser Erdenwallen) | T, TTB, pf | I.F. Castelli | Feb 1815 | 1830, op.131/2 | xix, 59; iii |
| 236 | Das Abendrot | TTB, pf | L. Kosegarten | 20 July 1815 | 1892 | xix, 57; ii |
| 242 | Trinklied im Winter | TTB | Hölty | ?Aug 1815 | 1892 | xix, 74; iv, 48 |
| 243 | Frühlingslied (Die Luft ist blau) | TTB | Hölty | ?Aug 1815 | 1892 | xix, 75; iv, 50 |
| 267 | Trinklied (Auf! jeder sei nun froh) | TTBB, pf | | 25 Aug 1815 | 1872 | xvi, 131; iii |
| 268 | Bergknappenlied | TTBB, pf | | 25 Aug 1815 | 1872 | xvi, 133; iii |
| 269 | Das Leben version a [for version b see FEMALE OR UNSPECIFIED VOICES] | TBB, pf | J.C. Wannovius | Aug 1815 | — | —; iii |
| 277 | Punschlied (Vier Elemente, innig gesellt) | TTB, pf | Schiller | 29 Aug 1815 | 1892 | xix, 58; iii |
| 330 | Das Grab (2) version b [for version a see SONGS] | 4 vv, pf | Salis-Seewis | 28 Dec 1815 | 1895 | xx/3, 231; iii |
| 331 | Der Entfernten (1) | TTBB | Salis-Seewis | c1816 | 1866 | xvi, 194; iv, 56 |
| 337 | Die Einsiedelei (1) | TTBB | Salis-Seewis | c1816 | c1860 | xvi, 195; iv, 58 |
| 338 | An den Frühling (2) | TTBB | Schiller | c1816 | 1891 | xvi, 196; iv, 60 |
| 339 | Amors Macht, 1 part only | ? TTB/TTBB | F. von Matthisson | 1815 or 1816 | 1974 | —; iv, 178 |
| 340 | Badelied, T2 only | ? TTB/TTBB | Matthisson | 1815 or 1816 | 1974 | —; iv, 178 |
| 341 | Sylphen, T2 only | ? TTB/TTBB | Matthisson | 1815 or 1816 | 1974 | —; iv, 179 |
| 356 | Trinklied (Funkelnd im Becher) | TTBB, lost pf acc. | | 1816 | 1844 | —; iii |
| 364 | Fischerlied (2) | TTBB | Salis-Seewis | c1816–17 | 1897 | xxi, 320; iv, 63 |
| 377 | Das Grab (3) | TTBB, pf | Salis-Seewis | 11 Feb 1816 | 1872 | xx/4, 6; iii |
| 387 | Die Schlacht (2), sketch | solo vv, chorus, pf | Schiller | March 1816 | 1897 | xxi, 341; ii |
| 407 | Beitrag zur fünfzig jährigen Jubelfeier des Herrn Salieri, [no.1 also in version for TTB, see 441] | T, TTBB, pf | Schubert | by 16 June 1816 | 1891–2 | xvi, 211; iii |
| 422 | Naturgenuss (2) | TTBB, pf | Matthisson | ?1822 | 1823, op.16/2 | xvi, 76; iii |
| 423 | Andenken (Ich denke dein, wenn durch den Hain) (2) | TTB | Matthisson | May 1816 | 1927 | —; iv, 66 |
| 424 | Erinnerungen (Am Seegestad) (2) | TTB | Matthisson | May 1816 | 1927 | —; iv, 68 |
| 425 | Lebensbild, lost | TTB | | May 1816 | — | — |
| 426 | Trinklied (Herr Bacchus ist ein braver Mann), lost | TTB | | May 1816 | — | — |
| 427 | Trinklied im Mai | TTB | Hölty | May 1816 | 1892 | xix, 73; iv, 70 |

| D | Title | Forces | Text | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 428 | Widerhall (Auf ewig dein) | TTB | Matthisson | May 1816 | 1927 | —; iv, 73 |
| 441 | [TTB version of 407/1] | TTB, pf | Schubert | by 16 June 1816 | 1892 | xix, 53; iii |
| 494 | Der Geistertanz (4) | TTBBB | Matthisson | Nov 1816 | 1871 | xvi, 173; iv, 77 |
| 513 | La pastorella al prato (1) | TTBB, pf | C. Goldoni | ?1817 | 1891 | xvi, 134; iii |
| 538 | Gesang der Geister über den Wassern (2) | TTBB | Goethe | March 1817 | 1891 | xvi, 175; iv, 81 |
| 569 | Das Grab (4) | unison vv, pf | Salis-Seewis | June 1817 | 1895 | xx/5, 122; iii |
| 572 | Lied im Freien | TTBB | Salis-Seewis | July 1817 | 1872 | xvi, 180; iv, 89 |
| 598 | Das Dörfchen | | G. A. Bürger | | | |
| | version a, sketch | TTBB | | Dec 1817 | 1891 | xvi, 223; iii |
| | version b [formerly 641] | TTBB, pf | | 1818 | 1822, op.11/1 | xvi, 41; iii |
| 635 | Leise, leise lasst uns singen | TTBB | | c1819 | 1906–7 | —; iv, 97 |
| 641 | Das Dörfchen [see 598] | | | | | |
| 656 | Sehnsucht (Nur wer die Sehnsucht kennt) (4) | TTBBB | Goethe | April 1819 | 1867 | xvi, 185; iv, 98 |
| 657 | Ruhe, schönstes Glück der Erde | TTBB | | April 1819 | 1871 | xvi, 187; iv, 102 |
| 704 | Gesang der Geister über den Wassern [see 714] | | | | | |
| 705 | Gesang der Geister über den Wassern (3), sketch | TTBB, pf | Goethe | Dec 1820 | 1897 | xxi, 313; iii |
| 709 | Frühlingsgesang (1) | TTBB | F. von Schober | before April 1822 | 1891 | xvi, 169; iv, 106 |
| 710 | Im Gegenwärtigen Vergangenes | TTBB, pf | Goethe | ?March 1821 | 1849 | xvi, 119; iii |
| 714 | Gesang der Geister über den Wassern (4) | | Goethe | | | |
| | version a, sketch [formerly 704] | TTTTBBBB, 2 va, 2 vc, db | | Dec 1820 | 1891 | xvi, 215; i |
| | version b | TTTTBBBB, 2 va, 2 vc, db | | Feb 1821 | 1858, op.167 | xvi, 24; i |
| 724 | Die Nachtigall | TTBB, pf | J.K. Unger | by April 1821 | 1822, op.11/2 | xvi, 50; iii |
| 740 | Frühlingsgesang (2) | TTBB, pf | Schober | Jan–April 1822 | 1823, op.16/1 | xvi, 65; iii |
| 747 | Geist der Liebe (Der Abend schleiert Flur und Hain) (2) | TTBB, pf | Matthisson | Jan 1822 | 1822, op.11/3 | xvi, 59; iii |
| 778b | Ich hab in mich gesogen, sketch | TTBB | F. Rückert | ?1823 | 1978 | —; viii/3 |
| 809 | Gondelfahrer (2) | TTBB, pf | J. Mayrhofer | March 1824 | 1824, op.28 | xvi, 83; iii |
| 822 | Lied eines Kriegers | B, unison vv, pf | | 31 Dec 1824 | 1842 | xx/8, 32; iii |
| 825 | Wehmut | TTBB | H. Hüttenbrenner | before sum. 1826 | 1828, op.64/1 | xvi, 141; iv, 121 |
| 825a | Ewige Liebe | TTBB | E. Schulze | before sum. 1826 | 1828, op.64/2 | xvi, 144; iv, 126 |
| 825b | Flucht | TTBB | K. Lappe | by early 1825 | 1828, op.64/3 | xvi, 148; iv, 133 |
| 835 | Bootgesang | TTBB, pf | W. Scott, trans. D.A. Storck | 1825 | 1826, op.52/3 | xvi, 89; iii |
| 847 | Trinklied aus dem 16. Jahrhundert | TTBB | F. Gräffer | July 1825 | 1849, op.155 | xvi, 29; iv, 139 |
| 848 | Nachtmusik | TTBB | K.S. von Seckendorff | July 1825 | 1849, op.156 | xvi, 166; iv, 143 |
| 865 | Widerspruchversion a [for version b see SONGS] | TTBB, pf | J.G. Seidl | ?1826 | 1828, op.105/1 | xvi, 93; iii |
| 873a | Nachklänge, sketch | TTBB | | ?Jan 1826 | 1974 | —; iv, 187 |
| 875 | Mondenschein | TTBBB, pf | Schober | Jan 1826 | 1831, op.102 | xvi, 153; iii |
| 892 | Nachthelle | T, TTBB, pf | Seidl | Sept 1826 | 1839, op.134 | xvi, 98; iii |
| 893 | Grab und Mond | TTBB | Seidl | Sept 1826 | 1827 | xvi, 197; iv, 148 |
| 901 | Wein und Liebe | TTBB | J.C.F. Haug | before June 1827 | 1827 | xvi, 190; iv, 150 |
| 903 | Zur guten Nacht | Bar, TTBB, pf | F. Rochlitz | Jan 1827 | 1827, op.81/3 | xvi, 91; iii |
| 912 | Schlachtlied (2) | TTBB, TTBB | F.G. Klopstock | 28 Feb 1827 | 1844, op.151 | xvi, 157; iv, 156 |
| 913 | Nachtgesang im Walde | TTBB, 4 hn | Seidl | April 1827 | 1846, op.139 | xvi, 1; i |
| 914 | Frühlingslied | TTBB | A. Pollak | April 1827 | 1897 | xxi, 321; iv, 166 |
| 916 | Das stille Lied, sketch | TTBB | J.G. Seegemund | May 1827 | 1978 | —; iv, 188, viii/3 |
| 941 | Hymnus an den Heiligen Geist [see 948] | | | | | |
| 948 | Hymnus an den Heiligen Geist | | A. Schmidl | May 1828 | | |
| | version a [formerly 941] | 2 T, 2 B, TTBB | | | 1891 | xvi, 199; i/8 |
| | version b [formerly 964] | 2 T, 2 B, TTBB, wind insts | | | 1849, op.154 | xvi, 11; i/8 |
| 964 | Hymnus an den Heiligen Geist [see 948] | | | | | |
| 983 | Jünglingswonne | TTBB | Matthisson | ?1822 | 1823, op.17/1 | xvi, 137; iv, 112 |
| 983a | Liebe | TTBB | Schiller | ?1822 | 1823, op.17/2 | xvi, 138; iv, 115 |

| D | Title | Forces | Text | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 983b | Zum Rundetanz | TTBB | Salis-Seewis | ?1822 | 1823, op.17/3 | xvi, 139; iv, 116 |
| 983c | Die Nacht | TTBB | ? F.W. Krummacher | ?1822 | 1823, op.17/4 | xvi, 139; iv, 118 |
| 984 | Der Wintertag | TTBB, lost pf acc. | ? | ? | *c*1865, op.169 | —; iii |

FEMALE OR UNSPECIFIED VOICES

NSA numbers refer to volume and page in series 3 unless otherwise stated

| D | Title | Forces | Text | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 17 | Quell'innocente figlio, version 2 | 2 S | Metastasio | *c*1812 | 1940 | —; viii/2 |
| 33 | Entra l'uomo allor che nasce, version 2 | S, A | Metastasio | Sept–Oct 1812 | 1940 | —; viii/2 |
| 61 | Ein jugendlicher Maienschwung | 3vv | Schiller | 8 May 1813 | 1897 | xxi, 333; iv, 20 |
| 69 | Dreifach ist der Schritt der Zeit (2) | 3vv | Schiller | 8 July 1813 | 1892 | xix, 80; iv, 30 |
| 130 | Der Schnee zerrinnt (1), canon | 3vv | Hölty | *c*1815 | 1892 | xix, 82; iv, 38 |
| 131 | Lacrimoso son io, canon, 2 versions | 3vv | | ?Aug 1815 | 1892 | xix, 87; iv, 40 |
| 169 | Trinklied vor der Schlacht | 2 unison choruses, pf | T. Körner | 12 March 1815 | 1894 | xx/2, 68; iii |
| 170 | Schwertlied | 1v, unison chorus, pf | Körner | 12 March 1815 | 1873 | xx/2, 78; iii |
| 183 | Trinklied (Ihr Freunde und du gold'ner Wein) | 1v, unison chorus, pf | A. Zettler | 12 April 1815 | 1887 | xx/2, 97; iii |
| 189 | An die Freude | 1v, unison chorus, pf | Schiller | May 1815 | 1829, op.111/1 | xx/2, 102; iii |
| 199 | Mailied (Grüner wird die Au) | 2vv/2 hn | Hölty | 24 May 1815 | 1885 | xix, 91; iv, 44 |
| 202 | Mailied (Der Schnee zerrinnt) (2) | 2vv/2 hn | Hölty | 26 May 1815 | 1885 | xix, 91; iv, 44 |
| 203 | Der Morgenstern (2) | 2vv/2 hn | Körner | 26 May 1815 | 1892 | xix, 92; iv, 45 |
| 204 | Jägerlied | 2vv/2 hn | Körner | 26 May 1815 | 1892 | xix, 92; iv, 46 |
| 205 | Lützows wilde Jagd | 2vv/2 hn | Körner | 26 May 1815 | 1892 | xix, 93; iv, 46 |
| 244 | Willkommen, lieber schöner Mai, canon, 2 versions | 3vv | Hölty | ?Aug 1815 | 1892 | xix, 85; iv, 51 |
| 253 | Punschlied: im Norden zu singen | 2vv | Schiller | 18 Aug 1815 | 1887 | xx/3, 30; iv, 54 |
| 269 | Das Leben version b [for version a see MALE VOICES] | SSA, pf | Wannovius | 25 Aug 1815 | 1849 | xviii, 31; iii |
| 357 | Gold'ner Schein, canon | 3vv | Matthisson | May 1816 | 1892 | xix, 81; iv, 64 |
| 442 | Das grosse Halleluja version b [for version a see SONGS] | chorus, pf | Klopstock | June 1816 | *c*1847 | xx/4, 110; iii |
| 443 | Schlachtlied (1) version b [for version a see SONGS] | chorus, pf | Klopstock | June 1816 | 1895 | xx/4, 112; iii |
| 521 | Jagdlied version b [for version a see SONGS] | unison vv, pf | F. Werner | Jan 1817 | 1895 | xx/5, 3; iii |
| 706 | Der 23. Psalm | SSAA, pf | trans. M. Mendelssohn | Dec 1820 | 1832, op.132 | xviii, 3; iii |
| 757 | Gott in der Natur | SSAA, pf | E.C. von Kleist | Aug 1822 | 1839 | xviii, 10; iii |
| 836 | Coronach (Totengesang der Frauen und Mädchen) | SSA, pf | Scott, trans. Storck | 1825 | 1826, op.52/4 | xviii, 1; iii |
| 873 | Canon, a, sketch | 6vv | — | ?Jan 1826 | 1974 | —; iv, 187 |
| 920 | Ständchen [formerly 921] version b [for version a see MALE VOICES] | A, SSAA, pf | Grillparzer | July 1827 | 1840, op.135 | xviii, 20; iii |
| 988 | Liebe säuseln die Blätter, canon | 3vv | Hölty | ?1815 | 1873 | xix, 83; iv, 172 |
| 988a | — | pf acc. only | — | ?after 1820 | 1969 | —; iii |

ORCHESTRAL

NSA numbers refer to volume and page in series 5

| D | Title | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 2a | Overture, D, frag. [formerly 996] | ?1811 | — | —; iv |
| 2b | Symphony, D, frag., 1st movt only [formerly 997] | ?1811 | — | —; iv |
| 4 | Overture, D, for J.F.E. Albrecht's comedy Der Teufel als Hydraulicus | ?1812 | 1886 | ii, 1; iv |
| 12 | Overture, D | 1811 or 1812 | 1897 | xxi, 23; iv |
| 26 | Overture, D | by 26 June 1812 | 1886 | ii, 13; iv |
| 39a | 3 minuets and trios, lost | 1813 | — | — |
| 71c | Orch frag., D [formerly 966a] | Aug/Sept 1813 | — | —; v |
| 82 | Symphony no.1, D | by 28 Oct 1813 | 1884 | i/1, 1; i, 3 |
| 94a | Orch frag., B♭ | *c*1814 | — | —; v |
| 125 | Symphony no.2, B♭ | 10 Dec 1814 – 24 March 1815 | 1884 | i/1, 65; i, 71 |
| 200 | Symphony no.3, D | 24 May – 19 July 1815 | 1884 | i/1, 143; i, 153 |
| 345 | Concerto (Concertstück), D, vn, orch | 1816 | 1897 | xxi, 46; iv |
| 417 | Symphony no.4, c, 'Tragic' | by 27 April 1816 | 1884 | i/1, 191; ii |
| 438 | Rondo, A, vn, str | June 1816 | 1897 | xxi, 73; iv |
| 470 | Overture, B♭ [possibly for cantata 472; arr. str qt 601] | Sept 1816 | 1886 | ii, 31; iv |

| D | Title | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 485 | Symphony no.5, B♭ | Sept – 3 Oct 1816 | 1885 | i/2, 1; ii |
| 556 | Overture, D | May 1817 | 1886 | ii, 47; iv |
| 580 | Polonaise, B♭, vn, orch | Sept 1817 | 1928 | —; iv |
| 589 | Symphony no.6, C | Oct 1817 – Feb 1818 | 1885 | i/2, 49; ii |
| 590 | Overture, D, 'im italienischen Stile' [arr. pf 4 hands, 592] | Nov 1817 | 1886 | ii, 63; iv |
| 591 | Overture, C, 'im italienischen Stile' [arr. pf 4 hands, 597] | Nov 1817 | 1865, op.170 | ii, 83; iv |
| 615 | Symphony, D, pf sketches for 2 movts | May 1818 | — | —; v |
| 648 | Overture, e [possibly for 137, see THEATRICAL] | Feb 1819 | 1886 | ii, 101; iv |
| 708a | Symphony, D, sketches | after 1820 | — | —; v |
| 729 | Symphony [no.7], E, sketched in score | Aug 1821 | 1934 | —; v |
| 759 | Symphony [no.7] no.8, b, 'Unfinished' | Oct 1822 | 1867 | i/2, 239; iii |
| 849 | 'Gmunden–Gastein' Symphony [identical with 944] | June–Sept 1825 | — | — |
| 936a | Symphony [no.10], D, sketches | ? autumn 1828 | 1978 | —; v |
| 944 | Symphony [no.8] no.9, C, 'Great' | 1825–8 | 1840 | i/2, 117; iii |
| 966a | Orch frag., D [see 71c] | | | |
| 966b | Orch sketches, A, frag. | 1820 or later | — | —; v |
| 996 | Overture [see 2a] | | | |
| 997 | Symphony [see 2b] | | | |

CHAMBER

NSA numbers refer to volume and page in series 6 unless otherwise stated

| D | Title | Forces | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 2c | String Quartet, ?d/F, frag. [formerly 998] | 2 vn, va, vc | ?1811 | 1978 | —; iii |
| 2d | 6 Minuets, C, F, D, C, d, B♭ [formerly 995] | 2 ob, 2 cl, 2 hn, 2 bn, trbn | 1811 | 1970 | —; ix |
| 2f | Trio of a minuet, C, sketch | ? wind insts | 1811 | — | —; ix |
| 3 | String Quartet, C, frag. | 2 vn, va, vc | ?sum. 1812 | 1978 | —; iii |
| 8 | Overture, c | 2 vn, 2 va, vc | 29 June 1811 | 1970 | —; ii, 3 |
| 8a | Overture, c [arr. of 8] | 2 vn, va, vc | after 12 July 1811 | 1970 | —; iii |
| 18 | String Quartet, g/B♭ | 2 vn, va, vc | 1810 or 1811 | 1890 | v, 1; iii |
| 19 | String Quartet, lost | 2 vn, va, vc | 1810 or 1811 | — | — |
| 19a | String Quartet, lost | 2 vn, va, vc | 1810 or 1811 | — | — |
| 20 | Overture, B♭, lost | 2 vn, va, vc | 1812 | — | — |
| 28 | Trio (Sonata in 1 movt), B♭ | pf, vn, vc | 27 July – 28 Aug 1812 | 1923 | —; vii, 3 |
| 32 | String Quartet, C | 2 vn, va, vc | Sept – Oct 1812 | | |
| | movts 1, 3 | | | 1890 | v, 11 |
| | movt 4 | | | 1897 | Rb, 53 |
| | movts 1–4 | | | 1954 | —; iii |
| 36 | String Quartet, B♭ | 2 vn, va, vc | 19 Nov 1812 – 21 Feb 1813 | 1890 | v, 19; iii |
| 46 | String Quartet, C | 2 vn, va, vc | 3–7 March 1813 | 1890 | v, 37; iii |
| 68 | String Quartet, B♭, 1st movt and finale | 2 vn, va, vc | 8 June – 18 Aug 1813 | 1890 | v, 53; iii |
| 72 | Wind octet, F | 2 ob, 2 cl, 2 hn, 2 bn | by 18 Aug 1813 | 1889 | iii, 69; i, 3 |
| 72a | Allegro, F, unfinished | 2 ob, 2 cl, 2 hn, 2 bn | 1813 | 1897 | Rb, 41; i, 151 |
| 74 | String Quartet, D | 2 vn, va, vc | 22 Aug – Sept 1813 | 1890 | v, 71; iv |
| 79 | Wind nonet, e♭, 'Franz Schuberts Begräbnis-Feyer' (Eine kleine Trauermusik) | 2 cl, 2 bn, dbn, 2 hn, 2 trbn | 19 Sept 1813 | 1889 | iii, 81; i, 25 |
| 86 | Minuet, D | 2 vn, va, vc | ?Nov 1813 | 1886 | ii, 154; ix |
| 87 | String Quartet, E♭ | 2 vn, va, vc | Nov 1813 | 1840, op.125/1 | v, 147; iv |
| 87a | Andante, C | ? 2 vn, va, vc | Nov 1813 | — | —; iv |
| 89 | 5 minuets and 6 trios, C, F, d, G, C | 2 vn, va, vc | 19 Nov 1813 | 1886 | ii, 141; ix |
| 90 | 5 Deutsche and 7 trios with coda, C, G, D, F, C | 2 vn, va, vc | 19 Nov 1813 | 1886 | ii, 147; ix |
| 94 | String Quartet, D | 2 vn, va, vc | ? 1811 or 1812 | 1871 | v, 93; iii |
| 94b | 5 minuets and 6 Deutsche with trios, lost | 2 vn, va, vc, 2 hn | 1814 | — | — |
| 96 | Trio, G, added to Schubert's arr. of W. Matiegka's Notturno op.21 [replaces orig. 2nd trio] | fl, va, vc, gui | Feb 1814 | 1926 | —; viii/2 |
| 103 | String Quartet, c, frags., Grave and Allegro | 2 vn, va, vc | 23 April 1814 | 1939 | —; iv |
| 111a | String Trio, B♭, frag., lost [? sketch for 112] | vn, va, vc | 5–13 Sept 1814 | — | — |
| 112 | String Quartet, B♭ | 2 vn, va, vc | 5–13 Sept 1814 | 1863, op.168 | v, 109; iv |
| 173 | String Quartet, g | 2 vn, va, vc | 25 March – 1 April 1815 | 1871 | v, 129; iv |
| 353 | String Quartet, E | 2 vn, va, vc | 1816 | 1840, op.125/2 | v, 165; iv |
| 354 | 4 komische Ländler, D | 2 vn | Jan 1816 | 1930 | —; ix |
| 355 | 8 Ländler, f♯ | ?vn | Jan 1816 | 1928 | —; ix |
| 370 | 9 Ländler, D | ?vn | Jan 1816 | 1930 | —; ix |
| 374 | 11 Ländler, B♭ | vn | ?Feb 1816 | 1902 | —; ix |
| 384 | Sonata (Sonatina), D | vn, pf | March 1816 | 1836, op.137/1 | viii, 26; viii, 3 |
| 385 | Sonata (Sonatina), a | vn, pf | March 1816 | 1836, op.137/2 | viii, 40; viii, 17 |

| D | Title | Forces | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 408 | Sonata (Sonatina), g | vn, pf | April 1816 | 1836, op.137/3 | viii, 56; viii, 33 |
| 471 | String Trio, B♭, 1st movt and frag. of 2nd | vn, va, vc | Sept 1816 | 1890–97 | vi, 1, Rb, 84; vi |
| 487 | Adagio and Rondo concertante, F | vn, va, vc, pf | Oct 1816 | 1865 | vii/1, 52; vii, 157 |
| 574 | Sonata (Duo), A | vn, pf | Aug 1817 | 1851, op.162 | viii, 100; viii, 47 |
| 581 | String Trio, B♭ | vn, va, vc | Sept 1817 | 1897 | xxi, 93; vi |
| 597a | Variations, A, sketches, lost | vn | Dec 1817 | — | — |
| 601 | Overture, B♭, frag. [arr. of orch ov. 470] | 2 vn, va, vc | c1816 | — | — |
| 667 | Piano Quintet, A, 'Die Forelle' | pf, vn, va, vc, db | ?aut. 1819 | 1829, op.114 | vii/1, 52; vii, 185 |
| 703 | String Quartet, c (Quartettsatz), with frag. 2nd movt | 2 vn, va, vc | Dec 1820 | 1870–97 | v, 183, Rb, 76; v |
| 802 | Introduction and variations (on Trockne Blumen from Die schöne Müllerin), e/E | fl, pf | Jan 1824 | 1850, op.160 | viii, 120; viii, 67 |
| 803 | Octet, F | cl, hn, bn, 2 vn, va, vc, db | Feb – 1 March 1824 | | |
| | movts 1–3, 6 | | | 1853, op.166 | — |
| | movts 1–6 | | | 1889 | iii, 1; i, 27 |
| 804 | String Quartet, a | 2 vn, va, vc | Feb–March 1824 | 1824, op.29/1 | v, 191; v |
| 810 | String Quartet, d, 'Der Tod und das Mädchen' | 2 vn, va, vc | March 1824 | 1831 | v, 215; v |
| 821 | Sonata, a, 'Arpeggione' | arpeggione, pf | Nov 1824 | 1871 | viii, 142; viii, 89 |
| 887 | String Quartet, G | 2 vn, va, vc | 20–30 June 1826 | 1851, op.161 | v, 251; v |
| 895 | Rondo, b (Rondo brillant) | vn, pf | Oct 1826 | 1827, op.70 | viii, 1; viii, 107 |
| 897 | Piano Trio movt, E♭, 'Notturno' | pf, vn, vc | ?1827 | 1846, op.148 | vii/2, 106; vii, 143 |
| 898 | Piano Trio, B♭ | pf, vn, vc | ?1827 | 1836, op.99 | vii/2, 2; vii, 91 |
| 929 | Piano Trio, E♭ | pf, vn, vc | begun Nov 1827 | 1828, op.100 | vii/2, 46; vii, 17 |
| 934 | Fantasy, C | vn, pf | Dec 1827 | 1850, op.159 | viii, 70; viii, 131 |
| 956 | String Quintet, C | 2 vn, va, 2 vc | Sept/Oct 1828 | 1853, op.163 | iv, 1; ii, 19 |
| 995 | 6 Minuets [see 2d] | | | | |
| 998 | String Quartet [see 2c] | | | | |
| AI/3 | Fugue, C, frag., va part only | ? 2 vn, va, vc | ?1812 | — | —; viii/1 |

SONATAS, FANTASIES AND SHORTER WORKS FOR PIANO

NSA numbers refer to volume in series 7/ii unless otherwise stated

| D | Title and remarks | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 2e | Fantasie, c [formerly 993] | 1811 | — | —; iv |
| 13 | Fugue, d | c1812 | — | —; iv |
| 14 | Overture, sketch, lost | c1812 | — | — |
| 21 | 6 variations, E♭, lost | 1812 | — | — |
| 24 | 7 variations, F, frag., lost | ?sum. 1812 | — | — |
| 24a | Fugue, C, ? for org | ?sum. 1812 | 1978 | —; iv |
| 24b | Fugue, G, ? for org | ?sum. 1812 | 1978 | —; iv |
| 24c | Fugue, d, ? for org | ?sum. 1812 | 1978 | —; iv |
| 24d | Fugue, C, frag. | ?sum. 1812 | 1978 | —; iv |
| 25c | Fugue, F, frag. | ?sum. 1812 | — | —; viii/2 |
| 29 | Andante, C [arr. of Str Qt, 3] | 9 Sept 1812 | 1888 | xi, 136; iv |
| 37a | fugal sketches, B♭ [formerly 967] | ?1813 | — | —; iv |
| 41a | Fugue, e, frag. | 1813 | — | —; iv |
| 71b | Fugue, e, frag. | July 1813 | — | —; iv |
| 154 | Allegro, E [sketch of 157] | 11 Feb 1815 | 1897 | xxi, 136; i |
| 156 | 10 variations, F | 15 Feb 1815 | 1887 | xi, 112; iv |
| 157 | Sonata, E, inc. | begun Feb 1815 | 1888 | x, 2; i |
| 178 | Adagio, G, 2 versions [2nd version frag.] | 8 April 1815 | 1897 | xxi, 244; iv |
| 279 | Sonata, C [minuet = 277a with alternative trio, see DANCES FOR PIANO; ? finale = 346] | Sept 1815 | 1888 | x, 16; i |
| 346 | Allegretto, C, frag. [? finale of 279] | ?1816 | 1897 | xxi, 222; iv |
| 347 | Allegretto moderato, C, frag. | ?1813 | 1897 | xxi, 230; iv |
| 348 | Andantino, C, frag. | ?1816 | 1897 | xxi, 233; iv |
| 349 | Adagio, C, frag. | ?1816 | 1897 | xxi, 242; iv |
| 459 | Sonata, E, frag. (nos.1, 2 of 'Fünf Klavierstücke') | Aug 1816 | 1843 | xi, 170; i |
| 459a | 'Fünf Klavierstücke', C, A, E (nos.3–5) | ?1816 | 1843 | xi, 178; iv |
| 505 | Adagio, D♭ [?orig. slow movt of 625; adapted (? by publisher) as introduction to 506] | ?Sept 1818 | 1897 | Rb, 4; iv |
| 506 | Rondo, E [? finale of 566] | ?June 1817 | 1848, op.145 | xi, 105; iv |
| 537 | Sonata, a | March 1817 | c1852, op.164 | x, 60; i |
| 557 | Sonata, A♭ | May 1817 | 1888 | x, 30; i |
| 566 | Sonata, e [? finale = 506] | June 1817 | | |
| | Moderato | | 1888 | x, 40; i |

| D | Title and remarks | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Allegretto | | 1907 | —; i |
| | Scherzo | | 1928–9 | —; i |
| 567 | Sonata, D♭, inc. [1st version of 568] | June 1817 | 1897 | xxi, 140; i |
| 568 | Sonata, E♭ | ?1826 | 1829, op.122 | x, 74; i |
| 570 | Scherzo, D, Allegro f♯, inc. [? intended as movts 3–4 of 571] | ?July 1817 | 1897 | xxi, 236; i |
| 571 | Sonata, f♯, frag. of 1st movt only | July 1817 | 1897 | xxi, 160; i |
| 575 | Sonata, B | Aug 1817 | 1846, op.147 | x, 44; i |
| 576 | 13 variations on a theme by Anselm Hüttenbrenner, a | Aug 1817 | 1867 | xi, 124; iv |
| 593 | 2 scherzos, B♭, D♭ | Nov 1817 | 1871 | xi, 190; iv |
| 604 | Andante, A [? slow movt of 570/571] | 1816 or July 1817 | 1888 | xi, 138; iv |
| 605 | Fantasia, C, frag. | 1821–3 | 1897 | xxi, 214; iv |
| 605a | Fantasy, C, 'Grazer Fantasie' | ?1818 | 1969 | —; iv |
| 606 | March, E | ?1818 | 1840 | xi, 198; iv |
| 612 | Adagio, E [? slow movt of 613] | April 1818 | 1869 | xi, 142; iv |
| 613 | Sonata, C, 2 movts, frag. [? slow movt = 612] | April 1818 | 1897 | xxi, 164; ii |
| 625 | Sonata, f, 2 movts, frag. [slow movt = ?505] | Sept 1818 | 1897 | xxi, 172; ii |
| 655 | Sonata, c♯, frag. of 1st movt | April 1819 | 1897 | xxi, 186; ii |
| 664 | Sonata, A | 1819 or 1825 | 1829, op.120 | x, 134; ii |
| 718 | Variation on a waltz by Diabelli, c | March 1821 | 1824 | xi, 134; iv |
| 759a | Overture to Alfonso und Estrella, D [arr. from 732] | Nov 1822 | *c*1839, op.69 | —; iv |
| 760 | Fantasy, C, 'Wandererfantasie' | Nov 1822 | 1823, op.15 | xi, 2; v |
| 769a | Sonata, e, frag. [formerly 994] | *c*1823 | 1958 | —; i |
| 780 | 6 Momens musicals [Moments musicaux], C, A♭, f, c♯, f, A♭ | 1823–8 | 1828, op.94 | xi, 88; v |
| 784 | Sonata, a | Feb 1823 | 1839, op.143 | x, 94; ii |
| 817 | Ungarische Melodie, b [?1st version of pf duet, 818] | 2 Sept 1824 | 1928 | —; v |
| 840 | Sonata, C, 'Reliquie', movts 3–4 inc. | April 1825 | 1861 | xxi, 190; ii |
| 845 | Sonata, a | before end May 1825 | 1826, op.42 | x, 110; ii |
| 850 | Sonata, D | Aug 1825 | 1826, op.53 | x, 146; ii |
| 894 | Sonata, G (formerly known as Fantasie, Andante, Menuetto und Allegretto) | Oct 1826 | 1827, op.78 | x, 178; iii |
| 899 | 4 Impromptus, c, E♭, G♭, A♭ | ? sum.–aut. 1827 | | xi, 28; v |
| | nos.1–2 | | 1827, op.90/1–2 | |
| | nos.3–4 | | 1857, op.90/3–4 | |
| 900 | Allegretto, c, frag. | ? after 1820 | 1897 | xxi, 220; v |
| 915 | Allegretto, c | 26 April 1827 | 1870 | xi, 146; v |
| 916b | Piano piece, C, sketch | ? sum.–aut. 1827 | 1978 | —; v |
| 916c | Piano piece, c, sketch | ? sum.–aut. 1827 | 1978 | —; v |
| 935 | 4 Impromptus, f, A♭, B♭, f | Dec 1827 | 1839, op.142 | xi, 58; v |
| 946 | 3 Klavierstücke, e♭, E♭, C | May 1828 | 1868 | xi, 150; v |
| 958 | Sonata, c | Sept 1828 | 1839 | x, 204; iii |
| 959 | Sonata, A | Sept 1828 | 1839 | x, 232; iii |
| 960 | Sonata, B♭ | Sept 1828 | 1839 | x, 264; iii |
| 967 | fugal sketches [see 37a] | | | |
| 980f | March, G | ? | — | —; vi |
| 993 | Fantasie [see 2e] | | | |
| 994 | Sonata [see 769a] | | | |

DANCES FOR PIANO

NSA numbers refer to volume and page in series 7/ii

| D | Title and remarks | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 19b | Waltzes and march, lost | ? 1812 or 1813 | — | — |
| 22 | 12 minuets with trios, lost | 1812 | — | — |
| 41 | 30 minuets with trios, 10 lost | 1813 | 1889 | xii, 137; vi |
| 91 | 2 minuets, D, A, each with 2 trios, 2 other minuets lost | 22 Nov 1813 | 1956 | —; vi |
| 128 | 12 Wiener Deutsche | ?1812 | 1897 | xxi, 248; vi |
| 135 | Deutscher, E, with trio [see 146] | 1815 | 1930 | —; vi |
| 139 | Deutscher, C♯, with trio | 1815 | 1930 | —; vi |
| 145 | 12 Waltzes [no.7 = no.2 of 970], 17 Ländler, 9 Ecossaises [no.5 = no.1 of 421; no.6 = no.5 of 697], incl. 3 Atzenbrugger Tänze (nos.1–3) | 1815 – July 1821 | 1823, op.18 | xii, 14; vii |
| 146 | 20 Waltzes (Letzte Walzer) [no.3 = 135 with new trio] | | 1830, op.127 | xii, 66; vii |
| | nos.1, 3–11 | 1815 | | |
| | nos.2, 12–20 | Feb 1823 | | |
| 158 | Ecossaise, d/F | 21 Feb 1815 | 1889 | xii, 136; vi |
| 277a | Minuet, a [used in Sonata, 279], with trio | ?Sept 1815 | 1925 | —; iv |
| 299 | 12 Ecossaises [no.1 = Ecossaise no.1 from 145] | 3 Oct 1815 | | |
| | nos.1–8 | | 1897 | xxi, 264; vi |
| | nos.9–12 | | 1912 | —; vi |
| 334 | Minuet, A, with trio | *c*1815 | 1897 | xxi, 256; iv |
| 335 | Minuet, E, with 2 trios | *c*1813 | 1897 | xxi, 258; vi |

| D | Title and remarks | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 365 | 36 Originaltänze (Erste Walzer), incl. Trauerwalzer (no.2) and 3 Atzenbrugger Tänze (nos.29–31) | 1816 – July 1821 | 1821, op.9 | xii, 2; vii |
| 366 | 17 Ländler [no.17 arr. from 814 no.1, see PIANO FOUR HANDS] | 1816 – Nov 1824 | | xii, 88; vi |
| | nos.6 and 17 | | 1824 | |
| | nos.1–17 | | 1869 | |
| 378 | 8 Ländler, B♭ | 13 Feb 1816 | 1869 | xii, 102; vi |
| 380 | 3 minuets, E, A, C, each with 2 trios, 2nd trio of 3rd minuet lost | 22 Feb 1816 | | |
| | nos.1 and 2 | | 1897 | xxi, 262; vi |
| | no.3 | | 1956 | —; vi |
| 420 | 12 Deutsche | 1816 | 1871 | xii, 94; vii |
| 421 | 6 Ecossaises, A♭, f, E♭, B♭, E♭, A♭ [no. 1 = Ecossaise no.5 of 145] | May 1816 | 1889 | xii, 132; vi |
| 511 | Ecossaise, E♭ | c1817 | 1924 | —; vi |
| 529 | 8 Ecossaises | Feb 1817 | | |
| | nos.1–3, 6, 8, D, D, G, D, D | | 1871 | xii, 143; vi |
| | nos.4, 5, 7, D | | 1897 | xxi, 267; vi |
| 600 | Minuet, c♯ [? trio = 610] | ?1814 | 1897 | xxi, 261; iv |
| 610 | Trio, E [? minuet = 600] | Feb 1818 | 1889 | xii, 157; vi |
| 640 | 2 dances [see 980a] | | | |
| 643 | Deutscher, c♯, and Ecossaise, D♭ | 1819 | 1889 | xii, 117; vi |
| 679 | 2 Ländler [see 980b] | | | |
| 680 | 2 Ländler [see 980c] | | | |
| 681 | 12 Ländler, nos.1–4 lost | c1815 | 1930 | —; vi |
| 697 | 6 Ecossaises, A♭ | May 1820 | | |
| | nos.1–4, 6 | | 1889 | xii, 134; vi |
| | no.5 [= no.6 of 145] | | 1823 | —; vi |
| 722 | Deutscher, G♭ | 8 March 1821 | 1889 | xii, 115; vii |
| 734 | 16 Ländler and 2 Ecossaises (Wiener-Damen Ländler) | c1822 | 1826, op.67 | xii, 48; vii |
| 735 | Galop and 8 Ecossaises | c1822 | 1825, op.49 | xii, 119; vii |
| 769 | 2 Deutsche | | | xii, 114; vi |
| | no.1, A | Jan 1824 | 1889 | |
| | no.2, D | by Dec 1823 | 1823 | |
| 779 | 34 Valses sentimentales | c1823 | 1825, op.50 | xii, 34; vii |
| 781 | 12 Ecossaises | Jan 1823 | | xii, 125; vii |
| | no.1 [= Ecossaise no.2 of 783] | | 1825, op.33 | |
| | nos.4, 7 | | 1824 | |
| | nos.2–3, 5–6, 8–12 | | 1889 | |
| 782 | Ecossaise, D | c1823 | 1824 | —; vii |
| 783 | 16 Deutsche and 2 Ecossaises [no.2 = no.1 of 781] | Jan 1823 – July 1824 | 1825, op.33 | xii, 28; vii |
| 790 | 12 Deutsche (Ländler) | May 1823 | 1864, op.171 | xii, 82; vi |
| 816 | 3 Ecossaises, D, D, B♭ | Sept 1824 | 1956 | —; vi |
| 820 | 6 Deutsche, A♭, A♭, A♭, B♭, B♭, B♭, | Oct 1824 | 1931 | —; vi |
| 841 | 2 Deutsche, F, G | April 1825 | 1930 | —; vi |
| 844 | Waltz, G (Albumblatt) | 16 April 1825 | 1897 | xxi, 268; vi |
| 924 | 12 Grazer Walzer | ?Sept 1827 | 1828, op.91 | xii, 60; vii |
| 925 | Grazer Galopp, C | ?Sept 1827 | 1828 | xii, 123; vii |
| 944a | Deutscher, lost | 1 March 1828 | — | — |
| 969 | 12 Waltzes (Valses nobles) | by end 1826 | 1827, op.77 | xii, 54; vii |
| 970 | 6 Ländler, E♭, E♭, A♭, A♭, D♭, D♭ [no.2 = no.7 of 145] | ? | 1889 | xii, 106; vii |
| 971 | 3 Deutsche, a, A, E | by end 1822 | 1823 | xii, 108; vii |
| 972 | 3 Deutsche, D♭, A♭, A | ? | 1889 | xii, 110; vi |
| 973 | 3 Deutsche, E, E, A♭ | ? | 1889 | xii, 111; vi |
| 974 | 2 Deutsche, D♭ | ? | 1889 | xii, 113; vi |
| 975 | Deutscher, D | ? | 1889 | xii, 116; vi |
| 976 | Cotillon, E♭ | by end 1825 | 1825 | xii, 118; vi |
| 977 | 8 Ecossaises | ? | 1889 | xii, 129; vi |
| 978 | Waltz, A♭ | by end 1825 | 1825 | —; vii |
| 979 | Waltz, G | by end 1826 | 1826 | —; vii |
| 980 | 2 waltzes, G, b | by end 1826 | 1826 | —; vii |
| 980a | 2 dances, A, E, sketches [formerly 640] | ? | 1956 | —; vi |
| 980b | 2 Ländler, E♭ [formerly 679] | ? | 1925 | —; vi |
| 980c | 2 Ländler, D♭, frag. [formerly 680] | ? | 1930 | —; vi |
| 980d | Waltz, C | by end 1827 | 1828 | —; vii |
| 980c | 2 dances, g, F, sketches [? for pf] | ? | — | —; vi |

PIANO FOUR HANDS

NSA numbers refer to volume and page in series 7/i

| D | Title and remarks | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | Fantasie, G | 8 April – 1 May 1810 | 1888 | ix/3, 189; i |
| 1b | Fantasie, G, frag. | 1810 or 1811 | — | —; i |
| 1c | Sonata, F, frag., 1st movt only | 1810 or 1811 | — | —; i |
| 9 | Fantasie, g | 20 Sept 1811 | 1888 | ix/3, 224; i |
| 48 | Fantasie, c (Grande sonate) | April – 10 June 1813 | | |

| D | Title and remarks | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 1st version [without finale] | | 1871 | ix/3, 234; i |
| | 2nd version [complete] | | 1888 | —; i |
| 592 | Overture, D, 'im italienischen Stile' [arr. of orch ov., 590] | Dec 1817 | 1872 | ix/2, 26; v |
| 597 | Overture, C, 'im italienischen Stile' [arr. of orch ov., 591] | Nov or Dec 1817 | 1872 | ix/2, 14; v |
| 599 | 4 polonaises, d, B♭, E, F | July 1818 | 1827, op.75 | ix/3, 160; iv, 126 |
| 602 | 3 marches héroïques, b, C, D | 1818 or 1824 | 1824, op.27 | ix/1, 2; iv, 3 |
| 603 | Introduction, 4 variations on an original theme and finale [see 968a] | | | |
| 608 | Rondo, D | | | |
| | version a | Jan 1818 | — | —; i |
| | version b (Notre amitié est invariable) | c1818 | 1835, op.138 | ix/2, 136; i |
| 617 | Sonata, B♭ | sum.–aut. 1818 | 1823, op.30 | ix/2, 40; i |
| 618 | Deutscher, G, with 2 trios and 2 Ländler, E | sum.–aut. 1818 | 1909 | —; iv, 167 |
| 618a | Polonaise and trio, sketch [trio used in 599] | July 1818 | 1972 | —; iv, 180 |
| 624 | 8 variations on a French song, e | Sept 1818 | 1822, op.10 | ix/2, 150; i |
| 668 | Overture, g | Oct 1819 | 1897 | xxi, 106; v |
| 675 | Overture, F | ?Nov 1819 | 1825, op.34 | ix/2, 2; v |
| 733 | 3 marches militaires, D, G, E♭ | ? sum.–aut. 1818 | 1826, op.51 | ix/1, 56; iv, 20 |
| 773 | Overture to Alfonso und Estrella [arr. from 732] | 1823 | 1826; 1830 as op.69 | —; v |
| 798 | Overture to Fierrabras [arr. from 796] | late 1823 | 1897 | xxi, 120; v |
| 812 | Sonata, C, 'Grand Duo' | June 1824 | 1838, op.140 | ix/2, 66; ii, 5 |
| 813 | 8 variations on an original theme, A♭ | sum. 1824 | 1825, op.35 | ix/2, 168; ii, 27 |
| 814 | 4 Ländler, E♭, A♭, c, C [no.1 arr. as 366 no.17, see DANCES FOR PIANO] | July 1824 | 1869 | ix/3, 172; iv, 176 |
| 818 | Divertissement à l'hongroise, g | ?aut. 1824 | 1826, op.54 | ix/3, 2; ii, 38 |
| 819 | 6 grandes marches, E♭, g, b, D, e♭, E | ?aut. 1824 | 1825, op.40 | ix/1, 20; iv, 33 |
| 823 | Divertissement sur des motifs originaux français, e | c1825 | | ix/3, 38; ii, 621 |
| | 1 Marche brillante | | 1826, op.63/1 | |
| | 2 Andantino varié | | 1827, op.84/1 | |
| | 3 Rondeau brillant | | 1827, op.84/2 | |
| 824 | 6 polonaises, d, F, B♭, D, A, E | 1826 | 1826, op.61 | ix/3, 136; iv, 140 |
| 859 | Grande marche funèbre, c, on the death of Aleksander I of Russia | Dec 1825 | 1826, op.55 | ix/1, 70; iv, 74 |
| 885 | Grande marche héroïque, a, for the coronation of Nicholas I of Russia | 1826 | 1826, op.66 | ix/1, 78; iv, 82 |
| 886 | 2 marches caractéristiques [see 968b] | | | |
| 908 | 8 variations on a theme from Hérold's Marie, C | Feb 1827 | 1827, op.82/1 | ix/2, 194; iii |
| 928 | March, G, 'Kindermarsch' | 12 Oct 1827 | 1870 | ix/1, 116; iv, 124 |
| 940 | Fantasie, f | Jan–April 1828 | 1829, op.103 | ix/3, 112; iii |
| 947 | Allegro, a, 'Lebensstürme' | May 1828 | 1840, op.144 | ix/3, 88; iii |
| 951 | Rondo, A | June 1828 | 1828, op.107 | ix/2, 118; iii |
| 952 | Fugue, e, pf/org | 3 June 1828 | 1848, op.152 | ix/3, 176; iii |
| 968 | Allegro moderato, C, and Andante, a (Sonatine) | ?1818 | 1888 | ix/3, 180; i |
| 968a | Introduction, 4 variations on an original theme and finale, B♭ [formerly 603] | ?1824 | 1860, op.82/2 | ix/2, 216; i |
| 968b | 2 marches caractéristiques, C [formerly 886] | ?1826 | 1830, op.121 | ix/1, 94; i |

SONGS

The following list includes duets, melodramas and works for or with unison chorus or incorporating brief passages for four-part chorus; all with piano accompaniment unless otherwise stated. SW numbers refer to volume and page in series 20, and NSA numbers to volume and page in series 4, unless otherwise stated. Incipits are given where different from title.

| D | Title | Incipit | Text | Key | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1a | Song sketch (no text) | | — | c | ?1810 | 1969 | —; vi, 157 |
| 5 | Hagars Klage | Hier am Hügel heissen Sandes | C.A. Schücking | c | 30 March 1811 | 1894 | i, 1; vi, 3 |
| 6 | Des Mädchens Klage (1) | Der Eichwald brauset | F. von Schiller | d | 1811 or 1812 | 1894 | i, 16; iii |
| 7 | Leichenfantasie | Mit erstorbnem Scheinen | Schiller | d | c1811 | 1894 | i, 22; vi, 22 |
| 10 | Der Vatermörder | Ein Vater starb von des Sohnes Hand | G.C. Pfeffel | c | 26 Dec 1811 | 1894 | i, 40; vi, 46 |
| 15 | Der Geistertanz (1), frag. | Die bretterne Kammer der Toten erbebt | F. von Matthisson | c | c1812 | 1895 | x, 92; vii, 188 |
| 15a | Der Geistertanz (2), frag. | Die bretterne Kammer der Toten erbebt | Matthisson | f | c1812 | 1895 | x, 94; vii, 190 |
| 17 | Quell'innocente figlio version 1 | | P. Metastasio | F | c1812 | 1940 | —; viii/2 |
| 23 | Klaglied | Meine Ruh' ist dahin | F. Rochlitz | g | 1812 | 1830, op.131/3 | i, 52; vi, 56 |
| 30 | Der Jüngling am Bache (1) | An der Quelle sass der Knabe | Schiller | F | 24 Sept 1812 | 1894 | i, 48; iv |

| D | Title | Incipit | Text | Key | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 33 | Entra l'uomo allor che nasce version 1 | | Metastasio | e | Sept–Oct 1812 | 1940 | —; viii/2 |
| 35 | Serbate, o dei custodi version 3 | | Metastasio | C | 10 Dec 1812 | 1940 | —; viii/2 |
| 39 | Lebenstraum | Ich sass an einer Tempelhalle | G. von Baumberg | C | *c*1810 | 1969 | —; vi, 171 |
| 42 | Misero pargoletto (1) | | Metastasio | | ?1813 | | |
| | version a, inc. | | | g | | 1969 | —; vi, 180 |
| | version b, inc. | | | g | | 1969 | —; vi, 181 |
| | Misero pargoletto (2) | | | g | | 1895 | x, 31; vi, 60 |
| 44 | Totengräberlied (2) | Grabe, Spaten, grabe! | L.C.H. Hölty | e | 19 Jan 1813 | 1894 | i, 54; vi, 64 |
| 50 | Die Schatten | Freunde, deren Grüfte | Matthisson | A | 12 April 1813 | 1894 | i, 58; vi, 68 |
| 52 | Sehnsucht (1) | Ach, aus dieses Tales Gründen | Schiller | d | 15–17 April 1813 | 1868 | i, 62; ii, 241 |
| 59 | Verklärung | Lebensfunke, vom Himmel ertglüht | A. Pope, trans. J.G. von Herder | a | 4 May 1813 | 1832 | i, 68; vi, 73 |
| 73 | Thekla: eine Geisterstimme (1) | Wo ich sei, und wo mich hingewendet | Schiller | G | 22–3 Aug 1813 | 1868 | i, 70; iv |
| 76 | Pensa, che questo istante | | Metastasio | | | | |
| | version a | | | D | 7 Sept 1813 | 1969 | —; vi, 184 |
| | version b | | | D | 13 Sept 1813 | 1871 | x, 34; vi, 76 |
| 77 | Der Taucher | Wer wagt es, Rittersmann | Schiller | | | | |
| | version a | | | d | 17 Sept 1813–5 April 1814 | 1831 | i, 73; vi, 78 |
| | version b [formerly 111] | | | d | by 1815 | 1894 | i, 102; vi, 114 |
| 78 | Son fra l'onde | | Metastasio | c | 18 Sept 1813 | 1895 | x, 36; vi, 150 |
| 81 | Auf den Sieg der Deutschen, with 2 vn, vc | Verschwunden sind die Schmerzen | ?Schubert | F | aut. 1813 | 1895 | x, 74; xiv |
| 83 | Zur Namensfeier des Herrn Andreas Siller, with vn, hp | Des Phöbus Strahlen | — | G | 28 Oct – 4 Nov 1813 | 1895 | x, 72; xiv |
| 93 | Don Gayseros | | F. de la Motte Fouqué | | *c*1815 | 1894 | |
| | 1 Don Gayseros, Don Gayseros | | | F | | | i, 132; vii, 167 |
| | 2 Nächtens klang die süsse Laute | | | F | | | i, 137; vii, 173 |
| | 3 An dem jungen Morgenhimmel | | | E♭ | | | i, 141; vii, 177 |
| 95 | Adelaide | Einsam wandelt dein Freund | Matthisson | A♭ | 1814 | 1848 | i, 169; vii, 3 |
| 97 | Trost: an Elisa | Lehnst du deine bleich-gehärmte Wange | Matthisson | a | 1814 | 1894 | i, 154; vii, 6 |
| 98 | Erinnerungen (1) | Am Seegestad | Matthisson | | | | |
| | version a | | | B♭ | aut. 1814 | 1968 | —; vii, 167 |
| | version b | | | B♭ | *c*1814 | 1894 | i, 166; vii, 8 |
| 99 | Andenken (1) | Ich denke dein | Matthisson | F | April 1814 | 1894 | i, 144; vii, 11 |
| 100 | Geisternähe | Der Dämmrung Schein | Matthisson | E♭ | April 1814 | 1894 | i, 147; vii, 14 |
| 101 | Erinnerung | Kein Rosenschimmer leuchtet | Matthisson | e | April 1814 | 1894 | i, 151; vii, 18 |
| 102 | Die Betende | Laura betet! | Matthisson | B | aut. 1814 | 1840 | i, 156; vii, 21 |
| 104 | Die Befreier Europas in Paris | Sie sind in Paris! | J.C. Mikan | | | | |
| | version a | | | G | May 1814 | 1968 | —; vii, 180 |
| | version b | | | G | May 1814 | 1968 | —; vii, 182 |
| | version c | | | G | 16 May 1814 | 1895 | x, 76; vii, 24 |
| 107 | Lied aus der Ferne | Wenn in des Abends letztem Scheine | Matthisson | | | | |
| | version a | | | E | July 1814 | 1894 | i, 158; vii, 26 |
| | version b | | | D | ?July 1814 | 1968 | —; vii, 29 |
| 108 | Der Abend | Purpur malt die Tannenhügel | Matthisson | d | July 1814 | 1894 | i, 161; vii, 31 |
| 109 | Lied der Liebe | Durch Fichten am Hügel | Matthisson | B♭ | July 1814 | 1894 | i, 163; vii, 33 |
| 111 | Der Taucher [see 77] | | | | | | |
| 113 | An Emma | Weit in nebelgrauer Ferne | Schiller | | | | |
| | version a | | | F | 17 Sept 1814 | 1894 | i, 172; iii |

| D | Title | Incipit | Text | Key | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | version b | | | F | c1814 | 1821 | i, 174; iii |
| | version c | | | F | c1814 | 1826, op.58/2 | i, 176; iii |
| 114 | Romanze | Ein Fräulein klagt' im finstern Turm | Matthisson | | | | |
| | version a | | | g | Sept 1814 | 1902 | —; vii, 36 |
| | version b | | | g | 29 Sept 1814 | 1868 | i, 178; vii, 42 |
| 115 | An Laura, als sie Klopstocks Auferstehungslied sang | Herzen, die gen Himmel sich erheben | Matthisson | E | 2–7 Oct 1814 | 1840 | i, 183; vii, 48 |
| 116 | Der Geistertanz (3) | Die bretterne Kammer der Toten erbebt | Matthisson | c | 14 Oct 1814 | 1840 | i, 186; vii, 52 |
| 117 | Das Mädchen aus der Fremde (1) | In einem Tal bei armen Hirten | Schiller | A | 16 Oct 1814 | 1894 | i, 189; viii |
| 118 | Gretchen am Spinnrade | Meine Ruh' ist hin | J.W. von Goethe | d | 19 Oct 1814 | 1821, op.2 | i, 191; i, 10 |
| 119 | Nachtgesang | O gib vom weichen Pfühle | Goethe | A♭ | 30 Nov 1814 | 1850 | i, 197; vii, 55 |
| 120 | Trost in Tränen | Wie kommt's, dass du so traurig bist | Goethe | F | 30 Nov 1814 | 1835 | i, 198; vii, 56 |
| 121 | Schäfers Klagelied | Da droben auf jenem Berge | Goethe | | | | |
| | version a | | | e | Nov 1814 | 1894 | i, 203; i, 194 |
| | version b | | | c | 30 Nov 1814 | 1821, op.3/1 | i, 200; i, 20 |
| 122 | Ammenlied | Am hohen, hohen Turm | M. Lubi | g | Dec 1814 | 1872 | i, 224; vii, 59 |
| 123 | Sehnsucht | Was zieht mir das Herz so? | Goethe | G | 3 Dec 1814 | 1842 | i, 206; vii, 60 |
| 124 | Am See | Sitz' ich im Gras | J. Mayrhofer | | | | |
| | version a | | | g | Dec 1814 | 1968 | —; vii, 194 |
| | version b | | | g | 7 Dec 1814 | 1885 | i, 210; vii, 65 |
| 126 | Szene aus Goethes Faust (Dom), with 4vv | Wie anders, Gretchen, war dir's | Goethe | | | | |
| | version a | | | c | Dec 1814 | 1873 | i, 215; vii, 196 |
| | version b | | | c | 12 Dec 1814 | 1832 | i, 219; vii, 71 |
| 134 | Ballade | Ein Fräulein schaut vom hohen Turm | J. Kenner | g | c1815 | 1830, op.126 | ii, 198; vii, 77 |
| 138 | Rastlose Liebe | Dem Schnee, dem Regen | Goethe | | | | |
| | version a | | | E | 19 May 1815 | 1821, op.51 | iii, 198; i, 35 |
| | version b | | | D | 1821 | 1970 | —; i, 208 |
| 141 | Der Mondabend | Rein und freundlich lacht der Himmel | J.G. Kumpf | A | 1815 | 1830, op.131/1 | ii, 20; vii, 86 |
| 142 | Geistes-Gruss | Hoch auf dem alten Turme | Goethe | | 1815 or 1816 | | |
| | version a | | | E♭/G♭ | | 1895 | iii, 189; v |
| | version b | | | E♭/G♭ | | 1885 | iii, 190; v |
| | version c | | | D/F | | | —; v |
| | version d | | | E♭/G♭ | | 1895 | iii, 191; v |
| | version e | | | E♭/G♭ | | | —; v |
| | version f | | | E/G | rev. ?1828 | 1828, op.92/3 | iii, 192; v |
| 143 | Genügsamkeit | Dort raget ein Berg | F. von Schober | c♯ | 1815 | 1829, op.109/2 | iii, 230; vii, 88 |
| 144 | Romanze, unfinished | In der Väter allen ruhte | F. Graf zu Stolberg-Stolberg | E | April 1816 | 1897 | Rb, 46; vii, 201 |
| 149 | Der Sänger | Was hör' ich draussen vor dem Tor | Goethe | | | | |
| | version a | | | D | Feb 1815 | 1894 | ii, 41; vii, 90 |
| | version b | | | D | 1815 | 1829, op.117 | ii, 33; vii, 97 |
| 150 | Lodas Gespenst | Der bleiche, kalte Mond | Ossian, trans. E. Baron de Harold | g/B♭ | 17 Jan 1816 | 1830 | ii, 21; vii, 105 |
| 151 | Auf einen Kirchhof | Sei gegrüsst, geweihte Stille | F. von Schlechta | A | 2 Feb 1815 | c1850 | ii, 1; vii, 119 |
| 152 | Minona | Wie treiben die Wolken so finster | F.A. Bertrand | a | 8 Feb 1815 | 1894 | ii, 6; vii, 124 |
| 153 | Als ich sie erröten sah | All' mein Wirken | B.A. Ehrlich | G | 10 Feb 1815 | 1845 | ii, 15; vii, 135 |
| 155 | Das Bild | Ein Mädchen ist's | | F | 11 Feb 1815 | 1862, op.165/3 | ii, 19; vii, 140 |
| 159 | Die Erwartung | Hör' ich das Pförtchen | Schiller | | | | |
| | version a | | | B♭ | May 1816 | 1968 | —; vii, 141 |
| | version b | | | B♭ | 1816 | 1829, op.116 | ii, 47; vii, 153 |

| D | Title | Incipit | Text | Key | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 160 | Am Flusse (1) | Verfliesset, vielgeliebte Lieder | Goethe | d | 27 Feb 1815 | 1894 | ii, 58; xiii |
| 161 | An Mignon | Über Tal und Fluss getragen | Goethe | | | | |
| | version a | | | g♯ | 27 Feb 1815 | 1894 | ii, 59; i, 249 |
| | version b | | | g | 1815 | 1825, op.19/2 | ii, 60; i, 129 |
| 162 | Nähe des Geliebten | Ich denke dein | Goethe | | 27 Feb 1815 | | |
| | version a | | | G♭ | | 1894 | ii, 62; i, 276 |
| | version b | | | G♭ | | 1821, op.5/2 | ii, 63; i, 40 |
| 163 | Sängers Morgenlied (1) | Süsses Licht! aus goldenen Pforten | T. Körner | G | 27 Feb 1815 | 1894 | ii, 64; viii |
| 164 | Liebesrausch (1), frag. | ... Glanz des Guten | Körner | G | March 1815 | 1928 | —; viii |
| 165 | Sängers Morgenlied (2) | Süsses Licht! aus goldenen Pforten | Körner | C | 1 March 1815 | 1872 | ii, 66; viii |
| 166 | Amphiaraos | Vor Thebens siebenfach gähnenden Toren | Körner | g | 1 March 1815 | 1894 | ii, 68; viii |
| 169 | Trinklied vor der Schlacht, for 2 unison choruses | Schlacht, du brichst an! | Körner | C | 12 March 1815 | 1894 | ii, 76; iii/3 |
| 170 | Schwertlied, with unison chorus | Du Schwert an meiner Linken | Körner | C | 12 March 1815 | 1873 | ii, 78; iii/3 |
| 171 | Gebet während der Schlacht | Vater, ich rufe dich! | Körner | B♭ | 12 March 1815 | 1831 | ii, 80; viii |
| 172 | Der Morgenstern (1), frag. | Stern der Liebe | Körner | G♭ | 12 March 1815 | — | —; viii |
| 174 | Das war ich | Jüngst träumte mir | Körner | | | | |
| | version a | | | G | 26 March 1815 | *c*1842 | ii, 84; viii |
| | version b, frag. | | | D | *c*June 1816 | 1897 | Rb, 16; viii |
| 176 | Die Sterne | Was funkelt ihr so mild mich an? | J.G. Fellinger | A♭ | 6 April 1815 | 1872 | ii, 86; viii |
| 177 | Vergebliche Liebe | Ja, ich weiss es | J.K. Bernard | c | 6 April 1815 | 1867, op.173/3 | ii, 88; viii |
| 179 | Liebesrausch (2) | Dir, Mädchen, schlägt | Körner | G | 8 April 1815 | 1872 | ii, 90; viii |
| 180 | Sehnsucht der Liebe | Wie die Nacht mit heiligem Beben | Körner | | | | |
| | version a | | | G | 8 April 1815 | 1894 | ii, 92; viii |
| | version b, frag., lost | | | G | July 1815 | — | — |
| 182 | Die erste Liebe | Die erste Liebe füllt das Herz | Fellinger | C | 12 April 1815 | 1842 | ii, 94; viii |
| 183 | Trinklied, with unison chorus | Ihr Freunde und du gold'ner Wein | A. Zettler | G | 12 April 1815 | 1887 | ii, 97; iii/3 |
| 186 | Die Sterbende | Heil! dies ist die letzte Zähre | Matthisson | A♭ | May 1815 | 1894 | ii, 100; viii |
| 187 | Stimme der Liebe (1) | Abendgewölke schweben hell | Matthisson | F | May 1815 | 1894 | ii, 98; viii |
| 188 | Naturgenuss (1) | Im Abendschimmer wallt der Quell | Matthisson | B♭ | May 1815 | 1887 | ii, 99; viii |
| 189 | An die Freude, with unison chorus | Freude, schöner Götterfunken | Schiller | E | May 1815 | 1829, op.111/1 | ii, 102; iii/3 |
| 191 | Des Mädchens Klage (2) | Der Eichwald brauset | Schiller | | | | |
| | version a | | | c | 15 May 1815 | 1894 | ii, 104; iii |
| | version b | | | c | 1815 | 1826, op.58/3 | ii, 106; iii |
| 192 | Der Jüngling am Bache (2) | An der Quelle sass der Knabe | Schiller | f | 15 May 1815 | 1887 | ii, 108; iv |
| 193 | An den Mond | Geuss, lieber Mond | Hölty | f | 17 May 1815 | 1826, op.57/3 | ii, 110; iii |
| 194 | Die Mainacht | Wann der silberne Mond | Hölty | d | 17 May 1815 | 1894 | ii, 112; viii |
| 195 | Amalia | Schön wie Engel | Schiller | A | 19 May 1815 | 1867, op.173/1 | ii, 113; viii |
| 196 | An die Nachtigall | Geuss nicht so laut | Hölty | f♯ | 22 May 1815 | 1865, op.172/3 | ii, 116; viii |
| 197 | An die Apfelbäume, wo ich Julien erblickte | Ein heilig Säuseln | Hölty | A | 22 May 1815 | 1850 | ii, 117; viii |
| 198 | Seufzer | Die Nachtigall singt überall | Hölty | g | 22 May 1815 | 1894 | ii, 120; viii |
| 201 | Auf den Tod einer Nachtigall (1), frag. | Sie ist dahin | Hölty | f♯ | 25 May 1815 | 1970 | —; x |
| 204a | Das Traumbild, lost | | Hölty | — | May 1815 | — | — |
| 206 | Liebeständelei | Süsses Liebchen, komm zu mir! | Körner | E♭ | 26 May 1815 | 1872 | ii, 122; viii |

| D | Title | Incipit | Text | Key | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 207 | Der Liebende | Beglückt, beglückt, wer dich erblickt | Hölty | B♭ | 29 May 1815 | 1894 | ii, 123; viii |
| 208 | Die Nonne | Es liebt' in Welschland | Hölty | | | | |
| | version a, frag. | | | A♭ | 29 May 1815 | 1897 | Rb, 19; viii |
| | version b [formerly 212] | | | A♭ | 16 June 1815 | 1895 | ii, 124; viii |
| 209 | Der Liedler | Gib, Schwester, mir die Harf herab | Kenner | a | Jan 1815 | 1825, op.38 | ii, 184; ii, 144 |
| 210 | Die Liebe (Klärchens Lied) | Freudvoll und leidvoll | Goethe | B♭ | 3 June 1815 | 1838 | ii, 130; viii |
| 211 | Adelwold und Emma | Hoch, und ehern schier von Dauer | Bertrand | F | 5–14 June 1815 | 1894 | ii, 132; viii |
| 212 | Die Nonne [see 208] | | | | | | |
| 213 | Der Traum | Mir träumt', ich war ein Vögelein | Hölty | A | 17 June 1815 | 1865, op.172/1 | ii, 158; viii |
| 214 | Die Laube | Nimmer werd' ich, nimmer dein vergessen | Hölty | A♭ | 17 June 1815 | 1865, op.172/2 | ii, 159; viii |
| 215 | Jägers Abendlied (1) | Im Felde schleich' ich still und wild | Goethe | F | 20 June 1815 | 1907 | —; i, 198 |
| 215a | Meeresstille (1) | Tiefe Stille herrscht im Wasser | Goethe | C | 20 June 1815 | 1952 | —; i, 197 |
| 216 | Meeresstille (2) | Tiefe Stille herrscht im Wasser | Goethe | C | 21 June 1815 | 1821, op.3/2 | ii, 160; i, 23 |
| 217 | Kolmas Klage | Rund um mich Nacht | Ossian, trans. | c | 22 June 1815 | 1830 | ii, 161; viii |
| 218 | Grablied | Er fiel den Tod fürs Vaterland | Kenner | f | 24 June 1815 | 1848 | ii, 166; viii |
| 219 | Das Finden | Ich hab' ein Mädchen funden | L. Kosegarten | B♭ | 25 June 1815 | 1848 | ii, 167; viii |
| 221 | Der Abend | Der Abend blüht | Kosegarten | B | 15 July 1815 | 1829, op.118/2 | ii, 178; viii |
| 222 | Lieb Minna | Schwüler Hauch weht mir herüber | A. Stadler | f | 2 July 1815 | 1885 | ii, 168; viii |
| 224 | Wandrers Nachtlied | Der du von dem Himmel bist | Goethe | G♭ | 5 July 1815 | 1821, op.4/3 | ii, 170; i, 34 |
| 225 | Der Fischer | Das Wasser rauscht | Goethe | | | | |
| | version a | | | B♭ | 5 July 1815 | 1970 | —; i, 208 |
| | version b | | | B♭ | c1815 | 1821, op.5/3 | ii, 171; i, 42 |
| 226 | Erster Verlust | Ach, wer bringt die schönen Tage | Goethe | f | 5 July 1815 | 1821, op.5/4 | ii, 172; i, 44 |
| 227 | Idens Nachtgesang | Vernimm es, Nacht | Kosegarten | B♭ | 7 July 1815 | 1885 | ii, 173; viii |
| 228 | Von Ida | Der Morgen blüht | Kosegarten | f | 7 July 1815 | 1894 | ii, 174; viii |
| 229 | Die Erscheinung | Ich lag auf grünen Matten | Kosegarten | E | 7 July 1815 | 1829, op.108/3 | ii, 175; v |
| 230 | Die Täuschung | Im Erlenbusch, im Tannenhain | Kosegarten | E | 7 July 1815 | 1862, op.165/4 | ii, 176; viii |
| 231 | Das Sehnen | Wehmut, die mich hüllt | Kosegarten | a | 8 July 1815 | 1865, op.172/4 | ii, 177; viii |
| 233 | Geist der Liebe | Wer bist du, Geist der Liebe | Kosegarten | E | 15 July 1815 | 1829, op.118/1 | ii, 180; viii |
| 234 | Tischlied | Mich ergreift, ich weiss nicht wie | Goethe | C | 15 July 1815 | 1829, op.118/3 | ii, 182; viii |
| 235 | Abends unter der Linde (1) | Woher, o namenloses Sehnen | Kosegarten | F | 24 July 1815 | 1894 | ii, 204; viii |
| 237 | Abends unter der Linde (2) | Woher, o namenloses Sehnen | Kosegarten | F | 25 July 1815 | 1872 | ii, 206; viii |
| 238 | Die Mondnacht | Siehe, wie die Mondesstrahlen | Kosegarten | F♯ | 25 July 1815 | 1894 | ii, 208; viii |
| 240 | Huldigung | Ganz verloren, ganz versunken | Kosegarten | E | 27 July 1815 | 1894 | ii, 210; viii |
| 241 | Alles um Liebe | Was ist es, das die Seele füllt? | Kosegarten | E | 27 July 1815 | 1894 | ii, 212; viii |
| 245 | An den Frühling [see 587b] | | | | | | |
| 246 | Die Bürgschaft | Zu Dionys, dem Tyrannen | Schiller | g | Aug 1815 | 1830 | iii, 11; viii |
| 247 | Die Spinnerin | Als ich still und ruhig spann | Goethe | b | Aug 1815 | 1829, op.118/6 | iii, 44; viii |
| 248 | Lob des Tokayers | O köstlicher Tokayer | Baumberg | B♭ | Aug 1815 | 1829, op.118/4 | iii, 66; viii |
| 249 | Die Schlacht (1), frag. | | Schiller | b | 1 Aug 1815 | | —; iii/2 |
| 250 | Das Geheimnis (1) | Sie konnte mir kein Wörtchen sagen | Schiller | A♭ | 7 Aug 1815 | 1872 | iii, 2; xiii |
| 251 | Hoffnung (1) | Es reden und träumen die Menschen | Schiller | G♭ | 7 Aug 1815 | 1872 | iii, 4; iv |

| D | Title | Incipit | Text | Key | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 252 | Das Mädchen aus der Fremde (2) | In einem Tal bei armen Hirten | Schiller | F | 12 Aug 1815 | 1887 | iii, 10; viii |
| 253 | Punschlied: im Norden zu singen | Auf der Berge freien Höhen | Schiller | B♭ | 18 Aug 1815 | 1887 | iii, 30; viii |
| 254 | Der Gott und die Bajadere | Mahadöh, der Herr der Erde | Goethe | E♭ | 18 Aug 1815 | 1887 | iii, 32; viii |
| 255 | Der Rattenfänger | Ich bin der wohlbekannte Sänger | Goethe | G | 19 Aug 1815 | *c*1850 | iii, 34; viii |
| 256 | Der Schatzgräber | Arm am Beutel, krank am Herzen | Goethe | d | 19 Aug 1815 | 1887 | iii, 35; viii |
| 257 | Heidenröslein | Sah ein Knab' ein Röslein stehn | Goethe | G | 19 Aug 1815 | 1821, op.3/3 | iii, 37; i, 24 |
| 258 | Bundeslied | In allen guten Stunden | Goethe | B♭ | 4 or 19 Aug 1815 | 1887 | iii, 38; viii |
| 259 | An den Mond (1) | Füllest wieder Busch und Tal | Goethe | E♭ | 19 Aug 1815 | *c*1850 | iii, 40; ix |
| 260 | Wonne der Wehmut | Trocknet nicht, trocknet nicht | Goethe | c | 20 Aug 1815 | 1829, op.115/2 | iii, 42; viii |
| 261 | Wer kauft Liebesgötter? | Von allen schönen Waren | Goethe | C | 21 Aug 1815 | *c*1850 | iii, 43; viii |
| 262 | Die Fröhlichkeit | Wes' Adern leichtes Blut durchspringt | M.J. Prandstetter | E | 22 Aug 1815 | 1895 | iii, 64; ix |
| 263 | Cora an die Sonne | Nach so vielen trüben Tagen | Baumberg | E♭ | 22 Aug 1815 | 1848 | iii, 50; ix |
| 264 | Der Morgenkuss | Durch eine ganze Nacht | Baumberg | | | | |
| | version a | | | E♭ | 22 Aug 1815 | 1872 | iii, 51; ix |
| | version b | | | C | *c*1815 | 1850 | —; ix |
| 265 | Abendständchen: An Lina | Sei sanft wie ihre Seele | Baumberg | B♭ | 23 Aug 1815 | 1895 | iii, 52; ix |
| 266 | Morgenlied | Willkommen, rotes Morgenlicht | Stolberg | F | 24 Aug 1815 | 1895 | iii, 54; ix |
| 270 | An die Sonne | Sinke, liebe Sonne | Baumberg | E♭ | 25 Aug 1815 | 1829, op.118/5 | iii, 56; ix |
| 271 | Der Weiberfreund | Noch fand von Evens Töchterscharen | A. Cowley, trans. J.F. von Ratschky | A | 25 Aug 1815 | 1895 | iii, 57; ix |
| 272 | An die Sonne | Königliche Morgensonne | C.A. Tiedge | E♭ | 25 Aug 1815 | 1872 | iii, 58; ix |
| 273 | Lilla an die Morgenröte | Wie schön bist du, du güldne Morgenröte | | D | 25 Aug 1815 | 1895 | iii, 59; ix |
| 274 | Tischlerlied | Mein Handwerk geht durch alle Welt | | C | 25 Aug 1815 | 1850 | iii, 60; ix |
| 275 | Totenkranz für ein Kind | Sanft wehn, im Hauch der Abendluft | Matthisson | g | 25 Aug 1815 | 1895 | iii, 61; ix |
| 276 | Abendlied | Gross und rotentflammet | Stolberg | A | 28 Aug 1815 | 1895 | iii, 62; ix |
| 278 | Ossians Lied nach dem Falle Nathos | Beugt euch aus euren Wolken nieder | Ossian, trans. Harold | | ?Sept 1815 | | |
| | version a, frag. | | | E | | 1897 | Rb, 34; ix |
| | version b | | | E | | 1830 | iii, 108; ix |
| 280 | Das Rosenband | Im Frühlingsgarten fand ich sie | F.G. Klopstock | A♭ | Sept 1815 | 1837 | iii, 72; ix |
| 281 | Das Mädchen von Inistore | Mädchen Inistores | Ossian, trans. Harold | c | Sept 1815 | 1830 | iii, 110; ix |
| 282 | Cronnan | Ich sitz' bei der moosigten Quelle | Ossian, trans. Harold | c | 5 Sept 1815 | 1830 | iv, 21; ix |
| 283 | An den Frühling (1) | Willkommen, schöner Jüngling! | Schiller | F | 6 Sept 1815 | 1865, op.172/5 | iii, 68; xi |
| 284 | Lied | Es ist so angenehm | ?Schiller | G | 6 Sept 1815 | 1895 | iii, 69; ix |
| 285 | Furcht der Geliebten (An Cidli) | Cidli, du weinest | Klopstock | | | | |
| | version a | | | A♭ | 12 Sept 1815 | 1895 | iii, 70; ix |
| | version b | | | A♭ | *c*1815 | 1885 | iii, 71; ix |
| 286 | Selma und Selmar | Weine du nicht | Klopstock | | | | |
| | version a | | | F | *c*1815 | 1895 | iii, 74; ix |
| | version b | | | F | 14 Sept 1815 | 1837 | iii, 75; ix |
| 287 | Vaterlandslied | Ich bin ein deutsches Mädchen | Klopstock | | | | |
| | version a | | | C | 14 Sept 1815 | 1895 | iii, 76; ix |
| | version b | | | C | *c*1815 | 1895 | iii, 77; ix |
| 288 | An Sie | Zeit, Verkündigerin der besten Freuden | Klopstock | A♭ | 14 Sept 1815 | 1895 | iii, 78; ix |
| 289 | Die Sommernacht | Wenn der Schimmer von dem Monde | Klopstock | | | | |

| D | Title | Incipit | Text | Key | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | version a | | | C | 14 Sept 1815 | 1895 | iii, 80; ix |
| | version b | | | C | c1815 | 1895 | iii, 82; ix |
| 290 | Die frühen Gräber | Willkommen, o silberner Mond | Klopstock | a | 14 Sept 1815 | 1837 | iii, 84; ix |
| 291 | Dem Unendlichen | Wie erhebt sich das Herz | Klopstock | | | | |
| | version a | | | F | 15 Sept 1815 | 1895 | iii, 85; ix |
| | version b | | | F | c1815 | 1831 | iii, 90; ix |
| | version c | | | G | c1815 | 1895 | iii, 95; ix |
| 292 | Klage [see 371] | | | | | | |
| 293 | Shilric und Vinvela | Mein Geliebter ist ein Sohn des Hügels | Ossian, trans. Harold | B♭ | 20 Sept 1815 | 1830 | iii, 100; ix |
| 295 | Hoffnung | Schaff, das Tagwerk meiner Hände | Goethe | c1816 | | | |
| | version a | | | F | | 1872 | iii, 193; ix |
| | version b | | | E | | 1895 | iii, 194; ix |
| 296 | An den Mond (2) | Füllest wieder Busch und Tal | Goethe | A♭ | c1816 | 1868 | iii, 195; ix |
| 297 | Augenlied | Süsse Augen, klare Bronnen! | Mayrhofer | | ?1817 | | |
| | version a | | | F | | 1895 | iii, 168; ix |
| | version b | | | F | | 1850 | —; ix |
| 298 | Liane | Hast du Lianen nicht gesehen? | Mayrhofer | C | Oct 1815 | 1895 | iii, 165; ix |
| 300 | Der Jüngling an der Quelle | Leise, rieselnder Quell | J.G. von Salis-Seewis | A | c1817 | 1842 | vi, 208; ix |
| 301 | Lambertine | O Liebe, die mein Herz erfüllet | J.L. Stoll | E♭ | 12 Oct 1815 | 1842 | iii, 112; ix |
| 302 | Labetrank der Liebe | Wenn im Spiele leiser Töne | Stoll | F | 15 Oct 1815 | 1895 | iii, 114; ix |
| 303 | An die Geliebte | O, dass ich dir vom stillen Auge | Stoll | G | 15 Oct 1815 | 1887 | iii, 116; ix |
| 304 | Wiegenlied | Schlumm're sanft! | Körner | F | 15 Oct 1815 | 1895 | iii, 117; ix |
| 305 | Mein Gruss an den Mai | Sei mir gegrüsst, o Mai | Kumpf | B♭ | 15 Oct 1815 | 1895 | iii, 118; ix |
| 306 | Skolie | Lasst im Morgenstrahl des Mai'n | J.L. von Deinhardstein | B♭ | 15 Oct 1815 | 1895 | iii, 120; ix |
| 307 | Die Sternenwelten | Oben drehen sich die grossen | U. Jarnik, trans. Fellinger | F | 15 Oct 1815 | 1895 | iii, 121; ix |
| 308 | Die Macht der Liebe | Überall, wohin mein Auge blicket | J.N. von Kalchberg | B♭ | 15 Oct 1815 | 1895 | iii, 123; ix |
| 309 | Das gestörte Glück | Ich hab' ein heisses junges Blut | Körner | F | 15 Oct 1815 | 1872 | iii, 124; ix |
| 310 | Sehnsucht (1) | Nur wer die Sehnsucht kennt | Goethe | | 18 Oct 1815 | | |
| | version a | | | A♭ | | 1895 | iii, 126; iii |
| | version b | | | F | | 1895 | iii, 128; iii |
| 311 | An den Mond, frag. | | | A | 19 Oct 1815 | | —; ix |
| 312 | Hektors Abschied | Will sich Hektor ewig von mir wenden | Schiller | | | | |
| | version a | | | f | 19 Oct 1815 | 1895 | iii, 130; iii |
| | version b | | | f | c1815 | 1826, op.58/1 | iii, 36; iii |
| 313 | Die Sterne | Wie wohl ist mir im Dunkeln | Kosegarten | B♭ | 19 Oct 1815 | 1895 | iii, 142; ix |
| 314 | Nachtgesang | Tiefe Feier schauert um die Welt | Kosegarten | E♭ | 19 Oct 1815 | 1887 | iii, 144; ix |
| 315 | An Rosa I | Warum bist du nicht hier | Kosegarten | A♭ | 19 Oct 1815 | 1895 | iii, 145; ix |
| 316 | An Rosa II | Rosa, denkst du an mich? | Kosegarten | | | | |
| | version a | | | A♭ | 19 Oct 1815 | 1895 | iii, 146; ix |
| | version b | | | A♭ | c1815 | 1895 | iii, 147; ix |
| 317 | Idens Schwanenlied | Wie schaust du aus dem Nebelflor | Kosegarten | | | | |
| | version a | | | f | 19 Oct 1815 | — | —; ix |
| | version b | | | f | c1815 | 1895 | iii, 148; ix |
| 318 | Schwanengesang | Endlich stehn die Pforten offen | Kosegarten | f | 19 Oct 1815 | 1895 | iii, 150; ix |
| 319 | Luisens Antwort | Wohl weinen Gottes Engel | Kosegarten | b♭ | 19 Oct 1815 | 1895 | iii, 152; ix |
| 320 | Der Zufriedene | Zwar schuf das Glück hinieden | C.L. Reissig | A | 23 Oct 1815 | 1895 | iii, 154; ix |
| 321 | Mignon | Kennst du das Land | Goethe | A | 23 Oct 1815 | 1832 | iii, 155; ix |
| 322 | Hermann und Thusnelda | Ha, dort kömmt er | Klopstock | E♭ | 27 Oct 1815 | 1837 | iii, 159; ix |

| D | Title | Incipit | Text | Key | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 323 | Klage der Ceres | Ist der holde Lenz erschienen? | Schiller | G | 9 Nov 1815 – June 1816 | 1895 | iii, 171; ix |
| 325 | Harfenspieler (1) | Wer sich der Einsamkeit ergibt | Goethe | a | 13 Nov 1815 | 1895 | iii, 187; i, 218 |
| 327 | Lorma (1), frag. | Lorma sass in der Halle von Aldo | Ossian, trans. Harold | a | 28 Nov 1815 | 1928 | —; x |
| 328 | Erlkönig | Wer reitet so spät | Goethe | | | | |
| | version a | | | g | ?Oct 1815 | 1895 | iii, 202; i, 173 |
| | version b | | | g | 1815 | 1868 | iii, 214; i, 180 |
| | version c | | | g | 1815 | 1895 | iii, 208; i, 187 |
| | version d | | | g | 1815 | 1821, op.1 | iii, 219; i, 3 |
| 329 | Die drei Sänger, frag. | Der König sass beim frohen Mahle | F. Bobrik | A | 23 Dec 1815 | 1895 | x, 97; ix |
| 330 | Das Grab (2) | Das Grab ist tief und stille | Salis-Seewis | c | 28 Dec 1815 | 1895 | iii, 231; iii/3 |
| | version a [for version b see MALE VOICES] | | | | | | |
| 342 | An mein Klavier | Sanftes Klavier | C.F.D. Schubart | A | c1816 | 1885 | iv, 138; x |
| 343 | Am Tage aller Seelen (Litanei auf das Fest aller Seelen) | Ruhn in Frieden alle Seelen | J.G. Jacobi | | Aug 1816 | | |
| | version a | | | E♭ | | 1831 | v, 126; x |
| | version b | | | E♭ | | — | —; x |
| 344 | Am ersten Maimorgen | Heute will ich fröhlich, fröhlich sein | M. Claudius | G | c1816 | — | —; x |
| 350 | Der Entfernten (2) | Wohl denk' ich allenthalben | Salis-Seewis | E♭ | ?1816 | 1885 | iv, 69; x |
| 351 | Fischerlied (1) | Das Fischer-gewerbe gibt rüstigen Mut! | Salis-Seewis | D | ?1816 | 1895 | iv, 70; xi |
| 352 | Licht und Liebe (Nachtgesang), S, T | Liebe ist ein süsses Licht | M. von Collin | G | ?1816 | c1847 | iv, 253; iii/2 |
| 358 | Die Nacht | Du verstörst uns nicht, o Nacht! | J.P. Uz | A♭ | 1816 | c1849 | iv, 127; x |
| 359 | Sehnsucht (2) | Nur wer die Sehnsucht kennt | Goethe | d | 1816 | 1872 | iv, 200; iii |
| 360 | Lied eines Schiffers an die Dioskuren | Dioskuren, Zwillingssterne | Mayrhofer | A♭ | 1816 | 1826, op.65/1 | iv, 221; iii |
| 361 | Am Bach im Frühlinge | Du brachst sie nun, die kalte Rinde | Schober | D♭ | 1816 | 1829, op.109/1 | iv, 230; x |
| 362 | Zufriedenheit (1) | Ich bin vergnügt | Claudius | A | 1815 or 1816 | 1895 | iv, 244; xi |
| 363 | An Chloen, frag. | Die Munterkeit ist meinen Wangen | Uz | G | 1816 | — | —; x |
| 367 | Der König in Thule | Es war ein König in Thule | Goethe | d | early 1816 | 1821, op.5/5 | iv, 202; i, 45 |
| 368 | Jägers Abendlied (2) | Im Felde schleich' ich still und wild | Goethe | D♭ | ?early 1816 | 1821, op.3/4 | iv, 203; i, 25 |
| 369 | An Schwager Kronos | Spude dich Kronos! | Goethe | d | 1816 | 1825, op.19/1 | iv, 204; i, 121 |
| 371 | Klage [formerly 292] | Trauer umfliesst mein Leben | | b | Jan 1816 | 1872 | iv, 5; x |
| 372 | An die Natur | Süsse, heilige Natur | Stolberg-Stolberg | F | 15 Jan 1816 | 1895 | iv, 2; x |
| 373 | Lied | Mutter geht durch ihre Kammern | Fouqué | g | ?15 Jan 1816 | 1895 | iv, 3; x |
| 375 | Der Tod Oskars | Warum öffnest du wieder | Ossian, trans. Harold | c | Feb 1816 | 1830 | iv, 7; x |
| 376 | Lorma (2), frag. | Lorma sass in der Halle von Aldo | Ossian, trans. Harold | a | 10 Feb 1816 | 1895 | x, 102; x |
| 381 | Morgenlied | Die frohe neubelebte Flur | | C | 24 Feb 1816 | 1895 | iv, 29; x |
| 382 | Abendlied | Sanft glänzt die Abendsonne | | F | 24 Feb 1816 | 1895 | iv, 30; x |
| 388 | Laura am Klavier | Wenn dein Finger durch die Saiten meistert | Schiller | | | 1895 | |
| | version a | | | E | March 1816 | | iv, 41; x |
| | version b | | | A | c1816 | | iv, 46; x |
| 389 | Des Mädchens Klage (3) | Der Eichwald braust | Schiller | c | March 1816 | 1873 | iv, 52; iii |
| 390 | Entzückung an Laura (1) | Laura, über diese Welt | Schiller | A | March 1816 | 1895 | iv, 54; x |
| 391 | Die vier Weltalter | Wohl perlet im Glase | Schiller | G | March 1816 | 1829, op.111/3 | iv, 56; x |
| 392 | Pflügerlied | Arbeitsam und wacker | Salis-Seewis | C | March 1816 | 1895 | iv, 58; x |
| 393 | Die Einsiedelei (2) | Es rieselt, klar und wehend | Salis-Seewis | A | March 1816 | c1845 | iv, 60; xi |

| D | Title | Incipit | Text | Key | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 394 | An die Harmonie | Schöpferin beseelter Töne! | Salis-Seewis | A | March 1816 | 1895 | iv, 62; x |
| 395 | Lebensmelodien | Auf den Wassern wohnt mein stilles Leben | A.W. von Schlegel | G | March 1816 | 1829, op.111/2 | iv, 72; x |
| 396 | Gruppe aus dem Tartarus (1), frag. | Horch, wie Murmeln des empörten Meeres | Schiller | c | March 1816 | 1975 | —; ii, 171 |
| 397 | Ritter Toggenburg | Ritter, treue Schwesterliebe | Schiller | F | 13 March 1816 | 1832 | iv, 31; x |
| 398 | Frühlingslied (2) | Die Luft ist blau | Hölty | G | 13 May 1816 | 1887 | iv, 97; x |
| 399 | Auf den Tod einer Nachtigall (2) | Sie ist dahin | Hölty | a | 13 May 1816 | 1895 | iv, 98; x |
| 400 | Die Knabenzeit | Wie glücklich, wem das Knabenkleid | Hölty | A | 13 May 1816 | 1895 | iv, 100; x |
| 401 | Winterlied | Keine Blumen blühn | Hölty | a | 13 May 1816 | 1895 | iv, 102; x |
| 402 | Der Flüchtling | Frisch atmet des Morgens lebendiger Hauch | Schiller | B♭ | 18 March 1816 | 1872 | iv, 35; x |
| 403 | Lied | Ins stille Land | Salis-Seewis | | | | |
| | version a | | | g | 27 March 1816 | 1845 | iv, 66; x |
| | version b | | | a | April 1816 | 1895 | iv, 67; x |
| | version c | | | a | March 1816 | — | —; x |
| | version d | | | a | Aug 1823 | — | —; x |
| 404 | Die Herbstnacht | Mit leisen Harfentönen | Salis-Seewis | F | March 1816 | 1885 | iv, 61; x |
| 405 | Der Herbstabend | Abendglockenhalle zittern | Salis-Seewis | | | | |
| | version a | | | f | April 1816 | 1895 | iv, 68; x |
| | version b | | | f | 1816 | — | —; x |
| 406 | Abschied von der Harfe | Noch einmal tön, o Harfe | Salis-Seewis | e | March 1816 | 1887 | iv, 80; x |
| 409 | Die verfehlte Stunde | Quälend ungestilltes Sehnen | A.W. von Schlegel | f | April 1816 | 1872 | iv, 70; x |
| 410 | Sprache der Liebe | Lass dich mit gelinden Schlägen | A.W. von Schlegel | E | April 1816 | 1829, op.115/3 | iv, 78; x |
| 411 | Daphne am Bach | Ich hab' ein Bächlein funden | Stolberg-Stolberg | D | April 1816 | 1887 | iv, 81; x |
| 412 | Stimme der Liebe | Meine Selinde | Stolberg-Stolberg | | | | |
| | version a | | | E | 1816 | — | —; x |
| | version b | | | D | *c*1816 | 1838 | iv, 82; x |
| 413 | Entzückung | Tag voll Himmel | Matthisson | C | April 1816 | 1895 | iv, 84; x |
| 414 | Geist der Liebe (1) | Der Abend schleiert Flur und Hain | Matthisson | G | April 1816 | 1895 | iv, 87; x |
| 415 | Klage | Die Sonne steigt | Matthisson | C | April 1816 | 1895 | iv, 88; x |
| 416 | Lied in der Abwesenheit, frag. | Ach, mir ist das Herz so schwer | Stolberg-Stolberg | b | April 1816 | 1925 | —; x |
| 418 | Stimme der Liebe (2) | Abendgewölke schweben hell | Matthisson | G | 29 April 1816 | 1895 | iv, 90; x |
| 419 | Julius an Theone | Nimmer, nimmer darf ich dir gestehen | Matthisson | g | 30 April 1816 | 1895 | iv, 95; x |
| 429 | Minnelied | Holder klingt der Vogelsang | Hölty | E | May 1816 | 1885 | iv, 103; x |
| 430 | Die frühe Liebe | Schon im bunten Knabenkleide | Hölty | | | | |
| | version a | | | E | May 1816 | 1895 | iv, 104; x |
| | version b, lost | | | E | *c*1816 | — | — |
| 431 | Blumenlied | Es ist ein halbes Himmelreich | Hölty | E | May 1816 | 1887 | iv, 105; x |
| 432 | Der Leidende | Nimmer trag' ich länger | | | May 1816 | | |
| | version a | | | b | | 1850 | iv, 106; x |
| | version b | | | b | | 1895 | iv, 107; x |
| 433 | Seligkeit | Freuden sonder Zahl | Hölty | E | May 1816 | 1895 | iv, 108; x |
| 434 | Erntelied | Sicheln schallen, Ähren fallen | Hölty | E | May 1816 | 1850 | iv, 109; x |
| 436 | Klage | Dein Silber schien | Hölty | | | | |
| | version a | | | F | 12 May 1816 | 1850 | iv, 95; x |
| | version b [formerly 437] | | | F | 1816 | — | —; x |
| 437 | Klage [see 436] | | | | | | |
| 442 | Das grosse Halleluja version a [for version b see FEMALE OR UNSPECIFIED VOICES] | Ehre sei dem Hocherhabnen | Klopstock | E | June 1816 | *c*1847 | iv, 110; x |

| D | Title | Incipit | Text | Key | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 443 | Schlachtlied (1) version a [for version b see FEMALE OR UNSPECIFIED VOICES] | Mit unserm Arm ist nichts getan | Klopstock | E | June 1816 | 1895 | iv, 112; x |
| 444 | Die Gestirne | Es tönet sein Lob | Klopstock | F | June 1816 | 1831 | iv, 114; x |
| 445 | Edone | Dein süsses Bild, Edone | Klopstock | E♭ | June 1816 | 1837 | iv, 116; x |
| 446 | Die Liebesgötter | Cypris, meiner Phyllis gleich | Uz | C | June 1816 | 1887 | iv, 118; x |
| 447 | An den Schlaf | Komm, und senke die umflorten Schwingen | | A | June 1816 | 1895 | iv, 120; x |
| 448 | Gott im Frühlinge | In seinem schimmernden Gewand | Uz | | | | |
| | version a | | | E | June 1816 | 1887 | iv, 121; x |
| | version b | | | E | *c*June 1816 | — | —; x |
| 449 | Der gute Hirt | Was sorgest du? | Uz | E | June 1816 | 1872 | iv, 124; x |
| 450 | Fragment aus dem Aeschylus | So wird der Mann, der sonder Zwang | Aeschylus, trans. Mayrhofer | | June 1816 | | |
| | version a | | | A♭ | | 1895 | iv, 128; x |
| | version b | | | A♭ | | 1832 | iv, 131; x |
| 454 | Grablied auf einen Soldaten | Zieh hin, du braver Krieger du! | C.F.D. Schubart | c | July 1816 | 1872 | iv, 140; x |
| 455 | Freude der Kinderjahre | Freude, die im frühen Lenze | F. von Köpken | C | July 1816 | 1887 | iv, 142; x |
| 456 | Das Heimweh | Oft in einsam stillen Stunden | K.G.T. Winkler | F | July 1816 | 1887 | iv, 144; x |
| 457 | An die untergehende Sonne | Sonne, du sinkst | Kosegarten | E♭ | July 1816 – May 1817 | 1827, op.44 | iv, 134; iii |
| 458 | Aus Diego Manazares (Ilmerine) | Wo irrst du durch einsame Schatten | Schlechta | A♭ | 30 July 1816 | 1872 | iv, 146; x |
| 462 | An Chloen | Bei der Liebe reinsten Flammen | Jacobi | A♭ | Aug 1816 | 1895 | iv, 149; x |
| 463 | Hochzeit-Lied | Will singen euch im alten Ton | Jacobi | E♭ | Aug 1816 | 1895 | iv, 150; x |
| 464 | In der Mitternacht | Todesstille deckt das Tal | Jacobi | c | Aug 1816 | 1895 | iv, 151; x |
| 465 | Trauer der Liebe | Wo die Taub in stillen Buchen | Jacobi | | | | |
| | version a | | | A♭ | Aug 1816 | 1885 | iv, 152; x |
| | version b | | | A♭ | *c*1816 | — | —; x |
| 466 | Die Perle | Es ging ein Mann zur Frühlingszeit | Jacobi | d | Aug 1816 | 1872 | iv, 153; x |
| 467 | Pflicht und Liebe | Du, der ewig um mich trauert | F.W. Gotter | c | Aug 1816 | 1885 | x, 104; x |
| 468 | An den Mond | Was schauest du so hell und klar | Hölty | A | 7 Aug 1816 | 1895 | iv, 148; x |
| 469 | Mignon (1), 2 frags. | So lasst mich scheinen | Goethe | A♭ | Sept 1816 | 1897 | Rb, 86; iii |
| 473 | Liedesend | Auf seinem goldnen Throne | Mayrhofer | | Sept 1816 | | |
| | version a | | | c | | 1895 | iv, 154; x |
| | version b | | | c | | 1833 | iv, 159; x |
| 474 | Lied des Orpheus, als er in die Hölle ging | Wälze dich hinweg | Jacobi | | | | |
| | version a, inc. | | | G♭ | Sept 1816 | 1895 | iv, 164; x |
| | version b | | | G♭ | 1816 | 1832 | iv, 170; x |
| 475 | Abschied (nach einer Wallfahrtsarie) | Über die Berge zieht ihr fort | Mayrhofer | G | Sept 1816 | 1885 | iv, 176; xi |
| 476 | Rückweg | Zum Donaustrom, zur Kaiserstadt | Mayrhofer | d | Sept 1816 | 1872 | iv, 178; xi |
| 477 | Alte Liebe rostet nie | — | Mayrhofer | B | Sept 1816 | 1895 | iv, 180; xi |
| 478 | Harfenspieler I (Gesänge des Harfners no.1) (2) | Wer sich der Einsamkeit ergibt | Goethe | | | | |
| | version a | | | a | Sept 1816 | 1895 | iv, 181; i, 220 |
| | version b | | | a | 1822 | 1822, op.12/1 | iv, 189; i, 85 |
| 479 | Harfenspieler II (Gesänge des Harfners no.3) | An die Türen will ich schleichen | Goethe | | | | |
| | version a | | | a | Sept 1816 | 1895 | iv, 184; i, 224 |
| | version b | | | a | 1822 | 1822, op.12/3 | iv, 196; i, 93 |

| D | Title | Incipit | Text | Key | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 480 | Harfenspieler III (Gesänge des Harfners no.2) (1, 2, 3) | Wer nie sein Brot mit Tränen ass | Goethe | | | | |
| | version a | | | a | Sept 1816 | 1895 | iv, 186; i, 291 |
| | version b | | | a | Sept 1816 | 1895 | iv, 187; i, 226 |
| | version c | | | a | 1822 | 1822, op.12/2 | iv, 192; i, 89 |
| 481 | Sehnsucht (3) | Nur wer die Sehnsucht kennt | Goethe | a | Sept 1816 | 1895 | iv, 198; iii |
| 482 | Der Sänger am Felsen | Klage, meine Flöte | C. Pichler | e | Sept 1816 | 1895 | iv, 200; xi |
| 483 | Lied | Ferne von der grossen Stadt | Pichler | E | Sept 1816 | 1895 | iv, 212; xi |
| 484 | Gesang der Geister über den Wassern (1), frag. | ... dann zur Tiefe nieder | Goethe | G | Sept 1816 | 1895 | x, 594; xi |
| 489 | Der Wanderer | Ich komme vom Gebirge her | G.P. Schmidt von Lübeck | | | | |
| | version a | | | c♯ | Oct 1816 | 1895 | iv, 214; i, 200 |
| | version b [formerly 493b] | | | b | *c*1816 | 1970 | —; i, 204 |
| | version c [formerly 493a] | | | c♯ | *c*1816 | 1821, op.4/1 | iv, 217; i, 26 |
| 490 | Der Hirt | Du Turm! zu meinem Leide | Mayrhofer | F | Oct 1816 | 1895 | iv, 220; xi |
| 491 | Geheimnis | Sag an, wer lehrt dich Lieder | Mayrhofer | B♭ | Oct 1816 | 1887 | iv, 223; xi |
| 492 | Zum Punsche | Woget brausend, Harmonien | Mayrhofer | d | Oct 1816 | 1849 | iv, 226; xi |
| 493 | Der Wanderer [see 489b–c] | | | | | | |
| 495 | Abendlied der Fürstin | Der Abend rötet nun das Tal | Mayrhofer | F | Nov 1816 | 1868 | iv, 227; xi |
| 496 | Bei dem Grabe meines Vaters | Friede sei um diesen Grabstein | Claudius | E♭ | Nov 1816 | 1885 | iv, 234; xi |
| 496a | Klage um Ali Bey | Lasst mich! lasst mich! ich will klagen | Claudius | e♭ | Nov 1816 | 1968 | —; vii, 84 |
| 497 | An die Nachtigall | Er liegt und schläft | Claudius | G | Nov 1816 | 1829, op.98/1 | iv, 238; v |
| 498 | Wiegenlied | Schlafe, schlafe, holder süsser Knabe | | A♭ | Nov 1816 | 1829, op.98/2 | iv, 239; v |
| 499 | Abendlied | Der Mond ist aufgegangen | Claudius | B♭ | Nov 1816 | 1885 | iv, 240; xi |
| 500 | Phidile | Ich war erst sechzehn Sommer alt | Claudius | G♭ | Nov 1816 | 1895 | iv, 242; xi |
| 501 | Zufriedenheit (2) | Ich bin vergnügt | Claudius | | Nov 1816 | | |
| | version a | | | E | | 1895 | iv, 246; xi |
| | version b | | | G | | — | —; xi |
| 502 | Herbstlied | Bunt sind schon die Wälder | Salis-Seewis | G | Nov 1816 | 1872 | iv, 248; xi |
| 503 | Mailied (3) | Grüner wird die Au | Hölty | G | Nov 1816 | — | —; xi |
| 504 | Am Grabe Anselmos | Dass ich dich verloren habe | Claudius | | | | |
| | version a | | | e♭ | 4 Nov 1816 | 1821, op.6/3 | iv, 236; i, 56 |
| | version b | | | e♭ | *c*1816 | 1970 | —; i, 216 |
| 507 | Skolie | Mädchen entsiegelten | Matthisson | G | Dec 1816 | 1895 | iv, 249; xi |
| 508 | Lebenslied | Kommen und Scheiden | Matthisson | C | Dec 1816 | 1845 | iv, 250; xi |
| 509 | Leiden der Trennung | Vom Meere trennt sich die Welle | Metastasio, trans. H. von Collin | | Dec 1816 | | |
| | version a, frag. | | | g | | — | —; xi |
| | version b | | | g | | 1872 | iv, 251; xi |
| 510 | Vedi quanto adoro | | Metastasio | E♭ | Dec 1816 | 1895 | x, 40; xi |
| 513a | Nur wer die Liebe kennt, sketch | | F. Werner | A♭ | ?1817 | 1974 | —; xi |
| 514 | Die abgeblühte Linde | Wirst du halten, was du schwurst | L. von Széchényi | a | ?1817 | 1821, op.7/1 | v, 29; i, 59 |
| 515 | Der Flug der Zeit | Es floh die Zeit im Wirbelfluge | Széchényi | A | ?1817 | 1821, op.7/2 | v, 33; i, 63 |
| 516 | Sehnsucht | Der Lerche wolkennahe Lieder | Mayrhofer | C | ?1816 | 1822, op.8/2 | vi, 386; i, 73 |
| 517 | Der Schäfer und der Reiter | Ein Schäfer sass im Grünen | Fouqué | | April 1817 | | |
| | version a | | | E | | 1972 | —; i, 191 |
| | version b | | | E | | 1822, op.13/1 | v, 6; i, 95 |

| D | Title | Incipit | Text | Key | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 518 | An den Tod | Tod, du Schrecken der Natur | Schubart | B | 1816 or 1817 | 1824 | v, 130; v |
| 519 | Die Blumensprache | Es deuten die Blumen | ? E. Platner | B♭ | ?1817 | 1867, op.173/5 | v, 25; xi |
| 520 | Frohsinn | Ich bin von lockerem Schlage | I.F. Castelli | | | | |
| | version a | | | F | Jan 1817 | 1895 | v, 2; xi |
| | version b | | | F | *c*1817 | 1850 | —; xi |
| 521 | Jagdlied version a [for version b see FEMALE AND UNSPECIFIED VOICES] | Trarah! Trarah! wir kehren daheim | Werner | F | Jan 1817 | 1895 | v, 3; xi |
| 522 | Die Liebe | Wo weht der Liebe hoher Geist? | G. Leon | G | Jan 1817 | 1895 | v, 4; xi |
| 523 | Trost | Nimmer lange weil' ich hier | | c♯ | Jan 1817 | 1885 | v, 5; xi |
| 524 | Der Alpenjäger | Auf hohen Bergesrücken | Mayrhofer | | Jan 1817 | | |
| | version a | | | E | | 1895 | v, 12; i, 233 |
| | version b | | | D | | 1970 | —; i, 236 |
| | version c | | | F | | 1822, op.13/3 | v, 16; i, 104 |
| 525 | Wie Ulfru fischt | Der Angel zuckt | Mayrhofer | | Jan 1817 | | |
| | version a | | | d | | 1970 | —; i, 269 |
| | version b | | | d | | 1823, op.21/3 | v, 18; i, 158 |
| 526 | Fahrt zum Hades | Der Nachen dröhnt | Mayrhofer | d | Jan 1817 | 1832 | v, 20; xi |
| 527 | Schlaflied (Abendlied; Schlummerlied) | Es mahnt der Wald | Mayrhofer | | Jan 1817 | | |
| | version a | | | F | | 1975 | —; ii, 193 |
| | version b | | | F | | 1823, op.24/2 | v, 24; ii, 20 |
| 528 | La pastorella al prato (2) | | C. Goldoni | G | Jan 1817 | 1872 | x, 46; xi |
| 530 | An eine Quelle | Du kleine grünumwachs'ne Quelle | Claudius | A | Feb 1817 | 1829, op.109/3 | iv, 232; xi |
| 531 | Der Tod und das Mädchen | Vorüber, ach vorüber | Claudius | d | Feb 1817 | 1821, op.7/3 | v, 35; i, 66 |
| 532 | Das Lied vom Reifen, frag. | Seht meine lieben Bäume an | Claudius | A♭ | Feb 1817 | 1895 | v, 36; xi |
| 533 | Täglich zu singen | Ich danke Gott und freue mich | Claudius | F | Feb 1817 | 1895 | v, 38; xi |
| 534 | Die Nacht | Die Nacht ist dumpfig und finster | Ossian, trans. Harold | g | Feb 1817 | 1830 | v, 39; xi |
| 535 | Lied, with small orch | Brüder, schrecklich brennt die Träne | | g | Feb 1817 | 1895 | x, 78; iii/1 |
| 536 | Der Schiffer | Im Winde, im Sturme | Mayrhofer | | ?March 1817 | | |
| | version a | | | E♭ | | 1970 | —; i, 263 |
| | version b | | | E♭ | | 1823, op.21/2 | v, 24; i, 152 |
| 539 | Am Strome | Ist mir's doch, als sei mein Leben | Mayrhofer | B | March 1817 | 1822, op.8/4 | v, 54; i, 82 |
| 540 | Philoktet | Da sitz' ich ohne Bogen | Mayrhofer | b | March 1817 | 1831 | v, 56; xi |
| 541 | Memnon | Den Tag hindurch nur einmal | Mayrhofer | D♭ | March 1817 | 1821, op.6/1 | v, 59; i, 46 |
| 542 | Antigone und Oedip | Ihr hohen Himmlischen | Mayrhofer | C | March 1817 | 1821, op.6/2 | v, 62; i, 50 |
| 543 | Auf dem See | Und frische Nahrung | Goethe | | March 1817 | | |
| | version a | | | E | | 1895 | v, 66; v |
| | version b | | | E♭ | | 1828, op.92/2 | v, 70; v |
| 544 | Ganymed | Wie im Morgenglanze | Goethe | A♭ | March 1817 | 1825, op.19/3 | v, 75; i, 132 |
| 545 | Der Jüngling und der Tod | Die Sonne sinkt, o könnt ich | J. von Spaun | | March 1817 | | |
| | version a | | | c♯ | | 1895 | v, 80; xi |
| | version b | | | c♯ | | 1872 | v, 82; xi |
| 546 | Trost im Liede | Braust des Unglücks Sturm empor | Schober | d | March 1817 | 1827; 1828 as op.101/3 | v, 84; v |
| 547 | An die Musik | Du holde Kunst | Schober | | | | |
| | version a | | | D | March 1817 | 1895 | v, 86; iv |
| | version b | | | D | *c*1817 | 1827 op.88/4 | v, 87; iv |
| 548 | Orest auf Tauris | Ist dies Tauris | Mayrhofer | E♭ | March 1817 | 1831 | vi, 118; xi |

| D | Title | Incipit | Text | Key | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 549 | Mahomets Gesang (1), frag. | Seht den Felsenquell | Goethe | c♯ | March 1817 | 1895 | x, 110; xiii |
| 550 | Die Forelle | In einem Bächlein helle | Schubart | | | | |
| | version a | | | D♭ | c1817 | 1895 | v, 132; ii, 194 |
| | version b | | | D♭ | c1817 | 1895 | v, 135; ii, 202 |
| | version c | | | D♭ | Feb 1818 | 1895 | v, 138; ii, 198 |
| | version d | | | D♭ | c1820 | 1820; 1827 as op.32 | v, 141; ii, 109 |
| | version e | | | D♭ | Oct 1821 | 1975 | —; ii, 206 |
| 551 | Pax vobiscum | Der Friede sei mit euch! | Schober | F | April 1817 | 1831 | v, 88; xi |
| 552 | Hänflings Liebeswerbung | Ahidi! ich liebe | F. Kind | | | | |
| | version a | | | A | April 1817 | 1970 | —; i, 260 |
| | version b | | | A | c1817 | 1823, op.20/3 | v, 90; i, 145 |
| 553 | Auf der Donau | Auf der Wellen Spiegel | Mayrhofer | E♭ | April 1817 | 1823, op.21/1 | v, 92; i, 148 |
| 554 | Uraniens Flucht | Lasst uns, ihr Himmlischen | Mayrhofer | D | April 1817 | 1895 | v, 99; xi |
| 555 | Song sketch (no text) | | | a | ?May 1817 | 1934 | —; xi |
| 558 | Liebhaber in allen Gestalten | Ich wollt', ich wär' ein Fisch | Goethe | A | May 1817 | 1887 | iii, 46; xi |
| 559 | Schweizerlied | Uf'm Bergli bin i g'sässe | Goethe | F | May 1817 | 1885 | iii, 48; xi |
| 560 | Der Goldschmiedsgesell | Es ist doch meine Nachbarin | Goethe | F | May 1817 | 1850 | iii, 49; xi |
| 561 | Nach einem Gewitter | Auf den Blumen | Mayrhofer | F | May 1817 | 1872 | v, 116; xi |
| 562 | Fischerlied (3) | Das Fischergewerbe gibt rüstigen Mut! | Salis-Seewis | F | May 1817 | 1895 | v, 118; xi |
| 563 | Die Einsiedelei (3) | Es rieselt, klar und wehend | Salis-Seewis | C | May 1817 | 1887 | v, 120; xi |
| 564 | Gretchen im Zwinger (Gretchen; Gretchens Bitte), frag. | Ach neige, du Schmerzensreiche | Goethe | b♭ | May 1817 | 1838 | x, 116; xi |
| 565 | Der Strom | Mein Leben wälzt sich murrend fort | | d | ?June 1817 | 1876 | v, 123; xi |
| 569 | Das Grab (4), for unison chorus | Das Grab ist tief und stille | Salis-Seewis | c♯ | June 1817 | 1895 | v, 122; iii/3 |
| 573 | Iphigenia | Blüht denn hier an Tauris Strande | Mayrhofer | G♭ | July 1817 | 1829, op.98/3 | v, 127; v |
| 577 | Entzückung an Laura (2) | | Schiller | | Aug 1817 | | |
| | frag. a | Laura, Laura, über diese Welt | | A | | 1873 | x, 119; x |
| | frag. b | Amoretten seh ich | | D♭ | | 1895 | x, 120; x |
| 578 | Abschied | Lebe wohl! lebe wohl! | Schubert | b | 24 Aug 1817 | 1838 | x, 80; xi |
| 579 | Der Knabe in der Wiege (Wiegenlied) | Er schläft so süss | A. Ottenwalt | | | | |
| | version a | | | C | aut. 1817 | 1872 | v, 180; xi |
| | version b, frag. | | | A♭ | Nov 1817 | 1897 | Rb, 70; xi |
| 579a | Vollendung [formerly 989] | Wenn ich einst das Ziel errungen habe | Matthisson | A | ?Sept–Oct 1817 | 1970 | —; xi |
| 579b | Die Erde [formerly 989a] | Wenn sanft entzückt | Matthisson | E | ?Sept–Oct 1817 | 1970 | —; xi |
| 582 | Augenblicke im Elysium [see 990b] | | | | | | |
| 583 | Gruppe aus dem Tartarus (2) | Horch, wie Murmeln des empörten Meeres | Schiller | C | Sept 1817 | 1823, op.24/1 | v, 144; ii, 13 |
| 584 | Elysium | Vorüber die stöhnende Klage! | Schiller | E | Sept 1817 | 1830 | v, 149; xi |
| 585 | Atys | Der Knabe seufzt | Mayrhofer | a | Sept 1817 | 1833 | v, 159; xi |
| 586 | Erlafsee | Mir ist so wohl, so weh' | Mayrhofer | F | Sept 1817 | 1818; 1822 as op.8/3 | v, 164; i, 78 |
| 587 | An den Frühling (3) | Willkommen, schöner Jüngling! | Schiller | | | | |
| | version a | | | A | Oct 1817 | 1885 | iii, 8; xi |
| | version b [formerly 245] | | | B♭ | c1817 | 1895 | iii, 6; xi |
| 588 | Der Alpenjäger | Willst du nicht das Lämmlein hüten | Schiller | | | | |
| | version a, frag. | | | E♭ | Oct 1817 | 1897 | Rb, 66; ii, 236 |
| | version b | | | C | c1817 | 1825, op.37/2 | v, 168; ii, 138 |

| D | Title | Incipit | Text | Key | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 594 | Der Kampf | Nein, länger werd' ich diesen Kampf | Schiller | d | Nov 1817 | 1829, op.110 | v, 171; xi |
| 595 | Thekla: eine Geisterstimme (2) | Wo ich sei, und wo mich hingewendet | Schiller | | | | |
| | version a | | | c♯ | Nov 1817 | 1895 | v, 177; iv |
| | version b | | | c | *c*1817 | 1827, op.88/2 | v, 178; iv |
| 596 | Lied eines Kindes, frag. | Lauter Freude fühl' ich | | B♭ | Nov 1817 | 1895 | x, 122; xi |
| 611 | Auf der Riesenkoppe | Hoch auf dem Gipfel deiner Gebirge | Körner | d | March 1818 | *c*1850 | v, 184; xii |
| 614 | An den Mond in einer Herbstnacht | Freundlich ist dein Antlitz | A. Schreiber | A | April 1818 | 1832 | v, 188; xii |
| 616 | Grablied für die Mutter | Hauche milder, Abendluft | | b | June 1818 | 1838 | v, 194; xii |
| 619 | Vocal exercise, 2vv, figured bass (no text) | | — | C | July 1818 | 1892 | ser. xix, 95; viii/2 |
| 620 | Einsamkeit | Gib mir die Fülle der Einsamkeit! | Mayrhofer | B♭ | July 1818 | 1840 | v, 196; xii |
| 622 | Der Blumenbrief | Euch Blümlein will ich senden | Schreiber | D | Aug 1818 | 1833 | v, 213; xii |
| 623 | Das Marienbild | Sei gegrüsst, du Frau der Huld | Schreiber | C | Aug 1818 | 1831 | v, 214; xii |
| 626 | Blondel zu Marien | In düstrer Nacht | | e♭ | Sept 1818 | 1842 | v, 218; xii |
| 627 | Das Abendrot | Du heilig, glühend Abendrot! | Schreiber | E | Nov 1818 | 1867, op.173/6 | v, 220; xii |
| 628 | Sonett I | Apollo, lebet noch | Petrarch, trans. A.W. von Schlegel | B♭ | Nov 1818 | 1895 | v, 225; xii |
| 629 | Sonett II | Allein, nachdenklich, wie gelähmt | Petrarch, trans. A.W. von Schlegel | g | Nov 1818 | 1895 | v, 228; xii |
| 630 | Sonett III | Nunmehr, da Himmel, Erde | Petrarch, trans. J.D. Gries | C | Dec 1818 | 1895 | v, 234; xii |
| 631 | Blanka (Das Mädchen) | Wenn mich einsam Lüfte fächeln | F. von Schlegel | a | Dec 1818 | 1885 | v, 236; xii |
| 632 | Vom Mitleiden Mariä | Als bei dem Kreuz Maria stand | F. von Schlegel | g | Dec 1818 | 1831 | v, 238; xii |
| 633 | Der Schmetterling | Wie soll ich nicht tanzen | F. von Schlegel | F | *c*1819 | 1826, op.57/1 | iii, 225; iii |
| 634 | Die Berge | Sieht uns der Blick gehoben | F. von Schlegel | G | *c*1819 | 1826, op.57/2 | iii, 227; iii |
| 636 | Sehnsucht (2) | Ach, aus dieses Tales Gründen | Schiller | | *c*1821 | | |
| | version a | | | b | | 1975 | —; ii, 250 |
| | version b | | | b | | 1895 | vi, 23; ii, 258 |
| | version c | | | b | | 1826, op.39 | vi, 29; ii, 165 |
| 637 | Hoffnung (2) | Es reden und träumen die Menschen | Schiller | B♭ | *c*1819 | 1827, op.87/2 | vi, 36; iv |
| 638 | Der Jüngling am Bache (3) | An der Quelle sass der Knabe | Schiller | | | | |
| | version a | | | d | April 1819 | 1895 | vi, 40; iv |
| | version b | | | c | *c*1819 | 1827, op.87/3 | vi, 36; iv |
| 639 | Widerschein | | Schlechta | | *c*1819 | | |
| | version a | Fischer harrt am Brückenbogen | | D | | 1820 | —; v |
| | version b [formerly 949] | Tom lehnt harrend auf der Brücke | | B♭ | | 1832 | ix, 130; v |
| 645 | Abend, frag. | Wie ist es denn | L. Tieck | g | ?Jan 1819 | — | —; xii |
| 646 | Die Gebüsche | Es wehet kühl und leise | F. von Schlegel | G | Jan 1819 | 1885 | vi, 1; xii |
| 649 | Der Wanderer | Wie deutlich des Mondes Licht | F. von Schlegel | D | Feb 1819 | 1826, op.65/2 | vi, 5; iii |
| 650 | Abendbilder | Still beginnt's im Hain zu tauen | J.P. Silbert | a | Feb 1819 | 1831 | vi, 7; xii |
| 651 | Himmelsfunken | Der Odem Gottes weht | Silbert | G | Feb 1819 | 1831 | vi, 14; xii |
| 652 | Das Mädchen | Wie so innig, möcht ich sagen | F. von Schlegel | | | | |
| | version a | | | A | Feb 1819 | 1842 | vi, 16; xii |
| | version b | | | A | *c*Feb 1819 | — | —; xii |
| 653 | Bertas Lied in der Nacht | Nacht umhüllt mit wehendem Flügel | F. Grillparzer | e♭ | Feb 1819 | *c*1842 | vi, 18; xii |

| D | Title | Incipit | Text | Key | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 654 | An die Freunde | Im Wald, im Wald da grabt mich ein | Mayrhofer | a | March 1819 | c1842 | vi, 20; xii |
| 658 | Marie | Ich sehe dich in tausend Bildern | Novalis [F. von Hardenberg] | D | ?May 1819 | 1895 | vi, 53; xii |
| 659 | Hymne I | Wenige wissen das Geheimnis | Novalis | a | May 1819 | 1872 | vi, 42; xii |
| 660 | Hymne II | Wenn ich ihn nur habe | Novalis | b♭ | May 1819 | 1872 | vi, 49; xii |
| 661 | Hymne III | Wenn alle untreu werden | Novalis | b♭ | May 1819 | 1872 | vi, 50; xii |
| 662 | Hymne IV | Ich sag' es jedem | Novalis | A | May 1819 | 1872 | vi, 52; xii |
| 663 | Der 13. Psalm, frag. | Ach, Herr, wie lange | trans. M. Mendelssohn | D♭ | June 1819 | 1927 | —; xii |
| 669 | Beim Winde | Es träumen die Wolken | Mayrhofer | g | Oct 1819 | 1829 | vi, 54; xii |
| 670 | Die Sternennächte | In monderhellten Nächten | Mayrhofer | D♭ | Oct 1819 | 1862, op.165/2 | vi, 56; xii |
| 671 | Trost | Hörnerklänge rufen klagend | Mayrhofer | E♭ | Oct 1819 | 1849 | vi, 60; xii |
| 672 | Nachtstück | — | Mayrhofer | | | | |
| | version a | Wenn über Bergen der Nebel sich breitet | | c♯ | Oct 1819 | 1975 | —; ii, 225 |
| | version b | Wenn über Berge sich der Nebel breitet | | c | c1819 | 1825, op.36/2 | vi, 62; ii, 125 |
| 673 | Die Liebende schreibt | Ein Blick von deinen Augen | Goethe | B♭ | Oct 1819 | 1832; 1862 as op.165/1 | vi, 68; xii |
| 674 | Prometheus | Bedecke deinen Himmel, Zeus | Goethe | g | Oct 1819 | 1850 | vi, 70; xii |
| 677 | Strophe aus Die Götter Griechenlands | Schöne Welt, wo bist du? | Schiller | | Nov 1819 | | |
| | version a | | | a/A | | 1895 | vi, 76; xii |
| | version b | | | a/A | | 1848 | vi, 78; xii |
| 682 | Über allen Zauber Liebe, frag. | Sie hüpfte mit mir auf grünem Plan | Mayrhofer | G | c1820 | 1895 | x, 123; xii |
| 684 | Die Sterne | Du staunest, o Mensch | F. von Schlegel | E♭ | 1820 | 1850 | vi, 102; xii |
| 685 | Morgenlied | Eh' die Sonne früh aufersteht | Werner | a | 1820 | 1821, op.4/2 | vi, 104; i, 30 |
| 686 | Frühlingsglaube | Die linden Lüfte sind erwacht | L. Uhland | | | | |
| | version a | | | B♭ | Sept 1820 | 1970 | —; i, 252 |
| | version b | | | B♭ | 1820 | 1970 | —; i, 256 |
| | version c | | | A♭ | Nov 1822 | 1823, op.20/2 | vi, 108; i, 141 |
| 687 | Nachthymne | Hinüber wall' ich | Novalis | D | Jan 1820 | 1872 | vi, 372; xii |
| 688 | Vier Canzonen | | | | Jan 1820 | 1871 | |
| | | 1 Non t'accostar all'urna | J.A. Vitorelli | C | | | x, 48; xii |
| | | 2 Guarda, che bianca luna | Vitorelli | G | | | x, 50; xii |
| | | 3 Da quel sembiante appresi | Metastasio | B♭ | | | x, 52; xii |
| | | 4 Mio ben ricordati | Metastasio | b♭ | | | x, 53; xii |
| 690 | Abendröte | Tiefer sinket schon die Sonne | F. von Schlegel | A | March 1823 | 1830 | vi, 94; xii |
| 691 | Die Vögel | Wie lieblich und fröhlich | F. von Schlegel | A | March 1820 | 1865, op.172/6 | vi, 86; xii |
| 692 | Der Knabe | Wenn ich nur ein Vöglein wäre | F. von Schlegel | A | March 1820 | 1872 | vi, 88; xii |
| 693 | Der Fluss | Wie rein Gesang sich windet | F. von Schlegel | B | March 1820 | 1872 | vi, 91; xii |
| 694 | Der Schiffer | Friedlich lieg' ich hingegossen | F. von Schlegel | D | March 1820 | 1842 | vi, 98; xii |
| 695 | Namenstagslied | Vater, schenk' mir diese Stunde | A. Stadler | A | March 1820 | 1895 | x, 81; xii |
| 698 | Des Fräuleins Liebeslauschen (Liebeslauschen) | Da unten steht ein Ritter | Schlechta | A | Sept 1820 | 1832 | vi, 113; xii |
| 699 | Der entsühnte Orest | Zu meinen Füssen brichst du dich | Mayrhofer | C | Sept 1820 | 1831 | vi, 121; xii |
| 700 | Freiwilliges Versinken | Wohin? O Helios! | Mayrhofer | d | Sept 1820 | 1831 | vi, 124; xii |
| 702 | Der Jüngling auf dem Hügel | Ein Jüngling auf dem Hügel | H. Hüttenbrenner | G | Nov 1820 | 1822, op.8/1 | vi, 126; i, 68 |
| 707 | Der zürnenden Diana | Ja, spanne nur den Bogen | Mayrhofer | | Dec 1820 | | |

| D | Title | Incipit | Text | Key | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | version a | | | A | | 1895 | vi, 133; ii, 210 |
| | version b | | | A♭ | | 1825, op.36/ 1 | vi, 141; ii, 113 |
| 708 | Im Walde (Waldesnacht) | Windes Rauschen, Gottes Flügel | F. von Schlegel | c♯ | Dec 1820 | 1832 | vi, 149; xii |
| 711 | Lob der Tränen | Laue Lüfte, Blumendüfte | A.W. von Schlegel | | 1818 | | |
| | version a | | | D | | 1970 | —; i, 229 |
| | version b | | | D | | 1822, op.13/ 2 | v, 10; i, 100 |
| 712 | Die gefangenen Sänger | Hörst du von den Nachtigallen | A.W. von Schlegel | G | Jan 1821 | 1842 | vi, 164; xiii |
| 713 | Der Unglückliche | Die Nacht bricht an | C. Pichler | | Jan 1821 | | |
| | version a | | | b | | 1895 | vi, 168; iv |
| | version b | | | b | | 1827, op.87/ 1 | vi, 173; iv |
| 715 | Versunken | Voll Locken kraus ein Haupt | Goethe | A♭ | Feb 1821 | 1845 | vi, 178; xiii |
| 716 | Grenzen der Menschheit | Wenn der uralte heilige Vater | Goethe | E | March 1821 | 1832 | vi, 185; xiii |
| 717 | Suleika II | Ach um deine feuchten Schwingen | ? M. von Willemer | B♭ | ?March 1821 | 1825, op.31 | vi, 201; ii, 97 |
| 719 | Geheimes | Über meines Liebchens Äugeln | Goethe | A♭ | March 1821 | 1822, op.14/ 2 | vi, 183; i, 118 |
| 720 | Suleika I | Was bedeutet die Bewegung? | ?Willemer | | | | |
| | version a | | | b | March 1821 | 1970 | —; i, 239 |
| | version b | | | b | c1821 | 1822, op.14/ 1 | vi, 194; i, 108 |
| 721 | Mahomets Gesang (2), frag. | Seht den Felsenquell | Goethe | c♯ | March 1821 | 1895 | x, 125; xiii |
| 725 | Linde Lüfte wehen, Mez, T, frag. | | | b | April 1821 | 1929 | —; iii/2 |
| 726 | Mignon I (1) | Heiss mich nicht reden | Goethe | b | April 1821 | 1870 | vi, 189; iii |
| 727 | Mignon II (2) | So lasst mich scheinen | Goethe | b | April 1821 | 1850 | vi, 191; iii |
| 728 | Johanna Sebus, frag. | Der Damm zerreisst | Goethe | d | April 1821 | 1895 | x, 128; xiii |
| 731 | Der Blumen Schmerz | Wie tönt es mir so schaurig | J. Mayláth | e | Sept 1821 | 1821; 1867 as op.173/ 4 | vi, 210; v |
| 736 | Ihr Grab | Dort ist ihr Grab | K.A. Engelhardt | E♭ | ?1822 | 1842 | vii, 4; xiii |
| 737 | An die Leier | Ich will von Atreus Söhnen | F.S. Ritter von Bruchmann, after Anacreon | E♭ | ? 1822 or 1823 | 1826, op.56/ 2 | vii, 42; iii |
| 738 | Im Haine | Sonnenstrahlen durch die Tannen | Bruchmann | A | ? 1822 or 1823 | 1826, op.56/ 3 | vii, 46; iii |
| 741 | Sei mir gegrüsst | O du Entrissne mir | F. Rückert | B♭ | between end 1821 and aut. 1822 | 1823, op.20/ 1 | vi, 214; i, 137 |
| 742 | Der Wachtelschlag | Ach! mir schallt's dorten | S.F. Sauter | A | 1822 | 1822; 1827 as op.68 | vii, 2; iii |
| 743 | Selige Welt | Ich treibe auf des Lebens Meer | J.C. Senn | A♭ | ?aut. 1822 | 1823, op.23/ 2 | vii, 14; ii, 6 |
| 744 | Schwanengesang | Wie klag ich's aus | Senn | A♭ | ?aut. 1822 | 1823, op.23/ 3 | vii, 16; ii, 8 |
| 745 | Die Rose | Es lockte schöne Wärme | F. von Schlegel | | 1822 | | |
| | version a | | | G | | 1822; 1827 as op.73 | vii, 18; iii |
| | version b | | | F | | 1895 | vii, 21; iii |
| 746 | Am See | In des Sees Wogenspiele | Bruchmann | E♭ | ? 1822 or 1823 | 1831 | vii, 74; xiii |
| 749 | Herrn Josef Spaun, Assessor in Linz (Sendschreiben an den Assessor Spaun in Linz) | Und nimmer schreibst du? | M. von Collin | c | Jan 1822 | 1850 | x, 84; xiii |
| 751 | Die Liebe hat gelogen | | A. von Platen-Hallermünde | c | by 17 April 1822 | 1823, op.23/ 1 | vii, 28; ii, 4 |
| 752 | Nachtviolen | | Mayrhofer | C | April 1822 | 1872 | vii, 6; xiii |
| 753 | Heliopolis I | Im kalten rauhen Norden | Mayrhofer | e | April 1822 | 1826, op.65/ 3 | vii, 10; iii |
| 754 | Heliopolis II | Fels auf Felsen hingewälzet | Mayrhofer | c | April 1822 | 1842 | vii, 14; xiii |
| 756 | Du liebst mich nicht | Mein Herz ist zerrissen | Platen-Hallermünde | | July 1822 | | |

| D | Title | Incipit | Text | Key | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | version a | | | g♯ | | 1895 | vii, 24; iii |
| | version b | | | a | | 1826, op.59/1 | vii, 26; iii |
| 758 | Todesmusik | In des Todes Feierstunde | Schober | G♭ | Sept 1822 | 1829, op.108/2 | vii, 30; v |
| 761 | Schatzgräbers Begehr | In tiefster Erde ruht ein alt Gesetz | Schober | | Nov 1822 | | |
| | version a | | | d | | 1823, op.23/4 | vii, 35; ii, 10 |
| | version b | | | d | | 1895 | vii, 187; ii, 189 |
| 762 | Schwestergruss | Im Mondenschein wall' ich auf und ab | Bruchmann | f♯ | Nov 1822 | 1833 | vii, 38; xiii |
| 764 | Der Musensohn | Durch Feld und Wald zu schweifen | Goethe | | | | |
| | version a | | | A♭ | Dec 1822 | 1895 | vii, 48; v |
| | version b | | | G | c1822 | 1828, op.92/1 | vii, 51; v |
| 765 | An die Entfernte | So hab' ich wirklich dich verloren? | Goethe | G | Dec 1822 | 1868 | vii, 54; xiii |
| 766 | Am Flusse (2) | Verfliesset, vielgeliebte Lieder | Goethe | D | Dec 1822 | 1872 | vii, 56; xiii |
| 767 | Willkommen und Abschied | Es schlug mein Herz | Goethe | | | | |
| | version a | | | D | Dec 1822 | 1895 | vii, 58; iii |
| | version b | | | C | c1822 | 1826, op.56/1 | vii, 64; iii |
| 768 | Wandrers Nachtlied | Über allen Gipfeln ist Ruh | Goethe | B♭ | by July 1824 | 1827; 1828 as op.96/3 | vii, 70; v |
| 770 | Drang in die Ferne | Vater, du glaubst es nicht | K.G. von Leitner | a/A | early 1823 | 1823; 1827 as op.71 | vii, 91; iii |
| 771 | Der Zwerg | Im trüben Licht verschwinden schon die Berge | M. von Collin | a | ? 1822 or 1823 | 1823, op.22/1 | vii, 95; i, 160 |
| 772 | Wehmut | Wenn ich durch Wald und Fluren geh' | M. von Collin | d | ? 1822 or 1823 | 1823, op.22/2 | vii, 102; i, 168 |
| 774 | Auf dem Wasser zu singen | Mitten im Schimmer der spiegelnden Wellen | Stolberg-Stolberg | A♭ | 1823 | 1823; 1827 as op.72 | vii, 106; iii |
| 775 | Dass sie hier gewesen | Dass der Ostwind Düfte | Rückert | C | ?1823 | 1826, op.59/2 | viii, 2; iii |
| 776 | Du bist die Ruh | | Rückert | E♭ | 1823 | 1826, op.59/3 | viii, 4; iii |
| 777 | Lachen und Weinen | | Rückert | A♭ | ?1823 | 1826, op.59/4 | viii, 7; iii |
| 778 | Greisengesang | Der Frost hat mir bereifet | Rückert | | by June 1823 | | |
| | version a | | | b | | — | —; iii |
| | version b | | | b | | 1826, op.60/1 | viii, 10; iii |
| 778a | Die Wallfahrt | Meine Tränen im Bussgewand | Rückert | f | ?1823 | 1969 | —; xiii |
| 785 | Der zürnende Barde | Wer wagt's, wer wagt's | Bruchmann | g | Feb 1823 | 1831 | vii, 71; xiii |
| 786 | Viola | Schneeglöcklein, o Schneeglöcklein | Schober | A♭ | March 1823 | 1830, op.123 | vii, 76; xiii |
| 788 | Lied (Die Mutter Erde) | Des Lebens Tag ist schwer | Stolberg-Stolberg | a/A | April 1823 | 1838 | vii, 104; xiii |
| 789 | Pilgerweise | Ich bin ein Waller auf der Erde | Schober | f♯ | April 1823 | 1832 | vii, 108; xiii |
| 792 | Vergissmeinnicht | Als der Frühling sich vom Herzen | Schober | A♭ | May 1823 | 1833 | vii, 114; xiii |
| 793 | Das Geheimnis (2) | Sie konnte mir kein Wörtchen sagen | Schiller | G | May 1823 | 1867, op.173/2 | vii, 125; xiii |
| 794 | Der Pilgrim | Noch in meines Lebens Lenze | Schiller | | | | |
| | version a | | | E | May 1823 | 1895 | vii, 130; ii, 229 |
| | version b | | | D | c1823 | 1825, op.37/1 | —; ii, 132 |
| 795 | Die schöne Müllerin | | W. Müller | | Oct–Nov 1823 | 1824, op.25 | |
| | 1 Das Wandern | Das Wandern ist des Müllers Lust | | B♭ | | | vii, 134; ii, 21 |
| | 2 Wohin? | Ich hört' ein Bächlein rauschen | | G | | | vii, 136; ii, 23 |
| | 3 Halt! | Eine Mühle seh' ich blinken | | C | | | vii, 140; ii, 29 |

| D | Title | Incipit | Text | Key | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 4 Danksagung an den Bach | War es also gemeint | | G | | | vii, 143; ii, 34 |
| | 5 Am Feierabend | Hätt' ich tausend Arme zu rühren | | a | | | vii, 147; ii, 36 |
| | 6 Der Neugierige | Ich frage keine Blume | | B | | | vii, 149; ii, 42 |
| | 7 Ungeduld | Ich schnitt es gern in alle Rinden ein | | A | | | vii, 152; ii, 46 |
| | 8 Morgengruss | Guten Morgen, schöne Müllerin | | C | | | vii, 154; ii, 50 |
| | 9 Des Müllers Blumen | Am Bach viel kleine Blumen stehn | | A | | | vii, 155; ii, 52 |
| | 10 Tränenregen | Wir sassen so traulich beisammen | | A | | | vii, 156; ii, 54 |
| | 11 Mein! | Bächlein, lass dein Rauschen sein | | D | | | vii, 158; ii, 57 |
| | 12 Pause | Meine Laute hab' ich gehängt | | B♭ | | | vii, 162; ii, 63 |
| | 13 Mit dem grünen Lautenbande | Schad' um das schöne grüne Band | | B♭ | | | vii, 165; ii, 68 |
| | 14 Der Jäger | Was sucht denn der Jäger | | c | | | vii, 166; ii, 70 |
| | 15 Eifersucht und Stolz | Wohin so schnell | | g | | | vii, 168; ii, 72 |
| | 16 Die liebe Farbe | In Grün will ich mich kleiden | | b | | | vii, 172; ii, 76 |
| | 17 Die böse Farbe | Ich möchte ziehn in die Welt hinaus | | B | | | vii, 174; ii, 78 |
| | 18 Trockne Blumen | Ihr Blümlein alle, die sie mir gab | | e | | | vii, 178; ii, 83 |
| | 19 Der Müller und der Bach | Wo ein treues Herze in Liebe vergeht | | g | | | vii, 181; ii, 87 |
| | 20 Des Baches Wiegenlied | Gute Ruh', gute Ruh' | | E | | | vii, 184; ii, 90 |
| 797 | Romanze zum Drama Rosamunde (3b) | Der Vollmond strahlt auf Bergeshöhn | H. von Chézy | f | aut. 1823 | 1824, op.26 | —; ii, 94 |
| 799 | Im Abendrot | O, wie schön ist deine Welt | K. Lappe | A♭ | 1824 or Feb 1825 | 1832 | viii, 30; xiii |
| 800 | Der Einsame | Wann meine Grillen schwirren | Lappe | | | | |
| | version a | | | G | early 1825 | 1825 | viii, 36; — |
| | version b | | | G | *c*1825 | 1827, op.41 | viii, 41; ii, 172 |
| 801 | Dithyrambe | Nimmer, das glaub mir | Schiller | A | by June 1826 | 1826, op.60/2 | viii, 14; iii |
| 805 | Der Sieg | O unbewölktes Leben! | Mayrhofer | F | March 1824 | 1833 | viii, 16; iii |
| 806 | Abendstern | Was weilst du einsam an dem Himmel | Mayrhofer | a | March 1824 | 1833 | viii, 18; xiii |
| 807 | Auflösung | Verbirg dich, Sonne | Mayrhofer | G | March 1824 | 1842 | viii, 20; xiii |
| 808 | Gondelfahrer (1) | Es tanzen Mond und Sterne | Mayrhofer | C | March 1824 | 1872 | viii, 26; xiii |
| 822 | Lied eines Kriegers, with unison chorus | Des stolzen Männerlebens schönste Zeichen | | A | 31 Dec 1824 | 1842 | viii, 32; iii/3 |
| 827 | Nacht und Träume | Heil'ge Nacht, du sinkest nieder | M. von Collin | | by June 1823 | | |
| | version a | | | B | | 1975 | —; ii, 267 |
| | version b | | | B | | 1825, op.43/2 | viii, 32; ii, 184 |
| 828 | Die junge Nonne | Wie braust durch die Wipfel | J.N. Craigher de Jachelutta | f | early 1825 | 1825, op.43/1 | viii, 62; ii, 178 |
| 829 | Abschied, melodrama | Leb wohl, du schöne Erde | A. von Pratobevera | F | Feb 1826 | 1873 | x, 136; xiii |
| 830 | Lied der Anne Lyle | Wärst du bei mir im Lebenstal | A. MacDonald trans. ? S. May | c | ?early 1825 | 1828, op.85/1 | ix, 78; iv |
| 831 | Gesang der Norna | Mich führt mein Weg | W. Scott, trans. S.H. Spiker | f | early 1825 | 1828, op.85/2 | ix, 82; iv |
| 832 | Des Sängers Habe | Schlagt mein ganzes Glück | Schlechta | B♭ | Feb 1825 | 1830 | viii, 46; xiii |
| 833 | Der blinde Knabe | O sagt, ihr Lieben, mir einmal | C. Cibber, trans. Craigher | | | | |
| | version a | | | B♭ | April 1825 | 1895 | viii, 54; v |
| | version b | | | B♭ | April 1825 | 1827; 1828 as op.101/2 | viii, 58; v |
| 834 | Im Walde | Ich wandre über Berg und Tal | E. Schulze | | | | |

| D | Title | Incipit | Text | Key | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | version a | | | g | March 1825 | 1835, op.93/1 | —; v |
| | version b | | | b♭ | c1825 | 1828, op.90/1 | viii, 96; v |
| 837 | Ellens Gesang I | Raste, Krieger, Krieg ist aus | Scott, trans. D.A. Storck | D♭ | April–July 1825 | 1826, op.52/1 | viii, 70; iii |
| 838 | Ellens Gesang II | Jäger, ruhe von der Jagd! | Scott, trans. Storck | E♭ | April–July 1825 | 1826, op.52/2 | viii, 78; iii |
| 839 | Ellens Gesang III (Hymne an die Jungfrau) | Ave Maria! Jungfrau mild! | Scott, trans. Storck | B♭ | April 1825 | 1826, op.52/6 | viii, 90; iii |
| 842 | Totengräbers Heimweh | O Menschheit, o Leben | Craigher | f | April 1825 | 1833 | viii, 50; xiii |
| 843 | Lied des gefangenen Jägers | Mein Ross so müd in dem Stalle | Scott, trans. Storck | d | April 1825 | 1826, op.52/7 | viii, 92; iii |
| 846 | Normans Gesang | Die Nacht bricht bald herein | Scott, trans. Storck | c | April 1825 | 1826, op.52/5 | viii, 82; iii |
| 851 | Das Heimweh | Ach, der Gebirgssohn | J.L. Pyrker von Felsö-Eör | | Aug 1825 | | |
| | version a | | | a | | 1895 | viii, 112; iii |
| | version b | | | a | | 1827, op.79/1 | viii, 120; iii |
| 852 | Die Allmacht (1) | Gross ist Jehovah, der Herr | Pyrker | | Aug 1825 | | |
| | version a | | | A | | — | —; iii |
| | version b | | | C | | 1827, op.79/2 | viii, 120; iii |
| 853 | Auf der Bruck | Frisch trabe sonder Ruh | Schulze | | | | |
| | version a | | | G | March or Aug 1825 | 1835, op.93/2 | —; iii |
| | version b | | | A♭ | c1825 | 1828, op.90/2 | viii, 106; iii |
| 854 | Fülle der Liebe | Ein sehnend Streben | F. von Schlegel | A♭ | Aug 1825 | 1830 | viii, 132; iii |
| 855 | Wiedersehn | Der Frühlingssonne holdes Lächeln | A.W. von Schlegel | G | Sept 1825 | 1842 | viii, 136; xiii |
| 856 | Abendlied für die Entfernte | Hinaus, mein Blick! | A.W. von Schlegel | F | Sept 1825 | 1827, op.88/1 | viii, 138; iv |
| 857 | Zwei Szenen aus dem Schauspiel Lacrimas | | C.W. von Schütz | | Sept 1825 | 1829, op.124 | |
| | 1 Lied der Delphine | Ach, was soll ich beginnen | | A | | | viii, 146; xiii |
| | 2 Lied des Florio | Nun, da Schatten niedergleiten | | E | | | viii, 143; xiii |
| 860 | An mein Herz | O Herz, sei endlich stille | Schulze | a | Dec 1825 | 1832 | viii, 154; xiii |
| 861 | Der liebliche Stern | Ihr Sternlein, still in der Höhe | Schulze | G | Dec 1825 | 1832 | viii, 160; xiii |
| 862 | Um Mitternacht | Keine Stimme hör ich schallen | Schulze | | | | |
| | version a | | | B♭ | Dec 1825 | — | —; iv |
| | version b | | | B♭ | ?March 1826 | 1827, op.88/3 | viii, 212; iv |
| 863 | An Gott, lost | | C.C. Hohlfeld | — | by 1827 | — | — |
| 864 | Das Totenhemdchen, lost | | E. von Bauernfeld | — | after 1824 | — | — |
| 865 | Widerspruch version b [for version a see MALE VOICES] | Wenn ich durch Busch und Zweig | J.G. Seidl | D | ?1826 | 1828, op.105/1 | ser. xvi, 93; v |
| 866 | Vier Refrainlieder | | Seidl | | ?sum. 1828 | 1828, op.95 | |
| | 1 Die Unterscheidung | Die Mutter hat mich jüngst gescholten | | G | | | viii, 240; v |
| | 2 Bei dir allein | | | A♭ | | | viii, 243; v |
| | 3 Die Männer sind méchant | Du sagtest mir es, Mutter | | a | | | viii, 248; v |
| | 4 Irdisches Glück | So mancher sieht mit finstrer Miene | | d | | | viii, 250; v |
| 867 | Wiegenlied | Wie sich der Äuglein kindlicher Himmel | Seidl | A♭ | ?1826 | 1828, op.105/2 | viii, 252; v |
| 868 | Das Echo [see 990c] | | | | | | |
| 869 | Totengräber-Weise | Nicht so düster und so bleich | Schlechta | f♯ | 1826 | 1832 | viii, 198; xiv |
| 870 | Der Wanderer an den Mond | Ich auf der Erd', am Himmel du | Seidl | g/G | 1826 | 1827, op.80/1 | viii, 234; iv |
| 871 | Das Zügenglöcklein | Kling die Nacht durch, klinge | Seidl | | 1826 | | |
| | version a | | | A♭ | | 1979 | —; iv |

| D | Title | Incipit | Text | Key | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | version b | | | A♭ | | 1827, op.80/2 | viii, 237; iv |
| 874 | O Quell, was strömst du rasch und wild, frag. | | Schulze | G | ?Jan 1826 | 1974 | —; xiv |
| 876 | Im Jänner 1817 (Tiefes Leid) | Ich bin von aller Ruh geschieden | Schulze | e | Jan 1826 | 1838 | viii, 164; xiv |
| 877 | Gesänge aus Wilhelm Meister | | Goethe | | Jan 1826 | 1827, op.62 | |
| | 1 Mignon und der Harfner (5), S, T | Nur wer die Sehnsucht kennt | | b | | | viii, 166; iii |
| | 2 Lied der Mignon (2) | Heiss mich nicht reden | | e | | | viii, 169; iii |
| | 3 Lied der Mignon (3) | So lasst mich scheinen | | B | | | viii, 172; iii |
| | 4 Lied der Mignon (4) | Nur wer die Sehnsucht kennt | | a | | | viii, 174; iii |
| 878 | Am Fenster | Ihr lieben Mauern hold und traut | Seidl | F | March 1826 | 1828, op.105/3 | viii, 176; v |
| 879 | Sehnsucht | Die Scheibe friert | Seidl | d | March 1826 | 1828, op.105/4 | viii, 179; v |
| 880 | Im Freien | Draussen in der weiten Nacht | Seidl | E♭ | March 1826 | 1827, op.80/3 | viii, 184; iv |
| 881 | Fischerweise | Den Fischer fechten Sorgen | Schlechta | | March 1826 | | |
| | version a | | | D | | 1895 | viii, 190; v |
| | version b | | | D | | 1828, op.96/4 | viii, 194; v |
| 882 | Im Frühling | Still sitz' ich an des Hügels Hang | Schulze | G | March 1826 | 1828, op.101/1 | viii, 202; v |
| 883 | Lebensmut | O wie dringt das junge Leben | Schulze | B♭ | March 1826 | 1832 | viii, 206; xiv |
| 884 | Über Wildemann | Die Winde sausen am Tannenhang | Schulze | d | March 1826 | 1829, op.108/1 | viii, 216; v |
| 888 | Trinklied (Come, thou monarch of the vine) | Bacchus, feister Fürst | W. Shakespeare, trans. F.M. von Grünbühel and Bauernfeld | C | July 1826 | 1850 | viii, 227; xiv |
| 889 | Ständchen (Hark, hark the lark) | Horch, horch! die Lerch | Shakespeare, trans. A.W. von Schlegel | C | July 1826 | 1830 | viii, 228; xiv |
| 890 | Hippolits Lied | Lasst mich, ob ich auch still verglüh | F. von Gerstenberg | a | July 1826 | 1830 | viii, 230; xiv |
| 891 | Gesang (An Sylvia; Who is Sylvia?) | Was ist Silvia | Shakespeare, trans. Bauernfeld | A | July 1826 | 1828, op.106/4 | viii, 232; v |
| 896 | Fröhliches Scheiden, sketch | Gar fröhlich kann ich scheiden | Leitner | F | aut. 1827 – early 1828 | 1920 | —; xiv |
| 896a | Sie in jedem Liede, sketch | Nehm ich die Harfe | Leitner | B♭ | aut. 1827 – early 1828 | — | —; xiv |
| 896b | Wolke und Quelle, sketch | Auf meinen heimischen Bergen | Leitner | C | aut. 1827 – early 1828 | — | —; xiv |
| 902 | Drei Gesänge | | | | 1827 | 1827, op.83 | |
| | 1 L'incanto degli occhi (Die Macht der Augen) (2) | Da voi, cari lumi (Nur euch, schöne Sterne) | Metastasio | C | | | x, 54; iv |
| | 2 Il traditor deluso (Der getäuschte Verräter) (2) | Ahimè, io tremo! (Weh mir, ich bebe) | Metastasio | e | | | x, 58; iv |
| | 3 Il modo di prender moglie (Die Art, ein Weib zu nehmen) | Or sù! non ci pensiamo (Wohlan! und ohne Zagen) | | C | | | x, 65; iv |
| 904 | Alinde | Die Sonne sinkt ins tiefe Meer | Rochlitz | A | Jan 1827 | 1827, op.81/1 | iv, 257; iv |
| 905 | An die Laute | Leiser, leiser, kleine Laute | Rochlitz | D | Jan 1827 | 1827, op.81/2 | iv, 262; iv |
| 906 | Der Vater mit dem Kind | Dem Vater liegt das Kind im Arm | Bauernfeld | D | Jan 1827 | 1832 | viii, 261; xiv |
| 907 | Romanze des Richard Löwenherz | Grosse Taten tat der Ritter | Scott, trans. K.L.M. Müller | | ?March 1826 | | |
| | version a | | | b | | 1979 | —; iv |
| | version b | | | b | | 1828, op.86 | viii, 220; iv |
| 909 | Jägers Liebeslied | Ich schiess' den Hirsch | Schober | D | Feb 1827 | 1828, op.96/2 | viii, 264; v |
| 910 | Schiffers Scheidelied | Die Wogen am Gestade schwellen | Schober | e | Feb 1827 | 1833 | viii, 267; xiv |

| D | Title | Incipit | Text | Key | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 911 | Winterreise | | W. Müller | | | 1828, op.89 | |
| | Book 1: | | | | Feb – spr. 1827 | | |
| | 1 Gute Nacht | Fremd bin ich eingezogen | | d | | | ix, 2; iv |
| | 2 Die Wetterfahne | Der Wind spielt mit der Wetterfahne | | a | | | ix, 6; iv |
| | 3 Gefrorne Tränen | Gefrorne Tropfen fallen | | f | | | ix, 8; iv |
| | 4 Erstarrung | Ich such im Schnee vergebens | | c | | | ix, 10; iv |
| | 5 Der Lindenbaum | Am Brunnen vor dem Tore | | E | | | ix, 16; iv |
| | 6 Wasserflut | Manche Trän' aus meinen Augen | | | | | |
| | version a | | | f♯ | | | ix, 20; iv |
| | version b | | | e | | | —; iv |
| | 7 Auf dem Flusse | Der du so lustig rauschtest | | e | | | ix, 22; iv |
| | 8 Rückblick | Es brennt mir unter beiden Sohlen | | g | | | ix, 26; iv |
| | 9 Irrlicht | In die tiefsten Felsengründe | | b | | | ix, 30; iv |
| | 10 Rast | Nun merk ich erst | | | | | |
| | version a | | | c | | | ix, 32; iv |
| | version b | | | d | | 1895 | ix, 34; iv |
| | 11 Frühlingstraum | Ich träumte von bunten Blumen | | A/a | | | ix, 36; iv |
| | 12 Einsamkeit | Wie eine trübe Wolke | | | | | |
| | version a | | | b | | | ix, 40; iv |
| | version b | | | d | | 1895 | ix, 42; iv |
| | Book 2: | | | | begun Oct 1827 | | |
| | 13 Die Post | Von der Strasse her ein Posthorn klingt | | E♭ | | | ix, 44; iv |
| | 14 Der greise Kopf | Der Reif hat einen weissen Schein | | c | | | ix, 48; iv |
| | 15 Die Krähe | Eine Krähe war mit mir | | c | | | ix, 50; iv |
| | 16 Letzte Hoffnung | Hie und da ist an den Bäumen | | E♭ | | | ix, 53; iv |
| | 17 Im Dorfe | Es bellen die Hunde | | D | | | ix, 56; iv |
| | 18 Der stürmische Morgen | Wie hat der Sturm zerrissen | | d | | | ix, 60; iv |
| | 19 Täuschung | Ein Licht tanzt freundlich | | A | | | ix, 62; iv |
| | 20 Der Wegweiser | Was vermeid ich denn die Wege | | g | | | ix, 64; iv |
| | 21 Das Wirtshaus | Auf einen Totenacker | | F | | | ix, 68; iv |
| | 22 Mut | Fliegt der Schnee mir ins Gesicht | | | | | |
| | version a | | | a | | — | —; iv |
| | version b | | | g | | | ix, 70; iv |
| | 23 Die Nebensonnen | Drei Sonnen sah ich | | | | | |
| | version a | | | A | | — | —; iv |
| | version b | | | A | | | ix, 72; iv |
| | 24 Der Leiermann | Drüben hinterm Dorfe | | | | | |
| | version a | | | a | | 1895 | ix, 74; iv |
| | version b | | | b | | | ix, 76; iv |
| 916a | Song sketch (no text) | | — | C | ?May 1827 | — | —; xiv |
| 917 | Das Lied im Grünen | Ins Grüne, ins Grüne | J.A.F. Reil | A | June 1827 | 1829, op.115/1 | ix, 85; xiv |
| 919 | Frühlingslied (2) | Geöffnet sind des Winters Riegel | A. Pollak | A♭ | ?early 1827 | 1897 | ser. xxi, 325; xiv |
| 922 | Heimliches Lieben | O du, wenn deine Lippen | K.L. von Klenke | | | | |
| | version a | | | B♭ | Sept 1827 | 1895 | ix, 92; v |
| | version b | | | B♭ | c1827 | 1828, op.106/1 | ix, 97; v |
| 923 | Eine altschottische Ballade | Dein Schwert, wie ist's von Blut so rot | anon. Eng., trans. Herder | | | | |
| | version a, 2vv | | | g | Sept 1827 | 1862, op.165/5 | ix, 104; xiv |
| | version b | | | g | c1827 | 1895 | ix, 402; xiv |
| | version c, 2vv | | | g | c1827 | 1971 | —; xiv |

| D | Title | Incipit | Text | Key | Composed | Published | SW; NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 926 | Das Weinen | Gar tröstlich kommt geronnen | Leitner | D | aut. 1827 – early 1828 | 1828, op.106/2 | ix, 106; v |
| 927 | Vor meiner Wiege | Das also, das ist der enge Schrein | Leitner | b | aut. 1827 – early 1828 | 1828, op.106/3 | ix, 108; v |
| 931 | Der Wallensteiner Lanzknecht beim Trunk | He! schenket mir im Helme ein! | Leitner | g | Nov 1827 | 1835 | ix, 112; xiv |
| 932 | Der Kreuzzug | Ein Münich steht in seiner Zell | Leitner | D | Nov 1827 | 1832 | ix, 114; xiv |
| 933 | Des Fischers Liebesglück | Dort blinket durch Weiden | Leitner | a | Nov 1827 | 1835 | ix, 116; xiv |
| 937 | Lebensmut, frag. | Fröhlicher Lebensmut | L. Rellstab | B♭ | ?sum. 1828 | 1872 | x, 134; xiv |
| 938 | Der Winterabend | Es ist so still | Leitner | B♭ | Jan 1828 | 1835 | ix, 118; xiv |
| 939 | Die Sterne | Wie blitzen die Sterne | Leitner | E♭ | Jan 1828 | 1828, op.96/1 | ix, 125; v |
| 943 | Auf dem Strom, with hn/vc obbl | Nimm die letzten Abschiedsküsse | Rellstab | E | March 1828 | 1829, op.119 | x, 2; xiv |
| 945 | Herbst | Es rauschen die Winde | Rellstab | e | April 1828 | 1895 | x, 90; xiv |
| 949 | Widerschein [see 639b] | | | | | | |
| 955 | Glaube, Hoffnung und Liebe | Glaube, hoffe, liebe! | C. Kuffner | E♭ | Aug 1828 | 1828, op.97 | viii, 28; v |
| 957 | Schwanengesang | | | | Aug–Oct 1828 | 1829 | |
| | Book 1: | | | | | | |
| | 1 Liebesbotschaft | Rauschendes Bächlein, so silbern | Rellstab | G | Aug 1828 | | ix, 134; xiv |
| | 2 Kriegers Ahnung | In tiefer Ruh liegt um mich her | Rellstab | c | | | ix, 139, xiv |
| | 3 Frühlingssehnsucht | Säuselnde Lüfte wehend so mild | Rellstab | B♭ | | | ix, 144; xiv |
| | 4 Ständchen | Leise flehen meine Lieder | Rellstab | d | | | ix, 148; xiv |
| | 5 Aufenthalt | Rauschender Strom, brausender Wald | Rellstab | e | | | ix, 151; xiv |
| | 6 In der Ferne | Wehe dem Fliehenden | Rellstab | b | | | ix, 156; xiv |
| | Book 2: | | | | | | |
| | 7 Abschied | Ade! du muntre, du fröhliche Stadt | Rellstab | E♭ | | | ix, 160; xiv |
| | 8 Der Atlas | Ich unglückselger Atlas | H. Heine | g | | | ix, 167; xiv |
| | 9 Ihr Bild | Ich stand in dunklen Träumen | Heine | b♭ | | | ix, 170; xiv |
| | 10 Das Fischermädchen | Du schönes Fischermädchen | Heine | A♭ | | | ix, 172; xiv |
| | 11 Die Stadt | Am fernen Horizonte | Heine | c | | | ix, 175; xiv |
| | 12 Am Meer | Das Meer erglänzte weit hinaus | Heine | C | | | ix, 178; xiv |
| | 13 Der Doppelgänger | Still ist die Nacht | Heine | b | | | ix, 180; xiv |
| | 14 Die Taubenpost | Ich hab' eine Brieftaub | Seidl | G | Oct 1828 | | ix, 182; xiv |
| 965 | Der Hirt auf dem Felsen, with cl obbl | Wenn auf dem höchsten Fels | W. Müller, ?H. von Chézy | B♭ | Oct 1828 | 1830, op.129 | x, 16; xiv |
| 965a | Die Taubenpost [see 957/14] | | | | | | |
| 989 | Vollendung [see 579a] | | | | | | |
| 989a | Die Erde [see 579b] | | | | | | |
| 990 | Der Graf von Habsburg | Zu Aachen in seiner Kaiserspracht | Schiller | G | ?1815 | 1853 | —; xiv |
| 990a | Kaiser Maximilian auf der Martinswand | Hinauf! hinauf! in Sprung und Lauf | H. von Collin | B♭ | ?1815 | 1853 | —; xiv |
| 990b | Augenblicke im Elysium, lost [formerly 582] | | Schober | | ? | — | — |
| 990c | Das Echo [formerly 868] | Herzliebe gute Mutter | Castelli | B♭ | ? | 1830, op.130 | viii, 258; xiv |
| 990d | Die Schiffende, lost | Sie wankt dahin! | Hölty | — | ? | — | —; iv |
| 990e | L'incanto degli occhi (1), ?frag. | Da voi, cari lumi | Metastasio | B♭ | ? | 1933 | —; iv |
| 990f | Il traditor deluso (1), ?frag., lost | Ahimè! io tremo! | Metastasio | — | ? | — | — |
| 991 | [part of 323] | | | | | | |
| AI/30 | Mein Frieden | Ferne, ferne flammenhelle Sterne | Heine | E♭ | ?1815 | 1840 | — |

INDEX TO THE SONGS

MISCELLANEOUS

published in NSA viii/1–2 unless otherwise stated

| D | |
|---|---|
| 16 | 7 contrapuntal studies, nos.1–4, g, nos.3–7, a, ?vv, ?1823, ed. in A. Orel: Der junge Schubert (Vienna, 1940/R) |
| 25 | 2 contrapuntal studies, a 2–4, frags., begun 18 June 1812 |
| 25a | 2 contrapuntal studies, a 4, frags., ?sum. 1812 |
| 25b | 15 contrapuntal studies, a 3, frags., ?sum. 1812 (part facs. in C. Landon, E1969) |
| AI/3 | Fugue, C, str qt, frag., va only, ?1812 |
| AI/14 | Waltz, 'Kupelwieser-Walzer', G, pf, 17 Sept 1826 (Vienna, 1970) |
| AI/23 | Lebenslied, TTB/TTBB, 2nd T only, 1815 or 1816 (Kassel, 1974) [? part of lost Lebensbild, 425] |
| AI/28 | Klage, song, *c*1817 [formerly 512] |
| AI/32 | Figured bass exercises, before 1812 [formerly 598a] |
| AII/1 | arr. of ov. to Gluck's Iphigénie en Aulide, pf 4 hands, frag., ?early 1810 |
| AII/2 | arr. of W. Matiegka's Notturno op.21, fl, va, vc, gui, 26 Feb 1814 (Munich, 1926) [see also CHAMBER, D96] |
| AII/3 | arr. of 2 arias from Gluck's Echo et Narcisse, 1v, pf, March 1816 |
| AII/4 | arr. of M. Stadler's Psalm viii, S, 2 ob, 2 cl, str, timp, org, 29 Aug 1823 (Vienna, 1960) |

DOUBTFUL AND SPURIOUS WORKS

| D | |
|---|---|
| AI/4 | Str qt, G, frag., by A. Stadler [formerly 2] |
| AI/7 | March, 2 pf 8 hands, Nov 1825, lost [formerly 858] |
| AI/12 | 7 leichte Variationen, G, pf, ?1810 |
| AI/15 | Minuet and trio, D, pf [formerly 336] |
| AI/17 | Tantum ergo, B♭, frag., S-only |
| AI/25 | Drum Schwester und Brüder, 1v, chorus, insts, frag., Oct 1819 |
| AI/26 | Sturmbeschworung, ? trio/qt, mixed vv, frag., S only |
| AI/29 | Kaiser Ferdinand II, song |
| AIII/6 | Offertory: Clamavi ad te, frag., ?Nov 1813, by J. Preindl [formerly 85] |
| AIII/11 | Lass immer in der Jugend Glanz, canon, 2vv, after Mozart [formerly 92] |
| AIII/12 | Selig alle, die im Herrn entschliefen, canon, 2vv, after Mozart [formerly 127] |

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A Bibliographies. B Catalogues. C Documents. D Iconography. E Manuscsripts, sources. F Contemporary accounts. G Biography. H Musical style. I Orchestral works. J Chamber works. K Piano works. L Sacred works. M Stage works. N Choral works. O Songs. P General studies.

A: BIBLIOGRAPHIES

W. Kahl: Verzeichnis des Schrifttums über Franz Schubert, 1828–1928 (Regensburg, 1938)
A.H. King: 'Bibliography', Schubert: a Symposium, ed. G. Abraham (London, 1946/R), 259–66
H. Knaus: Franz Schubert: vom Vorstadtkind zum Compositeur (Vienna, 1997)

B: CATALOGUES

G. Nottebohm: Thematisches Verzeichnis der im Druck erschienenen Werke von Franz Schubert (Vienna, 1874)

O.E. Deutsch with D.R. Wakeling: Schubert: a Thematic Catalogue of his Works (London, 1951) [preface, p.ix, lists and discusses all previous catalogues; corrections and addns to catalogue in ML, xxxiv (1953), 25–32]; Ger. trans., rev., enlarged, by W. Dürr, A. Feil, C. Landon and others, Neue Ausgabe sämtlicher Werke, viii/4, as Franz Schubert: thematisches Verzeichnis seiner Werke in chronologischer Folge von Otto Erich Deutsch (Kassel, 1978)

R. van Hoorickx: 'Thematic Catalogue of Schubert's Works: New Additions, Corrections and Notes', RBM, xxviii–xxx (1974–6), 136–71

H. Hilmar: Verzeichnis der Schubert-Handschriften in der Musiksammlung der Wiener Stadt-und Landesbibliothek (Kassel, 1978)

W. Litschauer, ed.: Neue Dokumente zum Schubert-Kreis: aus Breifen und Tagebüchern seiner Freunden (Vienna, 1986)

C: DOCUMENTS

O.E. Deutsch, ed.: Franz Schubert: die Dokumente seines Lebens und Schaffens, ii/1: Die Dokumente seines Lebens (Munich, 1914, enlarged 2/1964, Neue Ausgabe sämtlicher Werke, viii/5; Eng. trans., 1946/R, as Schubert: a Documentary Biography)

O.E. Deutsch, ed.: Franz Schuberts Briefe und Schriften (Munich, 1919, 4/1954; Eng. trans., 1928/R)

O.E. Deutsch, ed.: Franz Schuberts Tagebuch (Vienna, 1928; Eng. trans., 1928) [facs. and transcr.]

H. Werlé, ed.: Franz Schubert in seinen Briefen und Aufzeichnungen (Leipzig, 1948, 4/1955)

R. Klein: Schubert-Stätten (Vienna, 1972)

T.G. Waidlich, ed.: Franz Schubert: Dokumente 1817–1830, i: Texte-Programme, Rezensionen, Anzeigen, Nekrologe, Musikbeilagen und andere gedruckte Quellen (Tutzing, 1993)

D: ICONOGRAPHY

A. Trost: 'Franz Schuberts Bildnisse', Berichte und Mittheilungen des Alterthums-Vereines zu Wien, xxxiii/2 (1898), 85–95

O.E. Deutsch, ed.: Franz Schubert: die Dokumente seines Lebens und Schaffens, iii: Sein Leben in Bildern (Munich, 1913)

O.E. Deutsch: Die historischen Bildnisse Franz Schuberts in getreuen Nachbildungen (Vienna, 1922)

A. Orel: Franz Schubert, 1797–1828: sein Leben in Bildern (Leipzig, 1939)

R. Petzoldt: Franz Schubert: sein Leben in Bildern (Leipzig, 1953)

O.E. Deutsch: 'Rieders Schubert-Bildnis', ÖMz, xiv (1959), 1–3

F. Novotny: 'Zu einem Bildnis Franz Schuberts', Musica, xv (1961), 57–60

E. Hilmar and O. Brusatti, eds.: Franz Schubert (Vienna, 1978) [exhibition catalogue]

E. Badura-Skoda: 'A Schubert Life Mask', MT, cxx (1979), 575–7

W. Litschauer: 'Unbekanntes zur Schubert-Ikonographie: ein Kurzkrimi', Schubert durch die Brille, no.6 (1991), 56–65

R. Steblin: Ein unbekanntes frühes Schubert-Portrait? (Tutzing, 1992)

E: MANUSCRIPTS, SOURCES

M. Friedlaender: 'Fälschungen in Schubert's Liedern', VMw, ix (1893), 166–85

J. Mantuani: 'Schubertiana: ein Beitrag zur Schubertforschung', Die Musik, i (1901–2), 1374–91 [Schubert autographs found in the Peterskirche, Vienna]

E. Decsey: 'Aus Josef Huttenbrenner's Schubert-Nachlass', Die Musik, xi/4 (1911–12), 297–304

R. Lachmann: 'Die Schubert-Autographen der Staatsbibliothek zu Berlin', ZMw, xi (1928–9), 109–19

J.G. Prod'homme: 'Les manuscrits de Schubert à la Bibliotheque du Conservatoire de Paris,' RdM, ix (1928), 209–24

Kongress für Schubertforschung: Vienna 1928 [incl. essays by M. Friedlaender, R. Haas, G. Kinsky, J. Wolf, on Schubert collections and source material]

M.J.E. Brown: 'Recent Schubert Discoveries', ML, xxxii (1951), 349–61

M.J.E. Brown: 'New, Old and Rediscovered Schubert Manuscripts', ML, xxxvii (1957), 359–68

M.J.E. Brown: 'Schubert's Manuscripts: some Chronological Issues', MR, xix (1958), 180–85

M.J.E. Brown: 'Schubert: Discoveries of the Last Decade', MQ, xlvii (1961), 293–314

W. Suppan: 'Schubert-Autographe im Nachlass Weis-Ostborn', SMH, vi (1964), 131–41

M.J.E. Brown: 'Two Schubert Discoveries', MT, cix (1968), 801 only [Albumleaf, 1821, Die Wallfahrt D778*a*]

A. Feil and W. Dürr: 'Kritisch revidierte Gesamtausgaben von Werken Franz Schuberts im 19. Jahrhundert', Musik und Verlag: Karl Vötterle zum 65. Geburtstag, ed. R. Baum and W. Rehm (Kassel, 1968), 268–78

O.E. Deutsch: 'Eine merkwürdige Schubert-Handschrift', Musa – mens – musici: im Gedenken an Walther Vetter (Leipzig, 1969), 283–6 [Schubert's arr. for voice and orch of Stadler's Psalm viii, AII/4]

A. Feil and W. Dürr: 'Die Neue Schubert-Ausgabe: über einige Probleme des Herausgebens von Musik', ÖMz, xxiv (1969), 553–63

R. van Hoorickx: 'About some Early Schubert Manuscripts', MR, xxx (1969), 118–23

I. Kecskeméti: 'Neu entdeckte Schubert-Autographe', ÖMz, xxiv (1969), 564–8

C. Landon: 'Neue Schubert-Funde', ÖMz, xxiv (1969), 299–323; Eng. trans., MR, xxxi (1970), 215–31

R. van Hoorickx: 'Two Essays on Schubert, I: Schubert's Variations, op.10, II: Ferdinand and Franz Schubert', RBM, xxiv (1970), 81–95

M.J.E. Brown: 'Schubert: Discoveries of the Last Decade', MQ, lvii (1971), 351–78

A. Weinmann: 'Zwei neue Schubert-Funde', ÖMz, xxvii (1972), 75–8 [version a of Mut D911, no.22; 4th setting of Das Grab D569 for chorus]

R. van Hoorickx: 'The Schubert Manuscript D.966', ML, liv (1973), 385–6

R. van Hoorickx: 'A Schubert Manuscript Identified', MT, cxv (1974), 127 only [D966]

R. van Hoorickx: 'Un manuscrit inconnu de Schubert', RBM, xxviii–xxx (1974–6), 260–63 [Über Wildemann D884]

F.G. Zeileis: 'Bemerkungen zur Erstveröffentlichung einer bisher ungedruckten Komposition aus Franz Schuberts Studienzeit', Beiträge zur Musikdokumentation: Franz Grasberger zum 60. Geburtstag, ed. G. Brosche (Tutzing, 1975), 493–503 [incl. facs.]

R. van Hoorickx: 'Some Unknown Schubert Manuscripts', MT, cxviii (1977), 1001–2

E. Hilmar: Verzeichnis der Schubert-Handschriften in der Musiksammlung der Wiener Stadt- und Landesbibliothek, CaM, viii (Kassel, 1978)

R. Winter: 'Schubert's Undated Works, a New Chronology', MT, cxix (1978), 498–500

B. Newbould, ed.: Franz Schubert: Symphony No.10 in D Major, D936A (London, 1995) [realization; incl. critical material]

F: CONTEMPORARY ACCOUNTS

R. Bright: Travels from Vienna through Lower Hungary, with some Remarks on the State of Vienna during the Congress in the year 1814 (Edinburgh, 1818)

J.C. von Zedlitz: 'Nachruf an Schubert', Wiener Zeitschrift für Kunst, Literatur, Theater und Mode (25 Nov 1828)

J. Mayrhofer: 'Erinnerungen an Franz Schubert', Neues Archiv für Geschichte, Staatenkunde, Literatur und Kunst, i (1829), 121–3

L. von Sonnleithner: 'Biographie des Franz Schuberts', Monatbericht der Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde (1829), 19–25

J. Mailáth, ed.: Leben der Sophie Müller (Vienna, 1832) [diary references]

A. Schindler: 'Erinnerungen an Franz Schubert', Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung, v (1857), 73–8, 81–5

H. von Chézy: Unvergessenes (Leipzig, 1858), 259ff

I.F. Castelli: Memoiren meines Lebens, iv (Vienna, 1861); ed. J. Bindtner (Munich, 1913), 123–4

A.H. Hoffmann von Fallersleben: Mein Leben: Aufzeichnungen und Erinnerungen (Hanover, 1868), ii, 50ff

E. von Bauernfeld: 'Einiges von Franz Schubert', Signale für die musikalische Welt, xxvii (1869), 977–81, 993–7, 1009–12, 1025–8; Eng. trans., Musical World (15 Jan, 19 Feb 1870)

A. Fareanu: 'Leopold von Sonnleithner: Erinnerungen an Franz Schubert', ZMw, i (1918–19), 466–83

J. von Spaun: Neues um Franz Schubert: einige Bemerkungen über die Biographie Schuberts von Herrn Ritter v. Kreissle-Hellborn [1865] (Vienna, 1934)

G. Schünemann, ed.: Erinnerungen an Schubert: Josef von Spauns erste Lebensbeschreibung [1829] (Berlin and Zürich, 1936)

O.E. Deutsch, ed.: Schubert die Erinnerungen seiner Freunde (Leipzig, 1957, 3/1974; Eng. trans., 1958)

G: BIOGRAPHY

WurzbachL
C.G. von Leitner: Anselm Hüttenbrenner (Graz, 1868)
G. Grove: 'Schubert, Franz', Grove1; repr. in Beethoven, Schubert, Mendelssohn (London, 1951)
L. Herbeck: Johann Herbeck: ein Lebensbild (Vienna, 1885), 162ff
M. Friedlaender: Beiträge zur Biographie Franz Schuberts (Berlin, 1887, Leipzig, 1928, as Franz Schubert: Skizze seines Lebens und Wirkens)
O.E. Deutsch: Schubert-Brevier (Berlin, 1905)
M. Vancsa: 'Schubert und seine Verleger', Jahresbericht des Schubertbundes Vienna, 1905, 47–57
E. Mandyczewski: Geschichte der k.k. Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, suppl. (Vienna, 1912)
F. Walker: 'Schubert's Last Illness', MMR, lxxvii (1947), 232–5
M.J.E. Brown: Schubert: a Critical Biography (London, 1958/R; Ger. trans., 1969)
M.J.E. Brown: 'Schubert and Salieri', MMR, lxxxviii (1958), 211–19
F. Hüttenbrenner: 'Anselm Hüttenbrenner und Schuberts H-moll Symphonie', Zeitschrift des Historischen Vereines für Steiermark, lii (1961), 122–37
O.E. Deutsch: 'Der "Mutwille" in Hütteldorf', ÖMz, xx (1965), 95–101
O.E. Deutsch: 'Ein Scherzgedicht aus der Schubertkreis', ÖMz, xxi (1966), 49–52
P. Ronge: 'Franz Schubert: der Mensch, Geschwister, Vorfahren, Lebenslauf: ein Beitrag zur Genealogie', Genealogie, xvi (1967), 721–36; see also xviii (1969), 534–7
O.E. Deutsch: 'Schubert und die Königin Hortense', ÖMz, xxviii (1973), 121–4
H. Osterheld: Franz Schubert: Schicksal und Persönlichkeit (Stuttgart, 1978)
O. Biba: 'Schubert's Position in Viennese Musical Life', 19CM, iii (1979–80), 106–13
W. Dürr: 'Schubert and Johann Michael Vogl: a Reapprasail', 19CM, iii (1979–80), 126–40
M. Solomon: 'Schubert and Beethoven', 19CM, iii (1979–80), 114–25
E. Sams: 'Schubert's Illness Re-Examined', MT, cxxi (1980), 15–22
M. Solomon: 'Franz Schubert's "My Dream"', American Imago, xxxviii (1981), 137
H. Goldschmidt: 'Schubert und kein Ende', Beiträge zur Musikwissenschaft, xxv (1983), 288–92
W. Aderhold, W. Dürr and W. Litschauer, eds.: Franz Schubert: Jahre der Krise, 1818–1823: Arnold Feil zum 60 Geburtstag (Kassel, 1985)
W. Dürr: 'Der Linzer Schubert-Kreis und seine "Beiträge zur Bildung für Jünglinge"', Historisches Jb der Stadt Linz (1985), 51–9
C. Osborne: Schubert and his Vienna (New York, 1985)
E. Hilmar: Schubert and his Time (Portland, OR, 1988)
D.P. Schroeder: 'Schubert the Singer', MR, xlix (1988), 254–66
R. van Hoorickx: 'Schubert: Further Discoveries since 1978', MR, l (1989), 103–23
W. Litschauer: 'Zu Fritz Lehners Schubert-Film Notturno', Schubert durch die Brille, no.2 (1989), 26–9
M. Solomon: 'Franz Schubert and the Peacocks of Benvenuto Cellini', 19CM, xii (1988–9), 193–206
P. Gülke: Franz Schubert und seine Zeit (Laaber, 1991)
D. Gramit: 'Schubert's "Bildender Umgang"', Schubert durch die Brille, no.8 (1992), 5–21
D. Gramit: 'Constructing a Victorian Schubert: Music, Biography, and Cultural Values', 19CM, xvii (1993–4), 65–78
K. Muxfeldt: 'Political Crimes and Liberty, or, Why Would Schubert Eat a Peacock?', 19CM, xvii (1993–4), 47–65
M. Solomon: 'Schubert: some Consequences of Nostalgia', 19CM, xvii (1993–4), 34–46
R. Steblin: 'The Peacock's Tale: Schubert's Sexuality Reconsidered', 19CM, xvii (1993–4), 5–33
R. Winter: 'Whose Schubert?', 19CM, xvii (1993–4), 94–101
E. Worgull: 'Ein repräsentatives Jugendbildnis Schuberts', Schubert durch die Brille, no.12 (1994), 54–89
H. Kiemle: 'Woran starb Schubert eigentlich?', Schubert durch die Brille, nos.16/17 (1996), 41–51
E.N. McKay: Franz Schubert: a Biography (Oxford, 1996)
P. Clive: Schubert and his World: a Biographical Dictionary (Oxford, 1997)
B. Newbould: Schubert: the Music and the Man (London, 1997)
R. Steblin: 'Schubert through the Kaleidescope: the "Unsinngesellschaft" and its Illustrious Members', ÖMz, lii (1997), 52–61 [Schubert issue]
L. Feurzeig: 'Heroines in Perversity: Marie Schmith, Animal Magnetism, and the Schubert Circle', 19CM, xxi (1997–8), 223
E. Badura-Skoda and others, eds.: Schubert und seine Freunde (Vienna, 1999)

H: MUSICAL STYLE

G. Abraham, ed.: Schubert: a Symposium (London, 1946/R)
M.J.E. Brown: Schubert's Variations (London, 1954)
E.G. Porter: 'Schubert's Harmonies', MR, xix (1958), 20–26
E.N. McKay: 'The Interpretation of Schubert's Decrescendo and Accent Markings', MR, xxii (1961), 108–11
F. Eibner: 'The Dotted-Quaver-And-Semiquaver Figure with Triplet Accompaniment in the Works of Schubert', MR, xxiii (1962), 281–4
K.P. Bernet Kempers: 'Ganztonreihen bei Schubert', Organicae voces: Festschrift Joseph Smits van Waesberghe (Amsterdam, 1963), 7–10
M. Chusid: 'Schubert's Cyclic Compositions of 1824', AcM, xxxvi (1964), 37–45
A. Feil: Studien zu Schuberts Rhythmik (Munich, 1966)
W. Riezler: Schuberts Instrumentalmusik (Zürich, 1967)
M. Boyd: 'Schubert's Short Cuts', MR, xxix (1968), 12–21
M.K. Whaples: 'On Structural Integration in Schubert's Instrumental Works', AcM, xl (1968), 186–95
R. Bruce: 'The Lyrical Element in Schubert's Instrumental Forms', MR, xxx (1969), 131–7
H. Keller: 'Schuberts Verhältnis zur Sonatenform', Musa – mens – musici: im Gedenken an Walther Vetter (Leipzig, 1969), 287–95
A. Whittall: 'The Sonata Crisis: Schubert in 1828', MR, xxx (1969), 124–30
E.T. Cone: 'Schubert's Beethoven', MQ, lvi (1970), 779–93
M.J.E. Brown: 'Schubert and some Folksongs', ML, liii (1972), 173–8
D. Coren: 'Ambiguity in Schubert's Recapitulations', MQ, lx (1974), 568–82
M.K. Whaples: 'Style in Schubert's Piano Music from 1817 to 1818', MR, xxxv (1974), 260–80
W.S. Newman: 'Freedom of Tempo in Schubert's Instrumental Music', MQ, lxi (1975), 528–45
L.M. Griffel: 'A Reappraisal of Schubert's Methods of Composition', MQ, lxiii (1977), 186–210
W. Gray: 'Schubert the Instrumental Composer', MQ, lxiv (1978), 483–94
J. Webster: 'Schubert's Sonata Form and Brahms's First Maturity', 19CM, ii (1978–9), 18–35; iii (1979–80), 52–71
E. Cone: 'Schubert's Promissory Note: an Exercise in Musical Hermeneutics', 19CM, v (1981–2), 233–41
E. Badura-Skoda and P. Branscombe: Schubert Studies: Problems of Style and Chronology (Cambridge, 1982)
N. Temperley: 'Schubert and Beethoven's Eight-Six Chord', 19CM, v (1981–2), 142–54
D. Goldberger: 'An Unexpted New Source for Schubert's A minor Sonata, D845', 19CM, vi (1982–3), 3–12
A. Mann: 'Schubert's Lesson with Sechter', 19CM, vi (1982–3), 159–65
E. Cone: 'Schubert's Unfinished Business', 19CM, vii (1983–4), 222–32
W.M. Frisch, ed.: Schubert: Critical and Analytical Studies (Lincoln, NE, 1986)
J. Hinrichsen: 'Die Sonatenform im Spätwerk Franz Schuberts', AMw, xlv (1988), 16–49
E.W. Partsch, ed.: Franz Schubert: der Fortschrittliche? Analysen – Perspektiven – Fakten (Tutzing, 1989)
W. Thomas: Schubert-Studien (Frankfurt, 1990)
V.K. Agawu: 'Schubert's Sexuality: a Prescription for Analysis?', 19CM, xvii (1993–4), 79–82
S. McClary: 'Music and Sexuality: on the Steblin/Solomon Debate', 19CM, xvii (1993–4), 83–8
B. Newbould: 'Beethoven, Schubert, Birds, and Scales', The Beethoven Newsletter, nos.8–9 (1993–4)
J. Webster: 'Music, Pathology, Sexuality, Beethoven, Schubert', 19CM, xvii (1993–4), 89–93
S. McClary: 'Constructions of Subjectivity in Schubert's Music', Queering the Pitch (1994), 205–33

W. Dürr: 'The "Prince of Song": a Critique of Old and New Schubert Clichés', ÖMz, lii (1997), 12–21 [Schubert issue]
W. Kinderman: 'Wandering Archtypes in Schubert's Instrumental Music', 19CM, xxi (1997), 208–22
S. McClary: 'The Impromptu that Trod on a Load: or How Music Tells Stories', Narrative, v (1997), 20–35
R. Kramer: 'The Hedgehog: of Fragments Finished and Unfinished', 19CM, xxi (1997–8), 134–48
R. Cohn: 'As Wonderful as Star Clusters: Instruments for Gazing at Tonality in Schubert', 19CM, xxii (1998–9), 213–32

I: ORCHESTRAL WORKS

R. Schumann: 'Die 7. Symphonie von Franz Schubert', NZM, xii (1840), 81–3
J.F. Barnett: 'Some Details concerning the Completion and Instrumentation of Schubert's Sketch Symphony ... as Performed ... May 5, 1883', PMA, xvii (1890–91), 177–90
E. Laaff: Franz Schuberts Sinfonien (Wiesbaden, 1933)
O.E. Deutsch: 'The Riddle of Schubert's Unfinished Symphony', MR, i (1940), 36–53
O.E. Deutsch: 'The Discovery of Schubert's C major Symphony', MQ, xxxviii (1952), 528–32
A. Carse: 'Editing Schubert's Unfinished Symphony', MT, xcv (1954), 143–5
J. Reed: 'The "Gastein" Symphony Reconsidered', ML, xl (1959), 341–9
M.J.E. Brown: 'Schubert's Italian Overtures', MR, xxvi (1965), 303–7
S. Kunze: Franz Schubert: Sinfonie h-moll: Unvollendete (Munich, 1965)
M.J.E. Brown: Schubert Symphonies (London, 1970)
G. Abraham: 'Finishing the Unfinished', MT, cxii (1971), 547–8
J. Reed: 'How the "Great" C major was written', ML, lvi (1975), 18–25
J. Rifkin: 'A Note on Schubert's Great C-Major Symphony', 19CM, vi (1982–3), 13–16
H. Goldschmidt and R. Winter: 'The Continuing Schubert Controversy', 19CM, ix (1985–6), 70–77
B. Newbould: Schubert and the Symphony: a New Perspective (London, 1992)
B. Newbould: 'Schubert: Symphony in E "1825"', MT, lxxxiv (1993), 280 only
D. Jacobson: 'Schubert's D.936A: Eine sinfonische Hommage an Beethoven?', Schubert durch die Brille, no.15 (1995), 113–26
B. Newbould: 'Schuberts D.936A: Eine sinfonische Hommage an sich selbst?', Schubert durch die Brille, nos.16/17 (1996), 123–9
M. Solomon: 'Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony', 19CM, xxi (1997–8), 111–33

J: CHAMBER WORKS

O.E. Deutsch: 'The Chronology of Schubert's String Quartets', ML, xxiv (1943), 25–30
H.-M. Sachse: Franz Schuberts Streichquartette (Munich, 1958)
M. Chusid: The Chamber Music of Franz Schubert (diss., U. of California, Berkeley, 1961)
A.A. Abert: 'Rhythmus und Klang in Schuberts Streichquintett', Festschrift Karl Gustav Fellerer zum sechzigsten Geburtstag, ed. H. Hüschen (Regensburg, 1962/R), 1–11
J.A. Westrup: Schubert Chamber Music (London, 1969)
K. Marx: 'Einige Anmerkungen zu Schuberts "Forellenquintett" und Oktet', NZM, Jg.132 (1971), 588–92
M. Chusid: 'Das "Orchestermässige" in Schuberts früher Streicherkammermusik', Zur Aufführungspraxis der Werke Franz Schuberts: Vienna 1974, 77–86
J. Gillett: 'The Problem of Schubert's G major String Quartet (D.887)', MR, xxxv (1974), 281–92
R. van Hoorickx: 'Schubert's Guitar Quartet', RBM, xxxi (1977), 111–35
M. Willfort: 'Das Urbild des Andante aus Schuberts Klaviertrio Es-dur D.929', ÖMz, xxxiii (1978), 277–83
P. McCreless: 'A Candidate for the Canon? a New Look at Schubert's Fantasie in C Major for Violin and Piano', 19CM, xx (1996–7), 205–30

K: PIANO WORKS

H. Költzsch: Franz Schubert in seinen Klaviersonaten (Leipzig, 1927/R)
H. Truscott: 'Schubert's Unfinished Sonata in C major', MR, xviii (1957), 114–37
P. Mies: 'Die Entwürfe Franz Schuberts zu den letzten drei Klaviersonaten von 1828', BMw, ii/3 (1960), 52–68
P. Badura-Skoda: 'Unbekannter Eigenschriften bekannter Schubert-Werke', NZM, Jg.122 (1961), 502–10 [4 impromptus d935]
A. Brendel: 'Die beiden Versionen von Schuberts 'Wanderer-Fantasie"', ÖMz, xvii (1962), 56–60
M.J.E. Brown: 'Schubert: Three Dance-music Manuscripts', Festschrift Otto Erich Deutsch, ed. W. Gerstenberg, J. LaRue and W. Rehm (Kassel, 1963), 226–31
P. Radcliffe: Schubert Piano Sonatas (London, 1967)
F. Bisogni: 'Rilievi filologici sulle sonate giovanili di Franz Schubert (1815–17)', NRMI, ii (1968), 453–72
R. van Hoorickx: 'A Schubert Autograph at the Brussels Conservatoire', RBM, xxii (1968), 109–11 [6 Polonaises op.61, D824]
M. Hughes, L. Moss and C. Schachter: 'Analysis Symposium', JMT, xii (1968), 184–239; see also JMT, xiii (1969), 128–39, 218–29 [Moment musical op.94 no.1 D780]
A. Tyson: 'Schubert and Terpsichore', MT, cix (1968), 812 only
D.A. Weekley: The One-Piano, Four-Hand Compositions of Franz Schubert: an Historical and Interpretative Analysis (diss., Indiana U., 1968)
R. van Hoorickx: 'Franz Schubert (1797–1828): List of the Dances in Chronological order', RBM, xxv (1971), 68–97
K. Stekl: 'Zwei wiederaufgefundene Schubert-Ländler', Steirische Sängerzeitung, xli (1971), 1 only [D679]
J.P. Vogel: 'Die "Grazer Fantasie" von Franz Schubert', Mf, xxiv (1971), 168–74
K.M. Komma: 'Franz Schuberts Klaviersonate a-moll op.posth.164 (D537)', Zeitschrift für Musiktheorie, iii/2 (1972), 2–14
K. Musiol: '"Sieben leichte Variationen in G-Dur", ein verschollenes Jugendwerk von Franz Schubert', Mf, xxviii (1975), 202–8
F. Bisogni: 'Rilievi filologici sulle sonate della maturità di Franz Schubert (1817–1828)', RIM, xi (1976), 71–105
W. Dürr: '"Sieben leichte Variationen in G" – von Schubert?', Mf, xxix (1976), 175–7
E. Sams: 'Schubert's Piano Duets', MT, cxvii (1976), 120–21
S. McClary: 'Pitches, Expression, Ideology: an Exercise in Mediation', Enclitic, vii/1 (1983), 76–86
W. Litschauer: 'Unbekannte Dokumente zum Tanz in Schuberts Freundeskreis', Studien zur Musikwissenschaft, xlii (1993), 243–9
W. Litschauer and W. Deutsch: Schubert und das Tanzvergnügen seiner Zeit (Vienna, 1997)
W. Litschauer: 'On the Performance Practice of Schubert's Dances', ÖMz, lii (1997), 42–51 [Schubert issue]
P. Brett: 'Piano Four-Hands: Schubert and the Performance of Gay Male Desire', 19CM, xxi (1997–8), 149–76

L: SACRED WORKS

O. Wissig: Franz Schuberts Messen (Leipzig, 1909)
M.J.E. Brown: 'Schubert's Settings of the "Salve regina"', ML, xxxvii (1956), 234–49
R. van Hoorickx: 'Schubert's "Pastoral" Mass', ML, xlii (1961), 53–5
R.S. Stringham: The Masses of Franz Schubert (diss., Cornell U., 1964)
F. Burkhart: 'Franz Schuberts 'Deutsche Messe"', ÖMz, xxxi (1976), 565–73
R. van Hoorickx: 'Schubert and the Bible', MT, cxix (1978), 953–5
W. Dürr: 'Dona nobis pacem: Gedanken zu Schuberts späten Messen', Bachiana et alia musicologica: Festschrift Alfred Dürr, ed. W. Rehm (Kassel, 1983), 62–74
H. Jaskulsky: Die lateinischen Messen Franz Schuberts (Mainz, 1986)
P. Badura-Skoda: 'Schuberts korrumpierte Messtexte: Absicht oder Versehen?', Das Orchester, xxxviii (1990), 131–4
E. Benedikt: 'Memoranda on Schubert's Masses: on the Date of the First Performance of the Mass in F Major (D105)', ÖMz, lii (1997), 64–9 [Schubert issue]

M: STAGE WORKS

F. Liszt: 'Schubert's "Alfonso und Estrella"', Gesammelte Schriften, ed. L. Ramann, iii/1 (Leipzig, 1881/R), 68–78
M.J.E. Brown: 'Schubert's Two Major Operas', MR, xx (1959), 104–18
E.N. McKay: The Stage-works of Schubert, considered in the Framework of Austrian Biedermeier Society (diss., U. of Oxford, 1962–3)
E.N. McKay: 'Schubert's Music for the Theatre', PRMA, xciii (1966–7), 51–66

M.J.E. Brown: 'Schubert's Fierrabras', MT, cxii (1971), 338–9
M.J. Citron: Schubert's Seven Complete Operas: a Musico-dramatic Study (diss., U. of North Carolina, 1971)
W. Szmolyan: 'Schubert als Opernkomponist', ÖMz, xxvi (1971), 282–9
G.R. Cunningham: Franz Schubert als Theaterkomponist (diss., U. of Freiburg, 1974)
P. Branscombe: 'Schubert and his Librettists – 1', MT, cxix (1978), 943–7
T.G. Waidelich: 'Einige Korrekturen zu Alfonso und Estrella', Schubert durch die Brille, no.5 (1990), 31 only
E.N. McKay: Franz Schubert's Music for the Theatre (Tutzing, 1991)
T.G. Waidelich: Franz Schubert: Alfonso und Estrella: eine frühe durchkomponierte Deutsche Oper: Geschichte und Analyse (Tutzing, 1991)

N: CHORAL WORKS

V. Keldorfer: 'Schuberts Chorschaffen', ÖMz, xiii (1958), 257–61
P. Mies: 'Interessantes Schubertfragment aufgefunden: "Die Allmacht" für gemischten Chor', Lied und Chor, li (1959), 139
A. Niemeyer: 'Franz Schuberts "Lazarus"-Fragment und seine Beziehung zur Textdichtung', GfMKB: Leipzig 1966, 300–5
R. van Hoorickx: 'Schuberts Trio "Die Advokaten"', RBM, xxv (1971), 46–52
A. Weinmann: 'Eine österreichische Volkshymne von Franz Schubert', ÖMz, xxvii (1972), 430–34

O: SONGS

O.E. Deutsch: Die Originalausgaben von Schuberts Goethe-Liedern (Vienna, 1926)
R. Capell: Schubert's Songs (London, 1928/R, rev. 3/1973 by M. Cooper)
P. Mies: Schubert, der Meister des Liedes (Berlin, 1928)
E. Schnapper: Die Gesänge des jungen Schubert vor dem Durchbruch des romantischen Liedprinzipes (Berne and Leipzig, 1937)
H. Haas: Über die Bedeutung der Harmonik in den Liedern Franz Schuberts (Bonn, 1957)
M.J.E. Brown: 'Schubert's "Wilhelm Meister"', MMR, lxxxviii (1958), 4–12
J. Kramarz: Das Rezitativ im Liedschaffen Franz Schuberts (diss., Free U. of Berlin, 1959)
E.G. Porter: Schubert's Song-Technique (London, 1961)
J. Kerman: 'A Romantic Detail in Schubert's Schwanengesang', MQ, xlviii (1962), 36–49
V. Levi: 'Le arie e ariette di Schubert su testo italiano', SMw, xxv (1962), 307–14
J.M. Stein: 'Schubert's Heine Songs', Journal of Aesthetics and Art Criticism, xxiv (1966), 559–66
M.J.E. Brown: Schubert Songs (London, 1967)
T.G. Georgiades: Schubert: Musik und Lyrik (Göttingen, 1967)
M.J.E. Brown: 'The Therese Grob Collection of Songs by Schubert', ML, xlix (1968), 122–34
R. van Hoorickx: 'Notes on a Collection of Schubert Songs copied from Early Manuscripts around 1821–5', RBM, xxii (1968), 86–101
J.P. Larsen: 'Zu Schuberts Vertonung des Liedes Nur wer die Sehnsucht kennt', Musa – mens – musici: im Gedenken an Walther Vetter (Leipzig, 1969), 277–81
E. Schwarmath-Tarján: Musikalischer Bau und Sprachvertonung in Schuberts Liedern (Tutzing, 1969)
D.B. Greene: 'Schubert's Winterreise: A Study in the Aesthetics of Mixed Media', Journal of Aesthetics and Art Criticism, xxix (1970–71), 181–93
E. Brody and R.A. Fowkes: The German Lied and its Poetry (New York, 1971)
D. Fischer-Dieskau: Auf den Spuren der Schubert-Lieder: Werden, Wesen, Wirkung (Wiesbaden, 1971; Eng trans., 1976)
W. Gray: 'The Classical Nature of Schubert's Lieder', MQ, lvii (1971), 62–72
W. Gerstenberg: 'Der Rahmen der Tonalität im Liede Schuberts', Musicae scientiae collectanea: Festschrift Karl Gustav Fellerer, ed. H. Hüschen (Cologne, 1973), 147–55
B. Kinsey: 'Schubert and the Poems of Ossian', MR, xxiv (1973), 22–9
H. Lowen Marshall: 'Symbolism in Schubert's Winterreise', Studies in Romanticism, xii (1973), 607–32
J.H. Thomas: 'Schubert's Modified Strophic Songs with Particular Reference to Schwanengesang', MR, xxiv (1973), 83–99
J. Armitage-Smith: 'Schubert's Winterreise, Part I: the Sources of the Musical Text', MQ, lx (1974), 20–36
M. Flothuis: 'Franz Schubert's Compositions to Poems from Goethe's Wilhelm Meisters Lehrjahre', Notes on Notes: Selected Essays (Buren, 1974), 87–138
M. and L. Schochow, eds.: Franz Schubert: die Texte seiner einstimmig komponierten Lieder and ihre Dichter (Hildesheim and New York, 1974)
J. Chailley: Le voyage d'hiver de Schubert (Paris, 1975)
A. Feil: Franz Schubert: Die schöne Müllerin, Winterreise (Stuttgart, 1975; Eng. trans., 1988)
G. Moore: The Schubert Song Cycles (London, 1975; Ger. trans., 1975 as Schuberts Liederzyklen)
E. Sams: 'Notes on a Magic Flute: the Origins of the Schubertian Lied', MT, cxix (1978), 947–9
R. Kramer: 'Schubert's Heine', 19CM, viii (1984–5), 213–25
J. Reed: The Schubert Song Companion (Manchester, 1985)
R. Wigmore, trans.: Schubert: the Complete Song Texts (London, 1988)
D. Stein: 'Schubert's Erlkönig: Motivic Parallelism and Motivic Transformation', 19CM, xiii (1989–90), 145–58
E. Buddle: 'Marginalien zu Schuberts Winterreise', ÖMz, xlv (1990), 673–9
S. Youens: Retracing a Winter's Journey: Schubert's Winterreise (Ithaca, NY, 1991)
S. Youens: Schubert: Die schöne Müllerin (Cambridge, 1992)
L. Kramer: 'Performance and Social Meaning in the Lied: Schubert's Erster Verlust', CMc, no.56 (1994), 5–23
R. Kramer: Distant Cycles: Schubert and the Conceiving of Song (Chicago, 1994)
R. Steblin: 'Wilhelm Müllers Aufenthalt in Wien im Jahre 1817: eine Verbindung zu Schubert durch Schlechta', Vom Pasqualatihaus: Musikwissenschaftliche Perspektiven aus Wien, no.4 (1994), 19–26
C. Gibbs: '"Komm, geh" mit mir: Schubert's Uncanny Erlkönig', 19CM, xix (1995–6), 115–35
S. Youens: Schubert's Poets and the Making of Lieder (Cambridge, 1996)
L. Litterick: 'Recycling Schubert: on Reading Richard Kramer's "Distant Cycles: Schubert and the Conceiving of Song"', 19CM, xx (1996–7), 77–95
S. Youens: 'Of Dwarves, Perversion, and Patriotism: Schubert's Der Zwerg, D771', 19CM, xxi (1997–8), 177–207

P: GENERAL STUDIES

R. Schumann: Gesammelte Schriften über Musik und Musiker (Leipzig, 1854/R, rev. 5/1914/R by M. Krersig; Eng. trans., 1877–80; new Eng. trans., 1946/R [selection])
H. Kreissle von Hellborn: Franz Schubert (Vienna, 1865; Eng. trans., 1869)
A. Reissmann: Franz Schubert: sein Leben and seine Werke (Berlin, 1873)
H.F. Frost: Franz Schubert (London, 1881, 2/1923)
A. Dvořák: 'Franz Schubert', Century Magazine, xlviii (1894), 341–6
R. Heuberger: Franz Schubert (Berlin, 1902, rev. 3/1920 by H. von der Pforten)
O. Bie: Franz Schubert: sein Leben und sein Werk (Berlin, 1925; Eng. trans., 1928)
D.F. Tovey: 'Franz Schubert', The Heritage of Music, ed. H.J. Foss, i (London, 1927/R), 82–122
P. Stefan: Franz Schubert (Berlin, 1928)
B. Paumgartner: Franz Schubert (Zürich, 1943, 4/1974)
A. Hutchings: Schubert (London, 1945, 4/1973)
A. Einstein: Schubert (London, 1951/*R*1971; Ger. orig., 1952)
W. Vetter: Der Klassiker Schubert (Leipzig, 1953)
P. Mies: Franz Schubert (Leipzig, 1954)
H. Gál: Franz Schubert, oder Die Melodie (Frankfurt, 1970, 2/1992); Eng. trans., London, 1974, as Franz Schubert and the Essence of Melody)
M.J.E. Brown: Essays on Schubert (London, 1966/R)
J. Reed: Schubert: the Final Years (London, 1972)
R. van Hoorickx: 'Schubert's Reminiscences of his Own Works', MQ, lx (1974), 373–88
O. Brusatti, ed.: Schubert Congress: Vienna 1978
W. Dürr and A. Krause, eds.: Schubert Handbuch (Kassel, 1997)
R. Erickson, ed.: Schubert's Vienna (New Haven, CT, 1997)
C. Gibbs: The Cambridge Companion to Schubert (Cambridge, 1997)
J. Horowitz: 'Schubert at 200', American Scholar, lxvi (1997), 419–22

ROBERT WINTER (text), MAURICE J.E. BROWN with ERIC SAMS (work-list)

Schubert, Heino (b Glogau, Silesia [now Głogów, Poland], 11 April 1928). German composer. He studied choral conducting, composition and the organ at the Detmold Music Academy, where his teachers included Kurt Thomas and Günter Bialas. In 1954 he continued his composition studies in Freiburg with Harald Genzmer. After serving as Kantor in Heidelberg, he was appointed organist at Essen Minster in 1961, also serving as lecturer at the nearby Folkwang Hochschule. He joined the composition department at the University of Mainz in 1978. His many honours include the Südwestfunk, Baden-Baden, composition prize (1957), the Stamitz prize (1961), the composition prize of the Bundesverband der Deutschen Industrie and the Silesian culture prize.

Schubert's primary compositional emphasis has been sacred music, particularly liturgical vocal works. He has also written chorale preludes for the organ, and works for wind and chamber ensembles. Some of these are intended for amateur musicians to perform during Catholic church services. Continuing in the tradition of Hugo Distler, Schubert's style is characterized by free tonality, modal melodies, colouristic harmonies and additive rhythms. His works often draw on themes from Silesian and Polish folk music, as in the prize-winning oratorio Der Mensch, das Spiel der Zeit (1984).

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: Kasperl wird reich (Schuloper)

Masses: Mass, E, 4-pt mixed chorus, 1950; Kanonmesse (1952); Mass, 3-pt mixed chorus, org, 1952; Missa 'unanimi voce', chorus, org, 1959; Gesänge zur Brautmesse; Kanonische Messe, mixed chorus; Missa choralis, chorus, org; St Anna-Messe, chorus, wind; Marienmesse

Cants. (chorus, org): Ave Maria, gratia plena, Königin im Himmelreich; Gelobet seist du, Jesu Christ; Gott sei gelobet unde gebenedeiet; Grosser Gott, wir loben dich; Liborius-Kantate; Maria ging hinaus; Wer heimlich seine Wohnestatt

Other vocal: Deutsche Ordinarium I, chorus, org, 1964; Deutsches Marienordinarium, chorus, org (1965); Weihnachtstriptychon, solo vv, male vv, children's chorus, orch, 1966; Die kleinen Jahreszeiten, female vv, pf (1979); Draussen ist der Vogel frei, choral cycle, mixed chorus, pf; Der Mensch, das Spiel der Zeit (orat, A. Gryphius) (1984); Auf dem Hochzeitsmarkt von Janoshida, chorus, 12 insts/pf 4 hands; Eigengesänge zur Missa 'Votiva St Hedwigs', chorus, wind; Proprien-Vertonung für Ostern, Pfingsten, Christkönig, Dreifaltigkeitssonntag, Marienproprium; St Hedwigsvesper, chorus, org

Inst: Sonata, ob, pf (1952); Wind Qnt (1956); Sonata, vn, pf (1958); 4 Stücke, pf 4 hands (1959); Giuoco per due, 2 pf (1962); Magnificat, org, 1963 (1964); Conc., 4 ww, str orch; org works

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Schubert: 'Eine Selbstdarstellung', Zeitgenössische schlesische Komponisten, i, ed. G. Pankalla and G. Speer (Dülmen, 1973), 127ff

R. Walter: 'Zur Geschichte der schlesischen Orgelmusik', Geistliche Musik in Schlesien (Dülmen, 1988), 35–82

C. Anhalt and E. Gropp: Der Musiker Heino Schubert: Biographische und Musikalische Aspekte (Pulheim, 1998)

LOTHAR HOFFMANN-ERBRECHT

Schubert, Johann Friedrich (b Rudolstadt, 17 Dec 1770; d Mülheim an der Ruhr, Oct 1811). German violinist and composer. He studied in his home town, with Hesse in Frankenhausen (*c*1788) and with Hausmann in Sondershausen; his skill on the violin and bassoon then impressed E.L. Gerber, who drew him into the court concerts in Sondershausen. In 1791 he joined the orchestra of C.T. Döbbelin's troupe in Berlin as second violinist and moved with it to Stettin (now Szczecin, Poland), where he was appointed director of music after the successful première of his opera Die nächtliche Erscheinung (1798); he also began to perform as a soloist. He was director of music at the theatre at Glogau (now Głogów, Poland) from 1801 and in a similar post in Witter's theatrical society in Ballenstedt from 1804. Soon after, he became leader of the concerts of the Kölner Kaufmannschaft in Mülheim.

Schubert's reputation as a composer was based on his opera and a few published works, including a violin concerto, violin duets and keyboard pieces. He was highly esteemed as a violinist, and wrote articles on string instruments as well as a singing method (1804); in the latter he followed Sulzer, Tosi and Hiller in their reliance on a systematic approach and a sound knowledge of literature.

WORKS
all printed works published in Leipzig

Die nächtliche Erscheinung (op, 2), Stettin, 1798

Inst: 3 Duos, 2 vn, op.1 (1804); 3 Duos, 2 vn, op.2 (n.d.); 24 kleine Stücke, pf, op.3 (n.d.); Symphonie concertante, ob, bn, orch, op.4 (n.d.); Vn Conc. (1805); Fantasia, orch, A-Wgm

Pedagogical: Neue Singe-Schule, oder Gründliche und vollständige Anweisung zur Singkunst in 3 Abtheilungen mit hinlänglichen Uebungsstücken (1804)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GerberNL; MCL; SchillingE

J.F. Schubert: 'Über den mechanischen Bau der Violin', AMZ, v (1802–3), 769–77

G. Schünemann: Geschichte der deutschen Schulmusik, i (Leipzig, 1928, 2/1931/R), 299

DIETER HÄRTWIG/URSULA KRAMER

Schubert, Joseph (bap. Varnsdorf, 20 Dec 1754; d Dresden, ? 28 July 1837). Bohemian violinist, violist and composer. He had his first music lessons from his father, a Kantor, then studied counterpoint in Prague and in 1778 completed his training as a violinist in Berlin. From 1779 to 1784 he was first violinist in the Hofkapelle in Schwedt, where at least four of his operas were successfully staged. Between 1788 and 1824 he was a second violist in the Hofkapelle in Dresden. Here he composed many works, some of which are now in the Sächsische Landesbibliothek. He retired in 1824 with a pension of 500 thaler. Schubert provided much information on Bohemian musicians in Dresden for Jan B. Dlabač's Allgemeines historisches Künstler-Lexikon (Prague, 1815/R).

ZDEŇKA PILKOVÁ

Schubert, Louis (b Dessau, 27 Jan 1828; d Dresden, 17 Sept 1884). German violinist, singing teacher and composer. He went to St Petersburg in his 17th year and to Königsberg as leader of the orchestra the following year; he remained there until 1862, and wrote music criticism for the Hartung'sche Zeitung. He then settled at Dresden, where he enjoyed a great reputation as a teacher of singing. He published a Gesang-Schule in Liedern, opp.18, 23–4 (Leipzig, *c*1868) and produced the comic operas or operettas Aus Sibirien (Königsberg, 1856), Das Rosenmädchen (Königsberg, 1861), Die Wahrsagerin (Dresden, 1864), Wer ist der Erbe? (Dresden, 1865), Die beiden Geizigen (Königsberg, 1870), Faustina Hasse (Altenburg, 1879) and Vorder Hochzeit (Kassel, 1880).

GEORGE GROVE/R

Schubert, Manfred (b Berlin, 27 April 1937). German composer. He studied music education with Fritz Reuter and Slavonic studies at the East Berlin Humboldt University (1955–60), and took part in Wagner-Régeny's masterclass at the German Academy of Arts in East Berlin (1960–63). In 1962 he became a music critic of the Berliner Zeitung, a position he held until 1990. In 1984 he received a UNESCO award (Paris) for his First Symphony. In 1985–6 he lectured in composition and orchestration at the Hochschule für Musik Hanns Eisler in Berlin.

The works of Hindemith, Stravinsky, Prokofiev and Eisler were Schubert's initial models. A deep interest in the Second Viennese School resulted in classical 12-note serial works such as the Flute Sonata (1966); in the mid-1960s his interests turned to the music of contemporary Polish composers. Since then he has used aleatory as well as serial elements, and tone-colour techniques. He strives for a synthesis of traditional and new methods, and for a creative adoption of classical models. His current preference lies in a fixed series of chords along the lines of a serially arranged polytonality. His output of the 1990s has consisted largely of church music.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: 5 Pieces, 1965; Tanzstudien, 1965; Orchestermusik 66, 1966; Suite, 1966; Divertimento, 1970; Cl Conc., 1971; Hommage à Rudolf Wagner-Régeny, hp, 13 str, perc, cel, 1972; Cantilena e Capriccio, vn, orch, 1974; Sym. I, 1979–82; Conc., 2 vn, orch, 1988; Vogelreden III, fl, str, 1990

Chbr: 2 pf sonatas, 1961, 1963; 4 str qts, 1963–96; Sonata, fl, 1966; Septet, 1967; Moments musicaux, 5 wind, 1967; Nachtstück und Passacaglia, 8 insts, 1967–8; Evocazione per undici esecutori, 10 insts, 1975; works for pf and org

Vocal: 4 Lieder (C. Morgenstern), Bar, pf, 1961; 2 Lieder (E. Toller, I. Härtelt), Bar, pf, 1961; 8 Lieder (B. Brecht), S, pf, 1964; Traumwald, 4 Lieder (Morgenstern), Bar, str, 1964; Brandenburger Kantate, S, Bar, mixed chorus, orch, 1971; Canzoni amorose (J. Bobrowski), Bar, orch, 1973; Nachtgesänge (J.W. von Goethe), Bar, orch, 1986; Miserere, mixed chorus, org, 1992; Misericordia ejus, 2 mixed choruses, 1996

Principal publisher: Deutscher Verlag für Musik

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Schwinger: 'Der andere Schubert', Musica, xxviii (1974), 243–5
F. Schneider: 'Junge Komponisten in der Deutschen Demokratischen Republik', Sozialistische Musikkultur, ed. J. Elsner and G. Ordshonikidse (Moscow and Berlin, 1977), 228–71, esp. 243
G. Rienäcker: '"Cantilena e Capriccio per violino ed orchestra" von Manfred Schubert', MG, xxix (1979), 6–10
F. Schneider: Das Streichquartettschaffen in der DDR bis 1970 (Leipzig, 1980)

ECKART SCHWINGER/LARS KLINGBERG

Schubert, Richard (b Dessau, 15 Dec 1885; d Oberstaufen, 12 Oct 1959). German tenor. He studied with Rudolf von Milde and made his début as a baritone in 1909 at Strasbourg. After further study in Milan and Dresden, he returned in 1911 as a tenor, singing first at Nuremberg and then at Wiesbaden (1913–17), where he concentrated on the Wagnerian repertory. His career was then divided largely between Hamburg and Vienna. He sang in the première of Korngold's Die tote Stadt (1920, Hamburg), and was also closely associated with Strauss in early performances of Ariadne auf Naxos, Die Frau ohne Schatten and Die ägyptische Helena. Abroad he sang in Paris, Buenos Aires and Chicago. He had a wide repertory of lyric and dramatic roles in Italian and French opera, including Rodolfo, Faust, Radames and Otello. His last appearance in Vienna was as Eisenstein in Die Fledermaus in 1937, after which he sang and directed the opera at Osnabrück and then retired to teach. His recordings show a vividly expressive and unusually lyrical style in the Wagnerian repertory; in association with his attractive stage presence these qualities gave him a leading position among the German tenors of his time.

J.B. STEANE

Schuberth, E(dward). American firm of music publishers. Edward Schuberth began his association with the New York branch of the Leipzig publisher Julius Schuberth in 1858. When the branch closed in 1872, he established his own publishing business in Union Square. His earliest publications were by German and German-trained musicians, and included songs with English and German words, German-American pieces such as Fritz Neumüller's Campaign March for Grover Cleveland (1884) and a series of European piano pieces edited by William Mason. Schuberth was the first American publisher of Victor Herbert's music, issuing his first five operettas, the Second Cello Concerto and some orchestral music. In the 1890s the firm published English translations of European operettas by Ludwig Engländer and Ede Poldini, which were popular in New York, as well as those by the American composer De Koven. Schuberth became recognised as one of the major American publishers of serious music.

In 1902 E. Schuberth moved to 22nd Street. The firm had published songs by American composers such as Frederick Ritter, C.W. Cadman and W.W. Gilchrist as early as 1879, and by 1917 new items had doubled the size of its catalogue. Some of these songs enjoyed immense sales, especially For You Alone, made famous by Caruso. The number of new titles soon declined sharply, however, and the New York office was closed. Schuberth moved to Carlstadt, New Jersey, in February 1971.

J. BRADFORD YOUNG

Schuberth, Julius (Ferdinand Georg) (b Magdeburg, 14 July 1804; d Leipzig, 9 June 1875). German music publisher. He was the son of Gottlob Schuberth (b Karsdorf, 11 Aug 1778; d Hamburg, 18 Feb 1846), a clarinettist and oboist, and was the founder of the well-known firm of J. Schuberth & Co. at Leipzig and New York. After learning the business of a music publisher at Magdeburg, he started his own firm at Hamburg in 1826. He founded branches at Leipzig (1832) and New York (1850). In 1854 he gave up the Hamburg business to his brother Friedrich (b Magdeburg, 27 Oct 1817; d after 1890), who operated it as Fritz Schuberth; Julius then devoted himself to the Leipzig and New York branches. He edited a Musikalisches Fremdwörterbuch (Hamburg, 1840, 8/1870), a Musikalisches Conversationslexicon (Leipzig, 1850, 10/1877; Eng. trans., 1895), the Kleine Musikzeitung (1840–50), and Schuberths kleine Musikzeitung (1874–5). He founded the Norddeutscher Musikverein in 1840 and received many decorations in recognition of his services to music. In 1874 he settled at Leipzig. His business, which by 1877 had issued over 6000 publications including works by Mendelssohn, Chopin, Schumann and Liszt, was carried on after his death with increasing success by his widow and nephew until 1891, when it was bought by F. Siegel.

His brother Ludwig (b Magdeburg, 18 April 1806; d St Petersburg, May 1850) was a conductor and composer. He studied under Weber, and at the age of 16 was musical director at the Magdeburg Stadttheater. He was subsequently Hofkapellmeister at Oldenburg, and after living at Riga and Königsberg (1836) became in 1845 conductor of the German opera in St Petersburg. His compositions include some published chamber music and unpublished operas and symphonies.

Another brother, Carl (b Magdeburg, 25 Feb 1811; d Zürich, 22 July 1863), was a cellist, conductor and composer who learnt the piano from his father and the cello from L. Hesse. From 1825 to 1828 he studied under Dotzauer at Dresden and in 1828 made his first concert tour to Ludwigslust and Hamburg. In 1829 he played in Copenhagen and Göteborg, but a series of misfortunes drove him back to Magdeburg, where he occupied the post of first cellist in the theatre orchestra. In 1833 he again played at Hamburg with success, and during the next few years he gave concerts in all the principal towns of north Germany, Belgium and the Netherlands, besides visiting Paris and London (1835). In the autumn of 1835 he was appointed solo cellist to the tsar. He remained in St Petersburg for at least 20 years, occupying the posts of musical director at the university, conductor of the imperial court orchestra and inspector of the imperial dramatic college. He later settled in Switzerland. His compositions include chamber music and cello concertos.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Schuberth: Karl Schuberth in St. Petersburg: eine Lebenskizze (Hamburg, 1847)

Zur Geschichte des Musikverlags J. Schuberth & Co., Leipzig (Leipzig, 1926)

H.-M. Plesske: 'Bibliographie des Schrifttums zur Geschichte deutscher und österreichischer Musikverlage', Beiträge zur Geschichte des Buchwesens, iii (1968), 135–222

H.-M. Plesske: Das Leipziger Musikverlagswesen und seine Beziehungen zu einigen namhaften Komponisten (diss., U. of Leipzig, 1974)

H.-M. Plesske: 'Leipzigs Musikverlage im 19. Jahrhundert', Leipzig: aus Vergangenheit und Gegenwart (Leipzig, 1988), 69–83

WILLIAM BARCLAY SQUIRE/JAMES DEAVILLE

Schubiger, Anselm (Joseph-Alois) (b Uznach, 5 or 9 March 1815; d Einsiedeln, 14 March 1888). Swiss music scholar. He entered Einsiedeln monastery in 1835 and served as organist and musical director of the chapel (1842–59), for which he wrote a considerable amount of sacred music; he was ordained in 1839. His study of the choir school of St Gallen from the 8th century to the 12th makes extensive use of the primary (but not always trustworthy) chronicle sources associated with St Gallen; it includes colour facsimiles of early musical sources from St Gallen and Einsiedeln as well as many transcriptions of sequences and other types of medieval chant, some from the earliest readable sources. He transcribed all but one of the larger sequence melodies (i.e. those with couplets) used by Notker, as well as four of the eight smaller, aparallel melodies; he included other sequences from the early repertory, and some by composers after Notker. This was a remarkable study in its time, and the transcriptions were not superseded in later publications. Schubiger's melodic readings, however, necessarily reflect the 12th- and 13th-century sources from which he transcribed; a more comprehensive approach to the sources will produce readings that are closer to Notker's own use, and better musically.

WRITINGS

Die Sängerschule St. Gallens vom achten bis zwölften Jahrhundert: ein Beitrag zur Gesanggeschichte des Mittelalters (Einsiedeln and New York, 1858/R)

'Historische Irrthümer im Fache der Tonkunst', MMg, i (1869), 127–34

'Biographie C.D. Cossoni', MMg, iii (1871), 49–58

'Zur fünf- oder vierstimmigen Passion von J. Reiner', MMg, iv (1872), 213–18

Die Pflege des Kirchengesanges und der Kirchenmusik in der deutschen katholischen Schweiz (Einsiedeln, 1873)

Musikalische Spicilegien über das liturgische Drama, Orgelbau und Orgelspiel, das ausserliturgische Lied und die Instrumentalmusik des Mittelalters, PÄMw, v (1876/R)

'System der Lauten', MMg, viii (1876), 6–7

'Über Hucbalds Werk "De Musica"', MMg, x (1878), 24–8

RICHARD L. CROCKER

Schubinger. German family of musicians. They appeared first in Bavaria in the 15th century, and they flourished briefly and brilliantly, fading from view after about 1530.

(1) Ulrich Schubinger (i) (*b c*1425; d 1491). Wind player. He is the earliest known member of the family; he was engaged in the wind ensemble in Augsburg in 1457. Successful and prosperous, he served the city for the rest of his life.

(2) Michael Schubinger (*b c*1450; d ?*c*1520). Shawm player, eldest son of (1) Ulrich Schubinger. He performed in Augsburg from 1472 to 1477, then moved on to Ferrara, where he remained, apart from a brief stay in Naples (*c*1485–8); his name disappears from records in about 1520.

(3) Augustein Schubinger (b c1460; d 1532). Trombonist and cornettist, second son of (1) Ulrich. He established himself as one of the great virtuosi of the era. He also began his career in Augsburg in 1481, then moved on to Innsbruck in 1487. He relocated to Florence, on a recommendation from his brother to Lorenzo de' Medici, staying in the city until 1493, after which he returned to the court of Maximilian in Innsbruck. He remained in Habsburg service for the rest of his life. In about 1500 he took up the cornett, an instrument with which he dazzled audiences everywhere. He was also a skilled lutenist and an accomplished composer, though no pieces ascribed to him have survived.

(4) Ulrich Schubinger (ii) (*b c*1465; *d c*1530). Instrumentalist, third son of (1) Ulrich. He began his career in Augsburg (as a trombonist, 1484–1502), and was then engaged in Mantua, probably on a recommendation from his two brothers, who were both well known in the city. He stayed there until 1522 when he moved on to Salzburg, where he was noted as a master performer on trombone, viol, harp and lute.

(5) Anthon Schubinger (*b c*1470; d 1511). Wind player. He was perhaps a lesser talent than his brothers. He was recorded in Ferrara from 1506; he was certainly there through the influence of his brother, Michael. He disappears from the accounts after 1511.

The Schubingers exemplify salient features of instrumental music of the era. They engaged in their profession as a family (and certainly exploited familial connections), they were active in both cities and courts, and they commanded a range of instrumental specialities. The period of activity of the family was short – apparently less than a century – but within that span their fame and influence reached the far corners of Europe.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

K. Polk: 'Augustein Schubinger and the Zinck: Innovation in Performance Practice', HBSJ, i (1989), 83–93

K. Polk: 'The Schubingers of Augsburg: Innovation in Renaissance Instrumental Music', Quaestiones in musica: Festschrift für Franz

Krautwurst, ed. F. Brusniak and H. Leuchtmann (Tutzing, 1989), 495–503

KEITH POLK

Schuch, Ernst Edler von (b Graz, 23 Nov 1846; d Kötzschenbroda, nr Dresden, 10 May 1914). Austrian conductor. While a law student in Graz, he studied music with Eduard Stolz and directed the Graz Musikverein. At the time of his matriculation at Vienna, he was a pupil of Otto Dessoff. He was appointed music director of Lobe's theatre in Breslau (now Wrocław) in 1867 and then worked at Würzburg (1868–70), Graz (1870–71) and Basle (1871). In 1872 he was engaged by Pollini in Dresden, where he conducted opera for the first time in March that year. In August he became music director of the Hofoper and in 1873 Kapellmeister, sharing conducting duties at first with Julius Rietz, and from 1879 with Franz Wüllner. In 1882 Schuch assumed sole direction of the opera, and in 1889 became general music director. In spite of many engagements elsewhere in Germany and abroad (Berlin, Munich, Vienna, Paris, Rome, Moscow, St Petersburg, New York etc.) he concentrated his activities in Dresden. In 1898 he was ennobled by Franz Joseph.

Schuch was responsible for the growth of the Dresden opera and orchestra to rank among the greatest in the world. During his tenure the Hofoper witnessed 51 world premières as well as the addition of 117 other works to the repertory. He conducted the premières of Strauss's Feuersnot (1901), Salome (9 December 1905), Elektra (25 January 1909) and Der Rosenkavalier (26 January 1911), brought Wagner's Ring, Tristan und Isolde and Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg to the Dresden stage, and introduced Puccini's operas and Mascagni's Cavalleria rusticana to German audiences; he also gave the first local performances of works by other contemporary composers, including August Bungert, Paderewski, Dohnányi, Felix Draeseke and Wolf-Ferrari. Because he cultivated a particularly close working relationship with his orchestra and singers, it was with reluctance that he moved the rostrum back to the rail from the middle of the orchestra nearer the footlights, a position that had been used in Dresden for many years, during the regimes of Weber, Wagner and others.

Schuch also conducted the concerts of the opera orchestra, the Königliche Kapelle (later Staatskapelle), from 1877. On Palm Sunday 1884 he presented excerpts from Parsifal, and his programmes between 1901 and 1914 included, in addition to the Strauss symphonic poems, works by Mahler, Reger, Pfitzner, Debussy, Ravel, Stanford and Elgar, indicating the extent of his support of contemporary music. A man of wide culture and great intelligence, he was a conductor of exceptionally fine technique, taste and inspiration, whose regime of more than a quarter-century was one of the most brilliant periods of the musical history of Dresden.

Schuch was married to the singer Clementine Schuch-Proska. Their daughter, Liesel von Schuch, was a coloratura soprano at the Dresden opera.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Sakolowsky: Ernst von Schuch (Leipzig, 1901)
F.A. Geissler: 'Ernst von Schuch', Die Musik, xi/4 (1911–12), 364–6
A. Weissmann: Der Dirigent im 20. Jahrhundert (Berlin, 1925)
F. von Schuch: Richard Strauss, Ernst von Schuch und Dresdens Oper (Dresden, 1951, 2/1953)
D. Traupe: 'Oper in Dresden', Hundert Jahre Dresdner Oper 1878–1978 (Munich, 1978), 31–40
G. Schönfelder: 'Die Dresdner Oper: Dorado der Uraufführungen', Höhepunkte der Dresdner Operngeschichte im 20. Jahrhundert: Dresden 1989, 851–66
H.-R. Arnold: 'Ernst von Schuch als Interpret', ibid., 916–29

Schuchardt, Theodor (b Weberstedt, nr Langensalza, 23 March 1601; d Eisenach, bur. 25 July 1677). German composer and schoolmaster. He studied at Greifswald University, where he matriculated on 4 October 1621, and was then a schoolmaster at two places near his birthplace, first at Merxleben and from 1639 at Thamsbrück. From the beginning of 1644 until his compulsory retirement at the end of 1670 he was Kantor at Eisenach, where by about 1650 he brought the cultivation of church music to an astonishingly high level and where, as a schoolteacher, he published new editions of language textbooks. The church music that he wrote at Eisenach consists of settings of German texts, several for large forces. Unique copies of works by Schütz and Schein transmitted by Schuchardt may indicate that he also had connections with Naumburg. He also added extra parts to works by Melchior Franck (in D-WF) and Heinrich Grimm (D-BIB). In his own pieces in his principal work, Threnodia sacra, homophony and measured declamation of the words are combined with madrigalian characteristics: scoring for a five-part ensemble including two sopranos, division of the voices into contrasting groups, occasional word-painting and a certain amount of animated writing. He also wrote two school texts on non-musical subjects, Das kleine vocabularium and Teutsche Syntax, both of which are lost.

WORKS

Der Welt nichtige Vergänglichkeit, 8, 16vv (Erfurt, 1645), lost
Threnodia sacra, 4–6vv (Gotha and Eisenach, 1653) [of the 38 pieces, 15 are composed by Schuchardt, and for the last piece he also wrote the text]
Christliches Gespräch eines betrübten Vaters ('Ach Gott, wie ist mein Hertz betrübt') (Gotha, 1656)
Christi Blut und Gerechtigkeit, 8vv, D-WF, inc.
Herr Gott Vater, mein starker Held, 8, 13vv, BIB
Herr, nu lässestu deinen Diener, 8vv, BIB
Nun danket alle Gott, 8vv, formerly in Bsb, now in HAh, inc.
Siehe, ich verkündige euch grosse Freude, 8vv, BIB
Wie bin ich doch so herzlich froh, 8vv, BIB
2 funeral songs (Arnstadt, 1653 and Giessen, 1656)

Several MS arrs. of other composers' works, BIB, WF

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. Braun: 'Theodor Schuchardt und die Eisenacher Musikkultur im 17. Jahrhundert', AMw, xv (1958), 291–306
W. Braun: 'Das Eisenacher Begräbniskantional aus dem Jahre 1653', Jb für Liturgik und Hymnologie, iv (1958–9), 122–8
W. Steude: 'Neue Schütz-Ermittlungen', DJbM, xii (1967), 40–74, esp. 63

WERNER BRAUN

Schuchart, J(ohan) J(ust) (b ?Germany, *c*1695; d London, 1758). ?German wind instrument maker. He was living in London in the Savoy precinct by 1721 and very probably worked for Bressan. Bressan died in April 1731 and by midsummer of that year Schuchart had set up in Coventry Court, off the Haymarket. He moved subsequently to Panton Street in 1738, to Sherwood Street in 1748 and to Angel Court, Windmill Street, in 1756, where he made his will on 18 February 1757; it was proved on 17 September 1759. His son, Charles Schuchart (1719/20–65), was at the 'Two Flutes and Hautboy', 20 Chandos Street, in 1754, and was succeeded there by Thomas Collier in 1767 and John Hale, who was active 1785–1804.

Recorders, flutes, oboes, a tenor oboe and a bassoon by the Schucharts are known; the recorders and one oboe marked 'I u I SCHUCHART', with a double-headed spread-eagle are probably by the father. This mark is very similar to that of Bressan. J.J. Schuchart can also be credited with an early attempt to extend the range of the flute. In 1756, in an advertisement in the Daily Advertiser, the flute maker John Mason claimed to have invented a flute descending to d♭'. Charles Schuchart replied to this in the same paper on 10 and 13 September 1756, stating that his father made a pattern for a flute with an extended foot-joint (i.e. descending below d') in about 1726.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Waterhouse-LangwillI; YoungHI
M. Byrne: 'The Church Band at Swalcliffe', GSJ, xvii (1964), 89–98
M. Byrne: 'Schuchart and the Extended Foot Joint', GSJ, xviii (1965), 7–13
M. Byrne: 'Pierre Jaillard, Peter Bressan', GSJ, xxxvi (1983), 2–28

MAURICE BYRNE/R

Schüchter, Wilhelm (b Bonn, 15 Dec 1911; d Dortmund, 27 May 1974). German conductor. He studied at the Staatliche Hochschule für Musik, Cologne, with Abendroth and Jarnach and made his début in Coburg in 1937 conducting Cavalleria rusticana and Pagliacci. He held conducting appointments in opera houses in Würzburg (1937–40), Aachen (1940–42), where he worked closely with Karajan, and Berlin (Städtische Oper, 1942–3) and became a conductor for North German Radio, Hamburg, in 1947, as deputy to Schmidt-Isserstedt. He spent three years in Tokyo from 1958 as chief conductor of the NHK SO, returning to Germany in 1962 to become Dortmund's Generalmusikdirektor. His radical improvement of standards in Dortmund drew much attention within Germany and led to his eventual promotion in 1965 to the position of artistic director and general manager of the Dortmund Städtische Oper, which opened its new house in 1966. Schüchter remained at Dortmund until his death. His tenure was not without controversy, but he was generally considered the principal architect of Dortmund's musical advance in the late 1960s. He was sometimes criticized for over-opulent textures, although his performances of Wagner's music dramas at Dortmund won much-deserved acclaim.

LESLIE EAST

Schudi, Burkat. See SHUDI, BURKAT.

Schuëcker. American family of musicians of Austrian descent.

(1) Edmund Schuëcker (b Vienna, 16 Nov 1860; d Bad Kreuznach, 9 Nov 1911). Harpist and composer. He studied the harp with Antonio Zamara at the Vienna Music Academy (1871–7), and graduated with honours. He was solo harpist in the Parkorkest, Amsterdam (1877–82), the Parlow Orchestra, Hamburg (1882–3), and the Dresden Staatskapelle (1883–4). From 1884 to 1891 he played in the Gewandhaus Orchestra and taught at the Leipzig Conservatory; in 1890 he received the title Kammervirtuos from Ernest, Duke of Saxe-Altenberg. He declined an offer from the Boston SO in 1885 in favour of his brother (2) Heinrich Schuëcker, but in 1891 he became solo harpist with Theodore Thomas's newly founded Chicago Orchestra, returning to Austria each summer to direct the Vienna Harp College and give summer courses at Bad Kreuznach. In 1900 Mahler engaged him for the Vienna Hofoper, but he soon resigned because of his health and lived in Bad Kreuznach devoting himself to composition. He joined the Pittsburgh Orchestra (1903–4) and from 1903 to 1906 he travelled to London to be special harpist for the Wagner operas at Covent Garden. From 1904 to 1909 he played with the Philadelphia Orchestra and in 1910 with the Metropolitan Opera, but overwork brought a complete collapse, and he retired to Bad Kreuznach. In addition to his brilliant Mazurka op.12, which continues to be a popular harp solo, Schuëcker published ten volumes of solo studies and seven volumes of orchestral studies.

WORKS
(selective list)

all pieces for solo harp

all published in Leipzig, undated unless otherwise stated

Salon pieces: 2 Phantasiestücke, op.4; Erste Ballade, op.5; Nocturne, op.7; Serenade, op.10; Fantasia de bravura, op.11; Mazurka, op.12; Impromptu, op.13; Phantasie-Caprice, op.14; Am Springbrunnen, op.15; Elegie, op.16; 3 Stücke, op.17; 5 leichte Stücke, op.19 (Chicago, 1892); Legende, op.28 (Bayreuth, 1897); 3 Stücke, op.29; Menuett, op.32; Mazurka no.2, op.33; Fantaisie-appassionato, op.35 (Bayreuth, 1900); Elizabeth-Gavotte, op.37 (Bayreuth, 1900); Barcarolle, op.38 (Bayreuth, 1900); Remembrances of Worcester, op.40 (Bayreuth, n.d.); Henrica, nocturne, op.41 (Bayreuth, 1902); Träumerei, op.44

Studies: Etüden- und Melodien-Album, op.8 (Leipzig, ?1868); Etüden-Schule des Harfenspielers, op.18; 6 Virtuosen-Etuden, op.36 (Bayrueth, 1905); Die bedeutendsten Stellen aus Wagners Ring, Meistersinger und Parsifal (Mainz, n.d.); Orchesterstudien

Transcrs. of works by Berlioz, Jensen, Liszt, Mozart, Weber and others

(2) Heinrich Schuëcker (b Vienna, 25 Nov 1867; d Boston, 17 April 1913). Harpist, brother of (1) Edmund Schuëcker. He studied the harp with Zamara at the Vienna Music Academy (1878–84). After a season as solo harpist in Hamburg with the Parlow Orchestra he joined the Boston SO in 1885. He taught at the New England Conservatory, appeared in a joint recital with his brother in 1904, and as a soloist at eleven of the Worcester, Massachusetts, music festivals. He also performed as a soloist in London and Paris on various occasions. He died of a heart attack during a Boston SO concert.

(3) Joseph E. Schuëcker (b Leipzig, 19 May 1886; d Los Angeles, 9 Dec 1938). Harpist, son of (1) Edmund Schuëcker. He studied the harp and the piano with his father and with Alfred Zamara at the Vienna Music Academy. He was solo harpist with the Pittsburgh Orchestra during 1904–5 and 1908–9. In 1909 he succeeded his father in the Philadelphia SO, and from 1911 to 1913 he was solo harpist with the Henry Savage Grand Opera Company in Boston. He taught and lectured on the history of the harp at the Carnegie Institute of Technology in Pittsburgh (1915–20). In 1926 he joined the Pittsburgh SO and remained there until 1930, when he retired to California.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M.G. Scimeca: L'arpa nella storia (Bari, 1938)
A.N. Schirinzi: L'arpa (Milan, 1961)

ALICE LAWSON ABER-COUNT

Schuelke, William [Wilhelm] (b Könitz [now Chojnice, Poland], 13 April 1848; d St Mary's, IN, 6 Dec 1902). American organ builder of German origin. He served his apprenticeship in Germany and emigrated to the USA with his family in 1864, working at first for Gottlieb Friedrich Gärtner in Ann Arbor, before settling in Dayton, Ohio, where he began building organs around 1871. In 1873 he was in Hamilton, Ohio, and then moved to Indianapolis (1874) and Milwaukee (1875), where he entered a short-lived partnership with Theodore Steinert and by 1890 had a sizeable, well-equipped factory.

Schuelke patented a version of the German cone-valve wind-chest in 1873, and by the 1880s many of his larger organs used this type of action, although until around 1895 most of his organs were still made with tracker action. The firm's instruments were mostly of moderate size, one of the largest being built in 1902 for St Mary's, Columbus, Ohio. By this time the firm had built around 160 organs. After William's death his son Max (1878–1975) became head of the firm, which by 1908 had 50 employees. Another son, William J. Schuelke (1888–1960), established his own independent firm some time around 1916. Both brothers continued to work on a reduced scale until the 1950s, but their work consisted largely of maintenance and rebuilding. For further information see E. Towne Schmitt: 'William Schuelke, Manufacturer of Church and Chapel Organs', The Tracker, xxv/1 (1980), 52–75.

BARBARA OWEN

Schuh, Willi (b Basle, 12 Nov 1900; d Zürich, 4 Oct 1986). Swiss music critic and musicologist. He studied music with Eugen Kutschera and Werner Wehrli in Aarau, with Eugen Papst in Berne and with Walter Courvoisier in Munich, where he was also a composition pupil of Anton Beer-Walbrunn. He then studied art history and musicology in Munich with Sandberger (1922–4) and in Berne with Kurth (1924–7). He took the doctorate at Berne in 1927 with a dissertation on Schütz and in 1928 became music critic of the Neue Zürcher Zeitung, of which he was subsequently also music editor (1944–65). He taught music history and harmony at the Winterthur Musikhochschule, the St Gallen Handelshochschule and Zürich Conservatory (1930–44) and served as co-editor of the Mitteilungen der Schweizerischen musikforschenden Gesellschaft (1934–6) and as editor-in-chief of the Schweizerische Musikzeitung (1941–68). He was a committee member of the Schweizerischer Musikpädagogischer Verband (1931–9) and the IMS (1967–72), and was an honorary member of the Schweizerischer Tonkünstlerverein (1969) and the Schweizerische Musikforschende Gesellschaft (1971). He was awarded the Hans Georg Nägeli medal by the town of Zürich in 1963.

Schuh's work as a music critic for the Neue Zürcher Zeitung was of great importance to Swiss musical life. Building on the work of his predecessor, Ernst Isler, he gave his own stamp to opera and concert criticism. His carefully prepared reviews were of great value for their emphasis on the thorough analysis and evaluation of the work performed, particularly in the case of new or rare works. Many of his reviews were republished in the four volumes of Kritiken und Essays (1947–8, 1955) and in Umgang mit Musik (1970). Schuh's research centred on the works of Richard Strauss, who chose him as his biographer; they were in continual contact from 1936 to the composer's death, and their correspondence was published in 1969. Schuh also wrote on Renoir and Wagner, on the history of French ideas in the late 19th century and on works by Swiss composers, particularly those of Othmar Schoeck.

WRITINGS

Formprobleme bei Heinrich Schütz (diss., U. of Berne, 1927; Leipzig, 1928/R)
'Die Sterbegesänge des Meyerschen Totentanzes von 1650', Schweizerisches Jb für Musikwissenschaft, v (1931), 127–44
'Das Volkslied in der Schweiz', Die Schweiz die singt, ed. P. Budry and others (Zürich, 1933), 25–66
Othmar Schoeck (Zürich, 1934) [speech inaugurating the Schoeck Festival in Berne, 1934]
'Zur Zwölftontechnik bei Ernst Křenek', SMz, lxxiv (1934), 217–23
ed.: Die Briefe Richard Wagners an Judith Gautier (Zürich, 1936)
Othmar Schoeck: Verzeichnis sämtlicher Werke, Bearbeitungen und Ausgaben (Leipzig, 1936)
ed.: Othmar Schoeck: Festgabe der Freunde zum 50. Geburtstag (Erlenbach, 1936) [incl. 'Zwei Schoeck-Miszellen (die Literarische; die Musiktheoretische)', 120–33]
'Die Musik in der Schweiz', Confoederatio helvetica, ed. H.R. Muller, ii (Stuttgart, 1936), 349–75
ed.: H. von Hofmannsthal: Beethoven (Vienna, 1938, 2/1949)
ed., with H. Ehinger and E. Refardt: Schweizer Musikbuch (Zürich, 1939) [incl. 'Geschichte der Musik in der Schweiz: die neueste Zeit', i, 139–72]
'Idee und Tongestalt in Schoecks "Schloss Dürande"', SMz, lxxxiii (1943), 74–83
Kritiken und Essays, i: Über Opern von Richard Strauss (Zürich, 1947); ii: Zeitgenössische Musik (1947); iii: Schweizer Musik der Gegenwart (1948)
In memoriam Richard Strauss (Zürich, 1949)
ed.: Richard Strauss: Betrachtungen und Erinnerungen (Zürich, 1949, enlarged 2/1957; Eng. trans., 1953/R)
'Zum Melodie- und Harmoniestil der Richard-Strausschen Spätwerke', SMz, lxxxix (1949), 236–43
'Die Musik in der alemannischen Schweiz 1900–1950', Der Schweizerische Tonkünstlerverein im zweiten Vierteljahrhundert seines Bestehens (Zürich, 1950), 185–248
'Unvollendete Spätwerke von Richard Strauss', SMz, xc (1950), 392–402
'Die Entstehung des "Rosenkavaliers"', Trivium, ix (1951), 65–91
ed.: Richard Strauss - Hugo von Hofmannsthal: Briefwechsel (Zürich, 1952, 5/1978; Eng. trans., 1961)
ed.: H. von Hofmannsthal: Danae oder die Vernunftheirat: Szenarium und Notizen (Frankfurt, 1952)
'Kompositionsaufträge', Alte und neue Musik: das Basler Kammerorchester, i (Zürich, 1952), 41–105
'Zur Harmonik Igor Strawinskys', SMz, xcii (1952), 243–52
'Der Rosenkavalier: die ursprüngliche Fassung des II. Aktes', Neue Rundschau, lxiv (1953), 357–91
Goethe-Vertonungen: ein Verzeichnis (Zürich, 1952); enlarged edn in Johann Wolfgang Goethe: Gedenkausgabe der Werke, ed. E. Beutler, ii (Zürich, 1953), 663–760 ed.: R. Strauss: Briefe an die Eltern (Zürich, 1954)
ed., with F. Trenner: Hans von Bülow/Richard Stauss: 'Briefwechsel', Richard Strauss Jb 1954, 7–88; Eng. trans., pubd separately (London, 1955/R)
iv: Von neuer Musik (Zürich, 1955)
'Strawinsky und die Tradition', Melos, xxiii (1956), 308–13
ed.: Richard Strauss, Stefan Zweig: Briefwechsel (Frankfurt, 1957; Eng. trans., 1977, as A Confidential Matter: the Letters of Richard Strauss and Stefan Zweig, 1931–1935)
Renoir und Wagner (Zürich, 1959)
'Das Szenarium und die musikalischen Skizzen zum Ballett "Kythere"', Richard Strauss Jb 1959–60, 84–98
'Richard Wagner und Judith Gautier: neue Dokumente', SMz, ciii (1963), 122–8
ed., with G.K. Kende: Richard Strauss und Clemens Krauss: Briefwechsel (Munich, 1963, 2/1964)
Ein paar Erinnerungen an Richard Strauss (Zürich, 1964)
Hugo von Hofmannsthal und Richard Strauss: Legende und Wirklichkeit (Munich, 1964)
ed., with E. Roth: Richard Strauss: Gesamtverzeichnis (London, 1964)
ed., with others: Schweizer Musiker-Lexikon (Zürich, 1964)
'Musikbilder von Renoir', Musikkollegium Winterthur: Generalprogramm 1965/66, 5–41
'Der Sohn im Wort und in der Musik des Vaters', Festschrift Dr. Franz Strauss (Tutzing, 1967), 103–14
Der Rosenkavalier: vier Studien (Olten, 1968)
'Ernest Chabrier, 1833–1881, musicien et poète maudit', Aspekte der neuen Musik, ed. W. Burde (Kassel, 1968), 68–88
'Marginalien zu Othmar Schoecks Penthesilea-Melodik', SMz, cviii (1968), 167–73
ed.: Richard Strauss: Briefwechsel mit Willi Schuh (Zürich, 1969)

Umgang mit Musik: über Kompositionen Libretti und Bilder (Zürich, 1970) with D. Larese: Conrad Beck: der Komponist und sein Werk (Zürich, 1971)
ed.: H. von Hofmannsthal, R. Strauss: Der Rosenkavalier: Fassungen, Filmszenarium, Briefe (Frankfurt, 1971) [incl. introduction]
'Hugo Wolf im Spiegel eines Tagebuchs: Unbekanntes aus Tagebüchern und Briefen', SMz, cxii (1972), 11–18, 73–8
'Walter Schulthess' Vertonung eines Distichons von Hugo von Hofmannsthal', Dreissig Jahre Collegium Musicum Zürich (Zürich, 1972), 7–15
'Metamorphosen einer Ariette von Richard Strauss', Opernstudien: Anna Amalie Abert zum 65. Geburtstag, ed. K. Hortschansky (Tutzing, 1975), 197–208
'Hofmannsthals Randnotizen für Richard Strauss im "Ariadna"-Libretto', Für Rudolf Hirsch, zum 70. Geburtstag, ed. J.H. Freund (Frankfurt, 1975), 224–34
'Zum Liedwerk Reynaldo Hahns', Schweizer Beiträge zur Musikwissenschaft, ii (1974), 103–26
Richard Strauss: Jugend und frühe Meisterjahre: Lebenschronik 1864–1898 (Zürich, 1976; Eng. trans., 1982)
Straussiana aus vier Jahrzehnten (Tutzing, 1981)
'Hofmannsthal, Kessler und die Josephs-Legende', Hofmannsthal-Blätter, no.27 (1983), 48–55

BIBLIOGRAPHY

SML [incl. list of writings to 1964]
H. Ehinger and W. Schuh, eds.: Schweizer Musikbuch, ii (Zürich, 1939), 185–7 [incl. list of writings to 1939]
A. Briner and P.-A. Gaillard: 'Fünfundzwanzig Jahre Schriftleitung Dr. Willi Schuh', SMz, cvi (1966), 196–7
P. Sacher: 'Dr. Willi Schuh zum Abschied von der "Schweizerischen Musikzeitung"', SMz, cix (1969), 58–60
J. Stenzl, ed.: Art nouveau, Jugendstil und Musik: ... herausgegeben aus Anlass der 80. Geburtstages von Willi Schuh (Zürich, 1980) [incl. A.A. Abert: 'Richard Strauss im Spiegel der deutschen Presse, 1933–1939', pp.211–17]

JÜRG STENZL

Schuit, Cornelis (Floriszoon). See SCHUYT, CORNELIS.

Schuke. German family of organ builders. In 1894 Carl Alexander Schuke (b Stepenitz, 14 Aug 1870; d Potsdam, 16 Nov 1933) took over the Potsdam organ building business founded in 1820 by Gottlieb Heise (1785–1848) and directed (until Schuke's acquisition) by Carl Eduard Gesell (1845–94); the firm was then known as Alexander Schuke. Carl Alexander had been a pupil of Gesell and studied also under Otto Dienel; he had worked for the firm of Sauer in Frankfurt an der Oder, and also acquired a first-hand knowledge of the style of German organs of the 17th and 18th centuries. His sons Karl-Ludwig-Alexander (b Potsdam, 6 Nov 1906; d Berlin, 7 May 1987) and Hans-Joachim (b Potsdam, 7 Jan 1908; d Potsdam, 20 July 1979) directed the business jointly until 1953, when Hans-Joachim assumed the directorship of the Potsdam works (renamed VEB Potsdamer Schuke-Orgelbau in 1972); the director from 1976 to 1990 was Max Thiel; in 1990 Matthias Schuke, son of Hans-Joachim, assumed the position and the firm became Alexander Schuke Potsdam Orgelbau GmbH. Karl-Ludwig-Alexander took over the Berlin branch, established in 1950 (renamed Karl Schuke, Berliner Orgelbauwerkstatt GmbH, in 1972); he was appointed to a lectureship at the Hochschule für Musik in Berlin-Charlottenburg in 1955, and to a professorship in 1962. Foremen after his departure have included Ernst Bittcher (b 1928; founder of the Berliner Orgelbauwerkstatt, 1950–53); Wolfgang Theer (b 1927), 1975–94; and Andreas Schulz (b 1957), who joined the firm in 1995.

Organs built by the firm while the brothers directed it in partnership include those for the Ernst-Moritz-Arndt-Kirche, Berlin-Zehlendorf (1934–5); Magdeburg Cathedral (the Remter organ, 1949) and the Schlosskapelle, Schwerin (1951). The Schukes also restored historical organs, by Joachim Wagner, Arp Schnitger and Carl August Buchholz, and notably the instrument built by Friedrich Stellwagen in 1653–9 for the Marienkirche, Stralsund (three manuals, 51 stops). Instruments built since 1953 by the Potsdam works include those for the Divi-Blasii-Kirche, Mühlhausen (1958); the Tchaikovsky Conservatory, Moscow (1959); the Philharmonia, Vilnius (from 1962; three manuals, 52 stops); the Thomaskirche, Leipzig (1966) and the Bulgaria Concert Hall, Sofia (1974; three manuals, 55 stops). The Berlin branch has built organs for: the Musikhochschule, Berlin (1955; four manuals, 70 stops); Brunswick Cathedral (1962; four manuals, 55 stops); the Kaiser-Wilhelm-Gedächtnis-Kirche, Berlin (1962; four manuals, 63 stops); the Philharmonie, Berlin (1965; four manuals, 84 stops); the NHK Hall, Tokyo (1973; five manuals, 90 stops); the National Conservatory, Cologne (1975); Rutgers University, New Brunswick, New Jersey (1976); the abbey church of St Matthias, Trier (1977); Seoul City Hall (1978; six manuals, 97 stops); the Alte Oper concert hall, Frankfurt (1981; three manuals, 60 stops); the Lubljana Concert Hall (1981; four manuals, 70 stops); the Neubaukirche, Würzburg (1986); St Lamerti, Münster (1989); the Aichi Arts Centre, Nagoya (1992; five manuals, 93 stops); and the Herz-Jesu-Kirche, Bad Kissingen (1993).

In 1933 the Schukes abandoned the exhaust wind-chest with pneumatic or electro-pneumatic action in favour of the slider-chest with mechanical action. They are among those German organ builders who have made a particular point of incorporating the advantages of the Baroque organ into their own style of construction.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (T.-M. Langner)
K.-L. Schuke: 'Deutsche Orgellandschaft zwischen Elbe, Stralsund und Görlitz', Acta organologica, i (1967), 28–37
1820–1970: 150 Jahre Orgelbau in Potsdam, ed. Alexander Schuke Orgelbauanstalt (Potsdam, 1970)
100 Jahre Alexander Schuke Orgelbau in Potsdam, 1894–1994 (Schwerin, 1994)

HANS KLOTZ/HERMANN FISCHER

Schuldrama (Ger.: 'school drama'). From the early 16th century, in Catholic schools and universities and later in Protestant ones as well, the performance of Latin plays formed an important part of the educational programme. At first comedies by Terence and other Roman playwrights were used, but at many schools members of the faculty wrote new Latin plays in imitation of classical models but without their erotic allusions. Important contributors after the mid-century include the Augsburg Meistersinger Sebastian Wild.

Typically, the plays used no decorations and only amateur actors. The plays show little if any literary finesse, with the main action normally drawn from the Bible but freely embellished in order to provide a forceful sense of realism. Elements were incorporated to fix the attention of an audience often little acquainted with Latin – spectacle, dances, live animals and scenes of physical violence as well as of excessive eating and drinking. Music's role was ordinarily confined to choruses, intermedi of various sorts and occasional hymns and songs.

Under the music-loving Prince-Archbishop von Schrattenbach, students at the University of Salzburg performed five-act Latin tragedies interspersed with musical pantomimes and comic intermezzos at Shrovetide, for important visitors and at the end of each term. Michael Haydn contributed both pantomimes and German Singspiele for these occasions between 1767 and 1771, as did the young Mozart with his three-act Latin intermezzo Apollo et Hyacinthus (13 May 1767).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.B. Trenkle: Über süddeutsche geistliche Schulkomödien (Freiburg, 1866)

E. Riedel: Schuldrama und Theater (Hamburg, 1885)

P.E. Schmidt: Die Bühnenverhältnisse des deutschen Schuldramas und seiner volkstümlichen Ableger im 16. Jahrhundert (Berlin, 1903)

H. Levinger: Augsburger Schultheater (Berlin, 1931)

G. Skopnik: Das Strassburger Schultheater: sein Spielplan und seine Bühne (Frankfurt, 1935)

THOMAS BAUMAN

Schulhoff, Erwin [Ervín] (b Prague, 8 June 1894; d Wülzburg, 18 Aug 1942). Czech composer and pianist of German descent.

1. Early years and first works, 1910–18. 2. 1919–23. 3. Last years, 1923–42.

1. EARLY YEARS AND FIRST WORKS, 1910–18. Schulhoff's father, Gustav (1860–1942), was a wholesale wool and cotton merchant; his mother Louisa (1861–1938), neé Wolff, came from Frankfurt, where her father was leader of the local theatre orchestra. Erwin's great uncle, Julius (1815–98), was an esteemed piano virtuoso and successful composer.

Schulhoff expressed an interest in music from an early age. Learning to play the piano, he soon emerged as a child prodigy, and a musical career was decided for him on the recommendation of Dvořák (1901). He first studied privately, and then from 1904 at the Prague Conservatory in the piano class of Jindřich z Albestů Kàan; for a brief period he was also taught by Josef Jiránek, a pupil of Smetana. From here he moved to Vienna to the Horaksche Klavierschule, where from 1906 to 1908 he was a piano pupil of Willi Thern. From 1908 to 1910 he studied composition with Reger at the Leipzig Conservatory, where his other teachers were Krehl (music theory) and Teichmüller (piano), an admirer of Russian music, especially that of Skryabin. Following a year's break in which he completed his first concert tour of Germany, he continued his studies at the conservatory in Cologne (1911–14) under Fritz Steinbach (composition, conducting), Franz Bölsche, Ewald Strasser, and Lazzaro Uzielli and Friedberg (piano). His highly successful studies were crowned by winning the Wüllner Prize at the conservatory in 1913 and, later that year, the Mendelssohn Prize for piano; he also won the Mendelssohn Prize for composition in 1918 with the Piano Sonata op.22.

He began to compose at an equally early age. His first models were Schumann, Brahms and Dvořák, followed by Grieg and Richard Strauss, whose Salome made a strong impression upon him in 1906. In Leipzig he was significantly influenced by Reger and by Skryabin, whose harmonic ideas provided much inspiration. In Cologne this orientation extended to Debussy, with whom he briefly studied in 1913. Schulhoff's early works manifestly transgress the boundaries of the major-minor tonal system by way of a tendency to modality, a liking for tritone steps, for chords of the 9th and for harmony in 4ths. Also his melodic ideas, though initially a little inept and dependent upon foreign models, gradually acquired individuality by way of expressive and sinuous melodic design. At the German schools he learnt advanced counterpoint and variation techniques, and, as a matter of course, absolute mastery of large-scale forms. By the time he completed his studies he was well-grounded in the craft of composition.

When World War I broke out in 1914 he was conscripted into the Austrian army, where he spent a full four years. Composition was restricted to periods of leave, though ideas for a piano cycle – Fünf Grotesken – are said to have originated on the Asiago battlefield in the Dolomites in 1917. The war awakened in him vehement disapproval and opposition. It meant the breakdown of all the values he had previously believed in, and he became a convinced socialist. When at the end of 1918 he returned from the war he found himself unable to keep to the path that he had followed thus far. Although several works had already originated and were, therefore, to be completed in his old style, among them the two vocal symphonies, Landschaften and Menschheit (dedicated to the memory of the murdered Karl Liebknecht), he feverishly began searching for a solution that would liberate him from his hitherto post-Romantic aesthetic.

2. 1919–23. From January 1919 until the summer of 1920 Schulhoff lived with his sister Viola in Dresden, where he found friends among the musicians, visual artists and literati, and with whom he founded the society Werkstatt der Zeit. Their members included the painters Otto Dix and Otto Griebel, the poet Däubler and the Kapellmeister of the Dresden opera, Hermann Kutzsbach. Immediately in the spring of 1919 Schulhoff initiated a series of concerts, providing a platform for works by the Second Viennese School. Atonality as a radical alternative to the late Romantic musical-expressive system, and Expressionism as an aesthetic programme, were to him at this juncture an acceptable starting-point. At the same time he became acquainted with the Berlin dadaists, specifically with the painter George Grosz, who in Germany was among the first collectors of gramophone recordings of contemporary American jazz. The music he heard at Grosz's filled him with enthusiasm; he discerned here at once a phenomenon that would assist him in his attempt to extricate European postwar music from its crisis. At the same time he recognized that his revolutionary spirit was much better suited to the pro-active anti-bourgeois stance of the Berlin dadaists, than to the esoteric and intensive artificiality of the Viennese Expressionists.

Until the spring of 1921 Schulhoff moved between the two aesthetically irreconcilable poles, intermittently composing works inspired on the one hand by the Second Viennese School and on the other by the aesthetic of dadaism. Among the first group is Zehn Klavierstücke op.30 (1919), which he later made use of – uniquely combined with the visual arts cubist-futuristic creations of Otto Griebel – in the joint works Zehn Themen (1920), Fünf Gesänge mit Klavier (originally Fünf Expressionen) op.32 (1919), the orchestral 32 Variationen über ein achssliges eigenes Thema op.33 (1919), Musik für Klavier in vier Teilen op.35 (1920) and Elf Inventionen (1921). The music of these compositions is tersely concentrated. The rhythmic metre is loose, mostly without bar-lines, with consistent application of the principle of musical prose that had already been formulated by Schulhoff's teacher Reger, and that was also topical in Schoenberg's circle (see Schulhoff's correspondence with Berg). Also pointing towards Expressionism is the markedly exposed atonality in melodic-horizontal as well as in harmonic-vertical thought, the transient changes of fluctuating tempos, and violent dynamic contrast. Only in the orchestral Variationen are these features of Expressionism subdued in favour of the late Romantic expressive means typical of his first creative period.

The second group of compositions from this period begin with Fünf Pittoresken op.31 (1919), dedicated to the painter and dadaist Grosz. This cycle signals a sharp change of course and is, for its period, an isolated musical manifestation of dadaism. The foxtrot, ragtime, one-step and maxixe served as the starting point for a derisive imitation of 'élitist music'. They were elevated to the concert platform, but at the same time retained their primitiveness and rawness. At the centre of the cycle is the movement 'In futurum', which exclusively comprises pauses of diverse durations (written on two staves of which the upper is in bass clef and the lower in treble) with nonsensical time signatures (3/5 and 7/10), and the direction to play 'tutto il canzone con espressione e sentimento ad libitum, sempre, sin al fine!'. The score is filled with question marks, exclamation marks, note heads with sketched faces and even a 'Marschallpause'. This invites comparison with the speculative conceptual work of John Cage's 4′33″ (1952), though Schulhoff's work excels in its direct dadaist attack against the sacred values of esoteric music, an attack which is executed with humour and keen exaggeration.

There followed two separate opuses: a three-movement Symphonia germanica for voice with an accompaniment of an unnamed instrument, and a one-movement Sonata erotica for female voice, imitating coital sighs and cries; both compositions date from 1919. Next followed Ironies for piano (1920), a six-part suite with concluding foxtrot, and a jazz Suite (1921) for chamber orchestra, whose six movements were later broadened into a prelude, epilogue and entr'actes in the dance grotesque Die Mondsüchtige, which received its première at the festival of the ISCM in Oxford, 1931. The jazz Partita for piano (1922) and the Second Piano Concerto (1923) already do not belong to the dadaist era, although the orchestral part of the latter contains boat sirens, klaxons and rattles characteristic of the brutalism and musical experiments of the German dadaists. Schulhoff retained his liking for jazz into his next creative phase, which had established itself by the end of 1923.

3. Last years, 1923–42. If it is possible to assign Schulhoff's first compositions to the era of late Romanticism, and to consider that his second period passed between the bipolar movements of Expressionism and dadaism, then his third creative stage, lasting until the beginning of the 1930s, represents the synthesis of avant-garde aggression and the continuing European mainstream tradition. It is not by chance that this new development coincided with the return of Schulhoff to Prague from Germany; Czech music, which had retained its ties with native folklore, brought Schulhoff into contact with invigorating sources of musicality. Above all he was influenced by Janáček, to whom he dedicated a penetrating study (1925). Slavonic folksong and dance elements with lively syncopated rhythm and in church or minor modes, mainly originating from the eastern regions of between-the-wars Czechoslovakia, appear in a series of compositions, especially in his chamber music.

In Prague Schulhoff tellingly developed his activities as a composer, piano virtuoso and publicist. He worked together closely with Czech musicians, especially with the Zika quartet, and became the first interpreter of the quarter-tone compositions for piano by Hába and his pupils; he participated regularly at festivals of the ISCM and at festivals of chamber music in Donaueschingen, and became a studied interpreter particularly of contemporary piano music. During the second half of the 1920s he appeared on Prague's Radiojournal, the BBC and on other European radio stations. After years of hardship came success and artistic recognition.

In the first months after returning to his native land he dedicated himself, among other projects, to completing two works which he had begun in Germany. The first of these was the ballet Ogelala (1922–4), to an old Amerindian subject, in which he mainly set about improving the impracticable libretto, whereas the expressively and rhythmically powerful music with its significant scoring for percussion needed little modification. The ballet saw three performances, none of which, however, were successful. The String Sextet (1920–24) harbours a well-concealed stylistic break: the first movement is atonal, is consequently through-composed and dramatically telling, and unambiguously approaches the Expressionism of the Second Viennese School. However, the other three movements, composed in Prague, already belong to the composer's new creative period, best illustrated by the homophonic neo-classical style of the 'Burlesca', with its prominent folk elements. In spite of this, the composition functions as an integral whole, thanks to the distinct motivic cell C–G–D♭ from the first movement, which is restated in the intellectually related slow fourth movement. Structurally, this work closely resembles the First String Quartet (1924), which ranks among Schulhoff's most successful compositions. Further key works from this period are the First Symphony (1924–5), whose première was conducted by Kleiber in Berlin in 1928, the Double Concerto for flute and piano (1927), which the composer introduced in Prague that same year with the French flautist René Le Roy, and the Concerto for String Quartet and Wind (1930), which at its première in Prague in 1932 caused surprise with its terse, new constructivistic beauty and ideas of concentricity. Despite an exacting struggle to earn a living, frequent breaks and numerous excursions abroad, he also completed in 1929 the musical tragicomedy Plameny ('Flames') on the subject of Don Juan. At the première in Brno in 1932 the work failed decisively, and for many years was dropped from the repertory. Only at a Leipzig performance in 1995, thanks largely to the efforts of Udo Zimmermann, was the vitality of this spacious operatic work demonstrated. The principal characters are Don Juan and La morte, but also there appear familiar figures from Mozart's Don Giovanni, a lively mob from commedia dell'arte and ghost-like women, commenting upon the action as in ancient tragedy. The music incorporates diverse styles and genres, from Gregorian chant, through reminiscences of Mozart, passionately fiery music of Wagner, to strident jazz. The dramaturgical concept of the opera with its emphasis on sensual theatricality suggests grand opéra and belongs to the French rather than German operatic tradition. Its polystylistic content is stimulating, and serves to create dramatic tension, which is otherwise lacking in the libretto.

In 1932–3 Schulhoff's creative style and aesthetic underwent a fundamental change, which had ideological roots. The straightforward, transparent and almost neoclassical Second Symphony (1932), the third movement of which uses jazz for the last time (a foxtrot with blues), clearly illustrates that the composer now set out to make music more broadly communicative and intelligible; as yet, here there was no political connection. Simultaneously, however, he was already working with great absorption upon an extensive cantata to the text of the communist manifesto of Marx and Engels. Under the title Das Manifest the cantata was completed on 28 September 1932. After visiting the Soviet Union in 1933 with a Czechoslovak delegation, he became an unambiguous disciple of the Stalinist doctrine of socialist realism, to which he subordinated all further creative activity. Although a mistaken critical reflex, his decision was prompted by his personal experiences of German fascism (even before Hitler came to power he was spurned in Germany for his Jewish origins), with the economic depression in which he had suffered and with war, whose horrors he had retained in living memory. Little wonder then that, like many other artists and intellectuals, he looked for a solution in the Soviet model of socialism. During the following years he composed large programme symphonies, such as the Third (1935), inspired by the hunger riots in eastern Czechoslovakia, the Fourth (1936–7), dedicated to the fighters in the Spainish Civil War, and the Sixth ('Symphony of Freedom', 1940–41), which he dedicated to the Red Army. In prison he composed the programme symphonies the Seventh ('Eroica', 1941), completed only in sketch form, and the Eighth (1942), of which the fourth movement remained unfinished. The common trait of all these large symphonies is the essential simplification of expressive means, evident in the lucid thematic-motivic working; the frequent employment of ostinati and march rhythms; the manipulation of material over large tracts; the classical, at times austere orchestration; and in structural terms the model of the Beethoven symphony, particularly in the angry scherzi and final movements. Schulhoff did not lose his own personality or invention in these works, but his struggle to comply with the insensitive dogma of socialist realism is evident; ultimately, the composer's creative élan was inhibited.

During the 1930s Schulhoff's living conditions continued to deteriorate. His sporadic earnings were restricted to appearances on radio, though in the years 1933–5 he procured extra income as a pianist in the jazz orchestra of Jaroslav Ježek in the avant-garde Free Theatre, and from 1935 he was employed as a radio pianist in Ostrava. After the occupation of Czechoslovakia in 1939 he was left without any means of living. He attempted to emigrate first to the West, and then to the Soviet Union. However, before he managed to arrange all the formalities he was arrested and imprisoned in Prague in June 1941 following the invasion of the Soviet Union. He was later deported to the concentration camp in Wülzburg, Bavaria, where after eight months he fell victim to laryngeal and pulmonary tuberculosis. He is buried in Weissenburg.

WORKS
(selective list)

STAGE

Die Mitschuldigen (ob, after J.W. von Goethe), 1918–20, unfinished
Ogelala (ballet mysterium, K.J. Beneš, after Abbé Brasseur de Bourbourg), 1922–4, Dessau, 21 Nov 1925
Die Mondsüchtige (La somnambule) (dance grotesque), 1925, Oxford, 24 July 1931
Le bourgeois gentilhomme (incid music, Molière), 1926
Plameny [Flames] (op, 2, Beneš), 1927–9, Brno, 27 Jan 1932

ORCHESTRAL AND VOCAL-ORCHESTRAL

Syms: Landschaften (5 poems, after J.T. Kuhlemann), op.26, Mez, orch, 1918–19; Menschheit (5 poems, after T. Däubler), op.28, A, orch, 1919; no.1, 1924–5; no.2, 1932; no.3, 1935; no.4, 1936–7; no.5, 1938; no.6 'Symfonie svobody' [Sym. of Freedom], 1940–41; no.7 'Eroica', 1941 [pf sketch]; no.8, 1942, unfinished
Other: 3 kusy [3 pieces], op.6, str, 1910; 4 Lieder (H. Steiger: Die Garbe), op.2, S, orch, 1911; Lustige Ouvertüre, op.8, 1913; Pf Conc., op.11, 1913–14; Serenade, op.18, 1914; 32 Variationen über ein achssakliges eigenes Thema, op.33, 1919; Suite, op.37, chbr orch, 1921; Pf Conc. [no.2], pf, chbr orch, 1923; Double Conc., fl, pf, str, 2 hn, 1927; Slavnostní předehra [Festival Prelude], 1929; Conc., str qt, wind, 1930; H.M.S. Royal Oak (jazz orat, O. Rombach), spkr, jazz singer (T), mixed chorus, jazz orch, 1930; Das Manifest (cant., K. Marx), 4vv, double mixed chorus, children's chorus, wind orch, 1932

OTHER INSTRUMENTAL

Chbr: Melodie, vn, pf, 1903; Variationen, op.7, vn, vc, pf, 1910; Suite, op.1, vn, pf, 1911; Sonata, op.7 [sic], vn, pf, 1913; Divertimento, op.14, str qt, 1914; Sonata, op.17, vc, pf, 1914; Str Qt, G, op.25, 1918; Sextet, 2 vn, 2 va, 2 vc, 1920–24; 5 Stücke, str qt, 1923; Str Qt no.1, 1924; Concertino, fl, va, db, 1925; Duo, vn, vc, 1925; Str Qt no.2, 1925; Divertissement, ob, cl, bn, 1927; Sonata, fl, pf, 1927; Sonata, vn, pf, 1927; Hot-Sonate, a sax, pf, 1930
Pf: Sonata, op.5, 1912; 5 Vortragsstücke, op.3, 1912; 4 Bilder, op.6 [sic], 1913; 9 kleine Reigen, op.13, 1913; Variationen über ein eigenes Thema, op.10, 1913; 5 Impressionen, op.12, 1914; 10 Variationen über 'Ah, vous dirai-je, Maman' und Fuge, op.16, 1914; 3 Präludien und 3 Fugen, op.19, 1915; 5 Grotesken, op.21, 1917; 5 Burlesken, op.23, 1918; Sonata, op.22, 1918; 3 Walzer, op.24, 1918; 5 Arabesken, op.29, 1919; 5 Humoresken, op.27, 1919; 10 Klavierstücke, op.30, 1919 [with lithographs by O. Griebel entitled Zehn Themen, 1920]; 5 Pittoresken, op.31, 1919; Ironies, 6 pieces, op.34, pf duet, 1920; Musik für Klavier in 4 Teilen, op.35, 1920; 11 Inventionen, 1921; Partita, 1922; Rag-music, op.41, 1922; Sonata no.1, 1924; Suite no.2, 1924; Ostinato, 1925; 5 études de jazz, 1926; Sonata no.2, 1926; Suite no.3, pf LH, 1926; Esquisses de jazz, 1927; Sonata no.3, 1927; Hot-music, 10 Studies in Syncopation, 1928; Suite dansante en jazz, 1931; popular compositions for jazz pf duet
Other solo: Bassnachtigall, 3 recital pieces, dbn, 1922; Sonate, vn, 1927

OTHER VOCAL

1v with ens: 3 Stimmungsbilder (H. Steiger), op.12, S, vn, pf, 1913; Die Wolkenpumpe (H. Arp), op.40, Bar, 4 wind insts, perc, 1922; Ukolébavka [Lullaby] (J. Hořejší), Mez, fl, va, vc, 1936; Žebrák [The Beggar] (melodrama, after J. Hora), nar, fl, va, vc, 1936
1v with pf: Zigeunerlieder (A. Heyduk), op.12, S, pf, 1910–11; 5 Lieder (C. Fleischler, O.J. Bierbaum, M. Dauthendey, H. Hesse, E.A. Herrmann), op.13, 1911; 3 Lieder (Fleischler, D. Falckenberg, F. Alder), op.14, S, pf, 1911; 3 Lieder (Das Lied vom Kinde), op.18 [sic], S, pf, 1911; Lieder (Steiger: Die Garbe), op.9, Bar, pf, 1913; 3 písně (O. Wilde), op.15, A, pf, 1915; 5 Lieder (C. Morgenstern), op.20, Bar, pf, 1915, unfinished; 5 Gesänge (Expressionen), op.32, 1v, pf, 1919; '1917' (P. Bezruč), song cycle, Bar, pf, 1933; Národní písně a tance z Těšínska [Folksongs and Dances from the Těšínsko Region], Mez, pf, 1936
Other solo: Sonata erotica, 1919; Sym. germanica, 1v, inst acc., 1919

Principal publishers: Chester, Jatho, La sirène musicale, Panton, Ries und Erler, Schott, Státní hudební vydavatelství, Supraphon, Universal

WRITINGS

'Felix Petyrek', Der Auftakt, iii (1923), 242–4
'Arnold Schönberg (1874–1924)', Národní a Stavovské divadlo (26 Sept 1924, 31 Oct 1924)

'Der mondäne Tanz', Der Auftakt, iv (1924), 73–7
'Erwin Schulhoff', Neue Musik-Zeitung, xlv (1924), 196–7 [incl. analysis of Sextet]
'Der neue Klavierstil', Der Auftakt, iv (1924), 141–7
'Paraphrase über Herrn Strawinsky', ibid., 281–3
'Igor Strawinsky', Der Feurreiter: Blätter für Dichtung und Kritik, iii/1 (1924), 37-8
'Saxophon und Jazzband', Der Auftakt, v (1925), 179–83
'Leoš Janáček: Betrachtungen anlässlich seines 70. Geburtstages', Musikblätter des Anbruch, vii (1925), 237–9
'Václav Talich', Musikblätter des Anbruch, vii (1925), 254–6
'Erwin Schulhoff', Neue Musik-Zeitung, xlvii (1926), 428–9 [incl. analysis of Concertino]
'Wie spielt man auf dem Vierteltonklavier?', Der Auftakt, vi (1926), 106–9
'Einige Bemerkungen über meine 1. Symphonie', Pult und Taktstock, v (1928), 57 only
'Erich Kleiber', Der Auftakt, viii (1928), 218–19
'Má opera Plameny', Česká hudba, xxxv (1931–2), 202ff
A. Alschwang: 'Gespräch mit Erwin Schulhoff', Das internationale Theater, iii/5–6 (Moscow, 1934)
'Ervín Schulhoff k anketě o československé hudbě' [E. Schulhoff for a public inquiry into Czechoslovak music], Rytmus, iii (1937–8), 117 only

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Očadlík: 'Erwin Schulhoff zápasí s ideami' [Schulhoff wrestles with ideas], Klíč, ii (1931–2), 113–17
I. Forbáth: Ervín Schulhoff (Prague, 1946)
V. Stará, ed.: Ervín Schulhoff (Prague, 1958)
V. Gregor: 'Skladatelská tvorba Ervína Schulhoffa v době jeho ostravského působení (1935–8)' [The compositional work of Schulhoff during the period of his activity in Ostrava], Slezský sborník, lx (1962), 397–403
I. Vojtěch, ed.: 'Arnold Schoenberg, Anton Webern, Alban Berg: unbekannte Briefe an Erwin Schulhoff', Miscellanea musicologica, xviii (Prague, 1965), 31–83
J. Ludvová: 'Ervín Schulhoff, pianista', HV, x (1973), 225–32 [with Ger. summary]
J. Bek: 'Ervín Schulhoff a avantgarda' [Schulhoff and the avant-garde], Česká hudba světu, svět české hudbě (Prague, 1974), 247–68
N. Simakova: 'Ervín Schulhoff a jeho symfonie' [Schulhoff and his symphonies], ibid, 237–46
J. Doubravová: 'Z rané tvorby Ervína Schulhoffa' [From the early works of Schulhoff], HRo, xxix (1976), 281–5
J. Bek: 'Schulhoffův projekt revoluční hudby' [Schulhoff's project to revolutionize music], HRo, xxx (1977), 504–8
V. Musil: 'Ervín Schulhoff a jeho Komunistický manifest' [Schulhoff and his communist manifesto], HRo, xxx (1977), 512–17
J. Bek: 'Der Dresdner Aufenthalt Erwin Schulhoffs', BMw, xxiv (1982), 112–22
O. Pukl: Konstanty, dominanty a varianty Schulhoffova skladebného stylu [Constants, dominants and variants in Schulhoff's compositional style] (Prague, 1986)
F. Streller: 'Erwin Schulhoffs Beziehung zu Berlin', Studien zur Berliner Musikgeschichte: vom 18. Jahrhundert bis zur Gegenwart (Berlin, 1989), 313–20
J. Bek: 'Erwin Schulhoff', Musik in Theresienstadt (Berlin, 1991), 44–59
T. Widmaier: 'Dadaist mit Wolkenpumpe: zur Wiederentdeckung von Erwin Schulhoff', NZM, Jg.152, no.11 (1991), 5–11
J. Bek: 'Schulhoffovy balety' [Schulhoff's ballets], Taneční listy, xxx (1992), nos.7–8, p.10; no.9, p.14
J. Bek: 'Schulhoffs Wolkenpumpe: Dada in Musik', Der jüdische Beitrag zur Musikgeschichte Böhmens und Mährens: Regensburg 1992, 92–8
J. Bek: '"Alban Berg nennt sich mein neuer Freund": Erwin Schulhoff als "musikalischer Futurist" in Dresden', ÖMz, xlvii (1993), 469–76
Erwin Schulhoff: Cologne 1992
K. Bösch and I. Vojtěch, ed.: 'Der Briefwechsel zwischen Erwin Schulhoff und Alban Berg', Schweizer Jahrbuch für Musikwissenschaft, nos.13–14 (1993–4), 27–78
J. Bek: '"Meine Zähne klappern im Shimmytakt": der Komponist Erwin Schulhoff', Fonoforum, no.6 (1994), 34–8
J. Bek: Erwin Schulhoff: Leben und Werk (Hamburg, 1994)
T. Widmaier: 'Colonel Schulhoff, Musikdada: Unsinn als Ausdruck von Lebendigkeit', NZM, Jg.155, no.3 (1994), 15–21
'Zum Einschlafen gibt's genügend Musiken': Düsseldorf 1994
M. Lüdke: 'Lebenssaft und Lebensnerv: Jazz im Werk Erwin Schulhoffs – zwischen Provokation und Protest', Musik und Bildung, xxviii (1996), 37–41

JOSEF BEK

Schuller, Gunther (Alexander) (b New York, 22 Nov 1925). American composer, conductor, educator, writer, publisher and record producer. He was born into a musical family that had emigrated to America from Germany; his father played in the violin section of the New York PO for 42 years. In 1937 Schuller enrolled in the St Thomas Church Choir School in New York where his general musical education was supervised by Tertius Noble. By the time he finished high school, he was already a horn player of professional calibre. At the age of 16 he performed in the American première broadcast of Shostakovich's Symphony no.7, the 'Leningrad', conducted by Toscanini; his first book, Horn Technique (London and New York, 1962, 2/1992) has remained a standard reference.

After a season touring in the American Ballet Theatre orchestra under the direction of Antal Dorati, Schuller was appointed to the position of principal horn in the Cincinnati SO (from 1943). The orchestra's music director, Eugene Goossens, became one of his mentors; in 1945 Goossens conducted the première of Schuller's first major composition, the First Horn Concerto, with the composer as soloist. Schuller met Schoenberg's colleagues Rudolf Kolisch and Edward Steuermann, both of whom became his friends and mentors, through his wife, Marjorie Black, a singer and pianist. Schoenberg's theories, life and work were particularly influential to Schuller throughout his subsequent career.

From 1945 to 1949 Schuller played in the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, spending nine seasons as principal and working with many prominent conductors. During this period, he pursued his interest in jazz, sparked by an Ellington concert he had heard in Cincinnati. He listened to recordings obsessively and comprehensively, notating path-breaking solos; as a player, he participated in recordings by Miles Davis, Gil Evans, Lalo Schifrin and others; he also wrote compositions and arrangements for the Modern Jazz Quartet. These activities were influential to his concert music, and at a lecture in 1957 he coined the term 'third stream music' to describe 'a new genre of music located about halfway between jazz and classical music'. Although only a fraction of his work explores this genre, albeit a fraction that includes some of his most popular works (Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee, 1959; The Visitation, 1966), Schuller's study of jazz eventually led to the book, Early Jazz: its Roots and Development (London and New York, 1968), one of the first books to treat jazz with analytical sophistication; its long-promised sequel, The Swing Era (New York and Oxford, 1989), had to wait 20 years for publication.

In 1959, Schuller retired from the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra in order to concentrate on composing. His various interests, however, continued to intersect. Before giving up horn-playing, he had begun conducting new works by such composers as Elliott Carter and Milton Babbitt. He also began guest conducting orchestras in America, Europe and Australia, surveying the standard repertory and exploring a wide range of new and unusual literature; he became principal conductor of the Spokane SO in 1985 and forged a relationship with Boston's Pro Arte Chamber Orchestra that spanned two decades. Every programme was designed to include something few had heard before, or present a particularly revealing and/or unexpected juxtaposition.

Schuller's educational activities began even before his distinguished tenures with the Berkshire (now Tanglewood) Music Center (1963–84) and his presidency of the New England Conservatory (1967–77). He taught at the Manhattan School of Music (1950–63) and at Yale University (1964–7), and presented over 200 radio programmes on contemporary music and jazz. His generosity to other musicians and to exploratory music-making won him respect and lasting affection, but his outspokenness on controversial issues also created fierce opposition. A speech given at Tanglewood in 1979 criticizing absentee music directors, the workmanlike mentality of players and the meddling of boards and administration in artistic matters cost him many commissions and engagements. After resigning from his Tanglewood post in 1984, he established a new festival at Sandpoint, Idaho.

In 1975, disheartened by the state of the music business, Schuller launched the presses Margun Music and GunMar, and the GM Recordings label. He has published everything from early music to Ellington transcriptions to avant-garde works, and has promoted recordings by young instrumentalists and old masters alike. Other projects have included preparing an accurate set of parts for Mahler's Ninth Symphony, arranging the première of Babbitt's Transfigured Notes (a work the Philadelphia Orchestra declared 'unplayable') with Boston freelance musicians, and fulfilling a lifetime dream by conducting Parsifal in Australia. His orchestrations and arrangements range from Scott Joplin's Treemonisha to reconstructions of André Kostelanetz's arrangements of show tunes. In 1997 he published The Compleat Conductor, a survey of the history, philosophy and art of conducting, supported by analyses of eight works in the standard repertory and ruthless commentary on celebrity conductors. Concurrently, he issued a CD of his own interpretations of two of the works discussed in the book: Beethoven's Fifth and Brahms's First symphonies.

Schuller has perhaps been more influential as a mentor, advocate and activist than as a composer. He has, nonetheless, written prolifically and significantly in virtually every musical genre. His more than 20 concertos, for example, include a series for neglected instruments and ensembles (bassoon, double bassoon, saxophone, double bass, wind quintet, brass quintet). All of his music rests on a sophisticated mastery of technique, and manifests a practical experience of notation and performance unrivalled among American composers of his generation. His sonorities are precise and imaginative and often build towards big, organic gestures. A profoundly assimilative composer, he has juxtaposed seemingly irreconcilable forces and influences to finally generate unexpected harmony. In every dimension, he has insisted that music be meaningful and engage humanity's full range of experiences and aspirations. This objective is strikingly exemplified in Of Reminiscences and Reflections, which won the Pulitzer Prize in 1994. An angry and elegiac work, which broke a year of compositional silence following the death of his wife, it conceals within its textures references to music he and his wife experienced together; it is music about the meaning of music.

WORKS

DRAMATIC

Stage: Variants (ballet, G. Balanchine), jazz qt, orch, 1960, New York, 4 Jan 1961; The Visitation (Die Heimsuchung) (op, 3, Schuller, after F. Kafka: Der Prozess), 1966, Hamburg, 12 Oct 1966; The Fisherman and his Wife (children's op, 13 scenes, J. Updike, after J.L. and W. Grimm), 1970, Boston, 7 May 1970

Other: Automation (film score), 1962; Journey to the Stars (film score), 1962; Yesterday in Fact (film score), 1963; Teardrop (TV ballet), 1966; The Five Senses (TV ballet), 1967; Face-Down (TV score), 1996

ORCHESTRAL

With solo inst or ens: Hn Conc. no.1, 1942–4; Vc Conc., 1945, rev. 1984; Recit and Rondo, vn, orch, 1954 [orch or chbr work]; Concertino, jazz qt, orch, 1959 [Passacaglia arr. jazz qt, band; Progression in Tempo pubd separately]; Capriccio, tuba, orch, 1960; Contrasts, wind qnt, orch, 1961; Journey into Jazz (Schuller, N. Hentoff), nar, jazz qnt, orch, 1962; Movts, fl, str, 1962; Pf Conc. [no.1], 1962; Threnos, ob, orch, 1963; Diptych, brass qnt, band, 1964 [arr. brass qnt, orch, 1967]; Colloquy, 2 pf, orch, 1968; Db Conc., 1968; Museum Piece, Renaissance insts, orch, 1970; Hn Conc. no.2, 1975–6; Vn Conc., 1976; Dbn Conc., 1978; Conc., tpt, chbr orch, 1979; Eine kleine Posaunenmusik, trbn, wind, 1980; Pf Conc. [no.2], 1981; Conc., a sax, orch, 1983; Concerto festivo, brass qnt, orch, 1984; Concerto quarternio, fl, ob, tpt, vn, 5 chbr ens, 1984; Bn Conc. 'Eine kleine Fagottmusik', 1985; Va Conc., 1985; Conc., fl + pic, orch, 1988; Conc., str qt, orch, 1988; Pf Conc., 2 pf 3 hands, chbr orch, 1990; Song and Dance, vn, band, 1990; Vn Conc. [no.2], 1991; Org Conc., 1993

Other orch: Suite, chbr orch, 1945; Verige d'eros, 1945; Sym. Study, 1947–8, rev. 1964; Sym. (The Traitor), brass, perc, 1950; Dramatic Ov., 1951; Contours, chbr orch, 1955–8; Sym. Tribute to Duke Ellington, 1955; Little Fantasy, 1957; Spectra, 1958; 7 Studies on Themes of Paul Klee, 1959; Composition in 3 Pts, 1963; Meditation, band, 1963; American Triptych 'A Study in Textures', 1964–5; 5 Bagatelles, 1964; Conc. for Orch [no.1] 'Gala Music', 1965–6; Sym., 1965; 5 Etudes, 1966; Study in Textures, band, 1967; Triplum I, 1967; Fanfare for St Louis, 1968; Consequents, 1969; Shapes and Designs, 1969; Suite, 1970 [from The Visitation]; Conc. da camera, chbr orch, 1971; Capriccio stravagante, 1972 [after C. Farina]; 3 Nocturnes, 1973; 4 Soundscapes (Hudson Valley Reminiscences), 1975; Triplum II, 1975; Conc. for Orch no.2, 1976; In Praise of Winds, wind, 1981; Jubilee Music, 1984; Farbenspiel (Conc. for Orch no.3), 1985; Chbr Sym., 1989; Fanfare pour Wolf Trap, brass, perc, 1989; On Winged Flight, divertimento, band, 3 vc, 1989; And They All Played Ragtime, 1992; Festive Music, band, 1992; Of Reminiscences and Reflections, 1993; Ritmica-Melodia-Armonica, 1993; The Past is in the Present, 1994; An Arc Ascending, 1996; Blue Dawn into White Heat, band, 1996

VOCAL

Blumenstrauss (Schuller), S, pf, 1941; O Lamb of God, anthem, SATB, opt. org, 1941; O Spirit of the Living God, anthem, SATB, opt. org, 1942; 6 Early Songs (Li-Bai [Li Tai-po]), lyric S, pf, 1944–5, orchd, 1973; Schreie der Raben (Klabund), S, pf, 1946; Meditations (G. Stein), S, pf, 1960; 6 Renaissance Lyrics (W. Shakespeare, J. de la Cruz, W. von der Vogelweide, F. Petrarch, P. de Ronsard, Michelangelo), T, fl, ob, str trio, db, pf, 1962; 5 Shakespearean Songs, Bar, orch, 1964; Sacred Cant. (Ps xcviii), SATB, chbr orch, 1966; The Power Within us (orat, H. Long), nar, Bar, chorus, orch, 1971; Poems of Time and Eternity (E. Dickinson), chorus, 9 insts, 1972; Deaï (Encounters), 8vv, 3 orch, 1978; Music for a Celebration, SATB, audience, orch, 1980; Thou Art the Son of God (Bible: Matthew xiv.22–3), SATBarB, fl, eng hn, cl, hn, tpt, perc, vn, vc, db, 1987; Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, SATB, perf. 1994; Mondrian's Vision, SATB, fl, ob, cl, a sax, bn, hn, tpt, 3 perc, pf, str, 1994

JAZZ ENSEMBLE

Jumpin' in the Future, fl, ob, 3 sax, 2 hn, tpt, trbn, tuba, pf, db, drums, 1948; Twelve by Eleven, 1955; Transformation, 1956; Headin' Out, Movin' In, 1v, t sax, ens, 1994; Lament for M, fl, t sax, hp, str, drums, 1994; Rush Hour on 23rd Street, 1v, cl, t sax, eng hn, bn, ens, 1994; numerous arrs., transcrs. and edns of works by Bach, E. Blake, Ellington, J. Europe, Gesualdo, Gottschalk, L. Gruenberg, Ives, J.P. Johnson, Joplin, Lamb, Mingus, Monteverdi, Ockeghem, Weill and others

CHAMBER AND SOLO INSTRUMENTAL

8–16 insts: Abstraction, a sax, str qt, 2 db, gui, perc, 1955; Conversations, jazz qt, str qt, 1959; Lines and Contrasts, 16 hns, 1960; Variants on a Theme of John Lewis (Django), 11 insts, 1960; Variants on a Theme of Thelonious Monk (Criss-Cross), 13 insts, 1960; Double Qnt, wind qnt, brass qnt, 1961; Fanfare, 4 tpt, 4 trbn, 1962; Music from Yesterday in Fact, fl, hn, tpt, a sax, b cl, vn, vc, db, pf, drums, 1963; 3 invenzione, 5 chbr ens, 1972; Octet, cl, bn, hn, str qt, db, 1979; Fanfare, 6–12 tpts, 1986; The Sandpoint Rag, wind qnt, tpt, trbn, tuba, drums, pf, str, 1986 [arr. brass qnt/solo pf]; Chimeric Images, fl, cl, bn, hn, tpt, vn, va, vc, db, hp, pf, 1987–8; The Trial, fl, ob, cl, tpt, trbn, drums, pf, hp, str qt, db, 1989; Hommage à Rayechka, 8/16/24/32/40 vc, 1990

3–6 insts: Sonata, cl, hn, pf, 1941, rev. 1983; Blues, brass qt, db, drums, 1945; Suite, wind qnt, 1945; Fantasia concertante no.1, 3 ob, pf, 1947; Fantasia concertante no.2, 3 trbn, pf, 1947; Qt, 4 db, 1947; Perpetuum mobile, 4 muted hn, bn/tuba, 1948; Trio, ob, hn, va, 1948; 5 Pieces, 5 hn, 1952; Wind Qnt, 1952; Adagio (Movts), fl, str trio, 1953; Str Qt no.1, 1957; Symbiosis, vn, pf, perc, opt. dancer, 1957; Fantasy Qt, 4 vc, 1958; Curtain Raiser, fl, cl, hn, pf, 1960; Lifelines, fl, gui, perc, 1960; Music, brass qnt, 1961; Densities no.1, cl, hp, vib, db, 1962; Little Brass Music, tpt, hn, trbn, tuba, 1962; Night Music, b cl, gui, 2 db, drums, 1962; Str Qt no.2, 1966; Aphorisms, fl, str trio, 1967; 5 Moods, 4 tubas, 1973; Sonata serenata, cl, pf trio, 1978; On Light Wings, pf qt, 1984; Pf Trio, 1984; Sextet, bn, pf qnt, 1986; Str Qt no.3, 1986; Bouquet for Collage, fl, cl, pf trio, perc, 1988; 5 Impromptus, eng hn, str qt, 1989; A Trio Setting, vn, cl, pf, 1990; Impromptus and Cadenzas, ob, cl, bn, hn, vn, vc, 1990; Music for Young People, fl, pf trio, 1991; Paradigm Exchanges, fl, cl, pf trio, 1991; Brass Qnt no.2, 1993; Sextet, wind qnt, pf left hand, 1994

1–2 insts: 3 hommages, 1/2 hn, pf, 1942–6; Duo Sonata, cl, b cl, 1948–9; Sonata, ob, pf, 1948–51; Fantasy, vc, 1951; Recit and Rondo, vn, pf, 1953; Fantasy, hp, 1959; Composition, carillon, 1962 [arr. hpd/org, glock, vib, mar]; Duets, 2 hn, 1962; Studies, hn, 1962; Episodes, cl, 1964; Triptych, org, 1976; Sym., org, 1981; Duologue, vn, pf, 1983; Orgelwalzer, 1986; Sonata, hn, pf, 1988; Phantasmata, vn, mar, 1989; Marimbology, mar, 1993; Suite, gui, 1993; Sonata-Fantasia, pf, 1993

MSS in US-NHoh

Principal publishers: Associated, Margun, MJQ, Universal

WRITINGS

Horn Technique (London and New York, 1962, 2/1992)

Early Jazz: its Roots and Development (London and New York, 1968)

Musings: the Musical Worlds of Gunther Schuller (New York and Oxford, 1986) [collection of essays]

'The Influence of Jazz on the History and Development of Concert Music', The Instrumentalist, xliii/11 (1988–9), 16–20, 89–91

The Swing Era: the Development of Jazz 1930–1945 (New York and Oxford, 1989)

The Compleat Conductor (New York, 1997)

Numerous essays, speeches, liner and programme notes

BIBLIOGRAPHY

CC (C.G. Scotto); GroveA (A. Clarkson) [incl. further bibliography]; VintonD (E. London)

F. Battisti: 'Gunther Schuller and his Many Worlds of Music', The Instrumentalist, xxxii/11 (1977–8), 39–44 [interview]

J.E. Hasse: 'An Interview with Gunther Schuller', Annual Review of Jazz Studies, i (1982), 39–58; repr. in J.E. Hasse: Ragtime: its History, Composers and Music (New York, 1985), 194–9

J. Tassel: 'Gunther Schuller: Composer, Conductor and Musical Conscience', Ovation, vi/10 (1985–6), 23–6

J.A. Hoffmann and J.G. Maneri: 'A Conversation with Gunther Schuller', PNM, xxiv/2 (1986), 242–9

N. Carnovale: Gunther Schuller: a Bio-Bibliography (Westport, CT, 1987) [incl. interview, discography]

C.J. Oja: 'Composer as Publisher: an Interview with Gunther Schuller', ISAM Newsletter, xvii/2 (1988), 9–10

G. Santaro: 'Gunther Schuller's Memory Palace', Dancing in Your Head: Jazz, Blues, Rock and Beyond (New York, 1994), 185–92

M. Babbitt: 'Gunther Schuller', Musical America: International Directory of the Performing Arts (1995), 20–26

I. Carr: 'Gunther Schuller', Jazz: the Rough Guide (London, 1995), 567–8

RICHARD DYER (text), NORBERT CARNOVALE (work-list, bibliography)

Schuloper (Ger.: 'school opera'). A German opera written for didactic use in schools; its suitability for performance by children is a secondary consideration. Early examples, which belong more strictly to the category of 'school drama', derived from 15th-century humanism and concentrated on religious training and the teaching of Latin; music was confined to choruses and short interludes. Although Singspiele were written for children during the 18th and 19th centuries, the Schuloper belongs to the 20th century. Interest in the idea was reawakened in the late 1920s through the influential musical Jugendbewegung and through the concern for amateur music shown by leading contemporary composers. The pedagogic content concentrated on the teaching of music, drama and a community spirit. The most important examples are Weill's Der Jasager (1930), which also encouraged political thinking, and Hindemith's Wir bauen eine Stadt (1930), the latter well suited to performance by children in junior and middle schools.

See also GEBRAUCHSMUSIK.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 ('Schuldrama'; K.-G. Hartmann and J. Bužga); RiemannL12

K. Weill: Ausgewählte Schriften (Frankfurt, 1975), 61ff

IAN KEMP

Schultheiss, Benedict (b Nuremberg, 20 Sept 1653; d Nuremberg, 1 March 1693). German composer and organist. He spent his whole life at Nuremberg. Like his contemporary Pachelbel, he was taught by Heinrich Schwemmer and G.C. Wecker; he also probably studied with Johann Dretzel. By the age of 17 he was playing the organ at services at the Augustinian church. He was organist from 1673 at St Walburg auf der Veste, from 1686 at the Frauenkirche and from 1687 until his death at the Egidienkirche.

The suites in his two volumes called Muth- und Geist-ermunternde Clavierlust (1679–80) follow the traditions of the Nuremberg school but also foreshadow at a modest technical level certain features typical of the later development of the keyboard suite. Schultheiss was the first German composer to adopt what later became the stereotyped order allemande–courante–sarabande–gigue, to which he added a prelude in the four suites of the 1679 set. He asked that 'the allemandes and sarabandes be played rather slow, and courantes and gigues rather faster and more freshly', so that by the change of tempo the suites might 'please honest feelings'. A variation-like connection between the movements of a suite is sometimes suggested but is not yet a conscious structural device. Schultheiss wrote his suites for a bourgeois circle of amateurs and wished to fill a gap with them 'because so far few such keyboard pieces have been published'. Seiffert's low opinion of them is based on wrong criteria, since he compared them with more ambitious virtuoso works written for professional musicians and aristocratic patrons. The suites are Schultheiss's only known secular music. After he joined, probably about 1680, the group of intellectuals and artists known as the Pegnesische Blumenorden, he was mainly interested in sacred songs, and he contributed 40 melodies with continuo to collections brought out by this circle. These continuo songs are aria-like and the vocal lines move mostly in quavers determined by the rhythm of the words, with occasional semiquaver figuration and sequences. Schultheiss also published in 1682 'orchestral' sacred songs with introductory sinfonias.

WORKS

Muth- und Geist-ermunternde Clavierlust (Nuremberg, 1679); 2 sarabands, gigue, ed. K. Herrmann, Altnürnberger Klavierbüchlein (Mainz, n.d.); 1 suite ed. H. Fischer and F. Oberdörffer, Deutsche Klaviermusik des 17. and 18. Jahrhunderts, ii (Berlin, 1935–6, 2/1960)

Muth- und Geist-ermunternde Clavierlust, ander Theil (Nuremberg, 1680)

Hertz-Brüderlicher Glücks-Zuruff (Nuremberg, 1679), lost, authenticity doubtful

Nun der Kampf ist ausgekämpfet; Wenn Paulus dort brennt von der Gotteslieb: 1v, 1–4 str, bc, in A. Myhldorfer: Neumännischer loeblicher Abzug und lieblicher Einzug (Nuremberg, 1682)

40 sacred lieder, 1v, bc, in S. von Birken: Heiliger Sonntags-Handel und Kirch-Wandel (Nuremberg, 1681), H. Müller: Der geistlichen Erquick-Stunden ... poetischer Andacht-Klang (Nuremberg, 2/1691), W.C. Dessler: Gottgeheiligter Christen nützlich-ergetzende Seelen-Lust (Nuremberg, 1692)

9 melodies (1 with bc), ed. in J. Zahn: Die Melodien der deutschen evangelischen Kirchenlieder (Gütersloh, 1889–93/R)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

WaltherML

M. Seiffert: Geschichte der Klaviermusik (Leipzig, 1899/R), 194ff

E. von Rumohr: Der Nürnbergische Tasteninstrumentalstil im 17. Jahrhundert (diss., U. of Münster, 1939), 49–51, 61

F.W. Riedel: Quellenkundliche Beiträge zur Geschichte der Musik für Tasteninstrumente in der zweiten Hälfte des 17. Jahrhunderts (vornehmlich in Deutschland) (Kassel, 1960, 2/1990), 60-61, 121, 127, 162

R.A. Hudson: 'Benedict Schultheiss: Muth- und Geist-ermuntrender Clavier-Lust 1679–1680', CEKM (Neuhausen-Stuttgart, 1993)

LINI HÜBSCH-PFLEGER

Schultheiss, Michael. See PRAETORIUS, MICHAEL.

Schulthesius, Johann Paul (b Fechheim, nr Neustadt, 14 Sept 1748; d Livorno, 18 April 1816). German composer and keyboard player. He received his earliest training in music from his father. After studying at the Gymnasium in Coburg (*c*1764–70) he entered Erlangen University where he completed his theological studies; while in Erlangen he also studied music with the organist and composer J.B. Kehl, who acquainted him with the keyboard sonatas of C.P.E. Bach. In 1773 he accepted the pastorship of the Dutch and German businessmen's congregation in Livorno, where he continued his musical studies with Raniero Checchi and soon became known as an expert keyboard player and fashionable composer. He played a private recital of his own works in 1780 (or 1782) before Grand Duke Leopold of Tuscany and the Duchess of Parma, who turned pages for him; at the end of the performance he was presented with a gold repeater watch. In 1807 he was elected permanent secretary of the fine arts division of the Società Italiana di Scienze, Lettere ed Arti.

The keyboard figures prominently in Schulthesius's published works, which are chiefly 'characteristic' sets of variations. Of the Sept variations op.9 (dedicated to Forkel) a reviewer wrote: 'These [variations] are not so much those that one calls brillant than well considered; they are placed in good sequence, and knowledgeably composed' (AMZ, iii, 1800–01, col.750). The reviewer of his sonatas with violin accompaniment, opp.1–2, noted that the works were melodious and easy to play, with good interplay between the violin and keyboard, and that the final sonata was 'exceptionally charming' (Magazin der Musik, ed. C.F. Cramer, Hamburg, 1783–6/R, i, 80, 170–71; ii, 885). Besides his Memoria sulla musica da chiesa (Livorno, 1810) he wrote short articles for the Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung.

WORKS

| op. | |
|---|---|
| 1 | Tre sonate, hpd/pf, acc. vn obbl (Livorno, *c*1780) |
| 2 | Sonata a solo, hpd/pf (Livorno, *c*1781) |
| 2 | Four Sonatas, hpd/pf, acc. vn obbl (London, *c*1784) |
| 3 | Two Quartets, hpd/pf, acc. vn, va, vc (London, *c*1785) |
| 4 | Otto variazioni facili, hpd/pf, vn, va, vc (Livorno, 1787), lost |
| 5 | Allegretto avec 12 variations, hpd/pf, acc. vn, va, vc (Basle, *c*1792) |
| 6 | Allegretto with 12 Variations, hpd/pf (Basle, n.d.), lost |
| 6 | Andantino grazioso de Mr Pleyel varié, hpd/pf, acc. vn, vc (Basle and Augsburg, n.d.) |
| 8 | Andantino avec 8 variations, hpd/pf (Basle, n.d.) [?pubd as op.7 in Augsburg] |
| 9 | Sept variations, pf (Augsburg, 1797) |
| 10 | Eight Variations on a Russian Air, hpd/pf (Livorno, n.d.), lost |
| 11 | Twelve New Variations on Marlborough's Air, hpd/pf, vn, va, vc (Florence, n.d.), lost |
| 12 | Riconciliazione fra due amici [L. Marchesi, Schulthesius] ... variazioni analoghe al soggetto, pf (Augsburg, 1803) |
| 13 | L'allegria sopra la suddetta riconciliazione, ?pf (?Livorno), lost |
| 14 | Eight Variations on an Original Theme, pf (Livorno, n.d.), lost |
| 15 | Variazioni sentimentali sopra tema originale, pf (Leipzig, *c*1812) |
| 16 | X variations sur un thême original, pf (Leipzig, *c*1812) |
| 17 | IX variazioni sopra tema originale e rondò, pf (Leipzig, 1814) |
| 18 | Sonata caratteristica, pf (Leipzig, *c*1816) |

For unpubd works, see Gervasoni

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB; GerberL

J.N. Forkel: Musikalischer Almanach für Deutschland ... 1784 (Leipzig, 1783/R); 1789 (1788/R)

C. Gervasoni: Nuova teoria di musica (Parma, 1812/R), 68ff [incl. account of his life]

ELLWOOD DERR

Schultz [Schultze]. See PRAETORIUS family.

Schultz, Andrew (Noel) (b Adelaide, 18 Aug 1960). Australian composer and musicologist. He took the BMus at the University of Queensland (1982), where he studied composition with Brumby. The recipient of several composer fellowships, he also studied composition with Crumb and conducting with Richard Wernick at the University of Pennsylvania (Fulbright scholarship, 1983) and composition with Lumsdaine at King's College, London (MMus 1986). In 1987 he was awarded the PhD from the University of Queensland for composition and a thesis on Berio's Sequenze. Schultz was appointed to the staff of the University of Wollongong in 1986, and in 1994 he became associate professor and head of music in the faculty of Creative Arts. In 1997 he was appointed Head of Music at the GSM in London.

Schultz's output is diverse, including music for television and a one-act opera, Black River (1988), which involves the sensitive issues of Aboriginal deaths in police custody, integrating Aboriginal elements into a European operatic framework; it received the Australian National Composers' Opera Award 1988. Important influences have been Stravinsky, Messiaen (e.g. on Spherics) and Berio (e.g. on Ekstasis), but his work also draws on a wide range of other sources from flamenco, pop (rap), the natural environment and environmental sounds to Asian influences and post-serial techniques. Schultz's style is both poignantly expressive and vital. His main concerns include the refining and simplification of the musical language, and the creation of large-scale structures that unfold with variety and contrast within a post-atonal harmonic frame approachable to the listener. He is attracted to structures that may be interpreted in several ways; one example is his adaptation of the literary technique of parallel narrative in Mephisto (1990), in which two musical 'plots' unfold simultaneously.

WORKS
(selective list)

Opera: Black River (1, J. Schultz), 1988, Sydney, Sydney Metropolitan Opera, Nov 1989; Going into Shadows (3, Schultz), 1991–6
Orch: Garotte, 1981, rev. 1982; Solace, 1982; Cloud Burning, 1986; Calling Music (Contrafactum I: Soave sia il vento), 1991; The Devil's Music, 1993; Willow Bend, 1994; Diver's Lament, 1996; Vn Conc., 1996
Chbr: Spherics, fl, trbn/b cl, vc, perc, pf, elec org; Stick Dance, cl, mar, pf, 1987; Barren Grounds, cl, va, vc, pf, 1988; Machine, 4 perc, 1989; Mephisto, fl, cl, vn, va, db, gui, 1990; Respiro/Simple Ground, fl, pf, 1993; Music is a Gentle Hammer, 1993 [composition for improvisers]; Silk Canons, 2 fl, 2 b cl, vib, pf, 1994; Chorale, Demon, Beacon, koto, 4 perc, 1995; Septet no.2 'Circle Ground', fl, cl, str qt, pf, 1995
Vocal: Fast Talking: the Last Words of Dutch Schultz, male v, 1988; Ekstasis, 2 S, A, T, 2 B, 1990; Dead Songs, S, cl, vc, pf, 1991; Hit List, 6 solo vv, 1992; Silk, 2 S, b cl, db, vib, 1993
Pf: Diferencia, 1979; Sonata, 1982; Sea-Change, 1987
Film music: Cenotaph (TV documentary, dir. C. Tuckfield)

Principal publishers: Sounds Australian, Red House

WRITINGS

Sequenze I–VII by Luciano Berio: Compositional Idea and Musical Action (diss., U. of Queensland, 1986)
'The Specialisation Dilemma', Sounds Australian, no.24 (1989–90), 24 only
'Other Places, Whose Music? Some Introductory Comments on Appropriation and Tradition', Sounds Australian, no.30 (1991), 8–12, 47–8
'Identity and Memory: Temporality and the Music of David Lumsdaine', SMA, xxv (1991), 95–101
'The Gap: Criticism, Authenticity and the Phoney New', Sounds Australian, no.35 (1992), 22–3 with N. Saintilan and P. Stanhope, eds.: Biographical Directory of Australian Composers (Sydney, 1996)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

CC1 (J. Dawson)
B. Johnson: 'Andrew Schultz: a Consistent Record of Achievement', APRA Yearbook (Sydney, 1993)
N. Saintilan: 'Andew Schultz', Sound Ideas, ed. B. Broadstock (Sydney, 1995), 205–8, 321–5

CHRISTINE LOGAN

Schultz, Bartold. See PRAETORIUS, BARTHOLOMAEUS.

Schultz, (Reinhold Fritz) Helmut (b Frankfurt, 2 Nov 1904; d Waldenburg, Saxony, 19 April 1945). German musicologist. He attended the Leipzig Thomasschule and studied musicology under Kroyer at the University of Leipzig and at Vienna. He took the doctorate at Leipzig in 1928 with a dissertation on Johann Vesque von Püttlingen. In the same year he became an assistant at the musicology institute there and succeeded Kroyer a year later as its director. In 1933 he completed the Habilitation with a work on the form of the madrigal and became reader as well as director of the Heyer collection of musical instruments and the Saxon State Research Institute for Musicology; from 1934 he served as deputy chair for the board of Publikationen älterer Musik. Schultz was killed in action in 1945.

Despite his short career, Schultz made a name for himself as a prominent figure in Leipzig's musical life, enriching its musical offerings with performances by the university's collegium musicum, cultural programmes at the instrument museum, productions of early operas and radio broadcasts. He was an eclectic researcher, publishing writings and editions in the areas of organology, Italian Renaissance, Baroque and Classical periods, and 19th-century song. He produced scholarly editions of early keyboard music, operas of Gluck, Haydn, Neefe and Schubert, and works by Haydn and Wolf.

WRITINGS

Johann Vesque von Püttlingen 1803–1883 (diss., U. of Leipzig, 1928; Regensburg, 1930)
Die Karl-Straube-Orgel des Musikwissenschaftlichen Instituts (Leipzig, 1929, 2/1930)
Führer durch das Musikwissenschaftliche Instrumenten-Museum der Universität Leipzig (Leipzig, 1929)
Instrumentenkunde (Leipzig, 1931, rev. 2/1954 by R. Eller)
Das Madrigal als Formideal (Habilitationsschrift, U. of Leipzig, 1933; Leipzig, 1939/R) ed., with H. Zenck and W. Gerstenberg: Theodor Kroyer: Festschrift (Regensburg, 1933) [incl. 'Das Orchester als Ausleseprinzip', 169]
'Gesetze der Volksmusik', JbMP 1934, 51–62
Ludwig van Beethoven, 1770–1827: sein Leben in Bildern (Leipzig, 1936)
'Die Musikzeitung der Wiener Baumannshöhle', JbMP 1936, 49–67
Hugo Wolf (Berlin, 1937)
Giuseppe Verdi, 1813–1901: sein Leben in Bildern (Leipzig, 1938)
'Tanzstil und Suite', JbMP 1939, 58–65
'Volkhafte Eigenschaften des Instrumentenklanges', Deutsche Musikkultur, v (1940), 61–4

EDITIONS

Joseph Haydn: Symphonien Nr. 41–49, Werke, i/4 (Leipzig, 1908–32); Symphonies 50–57, Gesamtausgabe, i/5 (Leipzig, 1952) with R. Haas: Hugo Wolf: Lieder mit Klavierbegleitung, Nachgelassene Werke, i/1–4 (Vienna and Leipzig, 1936–40)
Deutsche Bläsermusik vom Barock bis zur Klassik, EDM, 1st ser., xiv (1941)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. Gerstenberg: 'Helmut Schultz', Mf, ii (1949), 131–2

ALFRED GRANT GOODMAN/PAMELA M. POTTER

Schultz, Johann Abraham Peter. See SCHULZ, JOHANN ABRAHAM PETER.

Schultz, Johannes (b Lüneburg, bap. 26 June 1582; d Dannenberg, bur. 16 Feb 1653). German composer and organist. He probably received his musical education at Lüneburg. From 1605 until his death he was organist for the Brunswick-Lüneburg court at Dannenberg. His instrumental dances of 1617 are formally well within the German tradition of such pieces, and the Thesaurus musicus (1621), which was planned as part of a year's cycle of motets, likewise owes much to tradition. Schultz turned again to secular music in most of the contents of his Musicalischer Lüstgarte (1622), a collection of instrumental pieces, dance-songs, madrigals and motets arranged in ascending order of the number of parts. The older texts here are modelled on those of the songbook printed in 1536 by the younger Peter Schöffer and Matthias Apiarius. The presence of tenor cantus firmus parts even at this late date – another illustration of Schultz's conservatism – is highlighted by the fact that the title-page of the tenor partbook is printed in red as well as black.

WORKS

40 neuwe ausserlesene schöne liebliche Paduanen, Intraden und Galliard, a 4 [with Passamezzo-Variationen, a 8] (Hamburg, 1617); 2 passamezzos ed. H. Mönkemeyer (Wilhelmshaven, 1989)
Thesaurus musicus continens cantiones sacras, a 3–9, 12, 16 (Lüneburg, 1621)
Musikalischer Lüstgarte, a 2–8 (Lüneburg, 1622); ed. H. Zenck, EDM, 2nd ser., Niedersachsen, i (Wolfenbüttel, 1937/R)
Epithalamium musicum, wedding motet, 8vv (Lüneburg, 1623)

Glückselig fried und freudenreich musicalisch New Jahres Wunsch, 7 motets, 4, 5, 8vv (Hamburg, 1645)
Thesaurus musicus ecclesiasticus (1651), lost, cited in Schmieder and Hartwieg
Teutsche Oster Historia, lost, cited in Siebeck, 73

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Siebeck: Johannes Schultz, fürstlich Braunschweig-Lüneburgischer Organist in Dannenberg (Leipzig, 1913/R)
B. Delli: Pavane und Galliarde: zur Geschichte der Instrumentalmusik im 16. und 17. Jahrhundert (diss., Free U. of Berlin, 1957), 172–3, 189, appx
W. Schmieder and G. Hartwieg: Kataloge der Herzog-August-Bibliothek Wolfenbüttel, xii: Musik: alte Drucke bis etwa 1750 (Frankfurt, 1967)
R. Caspari: Liedtradition im Stilwandel um 1600 (Munich, 1971)

HORST WALTER

Schultz, Svend S(imon) (b Nykøbing Falster, 30 Dec 1913; d Klampenborg, 6 June 1998). Danish composer. He studied the piano and composition at the Copenhagen Conservatory with Schierbeck and others (1933–8). He worked as a teacher and as music critic for Politiken (1942–9) and was appointed choir conductor and instructor for Danish Radio in 1949. As a pianist and conductor he toured Scandinavia, Italy and Switzerland with his own works. In his compositions he has concentrated on chamber music and vocal music. Danish chamber music of the 1930s was associated with a popular, entertaining style on a tonal, often neo-classical basis, and Schultz's chamber works followed that trend. He has expressed more serious moods in the choral work Job and the symphonies (especially nos.3 and 4), which appear to be influenced by Sibelius, Prokofiev and Shostakovich. But easily accessible musical expression characterizes both his solo songs and most of his choral music. Through a series of short, often buffo-like operas for small ensembles he has continued with public success the Danish conversational opera of Børresen, Schierbeck and Jeppesen.

WORKS
(selective list)

dates are of first performance unless otherwise stated

DRAMATIC

Ops: Bag Kulliserne (Schultz), Copenhagen, 1949; Kaffehuset (opera buffa), 1949, withdrawn; Høst [Harvest] (E. Falk-Rønne), Århus, 1949; Bryllupsrejse [Honeymoon] (opera buffa, H. Boland), Copenhagen, 1950; Hyrdinden og skorstensfejeren (marionette op), television op, 1953; Hosekraemmeren, 1955, rev. 1985; Tordenvejret (Falk-Rønne), Århus, 1955; Den kåde donna, operetta, Ålborg, 1957; Dommer Lynch, 1959; Marionetterne, television op, 1959; Konen i muddergrøften, television op, 1965; Støv, television op, 1969; Svinedrengen, school op, 1969; Lykken og forstanden, school op, 1972
Other works: Det er ganske vist, pantomime, 1948; Eva (church drama, M. Balslev), 1968; Sommerdanse, ballet, 1970; incid music for film and radio

OTHER WORKS

Orch: Sinfonia piccola no.1, 1941; Pf Conc. no.1, 1943; Serenade, str, 1947; Ouverture champêtre, 1947; Capriccio, pf, orch, 1947; Sym. no.2, 1947; Storstrømsbroen, 1948; Pf Conc. no.2, 1951; Concertino, pf, str, 1952; Festouverture, 1955; Sym. no.3, 1957; Sym. no.4, 1958; Sinfonia piccola no.2, 1971; Nordisk ouverture, 1975; Dansk pastorale, 1982; Concertino, cl, str, 1983; Sym. no.5, 1984; Concertino, hp, fl, cl, str, 1985
Vocal: Madrigaler, chorus, 1942; Pan lo, solo vv, chorus, orch, 1944; Stormene suse, solo vv, chorus, orch, 1944; Job, solo vv, chorus, orch, 1945; Hr. Mortens klosterrov, solo vv, chorus, orch, 1958; 5 madrigaler, 1969; De fire temperamenter, solo vv, chorus, orch, 1971; 4 fragmenta ex Ovidi Ars amandi, chorus, 1972; Kantate, children's choir, chorus, orch, 1972; 4 latinske madrigaler, 1974; Gensyn med Danmark, unacc. chorus, 1974; De fire lys på Adventskransen, 1979; Jul, girls' choir, orch, 1981; Det er ganske vist, chorus, cl, 1981; Her er dit land, girls' choir, 1983; 2 arkadiske scener, A, fl, pf, 1985; Det var engang en kejser, chorus, orch, 1986; 4 songs, unacc. chorus, 1987; Kantate til Nykøbing (Falster)s 700 års jubilaeum, chorus, orch, 1989; 4 danske sange, 1989; Solsangen – efterklange, 1993; Intrada sacra, chorus, tpt, org, 1994; Pss cxxi, cxxx, chorus, org, 1994; Dyveke-sange, v, pf, 1995; other solo songs
Chbr: Concertino, 4 vn, pf, 1936; Qt, fl, pf trio, 1936; Divertimento, fl, str trio, 1937; 10 str qts, 1939–82; Qnt, fl, str qt, 1944; Une amourette, wind qnt, 1944; Musik for fløjte og bratsch, 1957; Duo concertante, fl, pf, 1957; Divertimento, wind octet, 1961; Romantisk trio, vn, va, pf, 1964, withdrawn; 2 mosaiker, 1979; Rondo over EDB, 1981; Intrada, 3 tpt, 1983; sonatas, other works
Pf: Sonata, 1938; Sonatina, 1940, 1950; Løvspring, suite, 1941; Til-Søren, suite, 1949; Sonatina, 1950; Concert-suite, 1950; Moments musicaux, 1960

Principal publishers: Engstrøm & Sødring, Hansen

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Sjøen: 'Norwegian Contrasts and Danish Nuances: Knut Nystedt and Svend S. Schultz', Nordic Sounds (1989), no.3, pp.15–17
B.F. Alsinger: Komponisten Svend S. Schultz – et kapitel af dansk musikliv (Horsholm, 1996)

NIELS MARTIN JENSEN/DANIEL M. GRIMLEY

Schultze, Christoph (b Sorau [now Żary, nr Wrocław], *c*20 Dec 1606; d Delitzsch, 26 Aug 1683). German composer. He himself charted fully the stages of his life: he went to school at Wittenberg (1619–20) and Torgau (1620–25), studied at Leipzig University (where he matriculated in 1627) and was Kantor at Neumarkt, Halle, from Easter 1628 to February 1633 and thereafter at Delitzsch. His worry and distress when his post at Delitzsch was imperilled by war and differences of opinion are reflected in numerous official and personal documents. Like a number of other composers in central Germany, Schultze identified strongly with the generation of composers 25 or so years older than himself who cultivated a more modern kind of church music. As a student at Leipzig he was influenced by Schein's late sacred works, three of which he transmitted in unique copies, and in Halle he was close to Scheidt. He knew the Catholic concertato settings of Latin words from the collected edition of Viadana and from Donfrid's Promptuarium musicum, both of which appeared in Germany in the early 1620s. It was typical of composers such as Schultze that the body of his church music, dependent upon earlier models, should, through his pronounced interest in form, show such a full and varied range of sound. In his music for few voices – parts of his sacred concertos, his pedagogical pieces and the 29 tuneful bicinia published in 1659 and 1664 – it must be admitted that intensive counterpoint typical of Scheidt is worked out in a way hardly conducive to a clear enunciation of the words. Schultze's Lukaspassion (1653) is the first notable dramatic Passion after Melchior Vulpius's St Matthew Passion (1613). It contains several features familiar from Schütz's Passions. The choruses – those early in the work are for four voices, the later ones for six – are generally plain in both texture and harmony. The supple recitatives are still based on the traditional Passion tone.

WORKS

4 Ger. funeral poems (Leipzig, 1637, 1657–8)
Collegium musicum charitativum, 5vv, bc (Leipzig, 1647)
Geduldig und gar kurze Zeit, funeral song, 5vv, bc, *c*4 Feb 1647
Anfang und Unterweisung . . . in der Singekunst (Leipzig, 1649) [incl. several pedagogical pieces]
Ich harre des Herren, funeral song, 5vv, bc (Leipzig, 1650)
Lukaspassion, 4, 6vv (Leipzig, 1653); ed. P. Epstein (Berlin, 1930)
11 pieces, 2vv, in B. Praetorius: Jauchzendes Libanon (Leipzig, 1659)
18 pieces, 2vv, in B. Praetorius: Spielende Myrtenaue (Leipzig, 1664)

Melodia cygnaea, 8vv, 1633, D-DL (inc.)

Das Grosse Hymnus-Buch, after 1635, DL, Superintendentur [incl. early version of Anfang und Unterweisung, dated 1638; fugues, *c*1649; 3 canons]
Klingender newes Jahres Wunsch ex psal. cxxxiii (Siehe, wie schön und lieblich ists), 1662, DL
Furcht des Herren, ex. Syrac. xxxiv (Wohl dem, der deinem Herren fürchtet), motet, 8vv, 1682, DL
3 motets, 8vv, MÜG (inc.)
8 sacred works, 4–6vv; 8 concs.; arrs. of works by other composers: HAh Kapell MS (inc.)

LOST WORKS

Concerten mit Symphonien und Capellen elaboriret, 5vv, 1647, cited in foreword to Collegium musicum
Mutetten und Concerten, 5, 6, 8vv, 1647, cited in foreword to Collegium musicum
1 other sacred work, 1, 2vv, 1649, cited in foreword to Anfang und Unterweisung
Johannespassion, before 1654, cited in Grosse Hymnus-Buch
Kirchen-Zierde (60 pieces in 7 vols.), up to 1682, cited in Furcht des Herren

BIBLIOGRAPHY

WaltherML
A. Werner: 'Zur Musikgeschichte von Delitzsch', AMw, i (1918–19), 535–64, esp. 537–42, 546–52
E.A. Fischer: 'Eine Sammelhandschrift aus dem Anfang des 17. Jahrhunderts', AMw, viii (1926), 420–32
W. Schulz: Studien über das deutsche, protestantische monodische Kirchenlied des 17. Jahrhunderts (diss., U. of Breslau, 1934), 75–6
B. Smallman: The Background of Passion Music: J.S. Bach and his Predecessors (London, 1957, enlarged 2/1970)
W. Braun: 'Der Kantor Christoph Schultze (1606–1683) und die "Neue Musik" in Delitzsch', Wissenschaftliche Zeitschrift der Martin Luther-Universität Halle-Wittenberg: gesellschafts- und sprachwissenschaftliche Reihe, x (1961), 1187–225
W. Braun: 'Das "Grosse Hymnus-Buch" des Kantors Christoph Schultze', JbLH, vi (1961), 123–35

WERNER BRAUN

Schultze, Michael. See PRAETORIUS, MICHAEL.

Schultze, Norbert (b Brunswick, 26 Jan 1911). German composer. He studied conducting, composition and the piano at the Staatliche Hochschule für Musik in Cologne, then studied theatre in Cologne and Munich (1931). He was a composer and actor in a students' cabaret in Munich (1931–2), became an opera conductor in Heidelberg (1932–3) and Darmstadt (1933–4), then worked for the Telefunken record company (1934–5). From 1936 he was a freelance composer for stage, films and television, and in 1938 he composed the song Lili Marleen (Hans Leip), published and recorded in 1939 and made famous by Lale Anderson, Marlene Dietrich, Vera Lynn and others. From 1953 he owned a music publishing firm. Schultze's stage works include the fairy tale opera Schwarzer Peter (Hamburg, Staatsoper, 1936), the ballet Struwwelpeter (Hamburg, 1937), the musical Käpt'n Bay-Bay (Hamburg, 1950) and the operetta Regen in Paris (Nuremberg, 1954). The most noteworthy of over 50 film scores is that for Symphonie eines Lebens (1943), performed by the Dresden Philharmonie under Paul van Kempen. Though Schultze composed for popular forms, his work rose above that of the mainstream popular music of the time. For a minor part of his output he used the noms de plume Frank Norbert, Peter Kornfeld and Henri Iversen. His principal publishers are Sikorski (Hamburg) and Apollo-Verlag (Berlin and Frankfurt).

ANDREW LAMB

Schulz [Schulze]. See PRAETORIUS family.

Schulz [Schultz], Johann Abraham Peter (b Lüneburg, 31 March 1747; d Schwedt an der Oder, 10 June 1800). German composer and conductor. His father was a baker who planned a religious career for him, so he attended both of Lüneburg's Lateinschulen; but his interests lay chiefly with music and he frequently appeared as soloist with various school and church choirs in Lüneburg. He studied the violin, flute, keyboard and theory with the local organist J.C. Schmügel. At the age of 15 he accompanied his mother to Lüchow for a family wedding, then continued alone to Berlin, where he sought out his musical heroes C.P.E. Bach and Joseph Kirnberger to enlist their help in his musical career. He was persuaded to complete his education in Lüneburg but when he was 18 he returned to Berlin and Kirnberger accepted him as a pupil. In one of several later autobiographical sketches he complained that his three years of study with Kirnberger consisted almost entirely of the analysis and composition of chorales.

In 1768 Kirnberger recommended Schulz for the position of accompanist and music teacher to Princess Sapieha Woiwodin von Smolensk of Poland. Schulz travelled with the princess throughout Europe for three years, during which time he came into contact with a much wider range of musical ideas than he had known under Kirnberger. He was particularly impressed by Gluck, and met Grétry and Haydn (according to Reichardt). He also met Johann Reichardt in Danzig (1771) and the two became lifelong friends.

After visiting Poland, Schulz returned to Berlin in 1773. There Kirnberger enlisted his help in writing the music articles for J.G. Sulzer's encyclopedia Allgemeine Theorie der schönen Künste. Schulz wrote all the music articles from S to Z as well as assisting with and editing several others. He also assisted Kirnberger in writing Die wahren Grundsätze zum Gebrauche der Harmonie, although only the latter's name was credited when it was published in 1773.

In 1776, on Reichardt's recommendation, Schulz was appointed music director of the newly built French theatre in Berlin, and in 1778 he was given a similar position at the private theatre of the Prussian crown princess, Friederike Luise. In April 1780 he was appointed to yet another position with the Prussian royal family, as court composer in Rheinsberg to the king's younger brother Prince Heinrich.

Schulz was a champion of new music, producing French operettas along with operas by Gluck, Piccinni and Sacchini at these courts; this brought him into disfavour with the royal family and led to his resignation after seven years in Rheinsberg (1787). He then accepted an even more important position in the court at Copenhagen as Hofkapellmeister and director of the Royal Theatre (1787–95). There he reorganized the royal chapel, staged works which reflected society's concern for problems such as land reform, founded a benefit fund for musicians' widows and wrote a treatise on music education, Gedanken über den Einfluss der Musik auf die Bildung eines Volks (1790). This much-discussed essay reflected both his own aesthetic of folklike lieder and the contemporary political and social developments in Copenhagen. As a result of his varied activities, Copenhagen became one of the leading musical centres of Europe.

Schulz was pensioned at an early age in 1795, having contracted tuberculosis. He sailed for Portugal that autumn but his ship was forced ashore by bad weather at Arendal, on the southern coast of Norway, where he stayed the winter at great detriment to his health. The following spring he visited his birthplace in Lüneburg, then returned to Prussia. For the remainder of his life he divided his time between Berlin and Rheinsberg, with frequent visits to Schwedt for medical reasons.

Apart from a few compositions written while he was studying with Schmügel and Kirnberger, Schulz did not compose seriously until his return to Berlin in 1773. He set a prologue for Frederick the Great's birthday in 1774, but the three-act operetta Clarissa, oder Das unbekannte Dienstmädchen (Berlin, 1775) was his first large stage work; it was followed by several others in the next two decades. The 1770s also saw the publication of his only significant keyboard works: six pieces for harpsichord or piano (op.1, 1776) and a harpsichord sonata (op.2, 1778).

It was not until 1779 that he published his first collection of lieder (Gesänge am Clavier), the genre of composition for which he is best known and through which he exerted the greatest influence during his lifetime. It comprises folklike lieder in the style of the first Berlin lied school, with optional accompaniments secondary to the vocal line. Choosing texts by leading poets was a cause to which he addressed himself continuously; by using the poetry of outstanding literary figures such as Claudius, Voss, Bürger, Klopstock and Hölty, as well as Metastasio and Beaumarchais, Schulz set a standard of excellence for other lied composers.

His most influential collection was Lieder im Volkston. Its first two volumes were composed in Rheinsberg and the third in Copenhagen but all three were published in Berlin (1782, 1785 and 1790). In the preface to the second volume Schulz outlined his aesthetic of lied composition: he intended to write lieder which would have the 'appearance of familiarity' to the listener on first hearing (thus resembling folk music), and further intended, in using only the work of the best poets, that the musical setting should reflect and enhance the meaning of the text, rather than being independent. This aesthetic, and Schulz's own simple, accessible style, influenced lieder into the 19th century.

Schulz was influential in Denmark and has been called the pioneer of that country's national music (Gottwaldt and Hahne). His simple melodies and strophic forms remained standard for the songs of his pupil C.E.F. Weyse and other 19th-century Danish lieder composers. His choruses and stage works written there were important as embodiments of political ideas.

WORKS

STAGE

Das Opfer der Nymphen (prol, C.W. Ramler), Berlin, Koch's, 24 Jan 1774, lost

Clarissa, oder Das unbekannte Dienstmädchen (operette, 3, J.C. Bock), Berlin, Döbbelin's, 26 May 1775, 8 songs in Lieder im Volkston

Musique de l'impromptu (cmda, 1), *c*1779, B-Bc

La fée urgèle, ou Ce qui plait aux dames (comédie avec ariettes, 4, C.S. Favart), 1780–81, ?Rheinsberg, 1782, rev. and Ger. trans. as Was den Damen gefällt, Berlin, National, 1789, vs, D-Bsb

La vérité (épilogue, G. de Morveau), Rheinsberg, 1784, lost

Panomphée (divertissement), *c*1785, lost

Athalie (op, 5, Schulz and F.C. Cramer, after J. Racine), Rheinsberg, Frach Theatre, 1785; rev. Berlin, Corsicascher Konzertsaal, 1786; choruses, songs, in Polyhymnia, vs (Hamburg and Kiel, 1786)

Minona oder Die Angelsachsen (tragisches Melodrama, 4, H. Gerstenberg), Hamburg, 1786, lost

Aline, reine de Golconde (op, 4, M.-J. Sédaine), Rheinsberg, sum. 1787, vs, ed. C.F. Cramer (Copenhagen, 1790)

Indtoget (Spl, 2, P.A. Heiberg), 1789–90, Copenhagen, 26 Feb 1793, vs (Copenhagen, 1793)

Høstgildet (Spl, 1, T. Thaarup), Copenhagen, Kongelige, 16 Sept 1790, vs (Copenhagen, 1790)

Peters bryllup (Spl, 2, T. Thaarup), Copenhagen, 12 Dec 1793, vs (Copenhagen, ?1791)

Miscellaneous pieces for stage works, most in collections, incl. 1 for Die Hochzeit des Figaro, 2 for Le barbier de Seville, 1 for Goetz von Berlichingen

LIEDER

[25] Gesänge am Clavier (Berlin and Leipzig, 1779)

[48] Lieder im Volkston, i (Berlin, 1782, 2/1785); ii–iii (Berlin, 1785–90); Dan. trans. as Viser og sange (Copenhagen, 1792)

Johann Peter Uzens lyrische Gedichte religiösen Inhalts (Hamburg, 1784, 2/1794); Dan. trans. as Hellige sange forfattede af de tydske digtere Uz (Copenhagen, 1785)

Religiöse Oden und Lieder aus den besten deutschen Dichtern (Hamburg, 1786, 2/1792)

Gedichte von Friederike Brun, geboren Münter (Zürich, 1795) (incl. 7 set by Schulz]

Many others pubd singly and in 18th-century periodicals and anthologies

OTHER WORKS

Orats: Maria og Johannes (Passion orat, J. Ewald), 1787–8, vs, ed. C.F. Cramer (Copenhagen, 1789), score (Copenhagen, 1791); Christi død (Passion orat, J. Baggesen), Passion oratorio, Christiansborg, 1792, D-Bsb; Frelserens sidste Stund (Passion orat, V.K. Hjort), Copenhagen, March 1794, Ger. trans., Bsb; Das Lob Gottes, A-Wn

Cants.: Vater, bester lebe, lv, orch, Berlin, 1774, D-Bsb; Universitets-kantata til dod af H. v. Stampe (T. Thaarup), Copenhagen, 1789; Kantata til Kronprinds Fredericks formoeling (Schönheyder), Copenhagen, 1790; Sorge-sange da Prindsesse Sophie Frederike bisattes (T. Thaarup), Roskilde, cathedral, 28 Dec 1794; Jesu Minde (Passion cant.), 1794; Der Versöhnungstod, 4vv, orch (Leipzig, 1810) [arr. from slow movts of J. Haydn: syms. HI: 93, 87, 98, 80, 99 and Str Qt HIII: 74]; Dank ich Gott an deine Güte, 4vv, orch (Leipzig, 1811) [arr. from 2nd movt of J. Haydn: sym. HI: 104]

Miscellaneous sacred: Vor dir, o Ewiger (motet, C. Lavater), 4vv, in Reichardt: Musikalisches Kunstmagazin (Berlin, 1782); Gott Jehova sey hoch gepreiset (hymn, T. Thaarup), chorus, orch, 1790, vs (Copenhagen, 1793); Jesu dydens milde lører (Passion motet, T. Thaarup), Copenhagen, 1790; TeD (T. Thaarup), Copenhagen, 1792; Gud, du es stor (hymn, E. Storm), 4vv, inst, 1792, D-Bsb, and Lovsang (J. Baggesen), 1793, Bsb, vss, pubd together (Copenhagen, *c*1795); Lysenes vader (hymn, C. Friman, after Horace), 1793, Bsb; Laudate Dominum omnes gentes, psalm, and Te splendor et virtus patris per vespera S Michaelis archangeli (hymn), both 4vv, inst, A-Wn; Zu Zions Höhen, 4vv, lost [formerly in library of the Singakademie, Berlin]; 2 choruses, 4vv, D-Bsb; others in 18th-century periodicals

Other vocal: Aria de bravura: Moi seule au temple de mémoire, S, orch (Berlin, 1786), lost; Freund, ich achte nicht des Mahles (round), 2 S, T, B (Hamburg, ?1804); Ah, que l'amour est chose jolie, S, inst, and 21 polyphonic songs, A-Wn; 4 arias, D-Bsb; Chansons italiennes (Berlin, 1782), cited in GerberL

Chbr and solo inst: 6 diverses pièces, op.1, hpd/pf (Berlin and Amsterdam, 1776); Sonata, op.2, hpd (Berlin, 1778); Largo, glass harmonica, in AMZ, ii (1799–1800), suppl.i; Sonate, kbd, vn, D-Bsb; Waltzer und Ecossai, kbd, 1800, cited in MGG1; Entractes, 2 vn, va, bc, 2 bn, B-Bc; others in contemporary anthologies

MSS in Royal Library, Copenhagen

WRITINGS

Music articles from S to Z (others collab. Kirnberger) in J.G. Sulzer: Allgemeine Theorie der schönen Künste (Leipzig, 1771–4 and later edns) with J.P. Kirnberger: Die wahren Grundsätze zum Gebrauch der Harmonie … als ein zusatz zu der Kunst des reinen Satzes in der Musik (Berlin, 1773/R, 2/1793)

Entwurf einer neuen und leichtverständlichen Musiktablatur (Berlin, 1786)

Gedanken über den Einfluss der Musik auf die Bildung eines Volks (Copenhagen, 1790; Dan. trans., 1790)

Über den Choral und die ältere Literatur desselben (Erfurt, 2/1872) [1st edn unknown]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; FriedlaenderDL; GerberL; GerberNL; KretzschmarG; LedeburTLB; MGG1 (G. Hahne and H. Gottwaldt)
J.F. Reichardt: Biography, AMZ, iii (1800–01), 153–7, 169–76, 597–606, 613–20, 629–35
E.O. Lindner: Geschichte des deutschen Liedes im XVIII. Jahrhundert, ed. L. Erk (Leipzig, 1871/R)
C. Klunger: J.A.P. Schulz in seinen volkstümlichen Liedern (Leipzig, 1909)
O. Riess: Johann Abraham Peter Schulz' Leben (Leipzig, 1913); also in SIMG, xv (1913–14), 169–270
M. Seiffert: 'J.A.P. Schulz' "dänische" Oper', AMw, i (1918–19), 422–31
H. Gottwaldt, ed.: 'Drei Fragmente einer eigenen Lebensbeschreibung', Lüneburger Blätter, vi (1955); xi–xii (1961)
E. Schmitz: Unverwelkter Volkslied-Stil: J.A.P. Schulz und seine 'Lieder im Volkston' (Leipzig, 1956)
H. Gottwaldt and G. Hahne, eds.: Briefwechsel zwischen Johann Abraham Peter Schulz und Johann Heinrich Voss (Kassel, 1960)
G. Hahne: 'Johann Heinrich Voss' Versuch einer Gesamtausgabe der Lieder Johann Abraham Peter Schulz', Mf, xx (1967), 176–81

RAYMOND A. BARR

Schulz [Schulze], John Philipp Christian (b Langensalza, 24 Sept 1773; d Leipzig, 30 Jan 1827). German conductor and composer. He attended the Thomasschule in Leipzig and from 1787 appeared as a soprano in the Gewandhaus concerts. In 1793 he began studying theology at Leipzig University, but soon changed to music and became a pupil of the court organist Engel and of J.G. Schicht. In 1800 he was appointed conductor with Franz Seconda's theatre company in Leipzig, for which he also composed stage music. In 1810 he became director of the second Leipzig Singakademie and of the Gewandhaus concerts, where at first he conducted only secular vocal music; in 1816 he took over from Schicht as director of sacred works there as well. His post at the Singakademie connected him with the university, and in 1818 he was appointed music director there.

Schulz was most highly regarded as a singing tutor to amateurs. His few works include a number of quite popular lieder and partsongs, published by G.W. Finck in the Musikalischer Hausschatz der Deutschen (Gera, 10/1893) and Die deutsche Liedertafel (Leipzig, 1845), as well as in various separate editions; the canon O wie wohl ist mir am Abend is still popular. Published orchestral works, such as the Overture op.8 for Klingemann's Faust, demonstrate thematic development in the style of Haydn. Schulz also published a Salvum fac regem for chorus and orchestra, and Gerber mentioned stage music by him for Schiller's Die Jungfrau von Orleans and Wallenstein.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GerberNL
Obituary, AMZ, xxix (1827), 101–4
A. Dörffel: Geschichte der Gewandhausconcerte zu Leipzig (Leipzig, 1884/R)
G. Hempel: Von der Leipziger Ratsmusik zum Stadt- und Gewandhausorchester (diss., U. of Leipzig, 1961)

GUNTER HEMPEL

Schulz-Beuthen [Schulz] (Viktor) Heinrich Donatien Wilhelm (b Beuthen, nr Breslau [now Wrocław], 19 June 1838; d Dresden, 12 March 1915). German composer. He studied with K.F. Brendel, Hauptmann and Moscheles at the Leipzig Conservatory from 1862 to 1864, and moved to Zürich in 1866, where he was supported by Otto and Mathilde Wesendonck. Through them he also became acquainted with Wagner and Hans Richter.

Schulz-Beuthen made his living primarily as a critic, but also enjoyed increasing success as a composer, becoming known as a prominent member of the 'New German' school. He received much encouragement from Liszt, who declared his setting of Psalm xxix to be 'spiritually powerful and musically perfect'.

A nervous breakdown caused Schulz-Beuthen to leave Zürich in 1880. He worked as a freelance teacher and composer in Dresden until 1893, then spent two unhappy years in Vienna before returning to Dresden, where he taught piano at the conservatory. After another breakdown in 1913 he was placed in a nursing home, where he died two years later. Most of his music was unpublished during his lifetime, and the majority was lost when his daughter Brunhilde's house was destroyed in the bombing of Dresden in the night of 13/14 February 1945.

Schulz-Beuthen's surviving music betrays the influence of Wagner and Liszt, though without their harmonic complexity. Some works have a charming naiveté of expression, for example his Neger-Lieder und Tänze, based on American minstrel songs (including one by Stephen Foster).

WORKS
(selective list)

MSS in CH-Zz, D-Dl, Bsb, WRh

Stage: Der Zauberschlaf (fairytale op, 3, Schulz-Beuthen, after M. Wesendonck), Zürich, 1879; Ohne Mann (comic op, 1, H. Graeser), 1883; Die Verschollene (music drama, 2, F. Spigl), 1891–2; Die Paria (musical tragedy, 1, Spigl)
Orch: 10 syms. (lost, except for no.5, 'Reformation Hymn', and no.7, 'Kinder-Symphonie'); Indianischer Korntanz, op.35, 1876; Konzert-Romanze, op.37, vc/vn, orch, 1877; Neger-Lieder und Tänze, op.26, 1880; Suite, str, 1889–94; Die Toteninsel, sym. poem after Böcklin, 1890; Tarantella, from op.40, arr. pf, orch, *c*1896
Choral: Ps lxii, lxiii, Bar, chorus, orch, 1868; Harald (ballad, W.M. von Königswinter), Bar, male vv, orch, 1876
Chbr: Ungarisches Ständchen, op.9, vn, pf, 1872; Stimmungsbilder, op.17, vn, pf, 1873; Abschiedsklänge, op.28, 3 vn, va, vc, db, 1880
Pf: Orientalische Bilder, 8 pieces, op.2, 1871; 4 pieces 'in the heroic style', op.22, 1874; Alhambra Sonata, op.34, 1878–82
Other: Song cycle (M. Wesendonck); songs, 1v, orch or 1v, pf

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Pfannenschmid: Schulz-Beuthen: Alhambra-Sonate, musikalische Analyse des geistigen Inhaltes (Dresden, *c*1920)
A. Zosel: Heinrich Schulz-Beuthen, 1838–1915: Leben und Werke (Würzburg, 1931)

CHRIS WALTON

Schulze. German family of organ builders. Five generations built organs, at first mostly in Thuringia. The founder, Hans Elias Schulze (1688–1762), worked in Solsdorf, but none of his instruments have survived. His sons Hans Heinrich (1716–62) and Johann Daniel Schulze (1720–62) worked in Nottleben and Milbitz respectively; the organs built by Hans Heinrich have also disappeared, but parts of Johann Daniel's instruments survive at Milbitz (1774), Hochdorf (1783) and Oberweissbach (1783). The latter's son Johann Andreas (1753–1806), also based in Milbitz, built about a dozen organs, some possibly with his father. The organ at Auleben (1798, altered), five stops of the organ at Kahla (1796), and some cases (e.g. Stadtilm, 1785; Kleinhettstädt, 1787) survive.

Johann Friedrich Schulze, the son of Johann Andreas (b Milbitz, 27 Jan 1793; d Paulinzella, 9 Sept 1858), was trained by Johann Benjamin Witzmann (1782–1814) in Stadtilm and began working independently in 1815. He set up a workshop at Paulinzella, and from 1833 he worked for some years in Mühlhausen. In 1851 he formed the partnership of Schulze & Sohn with his son (Heinrich)

Edmund (b Paulinzella, 26 March 1824; d Paulinzella, 13 July 1878). A decisive point in the careers of both came in Weimar where, in the course of rebuilding the organ at the Stadtkirche (1824–5) they met the organist there, J.G. Töpfer. Johann Friedrich adopted Töpfer's ideas on organ design. He reduced mutations and mixtures in favour of foundation stops (he even put 32′ stops on the manuals), preferring narrow-scaleed and stopped ranks, flutes with high cut-ups, and strings. Instead of speaking pipes in the façades, he used dummy pipes of zinc. As a result of high wind pressure, open footholes, broad mouths and high pipe-wall thicknesses, the plenum was very loud.

From about 1845 the area served by the Schulzes expanded beyond Thuringia; they worked on instruments at Halberstadt (Cathedral and St Martini, 1837–8, rebuildings); Weissenfels (Schlosskapelle, 1839); Halle (Marktkirche, 1839–43; Moritzkirche 1841–3); Riga (reformed Church, 1848); Bremen (Dom, 1849); Verden (Dom, 1850); London (Great Exhibition, 1851; with concave pedal-board; later transferred to the Town Hall, Northampton); and Lübeck (Marienkirche, 1851–4). They built many instruments in northern Germany, especially Pomerania. Three more of Johann Friedrich's sons were active in the trade: Oskar (b 9 Dec 1825; d 3 Dec 1878), Eduard (b 27 March 1830; d 11 Feb 1880) and Herwart (1836–1908), and after their father's death the firm was re-named Schulze Söhne. Oskar was a theorist and acoustician, and invented an apparatus to record longitudinal and transversal waves and interferences; Herwart was a woodcarver and gilder, and designed and built organ cases. The company built an organ in Rome, as well as five in New York and three in Rio de Janeiro, all before 1860; they also built instruments in Pest (Synagogue, 1858–61); Soest (St Petri, 1865); Düsseldorf (Tonhalle, 1866); Gernrode (St Cyriakus, 1867); Königsee (Lutheran church, 1871); and Neunhofen (Lutheran church, 1874).

Edmund, the head of the firm, was also active in England; he had a considerable influence on English organ builders including Forster & Andrews, Abbott & Smith, Charles Brindley and T.C. Lewis. Edmund was himself influenced by Cavaillé-Coll, with whom he corresponded. His skill in voicing was highly esteemed. He was notable for his work on reeds (though their tone was sometimes criticized), harmonic stops, different wind pressures, narrow-scaleed diapasons, and pipe ranks with extensions. This last was first employed in the pedal section of his organ for St George's, Doncaster (1862). His other main works were at Leeds (parish church, 1866); Meanwood, near Leeds (private organ for T.S. Kennedy, 1869; transferred to St Peter's, Harrogate, in 1877, and then with a new case to St Bartholomew's, Armley, Leeds, in 1879); Hindley (St Peter's, 1873). The organ at St Peter's, Harrogate (1879), was the last work of the Schulze firm.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 ('Schulze, Johann Friedrich'; E.K. Rössler, W.L. Sumner)

J.H. Burn: 'Edmund Schulze's English Organs', Rotunda, v/3 (1934), 18

W.L. Sumner: 'The Schulze Family', The Organ, xxxvii (1957–8), 8–14, 96–100

H.-J. Falkenberg: 'Edmund Schulze und der englische Orgelbau seiner Zeit', Ars organi, xxviii (1980), 84–95, 160–63

N. Thistlethwaite: The Making of the Victorian Organ (Cambridge, 1990), 383–8

W. Hackel: 'Die Orgelbauerfamilie Schulze', Thüringer Orgeljournal, i (1993), 63–78 [incl. opus list]

HANS KLOTZ/ALFRED REICHLING

Schulze [Schultze, Schultz, Praetorius], Christian Andreas (b Dresden, *c*1660; d Meissen, 11 Sept 1699). German composer. He is first heard of in 1669, when on 4 June he was sent to the Kreuzschule, Dresden. From the winter term of 1675 he studied at Leipzig University. He applied unsuccessfully for the post of Kantor of the Annenkirche, Dresden, on 9 October 1677 and participated at the beginning of 1678 in operatic performances at Dresden. On the recommendation of the Saxon Elector Johann Georg II he was appointed Kantor of the municipal church and the municipal Lateinschule – the Franciscaneum – at Meissen on 22 April 1678, and he also became Kantor of the cathedral there. He held these positions for the rest of his life, though probably from economic motives he applied, unsuccessfully, for other posts as Kantor or teacher – in 1682 at Zittau, in 1694 and 1697 at his old school at Dresden and in 1699 at Freiberg.

The vast majority of Schulze's surviving works are sacred concertos for several voices – often tending towards the form of the cantata – or various kinds of early Protestant church cantata: cantatas on biblical or liturgical texts (concerto cantatas), chorale cantatas and those to mixed texts. They contain a good deal of fine writing, in the manner of small-scale sacred concertos, for one to three solo voices, including solo arias. There are no recitatives. From the musical point of view the Protestant chorale is of little importance in them: it is used as a cantus firmus in only four cantatas. Instruments play a prominent part. At the beginning of a work there is always a sinfonia or sonata, and in many cases arias are surrounded by ritornellos. Sometimes there are obbligato parts including typically instrumental figuration, as in the virtuoso violin solos in the cantatas Delectare in Domino and Schaffe in mir. Schulze's very interesting Historia resurrectionis continued the tradition of such works leading from Scandello through Schütz and Selle. It is the only extant work of this kind from the late 17th century. The text is a compilation from the Gospels by Johann Bugenhagen that Schütz also used. The work is written in a vivid, dramatic style without employment of the liturgical Easter tone. The exordium (which has an introductory sonata), the chorus of the disciples and the final movement are concerto-like pieces in several parts. The part of the Evangelist consists of affective recitative, while the parts of Christ and the other soloists are in an aria-like or dramatic style.

To sum up, Schulze's works stem from the motet-like concertato style of 17th-century German Protestant church music with its concern for the interpretation and expression of the text. They hold an honoured place in this tradition by virtue of their richness of form and expression, in which elements of psalmody, dialogue and quodlibet are found and in which the chiefly homophonic textures are enhanced by varied and colourful harmony often resembling that of Buxtehude.

WORKS

Missa alla breve, 5vv, 2 cornetts, 2 vn, 2 va, bn, bc, F-Ssp

Historia resurrectionis Domini nostri Jesu Christi secundum quatuor evangelistas (Ger. text), 1686, 6vv, chorus 5vv, 2 piffari, 2 vn, 2 va/trbn, vle/bn/b trbn, bc, D-Dl

TeD, 5vv, 2 tpt, 2 vn, 3 trbn, bn/timp, bc, F-Ssp

Animae iustorum in manu Dei sunt, 3vv, 2 vn, bn, bc, D-Dl

Delectare in Domino (Ps xxxvii), 1v, vn, 3 va, vle, bc, Dl

Duo seraphim stabant, 5vv, chorus 5vv, 2 vn, 2 va, bn, 2 cornettinos, 3 trbn, bc, Dl
Laetatus sum (Ps cxxii), 5vv, chorus 5vv, 2 vn, 3 va, 2 piffari, 3 trbn, bc, Dl
Media vita in morte sumus, 2vv, 2 vn, bc, Dl
Omnia flumina currunt ad mare, 2vv, 4 vn, bc, Dl
Quum me pulsat, 3vv, 2 vn, bn, bc, Dl
Tu Christe deficis, 2vv, 2 vn, bn, bc, Dl
Veni Sancte Spiritus, 6vv, chorus 6vv, 2 piffari, 2 vn, 2 va, bn, timp, bc, F-Ssp

Aber deine Toten werden leben, 8vv, bc, D-Dl (inc.)
Ach Gott und Herr, wie gross und schwer, 7vv, chorus 6vv, 2 vn, va, bn, 4 trbn, bc, F-Ssp
Als der Tag der Pfingsten erfüllet war, 3vv, vn, cornett, trbn, bn, bc, D-Dl (inc.)
Als der Tag der Pfingsten erfüllet war, 4vv, 4 vn, bc, Dl
Also heilig ist der Tag, 10vv, 2 vn, 2 va, bn, 2 cornetts, 3 trbn, bc, Dl
Bessre dich Jerusalem, 5vv, 4 insts, bc, Bsb
Das Blut Jesu Christi, 2vv, 3 insts, bc, Bsb
Das ist meine Freude, 3vv, 6 insts, bc, Bsb
Das Wort ward Fleisch, 6vv, chorus 6vv, 2 vn, 3 va, 2 ob, bn, bc, LUC
Der Gott Abraham, 5vv, chorus 5vv, 2 vn, 2 va, bn, 2 cornettinos, 3 trbn, bc, F-Ssp
Der Tod ist verschlungen in den Sieg, 1v, chorus 5vv, 2 ob, 2 t insts, bn, bc, D-MÜG
Es sei denn, dass jemand geboren werde, 5vv, chorus 5vv, 2 vn, 2 va, bn, bc, F
Habt nicht lieb die Welt, 6vv, chorus 6vv, 2 vn, 2 va, bn, bc, F
Herr Jesu Christ, du höchstes Gut, 5vv, chorus 5vv, 2 vn, 2 va, bn, bc, F-Ssp
Heut triumphieret Gottes Sohn, 1v, 2 vn, 2 va, bn, 2 cornettinos, 2 trbn, vle, bc, D-Dl
Ich schreie mit meiner Stimme zu Gott (Ps lxxvii), 5vv, 2 vn, 2 va, bn, bc, F-Ssp
Kommt all' herzu, ihr Engelein, 2vv, 2 vn, bc, D-Dl
Meine Lieben und Freunde stehen gegen mir, 5vv, 2 vn, 2 va, bn/vle, bc, Dl
Schaffe in mir, Gott, 1v, 2 vn, bn, bc, LUC (inc.)
Seid böse ihr Völker, 5vv, chorus 8vv, 2 vn, 2 va, bn, 2 piffari, 3 trbn, timp, bc, Dl
Siehe, eine Jungfrau, 1v, 2 vn, bc, LUC (inc.)
Singet um einander, 5vv, chorus 5vv, 2 vn, 2 va, bn, bc, Bsb
So wahr ich lebe, 5vv, chorus 5vv, 5 insts, bc, F (inc.)
Warum sollt'ich mich denn grämen, 5vv, chorus 5vv, 2 vn, 2 va, bn, bc, F-Ssp
Was du tust, so bedenke das Ende, 5vv, chorus 5vv, 2 vn, 2 va, bn, bc, D-Dl (inc.)
Wer mich liebet, 5vv, chorus 5vv, 2 vn, 2 va, bn, bc, F
Wie der Hirsch schreiet, 1v, 4 insts, bc, Bsb

LOST WORKS

Mag, 2vv, 2 vn, vle, bc; 5 concs., 1–10vv, 2–10 insts, bc: cited in 1696 inventory of the Michaelisschule, Lüneburg
18 works, 1–10vv, 3–10 insts, bc: cited in inventory *c*1680–90, Fürstenschule, Grimma
1 work, 9vv/insts; cited in 1718 inventory, Ulrichskirche, Halle
1 conc., 1v, 2 vn, 3 va, bc, cited in Gerber
3 occasional secular works, 1683–95, texts in Dla, authenticity doubtful

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; GerberNL; WaltherML
M. Seiffert: 'Die Chorbibliothek der St. Michaelisschule in Lüneburg', SIMG, ix (1907–8), 593–621
E. Noack: 'Die Bibliothek der Michaeliskirche zu Erfurt', AMw, vii (1925), 65–116
W. Serauky: Musikgeschichte der Stadt Halle: music examples and notes to ii/1 (Halle and Berlin, 1940/*R*1970), 70ff
F. Krummacher: 'Zur Sammlung Jacobi der ehemaligen Fürstenschule Grimma', Mf, xvi (1963), 324–47
B. Baselt: 'Actus musicus und Historie um 1700 in Mitteldeutschland', GfMKB: Leipzig 1966, 230–37
J. Schlichte: Thematischer Katalog der kirchlichen Musikhandschriften des 17. und 18. Jahrhunderts in der Stadt- und Universitätsbibliothek Frankfurt am Main (Frankfurt, 1979)
D.P. James: The German Church Music of Christian Andreas Schulze (1660–1699) (diss., U. of Southern California, 1988)
G. Konradt: 'Die Instrumentalbegleitung in Historienkompositionen der Schützzeit', Schütz Jb, xix (1997) 21–36

PETER KRAUSE

Schulze, Hans-Joachim (b Leipzig, 3 Dec 1934). German musicologist. He studied musicology in Leipzig at the Hochschule für Musik (1952–4) and with Eller, Serauky and Besseler at the university (1954–7), where he took a diploma. Subsequently he became a research assistant (1957) and acting director (from 1974) at the Leipzig Bach-Archiv, and he was appointed co-editor (together with Christoph Wolff) of the Bach-Jahrbuch in 1975.

Hans-Joachim Schulze is one of the leading Bach scholars of his generation. His writings, which explore issues of Bach biography and the production and provenance of the manuscripts that transmit Bach's music, are characterized by great detail and new archival findings (as in his seminal Studien zur Bach-Überlieferung im 18. Jahrhundert, 1984), yet the intensity of the discussion is frequently leavened with wry Saxon wit (as in his charming Ey! Wie schmeckt der Coffee süsse!: Johann Sebastian Bachs Kaffee-Kantate in ihrer Zeit, 1985). As director of the Bach-Archiv in Leipzig, co-editor of the Bach-Jahrbuch and co-author of the Bach-Compendium (with Christoph Wolff, 1985–9), he has set a high standard for scholarly research that has influenced other specialists in the field.

WRITINGS

'Bemerkungen zu einigen Kantatentexten Johann Sebastian Bachs', BJb 1959, 168–70
'Marginalien zu einigen Bach-Dokumenten', BJb 1961, 79–99
ed.: Bach-Dokumente (Kassel, 1963–72) [i–ii with W. Neumann]
'Wer intavolierte Johann Sebastian Bachs Lautenkompositionen?', Mf, xix (1966), 32–9
'Johann Sebastian Bachs Kanonwidmungen', BJb 1967, 82–92
'Johann Sebastian Bach und Christian Gottlob Meissner', BJb 1968, 80–88
'Neuerkenntnisse zu einigen Kantatentexten Bachs auf Grund neuer biographischer Daten', Bach-Interpretationen, ed. M. Geck (Göttingen, 1969), 22–8
'Der Schreiber "Anonymus 400": ein Schüler Johann Sebastian Bachs', BJb 1972, 104–17
'J.S. Bach's Concerto-Arrangements for Organ: Studies or Commissioned Works?', Organ Yearbook, iii (1972), 4–13
'Johann Sebastian Bachs Konzertbearbeitungen nach Vivaldi und anderen: Studien- oder Auftragswerke?', DJbM, xviii (1973–7), 80–100
'Wie entstand die Bach-Sammlung Mempell-Preller?', BJb 1974, 104–22
'Die Bach-Überlieferung: Plädoyer für ein notwendiges Buch', BMw, xvii (1975), 45–57
'Ein "Drama per musica" als Kirchenmusik: zu Wilhelm Friedemann Bachs Aufführungen der Huldigungskantate BWV 205a', BJb 1975, 133–40
Johann Sebastian Bach: Leben und Werk in Dokumenten (Kassel, 1975, 4/1989)
'Johann Sebastian Bach und Georg Gottfried Wagner: neue Dokumente', Bach-Studien, v (1975), 147–54
'Melodiezitate und Mehrtextigkeit in der Bauernkantate und in den Goldberg-Variationen', BJb 1976, 58–72
ed.: Katalog der Sammlung Manfred Gorke: Bachiana und andere Handschriften und Drucke des 18. und frühen 19. Jahrhunderts (Leipzig, 1977)
'Neue Ermittlungen zu Johann Sebastian Bachs Vivaldi Bearbeitungen', Vivaldi Studien: Dresden 1978, 32–41
'"Das Stück in Goldpapier": Ermittlungen zu einigen Bach-Abschriften des frühen 18. Jahrhunderts', BJb 1978, 19–42
ed., with P. Ansehl and K. Heller: Beiträge zum Konzertschaffen Johann Sebastian Bachs: Rostock 1979 [incl. H.J. Schulze: 'Johann Sebastian Bachs Konzerte: Fragen der Überlieferung und Chronologie', 9–26]
'Ein "Dresdner Menuett" im zweiten Klavierbüchlein der Anna Magdalena Bach: nebst Hinweisen zur Überlieferung einiger Kammermusikwerke Bachs', BJb 1979, 45–64

'"50 Stück von den Bachische Erben": zur Überlieferung der vierstimmigen Chorale Johann Sebastian Bachs', BJb 1983, 81–100
'"Monsieur Schouster": eine vergessener Zeitgenosse Johann Sebastian Bachs', Bachiana et alia musicologica: Festschrift Alfred Dürr, ed. W. Rehm (Kassel, 1983),243–50
Studien zur Bach-Überlieferung im 18. Jahrhundert (Leipzig, 1984) ed.: Aufsätze über Johann Sebastian Bach: Auswahl aus den Jahrgängen 1904–1939 des Bach-Jahrbuchs (Kassel, 1985) with C. Wolff: Bach Compendium: Analytisch-bibliographisches Repertorium der Werke Johann Sebastian Bachs (Leipzig and Frankfurt, 1985–)
'Besitzstand und Vermögensverhältnisse von Leipziger Ratsmusikern zur Zeit Johann Sebastian Bachs', Beiträge zur Bachforschung, iv (1985), 33–46
'The B-Minor Mass: Perpetual Touchstone for Bach Research', Bach, Handel, Scarlatti: Tercentenary Essays, ed. P. Williams (Cambridge, 1985), 311–20
Ey! Wie schmeckt der Coffeé süsse: Johann Sebastian Bachs Kaffeé-Kantate in ihrer Zeit (Leipzig, 1985)
'The French Influence in Bach's Instrumental Music', EMc, xii (1985), 180–84
'Johann Christoph Bach (1671–1721): "Organist und Schul Collega in Ohrdruf": Johann Sebastian Bachs erster Lehrer', BJb 1985, 56–81
ed., with K. Beckmann: Johann Gottfried Walther: Briefe (Leipzig, 1987)
'Carl Philipp Emanuel Bachs Hamburger Passionsmusiken und ihr gattungsgeschichtlicher Kontext', Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach und die europäische Musikkultur: Hamburg 1988, 333–43
'Johann Sebastian Bach's Orchestra: some Unanswered Questions', EMc, xvii (1989), 3–15
'Bach's Secular Cantatas: a New Look at the Sources', Bach, xxi/1 (1990), 26–41
ed., with K. Heller: Das Frühwerk Johann Sebastian Bachs: Rostock 1990 [incl. 'Handhabung der Chromatik in Bachs frühen Tastenwerken', 70–86]
ed., with C. Wolff: Johann Sebastian Bach und der süddeutsche Raum: Munich 1990 [incl. '"Einer der ersten in Europa" … : Ammerkungen zur Wirkungsgeschichte Bachs', 55–60]
Bach stilgerecht aufführen: Wunschbild und Wirklichkeit: einige aufführungspraktische Aspekte von Johann Sebastian Bachs Leipziger Kirchenmusik (Wiesbaden, 1991)
'Bemerkungen zum zeit- und gattungsgeschichtlichen Kontext von Johann Sebastian Bachs Passionen', Johann Sebastian Bachs historischer Ort, ed. P. Szeskus (Wiesbaden, 1991), 202–15
'Bach-Überlieferung in Hamburg: der Quellenbesitz von Christian Gottlieb Schwenke (1767–1822)', BJb 1993, 69–80
'"O Jesu Christ, meins Lebens Licht": on the Transmission of a Bach Source and the Riddle of its Origin', A Bach Tribute: Essays in Honor of William H. Scheide, ed. P. Brainard and R. Robinson (Kassel and Chapel Hill, NC, 1993), 209–20
ed., with U. Leisinger and P. Wollny: Bachfest LXIX: Leipzig 1994 [incl. '"Heile Welt der Forschung": das Bach Jahrbuch', ii, pp.231–41]
'Markus Passion und kein Ende: zur angeblichen Passions-Cantate von Ph.E. Bach', George Friederich Händel: ein Lebensinhalt: Gedenkschrift für Bernd Baselt (1934–1993), ed. K. Hortschansky and K. Musketa (Kassel, 1995), 455–64
'J.S. Bach's Vocal Works in the Breitkopf Nonthematic Catalogs of 1761 to 1836', Bach Perspectives, ii (1996), 35–49
'Johann Sebastian Bach im Urteil Moritz Hauptmanns', Mf, l (1997), 18–23

CHRISTOPH WOLFF

Schumacher, (Hermann) Rüdiger (Hubertus) (b Beuel am Rhein, 23 June 1953). German ethnomusicologist. He studied musicology with Josef Kuckertz at Cologne University, with German language, Malaysian studies and dramaturgy as secondary subjects (MA 1979). He took the doctorate in comparative musicology in 1988 at the Freie Universität Berlin, where he taught comparative musicology (1980–86), he also lectured at the Musikhochschule in Hanover (1987–9) and at Kiel University (1985). He was appointed professor at Berlin in 1990, and later professor and head of the ethnomusicology department at Cologne University in 1994. He is president of the Maria Laach Institute for Hymnology and Ethnomusicology in Cologne and general secretary of the European Ethnomusicological Seminar (from 1997). In 1995 he was awarded the Jaap-Kunst prize for his musicological research in Java and Bali. Schumacher has carried out fieldwork in Java (1977 and 1990) and Bali (1981, 1983 and 1990). His writings focus on the classification song texts, the European influences in Javanese music and 18th- and 19th-century Balinese court traditions.

WRITINGS

Die Suluk-Gesänge des Dalang im Schattenspiel Zentraljavas (diss., U. of Cologne, 1979; Munich, 1980)
'Vokale Musizierformen in Bali/Indonesien: ein Klassifikationsversuch', GfMKB: Bayreuth 1981, 605–8
'Zur Adaptabilität traditioneller Musik an die katholische Liturgie: das Beispiel des Gamelan in Zentraljava (Indonesien)', Musices aptatio: liber annuarius 1982, 135–51
'Aji Ghūrṇita: eine balinesische Musiklehre', Jb für musikalische Volks- und Völkerkunde, xii, (1986), 13–49
'Paṭet Galong - ein vierter slĕndro-Modus in der Musik Zentraljavas?', Die deutsche Malaiologie: Festschrift zu Ehren von Frau Prof. Dr. Irene Hilgers-Hesse, ed. K.H. Pampus and B. Nothofer (Heidelberg, 1988), 197–211
'Gesungene Versepik in Bali: Historische Quellen und Geschichtsbewußtsein', Historische Volksmusikforschung: Göttingen 1991, 231–43
'Inkulturation oder Adaptation? Terminologische Grundfragen (auf dem Weg zu) einer Musica Sacra Indigena', Musicae sacrae ministerium, xxviii/1–2 (1991), 58–73 [incl. Eng. summary]
'Populäre Musikstile in den Stadtkulturen Javas', Musikalische Volkskultur in der Stadt der Gegenwart, ed. G. Noll and W. Schepping (Hanover, 1992), 171–9
ed.: Von der Vielfalt musikalischer Kultur: Festschrift für Josef Kuckertz (Salzburg, 1992) [incl. '"Bala Ugu" und "Aji Kĕmbang": zwei balinesische Gesänge zwischen den Gattungen', 465–86]
'Ex Occidente Lux? Drei javanische Gesangsnotationen in der Bibliothek des Sultanspalastes von Yogyakarta', 'Lux Oriente': Festschrift Robert Günther, ed. K.W. Niemöller and others (Kassel, 1995), 309–30
'Musical Concepts in Oral Performance of Kakawin in Bali', Bijdragen tot de taal-, land- en volkenkunde, cli (1995), 488–515
Wirāma: der gesungene Vortrag altjavanischer Versdichtung in Bali (forthcoming)

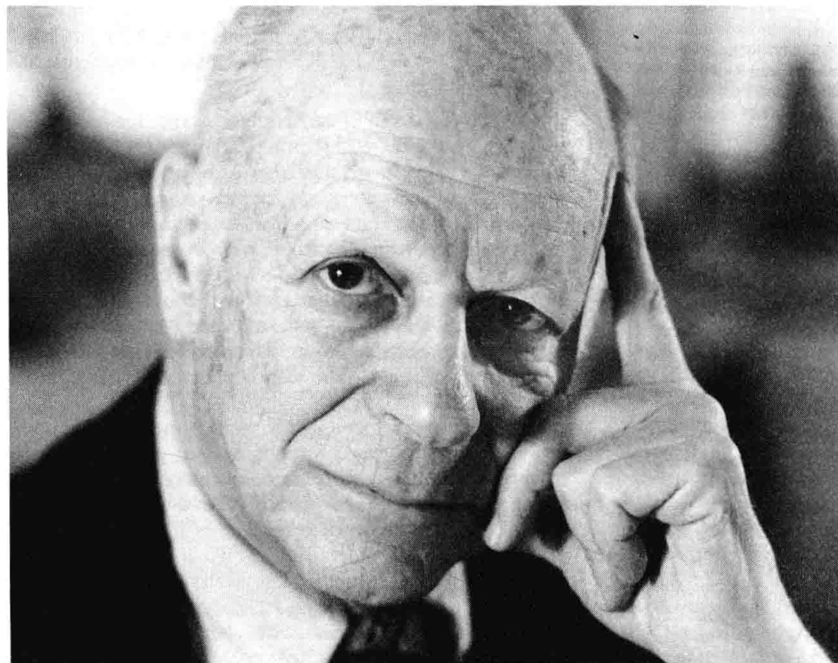
REGINE ALLGAYER-KAUFMANN

Schuman, William (Howard) (b New York, 4 Aug 1910; d New York, 15 Feb 1992). American composer, teacher and administrator.

1. LIFE. At the age of 16 Schuman wrote his first piece, a tango, and widened his practical experience by taking up various instruments and organizing and performing in jazz bands. He wrote many popular songs to lyrics by Edward B. Marks and Frank Loesser, including the latter's first published song, In Love with a Memory of You. After hearing Toscanini conduct the New York PO on 4 April 1930 Schuman abruptly left the School of Commerce of New York University, where he had been studying for two years, and began private harmony lessons with Max Persin and, in 1931, counterpoint lessons with Charles Haubiel in New York.



While Schuman continued to write popular music until 1934, his study and composing veered increasingly towards concert music. He took summer courses with Bernard Wagenaar and Adolf Schmid at the Juilliard School (1932, 1933), spent a summer in the conducting programme at the Salzburg Mozarteum (1935), and in 1933 enrolled in Columbia University Teachers College (BS 1935, MA 1937). During 1932–5 Schuman had begun composing seriously, and after hearing Roy Harris's Symphony 1933 he studied with Harris at Juilliard (summer 1936) and then privately (until 1938); Harris remained for some years an important influence on Schuman's orchestral music.

In 1938 Schuman won an American composition contest (in support of Republican Spain) with his Second Symphony. On the jury was Aaron Copland, who brought the work to the attention of Koussevitzky. Koussevitzky became a champion of Schuman's compositions, conducting the Second Symphony with the Boston SO in 1939, and first performances of the American Festival Overture (1939), the Symphony no.3 (1941, awarded the first New York Music Critics' Circle Award), A Free Song (1943, awarded the first Pulitzer Prize in music), and the Symphony for Strings (1943). The public and critical success of the Symphony no.3 established Schuman as a leading American composer and since that time his music has been widely performed. He remains among the most honoured figures in American music, having received 28 honorary degrees, 2 consecutive Guggenheim fellowships (1939–41), membership in the National Institute of Arts and Letters (1946) and later the American Academy of Arts and Letters (1973), the first Brandeis University Creative Arts Award in music (1957), the Horblit Award from the Boston SO and Harvard University (1980), the gold medal from the American Academy and Institute of Arts and Letters (1982) and a second, special Pulitzer prize (1985). Credendum (1955) was the first composition to be commissioned by the US government. In 1981 Columbia University established the William Schuman Award, a $50,000 prize to a composer for lifetime achievement; Schuman himself was the first recipient.

Schuman's work as a teacher and administrator has had wide and lasting influence. At Sarah Lawrence College, where he taught from 1935 to 1945, he initiated an approach to general arts instruction aiming at students' self-discovery of the nature of the creative process; he went on to evolve a similar approach to the teaching of other subjects, including composition. Schuman also conducted the chorus at Sarah Lawrence (1939–45), commissioning and composing works for women's voices. In 1945, after leaving Sarah Lawrence for a three-year term as director of publications at G. Schirmer, Schuman was invited to become president of the Juilliard School. He left the Schirmer position (though he remained as a special editorial consultant until 1952), and began an extensive reorganization of the School: he merged the Institute of Musical Art with the Juilliard Graduate School to form the Juilliard School of Music, founded the Juilliard String Quartet (which became the model for many quartets-in-residence at American colleges), revived the opera theatre, added a dance division, and, most importantly, instituted the 'Literature and Materials of Music' curricular programme, which fused theory and history into a single coherent four-year course with the music itself as the basis for study. An exposition of his approach to music education appeared as The Juilliard Report (1953). Schuman also invited a number of distinguished composers to join the faculty, among them Bergsma, R.F. Goldman, Peter Mennin, Norman Lloyd, Vincent Persichetti, Robert Starer, Robert Ward and Hugo Weisgall.

In 1962 Schuman was made president of the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, a position which gave him considerable influence in the administration of the arts and one which he exercised in a characteristically imaginative and forceful manner. He encouraged the commissioning and performing of American works, and the importance he placed on the centre's service to urban communities led to the Lincoln Center Student Program, which instituted concerts in schools and opened the centre's halls for young people's concerts. He founded the Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center, the Film Society and a summer series of special musical events. He fought a long and successful battle to have the Juilliard School housed in Lincoln Center and to add a drama division to its offerings. At the end of 1969 Schuman left his post at Lincoln Center to devote himself to composition, but he has continued to champion the cause of the arts as a public speaker and as an adviser to numerous organizations, including the Koussevitzky Foundation, the Naumburg Foundation and the Charles Ives Society. He was chairman of the MacDowell Colony (1974–7, 1980–83) and became honorary chairman in 1984; he was the founding chairman of the Norlin Foundation (1975–85). He received the Gold Baton Award of the American Symphony Orchestra League (1985), the National Medal of Arts (1987) and the Kennedy Center Honors (1989). Schuman continued to compose despite a painful inherited bone disease. He maintained his legendary personal charm and gifts as a public speaker to the end.

William Schuman, 1985

2. WORKS. While Schuman has written extensively in many media, his orchestral music, especially the symphonies, forms the core of his work. He employs a broad nonrepetitive cantilena, a tonal idiom ranging from nonfunctional triadic harmony to free melodic chromaticism and polytonality (aspects of diatonicism hold his interest even in later works), and expansive musical and orchestral gestures. The vigorous drive, febrile rhythms and bonhomie of the symphonies and the American Festival Overture are also characteristic. Schuman considers melody the main element in his work. Arching lines unfold and motifs reappear in new guises, generating new material; their harmonic clarity and buoyancy is retained by displacing rhythmically their repetitions. Schuman writes for full orchestra, which he generally uses in homogeneous groups, with similar material tossed from one choir to another. He is inclined to superimpose up to three distinct layers moving at different speeds: his slow movements often present rich successions of triads or polychords in the lower register with one or more weaving melodic strands above. In fast sections, principal melodies are frequently accompanied by sharp, rhythmically irregular chordal strokes. Fugato and ostinato procedures figure prominently, and the subjects of fugues and passacaglias may undergo substantial change during the course of a movement. Sections frequently begin with canonic statements of long, legato melodies, as in the Third and Ninth Symphonies. Other typical elements are timpani solos and almost apocalyptic finales.

Schuman's harmonic development can be traced through the symphonies. In the Third, chords built on major or minor triads with one or two nontriadic tones in a lower or high register predominate, as do melodic perfect 4ths; in the Symphony for Strings, more consistent use is made of polytriads; and in the Sixth Symphony (1948), perhaps Schuman's finest achievement, major-minor chords (a hallmark of Schuman's style) permeate the complex and chromatic texture. 12 years separated the Seventh from the Sixth Symphony, and during this period Schuman composed in diverse styles and for various forces; more probing works, such as the choral Carols of Death (1958), alternated with the 'baseball opera' The Mighty Casey (1951–3) and the popular New England Triptych (1956), based on hymn tunes by William Billings. The Triptych, its recastings for concert band and the many choral works are representative of Schuman's concern for indigenous American subjects and also for practical performance groups. He thought that his Seventh (1960), Eighth (1962) and Ninth (1968) Symphonies were 'somehow connected'; each lasting about half an hour, they share a brooding, chromatic idiom. In the Seventh and Eighth Schuman continued the new directions explored in the Carols. There are long stretches of harmonic stasis, and dense sonorities are insistently reiterated. In the first movement he unfolds a 12-note theme which soon fragments into 4-note cells, and uses material from a 1959 film score and his Three Piano Moods (1958). In the second movement of the Eighth, in which he also employs intervallic cells, a 12-note theme beginning with an inversion of B–A–C–H is featured. Slow, melancholy music predominates, as do march-like dotted rhythms, intense string adagios and bell-like sounds in the orchestra. The emotion-filled Ninth Symphony 'Le fosse ardeatine' (1968) is perhaps the finest of the later works; its dark and solemn mood, unity of form and detail, and slow–fast–slow plan recall the Sixth Symphony. During the 1960s he produced two smaller concertante works – A Song of Orpheus, based on a song of 1944 (Orpheus and his Lute), and To thee Old Cause, a bleak 'evocation', the first performance of which was given in memory of Martin Luther King, jr, and Robert Kennedy (3 October 1968).

Schuman's overall output appears ever more unified as works of the 1970s and 80s refer back to the forms, idioms, materials and even poets that concerned him earlier. Large-scale vocal pieces and vocally inspired works form a major part of his compositions after the mid-1970s. Concerto on Old English Rounds (1974), ostensibly a viola concerto, employs women's chorus and borrows primary material from the traditional round Amaryllis (which also provided the basis of the Amaryllis variations for string trio). In Sweet Music, a chamber work with voice of 1978, is an extensive reworking of the earlier song Orpheus and his Lute. In the introspective Three Colloquies (1979), for horn and orchestra, the soloist takes on a vocal eloquence; the work seems to reconcile the complex, elegiac harmonies of the Carols with the simpler though no less expressive idiom of Orpheus. American Hymn (1980) explores a more diatonic vein. The witty Esses: Short Suite for Singers on Words Beginning with S (1982) followed the more serious Perceptions (1982), a choral cycle on a text of Whitman. Schuman's last completed work, A Question of Taste (1987–9), was commissioned by Glimmerglass Opera, whose summer opera house is in Cooperstown, NY, the home of baseball's Hall of Fame. The one-act comedy was intended to complete a double bill with The Mighty Casey. Despite McClatchy's witty, rhymed libretto and Schuman's boisterous waltz (suggested by the plot), the music shares with the symphonies a slow, nostalgic lyricism.

WORKS

all published unless otherwise stated

DRAMATIC

Undertow (ballet, A. Tudor), 1945; New York, 10 April 1945, cond. Dorati

Night Journey (ballet, M. Graham), 1947; Cambridge, MA, 3 May 1947

Judith (ballet, Graham), 1949; Louisville, 4 Jan 1950, cond. R. Whitney

The Mighty Casey (op, 3 scenes, J. Gury, after E.L. Thayer), 1951–3; Hartford, CT, 4 May 1953, cond. M. Paranov; rev. as cant., 1976

Voyage for a Theater (ballet, Graham), 1953, unpubd; New York, 17 May 1953, cond. M. Sadoff [withdrawn]

The Witch of Endor (ballet, Graham), 1965, unpubd; New York, 2 Nov 1965, cond. R. Irving [withdrawn]

A Question of Taste (op, 1, J.D. McClatchy, after R. Dahl), 1987–9; Cooperstown, NY, 24 June 1989, cond. S. Robertson

Film scores, unpubd: Steeltown, 1944; The Earth is Born, 1959

ORCHESTRAL

9 syms.: no.1, 18 insts, 1935, unpubd [withdrawn]; no.2, 1937, unpubd [withdrawn]; no.3, 1941; no.4, 1941; no.5 (Sym. for Str), 1943; no.6, 1948; no.7, 1960; no.8, 1962; no.9 'Le fosse ardeatine', 1968; no.10 'American Muse', 1975

Other orch: Potpourri, 1932, unpubd [withdrawn]; Prelude and Fugue, 1937, unpubd [withdrawn]; Pf Conc., 1938, rev. 1942; American Festival Ov., 1939; Prayer in Time of War, 1943; William Billings ov., 1943, unpubd [withdrawn]; Variations on a Theme by Eugene Goossens, 1944, unpubd [no.5 in a set of 10 variations each by a different composer]; Circus Ov. (Side Show), small orch/full orch, 1944; Undertow, choreographic episodes, 1945 [from the ballet]; Vn Conc., 1947, rev. 1954, rev. 1958–9; Credendum, Article of Faith, 1955; New England Triptych, 1956; A Song of Orpheus, vc, orch, 1961, arr. vc, chbr orch, collab. J. Goldberg, 1978 [based on the song Orpheus and his Lute]; Variations on 'America', 1963, arr. band, 1968 [arr. of org work by Ives]; The Orchestra Song, 1963, arr. band as The Band Song; To thee Old Cause, evocation, ob, brass, timp, pf, str, 1968; In Praise of Shahn, canticle for orch, 1969; Voyage for Orch., 1972; Conc. on Old English Rounds, va, female chorus, orch, 1974; 3 Colloquies: 1 Rumination, 2 Renewal, 3 Remembrance, hn, orch, 1979; American Hymn, orch variations, 1980, arr. band, 1980; Night Journey, choreographic poem, 15 insts, 1981; Showcase – a Short Display for Orch, 1986; Let's Hear it for Lenny!, 1988

FOR WIND AND PERCUSSION ENSEMBLE
concert band unless otherwise stated

Newsreel, in Five Shots, 1941, arr. orch, 1942; George Washington Bridge, 1950; Chester Ov., 1956 [from New England Triptych]; When Jesus Wept, 1958 [from New England Triptych]; Philharmonic Fanfare, 1965, unpubd [withdrawn]; Dedication Fanfare, 1968; Anniversary Fanfare, brass, perc, 1969; Prelude for a Great Occasion, brass, perc, 1974; Be Glad then, America, 1975 [from New England Triptych]

VOCAL

Unacc. vocal: 4 Canonic Choruses (Chorale Canons): 1 Epitaph (Millay), 2 Epitaph for Conrad (C. Cullen), 3 Night Stuff (C. Sandburg), 4 Come Not (A. Tennyson), SATB, 1932–3; Pioneers! (W. Whitman), SSAATTBB, 1937 [withdrawn]; Choral Etude (wordless), SATB, 1937; The Orchestra Song (M. Farquhar, after Austrian trad.), any vv, 1939; Prelude (T. Wolfe), S, female chorus/SATB, 1939; Te Deum, SATB, 1944; Truth shall Deliver (Farquhar, after G. Chaucer), male chorus, 1946; 5 Rounds on Famous Words: 1 Health, 2 Thrift, 3 Caution, 4 Beauty, 5 Haste, tr vv/SATB, nos.1–4, 1956, no.5, 1969; Carols of Death (Whitman), 1 The Last Invocation, 2 The Unknown Region, 3 To All, to Each, SATB, 1958; Deo ac veritati, male chorus, 1963; Declaration Chorale (Whitman), SATB, 1971; Mail Order Madrigals (Sears Roebuck Catalogue, 1897): 1 Attention, Ladies!, 2 Superfluous Hair, 3 Sweet Refreshing Sleep, 4 Doctor Worden's Pills, SATB, 1971; To thy Love, choral fantasy on old Eng. rounds, SSA, 1973; Esses: Short Suite for Singers on Words Beginning with S, SATB, 1982; Perceptions (Whitman), cycle, SATB, 1982

Acc. vocal: Prologue (G. Taggard), SATB, orch, 1937; This is our Time (Secular Cant. no.1) (Taggard), SATB, orch, 1940; Requiescat, female chorus/SATB, pf, 1942; Holiday Song (Taggard), female vv/SATB, pf, 1942, arr. 1v, pf; A Free Song (Secular Cant. no.2) (Whitman), SATB, orch, 1942; Choruses from The Mighty Casey, SATB, pf 4 hands, 1953; The Lord Has a Child (L. Hughes), (SATB/female chorus/1v), pf, 1956, rev., SATB, brass qnt, 1990; The Young Dead Soldiers (A. Macleish), S, hn, ww, str, 1975; Casey at the Bat (cant.), S, Bar, chorus, orch, 1976 [rev. of opera]; In Sweet Music, serenade on a setting of Shakespeare, Mez, fl, va, hp, 1978 [based on the song Orpheus and his Lute]; On Freedom's Ground (cant., R. Wilbur), Bar, chorus, orch/band, 1985

1v, pf: God's World (E. St V. Millay), 1932; Orpheus and his Lute (W. Shakespeare), 1944, arr. vc, orch as A Song of Orpheus; Time to the Old (MacLeish): 1 The Old Gray Couple, 2 Conway Burying Ground, 3 Dozing on the Lawn, 1979

CHAMBER AND SOLO INSTRUMENTAL

Canon and Fugue, pf trio, 1934, unpubd [withdrawn]; 2 Pastorales, 1934, unpubd: no.1 (A, cl)/(2va/(vn, vc), no.2 (fl, ob, cl)/(fl, vn, vc) [withdrawn]; Str Qt no.1, 1936, unpubd [withdrawn]; Str Qt no.2, 1937; Quartettino, 4 bn, 1939; Str Qt no.3, 1939; Three-Score Set, pf, 1943; Str Qt no.4, 1950; Voyage: 1 Anticipation, 2 Caprice, 3 Realization, 4 Decision, 5 Retrospection, pf, 1953; 3 Piano Moods, 1958; Amaryllis, variations, str trio, 1964, arr. str orch; XXV Opera Snatches, tpt, 1978, arr. fl, 1985; Night Journey, various insts, 1980 [from ballet]; American Hymn, brass qnt, 1980; Dances, wind qnt, perc, 1984; Str Qt no.5, 1987; Awake, thou wintry Earth, cl, vn, 1986; Cooperstown Fanfare, 2 tpt, 2 trbn, 1987

Recorded interviews in US-NHob

Principal publishers: Associated, Boosey & Hawkes, Merion, Presser, G. Schirmer

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveA (B. Saylor) [incl. further bibliography]
J. Clark: 'William Schuman on his Symphonies: an Interview', American Music, iv/3 (1986), 328–36
J.E. Steele: William Schuman's 'Literature and Materials' Approach: a Historical Precedent for Comprehensive Musicianship (diss., of Florida, 1988)
M. Brown: 'Enduring Wisdom from William Schuman', The Instrumentalist, xlviii/4 (1993), 26–9
J.D. McClatchy: 'William Schuman: a Reminiscence', OQ, x/4 (1994), 21–37
K.G. Adams: William Schuman: a Bio-Bibliography (Westport, CT, 1998)
P. Rosenfeld: 'Copland, Harris, Schuman', MQ, xxv (1939), 372–81
L. Bernstein: 'William Schuman', MM, xix (1942), 97–9
N. Broder: 'The Music of William Schuman', MQ, xxxi (1945), 17–28
[R.F. Goldman]: The Juilliard Report (New York, 1953)
F.R. Schreiber and V. Persichetti: William Schuman (New York, 1954) [incl. further bibliography]
C. Rouse: William Schuman: Documentary (New York, 1980) [incl. list of works, discography, bibliography]

BRUCE SAYLOR

Schumann [née Wieck], Clara (Josephine) (b Leipzig, 13 Sept 1819; d Frankfurt, 20 May 1896). German pianist, composer and teacher. One of the foremost European pianists of the 19th century and the wife and champion of the music of Robert Schumann, she was also a respected composer and influential teacher.

1. Life. 2. Career as pianist and composer.

1. LIFE. Clara was the daughter of Marianne and Friedrich Wieck. Her father (1785–1873) studied theology at the University of Wittenberg and settled in Leipzig in about 1814. There he taught piano and established a business selling and lending music and pianos and repairing pianos. He rapidly acquired a reputation as an expert piano teacher. Clara's mother, Marianne Wieck (née Tromlitz) (1797–1872), was the daughter and granddaughter of musicians: her father, Georg Christian Tromlitz (1765–1825), was the town cantor in Plauen and her grandfather, Johann George Tromlitz, was a well-known flautist, flute maker and composer. She studied piano with Friedrich Wieck and married him in 1816. A gifted musician, she appeared both as a piano soloist and soprano soloist in the Leipzig Gewandhaus. She also helped out in her husband's business, taught piano, and bore five children in the eight years she was married to Wieck. The couple separated in 1824 and a divorce was granted within a few months. Because Clara and her brothers were legally considered the property of their father, they remained in his custody. Her mother married Adolph Bargiel (1783–1841), a musician with whom Wieck had studied briefly, and moved to Berlin; contact with her daughter was maintained through correspondence and occasional visits. In Berlin, both she and her husband taught piano; when he died in 1841, after several years of failing health, Marianne continued teaching to support herself and the four children of her second marriage. (Woldemar Bargiel, the composer and conductor, was Clara's half-brother).

Although Clara's general education was meagre, her musical education was superb: she studied piano with Wieck, religion and languages (under his supervision), and violin, theory, harmony, orchestration, counterpoint, fugue and composition with the best teachers in Leipzig, Dresden and Berlin; she attended every important concert, opera and drama given in Leipzig; and she copied Wieck's letters into her diary, thus learning how to conduct the business arrangements of a musical career. Until her 19th year, Wieck directed her education and her career, escorting her on tours in Germany and Austria and also Paris. His entries in her girlhood diaries chronicle her repertory and concerts and the musical life of the 1830s. Though her father was high-handed and despotic, even cruel at times, his role as Clara's mentor and manager cannot be minimized and she herself acknowledged it frequently. In a letter of 1894, she wrote:

> My father had to put up with being called a tyrant; however, I still thank him for it every day; I have him to thank for the freshness that has remained with me in my old age (at least in my art). It was also a blessing for me that he was exceedingly strict, that he reprimanded me when I deserved it and in so doing, prevented me from becoming arrogant from the praise the world showered on me. At times the rebuke was bitter, but it was still good for me! (Litzmann, iii, p.585).

Clara Wieck played in the Leipzig Gewandhaus when she was nine, made her formal solo début there aged 11, performed in Paris when she was 12, and dazzled audiences in Vienna when she was 18. She was appointed k.k. Kammervirtuosin to the Austrian court and an honorary member of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde. The young prodigy met, played for, and was admired by the leading musicians and celebrities of the day including Goethe, Paganini, Louis Spohr, and younger musicians such as Chopin, Liszt and Mendelssohn.

Following a legendary legal battle with her father who refused to consent to her marriage, Clara Wieck and Robert Schumann, whom she had known since childhood, wed in 1840. At the time, he was a relatively unknown composer while she was already a pianist with an international reputation. The Schumanns settled first in Leipzig and subsequently in Dresden and Dusseldorf. Between 1841 and 1854 they had eight children: Marie (1841–1929), Elise (1843–1928), Julie (1845–72), Emil (1846–7), Ludwig (1848–99), Ferdinand (1849–91), Eugenie (1851–1938), Felix (1854–79), but Clara carried on performing, composing and teaching. Her husband, whose growing mental illness had been a cause for concern for many years, attempted suicide in 1854 and was hospitalized in Endenich, where he died in July 1856. Forbidden by his doctors to visit him during the two and a half years he was in the sanatorium, she saw him only during the last days of his life.

After her husband's death, Clara resumed her concert tours, no longer a glamorous young woman but a solemn 'priestess' of the art. Dressed in black, unsmiling and performing 'serious' music, aged 37, she devoted herself to her husband's memory and music. During her long years of widowhood, she took on more tasks related to her husband and his work: she edited the authoritative Gesamtausgabe of his work (with the help of Johannes Brahms and a group of trusted friends), prepared an instructive edition of his piano compositions, arranged and transcribed a number of his piano and vocal works, and edited a volume of his Jugendbriefe.

1. Clara Wieck: portrait by an unknown artist, 1835 (Robert-Schumann-Haus, Zwickau)

The marriage of Robert and Clara Schumann was a rare partnership: the two musicians studied scores together and read poetry for possible settings; she arranged many of his instrumental works for piano and acted as rehearsal pianist for groups he conducted. Robert Schumann paid homage to her in the many quotations from her works that appear in his own. Through her concert tours in Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Switzerland, Russia, England (she made 19 trips to the British Isles), Robert Schumann's work became known to the musical world. Almost without exception, Clara played at the première of each work he wrote for or with piano; and almost all his orchestral works were introduced in concerts in which she was the solo artist.

In 1878 Clara Schumann became principal teacher of piano at the Hoch Conservatory in Frankfurt, but did not relinquish her performing career. Her presence attracted students from all over the world and especially from England, where she was an immensely popular performer. She made her last public appearance as a pianist in 1891 but continued to teach until her death in 1896.

Clara Schumann's life was one of musical triumph and personal tragedy. The divorce of her parents and consequent loss of her mother in her early childhood, the bitter struggle with her father over her marriage, the mental illness and early death of her husband, the illness of one son who was incarcerated in a mental hospital for over 40 years, and the loss of four children who predeceased her, all made their mark on her character and personality. She supported her children and grandchildren by her earnings and worked unceasingly, acting as agent and impresario for her own concerts. Pauline Viardot, Jenny Lind, Felix Mendelssohn and especially Joseph Joachim and Johannes Brahms were among her closest musical associates. The Schumanns met Brahms shortly before Robert's hospitalization and he became a lifelong, devoted friend. She helped advance his career by playing his works when he was young and unknown and he, in turn, assisted her with decisions on family, career, composing and editing.

2. Career as pianist and composer. Clara Schumann was considered the peer of such keyboard giants as Liszt, Thalberg and Anton Rubinstein and dubbed Europe's 'Queen of the Piano'. She carried on a brilliant career for over 60 years, and her playing was characterized by masterful technique, beautiful tone and poetic spirit. Because of her reputation and long years on the stage, she had a great influence on concert life and pianism in the 19th century. As a young woman, she was one of the few pianists to perform music from memory and, with Liszt, one of the first pianists to give solo concerts without assisting artists. Following her example, concerts became shorter and fewer works were offered so that greater attention could be given to individual pieces. Her attention to the composer's text, in an age of improvisation and embellishments on the score, was almost unique. In her hands, the piano recital became an event in which public attention was focussed on the composer rather than the virtuoso performer. (A collection of 1299 programmes of concerts she gave between 1828 and 1891 is held in the Robert-Schumann-Haus in Zwickau.)

In her girlhood concerts, Clara Wieck performed bravura works by such popular composers of the day as Johann Peter Pixis, Henri Herz, Frédéric Kalkbrenner and Liszt, but as she matured, and especially after her marriage, she began to present balanced programmes of works from the 18th and 19th centuries. In an age when the great virtuoso pianists gave entire concerts of their own works, she introduced J.S. Bach, Domenico Scarlatti, Beethoven and Schubert to audiences accustomed to showy variations on popular and operatic melodies. Clara Schumann was one of the first pianists in Europe to perform the music of Chopin and she frequently included Mendelssohn's music. Since Robert Schumann was the only composer of piano music among his contemporaries who did not perform in public, she took on this task for him, beginning at the age of 12 when she gave the first performance of his Papillons.

QUEEN'S CONCERT ROOMS, HANOVER SQUARE.

Programme of MADAME CLARA
SCHUMANN'S
Pianoforte Recital,
TUESDAY, JUNE 17, 1856,
Commencing at Three o'Clock precisely.

BEETHOVEN.
VARIATIONS IN E FLAT ON A THEME FROM THE EROICA SYMPHONY.

STERNDALE BENNETT.
TWO DIVERSIONS (Op. 17.)
SUITE DE PIÈCES (No. 1, Op. 24.)

CLARA SCHUMANN.
VARIATIONS ON A THEMA (AUS DEN BUNTEN BLATTERN) OF ROBERT SCHUMANN.

JOHANNES BRAHMS.
SARABANDE AND GAVOTTE (IN THE STYLE OF BACH), AND SCARLATTI.

CLAVIERSTÜCK IN A MAJOR.

ROBERT SCHUMANN.
*CARNEVAL (SCÈNES MIGNONES, Op. 9.)
PRÉAMBULE, PIERROT, ARLEQUIN, VALSE NOBLE, PAPILLONS, LETTRES DANSANTES, CHIARINA, CHOPIN, RECONNAISSANCE, PANTALON ET COLOMBINE, VALSE ALLEMANDE ET PAGANINI, PROMÉNADE, PAUSE, MARCHE OF THE DAVIDSBÜNDLE AGAINST THE PHILISTINES.

Stalls, 10s. 6d. Tickets, 7s.
To be had of Madame Schumann, 20, Upper Gloucester Place, Dorset Square; of Leader and Cock, 63, New Bond Street, corner of Brook Street; and of the principal Musicsellers.
Carriages to be ordered at Half-past Four.
[* SEE OVER

2. Programme of a concert given by Clara Schumann at the Hanover Square Rooms, London, 17 June 1856

Critics and audiences were almost uniformly respectful and admiring, as is indicated by this review from London near the end of her career:

> We think we are correct in saying that no pianist ever before retained so powerful a hold upon the public mind for so long a period ... Madame Schumann's character, intellect and training saved her from becoming a mere partisan: though for years she has been acknowledged unequal as an exponent of Schumann's music, yet one always hears of her wonderful interpretations of Bach, Mozart and Beethoven. By her modesty, prudence and talents she has gradually achieved a veritable triumph (MT, 1 April 1884).

The composer-pianist was an accepted phenomenon in the early 19th century. In her first solo concert at the Leipzig Gewandhaus, the 11-year-old Clara Wieck played her own Variationen über ein Originalthema as well as works by Herz, Kalkbrenner and Czerny. Throughout her girlhood years, she astonished audiences as much by her compositions as by her playing. Almost every concert in the 1830s featured one or more of her own works and often included improvisations, a skill expected of all keyboard performers in the early 19th century. Some examples of her improvisations (referred to as 'praeludieren' and 'fantasieren' in reviews) were preserved by her at the urging of her daughters but were not published in her lifetime.

Beginning with her four Polonaises op.1 (1831), almost all her works were published and favourably reviewed. In the use of bold harmonies, adventurous modulations, rhythmic freedom and the genres she chose, her compositions reflect the advanced tendencies of their day and resemble the works of other young composers of the new Romantic school such as Robert Schumann, Mendelssohn and Chopin. Outstanding among the works of her girlhood is her Piano Concerto op.7 (dedicated to Louis Spohr), which she began at the age of 13 and first performed three years later at the Leipzig Gewandhaus under Mendelssohn's direction. It is a dramatic and innovative work, a record of her own virtuosity and independent musical thinking.

Her early compositions fall into two broad categories: such virtuosic audience-pleasers as Romance variée op.3 and Souvenir de Vienne op.9, and the imaginative, poetically conceived character pieces such as opp.5 and 6 (issued together as Soirées musicales: 10 pièces caractéristiques), which were inspired by the music of Chopin, Schumann and Mendelssohn. After her marriage her compositional style changed; she herself was maturing as an artist and the daily involvement with Robert and their joint studies influenced her work. She wrote fewer character-pieces and turned, as Robert Schumann had, to songs; three (Am Strande, Volkslied and Ich stand in dunkeln Träumen) were presented to her husband on their first Christmas together. These were followed by four songs, three of which (op.12) were incorporated in a joint collection (Robert Schumann's op.37). All her lieder, including some until recently unpublished, are expressive and powerful contributions to the genre.

The piano and chamber works in larger, more classically structured forms (for example the Sonata in G minor, the Piano Trio and the three Preludes and Fugues) were among the works written after her marriage. The Trio op.17 is probably her greatest achievement. Written in 1846, at a time of great stress, it has an autumnal, melancholy quality, and demonstrates a mastery of sonata form and polyphonic techniques.

Although Robert Schumann encouraged his wife's composition and contacted publishers for her, his creative work took priority over hers, and for many years her composing and practising were relegated to hours when her husband would not be disturbed. Despite her obvious gifts, she ceased composing after Robert's death (apart from a march composed for a friend's anniversary in 1879); the reasons for this have been a matter of continual speculation. After her death, her reputation as a pianist and teacher endured but her compositions were generally ignored, although interest in her creative work revived in the 1970s when the first recordings began to appear. Since that time, the discography of her works has grown to over 100 recordings, editions of published and previously unpublished pieces have appeared, and broadcasts and concert performances of Clara Schumann compositions have increased.

Clara Schumann arranged works by Brahms and William Sterndale Bennett for piano. Published arrangements and editions of Robert Schumann compositions include the vocal score of the opera Genoveva (1851), Studies for the Pedal-Piano from opp.56 and 58 (1896), a four-hand arrangement of his Piano Quintet, op.44 (1858) and transcriptions for piano of a number of songs (1873).

WORKS

Editions: Clara Schumann: Romantische Klaviermusik, ed. F. Goebels, i (Heidelberg, 1967); ii (Heidelberg, 1976) [G i, ii]
Clara Wieck Schumann: Selected Piano Music (New York, 1979 [repr. of Leipzig and Vienna edn, 1836–46]) [S]
Clara Wieck-Schumann: Ausgewählte Klavierwerke, ed. J. Klassen (Munich, 1987) [K]
Clara Schumann: Sämtliche Lieder, ed. J. Draheim and B. Höft, i (Wiesbaden, 1990); ii (Wiesbaden, 1992) [D i, ii]
Clara Schumann: Seven Songs, ed. K. Norderval (Bryn Mawr, PA, 1993) [N]
Clara Wieck: Frühe Klavierwerke, ed. G. Nauhaus and J. Draheim (Hofheim, 1997) [ND] printed works published in Leipzig unless otherwise stated

MSS in D-Bsb, Dl and Zsch

ORCHESTRAL AND CHAMBER

op.

7 Piano Concerto, a, orch/qnt acc., 1833–6 (1837), ed. J. Klassen (Wiesbaden, 1990); arr. for 2 pf, ed. K. Smith (Bryn Mawr, PA, 1993); arr. for 2 pf, ed. V. Erber (Wiesbaden, 1993)

17 Piano Trio, g, 1846 (1847); (Munich, 1972/R)

— Piano Concerto, f, 1847, sketch D-Zsch; completed and orchd as Konzertsatz, ed. J. De Beenhouwer and G. Nauhaus (Wiesbaden, 1994)

22 Drei Romanzen, vn, pf, D♭, g, B♭, 1853 (1855) (Wiesbaden, 1983/R)

PIANO

1 Quatre Polonaises, E♭, C, D, C, 1829–30 (1831), ed. B. Hierholzer (Berlin, 1987)

— Etude, A♭, early 1830s, Bsb

2 Caprices en forme de valse, 1831–2 (Paris and Leipzig, 1832)

3 Romance variée, C, 1831–3 (1833), G ii

4 Valses romantiques, 1835 (1835)

5 Quatre pièces caractéristiques, 1833–6 (1836), S, K, G ii [no.3]: 1. Impromptu, Le sabbat; 2. Caprice à la boléros; 3. Romance; 4. Scène fantastique; Ballet des revenants; no.1 as Hexentanz (Vienna, 1838), nos.1–4 with op.6 as Soirées musicales (1838)

6 Soirées musicales, 1834–6 (1836), S, K [4 pieces]: Toccatina, Ballade, Nocturne, Polonaise, 2 Mazurkas; reissued with op.5 (1838)

8 Variations de concert sur la cavatine du Pirate de Bellini, 1837 (Vienna, 1837), S

9 Souvenir de Vienne, Impromptu, G, 1838 (Vienna, 1838)

10 Scherzo, d, 1838 (1838), S, K

11 Trois romances, e♭, g, A♭, 1838–9 (Vienna, 1840), G ii, S, K; no.2 also pubd as Andante und Allegro, NZM, vi (1839), suppl.7

14 Deuxième scherzo, c, after 1841 (1845), G ii

15 Quatre pièces fugitives, F, a, D, G, 1841–44 (1845), G ii; ed. J. Draheim (Wiesbaden, 1994)

— Sonata, g, 1841–2: Allegro, Adagio, Scherzo, Rondo [orig. titled Sonatine; Scherzo identical with op.15 no.4]; ed. G. Nauhaus (Wiesbaden, 1991)

— Impromptu, E, before 1884, in Album du Gaulois (Paris, 1885)

16 Drei Präludien und Fugen, g, B♭, d, 1845 (1845), G i, S; ed. B. Harbach (Pullman, 1994), ed. S. Glickman (Bryn Mawr, 1997)

— Three fugues on Themes of J.S. Bach, E♭, E, g, 1845, ed. V. Goertzen (New York, 1999)

— Praeludium und Fuga, f♯, 1845, ed. V. Goertzen (New York, 1999)

— Präludium, f, 1845, Bsb

20 Variationen … über ein Thema von Robert Schumann, f♯, 1853 (1854), G i, K

21 Drei Romanzen, a, F, g, 1853–5 (1855), K, G i [no.1], G ii [no.3]; ed. J. Draheim (Wiesbaden, 1983/R)

— Romanze, a, 1853, in Girl's Own Paper (London, 1891), K

— Romanze, b, 1856, G ii

— March, 1879, Zsch, first public perf., Frankfurt, Oct 1888; arr. 4 hands, ed. G. Nauhaus (Wiesbaden, 1996); orchd J.O. Grimm, 1888, Zsch

— Präludien und Vorspiele, improvisations written out 1895, Bsb, Zsch, Praeludien, ed. V. Goertzen (New York, 1999)

VOCAL

— Der Abendstern, early 1830s, Zsch, D ii

— Walzer (J. Lyser), 1833 (1833), D ii

12 Three songs (F. Rückert), 1841 (1841), D i: Er ist gekommen, Liebst du um Schönheit, Warum willst du and're fragen [pubd as nos. 2, 4, 11 of 12 Gedichte aus Friedrich Rückert's 'Liebesfrühling' für Gesang und Pianoforte von Robert und Clara Schumann; other nos. = R. Schumann, op.37]

— Am Strande (R. Burns, trans. Gerhard), 1840, NZM, viii (1841), suppl.14; D ii

— Volkslied (H. Heine), 1840, Zsch, D ii, N

— Die gute Nacht (Rückert), 1841, Zsch, D ii, N

13 Sechs Lieder, 1840–43 (1844), D i: Ich stand in dunkeln Träumen (Heine) [also in D ii as Ihr Bildnis], Sie liebten sich beide (Heine) [also in D ii], Liebeszauber (E. Geibel), Der Mond kommt still gegangen (Geibel), Ich hab' in deinem Auge (Rückert), Die stille Lotosblume (Geibel)

— Loreley (Heine), 1843, Zsch, D ii, N

— O weh des Scheidens (Rückert), 1843, Zsch, D ii, N

— O Thou my Star (F. Serre), 1846 (London, 1848) [= trans. of Mein Stern, Zsch, D ii, N]

— Beim Abschied (Serre), 1846, Zsch, D ii, N

— Drei gemischte Chöre (Geibel), SATB, 1848: Abendfeyer in Venedig, Vorwärts, Gondoliera; ed. G. Nauhaus (Wiesbaden, 1989)

23 Sechs Lieder aus Jucunde (H. Rollett), 1853 (1856), D i: Was weinst du Blümlein, An einem lichten Morgen, Geheimes Flüstern, Auf einem grünen Hügel, Das ist ein Tag, O Lust, O Lust

— Das Veilchen (J.W. von Goethe), 1853, Bsb, D ii, N

Doubtful: Der Wanderer in der Sägemühle, D ii; Der Wanderer, 1831 (J. Kerner), D ii

CADENZAS

— 2 for Beethoven: Pf Conc., G, op.58, 1846 (1870)

— 1 for Beethoven: Pf Conc., c, op.37, 1868 (1870)

— 2 for Mozart: Pf Conc., d, K466, n.d. (1891)

JUVENILIA
all lost

cited in C. Schumann's diary, programmes and Albumblätter

Orch: Scherzo, 1830–31; Ov., ?1833; orch version of op.4
Songs: Der Traum, 1831 (C.A. Tiedge); Alte Heimath, 1831 (J. Kerner); others listed as Lied/Lieder on programmes from 1830 on Pf: Waltz, 1828; Variationen über ein Originalthema, 1830; Variationen über ein Tyrolerlied, 1830; Phantasie-Variationen über ein Wieck Romanze, 1830–31; An Alexis, 1832; Rondo, b, 1833; other works mentioned, incl. Capriccio, chorales, variations, scherzos, impromptus, n.d.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ADB (C. Krebs); FétisB; Grove1 (G. Grove); GroveW (N.B. Reich) [incl. further bibliography]; MGG1 (I. Fellinger); SchillingE
F. Wieck: Clavier und Gesang: Didaktisches und Polemisches (Leipzig, 1853); Eng. trans. as Piano and Singing: Didactical and Polemical for Professionals and Amateurs (Aberdeen, 1875); as Piano and Song: How to Teach, How to Learn, and How to Form a Judgment of Musical Performances (Boston, 1875)
B. Litzmann: Clara Schumann: ein Künstlerleben nach Tagebüchern und Briefen, i (Leipzig, 1902, 8/1925), ii (1905, 7/1925), iii (1908, 6/1923); Eng. trans., abridged (London, 1913/R)
Johannes Joachim and A. Moser, eds.: Briefe von und an Joseph Joachim (Berlin, 1911–13; Eng. trans., abridged, 1914/R)
F. May: The Girlhood of Clara Schumann: Clara Wieck and her Time (London, 1912)
E. Schumann: Erinnerungen (Stuttgart, 1925); Eng. trans. as The Memoirs of Eugenie Schumann (London, 1927/R) and The Schumanns and Johannes Brahms: the Memoirs of Eugenie Schumann (New York, 1927)
B. Litzmann, ed.: Clara Schumann–Johannes Brahms Briefe aus den Jahren 1853–1896 (Leipzig, 1927; Eng. trans., abridged, 1927/R)
A. de Lara: 'Clara Schumann's Teaching', ML, xxvi (1945), 143–7
K. Walch-Schumann, ed.: Friedrich Wieck: Briefe aus den Jahren 1830–1838 (Cologne, 1968)
Robert Schumann: Tagebücher, i: (1827–1838), ed. G. Eismann (Leipzig, 1971, 2/1987); ii: (1836–1854), ed. G. Nauhaus (Leipzig, 1987) [excerpts trans. P. Ostwald; see Nauhaus, 1994]; iii: Haushaltbücher (1837–1856), ed. G. Nauhaus (Leipzig, 1982)
P. Ostwald: 'Florestan, Eusebius, Clara, and Schumann's Right Hand', 19CM, iv, (1980–81), 17–31
J. Chissell: Clara Schumann: a Dedicated Spirit (London, 1983)
N.B. Reich and A. Burton: 'Clara Schumann: Old Sources, New Readings', MQ, lxx (1984), 332–54
E. Weissweiler, ed.: Clara und Robert Schumann Briefwechsel: kritische Gesamtausgabe, 1832–1838, i (Basle, 1984), ii (Basle, 1987); trans. H. Fritsch and R.L. Crawford as The Complete Correspondence of Clara and Robert Schumann (New York, 1994)
N.B. Reich: Clara Schumann: the Artist and the Woman (Ithaca, NY, 1985, rev. 2/2000)
A. Burton: 'A Psychoanalyst's View of Clara Schumann', Psychoanalytic Explorations in Music (Madison, CT, 1990), 97–113
J. Klassen: Clara Wieck-Schumann: die Virtuosin als Komponistin (Kassel, 1990)
D.-R. Moser, ed.: Mein liebes Julchen: Briefe von Clara Schumann an ihre Enkeltochter Julie Schumann (Munich, 1990)
R. Hofmann and H. Schmidt, eds.: Das Berliner Blumentagebuch der Clara Schumann, 1857–1859 (Wiesbaden, 1991)
P.-A. Koch: Clara Wiek-Schumann (1819–1896): Kompositionen. Eine Zusammenstellung der Werke, Literatur und Schallplaten (Frankfurt, 1991)
C. Macdonald: 'Critical Perception and the Woman Composer: the Early Reception of Piano Concertos by Clara Wieck Schumann and Amy Beach', Current Musicology, lv (1993), 24–55
B.R. Appel, I. Hermstrüwer and G. Nauhaus, eds.: Clara und Robert Schumann: zeitgenössische Porträts (Düsseldorf, 1994)
B. Borchard: Clara Schumann: ihr Leben (Frankfurt, 1994)
G. Nauhaus, ed.: The Marriage Diaries of Robert and Clara Schumann, trans. P. Ostwald (London, 1994)
S.D. Lindeman: 'Clara Wieck: Piano Concerto in A minor, op.7', Structural Novelty and Tradition in the Early Romantic Piano Concerto (Stuyvesant, NY, 1999), 129–40
I. Bodsch and C. Nauhaus, eds.: Clara Schumann 1819–1896: Katalog zur Ausstellung (Bonn, 1996)
C. De Vries: Die Pianistin Clara Wieck-Schumann: Interpretation im Spannungsfeld von Tradition und Individualität (Mainz, 1996)
V.W. Goertzen: 'By Way of Introduction: Preluding by 18th and 19th Century Pianists', JM, xiv (1996), 299–337
R. Hofmann, ed.: Clara Schumanns Briefe an Theodor Kirchner: mit einer Lebensskizze des Komponistens (Tutzing, 1996)
E. Ostleitner and U. Simek, eds.: Ich fahre in mein liebes Wien: Clara Schumann – Fakten, Bilder, Projektionen (Vienna, 1996)
E. Wendler, ed.: 'Das band der ewigen Liebe': Clara Schumanns Briefwechsel mit Emilie und Elise List (Stuttgart, 1996)
S. Avins: 'Johannes Brahms and Clara Schumann', Johannes Brahms: Life and Letters (Oxford, 1997), 757–68
G. Nauhaus, ed.: Schumann Studien 6 (Sinzig, 1997)
M. Steegmann, ed.: ' ... dass Gott mir ein Talent geschenkt': Clara Schumanns Briefe an Hermann Härtel und Richard und Helene Schöne (Zürich, 1997)
V.W. Goertzen: 'Setting the Stage: Clara Schumann's Preludes', In the Course of Performance: Studies in the World of Musical Improvisation, ed. B. Nettl (Chicago, 1998), 237–60
P. Ackermann and H. Schneider, eds.: Clara Schumann, Komponistin, Interpretin, Unternehmerin, Ikone (Hildesheim, 1999)

NANCY B. REICH

Schumann, Elisabeth (b Merseburg an der Saale, 13 June 1888; d New York, 23 April 1952). German soprano, naturalized American. She studied with Natalie Hänisch, Marie Dietrich and Alma Schadow. She made her dêbut at the Neues Stadt-Theater, Hamburg, as the Shepherd in Tannhäuser, in 1909, and she remained a member of the Hamburg company until 1919, when Richard Strauss persuaded her to join the Vienna Staatsoper. There she became a firm favourite and stayed with the company until 1938, when she left Austria shortly after the Anschluss.

She was first heard at Covent Garden in 1924, when she had a great success as Sophie in Der Rosenkavalier; after that she made many appearances there in this and in Mozartian parts. Her beautifully controlled high soprano of delicate, ringing timbre and of crystalline purity, and her charming stage presence made her a delightful Susanna, Blonde, Zerlina and Despina. Strauss's Sophie has also remained inseparably linked with her name, especially for her delivery of those long, soaring pianissimo phrases with which Sophie acknowledges the gift of the rose at the beginning of the second act; it seemed as though the composer must have had just such a quality of voice in mind when writing the part. Her Eva in Die Meistersinger, though the part taxed her strength, was charmingly youthful and lyrical; her Adele in Bruno Walter's revival of Die Fledermaus was a delicious essay in flirtatious gaiety. In the recital hall her popularity was even greater, and Strauss was so delighted by her singing of his songs that he toured the USA with her in 1921. Her emotional range as a lieder singer was to some extent restricted by the light weight and silvery tone of her voice; but within her chosen limits, and especially in the more lyrical and playful songs of Schubert, she was inimitable. She was also much admired as a Bach singer.

From 1938 Schumann made her home in New York, where she had sung Sophie and several other parts (including a triumphant Musetta) at the Metropolitan during the single season of 1914–15. In 1945 she reappeared in Britain at the Royal Albert Hall, and in 1947 took part in the first Edinburgh Festival; and she gave many subsequent recitals, besides teaching and singing at the Bryanston Summer School of Music. The passing years dealt lightly with her voice, and to the end it was rare for her to produce a note which was not of beautiful quality. Her many records, especially the famous abridged version of Der Rosenkavalier and the long series of lieder by Schubert, Schumann and others, are among the happiest of their kind ever made.

Elisabeth Schumann as Sophie in Richard Strauss's 'Der Rosenkavalier', Hamburg, 1911

The second of her three marriages was to Karl Alwin (1891–1945), a conductor at the Vienna Staatsoper and pianist, who often accompanied her in recitals and recordings.

WRITINGS

German Song (London, 1948/R)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Puritz: The Teaching of Elisabeth Schumann (London, 1956)
A. Mathis: 'Elisabeth Schumann', Opera, xxiv (1973), 672–80, 783–93, 968–79
F. Juynboll and J. Seddon: 'Elisabeth Schumann Discography', Record Collector, xxxiii (1988), 55–116
G. Puritz: Elisabeth Schumann (London, 1993) [incl. discography]

DESMOND SHAWE-TAYLOR

Schumann, Frederic Theodor (fl London, 1760–80). German composer, guitarist and player of the musical glasses. He appeared in London early in the 1760s (when numerous German musicians were attracted by the court of Queen Charlotte) and performed there on the musical glasses at least from October 1761. The dedication (to the queen) of his harpsichord concertos op.4 (*c*1769) indicates that he had performed on the glasses at court. He may also have played Franklin's new instrument (Pohl listed him as a performer on the glass harmonica); if so he was one of its earliest performers, along with Marianne Davies. His works, several collections of which were reprinted on the Continent, comprise mainly harpsichord sonatas and simple guitar pieces for students and amateurs. The first keyboard sonatas (op.3) are curious in their fluid, improvisatory character, suggesting at once the composer's orientation to the guitar and the example of C.P.E. Bach's fantasias. Simplification in his next keyboard works suggests the influence of fashionable London publications, including sonatas by Abel and J.C. Bach. The accompanied sonatas op.5 are scored like contemporary keyboard concertos; also unusual is the instrumentation in the string trios op.8.

WORKS

published in London unless otherwise stated

Inst: 38 Lessons with … 6 French & Italian Songs, gui, op.1 (1763); A Collection of the Most Celebrated Songs, arr. gui (*c*1763); A 2nd Set of Lessons, gui/2 gui, op.2 (*c*1765); 3 Sonatas, hpd, vn/fl, op.3 (*c*1768); A Second Set of English, French and Italian Songs, arr. gui (*c*1768); 4 Concs., hpd, 2 vn, vc, op.4 (*c*1769); 6 Sonatas, pf/hpd, 2 vn, vc, op.5 (*c*1770); A 2nd Set of 6 Sonatas, hpd/pf, vn, op.7 (*c*1772); 6 Sonatas, 3 for vn, 2 vc, 3 for fl/vn, vn, vc, op.8 (*c*1773), as op.1 (Amsterdam, 1773); A 3rd Set of 6 Sonatas, hpd/pf, vn, op.9 (*c*1777)
Songs: The Address (*c*1770); Haughty Strephon (*c*1770)

Gui solos, op.6, and canzonets, op.10, listed by Gerber

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; GerberL; GerberNL
C.F. Pohl: Mozart und Haydn in London (Vienna, 1867/R)
P. Bone: The Guitar and the Mandoline (London, 2/1954/R)
R. Kidd: 'The Emergence of Chamber Music with Obbligato Keyboard in England', AcM, xliv (1972), 122–44, esp. 138
Z.E. Pixley: The Keyboard Concerto in London Society, 1760–1790 (diss., U. of Michigan, 1986)

RONALD R. KIDD

Schumann, Georg (Alfred) (b Königstein, Saxony, 25 Oct 1866; d Berlin, 23 May 1952). German composer and conductor. He was taught the violin by his father and the organ by his grandfather, playing in the Königstein orchestra at the age of nine and serving as town organist at 12. After initial piano studies in Dresden, he studied the piano and composition under Reinecke, Jadassohn and Zwintscher at the Leipzig Conservatory (1882–8). He was director of the Danzig Gesangverein (1890–96) and of the Bremen Philharmonische Gesellschaft (1896–9). In 1900 he was appointed director of the Berlin Sing-Akademie with the title of royal professor, and he remained with that organization for 50 years, touring extensively and developing a highly individual style of choral performance. Appointed to the Preussische Akademie der Künste in 1907, he became its vice-president (1918) and president (1934), and he led a master class in composition there (1913–45). His most popular work, the oratorio Ruth, fell victim to the Nazis' anti-Semitic policies and could not be performed during the Third Reich.

WORKS

(selective list)

for fuller list see Biehle (1925)

Choral orch: Amor und Psyche, op.3; Totenklage, op. 33; Sehnsucht, op.40; Ruth, orat, op.50; Das Tränenkrüglein, op.57; David und Absalon, Ständchen, dramatische Burleske, op.70
Orch: Zur Karnevalszeit, suite, op.22; Variations on 'Wer nur den lieben Gott lässt walten', op.24, org, orch; Variationen und Doppelfuge über ein lustiges Thema, op.30; Serenade, op.34; Sym., f, op.42; Variations on 'Gestern Abend war Vetter Michel da', op.77; sym. poems, ovs., other syms.
Chbr: Pf Qnt, e, op.18; Vc Sonata, op.19; Pf Qt, f, op.29
Org: Passacaglia über BACH, op.39; 10 Chorale Preludes, op.77
Lieder, pf pieces

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Hielscher: Georg Schumann, Monographien moderner Musiker, i (Leipzig, 1906)

H. Biehle: Georg Schumann (Münster, 1925)

F. Ohrmann: 'Georg Schumann', ZfM, Jg.97 (1930), 613–17

JOSEPH CLARK/ERIK LEVI

Schumann, Robert (b Zwickau, Saxony, 8 June 1810; d Endenich, nr Bonn, 29 July 1856). German composer and music critic. While best remembered for his piano music and songs, and some of his symphonic and chamber works, Schumann made significant contributions to all the musical genres of his day and cultivated a number of new ones as well. His dual interest in music and literature led him to develop a historically informed music criticism and a compositional style deeply indebted to literary models. A leading exponent of musical Romanticism, he had a powerful impact on succeeding generations of European composers.

1. FORMATIVE YEARS: ZWICKAU, 1810–28. The fifth and last child of August Schumann and Johanna Christiana Schumann (née Schnabel), Robert Schumann was born into a household dominated by literary activity. (There is no evidence for a middle name 'Alexander', given in some sources; his birth and death certificates both give 'Robert Schumann'. Possibly Alexander is a corruption of his teenage pseudonym 'Skülander'.) His father, an author of chivalric romances and a tireless lexicographer, amassed a small fortune by translating Walter Scott and Byron into German. He was also a book dealer, and Robert, his favourite child, was able to spend many hours poring over the classics of literature.

Between his third and fifth years, Schumann was placed under the care of Eleonore Ruppius, whom he later described warmly as a second mother. Having already displayed a talent for singing, he began piano lessons at the age of seven with J.G. Kuntsch, organist at St Marien, Zwickau; at the same time he attended the private school of the archdeacon H. Döhner, where he studied Latin, Greek and French. Within a year he had composed several dances (now lost) for keyboard. Another spur to his musical imagination came in 1818, when he accompanied his mother to Carlsbad and had a fleeting encounter with the pianist-composer Ignaz Moscheles.

Schumann's childhood idyll came to an end with his entry into the Zwickau Gymnasium in 1819 or 1820. Shortly thereafter he and his brother Karl organized extempore theatrical productions in their home. In addition, he made his first appearances as a pianist in 1821 and 1822, in performances of variation sets (some for piano, Four hands) by Pleyel, Cramer, Ries, Moscheles and Weber. By this time he was also taking flute and cello lessons from Meissner, the municipal music director, and soon undertook two compositional projects, both dating from 1822: a setting of Psalm cl for soprano and alto, with unusual instrumentation (on the title-page designated 'Oeuv. 1'); and an overture and chorus (Chor von Landleuten). An entry in his later 'Projektenbuch' alludes to the beginnings of an opera.

Although only a middling pupil, Schumann showed a keen interest in belles-lettres from his 13th year. At about this time he began to gather his own literary efforts – poems, dramatic fragments, biographical sketches of famous composers – under the pseudonym 'Skülander', in a commonplace-book entitled Blätter und Blümchen aus der goldenen Aue. In the autumn of 1825 he and ten fellow students formed a 'Litterarischer Verein', the meetings of which featured readings from the monuments of German literature and discussions of the members' original creations. Before its disbanding in February 1828, the Verein provided Schumann with a forum for the systematic study of Schiller's dramas and the essays of Herder and Friedrich Schlegel. Late in 1827 he developed a passion for the idiosyncratic writings of J.P.F. Richter (known as Jean Paul).

During his period as chief organizer of the Litterarischer Verein, Schumann tried his hand at a variety of literary genres, including metric translations of Greek and Latin verse (Idyllen aus dem Griechischen des Bion, Theocritus und Moschus), lyric poetry (more than 30 poems gathered in Allerley aus der Feder Roberts an der Mulde), drama (seven fragments survive, one of which treats the Coriolan story) and criticism (essays on a variety of aesthetic topics). In the diary he started early in 1827 (Tage des Jünglinglebens) Schumann recorded his painful reactions to the death of his father (from a nervous disorder) and of his 19-year-old sister Emilie (probably suicide) in the summer of 1826. The diary also tells of his current infatuation with the young Liddy Hempel and his past flirtation with Nanni Petsch.

Schumann continued to pursue his musical interests during his middle and later teenage years. While preparing for the meetings of the Litterarischer Verein, he also came to know some of Beethoven's string quartets, Mozart's operas and the keyboard music of Haydn and Louis Ferdinand, Prince of Prussia. Unfortunately, August Schumann's attempts to retain Weber as a composition teacher for his talented son came to nothing, owing to the death of both men in 1826. Although Schumann began an E minor piano concerto in 1827 (sketches for another, in E♭, date from the next year) and claimed to have completed many songs and piano pieces by that time, none of the solo keyboard compositions survives. 13 songs on texts by Kerner, Byron, Ernst Schulze, J.G. Jacobi and Schumann himself date from the summers of 1827 and 1828, and were probably inspired by Agnes Carus, an attractive woman eight years Schumann's senior, a talented singer, and the wife of Dr Ernst August Carus (nephew of an old family friend). Ranging from simple strophic to complex through-composed designs, the lieder attest the young composer's attainment of an impressive level of technical mastery. When Gottlob Wiedebein, the Brunswick Kapellmeister to whom Schumann sent his Kerner settings in July 1828, responded with encouraging words but warned against submission to unbridled fantasy, he was probably reacting to the frequent tempo shifts, wayward modulations and irregular phrase lengths in a song such an An Anna I. On the one hand, the early lieder fulfilled a youthful ideal: the appearance of 'poet and composer in one person'; on the other, they offered a repository of ideas for several of the piano works of the next decade: the Intermezzos op.4, the F♯ minor Sonata op.11 and G minor Sonata op.22.

2. Jean Paul and Schubert: Leipzig, 1828–9. According to the terms of his father's will, Schumann's receipt of his inheritance was contingent upon his undertaking a three-year course of university study in an unspecified field. In deference to the wishes of his mother and his guardian (J.G. Rudel), Schumann agreed to matriculate as a law student at the University of Leipzig in late March 1828. Before taking up residence in Leipzig, however, he set off with his friend Gisbert Rosen on a tour of southern Germany that took him to Munich (where he met Heine) and then in April and early May to Bayreuth, Jean Paul's home for his last 21 years. In the preceding months he had read most of the writer's major works; the novels Titan and Flegeljahre were his favourites.

Once settled in Leipzig in late May, Schumann proved indifferent to the 'ice-cold definitions' of law. According to his room-mate Emil Flechsig, who perhaps exaggerated, he never set foot in a lecture hall. Instead, he continued his close study of Jean Paul, to whose inimitable style – replete with extravagant metaphors, fantastic digressions, flashes of wit and antithetically paired characters – he was irresistibly drawn. Confiding in his diary, he claimed: 'Jean Paul seems to be interwoven with my inner being; it is as if I had a premonition of him'.

Before long Schumann embarked on a number of literary projects, all bearing the unmistakable stamp of his 'Jean Paul' manner. In Hottentottiana, the diary he began on 2 May 1828 and maintained until 1830, he brought together autobiographical analyses, sketches for poetic projects, and aesthetic speculations. Juniusabende und Julytage, an idyll conceived during the summer of 1828, contains experiments with 'Polymeter' or 'Streckvers', Jean Paul's terms for prose poetry. In the aesthetic fragments from Hottentottiana (most of them dating from July and August, and thus contemporary with his second burst of song composition), Schumann toyed with the notion of musical composition as a kind of poetic activity, an idea he elaborated in 'Die Tonwelt', an essay written jointly with Willibald von der Lühe late that summer. The fancifully titled 'Über Genial- Knill- Original- und andre itäten' ('On Genial- Insobr- Original- and other i(e)ties') presents an analysis of creative genius. Finally, the fragmentary tale Selene, on which he worked in November, treats the Jean Paulian theme of the 'hoher Mensch', the individual capable of tempering Promethean energy with Olympian restraint. The synthesis of opposing character types – best represented by Vult and Walt Harnisch, the twin-brother protagonists in Flegeljahre – remained a major concern for Schumann as composer and critic throughout the ensuing decade.

Music likewise figured prominently during Schumann's first year in Leipzig. By August he was studying the piano with Friedrich Wieck, who was to play an important role in his professional and personal life. At Wieck's home, Schumann made contact not only with the musical élite of Leipzig but also with his teacher's daughter Clara, at nine years of age already well on the way to becoming a concert pianist. In the months ahead Schumann himself attempted to master Hummel's Etudes and Piano Concerto in A minor.

By late summer 1828 he had developed a passionate attachment to the music of Schubert, which he found comparable to Jean Paul's prose in its 'psychologically unusual connection of ideas'. Schubert's polonaises and variations for piano (four hands) served as models for Schumann's works in the same medium, among them the VIII polonaises conceived in August and September. Another four-hand composition for piano followed in early October, a set of variations (of which only a fragment survives) on a theme by Prince Louis Ferdinand. A more ambitious project undertaken soon after attests both the importance of convivial music-making for the young composer's development and the continued influence of Schubert. In November Schumann organized a piano quartet whose reading sessions were attended by Wieck and the Caruses (resident in Leipzig since November 1827), and which continued to meet regularly until late March 1829. The group provided a laboratory for the C minor piano quartet Schumann had just begun, a work perhaps intended to pay homage to the recently deceased Schubert. (Sketches for two other piano quartets, in A and B, may both date from this period.) Indeed, the glittering keyboard passage-work in the first movement, the rapid modulations by 3rds in the minuet and the propulsive rhythms of the finale all reflect Schumann's fascination with Schubert's E♭ Piano Trio D929. Nearly 20 years later, he would associate the trio of the minuet with the revelation of a 'new poetic life' in his music. The recurrence of the trio's main theme in the peroration of the finale is only one element in a web of inter-movement connections that bespeak Schumann's concern with large-scale unity. Having provisionally completed the piano quartet by March 1829, Schumann planned to 'cobble it into a symphony', a project he did not realize.

3. The decision for music: Heidelberg, 1829–30. As early as August 1828, Schumann contemplated a move to Heidelberg, ostensibly to spend a year at the university under the jurists Karl Mittermaier and A.F.J. Thibaut. He left Leipzig in May 1829 and after passing through Frankfurt quickly assimilated himself into the easy-going pace of life in picturesque Heidelberg. Although his certificate of study from the university (dated 10 September 1830) confirms his enrolment in courses on Roman, ecclesiastical and international law, his friend Eduard Röller, echoing Flechsig's report on the year before, claimed that Schumann 'didn't attend a single lecture'. He did, however, take private lessons in French, Italian, English and Spanish, and also ran up a considerable debt with a local moneylender. After matriculating at the university on 30 July 1829, he made plans for a trip to Switzerland and Italy that would extend from 28 August to 25 October. Enchanted by Rossini's operas and the bel canto of the soprano Giuditta Pasta, he wrote to Wieck that 'one can have no notion of Italian music without hearing it under Italian skies'.

Once resettled in Heidelberg, Schumann kept busy with a broad range of musical activities. In Anton Töpken he found a willing partner with whom to explore the four-hand piano repertory; both friends also experimented with a chiroplast (or 'cigar-mechanism', as Schumann called it), a popular finger-strengthening device that may have caused the 'numbness' in the middle finger of his right hand, of which Schumann first complained in January 1830. Early in that year his performance of Moscheles's variations on La marche d'Alexandre in a concert sponsored by the Museum (a musical club consisting chiefly of students) earned him the epithet 'darling of the Heidelberg public'. While Schumann probably learnt little of jurisprudence from Thibaut, the latter's Über Reinheit der Tonkunst (1825) deeply affected his musical-historical thinking; so too did his participation in readings of Handel's oratorios (with up to 70 musicians) in Thibaut's home. His attendance at one of Paganini's Frankfurt concerts in April 1830 provided a musical stimulus of a very different but no less compelling kind.

In a self-analysis entered in his diary during the early summer, Schumann claimed to be 'excellent in music and poetry – but not a musical genius; [my] talents as musician and poet are at the same level'. But by July he was prepared to opt for music. Writing to his mother early in the month, he prepared her for the inevitable by pleading a lack of the 'practicality' and 'talent for Latin' that a successful lawyer must possess. Then in a letter of 30 July he outlined his plan to resume musical studies with Friedrich Wieck before spending a year in Vienna under Moscheles. Distressed by her son's decision, Johanna Schumann nonetheless complied with his request to solicit Wieck's opinion. Wieck replied in early August, promising to make Schumann into a greater artist than Moscheles or Hummel, but insisting that he take daily piano lessons, study music theory with a teacher of Wieck's choice and agree to a review of his progress after a six-month trial period. Schumann's mother gave grudging approval in a letter of 12 August.

The compositions either begun or completed in Heidelberg grew out of a milieu in which convivial music-making played an important part, but they also reflect Schumann's growing fascination with early music and contemporary virtuoso idioms. Among the 'shorter piano pieces' mentioned in his Projektenbuch for 1829 and 1830 is a set of six Walzer, known to us through the versions of three of these dances later incorporated into Papillons. A series of variations (unfinished, but later mined for the Intermezzos op.4 and Allegro op.8) on the 'Campanella' theme from Paganini's Violin Concerto no.2 was probably inspired by Schumann's encounter with the violinist's technical wizardry in the April 1830 concert. During the spring or summer of the same year, Schumann set to work on a piano concerto in F, an ambitious project that occupied him intermittently for about two years. While the solo portions of the first movement were completed by August 1831, and the remaining two movements had been partially drafted by May and November respectively, the concerto appeared in a list of projects dated August 1832 as 'yet to be finished'. When he approached Hummel as a possible teacher in August 1831, Schumann sent him the solo exposition of the work's first movement, described in a nearly contemporary diary entry as 'the first of my pieces to tend towards the romantic'. The C major Toccata (originally Etude fantastique en double-sons), parts of which may date back to late 1829, was completed in the spring of 1830, but was reworked in 1833 and published (in this later form) as op.7 in 1834. Both versions are characterized by rapidly alternating double-notes and motor rhythms, and thus represent an attempt to synthesize the chief musical stimuli of Schumann's Heidelberg period: Paganinian virtuosity and Baroque propulsion.

Though first mentioned in a diary entry of 22 February 1830, the Abegg Variations occupied Schumann mainly during July and August. The first work completed after his decision in favour of a musical career, it was issued in November 1831 as his op.1. With the Abegg Variations Schumann presented himself to the 'great world' as a virtuoso-composer in the tradition of a figure such as Moscheles, whose Alexandre variations served as a model for the projected version of the work with orchestra (probably begun in the summer of 1831). In addition, Schumann's variations also disclose a fanciful dimension in the generation of the theme from the surname of the work's probably fictional dedicatee, Pauline, Comtesse d'Abegg. The musical cipher inspired a subtle approach to motivic development; as the piece proceeds, less attention is lavished on the musically enciphered name than on the possibilities of the two-note segment (A–B♭) with which the theme begins.

1. Robert Schumann: miniature by an unknown artist, c1826 (Robert-Schumann-Haus, Zwickau)

4. Discoveries and disappointments: Leipzig, 1830–33. Schumann left Heidelberg for Leipzig in September 1830 and by 20 October he had settled into Wieck's home. His claim that he devoted up to seven hours daily to piano practice is supported by the near cessation of composition in late 1830 and early 1831, and also by the suspension of his diary. But by December 1830, when he wrote to his mother of his desire to study with Hummel in Weimar, Schumann had already become disenchanted with Wieck, whose chief interest lay in the promotion of his daughter Clara's career.

Although relatively little is known of Schumann's activities in the first part of 1831, the period surrounding his 21st birthday in June of that year emerges as a critical phase, musically, intellectually and personally. Soon after arriving in Leipzig in autumn 1830 he was introduced to the composer Heinrich Dorn, conductor at the city theatre, by his friend Willibald von der Lühe. In mid-July of the following year he began theoretical studies with Dorn, proceeding from the 'noble figured bass' to chorale harmonization, canon and double counterpoint. According to a communication from Dorn to Wasielewski, Schumann's first biographer, the young musician proved to be an indefatigible worker, though on at least one occasion teacher and pupil 'moistened the dry work at hand' with a bottle of champagne.

Shortly before submitting to the rigours of contrapuntal study, Schumann became enthralled by the 'new worlds' revealed to him in E.T.A. Hoffmann's writings, their weird blend of reality and fantasy motivating a response analogous to that occasioned by his earlier fascination with Jean Paul. As indicated in an entry for 5 June 1831 in his new diary (Leipziger Lebensbuch), Schumann considered writing a 'poetic biography' of Hoffmann and reworking his Bergwerke zu Falun as an opera libretto. Then on 8 June (his 21st birthday) he wrote in his diary: 'It sometimes seems . . . as if my objective self wanted to separate itself completely from my subjective self, or as if I stood between my appearance and my actual being, between form and shadow'. In response to the dilemma of the split self or Doppelgänger, a major theme in the works of both Hoffmann and Jean Paul, Schumann decided (in the same entry) to give his 'friends more beautiful and more fitting names'. Hence Wieck appears as 'Meister Raro' ('exceptional master'), Clara as 'Cilia' (later he would also dub her 'Chiara'), and Christel (perhaps a servant in Wieck's house, she had been Schumann's lover for at least a month) as 'Charitas'. Several of the same characters recur in the preliminary material for Die Wunderkinder ('child prodigies'), a novel dealing with the problematic situation of the artist that Schumann started to outline a week later. There his renamed friends were joined by virtuosos such as Paganini and Hummel, and by 'Florestan the Improviser'. That the last was intended as a self-projection is confirmed by an entry in the Leipziger Lebensbuch of 1 July: 'Completely new persons enter the diary from this day forward – two of my best friends . . . – Florestan and Eusebius'. If Schumann's Florestan persona was the embodiment of his aspirations as a virtuoso, then Eusebius conforms to the image of a pensive cleric; within the next few years, Schumann made a specific association between 'his' Eusebius and St Eusebius the Confessor (pope 309–10), whose feast day (14 August), as he pointed out to the real and fictive Clara ('Eusebius an Chiara', 1835), is preceded by the namedays of 'Aurora' (13 August) and 'Clara' (12 August). Schumann noted these namedays in his Haushaltbücher (household account books) as late as 1853.

The birth of the child prodigies was likewise implicated in Schumann's discovery of a new musical idol, Fryderyk Chopin, whose recently published variations for piano and orchestra on Mozart's 'Là ci darem la mano' (op.2) he acquired sometime in May 1831. Frustrated by his inability to master the technical difficulties of the work, and speaking through his Eusebius persona, Schumann sketched a poetic critique of Chopin's op.2 that links each variation with the characters and events of Don Giovanni. Entered into his diary on 17 July, the critique supplied the nucleus of the pathbreaking review (published in the Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung, 7 December 1831) in which he hailed Chopin as a brilliant newcomer on the musical scene with the words: 'Hats off, gentlemen, a genius!'

A gradual shift in Schumann's view of himself, from composer-pianist to composer-critic, was precipitated by a physical complaint that was variously described in letters and diaries as an 'ever-worsening weakness' or 'laming' of the middle finger of his right hand, which became a source of 'inner struggles' beginning in October 1831. After a period of slight improvement, the finger was 'completely stiff' by June of the following year. While its precise cause still remains uncertain, the ailment can only have been exacerbated by Schumann's use of a chiroplast, a practice to which Wieck vociferously objected. And although he tried a number of curative measures – animal baths (a grotesque remedy that required the patient to insert his hand into the entrails of a carcass), 'electrical' therapy and homeopathic treatment (involving strict attention to diet and the ingestion of a 'tiny powder') – none produced lasting results. As he put it emphatically to his mother in a letter of November 1832: 'for my part, I'm completely resigned [to my lame finger], and deem it incurable'.

In November 1831, at the height of the inner struggles caused by the weakness in his right hand, the first of Schumann's poetic cycles for piano, Papillons, appeared in print as op.2. While diminutive in scope, the 12 pieces that constitute the cycle have been the object of sustained attention because of both their complex genesis and the issues they raise concerning the relationship between musical creativity and literary inspiration. While earlier versions of nos.1–9 can be placed in Heidelberg, and nos.5 and 11 draw on the VIII polonaises of 1828, it is difficult to be certain when this material was subsumed under an overriding Papillons idea. It may have been from the critical phase around Schumann's 21st birthday, when his interest in the notion of metamorphosis materialized in drafts for a cycle of poems entitled 'Schmetterlinge' ('butterflies' or papillons). His apparently contradictory statements on the links between his op.2 and the final chapters of Jean Paul's Flegeljahre (narrative accounts of a masked ball and of Walt's dream) raise further questions of interpretation. Writing to his mother and to the critic Ludwig Rellstab in April 1832, Schumann maintained that Papillons 'actually transforms the masked ball [from Flegeljahre] into notes', but in a letter of 22 August to his friend Henriette Voigt he asserted: 'I've underlaid the text to the music, and not the reverse . . . Only the last piece . . . was inspired by Jean Paul'. While seemingly contradictory, these points of view merely emphasize that Jean Paul's novel stands in both a reflective and a catalytic relation to Schumann's keyboard cycle. Having orginally conceived Papillons in ten movements (as indicated in his sketchbooks), he may have decided to add another two in the summer of 1831 after rereading his favourite of Jean Paul's works (a diary entry of 7 August speaks to a renewed interest in the author, as does a copy of Flegeljahre in which Schumann associates various passages with one of the ten-movement incarnations of the cycle).

In the masked-ball chapter of Flegeljahre, Jean Paul implies that life is a constellation of fragments awaiting the transfigurative touch of the poet, and it is perhaps here that the most compelling point of contact with Schumann's composition can be located. Given the brevity of its constituent pieces, many of them tonally open-ended and featuring feigned openings or partial returns, Papillons aptly demonstrates the composer's engagement with the phenomenology of the fragment. His fondness for quotation (exemplified here by the appearance of the popular 'Grossvatertanz' in the last movement) contributes to the mosaic-like effect his poetic cycles share with collections of literary fragments by figures such as Friedrich Schlegel and Novalis. And even though thematic recurrences lend a degree of coherence to Papillons, they form less a dense web than a gossamer tissue of premonitions and recollections.

Soon after Papillons was published in November 1831, Schumann began planning a sequel, though it was not until November 1832, however, that he informed Breitkopf of the completion of 'XII Burlesken (Burle) after the manner of Papillons' (while some of these pieces may have found their way into the Albumblätter op.124, published in 1854, the majority have not resurfaced). The Papillons idea also informs the Intermezzos op.4, which the composer himself described as 'longer Papillons'. First conceived as a set of 'Pièces phantastiques', and completed between April and July 1832, the Intermezzos also reflect Schumann's study of Marpurg's Abhandlung von der Fuge in their enrichment of keyboard texture through imitative passages.

Schumann's cultivation of the musical fragment in 1831 and 1832 was complemented by a number of works in what he later called the 'higher forms'. The Allegro op.8 first served as the opening movement of a piano sonata in B minor which occupied him late in 1831 and early in 1832. As in the op.7 Toccata, Schumann attempts to mediate between virtuoso style and musical substance, the solution here entailing the integration of cadenza-like sections into the formal argument of the work. While the Allegro was displaced from its orginal context in a large (though unfinished) work, so, conversely, the Fandango in F♯ minor completed between May and September 1832 ultimately formed the basis for the first movement of the Piano Sonata in F♯ minor op.11 (finished by 1835). This dialectic between part and whole, fragment and higher form, continued to fuel Schumann's creativity thoughout the 1830s and beyond.

Just as the pivotal phase around Schumann's 21st birthday was marked by reactions to E.T.A. Hoffmann and Chopin, so the corresponding period in 1832 was dominated by a response to figures as diverse as Paganini, Bach and Beethoven. In a diary entry of 20 April 1832, Schumann alluded to a plan to make Paganini's Caprices into 'studies for pianists who want to improve their technique'. By June, the first instalment of the project was complete: transcriptions of six caprices published that autumn as Etudes pour le pianoforte op.3. While arranging Paganini's Caprice no.16 (G minor), Schumann was 'visited' by a mesmerizing image of the violinist 'in a magic circle'. A similar series of Paganini transcriptions followed in the spring and summer of the following year (VI Etudes de concert op.10).

Schumann expressed his awe of Bach's universality in a diary entry of 14 May 1832: 'J.S. Bach did everything – he was a human being through and through'. By July, the fugues of Das wohltemperirte Clavier had become his personal 'grammar'. Schumann's reception of Bach took shape not only in the 'many contrapuntal studies' mentioned in the Projektenbuch for 1832, but also in the genre of the keyboard miniature. A partially preserved Burla in G minor (probably one of a pair of Burle mentioned in an August diary entry) employs a number of contrapuntal techniques including close imitation and variations over a quasi-cantus firmus.

Schumann's study of Beethoven's symphonic works led to an observation on the nature of musical development noted in his diary during the spring of 1832: 'If you want to develop, then really make something out of an otherwise ordinary passage . . . In this, Beethoven, like Jean Paul, offers a splendid ideal'. Although a series of 'Acht Bilder, nach den Symphonien Beethovens' (listed under 'plans' in a diary entry of 29 April) failed to materialize, two other projects probably undertaken about this time attest Schumann's growing appreciation of Beethoven. The fourth of the so-called Wiede sketchbooks includes partially completed piano reductions of the Adagio from Beethoven's Fourth Symphony and the third Leonore overture. The same sketchbook transmits drafts for a set of 11 Etüden in Form freier Variationen über ein Beethovensches Thema (WOO31), on the theme of the second movement (Allegretto) of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony. Two further versions of the set, in which Schumann abandoned the virtuoso style of the Abegg Variations, are preserved in manuscripts perhaps dating from 1833, though the work as a whole was not published during the composer's lifetime; only the fifth variation from the second version appeared in print, as no.2 ('Leides Ahnung') in the Albumblätter op.124.

Turning away from the keyboard genres that had occupied him for the past four years, Schumann started writing a symphony in G minor (WOO29) during the autumn of 1832, his decision at once reflecting the scuttling of his plans for a career as a virtuoso pianist and inspired by his study of Beethoven's symphonies. Some of the material in the exposition of the opening movement can be traced to an unusual source: a family of sketches associated with Schumann's plan, initially broached in a letter to his mother of December 1830, to write an opera based on Shakespeare's Hamlet. The first movement was ready for a performance in Zwickau on 18 November (fig.2), but while Clara Wieck's rendition of Herz's Bravura Variations in the same programme caused a sensation, Schumann's offering elicited a mixed response, according to Wieck, because it was 'too thinly orchestrated'. A revised version of the movement was presented in Schneeberg (home of his brother Karl and sister-in-law Rosalie) in mid-February 1833, Schumann in the meantime having drafted the second movement and sketched portions of the third (the former exists in two markedly different versions). Sketches for the finale date from March to May 1833, and contain fugal elaborations of the motif that later served as the bass theme of the Impromptus op.5. The first movement was performed once again at Clara's 'grand concert' of 29 April at the Leipzig Gewandhaus, its limited success making painfully clear to Schumann that the path to success as a composer would be an arduous one. In addition to its obvious allusions to the 'Eroica' Symphony, the first movement of the G minor Symphony demonstrates a deeper affinity with Beethoven; its argument proceeds less from a theme than from a configuration of brief motifs capable of linear development and contrapuntal combination. Similarly, the second movement (in its presumably later version, Andantino con moto – Intermezzo quasi scherzo) counterbalances its references to the Allegretto of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony with digressive formal strategies very much of Schumann's own making.

5. The music critic: Leipzig, 1833–4. Schumann located the initiation of his 'richest and most active period' in the year 1833. Unfortunately, our knowledge of the first part of this phase is hampered by the suspension of his diary for much of the period between March 1833 and October 1837. Thus, for documentary information Sonntag, den 18. November 1832.

GROSSES CONCERT

im Saale des Gewandhauses.

ERSTER THEIL.

1) Ouverture aus „der Felsenmühle“ von Reissiger.
2) Recitativ und Chor aus „der Schöpfung.“
3) Grosses Concert von Pixis, für Pianoforte mit Orchestre, vorgetragen von Clara Wieck.
4) Duett und Chor aus „der bezauberten Rose“ von Wolfram.
5) Grosse Polonaise, aus dem Esdur-Concert von Moscheles, für Pianoforte mit Orchestre, vorgetragen von Clara Wieck.

ZWEITER THEIL.

6) Erster Satz der ersten Symphonie, componirt von Robert Schumann.
7) Chor aus „der bezauberten Rose“ von Wolfram.
8) Duo für Pianoforte und Violine von Herz und Bériot, vorgetragen von Clara Wieck und Herrn Musikdirector Meyer.
9) Scherzo für Orchestre, componirt von Clara Wieck.
10) Notturno für Pianoforte und Physharmonica, vorgetragen von Herrn Wieck.
11) Bravour-Variationen von Herz für Pianoforte mit Orchestre, vorgetragen von Clara Wieck.

Billets à 6 Gr. sind bis Sonnabend Abend zu haben in der Richter'schen Buchhandlung.
Der Eintrittspreis an der Kasse ist 8 Gr.

Anfang halb 7 Uhr. Ende um 9 Uhr.

Zwickau.

DER SINGVERE

2. Programme of the concert given by Clara Wieck and her father at the Zwickau Gewandhaus, 18 November 1832 on his fortunes (and misfortunes) during the mid-1830s, we must rely on letters and a series of lapidary notes copied in Vienna on the evening of 28 November 1838.

The discontinuation of the diary may be linked to Schumann's attempt to pursue a full-time career as a composer. In addition to his work on the G minor Symphony, which commanded his attention until May 1833, he completed a second volume of Paganini transcriptions (op.10) between April and July, and drafted the Impromptus op.5 in late May. During the spring and summer he probably also completed the revised versions of the Toccata and the Etüden, and may have begun the piano sonatas in F♯ minor and G minor (the andantino of the latter in fact dates from 1830), and the variations on Schubert's 'Sehnsuchtswalzer' (a conflation of D365 no.2 and D972 no.2) as well. Several of these works exemplify Schumann's imaginative rethinking of the keyboard variation form. The sketches for the Sehnsuchtswalzer variations speak to his desire to avoid the sectional nature of the traditional design through the addition of connective 'ritornelli'. The introductory movement of these unfinished variations later supplied the material for the 'Préambule' to Carnaval. According to Schumann, the Impromptus sur une Romance de Clara Wieck 'may be viewed as a new type of variation', a probable reference to the grounding of the work in a pair of freely elaborated ideas: the initial bass theme (its falling 5ths first came to Schumann after he and Clara devoted a sight-reading session to Bach's fugues in May 1832) and the slightly altered melody of Clara's Romance variée op.3 (the opening of which bears an uncanny resemblance to a four-bar melody Schumann sketched well before Clara wrote her Romance). The first in an impressive series of 'Clara' pieces, Schumann's op.5 summons up, develops and then gradually effaces Clara's theme, restoring it as a fleeting reminiscence only at the last moment. The poetic effect of this procedure, which turns on the transformation of actuality into memory, was somewhat undercut in the revised version of the Impromptus published in 1850.

Schumann's composing came to a standstill in the summer of 1833. Stricken with malarial fever in July and distraught over the death of his brother Julius and of his sister-in-law Rosalie within months of each other, he fell into a deep depression, the first of more or less evenly spaced and progressively worsening episodes that would complicate his life in the ensuing decades. The night of 17–18 October 1833, he noted in Vienna in November 1838, was the 'most frightful' of his life. Seized by the fear of going mad, and plagued by suicidal thoughts, he sought medical advice, but was merely told: 'Find yourself a woman; she'll cure you in no time'. By late November his neurosis had begun to abate, but lingering fears – of heights and of sleeping alone – caused him to move from a fifth-floor to a first-floor apartment and to share his lodgings with an old room-mate (a 'good-hearted fellow' named Carl Günther).

Schumann reported to his mother on 27 November that his 'return to life came about only gradually, and through hard work'. Much of this work involved the establishment of the musical journal to which he had given some thought already in the previous March. By June, he and a group of like-minded associates – including the pianist Julius Knorr, the painter and composer J.P. Lyser, the music critic E.A. Ortlepp and the philosopher J.A. Wendt – began to gather at Friedrich Hofmeister's music shop; later in the year they assembled weekly at the Kaffeebaum, a tavern operated by Andreas Poppe. Sitting at the head of the table, puffing on a cigar, a mug of beer at his side, Schumann presided over a group united in its displeasure over the rule of empty virtuosity in the concert hall and italianate frivolity in the opera house. The journal envisaged by Schumann and his colleagues would 'erect a barrier against convention', and might also provide the mastermind of the venture with the 'definite social standing' he lacked.

Schumann's recovery from the neurotic spell of October and November 1833 was further expedited through his contact with Ludwig Schunke, the gifted young pianist who came into his life in December 'like a star'. By the spring of the following year they had taken rooms together. While at this time Schumann slipped into a 'frequently dissolute lifestyle' in which his new friend may have shared, his relationship with Schunke was not without artistic consequences. The latter's Variations concertantes on Schubert's Trauerwalzer (D365 no.2) owe something to Schumann's Sehnsuchtswalzer variations. Schumann in turn dedicated the final version of his Toccata to Schunke, who, not surprisingly, soon attained a prominent position in Schumann's 'Davidsbund'.

By the mid-1830s the notion of a band of artists poised to ward off philistinism was hardly new. What E.T.A. Hoffmann called the 'serapiontic' principle lay at the heart of organizations such as Weber's Harmonischer Verein (founded 1810), the statutes of which exhorted its members to protect the art-loving world from inundation by works of mediocre quality. Leipzig's own Tunnel über der Pleisse, a society that met weekly to consider literary and musical matters, and whose members included Wieck and Lyser, would have offered Schumann a direct model for his Davidsbund. The distinguishing feature of the latter, however, was its emergence at the juncture between imagination and reality; or, as Schumann put it in the introduction to his collected writings (1854): 'The Davidsbund runs like a red thread through my journal, uniting poetry and truth in a humorous manner'. Traceable to the birth of the child prodigies in June 1831 (Die Wunderkinder), the Davidsbündler idea became the generating force behind Schumann's journalistic endeavours in the mid- and late 1830s. Schumann's partly real, partly imaginary band of crusaders against musical philistinism made its official début between December 1833 and January 1834 in 'Der Davidsbündler', a mixture of fanciful prose, critique and aphorisms (with attributions to Florestan, Eusebius and Raro, among others) published in Der Komet.

The contract establishing the Davidsbund's own journal, the Neue Leipziger Zeitschrift für Musik, was drawn up in late March 1834. Planned to appear twice weekly, and published by Christian Hartmann, a local book dealer, the journal was placed in the hands of an editorial board consisting of Knorr (editor-in-chief), Schumann, Schunke and Wieck. The prospectus, printed as the lead item in the first issue (3 April 1834), promised theoretical articles, belletristic pieces, reviews of contemporary compositions and reports from foreign correspondents. Although Schumann boasted to his mother that the venture was off to an auspicious start, dissension soon broke out. Taking advantage of a dispute involving Knorr and Wieck, Hartmann enlisted legal counsel in an attempt to seize editorial control over the journal. Matters were further complicated by Schunke's untimely death in December. Schumann saved the enterprise from collapse by negotiating a new contract that named him sole owner and editor. The 'visionary of the group', as Schumann later described himself, proved that he could be an astute businessman when the situation demanded it. Rechristened the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik, the journal first appeared under Schumann's editorship on 2 January 1835.

Although Schumann's activities in 1834 were dominated by his efforts on behalf of the journal, the same year brought important developments of a personal sort. The founding of the journal in April coincided with his meeting Ernestine von Fricken, a young woman from the village of Asch; she was a piano student of Wieck's and the illegitimate daughter (though Schumann would not learn this fact until August 1835) of Captain I.F. von Fricken. The intensity of their relationship escalated during the summer, so that by September they were engaged. Understandably, Schumann's compositional productivity slackened in 1834. Apart from an incompletely preserved (and never published) set of keyboard variations on Chopin's Nocturne op.15 no.3, a project dating from late in the year, work on the F♯ minor Piano Sonata is also a possibility. While in Zwickau in December, Schumann began the composition that would become Carnaval and also set to work on the Etudes symphoniques.

These compositional projects notwithstanding, Schumann's designation of the year 1834 as the 'most important' in his life is far more justified by his cultivation of a fundamentally new brand of music criticism, its novelty resting on two factors: the critic's historical awareness and his sensitivity to the problems inherent in employing a verbal medium to describe musical processes. In his New Year editorial for the Neue Zeitschrift issue of 2 January 1835, Schumann wrote that his journal aimed > to acknowledge the past and its creations and to draw attention to the fact that new artistic beauties can only be strengthened by so pure a source; next, to oppose the recent past as an inartistic period with only a notable increase in mechanical dexterity to show for itself; and finally, to prepare for and hasten the advent of a new, poetic future.

Underlying this stance is a tripartite, teleological philosophy of history wherein the past is viewed as a nurturing source for the present, the present as a site of imperfection and the future as the poetic age towards which the past and present should aspire. But while Schumann's scheme resonates with the outlook on history already espoused by the Jena Romantics, he did not construe music-historical progress as a purely continuous phenomenon. On the contrary, the relationship between past and future was characterized by striking leaps and reversals. In Schumann's opinion, the 'profound combinatorial power, the poetry, and the humour of modern music trace their origins to Bach'. Conversely, this mode of thought enabled him to make the startling assertion that 'most of Bach's fugues are character pieces of the highest kind'. Although Schumann's judgments ride roughshod over eminent figures, including Domenico Scarlatti and Haydn, his sense of a historical process governed by both continuities and discontinuities proved to be remarkably prescient.

Schumann's diagnosis of the present constitutes the most radical aspect of his philosophy of music history. A site of apparently contradictory trends, the present reflects the whole of the larger tripartite framework in microcosm. This notion was accorded a decidedly political slant in 'Der Psychometer' (1834), where Schumann divided his contemporaries into three parties: 'classicists', 'justemilieuists' (middle-of-the-roaders or philistines), and 'romantics'. But he hardly viewed the products of the latter group (whose members included Mendelssohn, Chopin, William Sterndale Bennett, Hiller and Schumann himself) as embodiments of perfection; indeed, it was precisely their imperfections that held out the most promise for the poetic age to come. This conviction lay behind Schumann's interest in light and even trivial music, in the recent tendency towards fragmentary musical utterance and in the demise of classical forms. The best fugues, he maintained, are the ones the public mistakes for waltzes; musical fragments (like his own Papillons) aptly reflect the 'half-torn pages' of life itself; and if genres such as variations, the sonata, the concerto and the symphony were on the wane, then a series of 'new forms', the capriccio and the fantasy among them, were emerging to take their place.

The poetic language of Schumann's criticism, a response to the dilemma of illuminating a non-verbal art form through the medium of words, is notable for its evocation of the original that called it forth and by its reliance on a multi-layered perspectival technique. In the 1854 introduction to his collected writings, he provided a rationale for the latter strategy: 'In order to express different points of view on artistic matters, it seemed appropriate to invent contrasting artist-characters, of whom Florestan and Eusebius were the most important, with Master Raro occupying a mediating position'. Close analysis plays a major role in Schumann's lengthy review of Berlioz's Symphonie fantastique (NZM, iii, 1835, pp.1–2, 33–5, 37–8, 41–8, 49–51), not as an end in itself, but as a means of defusing the charge of formlessness levelled against the work by Fétis and others.

Although Schumann eventually looked upon his journalistic activity as a drain on his time and energy (in 1844 he sold the Neue Zeitschrift to K.F. Brendel), it nonetheless enabled him to resolve the longstanding struggle between his inclinations towards poetry and music. Moreover, his writings stand in reciprocal relationship to his compositional projects. Just as much of his poetic criticism adopts an almost musical style, many of his compositions can be interpreted as critiques in sound of past and contemporary practice.

6. The Davidsbündler comes of age: Leipzig, 1834–8. Schumann completed two significant compositions early in 1835: Carnaval op.9 and the Etudes symphoniques op.13 (both of which were probably begun late in 1834). These works grew out of his relationship with Ernestine von Fricken. The generating motifs of Carnaval derive from the name of her home town, Asch; agents of a network of subliminal connections among the cycle's 21 pieces, these 'Sphinxes' (as Schumann called them) imbue the work with a measure of the 'Witz' (wit) so highly prized by Jean Paul and the Jena Romantics. Originally titled Fasching: Schwänke auf vier Noten für Pianoforte von Florestan, the cycle brings together a colourful array of musical fragments titled after characters who run the gamut from members of the Davidsbund (some disguised as commedia dell'arte figures), to Clara Wieck, Ernestine, Paganini and Chopin. The Etudes symphoniques, based on a melody purportedly by Ernestine's father (an amateur flautist), arose from an altogether more serious purpose: the liberation of the variation form from the conventions that were imposed on it by the bourgeois salon. At times contrapuntally dense, often syntactically free, and consistently challenging from a technical point of view, the Etudes symphoniques (first version, published in 1837) unfold a symmetrical structure around strategically placed variations.

Our relatively limited knowledge of Schumann's activities after the completion of this contrasting pair of works is particularly unfortunate in light of his assertion that the year 1835 was 'even more important in its consequences' than 1834. No doubt the Neue Zeitschrift claimed a large part of his attention. Moreover, later in the year he had considerably broadened his circle of acquaintances and friends, in part thanks to regular attendance at the salon of Henriette Voigt, doyenne of Leipzig's cultural élite. A brief encounter on 27 September with Chopin, then en route to Carlsbad, was followed on 4 October by his first meeting with the newly appointed director of the Leipzig Gewandhaus concerts, Felix Mendelssohn. Founded on mutual respect, veneration for the composers of the German classical tradition, admiration of Jean Paul and a passion for chess and billiards, their friendship endured until Mendelssohn's death in 1847.

The most significant of the consequences of Schumann's 25th year, however, was the burgeoning of his love for the 15-year-old Clara Wieck. Flirtatious exchanges in the spring of 1835 led to their first kiss on the steps outside Wieck's house in November and mutual declarations of love the next month in Zwickau, where Clara appeared in concert. Having learnt in August of Ernestine von Fricken's illegitimate birth and fearful that her limited means would force him to earn his living like a 'day-labourer', Schumann engineered a complete break towards the end of the year. But his idyll with Clara was soon brought to an unceremonious end. Her father became aware of their nocturnal trysts during the Christmas holidays and summarily called them to a halt.

Clara was deeply implicated in Schumann's compositional efforts in the latter half of 1835. Dedicated to her 'by Florestan and Eusebius', the F♯ minor Sonata on which Schumann had been working intermittently for two years was completed by August and figures in an allusive web that may be seen as an aesthetic counterpart to their intensifying relationship. The Allegro vivace of the first movement (a revision of the 1832 Fandango) develops a drum-like motif culled from Clara's own Scène fantastique: Ballet de revenants; the middle section of Clara's piece drew in turn on the dactylic rhythms of Schumann's Fandango. The Piano Sonata in G minor that Schumann provisionally completed in October was less obviously linked with Clara, at least at this point. Though often cited as one of his most classically structured works, the composition in fact brims with Florestanian pathos, especially in its concluding Presto passionato (later replaced by a far tamer Rondo), a veritable encyclopedia of complex rhythmic and metric effects.

Schumann had good reason to refer to 1836 as his 'sad year'. On 14 January Wieck sent Clara to Dresden, where Schumann, undeterred even by the death of his mother, met her secretly in the second week of February. His hopes for a reconciliation with Wieck proved ill-founded; in a letter of 1 March he reported that his old teacher refused him to have contact with Clara 'under pain of death'. The enforced separation threw Schumann into a state of utter despair. As he later confided to Clara, he tried to banish her from his thoughts by initiating a liaison with a woman who had already 'partially ensnared' him, a reference either to Christel or, more likely, to the mistress he had taken by mid-October, known only as 'La Faneuse' ('the haymaker').

In spite of his dejection, Schumann cultivated a number of fruitful artistic ties during the second half of the year. By the end of the summer he had become friendly with Ferdinand David, leader of the Gewandhaus Orchestra and of a string quartet whose reading sessions, often held at Schumann's new lodgings in Ritterstrasse, may have inspired his plans to write a piano trio and a piano quartet. On 9 September Schumann spent an 'unforgettable' day with Chopin, whose G minor Ballade op.23 struck him as the composer-pianist's 'most original if not most ingenious work'. Chopin may also have treated Schumann and his colleagues to a performance of a preliminary version of his second Ballade (op.38). Late in October Schumann established a warm bond with William Sterndale Bennett, who had gone to Leipzig to study with Mendelssohn and was to remain there until June 1837.

Schumann brought only two compositions to (provisional) completion in 1836, but both are of imposing dimensions. The work he first drafted as a five-movement piano sonata in F minor and completed by June was published as the three-movement Concert sans orchestre op.14 in September (in the process of transformation from sonata to Concert, two scherzos were discarded and the original finale was replaced by a new one; the second of the scherzos was restored when Schumann reissued the work as a Grande sonate in 1853). A series of four rhapsodic variations on a no longer extant 'Andantino de Clara Wieck' serves as the composition's affective centre of gravity. In that Schumann's variations supply the melodic and tonal closure lacking in Clara's theme (or the portion of it he varies), they act as musical emblems for the longed-for union with his beloved.

The second major compositional project of 1836 was equally bound up with Clara. In June he drafted a work called Ruines: fantaisie pour le pianoforte; probably the title refers to what later became the first movement of the C major Fantasie op.17. When in early September he had an idea for a contribution to the committee soliciting funds for a Beethoven memorial, he returned to the single-movement fantasy, added two more movements, and offered the work in this form to the publisher C.F. Kistner, to whom he wrote on 19 December: 'Florestan and Eusebius would very much like to do something for Beethoven's monument, and to that end have composed: "Ruinen. Trophaeen. Palmen. Grosse Sonate f. d. Pianof. für Beethovens Denkmal"'. Unable to find a venue for his 'grand sonata', he set it aside until January or February 1838, but did not see it through to publication until March or April 1839, the title having been altered in the meantime from Dichtungen: Ruinen, Siegesbogen, Sternbild to Fantasie.

Schumann's op.17 occupies the delicate middle ground between art and experience. The composer projects his own voices through those of his alter egos Florestan and Eusebius, who dominate the second and third movements respectively, and collaborate on the first. Moreover, the first movement (which Schumann called a 'deep lament for Clara') represents a highpoint in his search for 'new forms'. Its sonata-form design interrupted by an evocative character-piece, 'Im Legendenton', the movement culminates in an allusion to the final song of Beethoven's An die ferne Geliebte (a pre-publication version of the final movement ends with the same music). The deeply personal message of the Fantasie is thus conveyed through a dialectic of 'higher' (or larger) and smaller forms.

In December 1836 Schumann experienced something of a reawakening from the abject despair to which he had succumbed the year before. During January and February 1837 he sketched a piano sonata in F minor, no traces of which survive, and even thought of writing a symphony in E♭. Overlapping with these projects and continuing into March was a period of study devoted to Bach's Art of Fugue and organ chorale preludes. Throughout the winter and spring Schumann had little contact with Clara, although they lived near each other, but in May he was no doubt pleased to learn that Carl Banck, a singing teacher and composer who had taken more than a passing interest in Clara, had been banished from Wieck's house. The gifted British pianist Anna Robena Laidlaw entered Schumann's circle during the early summer and, like several young women before her, inspired him to compose. Drafted in July and dedicated to Laidlaw, the Fantasiestücke op.12 occupy a pivotal position in Schumann's output. The first of his cycles to draw on the world of E.T.A. Hoffmann (the title comes from the poet's Fantasiestücke in Callots Manier), it inaugurates a shift in emphasis from larger to smaller forms. At the same time, the work differs in important respects from Schumann's earlier cycles of poetic miniatures, given the tendency of its individual pieces towards greater breadth and structural self-sufficiency, and their regular alternation between Eusebian introspection and Florestanian impulsiveness.

In early August, Clara broke the silence that had separated them for 18 months. Acting through Ernst Becker, a lawyer and amateur pianist, she invited Schumann to a forthcoming performance featuring three of his Etudes symphoniques. He in turn wrote to her on 13 August, asking for a 'simple yes' as a token of her willingness to present her father with a letter in which Wieck was formally requested to bless Schumann's 'spiritual bond' with Clara. She responded positively on 15 August, thus sealing what Schumann would call 'the dawn of a second alliance'. Aided by Clara's trusted maid Nanni, the pair began the remarkable correspondence that would include 275 letters by the end of 1839.

The formalization of his engagement to Clara also stimulated Schumann's creativity. Less than a week after receiving her 'yes', he set to work on the Davidsbündlertänze op.6, and he completed a draft by mid-September. The cycle proclaims its debt to Clara's muse at the outset with a quotation from the fifth piece, a mazurka in G, of her Soirées musicales (also op.6). Whether Schumann enciphers Clara's name in several of the cycle's dances, as has been suggested by some writers, is less clear. The musical cipher system described in Johann Klüber's Kryptographik of 1809 (the manual that Schumann is said to have used to render 'Clara' in tones, though it is nowhere mentioned in his writings) fails to yield anything remotely resembling the pitch configurations often identified as 'Clara' ciphers (C–B–A–G♯–A and D–C♯–B–A♯–B).

In the months after completing the Davidsbündlertänze, Schumann entered a period of intense emotional turmoil. His plea for Wieck's blessing had met with a sharp rebuff, though the older man sanctioned their meeting in public and exchanging letters while Clara was on tour. But so far as Schumann could determine, Wieck was interested only in 'selling' his daughter to the wealthiest suitor and in arranging lucrative concert tours. Still, October opened auspiciously with a 'blissful meeting with Clara'. (At this time, Schumann began to keep daily records of his expenditures; eventually the entries in these Haushaltbücher would document his compositional activities and even his fluctuating psychological states.) His subsequent lapse into melancholia resulted from two factors: Wieck's 'crackpot' alternation between friendliness and irascibility; and Clara's departure, in mid-October, on a concert tour that kept her away from Leipzig until May of the following year.

In late October 1837 Schumann turned again to the study of counterpoint, assembling the results of his 'fugal frenzy' (excerpts from Marpurg's treatise and drafts of fugal expositions) into the manuscript known as Fugengeschichte. But by mid-November he was again in the throes of depression. Exhausted by his work for the Neue Zeitschrift and further debilitated by bouts of heavy drinking, he suffered 'awful relapses' on 18 and 19 December and a 'horrid unhinging' on Christmas evening.

Schumann recovered from this neurotic spell by sheer determination. Having weaned himself away from Poppe's tavern, he was composing 'in a state of enchantment over Clara' by the end of January 1838. A group of keyboard waltzes and an étude in F♯ minor (none of which survive) initiated a spurt of creativity that extended until May and whose products included the Novelletten op.21, Kinderscenen op.15 and Kreisleriana op.16. Begun in late January or early February and drafted by April, the Novelletten bring together diverse and seemingly incompatible tendencies. Their often richly imitative textures represent an internalization of Schumann's recent study of Bach's Das wohltemperirte Clavier. 'I'm playing with forms', he wrote to Clara while at work on the cycle on 11 February, and in the same letter implored her to read Flegeljahre. His attempt to imbue the Novelletten with the quality of a Jean-Paulian narrative resulted in fragmented reprises, the embedding of smaller within larger structures and an evolutionary approach to melodic design in several of the cycle's larger pieces. Clara herself puts in an appearance in the eighth and final piece of the set, where a 'Stimme aus der Ferne' quotes from her Nocturne op.6 no.2.

While still occupied with the Novelletten in February and March, Schumann drafted up to 30 'cute little things' from which he extracted 13 to form Kinderscenen. Its title notwithstanding, the first of his keyboard cycles to achieve something approaching commercial success was not conceived for children, but rather, as he emphasized in a letter of 6 October 1848 to Carl Reinecke, as 'reflections of an adult for other adults'. Perhaps for the first time in his career, Schumann struck the delicate balance between art and artlessness that was to take on increasing importance in the works of the years ahead.

Before finishing the Kinderscenen, and perhaps moved by recent hearings of Beethoven's op.131, his favourite among the late quartets, Schumann tried his hand at writing a string quartet of his own. According to a letter of 3 April to Joseph Fischhof, the work was well on the way to completion by that time, though corroborating musical sources are lacking. Another quartet was contemplated in June.

In the meantime, Schumann had begun a new keyboard cycle in late April. Its title derived from the 'Kreisleriana' section of Hoffmann's Fantasiestücke, the work was provisionally drafted by early May (Schumann's claim to have completed it in four days was probably an exaggeration) and further polished in July and September. The composer's identification with Hoffmann's eccentric Kapellmeister is hardly surprising; both Schumann and Kreisler alternated between depression and rapture, and both were confirmed devotees of Bach. Kreisler's abrupt shifts of mood find a musical parallel in the contrast between daredevil virtuosity and gentle lyricism, a contrast often grounded in the tonal pairing of G minor and B♭. Thus the dualism previously associated with Florestan and Eusebius, the leading players of the Davidsbund, is placed in even bolder relief.

7. Viennese prospects, 1838–9. On 19 March 1838 Schumann learnt that Clara had enjoyed a major triumph in Vienna and had been honoured with the title 'Imperial-Royal Chamber Virtuoso'. That day he wrote to his brothers Eduard and Karl outlining his intention to settle with Clara in Vienna, where he planned to continue to edit the Neue Zeitschrift under the auspices of a Viennese firm, and where Clara, using her influence with the empress, might obtain a teaching post at the conservatory. A preliminary visit to the Austrian capital would be necessary before making the final move, planned for no later than Easter 1840.

When Clara returned to Leipzig on 15 May 1838, Schumann had just entered another depressive phase. Anxiety over his attempts to establish business relations with the Viennese publishers Mechetti and Diabelli, overindulgence in drink, Wieck's steadfast refusal to come to terms and Clara's departure in early July for a month-long stay in Dresden all contributed to Schumann's mental near-collapse on 31 July. Recovery followed rapidly as he began to prepare for the exploratory trip to Vienna. He and Clara secretly exchanged farewells in mid-September and again later in the month, when he circled back to Leipzig from Zwickau. On 27 September he departed by mail coach for Vienna, ready to take his 'first step as a mature man'.

Schumann reached his destination on 3 October, hatless and covered with dust but in unusually high spirits. His mood darkened considerably, however, when he failed to make headway with either the publishers Haslinger and Diabelli, or the Austrian court censor, whose approval was necessary if the Neue Zeitschrift was to be issued from Vienna by January 1839, as Schumann hoped. Suspecting that Wieck was responsible for his cool reception by the Viennese authorities, he resigned himself, by late November, to keeping his journal in Leipzig.

In spite of this setbeck, Schumann took some consolation in Vienna's rich cultural life. Regular visits to the opera and theatre rekindled his interest in dramatic music. In the renowned pianist Sigismond Thalberg he found a 'modest and decorous' artist among a social élite that he otherwise considered 'a bunch of gossips'. Writing to Raymund Härtel on 6 January 1839, Schumann could barely contain his excitement over the cache of unpublished compositions by Schubert he had recently been shown by the latter's brother Ferdinand. Deeply impressed by the monumental Symphony in C (D944), he arranged for its première at a Gewandhaus concert under Mendelssohn's direction (21 March 1839). In his celebrated review of the symphony (NZM, xii, 1840), Schumann extolled the work's 'heavenly length – like a thick novel in four volumes by Jean Paul'. The review was written with a steel pen Schumann had discovered on Beethoven's grave, in a symbolic gesture prefiguring the stylistic synthesis he would achieve in his own Symphony in B♭ op.38.

When it became clear that he would not find a new home for his journal in Vienna, Schumann turned to writing and composing. In November he began a 'Brautbuch' for Clara in which he recorded landmark dates in their relationship and adages on married life. An important article for the Neue Zeitschrift on the concerto occupied him in December. By early in the new year, he had even taken a composition student, a 'hectic fellow' named Rösle.

After six months of relative inactivity as a composer, Schumann was slow to establish a regular rhythm of creativity. Although he finished a little piece for Clara on 12 November (Fata Morgana, later published as no.14 of the Albumblätter op.124), the following weeks brought only fitful starts on a variety of projects. Yet, within a month he had overcome his creative block, and soon a young runaway, Franz Jüllich, was acting as his amanuensis in exchange for lessons. Before leaving Vienna, he could boast of having made significant progress on about a dozen keyboard pieces. Responding to Clara's request to simplify the 'far too difficult' last movement of the G minor Piano Sonata, Schumann drafted a completely new finale in mid-December. Before the year was out, he had probably written two nocturnes (subsequently issued as the first two items of Bunte Blätter) and the Scherzo, Gigue and Romanze which he later rounded off with a Fughette and published as op.32. At the turn of the year came sketches for an Allegro in C minor and by 24 January 1839 a draft for a concerto movement in D minor. It is also likely that the Arabeske op.18 and Blumenstück op.19 were completed during the same month. Another work from this period, which Schumann called Guirlande and described intriguingly as 'variations, but not on a theme', is probably lost. But in the composer's view none of these pieces was as significant as the Humoreske op.20 on which he worked between January and mid-March. At the same time he produced sketches and drafts for Faschingsschwank aus Wien op.26, though the work was not ready for publication until May or June 1840, and did not actually appear in print until August of the following year.

In a long diary entry of 20 March 1839, Schumann expressed a desire to leave Vienna within a fortnight. Then on 30 March he received word of his brother Eduard's grave illness, alarming news that motivated his composition of four character-pieces collectively titled Leichenphantasie ('Corpse Fantasy'). This grim designation was altered to Nachtstücke, an allusion to a series of eight stories by E.T.A. Hoffmann, when the work appeared as op.23 in June 1840. Schumann left Vienna on 4 April 1839, but when he arrived in Zwickau on 9 April, Eduard had already been dead for three days. His home town, Schumann noted in his diary, made the impression of a place 'now completely extinct'.

The compositions of Schumann's Viennese period cover a broad range of genres and styles. Works in the larger forms appear side-by-side with character-pieces and cycles of miniatures. In almost all of them, we sense the emergence of a more accessible strain in the composer's art, a stylistic shift related to his desire to cultivate a larger market for his music. Most striking, however, is the tendency to conflate larger and smaller forms and a resultant dialectic between accessibility and esotericism. Although Schumann appeared to dismiss the Blumenstück (and the Arabeske as well) in a letter of 15 August 1839 as a work 'for ladies', it unfolds as a rhapsodic variation form on two ideas of which the first gradually yields primacy to the second. On the surface a kaleidoscopic array of miniatures, the Humoreske is in fact articulated into a series of four or five larger movements, the whole unified tonally by the pairing of G minor and B♭ (a dualism familiar from Kreisleriana) and thematically by a web of recurrent melodies. Conversely, the sequence of movements in Faschingsschwank aus Wien suggests the pattern of a sonata, but on reflection the 'higher' form emerges as a cycle of character-pieces in disguise. Schumann's quotation of the Marseillaise in the first movement is only the most obvious sign of his attempt to strike a popular (even political) tone.

8. THE BATTLE FOR CLARA, 1839–40. Schumann's return to Leipzig on 14 April 1839 coincided with disturbing news from Clara. Writing from Paris, she informed him of Wieck's plan to disinherit her and confiscate her earnings unless she agreed to break off relations with Schumann. His scepticism of Wieck's subsequent consent to their union, contingent upon Schumann's ability to earn 2000 thalers per annum, proved well founded, for by the end of May Wieck had renewed some of his earlier demands, insisting further that the couple were not to live in Saxony during his lifetime. As a defensive measure Schumann drafted a petition, dated 8 June, to the court of appeal in Leipzig, requesting that body either to insist upon Wieck's paternal consent or to grant permission for the plaintiffs to marry. Having sent the document to Paris for Clara's signature, he vowed to hold her 'aloft like a trophy won in the fiercest of battles'.

Schumann's dealings with the composer Herrmann Hirschbach, author of several articles on Beethoven's late string quartets for the Neue Zeitschrift, may have had a bearing on his turning to quartet composition at this time. In a letter of 13 June to Clara, he claimed to have begun two such works, both of them 'just as good as Haydn's'. Brief sketches for quartet movements in D and E♭ survive.

After failing to reach an agreement with Wieck in late June, and acting on the counsel of the lawyer Wilhelm Einert, Schumann submitted his petition to the Leipzig court on 16 July. On 19 August he and Clara met for the first time for nearly a year in the Leipzig suburb of Altenburg and later went to Zwickau, where they celebrated their reunion with extended sessions of four-hand piano playing. Back in Leipzig by the end of the month, they met (31 August) Archdeacon R.R. Fischer, the court-appointed mediator in their lawsuit, but were dismayed to find that Wieck, claiming urgent business in Dresden, had cancelled the appointment at the last moment. A private meeting between Wieck and Schumann on 24 September filled the latter with 'gloomy forebodings', and indeed, within a week Wieck attempted to postpone the court hearing set for 2 October, on the incredible grounds that the meeting with Fischer had not taken place. When Wieck failed to appear at the hearing (this time without even proffering an excuse), the court set a new date for 18 December.

3. Robert Schumann: lithograph by Gustav-Heinrich-Gottlob Feckert after Adolph Menzel

The lull in the legal proceedings afforded Schumann time to give thought to composition after a lengthy hiatus. While he wrote to Clara (10 October) that he had begun about 50 new works, the only tangible result of his efforts was the G minor Fughette later issued as the last item of the Klavierstücke op.32. The Drei Romanzen op.28, drafted by 11 December, constitute a more substantial project. Schumann's fondness for this set, the last in a rich series of keyboard works reaching back almost a decade, was perhaps rooted in its special relationship to Clara. The second of her own three Romances (completed in early 1839) features a variety of duet textures that Schumann emulated in the F♯ major Romanze (no.2) of his cycle.

In the meantime, Wieck had written an 11-page 'Declaration' in which drunkenness was only one of a litany of charges levelled at Schumann. While Wieck's erratic behaviour at the hearing on 18 December damaged his credibility, the court acknowledged in its decision (delivered 4 January 1840) that his allegation regarding 'the plaintiff's tendency to drink' might have some bearing on the case. Within days Wieck was circulating his declaration among concert managers and critics, and on 13 January he formally contested the court's decision in a Deduktionsschrift submitted at the end of the month. Threatening to sue Wieck for slander, Schumann responded on 13 February with a written refutation. By now a master of postponement, Wieck managed to stretch from six weeks to six months the period granted him to prove that Schumann over-indulged in drink.

Although confident he would ultimately prevail, Schumann sought to strengthen his hand against Wieck by inquiring, through his friend Gustav Keferstein, about the possibility of obtaining the doctorate at the University of Jena. In early February he offered to demonstrate his scholarly aptitude by undertaking a long essay on the significance of music in Shakespearean drama, an exercise that proved unnecessary. After sending the university officials a curriculum vitae, representative articles from the Neue Zeitschrift and testimonials to his musical skills, he received the doctoral diploma from Jena on 28 February 1840.

Earlier in the same month, Schumann noted his work on 'a rich harvest of songs'. Indeed, by January 1841 he had completed about 125 lieder, well over half his output in the genre. What he called his Liederjahr ('Year of Song') officially began on 1 February 1840 with a setting of the Schlusslied des Narren (op.127 no.5) from Shakespeare's Twelfth Night. 'How blissful it is to compose for the voice!', he wrote to Clara late in February, by which time he had completed, among other things, the Heine Liederkreis op.24, a setting of Heine's ballad Belsatzar (op.57), other lieder on Heine texts and settings of Goethe, Byron and Mosen as well. The latter, together with lieder on verses by Rückert and Burns, became the basis for the 'wedding present' that he finished in early April and published later that year as Myrthen op.25. A letter to Kistner of 18 February indicates that he was also contemplating an opera. No later than March he settled on Hoffmann's Doge und Dogaressa, a tale whose 'nobility and naturalness' attracted him, but in May his collaboration with the librettist Julius Becker failed.

The slackening of Schumann's productivity in early spring was due in part to his cultivation of a professional bond with Liszt, whom he heard in Dresden on 16 March and then accompanied to Leipzig. A mild depressive phase in the first part of April gave way to brighter spirits when Schumann departed, with Clara, for Berlin (home of her mother Marianne Bargiel, Wieck's first wife and an ally in the suit against him). Having returned to Leipzig on 1 May, Schumann again immersed himself in vocal composition. Within three weeks he produced his 'most profoundly Romantic' work to date, a Liederkreis to texts by Eichendorff selected largely by Clara (op.39; when Schumann reissued the cycle in 1850, he replaced the opening song, Der frohe Wandersmann, with the brooding In der Fremde). This was followed by 20 Lieder und Gesänge on verses from Heine's Lyrisches Intermezzo; completed on 1 June, the cycle was subsequently shortened by four songs and issued in 1844 as Dichterliebe op.48.

On 1 June Schumann also charged Wieck with defamation of character in a 'Denunciation' filed with the upper court in Dresden; it is not clear whether Wieck actually served his 18-day prison sentence for this offence. In his 'Declaration' of 7 July, Wieck conceded his inability to corroborate the charge of drunkenness against Schumann. Certain of victory, Schumann and Clara began their search for an apartment the following day, and before a week had elapsed Schumann was again immersed in the composition of lieder. By the end of the month he had completed a setting of Chamisso's lyric cycle Frauenliebe und -leben op.42, Drei Gesänge op.31 on lyrics by the same poet, Fünf Lieder op.40 on texts by Hans Christian Andersen and a popular Greek verse (all translated by Chamisso), and two ensemble settings of poems by Geibel (op.29 nos.1 and 2). Although he started a cycle on texts by Robert Reinick (Sechs Gedichte op.36) late in July, it was not finished until 22 or 23 August.

This surge of creativity came to a temporary halt after a setting of Geibel's Der Hidalgo (op.30 no.3) on 1 August. On the same day, the Leipzig court made public its 'Erkenntniss' of 18 July, the document granting legal permission for Schumann and Clara to marry. Wieck's failure to contest the decision during the ten-day period allotted him by law was taken as a de facto admission of defeat, so that on 11 August, a year after the initiation of the suit, Schumann could write with relief in the Haushaltbuch: 'happiest of days – end of the struggle'. With the posting of the banns on 16 and 30 August, the way was clear for the wedding to take place.

Although Schumann completed a few songs during the month of August, he devoted most of his energies to preparations for the forthcoming marriage ceremony. Meanwhile Clara had departed for a concert tour to Jena, Gotha, Erfurt and Weimar. Schumann paid her an unexpected visit in Weimar on 5 September, from which date they were 'together for evermore', as he noted in his diary. Finally, on 12 September, they were married in the village church at Schönefeld, a suburb of Leipzig. The simple ceremony was conducted by Pastor C.A. Wildenhahn, an old friend from Schumann's Zwickau days.

Among the gifts Clara received from Schumann on 13 September, her 21st birthday, was a little book with 'a very intimate meaning'. Maintained with varying degrees of regularity for nearly four years, and an invaluable source of information on the early phase of the couple's life together, the Ehetagebuch (marriage diary) was to consist of weekly entries alternately written by Schumann and Clara. As a rule, Clara kept up her side of the exchange better than her husband, with entries richer in detail and more pointed in their assessments than his.

To judge from the diary, they rapidly settled into Biedermeier cosiness. A period of joint study in late September devoted to Bach's fugues was followed in October by a continuation of Schumann's investigation of the role of music in Shakespeare's plays and by reading aloud from Jean Paul (an activity for which Clara showed little enthusiasm). Disagreements over the management of Clara's career emerged as a source of tension that was to resurface in the years ahead. Though plans for a tour of Russia were put off because of a volatile political situation and an unwillingness to compete with Liszt, Clara made renewed requests in October and November for Schumann to accompany her on projected tours to Belgium, the Netherlands and Denmark. Wieck's demand that Clara pay 60 thalers to have her piano removed from his house was a further cause of consternation in November.

While Schumann understandably composed little in the weeks after his wedding, he resumed creative work in early October with a set of three vocal duets (op.43) and the unusually scored Zigeunerleben (op.29 no.3, for vocal quartet, piano and optional triangle and tambourine). Between 13 and 17 October he even tried his hand at a symphony, a venture, as he put it, 'where not every first step is successful'. Regardless of whether this attempt can be linked with sketches in the Bonn Universitätsbibliothek for a symphonic movement in C minor, it was hardly a success, and Schumann soon returned to vocal composition with settings of texts by Eichendorff (op.45 no.2) and J.G. Seidl (op.53 no.1). His technically irreproachable if aesthetically undistinguished setting of Nikolaus Becker's patriotic poem 'Rheinlied' (Der deutsche Rhein WOO1, for solo voice, chorus and piano) was immediately successful after its publication in November. Late in the same month he turned to the poetry of Kerner for the first time in over a decade and completed 14 settings by late December. The bulk of these were assembled as Zwölf Gedichte von Justinus Kerner op.35, a cycle that is among the most impressive, if underrated, achievements of the Liederjahr.

Clara also made significant contributions to the song literature at this time. Impressed by her settings of poems by Burns (Am Strande) and Heine (Ich stand in dunkeln Träumen and Es fiel ein Reif), which she presented to him as Christmas gifts, Schumann suggested that they collaborate on a volume of lieder. The plan was realized the following year with Zwölf Gedichte aus F. Rückerts Liebesfrühling (published as Schumann's op.37 and Clara's op.12). The couple's 1840 Christmas season was further brightened by Clara's announcement of her pregnancy.

9. The aesthetics of the 'Liederjahr', 1840–41. Schumann's nearly exclusive concentration on vocal composition in 1840 can be traced to a confluence of pragmatic, personal and artistic factors. His turn to what was probably the most marketable of musical genres and the concomitant search for a more easily understandable style no doubt reflected his desire to attain the financial stability Wieck accused him of lacking. In addition, the lieder of 1840, like many of the earlier piano pieces, were closely interwoven with his feelings for Clara. 'Much of you is embedded in my Eichendorff Liederkreis', he wrote to her in May, and the same could justly be said of Myrthen, Frauenliebe und -leben, and the Kerner cycle op.35. Finally, in the lied Schumann would have found an ideal means of fulfilling his longstanding quest for a synthesis of music and poetry. While he claimed (in a letter of June 1839 to Hirschbach) never to have considered song composition as 'great art', his own achievements in the genre may be seen as responses to an imperative articulated repeatedly in his critical writings: the perfecting of imperfect tendencies in contemporary art.

It is possible to reconstruct from these writings the composer's aesthetic of song, which commanded his critical attention from 1836. In Schumann's view, the ideal lied must mediate between artlessness and art, simplicity and pretension. Construed as more than a singable melody supported by a decorative accompaniment, the lied unites voice and piano as equal partners in a shared discourse. Schumann's further conviction that a great poem is a necessary condition for a great song may help to account for the relatively limited role he ascribed to Schubert, who was not always a discriminating judge of verse, in the development of the genre. Although Schumann located the song composer's central mission in the preservation of the poem's 'delicate life', this aim was to be fulfilled less through an act of translation than through a subtle recreation of the poem's essence. The composer endeavours 'to produce a resonant echo of the poem and its smallest features by means of a refined musical content', he wrote, and hence becomes a poet.

The songs of the Liederjahr more than meet these standards. Schumann struck a balance between apparent naivety and refinement at all levels, perhaps most obviously as regards melody, but no less notably in the realm of form. While modified strophic or tripartite designs prevail in his settings, his concern for continuity often led him to leave the earlier strophes harmonically open so that closure is reserved for the final moments, as in Morgens steh' ich auf (Liederkreis op.24 no.1). In Der Nussbaum (Myrthen op.25 no.3), the interplay between a graceful but melodically attenuated vocal line and a diaphanous texture in the accompaniment produces a finely wrought dialogue. The piano postlude of Stille Thränen from the Kerner songs op.35, like the corresponding passages in many other songs, completes a thought only partly articulated by the voice.

Throughout his career as a lieder composer, Schumann drew on the verses of the finest poets of the late 18th and early 19th centuries, including Goethe, Eichendorff, Heine, Rückert, Andersen, Burns and Byron. While about half his chosen texts can be classified as lyric in the strict sense of the term, the remainder divide almost evenly into narrative and dramatic types. The topical range is equally broad, encompassing love in all its nuances, patriotism, wandering, death, isolation and even madness. In some of the collections, folk-and drinking-songs appear side by side with lullabies, visions and depictions of festive scenes. While he was particularly fascinated with the contrast between innocence and sensuality in many of Heine's lyrics, Schumann has been charged with insensitivity to the poet's characteristic irony. But although he undoubtedly smoothed over Heine's mordant wit on occasion, he demonstrated a keen sense for parody and for the destruction of illusion in his settings of Lieb' Liebchen (Liederkreis op.24), Ich grolle nicht (Dichterliebe op.48), and Die beiden Grenadiere (op.49 no.1), to cite just a few examples.

Nowhere is Schumann's tendency to cast himself in the role of poet more apparent than in his fondness for the song cycle, a genre he cultivated more assiduously than any other major composer of the 19th century. In a review of Carl Loewe's Esther op.52 (a cycle in 'Balladenform'), he observed that narrative continuity, large-scale tonal planning and motivic recurrence might contribute to a cycle's coherence, though the presence of all three elements was not prescribed as a condition of cyclic integrity. Several of Schumann's own works draw on poetic cycles that either provide a chronological narrative (Frauenliebe und -leben) or describe a series of affective states (the Heine Liederkreis). In other cases Schumann acts as co-creator of the text, either by making careful selections from a widely ranging poetic collection (such as Heine's Lyrisches Intermezzo, the textual basis for Dichterliebe), or by arranging poems from disparate sources into a meaningful pattern (the Eichendorff Liederkreis op.39). Tonal and motivic relationships are also coordinated with textual factors. The motion from D to F over the course of the Reinick Sechs Gedichte, for instance, reinforces a thematic shift in the poems from reality to dream world. Motivic recall and transformation are deftly aligned with poetic content in the Eichendorff Liederkreis (second version), where a compact but expressive figure first introduced in the accompaniment of the opening song (In der Fremde) becomes an emblem for yearning, removal in time and space, and finally for an ecstatic union with nature. The restatement of entire melodies over broad expanses, often a function of the piano part, may call up reveries of bygone days (Frauenliebe und -leben) or add a consoling touch to texts that would have otherwise ended on a bitter note (Dichterliebe, Kerner cycle). In all of these cases, the technique of melodic recurrence underlines the power of memory itself, the theme through which Schumann confirms his role as musical poet.

10. THE 'SYSTEM' OF GENRES. Viewing Schumann's output as a whole, one cannot help noticing his tendency to focus on individual genres at various points during his life: piano music (1833–9), song (1840), symphonic music (1841), chamber music (1842), oratorio (1843), contrapuntal forms (1845), dramatic music (1847–8) and church music (1852). Although there is no evidence that he made a conscious decision to pursue this course at a specific moment in his career, his orderly exploration of genres probably answered to both artistic and psychological imperatives. On the one hand, it would ensure his parity with such esteemed predecessors as Bach, Beethoven and Schubert (writing in 1842, he maintained that 'a master of the German school must know his way around all the forms and genres'); on the other, it was rooted in the same impulse to keep chaos at bay that made him an enthusiastic diarist, an avid (and systematic) reader and a sometimes obsessive keeper of lists.

4. Autograph MS of 'Im wunderschönen Monat Mai' from Schumann's 'Dichterliebe', composed 1840 (D-Bsb)

To reduce Schumann's creativity to a single sweep through the musical genres, however, is to misrepresent a considerably more complex situation. By 1833 he had already attempted a similar undertaking, though its products were often incomplete (piano concerto in F, symphony in G minor), or remained at the level of preliminary planning (the Hamlet opera). Then at the end of his career, he re-enacted his earlier survey of the genres in the short space of two years (1850–52), his will to produce spurred on by his position as municipal music director in Düsseldorf.

The notion of a 'system' of genres for Schumann's output needs to be refined on several other counts. First, Schumann's contributions to individual genres often embodied diverse tendencies; secondly, he often pursued his interests in different genres either simultaneously or in close alternation; and lastly, his accomplishments in one area frequently affected his approach to others. While keyboard music dominated between 1833 and 1839, it is important to recognize the variety of this repertory, where essays in the larger forms give way to a concentration on the miniature. Moreover, both sub-genres, the large and the small, are conflated in such works as the C major Fantasie and the Novelletten. In 1849, Schumann's most productive year, he focussed alternately on Hausmusik (character-pieces for instrumental ensemble, choral part-songs, lieder) – from which he could expect handsome financial returns – and on more imposing forms involving vocal and instrumental soloists, chorus and orchestra. Just as significant as the individuality of the genres is their interdependence in Schumann's hands. Like his poetic cycles for keyboard, his song cycles may be viewed as constellations of lyric fragments. The symphonic works of 1841 make both overt and covert allusions to the earlier songs and piano pieces. In the oratorio Das Paradies und die Peri, he drew on his previous experience as a composer of vocal and orchestral music.

It would be difficult to say which of these is the central genre for an understanding of Schumann's compositional development. Indeed, it was often in the transformation of one genre into another that he best displayed his mastery. Kennst du das Land, the first of the Wilhelm Meister songs (op.98a), is not only a lied but also a keyboard miniature and a compressed operatic scena.

11. THE SYMPHONIC YEAR, 1841. In early January 1841 Schumann set the nine lyric poems by Rückert that were to appear in the Liebesfrühling song cycle, conceived jointly with Clara (her contributions, nos.2, 4 and 11 of the published set, op.37, were ready by June). The identity of the C minor symphony to which Schumann alluded in entries of 21–2 January in the Haushaltbuch is still a matter of controversy. This notwithstanding, he had indisputably embarked on the activity that would claim his attention for the better part of the ensuing year. Motivated in part by Clara's suggestions (beginning in January 1839) that he write for orchestra, and responding to a personal desire, Schumann quickly made headway in the genre that Czerny described as 'the grandest species of musical creation'. Within four days and nearly as many sleepless nights (23–6 January), he completed the continuity draft (melody and bass sketches, notated on two staves) of the First ('Spring') Symphony op.38, the orchestration of which was finished by late February. What Schumann described as 'symphonic fire' was not cooled when he received an induction notice from the Leipzig communal guard (his petition for exemption from service was approved early in 1842), though after scoring the symphony he suffered from mild depression. His mood had brightened by the time of the work's warmly applauded première on 31 March at the Gewandhaus, an event he counted among the most important of his artistic life. Revisions of the first movement, scherzo and finale followed in June and August. With the First Symphony, he thus established a pattern of rapid sketching, textural elaboration and revision (often in reaction to a trial performance) that he was to employ in many of his subsequent works in the larger forms.

His next symphonic composition was sketched and scored in April and May. Conceived as a 'Suite' or 'Symphonette', and subjected to extensive revisions in August and again in the autumn of 1845, it was published in 1846 as Overture, Scherzo and Finale op.52. While still occupied with the first version of the finale in May 1841, he drafted a Phantasie in A minor for piano and orchestra, which, with the addition of a slow movement and rondo finale a little over four years later, became the Piano Concerto op.54.

'Sometimes I hear D minor strains resounding wildly from the distance', Clara wrote at the end of May in a reference to her husband's latest symphonic effort, a Symphony in D minor. While the sketching process had come to an end by mid-June, the work did not achieve provisional completion until October. In the meantime, the Schumanns were caught up in a number of activities great and small. Early in July they enjoyed a holiday in the environs of Dresden. At about the same time, Schumann looked to the plays of Calderón as a possible source for an opera libretto. By early August, Thomas Moore's Paradise and the Peri had come under close scrutiny for operatic treatment; working with Adolf Böttger, Schumann made substantial progress in transforming the verse fairy tale into a quasi-dramatic text by December. On 1 September, soon before her 22nd birthday, Clara gave birth to their first child, a daughter, named Marie. Late in the same month, Schumann sketched yet another symphony, this one in C minor. While the continuity draft was not fully elaborated for orchestra, the music for the scherzo was later reworked as no.13 of Bunte Blätter op.99 (published in 1852). Having polished the D minor Symphony by early October, he turned briefly to vocal composition with a setting of Heine's Tragödie for voices and orchestra (a version for soprano, tenor and piano appeared in 1847 as op.64 no.3). On 6 December both the Overture, Scherzo and Finale and the D minor Symphony were first performed, at a Gewandhaus concert under Ferdinand David. The public's less than wholehearted embracing of these works (in contrast to its enthusiastic reaction to Clara's and Liszt's playing of the latter's Hexameron duo) may have contributed to Schumann's decision to withhold both from immediate release. Unable at first to interest a publisher in the symphony, he revised it extensively in December 1851, issuing it two years later as his Fourth Symphony op.120.

Schumann's main compositional efforts of 1841 constitute a comprehensive exploration of the symphonic medium. The grandeur of the First Symphony gives way in the Overture, Scherzo and Finale to a more compact design and an elfin orchestration redolent of Weber. (To judge from the sketches for the C minor Symphony, the finished product would probably have been deliberately Classical in style.) The style of the Phantasie for piano and orchestra stands between the improvisatory manner that distinguished Schumann's pianism and a structural plan rooted in the principles of sonata form. Finally, Schumann's attempt to bind the movements of the D minor Symphony into a freely unfolding whole justifies his later reference to the work as a 'symphonic fantasy'.

(a)

(b)

5. Autograph score of the opening of Schumann's Symphony in D minor: (a) 1841 version (A-Wgm); (b) 1851 version (D-Bsb)

Faced with the problem of developing lyrical material into the dynamic forms expected of every post-Beethovenian symphonist, Schumann naturally turned to Schubert as a model. But even in the First Symphony, the most derivative of his mature orchestral works, he managed to forge convincing alternatives to the strategies of his predecessors. Inspired by a 'spring poem' by Böttger, the First Symphony lies midway between absolute and programme music. Schumann's replacing of the traditional point of recapitulation in the first movement with an apotheosis-like statement of the musical motto generated from Böttger's poem is only the most obvious of the techniques through which he strikes a grand symphonic tone in a fundamentally original manner.

In his reviews of orchestral music, Schumann noted the tendency of his contemporaries to imbue their works with 'historical interest' by developing related ideas over the course of an entire work. A prime means of achieving coherence on the large scale, the technique of inter-movement thematic recall figures prominently in the works of the symphonic year, though Schumann was equally anxious to circumvent the monotony that might result from the over-use of a limited number of ideas. In the First Symphony, the concluding trombone chorale of the slow movement prefigures the main theme of the following scherzo in a gesture that provides both continuity and variety. The thematic web is even more densely woven in the Overture, Scherzo and Finale, where an idea introduced in the first movement's coda undergoes a variety of shifts in character in the subsequent movements. Although the A minor Phantasie owes much to the rhetoric of sonata form, its various sections, each articulated by a change in tempo and each presenting related motifs in an ever-changing light, are close to the fast–slow–fast disposition of a typical concerto. The D minor Symphony, perhaps the most radical of Schumann's works of 1841, does much the reverse in that the movements (all derived from material presented near the outset) together describe an overall pattern of exposition (slow introduction and Allegro di molto), development (Romanza and Scherzo), retransition (Largo) and recapitulation (Finale: Allegro vivace). A comment entered by Schumann into the marriage diary (March 1841) to the effect that his next symphony would be named after Clara, whom he planned to 'portray' with 'flutes, oboes and harps', has often been interpreted as a reference to the D minor Symphony, though it might just as well alude to the Overture, Scherzo and Finale. Indeed, Schumann sought to 'portray' Clara, at some level, in any number of his mature works.

12. The chamber music year, 1842–3. The first crisis of the Schumanns' married life arose in connection with a concert tour of north German cities undertaken early in 1842 and intended primarily as a showcase for Clara's pianism. Annoyed at having been snubbed by court officials in Oldenburg after Clara's concert there on 25 February, Schumann was in the depths of melancholy when he and Clara subsequently travelled to Hamburg.

Finally, on 10 March (which Clara remembered as the 'most miserable day' of their marriage up to that point), he could bear his 'undignified situation' no longer and returned alone to Leipzig while Clara went on to give concerts in Copenhagen. Schumann's depressive state was exacerbated by his intemperance, though he did busy himself with contrapuntal exercises in the weeks before his reunion with Clara on 25 April. During the same period he also pored over the string quartets of Haydn and Mozart, and after Clara's return they studied these scores at the keyboard.

Soon the 'quartet thoughts' to which Schumann had first alluded in the Haushaltbücher on 14 February bore fruit as the String Quartets in A minor and F (op.41 nos.1 and 2), sketched and elaborated as a pair in June and early July. A third quartet (in A, op.41 no.3) was composed 8–22 July. Not long after returning from an excursion in Bohemia (6–22 August), during which he and Clara had a memorable audience with Metternich, Schumann drafted a composition that would achieve early and lasting success, the Piano Quintet in E♭ (op.44). Having completed this work by mid-October, he spent much of November working on a companion piece, the Piano Quartet in E♭ (op.47). 'Nervous irritation' did not keep him from finishing a set of Phantasiestücke for piano trio (op.88) over Christmas. This impressive burst of creativity spilled into the next year with the Andante and Variations in B♭, drafted between 26 January and 7 February, and conceived for an unusual combination of instruments: two pianos, two cellos and horn (WoO10). Acting on Mendelssohn's suggestion, Schumann recast the work for two pianos, in which form it was published late in 1843 as op.46. Thus in less than a year he had completed a comprehensive survey of the instrumental chamber idiom with a series of works varied in both scope and character. Composition in the 'higher forms', where the finely etched style of the string quartets contrasts with the broader strokes of the Piano Quintet and Piano Quartet, gave way to the character-piece and variations.

As a critic, Schumann made two principal demands of the prospective composer of string quartets. First, the 'proper' quartet style should avoid 'symphonic furore' and aim rather for a conversational tone in which 'everyone has something to say'. Secondly, the composer must possess an intimate knowledge of the genre's history, but should strive to produce more than mere imitations of Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven. Both aspects of this aesthetic are aptly reflected in Schumann's own quartets, which he proudly described in a letter to Härtel of December 1847 as the best works of his earlier period. His fugal studies of March and April aided the creation of contrapuntally integrated string quartets where every member of the ensemble is accorded a crucial strand in the total discourse. Similarly, his immersion in the quartets of the Viennese Classical tradition left a definite imprint on his treatment of sonata form. Haydn's mono-motivic forms, no less than Mozart's tendency to conflate developmental and recapitulatory processes, became objects of emulation in the opening and closing movements in nearly all Schumann's quartets. Beethoven's op.131 in turn provided a model for the tonal and thematic strategies employed to achieve large-scale unity in Schumann's op.41 no.1.

It is important to remember that Schumann, like Mendelssohn, reached artistic maturity during a period in which chamber music came to occupy an intermediary position between private entertainment and public display. This dialectic comes to the fore in the tension between symphonic and more traditional chamber-like elements in Schumann's Piano Quintet and Piano Quartet. The peroration of the earlier work, for instance, occurs at the point in the finale where that movement's main theme is combined with an emphatic restatement of the first movement's motto, a gesture of epic recall that Schumann later used in his Second Symphony. (This tactic apparently failed to impress Liszt, who dismissed the Piano Quintet as too 'Leipzigerisch'.) Apart from its surface similarities with the Piano Quintet, the Piano Quartet projects an exuberant character through musical materials of a decidedly neo-classical stamp.

Both the Phantasiestücke and the Andante and Variations take up features already exploited in Schumann's keyboard works of the previous decade. The mosaic-like designs of the Phantasiestücke have parallels in the Novelletten, while the alternation of Florestanian ebullience and Eusebian introspection in the Andante and Variations resonates with the affective pattern of the Davidsbündlertänze. In addition, the mediation of esoteric and popular styles in these works prefigures an important trait of the Hausmusik of the late 1840s.

13. The oratorio year, 1843. Between late January and early March 1843, musical life in Leipzig was considerably enlivened by the presence of Berlioz. Schumann heard Berlioz's concerts of 4 and 23 February with great interest, and although his enthusiasm for the French composer's works had cooled in the eight years since the publication of his review of the Symphonie fantastique, the Offertorium from the Requiem, Berlioz relates in his Mémoires, prompted Schumann to exclaim: 'That beats everything!'

By this time Mendelssohn's plan to found a music conservatory in Leipzig, an idea he first broached with Schumann in November 1842, was well on the way to realization. Schumann willingly assumed his duties as instructor of composition, score reading and piano in March 1843, but by midsummer complained that very few of the school's nearly 50 students showed genuine compositional talent.

Berlioz's visit and the founding of the conservatory overlapped with the beginning of sustained work on the music for Das Paradies und die Peri. Descended from the union of a fallen angel and a mortal, and thereby excluded from paradise, the Peri in Moore's version of the tale (one of four long poems in Lalla Rookh, published in 1817) attempts to impress the guardians of the heavenly gates with the blood of a young warrior and the sighs of an expiring maiden, but only gains admission to paradise with her third offering, the tears of a repentant sinner. In a list dating from December 1840, Schumann designated the story as 'material for an opera', but when in the latter part of the next year, and working in consultation with Böttger, he began to transform his friend Flechsig's translation of Moore's verses into a libretto, the result seemed more appropriate for treatment as an oratorio. Although the text was essentially complete by January 1842, Schumann left it untouched until February 1843. Two of the oratorio's three parts were sketched and scored within two months, but then came a month-long hiatus probably occasioned by the birth of a second daughter, Elise, on 25 April, and the demands of the 'annoying journal'. By 16 June Schumann had brought the work to provisional completion, although he returned to it for polishing and revision in July and September. Rehearsals with the singers began in October, and the première (4 December) under Schumann's direction was such a success (thanks in large part to Livia Frege's singing of the Peri) that a second performance was arranged for 11 December. The public acclaim Schumann garnered as a consequence of these events may have caused Wieck to send his son-in-law a formal letter of reconciliation dated 16 December.

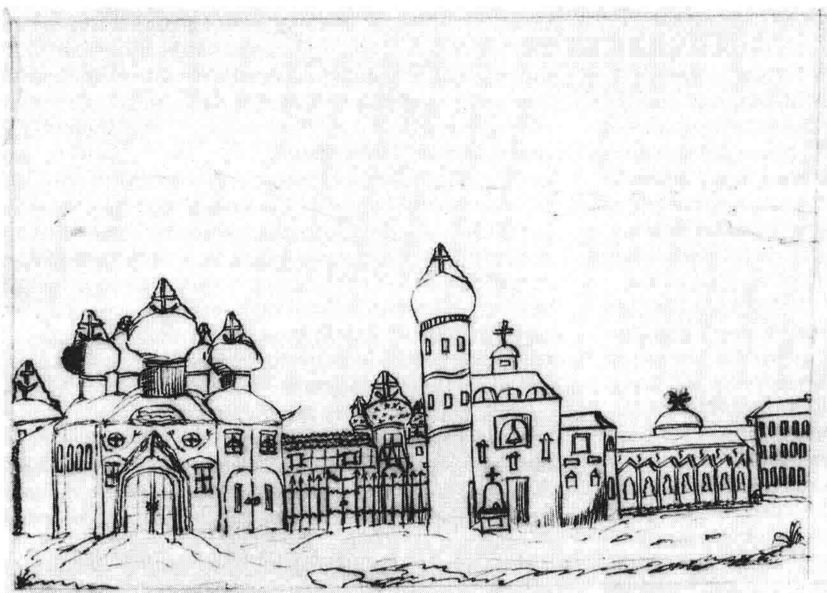
Writing to Carl Kossmaly on 5 May 1843, Schumann claimed to be engaged in the creation of 'a new genre for the concert hall'. The Peri lives up to this epithet on several counts. In the first place, the work effects a fusion of the sacred and secular realms, with the semi-human, semi-divine Peri herself providing an emblem for the 19th-century artist. Second, the deft transitions between the oratorio's individual numbers, no less than the balanced disposition of narrative, lyric and dramatic elements, ensures a previously unmatched degree of continuity on the large scale. A delicate web of melodic recurrences contributes to the same end. Finally, Schumann avoided a merely formulaic setting of the narrative portions of the text by means of what he called 'Rezitativischer Gesang', a flexibly declaimed vocal line supported by a motivically rich orchestral texture. Critics of Schumann's orchestration might be persuaded to modify their stance after considering the airily scored music for the Nile Genies (no.11) and Houris (no.18), the mellow horn choir and shimmering strings of the Part 2 finale (no.17), and the colouristic touches from the upper winds in the solo baritone's 'Jetzt sank des Abends' (no.21). The Peri occupies a pivotal position in Schumann's output. Soon after completing it, he wrote in the marriage diary: 'An opera will be my next work, and I'm burning to get started'. The upheavals of the following years delayed the realization of this plan, but when, in the later 1840s, Schumann did fulfil his longstanding desire to compose dramatic music, he returned to the notion of redemption, a poetic theme first represented musically in the Peri.

14. Russia and after, 1844. In December 1843 Schumann reluctantly agreed to embark on a concert tour of Russia with Clara. After departing on 25 January, they travelled (often under arduous conditions) to Königsberg (now Kaliningrad), Riga, Mitau (Jelgava) and Dorpat (Tartu), in February, St Petersburg (March), Moscow (April) and again to St Petersburg before returning to Leipzig on 24 May. In some respects the tour was a success. Clara's four concerts in St Petersburg and three in Moscow brought in no less than 6000 thalers, half of which counted as profit. During their first visit to St Petersburg, the Schumanns met the leading figures on the Russian musical scene, including Glinka and Anton Rubinstein, and developed a warm rapport with the art-loving aristocrat Mateusz Wielhorski, a talented cellist, and his brother Michal, an amateur composer. Writing in the marriage diary, Schumann described St Petersburg as 'the most wondrous of the world's cities'. He and Clara were similarly awestruck by the 'peculiar orientalism' of Moscow, where they made almost daily visits to the Kremlin.



Elected an honorary member of the St Petersburg Philharmonic Society, and granted an audience with the imperial family (if only after a tiresome and humiliating series of political machinations), Clara succeeded in consolidating her reputation as an international artist. In contrast, for Schumann the artistic results of the Russian tour were decidedly meagre. Although his Piano Quintet was enthusiastically received at one of the Wielhorskis' soirées and at Clara's third St Petersburg concert, he was unable to arrange a Moscow performance of his First Symphony. Seldom able to compose while touring, Schumann considered Goethe's Faust for musical treatment while in Dorpat and began to sketch a scene from its second part in St Petersburg, but otherwise made little headway with the project that would occupy him for nearly a decade. In April, however, he wrote five extended poems, all but the last directly inspired by Ivan III's great bell-tower at the Kremlin. While some writers have interpreted these verses as symptomatic of deterioration in the composer's mental state, the poems can also be read as allegories for the problem of artistic creativity; their emphasis on the theme of redemption through striving also echoes Schumann's interest in Goethe's Faust.

However, by the end of the Russian tour Schumann was in a physically and psychologically precarious condition. In Dorpat a severe 'nervous fever' had confined him to his bed for almost a week. An eyewitness account of his behaviour in St Petersburg presents him as depressed, preoccupied and incommunicative. Attacks of dizziness that impaired his sight caused him to seek medical advice in Moscow.

Schumann's illness persisted and intensified after he and Clara returned to Leipzig in late May. At the same time, he made an effort to devote himself wholly to composing. Indeed, his discontinuation of the marriage diary and his decision, in early June, to sell the Neue Zeitschrift should be viewed in this light. (The journal officially passed into Brendel's hands, for 500 thalers, on 20 November.) Late in June he began to sketch a setting of the final scene of Part 2 of Goethe's Faust and almost concurrently set to work on an opera based on Byron's The Corsair (for which only the opening chorus, an orchestral interlude and sketches for an aria survive). By August, however, Schumann was complaining of 'wretched melancholy' and a generally 'dreadful state of health'. Nor did his condition improve during a brief holiday in the Harz mountains (10–18 September). A consultation on 1 October with Dr Moritz Müller, a practitioner of homeopathic medicine, did little good.

On 3 October the Schumanns travelled to Dresden, where Clara's father had recently made his home, and by the middle of the month they decided to remain there for the winter. Their ultimate decision to move to the Saxon capital was motivated by several factors. Passed over in favour of Niels Gade in his pursuit of the directorship of the Gewandhaus concerts, Schumann held out few hopes of advancing his career in Leipzig. Dresden's flourishing theatrical life, however, might afford opportunities for his operatic ambitions. Further, the many spas in the area would allow him to continue the hydrotherapeutic treatment he had tried, with some success, in late August. Having made their way back to Leipzig after a visit to their friends the Serres in Maxen, Schumann and Clara held a farewell soirée at which the Piano Quartet had its first performance, on 8 December.

Soon after the family moved to Dresden, on 13 December 1844, Schumann's mental and physical state reached its nadir. According to the report of Dr Carl Helbig, Schumann's physician throughout his five years in Dresden, he was suffering from acute depression, insomnia, exhaustion, auditory disturbances, bodily tremors and a wide range of phobias. Attributing the exacerbation of these symptoms to his patient's recent compositional efforts, Helbig suggested that Schumann should give up music altogether. Although this advice was not taken, it is possible that Schumann's attempt to finish the Faust setting on which he had worked fitfully throughout the summer and autumn had affected his health. While his entry for 23 December in the Haushaltbücher reads 'Faust completed, but with effort', his work on it was far from over. The second part of the final chorus ('Das Ewig-Weibliche zieht uns hinan') was not fully elaborated until April 1847, and an entirely new version followed in the space of three months. Then in May and June 1848 he added a rousing coda to the central chorus, 'Gerettet ist das edle Glied'. Nonetheless, by December 1844 Schumann had abandoned his earlier plans for a Faust opera. 'What would you think about treating the entire material as an oratorio?', he inquired in a letter to Eduard Krüger.

6. Schumann's sketch of the Kremlin, Moscow, made during the 1844 concert tour of Russia (Robert-Schumann-Haus, Zwickau)

15. A NEW MANNER OF COMPOSING: DRESDEN, 1845–6. Schumann began to recover from his depression in late January 1845. Concurrently he studied counterpoint, along with Clara, who soon produced a series of preludes and fugues on themes by her husband and J.S. Bach. Schumann's own 'Fugenpassion', as he called it in the Haushaltbücher, resulted in the completion of the Vier Fugen op.72 in March, soon after the birth of their third daughter, Julie. On 7 April, the same day on which he and Clara delved into Cherubini's Cours de contrepoint et de fugue (1835), Schumann drafted the first of the Sechs Fugen über den Namen: Bach op.60 for organ. Intrigued by the pedal piano he had initially rented in order to master the fundamentals of organ technique, he composed two sets of pieces for this unusual instrument (alternatively for piano, three to four hands), between April and June: four Skizzen op.58 and six Studien (in canonic form) op.56.

After completing the Studien, Schumann brought his contrapuntal projects to a temporary halt. Having had no success in placing the A minor Phantasie for piano and orchestra with a publisher, he attempted to enhance its marketability by adding a slow movement and finale (composed in reverse order from 14 June to 16 July). The resulting concerto, destined to become one of Schumann's most popular works, received a private première on 4 December, with Clara as soloist and Ferdinand Hiller conducting the Dresden orchestra, but it was never performed in public during the composer's lifetime. While finishing the concerto in July, Schumann received an invitation to the Beethoven festival on 10–12 August in Bonn. Although he and Clara duly set out, on 31 July, his complaints of persistent dizziness and anxiety led the couple to abandon their original plans and visit Schumann's relatives in Zwickau instead. On returning home in mid-August, Schumann met regularly with Hiller, Wieck and Julius Becker regarding a projected series of orchestral concerts in Dresden, and by September he felt well enough to resume his work on the B–A–C–H fugues, all six of which were drafted by November. In the meantime he subjected the last movement of the Overture, Scherzo and Finale to extensive revision. After hearing a revised version of Wagner's Tannhäuser on 22 November, Schumann had a long conversation with the opera's controversial composer, whom he subsequently described as possessing 'an enormous gift of the gab . . . one can't listen to [Wagner] for long'.

A performance of Schubert's Ninth Symphony on 9 December may have fuelled the 'symphonic thoughts' Schumann noted in the Haushaltbücher at about this time. Soon after Christmas he had nearly finished sketching the work that was to be published as his Second Symphony in C major (op.61). Beginning in late January 1846, Schumann composed a series of choral partsongs, several on texts by Burns, that were subsequently issued in two volumes (opp.55 and 59). Soon after the birth of a son, Emil, on 8 February, he turned to the elaboration of the symphonic sketches, a process that occupied him intermittently for almost a year. His tortuously slow progress on the symphony – indeed, the near cessation of his creative work in the spring and early summer – can be attributed to recurrent bouts of illness, the chief symptoms of which included dizziness, auditory disturbances and general malaise. 25 visits to the mineral baths on the island of Norderney did little to restore his health. The Schumanns' five-week holiday at this popular resort (15 July–21 August) was further clouded when Clara suffered a miscarriage. Only between September and October did Schumann manage to make significant headway on the orchestration of the C major Symphony. The tepid response to its first performance, on 5 November at a Gewandhaus concert under Mendelssohn's direction, may have caused him to revise the first and last movements.

In a diary entry, probably dating from the late 1840s, Schumann wrote: 'I used to compose almost all of my shorter pieces in the heat of inspiration . . . Only from the year 1845 onwards, when I started to work out everything in my head, did a completely new manner of composing begin to develop'. The stylistic corollaries to this alteration in compositional process include a refinement in Schumann's approach to the art of transition and, even more importantly, a profound rethinking of what constitutes a musical idea. To put it succinctly, the linear development of a single motif often recedes in favour of the simultaneous development of motivic combinations. Schumann laid the groundwork for the 'new manner' in the op.72 fugues and the organ fugues on B–A–C–H, where he frequently coupled his subjects with flexibly varied counter-figures rather than with strictly maintained countersubjects. The fluidity of the motivic development in these pieces justifies Schumann's view of the fugue as a genre that could aspire to the 'poetry' of the character-piece. Although the Piano Concerto does not overtly reflect his preoccupation with counterpoint, it demonstrates a concern with the issues of continuity that were just as crucial for the realization of the 'new manner'. The six-bar transition between the last two movements, to cite an obvious example, at once recalls the first movement's main theme and leads inexorably into the finale, thus uniting reminiscence and anticipation. Like the D minor Symphony of 1841, the Second Symphony coheres by virtue of a web of recurrent thematic strands. In the later work, however, the technique of motivic recall is enhanced by Schumann's employment of contrapuntal combinations. Specifically, the chorale theme introduced midway through the finale is integrated with the opening theme of the first movement, also a chorale, in the symphony's concluding passages. The displacement of the finale's initial march-like theme by a pair of interwoven chorales in essence lifts the Second Symphony from a secular to a quasi-religious plane.

16. THE MUSICAL DRAMATIST: DRESDEN, 1847–8. Between 24 November 1846 and 4 February 1847 the Schumanns toured in Vienna, Brno and Prague. After a week in Dresden they went to Berlin, where the Singakademie planned to perform Das Paradies und die Peri on 17 February, and remained there until late March. The Viennese leg of the tour was hardly a success. The performance of Schumann's First Symphony and Piano Concerto at the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde on 1 January 1847 was poorly attended and coolly received; Clara's concert on 10 January was saved from the same fate only through the participation of Jenny Lind (whose artistry and personal warmth also endeared her to the Schumanns). The performance of the Peri in Berlin, with Schumann conducting, met with a positive response in spite of difficulties with the Singakademie directors (Eduard Grell and K.F. Rungenhagen), frustrating episodes with ill-prepared vocal soloists and technical mishaps at the performance itself. Apart from these annoyances, the tour provided Schumann with an opportunity to immerse himself in opera. A regular if not always approving member of the audience at performances of works by Donizetti, Rossini, Meyerbeer, Halévy and Flotow, he registered his 'desire to write operas' in his travel diary (15 March).

While Schumann suffered from insomnia and 'nervous weakness' during the last weeks in Berlin, his condition improved soon after his return to Dresden on 25 March. Indeed, he remained in generally good health throughout much of the ensuing year despite its tragic events. The death of Mendelssohn's sister Fanny Hensel on 14 May 1847 came as a shock; even more unsettling was the Schumanns' loss of their 16-month-old son Emil on 22 June. Their stay in Zwickau between 2 and 13 July for a festival devoted to Schumann's music proved a welcome distraction. Ferdinand Hiller's decision, in late October, to accept the post of municipal music director in Düsseldorf left open his position as conductor of the Dresden Liedertafel. Schumann's direction of this group provided the impetus for a series of compositions for male chorus, including the Ritornelle in canonischen Weisen (op.65), Drei Gesänge (op.62) and the pieces posthumously published as Drei Freiheitsgesänge (WoO13–15, with optional wind and brass accompaniment). As Schumann soon tired of what he called 'the eternal 6/4 chords of the male choral style' – his involvement with the Liedertafel ceased in October 1848 – he looked to a more satisfying outlet for his talents in the founding of a Verein für Chorgesang. First mentioned in the Haushaltbücher on 29 November 1847, the Chorverein began rehearsing on 5 January 1848, and occupied an important place in Schumann's musical life for the remainder of his stay in Dresden. In the meantime, however, he suffered another tragic loss when Mendelssohn died on 4 November 1847. Shortly after returning from the funeral ceremony in Leipzig, he made preliminary notes for a memoir. (His musical homage to his friend appeared as 'Erinnerung', no.28 of the Album für die Jugend op.68.) In November he also began to give composition lessons to the young Karl Ritter.

Schumann composed little in 1846, but 1847 was rich in creative activity. The orchestration of the closing scene of the second part of Faust was completed in April. At about the same time he prepared a four-hand piano arrangement of the Finale from op.52 and made further corrections to the Second Symphony. Clara assumed a central role in preparing a vocal score of the Faust setting, for which Schumann composed an alternative final chorus between May and July. In May and June he completed Beim Abschied zu singen for chorus and wind (op.84) and two of the songs later issued in the Romanzen und Balladen op.64. The 'trio thoughts' to which he referred in the Haushaltbücher took shape as the D minor Piano Trio (op.63), sketched between 9 and 16 June, and a companion piece in F (op.80), partially sketched in August. These works, perhaps inspired by Clara's G minor Piano Trio of the year before, were finished between September and November. Though conceived as a pair, they differ markedly in tone, the sunny quality of the second (with its allusion to Dein Bildnis wunderselig op.39 no.2) providing a foil to the more sombre conceits of the first. Nonetheless, Schumann's 'new manner' is much in evidence in both works, especially in the D minor trio, whose first movement evolves less from a theme than from a contrapuntal configuration introduced at the outset.

By far the grandest of Schumann's projects for the year involved the realization of a longstanding wish to write an opera. During the past 17 years he had considered well over 40 subjects for operatic treatment (among them Shakespeare's Hamlet and The Tempest, Hoffmann's Doge und Dogaressa, the Till Eulenspiegel legend and K.L. Immermann's Tristan und Isolde). Finally, on 1 April 1847, he settled on Friedrich Hebbel's Genoveva (1841). Based on an old French legend, Hebbel's drama focusses on the psychological decline of the steward Golo, who ensnares the title character in a plot to compromise her honour when she spurns his advances. Within days Schumann sketched an overture, drafted a scenario and engaged Robert Reinick as librettist. Reinick may have prompted Schumann to read Ludwig Tieck's dramatization of the French tale as Leben und Tod der heiligen Genoveva (1799). Before long, however, the collaboration between composer and librettist foundered, in part because of Schumann's desire to take over verbatim a significant proportion of Hebbel's verses. Schumann therefore assumed responsibility for the libretto, on which he worked sporadically from May to December. (He solicited Hebbel's advice in a letter of 14 May and met the poet in Dresden on 27 July; Hebbel later described Schumann as 'not merely stubborn, but downright unpleasant in his taciturnity'.) With the text nearly complete, Schumann elaborated the sketches for the overture between 17 and 26 December. He then sketched and orchestrated the four acts in turn, the entire process occupying him until August 1848.

7. Title-page of Clara Schumann's piano reduction of the opera 'Genoveva' (Leipzig: C.F. Peters, 1851): lithograph by Kretzschmer

Meanwhile the Schumann household reacted with joy and awe to a series of personal and public events. A second son, Ludwig, was born on 20 January. While at work on Act 2 of Genoveva in February and March, Schumann noted his 'political excitement' over the outbreak of revolution in Paris, Milan and Vienna. In May and June he amplified the central chorus ('Gerettet ist das edle Glied') of his setting of the final scene from Faust and directed a private performance of the entire scene on 25 June. Finding a performance venue for Genoveva, however, proved an immensely frustrating task. The intrigues of C.R. Reissiger, Hofkapellmeister at the court theatre, militated against a performance in Dresden; negotiations to mount the opera in Frankfurt, Berlin and Weimar failed to produce immediate results and the première eventually took place in Leipzig in 1850.

On 29 July 1848 Schumann read Byron's Manfred in the translation of K.A. Suckow. Within about a week, and immediately after finishing Genoveva, he began to prepare the text for his next dramatic work, an idiosyncratic treatment of Byron's play in which spoken dialogue alternates with 15 brief movements cast as vocal solos and ensembles, instrumental interludes, choruses and melodramas. But before realizing this plan, he prepared a four-hand piano arrangement of the Second Symphony with Clara's help and, on 1 September, Marie's seventh birthday, presented his eldest daughter with an album (Stückchen für's Clavier) comprising eight little piano pieces, seven of them original compositions and one an arrangement of 'Vedrai, carino' from Mozart's Don Giovanni. Soon thereafter he amplified this album with arrangements of well-known melodies by Bach, Handel, Beethoven and Schubert, and a diminutive cipher piece called 'Rebus' (the melodic line yields the adage: '[L]ass das Fade, fass das Ächte', i.e. 'ignore what is merely fashionable, seize that which is genuine'). Most of Schumann's original contributions to the album (though not 'Rebus') found a place within the 40 numbers of the Album für die Jugend op.68. Drafted in September and early October, and originally intended to include a sampling of pieces from the classical repertory and maxims for fledgling musicians, the Album became one of Schumann's bestselling publications. By September he had also completed a Lehrbuch der Fugenkomposition consisting of excerpts from the treatises of Marpurg and Cherubini amplified with his own glosses. In mid-October he returned to Manfred, sketching and scoring its imposing overture by the end of the month and completing the music for the body of the drama by 23 November. This 'dramatic poem' would have to wait until June 1852 for its stage première, in Weimar under Liszt.

Schumann's efforts to raise music to the level of literary culture reached a highpoint in the dramatic music of his Dresden years, a repertory that has not fared particularly well with either performers or critics. While the 'just assessment' that Schumann hoped for may still be elusive, it should be possible to approach that goal by taking into account his outlook on dramatic music in general and his aesthetic of opera in particular. Reviews written between 1837 and 1842, the brief notices in the Theaterbüchlein (1847–50) and remarks in Schumann's correspondence indicate that five aspects of this aesthetic can be isolated: the necessity for operatic music and texts to aspire to an elevated tone; a notion of 'melody' in which eloquence counts for more than mere tunefulness; an insistence on technical correctness; the conviction that operatic subject matter should be drawn from world literature; and a concern for fidelity to the poetic source. Schumann's prescriptions for a specifically 'literary' opera apply not only to Genoveva but also to Manfred and to his major achievement in this area, the Scenen aus Goethes Faust (WoO3). The affinity among these three works is further confirmed by their varied but related musical embodiments of the theme of redemption.

Caught in the crossfire between Wagner's detractors and supporters, Genoveva is neither a number opera nor an incipient music drama, but rather a scene opera, its distinctive stylistic profile deeply implicated in the spoken dramas upon which its text is based. Hence Schumann's frequent recourse to the declamatory mode of Rezitativischer Gesang (for instance, in the sorceress Margaretha's dream narrative at the beginning of Act 3) represents a response to non-rhyming verse forms that tend towards prose. The music for Genoveva likewise reflects the dramaturgy of the Trauerspiel or play of mourning, the genre from which Hebbel's and Tieck's plays derive their sustenance. Just as the Trauerspiel draws on allegorical imagery, so Schumann's Genoveva features an emblematic code whose chief elements include a repository of motifs, gestures and timbral effects associated with the opera's villains, Margaretha and Golo. If the music for Genoveva is characterized less by a family of recurrent motifs than by a sumptuous lyric tone, it is because she is the agent through whom the play of mourning is transformed into a hagiographic drama of redemption. Nowhere is this process of transcendence more palpable than in the heroine's great lament and prayer that occurs in the first part of Act 4.

Schumann's realization of the ideals of literary opera took a radical form in Manfred, the text of which retains, almost without alteration, 975 of the 1336 verses in Suckow's translation. In keeping with his desire to place this text in the sharpest relief, Schumann relied extensively on melodrama, the conjunction of unadorned (though sometimes rhythmed) speech and illustrative instrumental music. The music accompanying Manfred's encounter with the spirit of his beloved Astarte is the most exquisitely orchestrated passage in a score notable for its sonic effects. The title character of Byron's play is a brooding misanthrope who forsakes interpersonal exchange for distracted introspection and engagement with the present for absorption in a past he would sooner forget. These elements of the anti-hero's dilemma are powerfully projected in Schumann's music. The densely argued overture not only testifies to the continued impact of the composer's 'new manner' but also serves as an emblem for Manfred's solipsism, especially when the motivic fabric comes undone in the coda. Moreover, the tissue of reminiscences in the music for the drama reflects the dialectic between memory and forgetfulness in Byron's play. Although Schumann has been criticized for granting Manfred redemption to the strains of a jubilant setting of the 'Et lux perpetua' from the Requiem Mass, he remained fundamentally true to the tragic tone of his poetic source. Like Goethe's Faust, Schumann's Manfred is redeemed not in this life but in the next.

Writing after its first public performance in 1849, Brendel characterized Schumann's music for the closing scene of Faust as the harbinger of 'the church music of the future'. In fact the scene that Schumann called 'Faust's Verklärung' (no.7 of the Scenen aus Goethes Faust) is most remarkable for its fusion of sacred and secular styles on a grander scale than in any music since the finale of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. A corollary to the poetic theme of ascent to divine knowledge, the gradual intensification of texture, timbre and tone over the course of the scene's seven movements is undeniably dramatic. The mediation of declamatory writing and melting lyricism in Dr Marianus's 'Hier ist die Aussicht frei' similarly suggests an operatic style. In contrast, the spirit of church music prevails in the passages for the Blessed Boys and in the stile antico opening of the final Chorus mysticus. Theatrical and sacred styles come together in Schumann's settings of 'Das Ewig-Weibliche zieht uns hinan', both versions of which culminate in an impressive display of contrapuntal skill.

17. Unbounded creativity: Dresden, 1848–50. In a letter to Hiller (10 April 1849), Schumann juxtaposed the surge in his productivity with the upheavals wrought by the mid-century revolutions: 'For some time now I've been very busy – it's been my most fruitful year – it seemed as if the outer storms compelled people to turn inward'. Indeed, in 1849 alone Schumann completed nearly 40 works, many of them sizable. Nor was this creative outburst without its financial rewards; Schumann's annual income from composing increased from 314 thalers in 1848 to 1275 thalers in 1849. He further supplemented his earnings, beginning in November 1848, by giving private instruction to Heinrich Richter. The productive phase reaching into the early part of 1850 also proved to be a period of physical and psychological well-being.

While Schumann had concentrated on dramatic music for much of 1848, his focus shifted towards the end of the year. In November and December, just after finishing the music for Manfred, he drafted the Adventlied op.71, for soprano, chorus and orchestra. While completing this work, he began a set of pieces for piano four hands, Bilder aus Osten op.66, presenting it some weeks later to Clara as a Christmas gift. The Waldscenen op.82 followed between 24 December and 6 January 1849, though he continued to polish this cycle of nine keyboard miniatures until September 1850. In February 1849 he turned to the composition of chamber music (Fantasiestücke for clarinet and piano, op.73; Adagio and Allegro for horn and piano, op.70) and by early March had fashioned a latterday response to the Baroque concerto grosso in the Concertstück op.86 for four horns and orchestra. Later that month he completed several works conceived for the participants in his Chorverein (which by then had grown to include between 60 and 70 members) – most of them later issued as Romanzen und Balladen for mixed chorus (opp.67, 75, 145, 146) – and the Spanisches Liederspiel op.74. Two other projects were undertaken at this time: a series of Romanzen for women's voices (opp.69 and 91, completed in May) and the song cycle Spanische Liebeslieder (op.138, completed in November). In April he wrote the Fünf Stücke im Volkston op.102, for cello and piano, and set to work on the Lieder-Album für die Jugend op.79 (fig.8), a pendant to the similarly titled collection of keyboard pieces of the previous year.

The rhythm of the Schumanns' lives was disrupted, on 3 May, when fighting broke out in Dresden after the king of Saxony dissolved the Landtag. Two days later a republican security brigade attempted to draft Schumann into its ranks but he, Clara, and their eldest daughter, Marie, fled through the back gate of their home to the nearby railway station. They arrived in Mügeln by midday and proceeded to Dohna and finally to the Serre estate in Maxen. Travelling part of the way alone and on foot, Clara (who was pregnant) returned to Dresden on 7 May to fetch the rest of the children (Elise, Julie and Ludwig), who had been left with a maid. The royalists recaptured the city on 9 May, and the next day Schumann and Clara ventured back into Dresden to collect some of their belongings. Offended by the anti-republicanism of the aristocrats camped at the Serres' home, they decided to continue their temporary exile in Bad Kreischa, where they lived in 'cosy stillness' until 12 June. Schumann closely followed the news of the revolution, spent many afternoons on long hikes with his children and continued composing with remarkable fluency, apparently unruffled by the outer tumult. During his month in Kreischa he completed a number of new works (lieder for three women's voices, op.114 nos.1 and 3; Fünf Gesänge for male chorus, op.137; the first version, with optimal organ, of Verzweifle nicht im Schmerzenstal op.93; two of the

8. Title-page of the first edition of Schumann's 'Lieder für die Jugend' (Leipzig: Breitkopf & Härtel, 1849): lithograph by C. Hahn Mignon songs later issued in Lieder und Gesänge aus Wilhelm Meister op.98a; and the Minnespiel op.101), added piano accompaniments to the Romanzen for women's voices begun in March, and made further progress on the Lieder-Album für die Jugend.

If the lighthearted tone of many of these pieces seems strangely at odds with the shocking world events surrounding their composition, the four marches for piano, op.76, completed between 12 and 15 June in Dresden, are decidedly 'republican in spirit', to quote the composer himself. Writing to Brendel on 17 June, Schumann expressed his conviction that it had fallen to him 'to tell, in music, of the motivating sorrows and joys of the times'. While a joyful quality prevails in the keyboard marches, Schumann's settings of all but one of the interpolated lyrics in Goethe's Wilhelm Meisters Lehrjahre, a project that occupied him until 7 July, embody a range of darker moods. His fascination with Goethe persisted throughout the summer, resulting in the composition of the Requiem für Mignon op.98b (on a text from book 8 of Wilhelm Meister, sketched 2–3 July and orchestrated by September) and of nos.1–4 of the Faust scenes, sketched and scored between 13 July and 20 August. (Another son, Ferdinand, was born on 16 July.) The music for the final scene of Faust received a triple première on 29 August in Dresden (with Schumann conducting), Weimar and Leipzig, where the work was given in connection with celebrations marking the centenary of Goethe's birth. By the end of the year, Schumann had completed a diverse array of vocal and instrumental works: Vier Duette op.78 for soprano and tenor (August–September); Introduction and Allegro appassionato op.92 for piano and orchestra and 12 vierhändige Clavierstücke op.85 (both composed in September); Vier doppelchörige Gesänge op.141 (October); Nachtlied op.108 for chorus and orchestra (November); and three of Byron's Hebrew Melodies, op.95, Schön Hedwig, for speaker and piano, op.106, and Drei Romanzen for oboe and piano, op.94 (all in December). Sketched in December 1849 and January 1850, the Neujahrslied op.144 was orchestrated by the following October.

For some time Schumann had been hoping to obtain a salaried post. In July 1849 he expressed an interest in the recently vacated directorship of the Gewandhaus concerts. At about the same time he even allowed inquiries to be made on his behalf regarding Wagner's recently vacated post at the court theatre. Then in mid-November he received a letter from Hiller, who had just accepted an offer from Cologne, inviting him to assume the position of municipal music director in Düsseldorf. Schumann responded on 19 November, requesting further details of the position and informing his friend that he would not, in any event, be able to assume the post before the Leipzig première of Genoveva. When he and Clara went to Leipzig in February 1850, they were annoyed to learn that Meyerbeer's Le prophète would be performed instead, though Schumann took some consolation in the enthusiastic response accorded his Concertstück for four horns and Genoveva overture. In March he and Clara gave more concerts in Bremen and, with Jenny Lind, in Hamburg. Returning to Dresden after a brief visit to Clara's relatives in Berlin, Schumann officially accepted the Düsseldorf directorship on 31 March. He resumed his compositional activities in late March and early April with the Drei Gesänge op.83 and Aufträge op.77 no.5. After preparing for publication the Musikalische Haus- und Lebensregeln (the 'instructive appendix' to the Album für die Jugend), he brought the Faust project to near completion with settings of the scenes of Faust's blinding and death (nos.5 and 6 of the finished set), both drafted by 10 May. The Sechs Gesänge op.89 on texts by 'Wilfried von der Neun' (F.W.T. Schöpff) followed within a week.

On 18 May the Schumanns again went to Leipzig for the long-awaited rehearsals and production of Genoveva. The première on 25 June, under the direction of the composer, went smoothly until the tenor taking the part of Golo suffered a memory lapse in Act 3 and threw the cast into confusion. Although the performances of 28 and 30 June were more assured, Schumann did not achieve the triumph he had hoped for. However, he did not discount the possibility of future successes in the theatre; while in Leipzig he drafted a scenario for a libretto on Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet. In June he also participated in discussions regarding the newly formed Bach-Gesellschaft. Back in Dresden by 10 July, he turned once more to vocal composition, completing the Lieder und Gesänge op.96 and another half-dozen songs (later published in opp.77, 125 and 127) by the beginning of August. This second Liederjahr ended with Sechs Gedichte von N. Lenau und Requiem op.90, the last item of which was added on 5 August under the mistaken impression that the poet Lenau had died. On 25 August, when the cycle was first performed for a private gathering at the home of his friend Eduard Bendemann, Schumann learnt that the poet had in fact died on 22 August in an asylum near Vienna. At a farewell dinner given in his honour at the Brühlsche Terrasse, Schumann behaved badly, harshly criticizing a performance of his choral partsongs and rudely announcing that the wine, a gift from Bendemann, was not to his liking. He and his family departed for Düsseldorf on 1 September.

The music of this highly productive period of Schumann's career embraces almost the entire spectrum of musical genres, ranging from unassuming Hausmusik to 'literary' opera, from simple training pieces to elaborate concertante works. To these canonical types Schumann added a number of arguably new genres, including the choral and declamation ballad, the dramatic song cycle and the 'spiritual poem' for chorus and orchestra. It would be a mistake to search for a single, dominant trend in all this variety. On the contrary, the interpenetration of esoteric and accessible styles in the music of Schumann's 'most fruitful year' complements the dialectic between inner and outer realms articulated in his letter to Hiller of 10 April 1849. Moreover, the alternation and overlapping of phases devoted to music for 'Kenner' on the one hand and 'Liebhaber' on the other established a creative rhythm driven in part by commercial exigencies.

Much of the music of Schumann's later Dresden years reflects the composer's engagement with a Biedermeier culture characterized in equal measure by conviviality and educational impulses. The convivial side manifests itself most clearly in the folkish melodies, straightforward but elegant harmonies and syllabic settings typical of the choral partsongs. Similarly, the euphonious parallel 3rds and 6ths of the vocal chamber music and the ensembles in the Liederspiel (a nearly moribund genre that Schumann essentially brought to life) convert the personalized messages of lyric poetry into collective utterances. In his Hausmusik for keyboard, for solo voice and piano, or for instrumental ensemble, the educational aspect of the Biedermeier sensibility comes into prominence. Indeed, the Album für die Jugend, Lieder-Album für die Jugend and 12 vierhändige Clavierstücke constitute the beginnings of a pedagogical project unequalled in scope since the days of J.S. Bach. At the same time, Schumann's instrumental Hausmusik reveals a poetic dimension that emerges in the literary inspiration for the Bilder aus Osten op.66 (Makamen des Hariri, Rückert's translation of a medieval Arabic epic), the finely woven tapestry of motivic reminiscences in the Waldscenen and the fluidity of phrase structure that lends an ineffable speech-quality to the cycles for solo instrument and piano.

9. Autograph MS of the beginning of the Sunrise scene from Part 2 of Schumann's 'Szenen aus Goethes Faust', composed 1844–53 (D-Bsb)

Schumann was eager to experiment with tone colour, form and genre in much of the music of his 'most fruitful year'. Faced with the problem of striking a balance between an unusual concertante group and the full orchestra in the Concertstück op.86, the first large-scale concerted work to exploit the capabilities of the valve horn, Schumann deftly coordinated the characteristic gestures of the four solo horns with the functional demands of concerto form. The mellow tone of the horn also figures prominently in the Introduction and Allegro appassionato for piano and orchestra, its disposition in two thematically related but affectively contrasting sections a reflection of the mid-19th-century pianists' habit of presenting only the final two movements of three-movement concertos. The chief novelty of the Wilhelm Meister lieder lies in Schumann's blurring of the distinction between song cycle and opera, and in his inscription of this generic tension in the contrast between the lyricism of the Mignon songs and the largely declamatory quality of those for the Harper. Through an allusion to Dein Bildnis wunderselig (op.39 no.2) in the Harper's ballad, Was hör' ich draussen vor dem Thor, the composer proclaims his identification with the voluble bard in Goethe's poem. Like Das Paradies und die Peri, the choral-orchestral works of Schumann's later Dresden years embody the aesthetic of a 'new genre for the concert hall'. But whereas the earlier oratorio turns on the notion of redemption, the Adventlied, Requiem für Mignon, Nachtlied and Neujahrslied present a mélange of religious, political, ethical and humanistic themes. If the accent falls on the quasi-sacred dimension in the Adventlied (a work that Schumann variously designated as a cantata, a motet and a 'spiritual poem') and on the synthesis of religious and political spheres in the Neujahrslied, then the Requiem für Mignon offers a moving statement on the transfigurative power of 'Bildung' or self-cultivation.

The latter work resonates in many ways with the Faust scenes, which in turn mark the culmination of Schumann's accomplishments as a composer of dramatic music. His magnum opus consists of an overture (composed in August 1853 to round out the whole) and seven scenes that together capture the essence of Goethe's drama. These are grouped into three 'Abtheilungen' or parts: the first (nos.1–3) encapsulates the Gretchen tragedy; the second (nos.4–6) ends with Faust's death; and the third (no.7) represents his redemption through the agency of the 'Eternally-feminine'. While Schumann somewhat modified the Goethean original in nos.1, 3, 4 and 7, he remained basically true to the textual ideals of the 'literary opera'. Similarly, although he claimed that the scenes 'should not be performed in toto on a single evening', the Faust music is not without unifying features. Tonal coherence is ensured by the use of D minor and its relative major at crucial junctures. A recurrent melodic idea bearing an uncanny resemblance to one of the motifs linked with Margaretha in Genoveva becomes a musical emblem for Mephistophelean trickery, gnawing guilt and mystical yearning. At the same time, the score is noteworthy for its employment of a range of vocal and instrumental styles, ranging from the conversational idiom of the garden scene (no.1) and the solemn declamation of Faust's monologues (in nos.4, 5 and 6), to the orchestral tone portraiture of the sunrise episodes (no.4) and the migrating cantus firmus technique of the midnight scene (no.5). Similarly, the music evokes a variety of genres across the span of the work: lied (no.2), horror opera (nos.3 and 5), grand opera (nos.5 and 6), oratorio (nos.4 and 7) and church music (nos.3 and 7). Deeply sensitive to the all-inclusiveness of Goethe's drama, Schumann created a manifold musical world in his Faust scenes.

18. Director in Düsseldorf, 1850–54. On their arrival in Düsseldorf on 2 September 1850, and over the course of the next days, the Schumanns were greeted with a round of festive events, including serenades by the town musicians, a concert devoted to Schumann's music, a celebratory dinner and a ball. Though he complained of rheumatism in his foot after the family moved into lodgings on the corner of Allee- and Grabenstrassen, Schumann was soon caught up in the discharge of his new duties. As municipal music director, he was in charge of the orchestra and chorus (Gesangverein) of the Allgemeiner Musikverein, which presented from eight to ten subscription concerts annually in seasons extending from October to May. In addition, he was to oversee the music on major feast days at St Maximilian and St Lambertus, Düsseldorf's principal Catholic churches. According to Hiller, the first concert of the 1850–51 season (held on 24 October and featuring Clara as soloist in Mendelssohn's G minor concerto) came off splendidly.

On the day of his début as conductor in Düsseldorf, Schumann completed the draft of his Cello Concerto op.129. The magnificent cathedral of Cologne, which he first beheld in late September, is supposed to have inspired the symphonic project he undertook between 2 November and 9 December. Popularly known as the 'Rhenish', and published as Symphony no.3, op.97, the work owes its final form (according to Wasielewski, at that time leader of the orchestra) to a second viewing of the cathedral in early November. News of the Archbishop of Cologne's elevation to cardinal perhaps motivated the placing of an additional movement, 'in the character of a procession for a solemn ceremony', just before the finale. In late December 1850 Schumann began to gather several dozen keyboard pieces written between 1832 and 1849 into a collection he planned to call Spreu ('Chaff'). Since this title was rejected by the publisher F.W. Arnold, the pieces appeared as Bunte Blätter op.99 (1852) and Albumblätter op.124 (1854). At the turn of the year Schumann took up orchestral composition with the overture (op.100) to Schiller's Braut von Messina and again, a month later, with the darkly hued overture (op.128) to Julius Caesar. In the intervening weeks he set a number of texts by Mörike and other poets (issued in opp.107 and 125). By this time, then, his creativity had fallen into a pattern whereby larger compositions intended for public performance alternated with (more easily marketable) works in the smaller genres. The latter dominated in March, which saw the completion of the Märchenbilder for viola and piano, op.113, and the four Husarenlieder op.117, on Lenau texts. In early February Schumann drafted the scenario for an oratorio called Luther, and enlisted Richard Pohl as a collaborator. Although his plan to create a work accessible to 'peasants and burghers' alike was never realized, Schumann turned in late March to a project that did come to fruition, a setting of Moritz Horn's Der Rose Pilgerfahrt for solo voices, chorus and piano. But before finishing this 'musical fairy tale', he sketched the first of his choral-orchestral ballades, a setting of Ludwig Uhland's Der Königssohn. Work on both compositions proceeded more or less concurrently into the late spring and early summer. Between 28 May and 1 June he also set Uhland's Der Sänger as a choral partsong (op.145 no.3) and 11 haunting lyrics by the child-poet Elisabeth Kulmann for solo voice or vocal duet and piano (the duets as Mädchenlieder op.103 and seven lieder op.104). Ballscenen op.109, nine miniatures for piano four hands (including a polonaise composed in 1849), followed in mid-June. On 6 July the Schumanns celebrated the move to their new lodgings on the Kastanienallee with a performance of Der Rose Pilgerfahrt with a hand-picked group of singers from the Gesangverein. Between 19 July and 5 August they were travelling along the Rhine and in Switzerland, enjoying a holiday that Schumann would remember as one of the most idyllic experiences of his married life. During the following weeks he composed the first two of the Drei Fantasiestücke op.111, and on 16 August went with Clara to Antwerp, where he served as one of the judges in a male-chorus competition.

10. Robert and Clara Schumann: daguerreotype by Johann Anton Völlner, Hamburg, March 1850

11. Title-page of the first edition of Schumann's 'Der Rose Pilgerfahrt' (Leipzig: Kistner, 1852)

Schumann's second season as music director had a less than auspicious start. Forced to deal with poorly prepared singers and displeased by irregular attendance at orchestral and choral rehearsals, he had a 'stormy confrontation' on 6 September with the deputy mayor, W. Wortmann (a leading member of the administration of the Allgemeiner Musikverein), over the selection of repertory and soloists for the forthcoming winter concerts. This disturbance notwithstanding, he formed from his better singers a Singekränzchen which met regularly as a means of introducing the singers to the church music of the 16th to 18th centuries, and in November he instituted an unfortunately shortlived instrumental group (Quartettkränzchen). Correspondingly, his creative activity in the autumn of 1851 emphasized vocal and instrumental chamber music. Between mid-September and early November he completed the A minor Violin Sonata op.105, Drei Gedichte op.119 on texts by Gustav Pfarrius, the G minor Piano Trio op.110, and the second 'Grand' sonata, in D minor op.121 for violin and piano. In conformity with a now familiar pattern, Schumann then turned to projects involving larger forces: an orchestral accompaniment for Der Rose Pilgerfahrt (7–27 November), an orchestration of the Scherzo from Norbert Burgmüller's unfinished Second Symphony (1 December; on the same day, Clara gave birth to their seventh child, Eugenie), a revision of the D minor symphony (op.120) of 1841 in which both the instrumentation and motivic argument of the earlier version were extensively altered (12–19 December), and finally, the overture op.136 to Goethe's Hermann und Dorothea, a play he was considering for operatic treatment.

A number of large-scale works for vocal forces and orchestra followed in the first half of 1852. Based on a text by Uhland that was adapted by Pohl after a long and frustrating exchange with the composer, the second choral-orchestral ballade, Des Sängers Fluch op.139, was provisionally completed on 19 January. Then Schumann focussed his attention on church music, the genre he had described in a letter to August Strackerjahn (January 1851) as a composer's 'highest ideal'. Work on the Missa sacra op.147 (which, as Schumann later pointed out, was meant 'for the church service as well as for concert use') proceeded throughout much of February and into the next month, though the orchestration of the continuity draft was interrupted by a trip to Leipzig between 5 and 22 March. The enthusiastic response to three concerts featuring a broad selection from his choral, orchestral and chamber output was a sure sign of Schumann's establishment as a major composer in the eyes of the public. In the week after his return to Düsseldorf he finished scoring the mass (a contemplative Offertorium was added to the settings of the Ordinary texts in March 1853, perhaps in response to an announcement for a sacred music competition) and, following a move to Herzogstrasse, he sketched the Requiem op.148 (27 April–8 May). The new work was orchestrated by 23 May, just after the drafting of an orchestral accompaniment for Verzweifle nicht im Schmerzenstal in the middle of the month. Two projects of a literary nature also occupied Schumann in late spring 1852. On 11 April he began to select excerpts from Shakespeare's plays for inclusion in an anthology called Dichtergarten, the contents of which would eventually extend to relevant citations from many other staples of world literature. Then, on 27 May, he set about ordering his own writings on music for publication in a collected edition.

By the end of his second season as music director in Düsseldorf, Schumann's health was poor. Although suffering from nervous attacks, rheumatism, coughing fits and general exhaustion, he hoped to relive the pleasantries of the previous summer with a trip along the Rhine. In the weeks before his departure, his creative interests turned to narrative genres, first with the declamation ballad Die Flüchtlinge op.122 no.2 (composed 13 June) and next with sketches for the third and greatest of the choral-orchestral ballades, Vom Pagen und der Königstochter op.140, on texts by Geibel. Unfortunately, his attempts to proceed with the sketching process while on holiday (26 June–2 July) were cut short by persistent nervous complaints. Having failed to experience relief through a regimen of daily bathing in the Rhine, he set off with Clara on 12 August for Scheveningen, a spa on the Dutch coast. There he enjoyed the company of Jenny Lind and Johannes Verhulst, and made significant progress on the orchestration of Vom Pagen und der Königstochter, which he managed to complete by early September. Nonetheless, he again found himself in ill-health upon returning to Düsseldorf in the middle of the month.

Although Schumann's condition had somewhat improved by 19 September, the date of the family's move into a roomy town house at 1032 Bilkerstrasse, he was compelled to ask his deputy Julius Tausch to conduct the first two concerts (28 October and 18 November) of the 1852–3 season. He resumed his duties with the Gesangverein only on 21 November, and early in the next month conducted the Düsseldorf orchestra (now with a new leader, Rupert Becker) and chorus in the warmly applauded première of Vom Pagen und der Königstochter. The Gedichte der Königin Maria Stuart op.135, Schumann's first creative effort in almost three months, were completed on 15 December. But while at work on this cycle of five brooding lieder on translations of texts attributed to Mary Queen of Scots, he was confronted with a troubling request from the administrators of the Musikverein. Offended by an 'impertinent' letter from Wortmann suggesting that his conducting responsibilities be curtailed, he ultimately agreed to place the choral rehearsals in Tausch's hands.

On 30 December Schumann conducted his first complete concert with the orchestra since the end of the last season and at about the same time regained his compositional stride, though now his focus shifted from vocal to instrumental music. The project he later called 'Bachiana' commenced in late December with piano accompaniments to Bach's sonatas and partitas for solo violin. With this task complete by early February 1853, he wrote the final orchestral-choral ballade, Das Glück von Edenhall op.143 (on a text by Uhland adapted by Richard Hasenclever) between 28 February and 12 March. The second and last instalment of Bachiana, harmonizations of the six suites for unaccompanied cello, was ready by 10 April. From 15 to 19 April he drafted the exuberant Fest-Ouverture (op.123) on Johann André's Rheinweinlied, intended for performance at the forthcoming Niederrheinisches Musikfest. Towards the end of the month the Schumanns and their friends developed a passion for table-rapping. Amazed by his ability to summon up the rhythms of such classics as Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, Schumann even wrote an article (which no longer survives) on the subject. These unusual sessions were suspended as preparations began in earnest for the festival, which culminated in four concerts in Düsseldorf between 15 and 17 May. Along with Hiller and Tausch, Schumann served as co-director of the event and garnered public acclaim for performances of his D minor Symphony (1851 version), Piano Concerto (with Clara as soloist) and the recent Fest-Ouverture. Soon afterwards he culled the pertinent excerpts from Jean Paul's works for Dichtergarten, an activity in which he took so much pleasure that upon completing it in early July he continued reading several of the novels of his favourite author well into October.

In late May he also returned to composition and within a month finished the Sieben Clavierstücke in Fughettenform op.126 and the Drei Clavier-Sonaten für die Jugend op.118, the latter collection specifically meant for his daughters Julie, Elise and Marie. For the first time in many years, Clara also began to compose, producing several piano pieces (among them a set of variations on one of the five Albumblätter from Schumann's Bunte Blätter) and lieder before the end of June. After a brief hiatus in July, Schumann started composing again, and with a vengeance, in mid-August. A diverse series of works followed in rapid succession: the overture to the Faust scenes (13–17 August); the Introduction and Concert-Allegro op.134 for piano and orchestra (23–30 August); the partsong Orange und Myrthe hier (20 August, presented to Clara for her 34th birthday); Phantasie op.131 for violin and orchestra (completed by 7 September; it was inspired by Joachim, during whose visit to Düsseldorf between 28 August and 1 September Schumann noted 'an unusual weakening' of his power of speech); the declamation Ballade vom Haideknaben op.122 no.1 (15 September); Kinderball op.130, 'six easy pieces' for piano four hands (18–20 September); and a 'piece for violin' that soon evolved into the Violin Concerto in D minor (21 September–3 October).

While still occupied with the Violin Concerto on 30 September, Schumann was visited by a young pianist and composer from Hamburg who had been recommended to him by Joachim. Named Johannes Brahms, he was immediately recognized by the older man as a genius. During the ensuing month, this 'young eagle' regaled Schumann and Clara with his newly written piano pieces and songs, and with many other compositions later lost or destroyed. Inspired to assume the role of critic for the first time in nearly a decade, Schumann dubbed Brahms a musical saviour who would 'give ideal expression to the times' in 'Neue Bahnen' ('New Paths'), the celebrated essay completed on 13 October and published in the Neue Zeitschrift on 28 October 1853. Schumann's creativity continued apace throughout Brahms's stay. First came the Märchenerzählungen op.132, a delightful cycle of miniatures for clarinet, viola and piano. On 15 October, the day after Joachim's unexpected arrival in Düsseldorf, Schumann hatched the idea of composing, in collaboration with Brahms and Albert Dietrich, a violin sonata based on the letters of Joachim's personal motto: 'F–A–E' ('frei aber einsam' – 'free but lonely'). Schumann's contribution comprised an intermezzo and finale, to which he added two further movements (to form a third violin sonata) between 29 and 31 October. About a fortnight earlier he had made an enigmatic reference to 'Diotima' in the Haushaltbücher, an allusion to the cycle of five luminous piano pieces drafted by 18 October and titled Gesänge der Frühe op.133. On 21 October he began to write piano accompaniments to Paganini's Caprices for solo violin, no doubt with Joachim in mind. What proved to be Schumann's final creative surge came to an end, immediately after his young friends' departure, with five Romanzen for cello and piano completed in early November; these pieces were probably destroyed by Clara some 40 years later.

Already during the happy period of Brahms's and Joachim's visits, a storm was brewing with the executive committee of the Musikverein, its immediate cause being Schumann's increasingly idiosyncratic and self-absorbed style of conducting. The members of the Gesangverein refused to sing under his direction after a disastrous performance of a mass by Moritz Hauptmann on 16 October, when he continued to conduct well after the music stopped. In rehearsing Joachim's Hamlet overture for the subscription concert of 27 October, Schumann was curiously oblivious to his players' need for cues. In private consultation with Clara on 7 November, two members of the executive committee, Julius Illing and Joseph Herz, suggested that Schumann conduct only his own pieces and leave his other duties to Tausch. Incensed by what he considered a breach of faith, Schumann failed to appear at the subscription concert of 10 November, thus leaving himself open to the charge of violating his contract. Indeed, within a week the administration of the Musikverein informed the mayor, Ludwig Hammers, that Tausch would assume the directorship of the Düsseldorf orchestra and chorus for the remainder of the season. Schumann officially broke off relations with the executive committee in a bluntly worded letter of 19 November. At the same time, he and Clara considered a future move to either Berlin or Vienna.

Less than a week after severing ties with the Musikverein, the couple embarked on a concert tour of the Netherlands that turned out to be one of the major triumphs of Schumann's career. Complaints of 'intolerable aural disturbances', however, signalled a marked downturn in his physical condition. Back in Düsseldorf by 22 December, Schumann celebrated Christmas quietly with friends and in the early part of the new year augmented his Dichtergarten with passages from Schiller and E.T.A. Hoffmann. On 19 January 1854 he set off with Clara for Hanover, where Joachim was leader of the court orchestra and where, over the course of the next 12 days, he engaged in a round of music-making which included a private reading of his Violin Concerto.

While in Hanover, Schumann had looked to Goethe and the poetry of Des Knaben Wunderhorn in connection with Dichtergarten, and after his return to Düsseldorf on 30 January the literary monuments of classical antiquity commanded his attention for the same purpose. On 3 February he drafted a brief but spirited introductory essay for publication with the collected edition of his critical writings. But his routine was brutally interrupted when, on the evening of 10 February, he was plagued by 'painful aural disturbances' that at first involved continually sounding pitches but soon took the shape of entire compositions played in 'splendid harmonizations' by a 'distant wind-band'. Soon after his friend and personal physician, Hasenclever, was summoned on 15 February, his condition improved slightly, but on 17 February he arose from his bed to transcribe a theme 'dictated by the angels'. Although these otherworldly voices became a hideous chorus of 'tigers and hyenas' in the following days, Schumann was able, in his more lucid moments, to write a set of five variations (WOO24) on the 'angelic' theme (in conversation with Rupert Becker, he ascribed the melody to the spirit of Schubert). The composer's last surviving keyboard work bears a dedication to Clara.

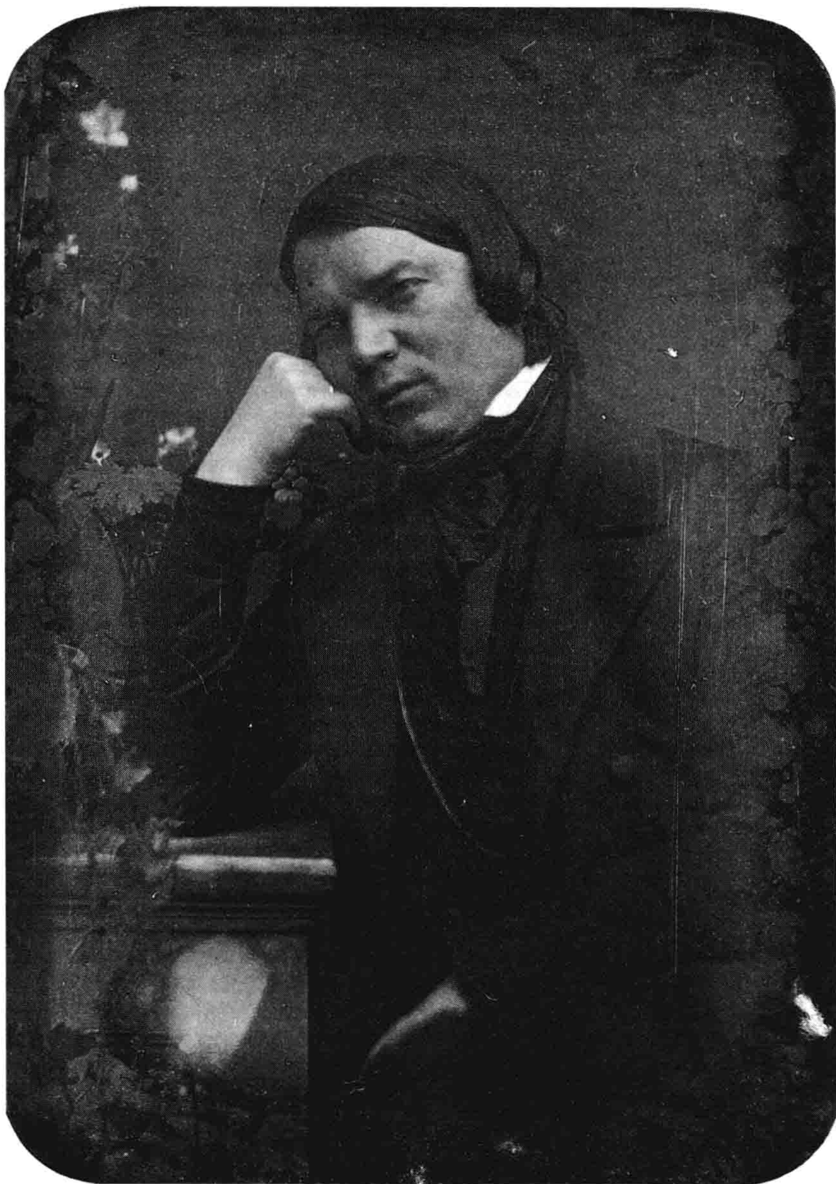
Fearful that he might unwittingly bring harm to his wife, Schumann demanded to be removed to an asylum on 26 February. At the urging of the physician called in to examine him (a Dr Böger), he agreed to spend the night at home, but awoke the next morning in a profoundly melancholy state. After working for a time on the fair copy of his variations, he slipped undetected out of the house in the early afternoon and made for the bridge over the Rhine. After diving headlong into the river, he was rescued by fishermen who had observed him from nearby. Thereafter Clara was not allowed to see him, nor was she informed of his suicide attempt (though she soon realized the truth). In response to Schumann's persistent demands to be institutionalized, Hasenclever arranged for his admission to a private sanatorium at Endenich near Bonn. Clara was prevented from bidding him farewell when he departed in the company of Hasenclever and two male attendants on 4 March. She would not see him again until July 1856.

19. The late styles. The last years of Schumann's career were intensely productive ones. In the period between his arrival in Düsseldorf in 1850 and his removal to Endenich in 1854, he completed no fewer than 50 works, many of them multi-movement cycles or collections. Viewed as a whole, these pieces recapitulate the earlier progression through the genres (the poetic cycle for keyboard, the lied, symphony, concerto, chamber music in the 'higher' forms, oratorio and instrumental Hausmusik are all represented), a process culminating in the choral-orchestral ballade (a pendant to the 'literary operas' of the Dresden years) and the composition of church music. The alternation of larger with less imposing projects speaks to an outlook in which idealism was tempered by a shrewd sense for the marketplace.

The aesthetic worth of the late music remains a point of contention even among devotees of Schumann's art. Perhaps biassed by their foreknowledge of his unfortunate end, many commentators have searched for signs of mental decay in this repertory, a dubious exercise at best. The often repeated claim that Schumann's psychological decline finds a parallel in his 'gloomy' orchestration, for instance, is defensible on neither musical nor biographical grounds. In the first place, the scoring of the late works is by no means uniformly sombre: the overture to Hermann und Dorothea, to cite one of many examples, is as deftly orchestrated as anything by Weber or Mendelssohn. Moreover, a darkly hued work such as the final version of the D minor Symphony was the product of relatively happy times, while the luminously scored Vom Pagen und der Königstochter dates from a period of physical and mental distress. It was a matter less of a discrepancy between psychic state and sonorous elaboration than of a musical imagination capable of embracing a diversity of styles. Each of these is in turn projected by one or more of a colourful cast of personae: the lyric poet, the symphonist, the storyteller, the ecclesiastic, the collector, the pedagogue and the Davidsbündler.

As a lyric poet, Schumann explored the inner lives of his subjects in the Sieben Lieder on Kulmann texts (op.104) and the Gedichte der Königin Maria Stuart (op.135). In that the former provide a chronological account of the poet's brief life and the latter follow the queen from her departure from France to the moments before her death, both cycles may be said to echo the narrative trajectory of Frauenliebe und -leben (op.42). The generally affirmative tone of the earlier work, however, gives way to mysterious understatement in the Kulmann lieder and an unusual blend of passion and austerity in the Maria Stuart cycle.

At the opposite pole from the introspective lyricist is the extroverted symphonist. The public character of this persona emerges in Schumann's use of well-known tunes such as the Marseillaise and the Rheinweinlied ('Bekränzt mit Laub') in the overture to Hermann und Dorothea op.136 and the Fest-Ouverture op.123, respectively. While Schumann himself maintained that 'popular elements should prevail' in the Third Symphony, his real achievement lay in employing these elements as agents of unity on a large scale. Similarly, the concertante works of the last years are characterized by a synthesis of virtuosity and musical substance, most obviously in the written-out cadenzas of the Cello Concerto, the Introduction and Concert-Allegro for piano and the Phantasie for violin, where the traditional site of soloistic display becomes a secondary development section.



The recall of thematic ideas over the span of a multi-movement work, a feature of the Third Symphony and the concertos for cello and violin, is an essentially narrative technique and hence a manifestation of the storyteller persona. This figure naturally dominates in the ballad-type works for chorus and orchestra, most of which take the preservation of memory as their poetic theme. Indeed, the sharing of the narrative voice by solo voices and chorus alike in Der Königssohn, Des Sängers Fluch and Vom Pagen und der Königstochter underlines the fact that memory is at once an individual and a communal affair. The epic quality of Vom Pagen und der Königstocher, its text an allegory for the bewitching power of the recollective faculty, is enhanced by a web of motivic recurrences and transformations.

Given his fondness for black attire, Schumann was often mistaken for an ecclesiastic by the inhabitants of Düsseldorf. The religious side of his personality was free of dogmatism. In his principal works to Latin texts, the Missa sacra and the Requiem, he strove, in contrast, for the 'lofty simplicity and dignity' that E.T.A. Hoffmann isolated as the hallmarks of genuine church music. These works likewise attest the fine line between the sacred and the profane in Schumann's output. Both emphasize the notion of redemption, the underlying theme of the Peri, the literary operas and the 'musical fairy tale' Der Rose Pilgerfahrt.

The figure of the collector is concerned with redemption of a material sort, with the preservation and arrangement of fragile objects that might otherwise perish. Once assembled into a collection, these objects are imbued with an aura, a mixture of distance and proximity intended to fill the beholder with awe. The literary manifestations of this persona during Schumann's last years include the numerous citations gathered for Dichtergarten, while the Bunte Blätter, Albumblätter and 'Bachiana' represent the musical products of the same passion for collecting. In adding transparent accompaniments to Bach's works for solo violin, Schumann provided these compositions with the musical equivalent of an aura.

If the collector preserves objects, then the pedagogue preserves traditions. Schumann initiated a pedagogical project of his own with the Album für die Jugend and the Lieder-Album für die Jugend, and amplified it with the Ballscenen, Sieben Clavierstücke in Fughettenform, Drei Clavier-Sonaten für die Jugend and Kinderball. While all of these belong to the world of Hausmusik, aiming to promote conviviality and edification, several of their constituent pieces disclose an undeniably poetic quality. The last movement of Marie's sonata (no.3) from the Drei Clavier-Sonaten für die Jugend is designated 'Traum eines Kindes' and quotes the opening music of Julie's sonata (no.1) from the same set, as if to say that the realm of early childhood is accessible only through dream.

Certainly, the poetry of the late music is largely a function of the composer's Davidsbündler persona. Though stimulated by his contact with Brahms and Joachim in the autumn of 1853, the resurgence of Schumann's youthful, esoteric manner was well under way two years before: witness the alternation of Florestan, Eusebius and Kreisler pieces in the Drei Fantasiestücke (op.111) and the A minor Violin Sonata, and the prevalence of mosaic-like designs (redolent of the Novelletten) in the G minor Piano Trio. The movements of the Gesänge der Frühe (op.133), like those of the keyboard cycles of the 1830s, are bound together by a network of subtly related motivic threads. Schumann's translation of a verbal motto into a musical motif in the F–A–E sonata clearly recalls the fanciful technique of encipherment already employed in the Abegg Variations and Carnaval. The treatment of the 'angelic' theme as a migrating cantus firmus brings to mind one of the distinguishing features of the Impromptus op.5. The continuity between Schumann's earlier and later manner can be observed in another domain as well. Writing to Strackerjahn soon before the publication of his collected critical writings, Schumann was pleased to note that he had 'hardly deviated from views expressed 20 years ago'.

12. Robert Schumann: daguerreotype by Johann Anton Völlner, Hamburg, 1850

20. Endenich, 1854–6. Situated on a well-kept estate in Endenich, a suburb of Bonn, the private asylum where Schumann spent his last years was one of the more progressive institutions of its type. Its guiding force was Dr Franz Richarz, an adherent of the 'no-restraint' method championed by the British physician John Conolly. Though he neither force-fed nor drugged his patients, Richarz discouraged direct contact with relatives in the belief that such meetings might set off untoward reversals. It was chiefly for this reason that Clara did not see her husband until nearly two and a half years into his confinement, and just two days before his death.

While Schumann was severely psychotic when admitted to Endenich in March 1854, he was better the following month and well enough in September to initiate correspondence with Brahms, who had since taken up residence in Düsseldorf, and with Clara. (In the meantime, on 11 June Clara had given birth to another son, named Felix, after Mendelssohn.) From November 1854 to October 1855, however, Schumann's condition worsened dramatically. After a brief period of improvement, the final decline set in, leading to death in July 1856.

Tantalizing details of the Endenich years are provided by the logbook or diary in which Richarz maintained a close record of his famous patient's activities. When his health permitted, Schumann strolled into Bonn to view the Beethoven monument, played the Lipp piano in the room adjoining his own, wrote letters and received friends including Joachim, Brahms, Wasielewski and Bettina von Arnim, née Brentano (as a rule, these visitors were permitted to communicate with him only through an aperture in the wall of his room). During his more lucid moments he even managed to undertake a few compositional projects: the Paganini harmonizations begun in Düsseldorf (March–June 1855), a keyboard fugue (January 1856), a piano reduction of Joachim's overture Heinrich IV, and a harmonization of the chorale Wenn mein Stündlein vorhanden ist. Perhaps other compositions were among the papers and letters that, according to Richarz, Schumann consigned to the flames in April 1856.

A particularly revealing entry from Richarz's diary (12 September 1855) relates the probable cause of the composer's final illness: 'Recently [Schumann] has been jotting down all sorts of things, many of them melancholy in content, e.g. "In 1832 I contracted syphilis and was cured with arsenic".' The most likely source of the infection was the young woman known only as 'Christel' or 'Charitas', with whom Schumann was on intimate terms in 1831 and 1832. The hallucinations and auditory disturbances he experienced in February 1854 probably mark the onset of the final stage of the disease after a long period of latency. The steady deterioration of his neurological system brought with it convulsive fits, the gradual loss of the ability to speak clearly, delusional ideas (among them the conviction that he was being poisoned), aggressive behaviour and protracted periods of screaming that left him hoarse. The personae associated with Schumann's late compositional styles occasionally appeared during the Endenich years, but in the form of grotesque self-parodies. The storyteller was losing his memory (writing to Clara, Schumann repeatedly asked 'Do you remember . . . ?' in an attempt to preserve the receding past); the collector was reduced to alphabetizing the names of cities culled from an atlas.

Clara had little inkling of the severity of her husband's dementia. Alerted by Bettina von Arnim in May 1855 to a regressive turn in Schumann's condition, she subsequently received reassuring reports from Joachim and also from Richarz, whom she met in Brühl. But when she learnt from Brahms in June 1856 that Schumann had not left his bed for several weeks, she decided to investigate for herself. Twice prevented from seeing him by Richarz and Brahms (during visits to Endenich on 14 and 23 July), she was finally admitted to his sickroom on 27 July. Now in the throes of pneumonia and barely conscious, Schumann mustered the strength to embrace her and mumble a few words of recognition. At 4 p.m. on 29 July, he died, quietly and alone; Clara had gone to the railway station to meet Joachim. Two days later he was buried in a cemetery near the Sternentor in Bonn. Among the mourners at the simple service were Brahms, Joachim, Dietrich, Wasielewski and Hiller. According to Klaus Groth, the small cortège attracted a crowd of onlookers, who came 'flooding from every street and lane as if to watch a prince pass by'.

13. Robert Schumann: drawing by Jean-Joseph-Bonaventure Laurens, chalk, 1853 (Bibliothèque Inguimbertine, Carpentras); the artist commented on the abnormal enlargement of the pupils of Schumann's eyes

21. Reception. Asked for an opinion on Schumann, a follower of the European musical scene in about 1840 would probably have identified him as a critic, not a composer. Even members of the relatively limited circle who knew his earlier compositions often found them bizarre and eccentric. In a telling allusion to the fragmentary quality that many listeners found difficult to grasp, Gottfried Weber described the diminutive movements of Papillons as 'thought splinters'. (Nietzsche would later cast the composer's penchant for the miniature in an even more negative light with the claim that 'Schumann's taste was basically a small taste'.) Reacting to charges of this sort at mid-century, Schumann reissued opp.5, 6, 13, 14 and 16 between 1850 and 1853 in versions specifically geared to appeal to a wider audience.

By this time, however, the contemporary outlook on Schumann's compositions had taken a decisive turn. With the First Symphony and the Piano Quintet, he began to garner the public recognition that had previously eluded him. Performed in centres as remote from his native Saxony as Riga and New York, Das Paradies und die Peri established his reputation as a composer of international stature. The appropriation of his music by the spokesmen for what was then taken to be musical progress also played a part in this shift. In the eyes of a Hegelian critic such as Brendel, Schumann's output embodied a dialectic in which the piano music of the 1830s served as the 'subjective' term, the works of 1840–45 supplied an 'objective' counterpart, and the Second Symphony nearly effected a synthesis of these trends. Liszt, identified by Brendel as one of the leaders of the New German School, heard in Schumann's oratorios, choral-orchestral ballades and Faust settings a realization of the demand that 'music in its masterpieces should absorb the masterpieces of literature'. Critics of both conservative and progressive leanings, however, detected a tendency towards mannerism in the works conceived just before the onset of Schumann's final illness. Still prevalent today, this view has been challenged by only a handful of commentators, most notably Reinhard Kapp, for whom the late music is at once sober or 'objective' in tone and intensely concentrated in utterance.

Apart from these divergences of opinion, there is no denying the impact of Schumann's music on future generations of composers. Brahms's debt to the older artist's idiom extended to matters of melodic construction, tonal planning, contrapuntal elaboration and form. Hugo Wolf's lieder are inconceivable without Schumann's. The moments of apotheosis in Schumann's symphonies in turn exercised an impact on the symphonies of Bruckner and, even more decisively, on those of Mahler. Indeed, the 'breakthrough' technique that both Paul Bekker and Theodor Adorno identified as a characteristic feature of Mahler's symphonic forms has a precedent in Schumann's fondness for introducing 'new' themes after his symphonic narratives are well underway, and for crowning those narratives with visionary chorales. Dating from around 1900, Mahler's rescorings of Schumann's symphonies and Manfred overture were motivated in part by a desire to enhance the motivic and formal clarity of works that the later composer, in conversation with Natalie Bauer-Lechner, described as 'marvellous' in nearly every other respect. Adorno has also pointed to the remarkable affinity between Schumann and Berg, both of whom demonstrated a predilection for allusions, encoded messages and musical ciphers. Nor was Schumann's influence limited to the German sphere. Though critical of his orchestration, Tchaikovsky felt that Schumann's symphonic works, chamber music and piano pieces revealed 'a whole new world of musical forms'. For Grieg, the songs deserved to be recognized as major contributions to 'world literature'. In France, Schumann's music was admired by Debussy and Ravel while it concurrently played into the development of the literary movement known as 'symbolism'.

20th-century commentators have described Schumann variously as a 'modern-bourgeois intellectual' (P. Rumenhöller), a 'classicist' (H.C. Wolff) and a composer of 'Hausmusik for cognoscenti' (C. Dahlhaus). In a sense he was all of these things and many others besides. A fastidious miniaturist, he was no less adept as a fabricator of monumental forms. A staunch upholder of tradition, he campaigned tirelessly for the 'new, poetic future' proclaimed in the pages of the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik.

WORKS

Editions: Robert Schumanns Werke, ed. C. Schumann, J. Brahms and others (Leipzig, 1881–93) [SW]
Robert Schumann: Neue Ausgabe sämtlicher Werke, ed. A. Mayeda, K.W. Niemoller and others (Mainz, 1991–) [NSA]
Catalogue: K. Hofmann: Die Erstdrucke der Werke von Robert Schumann (Tutzing, 1979) [woos]

THEATRICAL

| Op. | Title | Libretto | Composed | Publication/MS | Production | Remarks | SW |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| — | Der Corsar, opera | O. Marbach, after Byron | 1844 | ed. J. Druhein, 1983 | — | unfinished; chorus of corsairs, interlude and a sketch for Conrad's air | — |
| 81 | Genoveva, opera | Schumann (with R. Reinick), after L. Tieck and C.F. Hebbel | 1847–8 | 1851 | Leipzig, Stadt, 25 June 1850 | in 4 acts; first pubd in piano reduction | ix/2 |
| 115 | Manfred, dramatic poem | Byron, trans. K.A. Suckow, abridged Schumann | 1848–9 | 1853 | Weimar, 13 June 1852 | first pubd in piano reduction | ix/4, 1 |

CHORAL WITH ORCHESTRA

Opp.98b, 108, 112, 116, 139, 140 and 143 are also published in vocal score in SW ix/8, and opp.144, 147, 148 and the Scenen aus Goethes Faust in SW ix/9

| Op. | Title, forces | Text | Composed | Publication | First Performance | Remarks | SW | NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| — | Psalm cl, S, A, pf, orch | biblical | 1822 | — | Düsseldorf, 1997 | | — | — |
| — | Overture and chorus (Chor von Landleuten), chorus, pf, orch | — | 1822 | — | Düsseldorf, 1997 | MS in private collection | — | — |
| — | Tragödie | H. Heine | 1841 | — | — | orch version of op.64 no.3 (see SONGS) | — | — |
| 50 | Das Paradies und die Peri, solo vv, chorus, orch | from T. Moore: Lalla Rookh, trans. and adapted | 1843 | 1845 | Leipzig, 4 Dec 1843 | first contemplated July 1841 | ix/1, 3 | — |
| woo3 | Scenen aus Goethes Faust, solo vv, chorus, orch | J.W. von Goethe | 1844–53 | 1858 | Cologne, 13 Jan 1862 (scene 7 first performed Dresden, Weimar and Leipzig, 29 August 1849) | first pubd in piano reduction | ix/7 | — |
| 71 | Adventlied, S, chorus, orch | F. Rückert | 1848 | 1849 | — | first pubd in piano reduction | ix/1, 43 | — |
| 84 | Beim Abschied zu singen, chorus, wind/pf | E. von Feuchtersleben | 1847 | 1850 | — | | ix/3, 1 | — |
| 93 | Verzweifle nicht im Schmerzenstal, double chorus, orch | F. Rückert | 1852 | 1893 | — | orch version of motet op.93 | ix/3, 6 | — |
| 98b | Requiem für Mignon, solo vv, chorus, orch | from Goethe: Wilhelm Meister | 1849 | 1851 | Düsseldorf, 21 Nov 1850 | see also SONGS, op.98a | ix/3, 67 | — |

| Op. | Title, forces | Text | Composed | Publication | First Performance | Remarks | SW | NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 108 | Nachtlied, chorus, orch | C.F. Hebbel | 1849 | 1853 | Düsseldorf, 13 March 1851 | | ix/3, 114 | — |
| 112 | Der Rose Pilgerfahrt, solo vv, chorus, orch | M. Horn | 1851 | 1852 | Düsseldorf, 5 Feb 1852 | also pubd in piano reduction | ix/3, 138 | — |
| 116 | Der Königssohn, solo vv, chorus, orch | L. Uhland | 1851 | 1853 | — | | ix/4, 101 | — |
| 123 | Fest-Ouverture, T, chorus, orch | W. Müller, M. Claudius | 1853 | 1857 | Düsseldorf, 17 May 1853 | on J. André's Rheinweinlied | ii, 145 | — |
| 139 | Des Sängers Fluch, solo vv, chorus, orch | R. Pohl, after Uhland | 1852 | 1858 | — | | ii/4, 184 | — |
| 140 | Vom Pagen und der Königstochter, solo vv, chorus, orch | E. Geibel | 1852 | 1857 | Düsseldorf, 3 Dec 1852 | | ix/5, 1 | — |
| 143 | Das Glück von Edenhall, solo vv, chorus, orch | R. Hasenclever, after Uhland | 1853 | 1860 | — | | ix/5, 99 | — |
| 144 | Neujahrslied, chorus, orch | Rückert | 1849–50 | 1861 | Düsseldorf 11 Jan 1851 | | ix/5, 148 | — |
| 147 | Missa sacra, chorus, orch | liturgical | 1852–3 | 1862 | — | first pubd in organ reduction | ix/9, 2 | iv/3/2 |
| 148 | Requiem, chorus, orch | liturgical | 1852 | 1864 | — | | ix/9, 3 | iv/3/3 |

ORCHESTRAL

| Op. | Title, key, forces | Composed | Publication/MS | First performance | Remarks | SW | NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| — | Piano Concerto, e | 1827 | — | — | unfinished | — | — |
| — | Piano Concerto, E♭ | 1828 | — | — | unfinished | — | |
| — | Piano Concerto, F | 1830–31 | — | — | unfinished | — | — |
| — | Introduction and Variations on a theme of Paganini | ?1832 | — | — | introduction, theme and sketches for 4 variations; variations 3 and 4 used in opp.4 and 8 | — | — |
| — | Symphony, E♭ | 1830–32 | 1981 | — | sketches for a 'Sinfonia per il Hamlet' | — | — |
| woo29 | Symphony, g | 1832–3 | 1972 | Zwickau, 18 Nov 1832 (1st movt only); Schneeberg, 12 Feb 1833 (1st movt, rev.) | 2 movts completed; 2nd movt in 2 versions; sketches for 3rd and 4th movts; orig. op.7 | — | — |
| — | Piano Concerto, d | 1839 | 1988 | — | 1 movt only | — | — |
| — | Symphony, c | 1840–41 | — | — | sketches for 2 movts | — | — |
| — | Symphony, c | 1841 | — | — | sketches for 4 movts; scherzo used in Bunte Blätter | — | — |
| 38 | Symphony no.1, B♭ ('Spring') | 1841 | 1841 | Leipzig, 31 March 1841 | movts orig. entitled 1 Frühlingsbeginn, 2 Abend, 3 Frohe Gespielen, 4 Voller Frühling; facs. of sketches and autograph (New York, 1967) | i, 1 | — |
| 52 | Overture, Scherzo and Finale, e–E | 1841; last movt rev. 1845 | 1846 | Leipzig, 6 Dec 1841 | orig. title Suite, then Symphonette | ii, 1 | — |
| 54 | Piano Concerto, a | 1st movt 1841; 2nd and 3rd movts 1845 | 1846 | Leipzig, 1 Jan 1846 | first movt orig. Phantasie, pf, orch | iii, 146 | — |
| 61 | Symphony no.2, C | 1845–6 | 1847 | Leipzig, 5 Nov 1846 | also arr. pf 4 hands, 1848 | i, 109 | — |
| 81 | Genoveva, ov. to opera, c | 1847 | 1850 | Leipzig, 25 Feb 1850 | see THEATRICAL | i, 47 | — |
| 86 | Concertstück, F, 4 hn | 1849 | 1851 | Leipzig, 25 Feb 1850 | | iii, 69 | — |
| 92 | Introduction and Allegro appassionato (Concertstück) | 1849 | 1852 | Leipzig, 14 Feb 1850 | | iii, 239 | — |
| 97 | Symphony no.3, E♭ ('Rhenish') | 1850 | 1851 | Düsseldorf, 6 Feb 1851 | | i, 243 | I/1/3 |
| 100 | Die Braut von Messina, ov., c | 1850–51 | 1851 | Düsseldorf, 13 March 1851 | to F. von Schiller's play | ii, 70 | — |
| 115 | Manfred, ov., e♭ | 1848–9 | 1852 | Weimar, 14 March 1852 | see THEATRICAL | ii, 104 | — |
| 120 | Symphony no.4, d | 1841 as no.2; rev. 1851 as no.4 | 1853 | Leipzig, 6 Dec 1841; Düsseldorf, 30 Dec 1852 | first version pubd (1891) | i, 310 | — |

| Op. | Title, key, forces | Composed | Publication/MS | First performance | Remarks | SW | NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 128 | Julius Cäsar, ov., f | 1851 | 1854 | Düsseldorf, 3 Aug 1852 | to W. Shakespeare's play | ii, 175 | — |
| — | Orch of Scherzo by N. Burgmüller | 1851 | | | from Burgmüller's unfinished 2nd symphony | — | — |
| 129 | Cello Concerto, a | 1850 | 1854 | Leipzig, 9 June 1860 | orig. title Konzertstück | iii, 29 | — |
| 131 | Phantasie, C, vn | 1853 | 1854 | Hanover, Jan 1854 | | iii, 1 | — |
| 134 | Introduction and Concert-Allegro, d–D, pf | 1853 | 1855 | Utrecht, 26 Nov 1853 | | ii, 291 | — |
| 136 | Hermann und Dorothea, ov., b | 1851 | 1857 | — | to Goethe's epic poem; for projected opera | ii, 214 | — |
| woo23 | Violin Concerto, d | 1853 | 1937 | Berlin, 26 Nov 1937 | | — | — |
| woo3 | Scenen aus Goethes Faust, ov., d | 1853 | 1858 | Cologne, 13 Jan 1862 | see CHORAL WITH ORCHESTRA | i, 231 | — |

CHAMBER

| Op. | Title, key, forces | Composed | Publication/MS | Remarks | SW |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| — | Quartet, c, vn, va, vc, pf | 1828–9 | 1979 | orig. op.5 | — |
| — | Quartet, B, vn, va, vc, pf | 1828–9 | 1979 | sketches | — |
| — | Quartet, A, vn, va, vc, pf | 1828–9 | 1979 | sketch | — |
| — | Allegro, melody inst, pf | ?1829 | 1979 | sketch | — |
| — | Quartet | 1838 | — | sketch or draft, lost | — |
| — | 2 string quartets, D, E♭ | 1839 | 1979; D-Bsb | sketches | — |
| 41 | 3 string quartets, a, F, A | 1842 | 1848 | arr. pf solo, 1853 | iv, 1, 22, 41 |
| 44 | Quintet, E♭, 2 vn, va, vc, pf | 1842 | 1843 | | v/1, 1 |
| 47 | Quartet, E♭, vn, va, vc, pf | 1842 | 1845 | | v/1, 2 |
| woo10 | Andante and variations, 2 pf, 2 vc, hn | 1843 | 1893 | orig. version of op.46, see KEYBOARD | xiv/1, 1 |
| 63 | Trio no.1, d, vn, vc, pf | 1847 | 1848 | | v/2, 2 |
| 70 | Adagio and Allegro, A♭, hn/(vn/vc), pf | 1849 | 1849 | orig. title Romanze und Allegro | v/3, 2 |
| 73 | Fantasiestücke, cl/(vn/vc), pf | 1849 | 1849 | orig. title Soiréestücke | v/3, 12 |
| 80 | Trio no.2, F, vn, vc, pf | 1847 | 1849 | | v/2, 50 |
| 88 | Phantasiestücke, vn, vc, pf: 1 Romanze, 2 Humoreske, 3 Duett, 4 Finale | 1842 | 1850 | based on Pf Trio, a, 1842 | v/2, 124 |
| 94 | Drei Romanzen, ob/(vn/cl), pf | 1849 | 1851 | | v/3, 100 |
| 102 | Fünf Stücke im Volkston, vc/vn, pf | 1849 | 1851 | | v/3, 110 |
| 105 | Sonata no.1, a, vn, pf | 1851 | 1852 | | v/3, 26 |
| 110 | Trio no.3, g, vn, vc, pf | 1851 | 1852 | | v/2, 90 |
| 113 | Märchenbilder, va/vn, pf | 1851 | 1852 | | v/3, 82 |
| 121 | Sonata no.2, d, vn, pf | 1851 | 1853 | orig. pubd as 2te grosse Sonate | v/3, 48 |
| woo2 | Pf acc. to 6 vn sonatas and partitas by Bach | 1852–3 | 1853 | | — |
| — | Pf acc. to 6 vc suites by Bach | 1853 | 1985 | only acc. To Suite no.3 (BWv 1009) survives | — |
| 132 | Märchenerzählungen, cl/vn, va, pf | 1853 | 1854 | | v/2, 148 |
| woo22 | Sonata, vn, pf, 'F–A–E' | 1853 | 1935 | 2nd and 4th movts only; 1st and 3rd by A. Dietrich and Brahms | — |
| woo27 | Sonata no.3, a, vn, pf | 1853 | 1956 | in 4 movts, 2 being those which Schumann wrote for 'F–A–E' sonata | — |
| — | 5 Romanzen, vc, pf | 1853 | — | lost | — |
| woo25 | Pf acc. to Paganini's vn caprices | 1853–5 | 1941 | acc. to caprice no.24 not extant | — |

PARTSONGS FOR MIXED VOICES

SATB, unaccompanied, unless otherwise stated; incipit given only if different from title

| Op. | Title, forces | Incipit | Text | Composed | Publication | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 55 | Fünf Lieder: | | R. Burns, trans. W. Gerhard | 1846 | 1847 | xii, 1 |
| | 1 Das Hochlandmädchen | Nicht Damen tönt von hohem Rang | | | | |
| | 2 Zahnweh | Wie du mit gift'gem Stachel fast | | | | |
| | 3 Mich zieht es nach dem Dörfchen hin | | | | | |
| | 4 Die alte, gute Zeit | Wer lenkt nicht gern den heitern Blick | | | | |
| | 5 Hochlandbursch | Schönster Bursch, den je ich traf | | | | |
| 59 | Vier Gesänge [orig. pubd as 4, 1, 2, 3; 5 added later]: | | | 1846 | 1848 | xii, 11 |
| | 1 Nord oder Süd! | | K. Lappe | | | |
| | 2 Am Bodensee | Schwelle die Segel, günstiger Wind! | A. Platen | | | |
| | 3 Jägerlied | Zierlich ist des Vogels Tritt im Schnee | E. Mörike | | | |
| | 4 Gute Nacht | Die gute Nacht, die ich dir sage | F. Rückert | | | |
| | 5 Hirtenknaben-Gesang, SSTT | Heloe! Heloe! Komm du auf unsre Heide | A. von Droste-Hülshoff | 1846 | 1930 | — |
| 67 | Romanzen und Balladen, i: | | | 1849 | 1849 | xii, 20 |
| | 1 Der König von Thule | Es war ein König in Thule | J.W. von Goethe | | | |
| | 2 Schön-Rohtraut | Wie heisst König Ringangs Töchterlein? | Mörike | | | |
| | 3 Heidenröslein | Sah ein Knab' ein Röslein steh'n | Goethe | | | |
| | 4 Ungewitter | Auf hohen Burgeszinnen | A. von Chamisso | | | |
| | 5 John Anderson | John Anderson, mein Lieb! | Burns, trans. Gerhard | | | |
| 75 | Romanzen und Balladen, ii: | | | 1849 | 1850 | xii, 28 |
| | 1 Schnitter Tod | Es ist ein Schnitter, der heisst Tod | A. von Arnim and C. Brentano: Des Knaben Wunderhorn | | | |
| | 2 Im Walde [2nd setting] | Es zog eine Hochzeit den Berg entlang | J. Eichendorff | | | |
| | 3 Der traurige Jäger | Zur ew'gen Ruh' sie sangen die schöne Müllerin | Eichendorff | | | |
| | 4 Der Rekrut | Sonst kam mein John mir zu | Burns, trans. Gerhard | | | |
| | 5 Vom verwundeten Knaben | Es wollt' ein Mädchen früh aufsteh'n | J.G. Herder: Volkslieder | | | |
| 141 | Vier doppelchörige Gesänge: | | | 1849 | 1858 | xii, 36 |
| | 1 An die Sterne | Sterne, in des Himmels Ferne! | Rückert | | | |
| | 2 Ungewisses Licht | Bahnlos und pfadlos | J.C. von Zedlitz | | | |
| | 3 Zuversicht | Nach oben musst du blicken | Zedlitz | | | |
| | 4 Talismane | Gottes ist der Orient! | Goethe | | | |
| 145 | Romanzen und Balladen, iii: | | | 1849–51 | 1860 | xii, 60 |
| | 1 Der Schmidt | Ich hör' meinen Schatz | L. Uhland | | | |
| | 2 Die Nonne | Sie steht am Zellenfenster | anon. | | | |
| | 3 Der Sänger | Noch singt den Widerhallen | Uhland | | | |
| | 4 John Anderson | John Anderson, mein Lieb! | Burns, trans. Gerhard | | | |
| | 5 Romanze vom Gänsebuben | Helf' mir Gott | O. Malsburg | | | |
| 146 | Romanzen und Balladen, iv: | | | 1849–51 | 1860 | xii, 68 |
| | 1 Brautgesang | Das Haus benedei ich und preis' es laut | Uhland | | | |
| | 2 Der Bänkelsänger Willie | O Bänkelsänger Willie, du ziehst zum Jahrmarkt aus | Burns, trans. Gerhard | | | |
| | 3 Der Traum | Im schönstem Garten wallten zwei Buhlen | Uhland | | | |
| | 4 Sommerlied | Seinen Traum, lind wob | Rückert | | | |
| | 5 Das Schifflein, fl, hn | Ein Schifflein ziehet leise | Uhland | | | |
| — | Des Glockentürmers Töchterlein | Mein hochgebornes Schätzelein | Rückert | 1851 | — | — |
| WoO26, no.4 | Bei Schenkung eines Flügels, pf | Orange und Myrthe hier | Schumann | 1853 | 1942 | — |
| — | Wenn mein Stündlein vorhanden ist, arr. of chorale | | | ?1856 | facs. in R. Taylor: Robert Schumann (London, 1982) | — |

PARTSONGS FOR WOMEN'S VOICES

SSAA; incipit given only if different from title

| Op. | Title, accompaniment | Incipit | Text | Composed | Publication | SW | NSA |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 69 | Romanzen, i, pf ad lib: | | | 1849 | 1849 | x/2, 16 | v/2 |
| | 1 Tamburinschlägerin | Schwirrend Tamburin | Alvaro de Ameida, trans. Eichendorff | | | | |
| | 2 Waldmädchen | Bin ein Feuer hell | Eichendorff | | | | |
| | 3 Klosterfräulein | Ich armes Klosterfräulein | J. Kerner | | | | |
| | 4 Soldatenbraut [2nd setting] | Ach, wenn's nur der König auch wüsst | Mörike | | | | |
| | 5 Meerfey | Still bei Nacht fährt manches Schiff | Eichendorff | | | | |
| | 6 Die Kapelle | Droben stehet die Kapelle | Uhland | | | | |
| 91 | Romanzen, ii, pf ad lib: | | | 1849 | 1851 | x/2, 32 | v/2 |
| | 1 Rosmarien | Es wollt die Jungfrau früh aufsteh'n | Des Knaben Wunderhorn | | | | |
| | 2 Jäger Wohlgemut | Es jagt' ein Jäger wohlgemut | Des Knaben Wunderhorn | | | | |
| | 3 Der Wassermann | Es war in des Maien mildem Glanz | Kerner | | | | |
| | 4 Das verlassene Mägdelein [2nd setting] | Früh wann die Hähne kräh'n | Mörike | | | | |
| | 5 Der Bleicherin Nachtlied | Bleiche, bleiche weisses Lein | R. Reinick | | | | |
| | 6 In Meeres Mitten | | Rückert | | | | |

PARTSONGS FOR MEN'S VOICES

TTBB; unaccompanied unless otherwise stated; incipit given only if different from title

| Op. | Title | Incipit | Text | Composed | Publication | SW |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 33 | Sechs Lieder: | | | 1840 | 1842 | xi, 1 |
| | 1 Der träumende See | Der See ruht tief im blauen Traum | J. Mosen | | | |
| | 2 Die Minnesänger | Zu dem Wettgesange schreiten | H. Heine | | | |
| | 3 Die Lotosblume [2nd setting] | Die Lotosblume ängstigt | Heine | | | |
| | 4 Der Zecher als Doktrinär | Was quälte dir dein banges Herz? | Mosen | | | |
| | 5 Rastlose Liebe | Dem Schnee, dem Regen | J.W. von Goethe | | | |
| | 6 Frühlingsglocken | Schneeglöckchen tut läuten | R. Reinick | | | |
| 62 | Drei Gesänge: | | | 1847 | 1848 | xi, 12 |
| | 1 Der Eidgenossen Nachtwache | In stiller Bucht | J. Eichendorff | | | |
| | 2 Freiheitslied | Zittr', o Erde dunkle Macht | F. Rückert | | | |
| | 3 Schlachtgesang | Mit unserm Arm ist nichts getan | F.G. Klopstock | | | |
| 65 | Ritornelle in canonischen Weisen [orig. order 5, 4, 2, 1, 6, 7, 8, 3]:1 Die Rose stand im Tau, 2 Lasst Lautenspiel und Becherklang, 3 Blüt' oder Schnee!, 4 Gebt mir zu trinken!, 5 Zürne nicht des Herbstes Wind, 6 In Sommertagen rüste den Schlitten, 7 In Meeres Mitten ist ein offener Laden, 8 Hätte zu einem Traubenkerne [pubd 1906] | | Rückert | 1847 | 1849 | xi, 20 |
| WoO17 | Zum Anfang | Mache deinem Meister Ehre | Rückert | 1847 | 1928 | — |
| WoO13–15 | Drei Freiheitsgesänge, wind and brass insts ad lib: | | | 1848 | 1913 | — |
| | 1 Zu den Waffen | Vom Angesicht die Mask' herab! | T. Ullrich | | | |
| | 2 Schwarz-Rot-Gold | In Kümmernis und Dunkelheit | F. Freiligrath | | | |

| Op. | Title | Incipit | Text | Composed | Publication | SW |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 3 Deutscher Freiheitsgesang | Der Sieg ist dein, mein Heldenvolk! | J. Fürst | | | |
| 93 | Verzweifle nicht im Schmerzenstal, motet, double chorus, org ad lib [orchd 1852] | | Rückert | 1849 | 1851 | — |
| 137 | Fünf Gesänge aus H. Laubes Jagdbrevier, 4 hn ad lib [orig. order 1, 2, 3, 5, 4]: | | H. Laube | 1849 | 1857 | ix/4, 175 |
| | 1 Zur hohen Jagd | Frisch auf zum fröhlichen Jagen | | | | |
| | 2 Habet acht! | Habet Acht auf der Jagd | | | | |
| | 3 Jagdmorgen | O frischer Morgen, frischer Mut | | | | |
| | 4 Frühe | Früh steht der Jäger auf | | | | |
| | 5 Bei der Flasche | Wo gibt es wohl noch Jägerei | | | | |

SONGS

duets, trios etc. and works for vocal declamation with piano accompaniment and/or other instruments ad lib; incipit given only if different from title

| Op. | Title, forces | Incipit | Text | Composed | Publication/MS | SW |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| — | Verwandlung | Wenn der Winter sonst entschwand | E. Schulze | 1827 | — | — |
| — | Lied für xxx | Leicht wie gaukelnde Sylphiden | Schumann | 1827 | — | — |
| — | 11 songs [nos.1–6 (WoO21) as Sechs frühe Lieder, ed. K. Geiringer (Vienna, 1933)]: | | | | | |
| | 1 Sehnsucht | Sterne der blauen himmlischen Auen | Schumann | 1827 | 1933 | |
| | 2 Die Weinende | Ich sah dich weinen! | Byron, trans. | 1827 | 1933 | |
| | 3 Erinnerung | Glück der Engel! | J.G. Jacobi | 1828 | 1933 | |
| | 4 Kurzes Erwachen | Ich bin im Mai gegangen | J. Kerner | 1828 | 1933 | |
| | 5 Gesanges Erwachen | Könnt' ich einmal wieder singen | Kerner | 1828 | 1933 | |
| | 6 An Anna I | Lange harrt ich | Kerner | 1828 | 1933 | |
| | 7 An Anna II [used in op.11] | Nicht im Tale | Kerner | 1828 | 1893 | xiv/1, 34 |
| | 8 Im Herbste [used in op.22] | Zieh' nur, du Sonne | Kerner | 1828 | 1893 | xiv/1, 36 |
| | 9 Hirtenknabe [used in op.4 no.4] | Bin nur ein armer Hirtenknab | Schumann | 1828 | 1893 | xiv/1, 37 |
| | 10 Der Fischer | Das Wasser rauscht, das Wasser schwoll | J.W. von Goethe | 1828 | 1933 | |
| | 11 Klage [lost] | | Jacobi | 1828 | — | — |
| — | Vom Reitersmann | | Old Ger. | — | D-Zsch | — |
| — | Maultreiberlied [lost] | | — | 1838 | — | — |
| — | Ein Gedanke | Sie schlingt um meinen Nacken | E. Ferrand | 1840 | 1942 | — |
| WoO1 | Patriotisches Lied (Der deutsche Rhein), 1v, chorus, pf | Sie sollen ihn nicht haben | N. Becker | 1840 | 1840 | x/2, 168 |
| — | Der Reiter und der Bodensee [frag.] | Der Reiter reitet durchs helle Tal | G. Schwab | 1840 | 1897 | — |
| — | Die nächtliche Heerschau [frag.] | Nachts um die zwölfte Stunde | Zedlitz | 1840 | 1897 | — |
| 24 | Liederkreis: | 1 Morgens steh'ich auf und frage, 2 Es treibt mich hin, 3 Ich wandelte unter den Bäumen, 4 Lieb' Liebchen, 5 Schöne Wiege meiner Leiden, 6 Warte, warte, wilder Schiffmann, 7 Berg und Burgen schaun herunter, 8 Anfangs wollt ich fast verzagen, 9 Mit Myrten und Rosen | H. Heine | 1840 | 1840 | xiii/1, 3 |
| 25 | Myrthen | | | 1840 | 1840 | xiii/1, 24 |
| | 1 Widmung | Du meine Seele, du mein Herz | Rückert | | | |
| | 2 Freisinn | Lasst mich nur auf meinem Sattel gelten! | Goethe | | | |
| | 3 Der Nussbaum | Es grünet ein Nussbaum vor dem Haus | J. Mosen | | | |
| | 4 Jemand | Mein Herz ist betrübt | R. Burns, trans. W. Gerhard | | | |
| | 5 Lieder aus dem Schenkenbuch im Divan I | Sitz ich allein | Goethe | | | |

| Op. | Title, forces | Incipit | Text | Composed | Publication/MS | SW |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 6 Lieder aus dem Schenkenbuch im Divan II | Setze mir nicht | Goethe | | | |
| | 7 Die Lotosblume | Die Lotosblume ängstigt | Heine | | | |
| | 8 Talismane | Gottes ist der Orient | Goethe | | | |
| | 9 Lied der Suleika | Wie mit innigstem Behagen | Goethe, attrib. Marianne von Willemer | | | |
| | 10 Die Hochländer-Witwe | Ich bin gekommen ins Niederland | Burns, trans. Gerhard | | | |
| | 11 Lieder der Braut aus dem Liebesfrühling I | Mutter, Mutter! Glaube nicht | Rückert | | | |
| | 12 Lieder der Braut aus dem Liebesfrühling II | Lass mich ihn am Busen hangen | Rückert | | | |
| | 13 Hochländers Abschied | Mein Herz ist im Hochland | Burns, trans. Gerhard | | | |
| | 14 Hochländisches Wiegenlied | Schlafe, süsser kleiner Donald | Burns, trans. Gerhard | | | |
| | 15 Aus den hebräischen Gesängen | Mein Herz ist schwer! | Byron, trans. J. Körner | | | |
| | 16 Rätsel | Es flüstert's der Himmel | C. Fanshawe, trans. K. Kannegiesser | | | |
| | 17 Zwei Venetianische Lieder I | Leis rudern hier | T. Moore, trans. F. Freiligrath | | | |
| | 18 Zwei Venetianische Lieder II | Wenn durch die Piazzetta | Moore, trans. Freiligrath | | | |
| | 19 Hauptmanns Weib | Hoch zu Pferd! | Burns, trans. Gerhard | | | |
| | 20 Weit, weit | Wie kann ich froh | Burns, trans. Gerhard | | | |
| | 21 Was will die einsame Träne? | | Heine | | | |
| | 22 Niemand | Ich hab mein Weib allein | Burns, trans. Gerhard | | | |
| | 23 Im Westen | Ich schau über Forth hinüber | Burns, trans. Gerhard | | | |
| | 24 Du bist wie eine Blume | | Heine | | | |
| | 25 Aus den östlichen Rosen | Ich sende einen Gruss | Rückert | | | |
| | 26 Zum Schluss | Hier in diesen erdbeklommnen Lüften | Rückert | | | |
| 27 | Lieder und Gesänge, i: | | | 1840 | 1849 | xiii/1, 72 |
| | 1 Sag an, o lieber Vogel | | C.F. Hebbel | | | |
| | 2 Dem roten Röslein | | Burns, trans. Gerhard | | | |
| | 3 Was soll ich sagen? | Mein Aug ist trüb | A. von Chamisso | | | |
| | 4 Jasminenstrauch | Grün ist der Jasminenstrauch | Rückert | | | |
| | 5 Nur ein lächelnder Blick | | G.W. Zimmermann | | | |
| 29 | Drei Gedichte: | | E. Geibel | 1840 | 1841 | x/2, 2 |
| | 1 Ländliches Lied, 2 S | Und wenn die Primel schneeweiss blickt | | | | |
| | 2 Lied, 3 S | In meinem Garten die Nelken | | | | |
| | 3 Zigeunerleben, S, A, T, B, triangle, tambourine ad lib | Im Schatten des Waldes | | | | |
| 30 | Drei Gedichte: | | Geibel | 1840 | 1840 | xiii/1, 80 |
| | 1 Der Knabe mit dem Wunderhorn | Ich bin ein lust'ger Geselle | | | | |
| | 2 Der Page | Da ich nun entsagen müssen | | | | |
| | 3 Der Hidalgo | Es ist so süss zu scherzen | | | | |
| 31 | Drei Gesänge: | | | 1840 | 1841 | xiii/1, 92 |
| | 1 Die Löwenbraut | Mit der Myrte geschmückt | Chamisso | | | |
| | 2 Die Kartenlegerin | Schlief die Mutter endlich ein | Chamisso, after P. Béranger | | | |
| | 3 Die rote Hanne, chorus ad lib | Den Säugling an der Brust | Chamisso, after Béranger | | | |
| 34 | Vier Duette, S, T: | | | 1840 | 1841 | x/1, 2 |
| | 1 Liebesgarten | Die Liebe ist ein Rosenstrauch | R. Reinick | | | |
| | 2 Liebhabers Ständchen | Wachst du noch, Liebchen, Gruss and Kuss! | Burns, trans. Gerhard | | | |
| | 3 Unterm Fenster | Wer ist vor meiner Kammertür? | Burns, trans. Gerhard | | | |
| | 4 Familien-Gemälde | Grossvater und Grossmutter | A. Grün | | | |
| 35 | Zwölf Gedichte: | | Kerner | 1840 | 1841 | xiii/1, 108 |
| | 1 Lust der Sturmnacht | Wenn durch Berg und Tale | | | | |
| | 2 Stirb, Lieb und Freud! | Zu Augsburg steht ein hohes Haus | | | | |
| | 3 Wanderlied | Wohlauf! noch getrunken den funkelnden Wein! | | | | |

| Op. | Title, forces | Incipit | Text | Composed | Publication/MS | SW |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 4 Erstes Grün | Du junges Grün, du frisches Gras! | | | | |
| | 5 Sehnsucht nach der Waldgegend | Wär ich nie aus euch gegangen | | | | |
| | 6 Auf das Trinkglas eines verstorbenen Freundes | Du herrlich Glas | | | | |
| | 7 Wanderung | Wohlauf und frisch gewandert | | | | |
| | 8 Stille Liebe | Könnt ich dich in Liedern preisen | | | | |
| | 9 Frage | Wärst du nicht, heil'ger Abendschein! | | | | |
| | 10 Stille Thränen | Du bist vom Schlaf erstanden | | | | |
| | 11 Wer machte dich so krank? | Dass du so krank geworden | | | | |
| | 12 Alte Laute | Hörst du den Vogel singen? | | | | |
| 36 | Sechs Gedichte: | | Reinick | 1840 | 1842 | xiii/1, 132 |
| | 1 Sonntags am Rhein | Des Sonntags in der Morgenstund | | | | |
| | 2 Ständchen | Komm in die stille Nacht | | | | |
| | 3 Nichts schöneres | Als ich zuerst dich hab gesehn | | | | |
| | 4 An den Sonnenschein | O Sonnenschein! | | | | |
| | 5 Dichters Genesung | Und wieder hatt ich der Schönsten gedacht | | | | |
| | 6 Liebesbotschaft | Wolken, die ihr nach Osten eilt | | | | |
| 37 | Zwölf Gedichte aus F. Rückerts Liebesfrühling [nos.2, 4, 11 by Clara Schumann]:1 Der Himmel hat ein Träne geweint, 3 O ihr Herren, 5 Ich hab in mich gesogen, 6 Liebste, was kann denn uns scheiden?, S, T, 7 Schön ist das Fest des Lenzes, S, T, 8 Flügel! Flügel! um zu fliegen, 9 Rose, Meer und Sonne, 10 O Sonn, o Meer, o Rose, 12 So wahr die Sonne scheinet, S, T | Rückert | 1841 | 1841 | xiii/2, 2 | |
| 39 | Liederkreis [op.77/1 orig. included as 1st song, but omitted in 2/1850]: | | Eichendorff | 1840 | 1842 | xiii/2, 28 |
| | 1 In der Fremde | Aus der Heimat hinter den Blitzen rot | | | | |
| | 2 Intermezzo | Dein Bildnis wunderselig | | | | |
| | 3 Waldesgespräch | Es ist schon spät | | | | |
| | 4 Die Stille | Es weiss und rät es doch keiner | | | | |
| | 5 Mondnacht | Es war, als hätt der Himmel die Erde still geküsst | | | | |
| | 6 Schöne Fremde | Es rauschen die Wipfel und schauern | | | | |
| | 7 Auf einer Burg | Eingeschlafen auf der Lauer | | | | |
| | 8 In der Fremde | Ich hör die Bächlein rauschen | | | | |
| | 9 Wehmut | Ich kann wohl manchmal singen | | | | |
| | 10 Zwielicht | Dämm'rung will die Flügel spreiten | | | | |
| | 11 Im Walde | Es zog eine Hochzeit den Berg entlang | | | | |
| | 12 Frühlingsnacht | Überm Garten durch die Lüfte | | | | |
| 40 | Fünf Lieder: | | | 1840 | 1842 | xiii/2, 50 |
| | 1 Märzveilchen | Der Himmel wölbt sich rein und blau | H.C. Andersen, trans. Chamisso | | | |
| | 2 Muttertraum | Die Mutter betet herzig | Andersen, trans. Chamisso | | | |
| | 3 Der Soldat | Es geht bei gedämpfter Trommel Klang | Andersen, trans. Chamisso | | | |
| | 4 Der Spielmann | Im Städtchen gibt es des Jubels viel | Andersen, trans. Chamisso | | | |
| | 5 Verratene Liebe | Da Nachts wir uns küssten | Chamisso | | | |

| Op. | Title, forces | Incipit | Text | Composed | Publication/MS | SW |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 42 | Frauenliebe und -leben: 1 Seit ich ihn gesehen, 2 Er, der Herrlichste von allen, 3 Ich kann's nicht fassen, nicht glauben, 4 Du Ring an meinem Finger, 5 Helft mir, ihr Schwestern, 6 Süsser Freund, du blickest, 7 An meinem Herzen, an meiner Brust, 8 Nun hast du mir den ersten Schmerz getan | | Chamisso | 1840 | 1843 | xiii/2, 62 |
| 43 | Drei zweistimmige Lieder: | | | 1840 | 1844 | xi/1, 18 |
| | 1 Wenn ich ein Vöglein wär [later incorporated in op.81] | | Des Knaben Wunderhorn | | | |
| | 2 Herbstlied | Das Laub fällt von den Bäumen | S.A. Mahlmann | | | |
| | 3 Schön Blümelein | Ich bin hinaus gegangen | Reinick | | | |
| 45 | Romanzen und Balladen, i: | | | 1840 | 1843 | xiii/2, 78 |
| | 1 Der Schatzgräber | Wenn alle Wälder schliefen | Eichendorff | | | |
| | 2 Frühlingsfahrt | Es zogen zwei rüst'ge Gesellen | Eichendorff | | | |
| | 3 Abends am Strand | Wir sassen am Fischerhause | Heine | | | |
| 48 | Dichterliebe [orig. included op.127/2, 3 and op.142/2, 4]: 1 Im wunderschönen Monat Mai, 2 Aus meinen Tränen spriessen, 3 Die Rose, die Lilie, die Taube, die Sonne, 4 Wenn ich in deine Augen seh, 5 Ich will meine Seele tauchen, 6 Im Rhein, im heiligen Strome, 7 Ich grolle nicht, 8 Und wüssten's die Blumen, die kleinen, 9 Das ist ein Flöten und Geigen, 10 Hör ich das Liedchen klingen, 11 Ein Jüngling liebt ein Mädchen, 12 Am leuchtenden Sommermorgen, 13 Ich hab im Traum geweinet, 14 Allnächtlich im Traume, 15 Aus alten Märchen, 16 Die alten, bösen Lieder | | Heine | 1840 | 1844 | xiii/2, 88 |
| 49 | Romanzen und Balladen, ii: | | | 1840 | 1844 | xiii/2, 122 |
| | 1 Die beiden Grenadiere | Nach Frankreich zogen zwei Grenadier' | Heine | | | |
| | 2 Die feindlichen Brüder | Oben auf des Berges Spitze | Heine | | | |
| | 3 Die Nonne | Im Garten steht die Nonne | A. Fröhlich | | | |
| 51 | Lieder und Gesänge, ii: | | | | 1850 | xiii/2, 132 |
| | 1 Sehnsucht | Ich blick in mein Herz | Geibel | 1840 | | |
| | 2 Volksliedchen | Wenn ich früh in den Garten geh | Rückert | 1840 | | |
| | 3 Ich wandre nicht | Warum soll ich denn wandern | C. Christern | 1840 | | |
| | 4 Auf dem Rhein | Auf deinem Grunde haben sie an verborgnem Ort | K.L. Immermann | 1846 | | |
| | 5 Liebeslied | Dir zu eröffnen mein Herz | Goethe | 1849 | | |
| 53 | Romanzen und Balladen, iii: | | | 1840 | 1845 | xiii/2, 142 |
| | 1 Blondels Lied | Spähend nach dem Eisengitter | J.G. Seidl | | | |
| | 2 Loreley | Es flüstern und rauschen die Wogen | W. Lorenz | | | |
| | 3 Der arme Peter | 1 Der Hans und die Grete tanzen herum2 In meiner Brust3 Der arme Peter wankt vorbei | Heine | | | |
| 57 | Belsatzar | Die Mitternacht zog näher schon | Heine | 1840 | 1846 | xiii/3, 2 |
| 64 | Romanzen und Balladen, iv: | | | | 1847 | xiii/3, 10 |
| | 1 Die Soldatenbraut | Ach, wenn's nur der König auch wüsst | E. Mörike | 1847 | | |
| | 2 Das verlassne Mägdelein | Früh wann die Hähne krähn | Mörike | 1847 | | |
| | 3 Tragödie | 1 Entflieh mit mir und sei mein Weib2 Es fiel ein Reif in der Frühlingsnacht3 Auf ihrem Grab, S, T | Heine | 1841 | | |

| Op. | Title, forces | Incipit | Text | Composed | Publication/MS | SW |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 74 | Spanisches Liederspiel: | | Geibel, after Spanish poets | 1849 | 1849 | x/2, 46 |
| | 1 Erste Begegnung, S, A | Von dem Rosenbusch, o Mutter | | | | |
| | 2 Intermezzo, T, B | Und schläfst du, mein Mädchen, auf! | | | | |
| | 3 Liebesgram, S, A | Dereinst, dereinst, o Gedanke mein | | | | |
| | 4 In der Nacht, S, T | Alle gingen, Herz, zur Ruh' | | | | |
| | 5 Es ist verraten, S, A, T, B | Dass ihr steht in Liebesglut | | | | |
| | 6 Melancholie, S | Wann, wann erscheint der Morgen | | | | |
| | 7 Geständnis, T | Also lieb ich euch | | | | |
| | 8 Botschaft, S, A | Nelken wind ich und Jasmin | | | | |
| | 9 Ich bin geliebt, S, A, T, B | Mögen alle bösen Zungen | | | | |
| | 10 Der Kontrabandiste, Bar | Ich bin der Kontrabandiste | | | | |
| 77 | Lieder und Gesänge, iii: | | | | 1851 | xiii/3, 18 |
| | 1 Der frohe Wandersmann [orig. included in op.39] | Wem Gott will rechte Gunst erweisen | Eichendorff | 1840 | | |
| | 2 Mein Garten | Veilchen, Rosmarin, Mimosen | A. Hoffmann von Fallersleben | 1850 | | |
| | 3 Geisternähe | Was weht um meine Schläfe | A. Halm | 1850 | | |
| | 4 Stiller Vorwurf | In einsamen Stunden drängt Wehmut sich auf | ? O.L. Wolff | 1840 | | |
| | 5 Aufträge | Nicht so schnelle | C. L'Egru | 1850 | | |
| WoO7 | Soldatenlied | Ein scheckiges Pferd | Hoffmann von Fallersleben | 1844 | 1845 | xiii/4, 122 |
| — | Das Schwert | Zur Schmiede ging ein junger Held | Uhland | 1848 | — | — |
| — | Der weisse Hirsch [sketches] | Es gingen drei Jäger | Uhland | 1848 | — | — |
| — | Die Ammenuhr | Der Mond, der scheint | Des Knaben Wunderhorn | 1848 | — | — |
| 78 | Vier Duette, S, T: | | | 1849 | 1850 | x/1, 28 |
| | 1 Tanzlied | Eia, wie flattert der Kranz | Rückert | | | |
| | 2 Er und Sie | Seh ich in das stille Tal | Kerner | | | |
| | 3 Ich denke dein | | Goethe | | | |
| | 4 Wiegenlied | Schlaf, Kindlein, schlaf | Hebbel | | | |
| — | Sommerruh, duet | Sommerruh, wie schön bist du | C. Schad, altered by Schumann | 1849 | 1850 | xiv/1, 38 |
| 79 | Lieder-Album für die Jugend: | | | 1849 | 1849 | xiii/3, 30 |
| | 1 Der Abendstern | Du lieblicher Stern | Hoffmann von Fallersleben | | | |
| | 2 Schmetterling | O Schmetterling, sprich | Hoffmann von Fallersleben | | | |
| | 3 Frühlingsbotschaft | Kuckuck, Kuckuck ruft aus dem Wald | Hoffmann von Fallersleben | | | |
| | 4 Frühlingsgruss | So sei gegrüsst vieltausendmal | Hoffmann von Fallersleben | | | |
| | 5 Vom Schlaraffenland | Kommt, wir wollen uns begeben | Hoffmann von Fallersleben | | | |
| | 6 Sonntag | Der Sonntag ist gekommen | Hoffmann von Fallersleben | | | |
| | 7 Zigeunerliedchen | 1 Unter die Soldaten2 Jeden Morgen, in der Frühe | GeibelGeibel | | | |
| | 8 Des Knaben Berglied | Ich bin vom Berg der Hirtenknab | Uhland | | | |
| | 9 Mailied, duet ad lib | Komm, lieber Mai | C.A. Overbeck | | | |
| | 10 Das Käuzlein | Ich armes Käuzlein kleine | Der Knaben Wunderhorn | | | |
| | 11 Hinaus ins Freie! | Wie blüht es im Tale | Hoffmann von Fallersleben | | | |
| | 12 Der Sandmann | Zwei feine Stieflein hab ich an | H. Kletke | | | |
| | 13 Marienwürmchen | Marienwürmchen, setze dich | Des Knaben Wunderhorn | | | |
| | 14 Die Waise | Der Frühling kehret wieder | Hoffmann von Fallersleben | | | |
| | 15 Das Glück, duet | Vöglein vom Zweig | Hebbel | | | |
| | 16 Weihnachtslied | Als das Christkind ward zur Welt gebracht | Andersen, trans. | | | |
| | 17 Die wandelnde Glocke | Es war ein Kind | Goethe | | | |
| | 18 Frühlingslied, duet ad lib | Schneeglöckchen klingen wieder | Hoffmann von Fallersleben | | | |
| | 19 Frühlings Ankunft | Nach diesen trüben Tagen | Hoffmann von Fallersleben | | | |
| | 20 Die Schwalben, duet | Es fliegen zwei Schwalben | Des Knaben Wunderhorn | | | |

| Op. | Title, forces | Incipit | Text | Composed | Publication/MS | SW |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 21 Kinderwacht | Wenn fromme Kindlein schlafen gehn | anon. | | | |
| | 22 Des Sennen Abschied | Ihr Matten, lebt wohl, ihr sonnigen Weiden! | F. von Schiller | | | |
| | 23 Er ist's | Frühling lässt sein blaues Band | Mörike | | | |
| | 24 Spinnelied, trio ad lib | Spinn, spinn | anon. | | | |
| | 25 Des Buben Schützenlied | Mit dem Pfeil, dem Bogen | Schiller | | | |
| | 26 Schneeglöckchen | Der Schnee, der gestern noch in Flöckchen | Rückert | | | |
| | 27 Lied Lynceus des Türmers | Zum Sehen geboren | Goethe | | | |
| | 28 Mignon [also as op.98a/1] | Kennst du das Land | Goethe | | | |
| 83 | Drei Gesänge: | | | 1850 | 1850 | xiii/3, 78 |
| | 1 Resignation | Lieben, von ganzer Seele lieben | J. Buddeus | | | |
| | 2 Die Blume der Ergebung | Ich bin die Blum' in Garten | Rückert | | | |
| | 3 Der Einsiedler | Komm, Trost der Welt | Eichendorff | | | |
| 87 | Der Handschuh [orig. version for chorus, 1849] | Vor seinem Löwengarten | Schiller | 1850 | 1850 | xiii/3, 88 |
| 89 | Sechs Gesänge: | | W. von der Neun [F.W.T. Schöpff] | 1850 | 1850 | xiii/3, 94 |
| | 1 Es stürmet am Abendhimmel | | | | | |
| | 2 Heimliches Verschwinden | Nachts zu unbekannter Stunde | | | | |
| | 3 Herbstlied | Durch die Tannen und die Linden | | | | |
| | 4 Abschied vom Walde | Nun scheidet vom sterbenden Walde | | | | |
| | 5 Ins Freie | Mir ist's so eng allüberall! | | | | |
| | 6 Röselein, Röselein! | | | | | |
| 90 | Sechs Gedichte von N. Lenau und Requiem | | N. Lenau | 1850 | 1851 | xiii/3, 108 |
| | 1 Lied eines Schmiedes | Fein Rösslein, ich beschlage dich | | | | |
| | 2 Meine Rose | Dem holden Lenzgeschmeide | | | | |
| | 3 Kommen und Scheiden | So oft sie kam | | | | |
| | 4 Die Sennin | Schöne Sennin, noch einmal singe | | | | |
| | 5 Einsamkeit | Wild verwachs'ne dunkle Fichten | | | | |
| | 6 Der schwere Abend | Die dunklen Wolken hingen | | | | |
| | 7 Requiem | Ruh von schmerzensreichen Mühen aus | anon. | | | |
| 95 | Drei Gesänge: | | Byron: Hebrew Melodies, trans. Körner | 1849 | 1851 | xiii/3, 126 |
| | 1 Die Tochter Jephthas | Da die Heimat, o Vater | | | | |
| | 2 An den Mond | Schlaflose Sonne, melanchol'scher Stern! | | | | |
| | 3 Dem Helden | Dein Tag ist aus, dein Ruhm fing an | | | | |
| 96 | Lieder und Gesänge, iv: | | | 1850 | 1851 | xiii/3, 136 |
| | 1 Nachtlied | Über allen Gipfeln ist Ruh | Goethe | | | |
| | 2 Schneeglöckchen | Die Sonne sah die Erde an | anon. | | | |
| | 3 Ihre Stimme | Lass tief in dir mich lesen | A. von Platen | | | |
| | 4 Gesungen! | Hört ihr im Laube des Regens | Neun [Schöpff] | | | |
| | 5 Himmel und Erde | Wie der Bäume kühne Wipfel | Neun [Schöpff] | | | |
| 98a | Lieder und Gesänge aus Wilhelm Meister: 1 Kennst du das Land, 2 Ballade des Harfners (Was hör ich draussen vor dem Thor), 3 Nur wer die Sehnsucht kennt, 4 Wer nie sein Brot mit Tränen ass, 5 Heiss mich nicht reden, 6 Wer sich der Einsamkeit ergibt, 7 Singet nicht in Trauertönen, 8 An die Türen will ich schleichen, 9 So lasst mich scheinen | | Goethe | 1849 | 1851 | xiii/4, 2 |

| Op. | Title, forces | Incipit | Text | Composed | Publication/MS | SW |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 101 | Minnespiel: 1 Meine Töne still und heiter, T, 2 Liebster, deine Worte stehlen, S, 3 Ich bin dein Baum, A, B, 4 Mein schöner Stern!, T, 5 Schön ist das Fest des Lenzes, S, A, T, B, 6 O Freund, mein Schirm, mein Schutz!, A/S, 7 Die tausend Grüsse, S, T, 8 So wahr die Sonne scheinet, S, A, T, B | | Rückert | 1849 | 1852 | x/2, 88 |
| 103 | Mädchenlieder, S, A/2 S: | | E. Kulmann | 1851 | 1851 | x/1, 42 |
| | 1 Mailied | Pflücket Rosen, um das Haar schön | | | | |
| | 2 Frühlingslied | Der Frühling kehret wieder | | | | |
| | 3 An die Nachtigall | Bleibe hier und singe, liebe Nachtigall! | | | | |
| | 4 An den Abendstern | Schweb empor am Himmel | | | | |
| 104 | Sieben Lieder: 1 Mond, meiner Seele Liebling, 2 Viel Glück zur Reise, Schwalben!, 3 Du nennst mich armes Mädchen, 4 Der Zeisig (Wir sind ja, Kind, im Maie), 5 Reich mir die Hand, o Wolke, 6 Die letzten Blumen starben, 7 Gekämpft hat meine Barke | | Kulmann | 1851 | 1851 | xiii/4, 27 |
| 106 | Schön Hedwig, declamation | Im Kreise der Vasallen | Hebbel | 1849 | 1853 | xiii/4, 106 |
| 107 | Sechs Gesänge: | | | 1851 | 1852 | xiii/4, 40 |
| | 1 Herzeleid | Die Weiden lassen matt die Zweige hangen | T. Ullrich | | | |
| | 2 Die Fensterscheibe | Die Fenster klär ich zum Feiertag | Ullrich | | | |
| | 3 Der Gärtner | Auf ihrem Leibrösslein | Mörike | | | |
| | 4 Die Spinnerin | Auf dem Dorf in den Spinnstuben | P. Heyse | | | |
| | 5 Im Wald | Ich zieh so allein in den Wald hinein! | W. Müller | | | |
| | 6 Abendlied | Es ist so still geworden | G. Kinkel | | | |
| 114 | Drei Lieder, 3 female vv: | | | | 1853 | x/2, 118 |
| | 1 Nänie | Unter den roten Blumen schlummere | L. Bechstein | 1849 | | |
| | 2 Triolett | Senkt die Nacht den sanften Fittig nieder | L'Egru | 1850 | | |
| | 3 Spruch | O blicke, wenn den Sinn dir will die Welt | Rückert | 1849 | | |
| 117 | Vier Husarenlieder, Bar: 1 Der Husar, trara!, 2 Der leidige Frieden, 3 Den grünen Zeigern, 4 Da liegt der Feinde gestreckte Schar | | Lenau | 1851 | 1852 | xiii/4, 52 |
| 119 | Drei Gedichte: | | G. Pfarrius | 1851 | 1853 | xiii/4, 60 |
| | 1 Die Hütte | Im Wald, in grüner Runde | | | | |
| | 2 Warnung | Es geht der Tag zur Neige | | | | |
| | 3 Der Bräutigam und die Birke | Birke, Birke, des Waldes Zier | | | | |
| 122 | Zwei Balladen, declamations: | | | 1852–3 | 1853 | xiii/4, 112 |
| | 1 Ballade vom Haideknaben | Der Knabe träumt | Hebbel | | | |
| | 2 Die Flüchtlinge | Der Hagel klirrt nieder | P.B. Shelley, trans. | | | |
| 125 | Fünf heitere Gesänge: | | | 1850–51 | 1853 | xiii/4, 68 |
| | 1 Die Meerfee | Helle Silberglöcklein klingen | J. Buddeus | | | |
| | 2 Husarenabzug | Aus dem dunkeln Tor wallt | C. Candidus | | | |
| | 3 Jung Volkers Lied [orig. intended for op.107 no.4] | Und die mich trug im Mutterarm | Mörike | | | |
| | 4 Frühlingslied | Das Körnlein springt | F. Braun | | | |
| | 5 Frühlingslust | Nun stehen die Rosen in Blüte | Heyse | | | |
| 127 | Fünf Lieder und Gesänge: | | | | 1854 | xiii/4, 80 |
| | 1 Sängers Trost | Weint auch einst kein Liebchen | Kerner | 1840 | | |
| | 2 Dein Angesicht [orig. intended for op.48] | | Heine | 1840 | | |
| | 3 Es leuchtet meine Liebe [orig. intended for op.48] | | Heine | 1840 | | |
| | 4 Mein altes Ross | | Moritz, Graf von Strachwitz | 1850 | | |

| Op. | Title, forces | Incipit | Text | Composed | Publication/MS | SW |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 5 Schlusslied des Narren | Und als ich ein winzig Bübchen war | from W. Shakespeare: Twelfth Night, trans. Tieck and A. Schlegel | 1840 | | |
| — | Frühlingsgrüsse | Nach langem Frost | Lenau | 1851 | 1942 | |
| 135 | Gedichte der Königin Maria Stuart: | | trans. G. Vincke | 1852 | 1855 | xiii/4, 90 |
| | 1 Abschied von Frankreich | Ich zieh dahin | | | | |
| | 2 Nach der Geburt ihres Sohnes | Herr Jesu Christ | | | | |
| | 3 An die Königin Elisabeth | Nur ein Gedanke | | | | |
| | 4 Abschied von der Welt | Was nützt die mir noch zugemess'ne Zeit? | | | | |
| | 5 Gebet | O Gott, mein Gebieter | | | | |
| 138 | Spanische Liebeslieder: 1 Vorspiel, pf 4 hands, 2 Tief im Herzen trag ich Pein, S, 3 O wie lieblich ist das Mädchen, T, 4 Bedeckt mich mit Blumen, S, A, 5 Flutenreicher Ebro, Bar, 6 Intermezzo, pf 4 hands, 7 Weh, wie zornig ist das Mädchen, T, 8 Hoch, hoch sind die Berge, A, 9 Blaue Augen hat das Mädchen, T, B, 10 Dunkler Lichtglanz, S, A, T, B | | Geibel | 1849 | 1857 | x/2, 124 |
| 139 | From Des Sängers Fluch: | | R. Pohl, after Uhland | 1852 | 1858 | — |
| | 4 Provenzalisches Lied | In den Talen der Provence | | | | |
| | 7 Ballade | In der hohen Hall sass König Sifrid | | | | |
| 142 | Vier Gesänge: | | | 1840 | 1858 | xiii/4, 98 |
| | 1 Trost im Gesang | Der Wandrer, dem verschwunden | Kerner | | | |
| | 2 Lehn deine Wang [orig. intended for op.48] | | Heine | | | |
| | 3 Mädchen-Schwermut | Kleine Tropfen, seid ihr Tränen | L. Bernhard | | | |
| | 4 Mein Wagen rollet langsam [orig. intended for op.48] | | Heine | | | |
| — | Mailied [duet] | | | 1851 | D-Zsch | — |
| WoO26 no.3 | Liedchen von Marie und Papa, duet | Gern mach' ich dir | Schumann | 1852 | 1942 | — |
| — | Glockentürmers Töchterlein | Mein hochgebor'nes Schätzelein | Rückert | — | — | — |
| — | Das Käuzlein [2nd setting] | Ich armes Käuzlein kleine | Des Knaben Wunderhorn | — | Zsch | — |
| — | Deutscher Blumengarten [duet] | | Rückert | — | — | — |

INDEX TO THE SONGS

KEYBOARD

for solo piano unless otherwise stated

| Op. | Title, key | Composed | Publication/MS | SW |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| — | Arrangement of Georg Christoph Grosheim, Titania Ov. | ?1824 | — | — |
| woo20 | 8 polonaises, pf 4 hands | 1828 | 1933 | — |
| Remarks: some material used in Papillons, op.2c; orig. op.3 | | | | |
| — | Variations on a theme of Prince Louis Ferdinand of Prussia, pf 4 hands | 1828 | only fragment survives | — |
| — | Romanze, f | 1829 | — | — |
| Remarks: unfinished | | | | |

| Op. | Title, key | Composed | Publication/MS | SW |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| — | Etüden | 1829–30 | — | — |
| Remarks: ?lost | | | | |
| — | 6 Walzer | 1829–30 | — | — |
| Remarks: some material used in Papillons, op.2 | | | | |
| 1 | Thème sur le nom Abegg varié pour le pianoforte | 1830 | 1831 | vii/1, 2 |
| Remarks: also sketches for version with orch | | | | |
| — | Variations on a theme of Weber | 1831 | — | — |
| Remarks: on the Zigeusermarsch from Preziosa | | | | |
| — | Valse, E♭ | 1831 | — | |
| Remarks: unfinished | | | | |
| — | Andante with variations on an orig. theme, G | 1831–2 | — | — |
| Remarks: inscribed 'Mit Gott', some material used in op.124 no.2 | | | | |
| — | Valse per F. Wieck | 1831–2 | — | |
| Remarks: unfinished | | | | |
| — | Sonata, A♭ | 1831–2 | — | |
| Remarks: 1st movt and Adagio only | | | | |
| — | Prelude and fugue | 1832 | — | — |
| 2 | Papillons | 1830–31 | 1831 | vii/1, 12 |
| Remarks: include. some material from the 4-hand polonaises, 1828 and some used also in 6 Walzer, 1829–30 | | | | |
| 3 | 6 Etudes pour le pianoforte d'après les caprices de Paganini | 1832 | 1832 | vii/1, 22 |
| Remarks: orig. op.2 | | | | |
| 4 | 6 intermezzos | 1832 | 1833 | vii/1, 46 |
| Remarks: orig. op.3 and entitled Pièces phantastiques | | | | |
| — | Phantasie satyrique | 1832 | — | — |
| Remarks: on a theme of Henri Herz; frags. only | | | | |
| — | Fandango, f♯ | 1832 | — | — |
| Remarks: later used in op.11 | | | | |
| — | Exercice fantastique | 1832 | — | -- |
| Remarks: orig. op.5; lost | | | | |
| — | Rondo, B♭ | 1832 | — | — |
| Remarks: unfinished | | | | |
| — | 12 Burlesken (Burle) | 1832 | — | — |
| Remarks: ?some later used in op.124 | | | | |
| — | Fugue, d | ?1832 | D-Bsb | — |
| — | Movt in B♭ | ?1832 | S-Skma | — |
| Remarks: sketch | | | | |
| — | Fugal piece, b♭ [one of many] | ?1832 | Skma | — |
| Remarks: sketch | | | | |
| — | Canonon Au Alexis send' Ich Dich | ?1832 | 1858 | — |
| — | Fugue no.3 | ?1832 | — | — |
| Remarks: probably intended as finale of op.5 | | | | |
| | 5 short pieces: | 1832–3 | — | |
| | 1 Notturnino | | | — |
| | 2 Ballo | | | |
| | 3 Burla | | | |
| | 4 Capriccio | | | |
| | 5 Ecossaise | | | |
| Remarks: 1, 4 and 5 unfinished | | | | |
| — | Sehnsuchtswalzer Variationen: scènes musicales sur un thème connu | 1833 | — | — |
| Remarks: also entitled Scènes mignonnes and Scènes musicales sur un thème connu de Fr. Schubert; opening used as opening of Carnaval, op.9 | | | | |
| WoO31 | [11] Etüden in Form freier Variationen über ein Beethovensches Thema | 1832–5 | 1976 | — |
| Remarks: Allegretto of Beethoven's Symphony no.7; 3 versions; no.5 from 2nd version pubd as op.124 no.2 | | | | |
| 5 | [10] Impromptus sur une romance de Clara Wieck | 1833 | 1833 | vii/1, 68 |
| Remarks: last no. incl. material from finale of Symphony, g, 1832–3; 2nd version of 1850 omits 2 variations but introduces a new variation, no.3; orig. op.8 | | | | |
| — | Variations sur un nocturne de Chopin | 1834 | D-Zsch | — |
| Remarks: Chopin's op.15 no.3, g; frag., breaks off in 5th variation | | | | |
| — | Sonata movt, B♭ | 1836 | — | — |
| — | Sonata no.4, f | 1836–7 | — | — |
| Remarks: unfinished | | | | |
| 6 | Davidsbündlertänze: 18 character-pieces | 1837 | 1837 | vii/1, 96 |
| Remarks: title in 2nd edn. (1850–51) Die Davidsbündler | | | | |
| 7 | Toccata, C | 1829–33 | 1834 | vii/1, 146 |
| Remarks: orig. op.6; orig. title Etude fantastique en double-sons; 2 versions | | | | |
| 8 | Allegro, b | 1831 | 1835 | vii/1, 156 |
| Remarks: 1st movt of projected sonata | | | | |

| Op. | Title, key | Composed | Publication/MS | SW |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 9 | Carnaval: scènes mignonnes sur quatre notes: 1 Préambule, 2 Pierrot, 3 Arlequin, 4 Valse noble, 5 Eusebius, 6 Florestan, 7 Coquette, 8 Réplique, Sphinxes, 9 Papillons, 10 ASCH–SCHA (Lettres dansantes), 11 Chiarina, 12 Chopin, 13 Estrella, 14 Reconnaissance, 15 Pantalon et Colombine, 16 Valse allemande, 17 Intermezzo: Paganini, 18 Aveu, 19 Promenade, 20 Pause, 21 Marche des Davidsbündler contres les Philistins | 1834–5 | 1837 | vii/2, 2 |
| Remarks: orig. title Fasching: Schwänke auf vier Noten für Pianoforte von Florestan, op.12 | | | | |
| 10 | 6 Etudes de concert . . . d'après des caprices de Paganini | 1833 | 1835 | vii/2, 30 |
| Remarks: orig. title Capricen für das Pianoforte, auf dem Grund der Violinstimme von Paganini zu Studien frei bearbeitet | | | | |
| 11 | Sonata no.1, f♯ | 1832–5 | 1836 | vii/2, 52 |
| Remarks: on title-page 'Pianoforte-Sonata, Clara zugeignet von Florestan und Eusebius' | | | | |
| 12 | Fantasiestücke: 1 Des Abends, 2 Aufschwung, 3 Warum?, 4 Grillen, 5 In der Nacht, 6 Fabel, 7 Traumes Wirren, 8 Ende vom Lied | 1837 | 1838 | vii/2, 82 |
| Remarks: orig. title Phantasien; no.7 composed not later than 1832 | | | | |
| WoO28 | 9  | 1837 | 1935 | — |
| Remarks: omitted from op.12 | | | | |
| 13 | 12 Etudes symphoniques | 1834–7 | 1837 | vii/2, 108 |
| Remarks: orig. title Etüden im Orchestercharakter für Pianoforte von Florestan und Eusebius; 2nd version (1852) entitled Etudes en formes de variations; 5 extra variations pubd in 1873 and incl. in SW xiv, 40; variation unpubd | | | | |
| 14 | Concert sans orchestre, f | 1835–6 | 1836 | vii/3 |
| Remarks: 3 movts of orig. 5 pubd 1836; rev. and pubd 1853 as Grande Sonate with 1 scherzo restored | | | | |
| — | Scherzo | 1836 | 1866 | — |
| Remarks: rejected movt of op.14 | | | | |
| — | 2 Variations | 1836 | 1984 | — |
| Remarks: omitted from 3rd movt of op.14 | | | | |
| 15 | Kinderscenen: Leichte Stücke für das Pianoforte 1 Von fremden Ländern und Menschen, 2 Curiose Geschichte, 3 Hasche-Mann, 4 Bittendes Kind, 5 Glückes genug, 6 Wichtige Begebenheit, 7 Träumerei, 8 Am Camin, 9 Ritter vom Steckenpferd, 10 Fast zu ernst, 11 Fürchtenmachen, 12 Kind im Einschlummern, 13 Der Dichter spricht | 1838 | 1839 | vii/3 |
| 16 | Kreisleriana: [8] Fantasien | 1838 | 1838 | vii/3 |
| Remarks: rev. 2/1850 | | | | |
| 17 | Fantasie, C | 1836–8 | 1839 | vii/3 |
| Remarks: orig. title Obolen auf Beethovens Monument: Ruinen, Trophäen, Palmen: grosse Sonate für das Pianoforte, für Beethovens Monument, von Florestan und Eusebius, op.12; also entitled Dichtungen: Ruinen, Siegesbogen, Sternbild; 1st movt orig. planned as independent fantasy entitled Ruines | | | | |
| 18 | Arabeske, C | 1838–9 | 1839 | vii/3 |
| 19 | Blumenstück, D♭ | 1839 | 1839 | vii/3 |
| 20 | Humoreske, B♭ | 1838–9 | 1839 | vii/4, 2 |
| Remarks: orig. title Grosse Humoreske | | | | |
| 21 | 8 Novelletten | 1838 | 1839 | vii/4, 28 |
| Remarks: Andantino comp.1830 | | | | |
| 22 | Sonata no.2, g | 1833–8 | 1839 | vii/4, 76 |
| Remarks: new finale composed 1838 | | | | |
| WoO5 | Presto passionato | ?1833 | 1866 | xiv/1, 53 |
| Remarks: rejected finale of op.22 | | | | |
| 23 | Nachtstücke: 4 pieces | 1839–40 | 1840 | vii/4, 96 |
| Remarks: Schumann envisaged the titles: 1 Trauerzug, 2 Kuriose Gesellschaft, 3 Nächtliches Gelage, 4 Rundgesang mit Solostimmen | | | | |
| — | Allegro, c | 1839 | — | — |
| Remarks: lost | | | | |
| 26 | Faschingsschwank aus Wien: Phantasiebilder: 1 Allegro, 2 Romanze, 3 Scherzino, 4 Intermezzo, 5 Finale | 1839–40 | 1841 | vii/4, 110 |
| Remarks: no.4 pubd separately Dec 1839 | | | | |
| 28 | Drei Romanzen, b♭, F♯, B | 1839 | 1840 | vii/4, 132 |
| 32 | Klavierstücke: 1 Scherzo, 2 Gigue, 3 Romanze, 4 Fughette | 1838–9 | 1841 | vii/4, 146 |
| — | Sonatina, B♭ | 1840 | | — |
| Remarks: lost | | | | |
| 46 | Andante and variations, B♭, 2 pf | 1843 | 1844 | vi, 2 |
| Remarks: orig. with 2 vc, hn; see CHAMBER MUSIC | | | | |

| Op. | Title, key | Composed | Publication/MS | SW |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 56 | Studien für den Pedal-Flügel: 6 pieces in canonic form, pedal pf/pf 3–4 hands | 1845 | 1845 | vii/5 |
| 58 | 4 Skizzen für den Pedal-Flügel, pf 4 hands | 1845 | 1846 | vii/5 |
| 60 | Sechs Fugen über den Namen: Bach, org/pedal pf | 1845 | 1846 | vii/1, 2 |
| — | Piece for harmonium, F | 1849 | — | — |
| Remarks: 2 movts only | | | | |
| 66 | Bilder aus Osten: 6 impromptus, pf 4 hands | 1848 | 1849 | vi, 24 |
| 68 | Album für die Jugend | 1848 | 1848 | |
| | Pt. 1, Für Kleinere: 1 Melodie, 2 Soldatenmarsch, 3 Trällerliedchen [orig. Kinderstückchen], 4 Ein Choral, Stückchen, 6 Armes Waisenkind [orig. Armes Bettlerkind], 7 Jägerliedchen, 8 Wilder Reiter, 9 Volksliedchen [orig. Volkslied], 10 Fröhlicher Landmann, von der Arbeit zurückkehrend, 11 Sizilianisch [orig. Zwei Sizilianische], 12 Knecht Ruprecht, 13 Mai, lieber Mai [orig. Mai, schöner mai], 14 Kleine Studie, 15 Frühlingsgesang, 16 Erster Verlust [orig. Kinderunglück], 17 Kleiner Morgenwanderer, 18 Schnitterliedchen | | | |
| | Pt. 2, Für Erwachsenere: 19 Kleine Romanze, 20 Landliches Lied, 21, 22 Rundgesang, 23 Reiterstück, 24 Ernteliedchen, 25 Nachklänge aus dem Theater, 26 , 27 Canonisches Liedchen [orig. Canon], 28 Erinnerung [orig. Erinnerung an Mendelssohn], 29 Fremder Mann, 30 , 31 Kriegslied, 32 Sheherazade, 33 Weinlesezeit – fröhliche Zeit!, 34 Thema, 35 Mignon, 36 Lied italienischer Marinari [orig. Schifferlied], 37 Matrosenlied, 38 Winterszeit I, 39 Winterszeit II, 40 Kleine Fuge, 41 Nordisches Lied (Gruss an G), 42 Figurierter Choral, 43 Sylversterlied [orig. Zum Schluss] | | | |
| Remarks: orig. title Weihnachtsalbum; facs. of autograph (Leipzig, 1956); facs. of sketchbook (London, 1924), with 4 other pf pieces by Schumann, ed. L. Windesperger: Gukkuk im Versteck, Lagune in Venedig, Haschemann, waltz in G [orig. untitled]; Other pieces conceived during early stages of project, unpubd at that time: Ein Thema von Georg Friedrich Händel; Ein Stückchen von Johann Sebastian Bach; Ein Stückchen von Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart; Andante [theme of Beethoven, Piano Sonata op.109, third movt]; Eine berühmte Melodie von Ludwig van Beethoven; Ein Trinklied von Carl Maria von Weber; Ein Ländler von Franz Schubert; Für ganz Kleine; Linke Hand soll sich auch zeigen; Puppenschlafliedchen; Bärentanz;  [12-bar piece in C]; Auf der Gondel; Rebus; untitled, 9-bar piece in E♭; untitled, 20-bar piece in A; untitled fragmentary fughetta in A; Canon; Aus ist der schmaus, die Gäste gehn nach Haus; all originally unpubd pieces ed. B.R. Appel: Robert Schumanns 'Album für die Jugend' (Zürich and Mainz, 1998), 301–21 | | | | |
| 72 | Vier Fugen, d, d, f, F | 1845 | 1850 | vii/5 |
| 76 | 4 marches, E♭, g, B♭ (Lager-Scene), E♭ | 1849 | 1849 | vii/5 |
| 82 | Waldscenen: | 1848–9 | 1850 | vii/5 |
| | 1 Eintritt, 2 Jäger auf der Lauer [orig. Jägersmann auf der Lauer], 3 Einsame Blumen, 4 Verrufene Stelle [orig. Verrufener Ort], 5 Freundliche Landschaft [orig. Freier Ausblick], 6 Herberge [orig. Jägerhaus], 7 Vogel als Prophet, 8 Jagdlied, 9 Abschied | | | |
| 85 | 12 vierhändige Clavierstücke für kleine und grosse Kinder: | 1849 | 1850 | vi, 48 |
| | 1 Geburtstagsmarsch, 2 Bärentanz, 3 Gartenmelodie, 4 Beim Kränzewinden, 5 Kroatenmarsch, 6 Trauer, 7 Turniermarsch, 8 Reigen, 9 Am Springbrunnen, 10 Versteckens, 11 Gespenstermärchen, 12 Abendlied | | | |
| Remarks: orig. title, with op.124, Spreu; no.2 from sketches in op.68; no.3 orig. title Gartenlied | | | | |
| 99 | Bunte Blätter: | | 1852 | vii/6, 2 |
| | Drei Stücklein: | | | |
| | 1 | ?1838 | | |
| | 2 | ?1838 | | |
| | 3 | 1838 | | |
| | Fünf Albumblätter: | | | |
| | 4 1841 | | theme used by Brahms for Variations op.9 | |
| | 5 1838 | | orig. title Fata Morgana | |
| | 6 1836 | | rejected from Carnaval, op.9 | |
| | 7 1839 | | orig. title Jugendschmerz | |
| | 8 1838 | | | |

| Op. | Title, key | Composed | Publication/MS | SW |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 9 Novellette | 1838 | | |
| | 10 Präludium | 1839 | | |
| | 11 Marsch | 1843 | | |
| | 12 Abendmusik | 1841 | | |
| | 13 Scherzo | 1841 | | |
| | 14 Geschwindmarsch | 1849 | | |
| Remarks: 1: MS inscribed 'An meine geliebte Braut zum heiligen Abend 1838'; 3: orig. title Jagdstück; 13: orig. intended for symphony in c, 1841; 14: orig. intended for op.76 | | | | |
| 109 | Ballscenen, pf 4 hands: 1 Préambule, 2 Polonaise, 3 Walzer, 4 Ungarisch, 5 Française, 6 Mazurka, 7 Ecossaise, 8 Walzer, 9 Promenade | 1851 | 1853 | vi, 94 |
| Remarks: orig. title Kinderball; no.2 composed 1849 | | | | |
| 111 | Drei Fantasiestücke, c, A♭, c | 1851 | 1852 | vii/6, 36 |
| Remarks: orig. title Romanzen oder Phantasiestücke | | | | |
| 118 | Drei Clavier-Sonaten für die Jugend, G, D, C | 1853 | 1853 | vii/6, 44 |
| 124 | Albumblätter: 1 Impromptu (1832), 2 Leides Ahnung (1832), 3 Scherzino (1832), 4 Walzer (1835), 5 Phantasietanz (1836), 6 Wiegenliedchen (1843), 7 Ländler (1836), 8 Lied ohne Ende (1837), 9 Impromptu (1838), 10 Walzer (1838), 11 Romanze (1835), 12 Burla (1832), 13 Larghetto (1832), 14 Vision (1838), 15 Walzer (1832), 16 Schlummerlied (1841), 17 Elfe (1835) [orig. intended for op.9], 18 Botschaft (1838), 19 Phantasiestück (1839), 20 Canon (1845) | | 1854 | vii/6, 78 |
| Remarks: orig. title, with op.99, Spreu; nos. 1, 3, 12, 15 perhaps among the 12 Burlesken offered to Breitkopf & Härtel in 1832 | | | | |
| 126 | Sieben Clavierstücke in Fughettenform | 1853 | 1854 | vii, 102 |
| 130 | Kinderball, pf 4 hands: 1 Polonaise, 2 Walzer, 3 Menuett, 4 Ecossaise, 5 Française, 6 Ringelreihe | 1853 | 1854 | vi, 142 |
| 133 | 5 Gesänge der Frühe | 1853 | 1855 | vii/6, 114 |
| Remarks: MS inscribed 'An Diotima' | | | | |
| — | Thema, E♭ | 1854 | 1893 | xiv/1, 67 |
| Remarks: theme used by Brahms for Variations for pf duet op.23; see also below, variations on an original theme, WoO24 | | | | |
| WoO24 | Variations on an original theme | 1854 | 1939 | |
| — | Pf arr. Of J. Loachim's ov. Heinrich IV | ?1854–6 | | — |
| Remarks: unfinished | | | | |
| — | Fugue | 1856 | | — |
| Remarks: lost | | | | |

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A Catalogues. B Bibliographies. C Genealogies. D Iconography. E Diaries. F Letters. G Writings and aesthetics. H Documentary studies and compilations. I General studies, collections of essays. J Biography, memoirs. K Life and works. L Keyboard music. M Songs. N Other vocal music. O Orchestral works. P Chamber music. Q Late works. R Reception. S Other special studies.

A: CATALOGUES

A. Dörffel: Thematisches Verzeichniss sämmtlicher im Druck erschienenen Werke Robert Schumanns (Leipzig, 1860, 4/1868/R)

G. Eismann: 'Nachweis der internationalen Standorte von Notenautographen Robert Schumanns', Sammelbände der Robert-Schumann-Gesellschaft, ii (Leipzig, 1966), 7–37

K. Hofmann: Die Erstdrucke der Werke von Robert Schumann (Tutzing, 1979)

K. Hofmann and S. Keil, eds.: Robert Schumann: thematisches Verzeichnis sämtlicher im Druck erschienenen musikalischen Werke (Hamburg, 1982)

B: BIBLIOGRAPHIES

G. Abraham, ed.: Schumann: a Symposium (London, 1952/R), 301–8

P. Mies: 'Literatur um Robert Schumann: ein Beitrag zu seinem 100. Todestag', Musikhandel, vii (1956), 93–5

F. Munte: Verzeichnis des deutschsprachigen Schrifttums über Robert Schumann 1856–1970 (Hamburg, 1972)

A. Walker, ed.: Robert Schumann: the Man and his Music (London, 1972, 2/1976), 442–5

W. Boetticher: 'Das Erbe Robert Schumanns im jüngeren Schrifttum', NZM, Jg.142 (1981), 248–51

J. Liebscher: 'Auswahlbibliographie', Robert Schumann, ii, Musik-Konzepte (Munich, 1981), 379–90 [special issue]

C: GENEALOGIES

E. Bienenfeld: 'Die Stammtafel der Familie Robert Schumanns: Ahnen und Nachkommen eines Genies', Archiv für Rassen- und Gesellschaftsbiologie, xxvi (1932), 57–9

G. Eismann: 'Bemerkenswertes zur Genealogie Robert Schumanns', Mf, xxii (1969), 61–4

A. Walker: 'Schumann's Family Tree', Robert Schumann: the Man and his Music (London, 1972, 2/1976), 418

D: ICONOGRAPHY

W. Gertler: Robert Schumann, 1810–1856; sein Leben in Bildern (Leipzig, 1936)

G. Eismann: Robert Schumann: eine Biographie in Wort und Bild (Leipzig, 1956, enlarged 2/1964; Eng. trans., 1964)

R. Petzold and E. Crass: Robert Schumann: sein Leben in Bildern (Leipzig, 1956)

G. Eismann: 'Das authentische Schumann-Bild', Sammelbände der Robert-Schumann-Gesellschaft, i (Leipzig, 1961), 86–90

P. Kast, ed.: Schumanns rheinische Jahre (Düsseldorf, 1981)

E: DIARIES

R. Schumann: Tagebücher, i: 1827–1838, ed. G. Eismann (Leipzig, 1971, 2/1987); ii, 1836–1854, ed. G. Nauhaus (Leipzig, 1987; Eng. trans., excerpts, 1993, as The Marriage Diaries of Robert and Clara Schumann: from their Wedding Day through the Russia Trip); iii: Haushaltbücher (1837–56), ed. G. Nauhaus (Leipzig, 1982)

G. Nauhaus: 'Zur Edition der Haushaltbücher Robert Schumanns', Schumann-Tage I: Karl-Marx-Stadt 1976, 26–33

F: LETTERS

C. Schumann, ed.: Jugendbriefe von Robert Schumann (Leipzig, 1885, 4/1910; Eng. trans., 1888)

F.G. Jansen, ed.: Robert Schumanns Briefe: neue Folge (Leipzig, 1886, 2/1904; Eng. trans., 1890)
H. Erler: Robert Schumanns Leben: aus seinen Briefen geschildert (Berlin, 1887, 3/1927)
J. Gensel: 'Robert Schumanns Briefwechsel mit Henriette Voigt', Die Grenzboten, li (1892), 269–77, 324–32, 368–75; enlarged offprint (Leipzig, 1892)
E. Hanslick: 'Robert Schumann in Endenich', Die moderne Oper, viii: Am Ende des Jahrhunderts (1895–1899) (Berlin, 1899/R), 317–42
F.G. Jansen: 'Briefwechsel zwischen Robert Franz und Robert Schumann', Die Musik, viii/1 (1908–9), 280–91, 346–59
W. Boetticher: 'Über die Unbekannte "Familienkassette" Robert und Clara Schumanns', Scritti in onore di Luigi Ronga (Milan, 1973), 45–52
W. Boetticher, ed.: Briefe und Gedichte aus dem Album Robert und Clara Schumanns (Leipzig, 1979)
H.J. Ortheil, ed.: Robert und Clara Schumann: Briefe einer Liebe (Königstein, 1982)
E. Weissweiler, ed.: Clara und Robert Schumann: Briefwechsel, kritische Gesamtausgabe (Frankfurt, 1984)

G: WRITINGS AND AESTHETICS

R. Schumann: 'Aus dem Leben eines Künstlers: Phantastische Symphonie in 5 Abtheilungen von Hector Berlioz', NZM, iii (1835), 1–51; Eng. trans. in E.T. Cone: Berlioz: Fantastic Symphony (New York, 1971), 220–48
R. Schumann: Gesammelte Schriften über Musik und Musiker (Leipzig, 1854/R, 4/1891/R, rev. 5/1914 by M. Kreisig; Eng. trans., 1877–80; new Eng. trans. [selection], 1946/R)
F. Liszt: 'Ein Kapitel zur Reform der musikalischen Kritik', Gesammelte Schriften, ed. L. Ramann, iv (Leipzig, 1882/R), 115–55
P. Spitta: 'Über Robert Schumanns Schriften', Musikgeschichtliche Aufsätze (Berlin, 1894/R), 383–401
A. Schmitz: 'Die ästhetischen Anschauungen Robert Schumanns in ihren Beziehungen zur romantischen Literatur', ZMw, iii (1920–21), 111–18
H. Kötz: Der Einfluss Jean Pauls auf Robert Schumann (Weimar, 1933)
G. Eismann, ed.: R. Schumann: Erinnerungen an Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy (Zwickau, 1947, enlarged 2/1948); repr. in Musik-Konzepte, nos. 14–15 (Munich, 1980), 97–122
R.L. Jacobs: 'Schumann and Jean Paul', ML, xxx (1949), 250–58
H. Homeyer: Grundbegriffe der Musikanschauung Robert Schumanns: ihre Wesen, ihr Bedeutung und Funktion in seinem literarischen Gesamtwerk (diss., U. of Münster, 1956)
M. Elssner: Zum Problem des Verhältnisses von Musik und Wirklichkeit in den musikästhetischen Arbeiten der Schumann-Zeit (diss., U. of Halle, 1964)
E.A. Lippman: 'Theory and Practice in Schumann's Aesthetics', JAMS, xvii (1964), 310–45
H. Pleasants, ed. and trans.: The Musical World of Robert Schumann: a Selection from his own Writings (London, 1965/*R*1988 as Schumann on Music)
K. Laux: 'Was ist ein Musikschriftsteller? Carl Maria von Weber und Robert Schumann als Vorbild', Sammelbände der Robert-Schumann-Gesellschaft, ii (Leipzig, 1966), 38–57
L.B. Plantinga: Schumann as Critic (New Haven, CT, 1967/R)
T.A. Brown: The Aesthetics of Robert Schumann (New York, 1968/R)
M. Schoppe, ed.: Robert Schumann: Selbstbiographische Notizen Faksimile (n.p. [E. Germany], 1977)
B.R. Appel: 'Schumanns Davidsbund: Geistes- und sozialgeschichtliche Voraussetzungen einer romantischer Idee', AMw, xxxviii (1981), 1–23
H. Eggebrecht: 'Töne sind höhere Worte', Robert Schumann, i, Musik-Konzepte (Munich, 1981), 105–15 [special issue]
C. Floros: 'Schumanns musikalische Poetik', ibid., 90–104
S. Kross: 'Aus der Frühgeschichte von Robert Schumanns Neuer Zeitschrift für Musik', Mf, xxxiv (1981), 423–45
C. Floros: 'Brahms der "Messias" und "Apostel": zur Rezeptionsgeschichte des Artikels "Neue Bahnen"', Mf, xxxvi (1983), 24–9
L. Siegel: Music in German Romantic Literature: a Collection of Essays, Reviews and Stories (Novato, CA, 1983)
F. Otto: Robert Schumann als Jean Paul-Leser (Frankfurt, 1984)
L. Plantinga: 'Schumann's Critical Reaction to Mendelssohn', Mendelssohn and Schumann: Essays on their Work and its Context, ed. J.W. Finson and R.L. Todd (Durham, NC, 1984), 11–19
W. Kaden: 'Zum Verhältnis von Musikästhetik und Musikkritik bei Robert Schumann', Robert-Schumann-Tage [X]: Zwickau 1985, 76–81
M. Schoppe: 'Robert Schumanns frühe Texte und Schriften', ibid., 51–60
A. Fowler: 'Robert Schumann and the "Real" Davidsbündler', College Music Symposium, xxx/2 (1990), 19–27
E. Lippman: A History of Western Musical Aesthetics (Lincoln, NE, and London, 1992)
V.S. Sterk: Robert Schumann as Sonata Critic and Composer: the Sonata from Beethoven to 1844, as Reviewed by Schumann in the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik (diss., Stanford U., 1992)
H. Kirchmeyer: Robert Schumanns Düsseldorfer Brahms-Aufsatz Neue Bahnen und die Ausbreitung der Wagnerschen Opern bis 1856 (Berlin, 1993)

H: DOCUMENTARY STUDIES AND COMPILATIONS

A. Dörffel: Geschichte der Gewandhausconcerte zu Leipzig vom 25. November 1781 bis 25. November 1881 (Leipzig, 1884/R)
W. Boetticher: Robert Schumann in seinen Schriften und Briefen (Berlin, 1942)
G. Eismann: Robert Schumann: ein Quellenwerk über sein Leben und Schaffen (Leipzig, 1956)
H.-J. Rothe: 'Neue Dokumente zur Schumann-Forschung aus dem Leipziger Stadtarchiv', GfMKB: Leipzig 1966, 318–21
W. Boetticher: Robert Schumanns Klavierwerke: neue biographische und textkritische Untersuchungen, i: Opus 1–6 (Wilhelmshaven, 1976)
R. Locke and J. Thym: 'New Schumann Materials in Upstate New York: a First Report on the Dickinson Collection, with Catalogue of its Manuscript Holdings', FAM, xxvii (1980), 137–61
W. Boetticher: 'Weitere Forschungen an Dokumenten zum Leben und Schaffen Robert Schumanns', Robert Schumann: ein romantisches Erbe in neuer Forschung – acht Studien, ed. Robert-Schumann-Gesellschaft, Düsseldorf (Mainz, 1984), 43–55
G. Nauhaus: 'Schumanns Lektürebüchlein', Robert Schumann und die Dichter: ein Musiker als Leser, ed. B.R. Appel and I. Hermstrüwer (Düsseldorf, 1991), 55–87
M. Schoppe: 'Schumanns Litterarischer Verein', ibid., 17–32
F.H. Franken: 'Robert Schumann in der Irrenanstalt Endenich', Robert Schumanns letzte Lebensjahre: Protokoll einer Krankheit (Berlin, 1994), 7–24
E. Burger and G. Nauhaus: Robert Schumann: eine Lebenschronik in Bildern und Dokumenten (Mainz, 1998)
L. Hotaki: Robert Schumanns Mottosammlung: Übertragung, Kommentar, Einführung (Freiburg im Breisgau, 1998)

I: GENERAL STUDIES, COLLECTIONS OF ESSAYS

E. Grieg: 'Robert Schumann', Nyt tidskrift, new ser., ii (1893–4), 217; also in Century Magazine, xlvii (1893–4), 440–49
W. Boetticher: Robert Schumann: Einführung in Persönlichkeit und Werk (Berlin, 1941)
G. Abraham, ed.: Schumann: a Symposium (London, 1952/R)
G. Knepler: 'Robert Schumann', Musikgeschichte des 19. Jahrhunderts (Berlin, 1961), 770–96
A. Walker, ed.: Robert Schumann: the Man and his Music (London, 1972, 2/1976)
J. Alf and J.A. Kruse, eds.: Robert Schumann, Universalgeist der Romantik: Beiträge zu seiner Persönlichkeit und seinem Werk (Düsseldorf, 1981)
P. Kast, ed.: Schumanns rheinische Jahre (Düsseldorf, 1981)
H.-K. Metzger and R. Riehn, eds.: Robert Schumann, i–ii, Musik-Konzepte (Munich, 1981–2) [special issues]
A. Edler: Robert Schumann und seine Zeit (Laaber, 1982)
Robert Schumann: ein romantisches Erbe in neuer Forschung – acht Studien, ed. Robert-Schumann-Gesellschaft, Düsseldorf (Mainz, 1984)
J.W. Finson and R.L. Todd, eds.: Mendelssohn and Schumann: Essays on their Work and its Context (Durham, NC, 1984)
G. Müller, ed.: Robert-Schumann-Tage [X]: Zwickau 1985
A. Mayeda and K.W. Niemöller, eds.: Schumanns Werke: Text und Interpretation – 16 Studien (Mainz, 1987)
Schumann in Düsseldorf: Düsseldorf 1988
G. Dietel: 'Eine neue poetische Zeit': Musikanschauung und stilistische Tendenzen im Klavierwerk Robert Schumanns (Kassel, 1989)
Schumann und seine Dichter: Düsseldorf 1991

B.R. Appel and I. Hermstrüwer, eds.: Robert Schumann und die Dichter: ein Musiker als Leser (Düsseldorf, 1991)
A. Mayeda: Robert Schumanns Weg zur Symphonie (Zürich, 1992)
R.L. Todd, ed.: Schumann and his World (Princeton, NJ, 1994)
C. Rosen: The Romantic Generation (Cambridge, MA, 1995)

J: BIOGRAPHY, MEMOIRS

F. Liszt: 'Robert Schumann' [1856], Gesammelte Schriften, iv (Leipzig, 1882), 103–85
F. Brendel: 'Schumanns Biographie von Wasielewski', NZM, xlvii (1858), 113–14, 125–8, 137–41, 157–60, 169–71, 181–6, 193–5
W.J. von Wasielewski: Robert Schumann (Dresden, 1858, enlarged 4/1906/R; Eng. trans., 1871/R)
F. Richarz: 'Robert Schumanns Krankheit', AMZ, new ser., viii (1873), 597–601
R. Pohl: 'Erinnerungen an Robert Schumann', Deutsche Revue, ii (1878), 169–81, 306–17; Eng. trans. in Schumann and his World, ed. R.L. Todd (Princeton, NJ, 1994), 233–67
F.G. Jansen: Die Davidsbündler: aus Robert Schumann's Sturm- und Drangperiode (Leipzig, 1883)
W.J. von Wasielewski: Schumanniana (Bonn, 1883)
A. Moser: Joseph Joachim: ein Lebensbild (Berlin, 1898, enlarged 4/1908; Eng. trans., 1900)
B. Litzmann: Clara Schumann: ein Künstlerleben nach Tagebüchern und Briefen (Leipzig, 1902–8, 6–8/1923–5/R; Eng. trans., abridged, 1913/R)
V. Joss: Der Musikpädagoge Wieck und seine Familie: mit besonderer Berücksichtigung seines Schwiegersohnes Robert Schumann (Dresden, 1902)
P. Möbius: Über Robert Schumanns Krankheit (Halle, 1906)
Johannes Joachim and A.Moser, eds.: Briefe von und an Joseph Joachim (Berlin, 1911–13; Eng. trans., abridged, 1914/R)
M. Wieck: Aus dem Kreise Wieck-Schumann (Dresden, 1912, 2/1914)
F. Nussbaum: Der Streit um Robert Schumanns Krankheit (diss., U. of Cologne, 1923)
F. Niecks: Robert Schumann: a Supplementary and Corrective Biography (London, 1925/R)
E. Schumann: Erinnerungen (Stuttgart, 1925; Eng. trans., 1927/R)
B. Litzmann, ed.: Clara Schumann-Johannes Brahms: Briefe aus den Jahren 1853–1896 (Leipzig, 1927; Eng. trans., 1927)
E. Schumann: Robert Schumann: ein Lebensbild meines Vaters (Leipzig, 1931)
H. Kleinebreil: Der kranke Schumann: Untersuchungen über Krankheit und Todesursache Robert Schumanns (diss., U. of Jena, 1943)
G. Eismann: Robert Schumann: eine Biographie in Wort und Bild (Leipzig, 1956, enlarged 2/1964; Eng. trans., 1964)
E. Flechsig: 'Erinnerungen an Robert Schumann', NZM, Jg.117 (1956), 392–6
R. Stockhammer: 'Robert Schumann in Wien', ÖMz, xv (1960), 177–81
R. Heuberger: Erinnerungen an Johannes Brahms: Tagebuchnotizen aus den Jahren 1875 bis 1897, ed. K. Hofmann (Tutzing, 1971)
E. Sams: 'Schumann's Hand Injury', MT, cxii (1971), 1156–9; cxiii (1972), 456 only
P. Ostwald: 'Florestan, Eusebius, Clara, and Schumann's Right Hand', 19CM, iv (1980–81), 17–31
S. Kross: 'Brahms und Schumann', Brahms-Studien, iv (Hamburg, 1981), 7–44
N.B. Reich: Clara Schumann: the Artist and the Woman (Ithaca, NY, 1985)
U. Rauchfleisch: Robert Schumann, Leben und Werk: eine Psychobiographie (Stuttgart, 1990)
N.B. Reich: 'Clara Schumann and Johannes Brahms', Brahms and his World, ed. W. Frisch (Princeton, NJ, 1990), 37–48
E. Weissweiler: Clara Schumann (Hamburg, 1990)
D. Hoffmann-Axthelm: Robert Schumann: 'Glücklichsein und tiefe Einsamkeit' (Stuttgart, 1994)
F.H. Franken: 'Robert Schumann in der Irrenanstalt in Bonn-Endenich: zum aufgefundenen ärztlichen Verlaufsbericht 1854–1856 von Doktor Franz Richarz', Brahms-Studien, xi (1997), 107–20
E.F. Jensen: 'Schumann at Endenich: Buried Alive', MT, cxxxix/March (1998), 10–18; cxxxix/April, 14–23

K: LIFE AND WORKS

Grove6 (G. Abraham, E. Sams); MGG1 (E. Lippman)
W.J. von Wasielewski: Robert Schumann (Dresden, 1858, enlarged 2/1906; Eng. trans., 1871/R)
P. Spitta: 'Ein Lebensbild Robert Schumanns', Sammlung musikalischer Vorträge, iv (Leipzig, 1882), 1–102
H. Reimann: Robert Schumanns Leben und Werke (Leipzig, 1887)
H. Abert: Robert Schumann (Berlin, 1903, 4/1920)
W. Dahms: Schumann (Berlin, 1916)
M. Beaufils: Schumann (Paris, 1932)
C. Valabrega: Schumann (Modena, 1934)
W. Korte: Robert Schumann (Potsdam, 1937)
E. Bücken: Robert Schumann (Cologne, 1940)
R.H. Schauffler: Florestan: the Life and Work of Robert Schumann (New York, 1945/R)
J. Chissell: Schumann (London, 1948, 2/1967)
K.H. Wörner: Robert Schumann (Zürich, 1949)
M. Brion: Schumann et l'âme romantique (Paris, 1954; Eng. trans., 1956)
P. and W. Rehberg: Robert Schumann: sein Leben und sein Werk (Zürich, 1954)
A. Boucourechliev: Schumann (Paris, 1957, 2/1983; Eng. trans., 1959/R)
P.M. Young: Tragic Muse: the Life and Works of Robert Schumann (London, 1957, 2/1961)
K. Laux: Robert Schumann (Leipzig, 1972)
A. Walker: Schumann (London, 1976)
D. Schnebel: 'Rückungen–Ver-rückungen: Psychoanalytische Betrachtungen zu Schumanns Leben und Werk', Robert Schumann, i, Musik-Konzepte (Munich, 1981), 4–90 [special issue]
R. Taylor: Robert Schumann: his Life and Work (London, 1982)
P. Ostwald: Schumann: the Inner Voices of a Musical Genius (Boston, 1985)
P. Ostwald: 'Leiden und Trauern im Leben und Werk Robert Schumanns', Schumanns Werke: Text und Interpretation – 16 Studien, ed. A. Mayeda and K.W. Niemöller (Mainz, 1987), 121–31
J. Daverio: Robert Schumann: Herald of a 'New Poetic Age' (New York, 1997)

L: KEYBOARD MUSIC

C. Kossmaly: 'Ueber Robert Schumann's Claviercompositionen', AMZ, xlvi (1844), 17–21, 33–7
A. Dörffel: 'Für Pianoforte: Robert Schumann, op.68, Album für die Jugend', NZM, xxx (1849), 89–91
F. Liszt: 'Robert Schumanns Klavierkompositionen op.5, 11 und 14', Gesammelte Schriften, ii/1, ed. L. Ramann (Leipzig, 1881/R), 99–107
R. Hohenemser: 'Formale Eigentümlichkeiten in Robert Schumanns Klaviermusik', Festschrift zum 50. Geburtstag Adolf Sandberger (Munich, 1918), 21–50
W. Gertler: Robert Schumann in seinen frühen Klavierwerken (Wolfenbüttel, 1931)
R. Fiske: 'A Schumann Mystery', MT, cv (1964), 574–8 [on Die Davidsbündlertänze, op.6]
M. Beaufils: 'Mythos und Maske bei Robert Schumann', Sammelbände der Robert-Schumann-Gesellschaft, ii (Leipzig, 1966), 66–76
W. Boetticher: 'Neue textkritische Forschungen an Robert Schumanns Klavierwerk', AMw, xxv (1968), 46–76
S. Walsh: 'Schumann and the Organ', MT, cxi (1970), 741–3
C.S. Becker: A Study of Robert Schumann's 'Impromptus', op.5: its Sources and a Critical Analysis of its Revisions (diss., Boston U., 1977)
T.A. Brown: 'Schumann's Baroque Organ Compositions', The Diapason, lxviii/5 (1977–8), 4–5, 20
L.C. Roesner: 'Schumann's Revisions in the First Movement of the Piano Sonata in G minor, op.22', 19CM, i (1977–8), 97–109
R. Münster: 'Die Beethoven-Etuden von Robert Schumann aus Anlass ihrer Erstausgabe', Mf, xxxi (1978), 53–6
A. Walker: 'Schumann, Liszt and the C major Fantasie, op.17: a Declining Relationship', ML, lx (1979), 156–65
C. Dahlhaus: Die Musik des 19. Jahrhunderts (Wiesbaden, 1980; Eng. trans., 1989)
G. Harwood: 'Robert Schumann's Sonata in F♯ minor: a Study of Creative Process and Romantic Inspiration', CMc, no.29 (1980), 17–30
C. Rosen: Sonata Forms (New York, 1980)
K.J. Sachs: 'Robert Schumanns Fugen über den Namen BACH (op.60)', Johann Sebastian Bach und seine Ausstrahlung auf die nachfolgenden Jahrhunderte (Mainz, 1980), 151–75

C.S. Becker: 'A New Look at Schumann's Impromptus', MQ, lxvii (1981), 568–86

W. Gieseler: 'Schumanns frühe Klavierwerke im Spiegel der literarischen Romantik', Robert Schumann: Universalgeist der Romantik, ed. J. Alf and J.A. Kruse (Düsseldorf, 1981), 62–87

R. Barthes: L'obvie et l'obtus (Paris, 1982; Eng. trans., 1985/R, as The Responsibility of Forms)

J.D. Peterson: 'Schumann's Fugues on B–A–C–H: a Secret Tribute', The Diapason, lxxiii/5 (1982), 12–13

O. Neighbour: 'Brahms and Schumann: two Opus Nines and Beyond', 19CM, vii (1983–4), 266–70

E.F. Jensen: 'A New Manuscript of Robert Schumann's Waldszenen op.82', JM, iii (1984), 69–89

I. Knechtges: Robert Schumann im Spiegel seiner späten Klavierwerke (Regensburg, 1985)

B.R. Appel: 'Ein produktives Missverständnis: Robert Schumanns 'Kinderszenen' op.15 in der Kritik Ludwig Rellstabs', Mf, xl (1987), 109–15

J. Draheim: 'Schumanns Jugendwerk: Acht Polonaisen op.III für Klavier zu 4 Händen', Schumanns Werke: Text und Interpretation – 16 Studien, ed. A. Mayeda and K.W. Niemöller (Mainz, 1987), 179–91

B. Barry: 'Image and Imagination in Schumann's G-minor Sonata', Journal of the Science and Practice of Music, iv (1987–8), 57–73

J. Daverio: 'Schumann's "Im Legendenton" and Friedrich Schlegel's Arabeske', 19CM, xi (1987–8), 150–63

M. Waldura: 'Zitate vokaler Frühgesänge in Schumanns "Gesänge der Frühe": Überlegungen zur Deutung eines irritierenden Titels', Schumann in Düsseldorf: Düsseldorf 1988, 37–53

P. Jost: Robert Schumanns 'Waldszenen' op.82: zum Thema Wald in der romantischen Klaviermusik (Saarbrücken, 1989)

P.M. Kaminsky: 'Principles of Formal Structure in Schumann's Early Piano Cycles', Music Theory Spectrum, xi (1989), 207–25

J. Daverio: 'Reading Schumann by Way of Jean Paul and his Contemporaries', College Music Symposium, xxx/2 (1990), 28–45

P.M. Kaminsky: Aspects of Harmony, Rhythm and Form in Schumann's 'Papillons', 'Carnaval' and 'Davidsbündlertänze' (diss., U. of Rochester, 1990)

A. Newcomb: 'Schumann and the Marketplace: from Butterflies to Hausmusik', Nineteenth-Century Piano Music, ed. R.L. Todd (New York, 1990), 258–315

L.C. Roesner: 'Schumann's "Parallel" Forms', 19CM, xiv (1990–91), 265–78

A. Edler: 'Aphoristik und Novellistik: Versuch über das Private in Schumanns Klaviermusik', Musica Privata . . . Festschrift zum 65. Geburtstag von Walter Salmen, ed. M. Fink and others (Innsbruck, 1991), 201–14

N. Marston: Schumann: Fantasie, op.17 (Cambridge, 1992)

S. Münch: '"Fantasiestücke in Kreislers Manier": Robert Schumanns "Kreisleriana" op.16 und die Musikanschauung E.T.A. Hoffmanns', Mf, xlv (1992), 255–74

N. Marston: '"Im Legendenton": Schumann's "Unsung Voice"', 19CM, xvi (1992–3), 227–41

H.J. Bracht: 'Schumanns "Papillons" und die Ästhetik der Frühromantik', AMw, l (1993), 71–84

D. Crisp: 'The Kreisleriana of Robert Schumann and E.T.A. Hoffmann: Some Musical and Literary Parallels', Musicology Australia, xvi (1993), 3–18

M. Geck: Von Beethoven bis Mahler: die Musik des deutschen Idealismus (Stuttgart and Weimar, 1993)

J. Daverio: Nineteenth-Century Music and the German Romantic Ideology (New York, 1993)

L. Kramer: 'Carnaval, Cross-Dressing, and the Woman in the Mirror', Musicology and Difference: Gender and Sexuality in Music Scholarship, ed. R.A. Solie (Berkeley and Los Angeles, 1993), 305–25

B. Hoeckner: 'Schumann and Romantic Distance', JAMS, l (1997), 55–132

B.R. Appel: Robert Schumanns 'Album für die Jugend' (Zürich and Mainz, 1998)

S. Downes: 'Kierkegaard, a Kiss, and Schumann's Fantasie', 19CM, xxii (1998–9), 268–80

E.F. Jensen: 'Explicating Jean Paul: Robert Schumann's Program for Papillons, op.2)', 19CM, xxii (1998–9), 127–43

M: SONGS

M. Friedlaender: Textrevision zu Robert Schumanns Liedern (Leipzig, 1887)

C. Spitz: 'Schumann's "Mary Stuart Songs"', MMR, lxvii (1937), 153–68

T.W. Adorno: 'Coda: Schumanns Lieder', Noten zur Literatur, i (Berlin, 1958), 134–43; repr. in T.W. Adorno: Gesammelte Schriften, xi, ed. R. Tiedemann (Frankfurt, 1974; Eng. trans., 1991)

E. Sams: 'Schumann's Year of Song', MT, cvi (1965), 105–7

E. Sams: The Songs of Robert Schumann (London, 1969, 3/1993)

J.M. Stein: 'Musical Settings of the Songs from Wilhelm Meister', Comparative Literature, xxii (1970), 125–46

A. Komar, ed.: Schumann: Dichterliebe (New York, 1971)

S. Walsh: The Lieder of Schumann (London, 1971)

A. Desmond: Schumann Songs (London, 1972)

H. Knaus: Musiksprache und Werkstruktur in Robert Schumanns 'Liederkreis' (Munich, 1974)

J. Thym: The Solo Song Settings of Eichendorff's Poems by Schumann and Wolf (diss., Case Western Reserve U., 1974)

R.E. Hallmark: 'The Sketches for Dichterliebe', 19CM, i (1977–8), 110–36

R.E. Hallmark: The Genesis of Schumann's 'Dichterliebe': a Source Study (Ann Arbor, 1979)

D. Fischer-Dieskau: Robert Schumann, Wort und Musik: das Vokalwerk (Stuttgart, 1981; Eng. trans., 1988)

W. Killmayer: 'Schumann und seine Dichter', NZM, Jg.142 (1981), 231–6

B. Turchin: Robert Schumann's Song Cycles in the Context of the Early Nineteenth-Century Liederkreis (diss., Columbia U., 1981)

B. Turchin: 'Schumann's Conversion to Vocal Music: a Reconsideration', MQ, lxvii (1981), 392–404

C. Henius: 'Erfahrungen mit Schumanns Liederkreis – und mit Adorno', Robert Schumann, ii, Musik-Konzepte (Munich, 1982), 170–76 [special issue]

D. Neumeyer: 'Organic Structure and the Song Cycle: Another Look at Schumann's Dichterliebe', Music Theory Spectrum, iv (1982), 92–105

H. Pousseur: 'Schumann ist der Dichter: Fünfundzwanzig Momente einer Lektüre der Dichterliebe', Robert Schumann, ii, Musik-Konzepte (Munich, 1982), 3–128 [special issue]

U. Mahlert: Fortschritt und Kunstlied: Späte Lieder Robert Schumanns im Licht der liedästhetischen Diskussion ab 1848 (Munich and Salzburg, 1983)

R. Hallmark: 'Die handschriftlichen Quellen der Lieder Robert Schumanns', Robert Schumann: ein romantisches Erbe in neuer Forschung – acht Studien, ed. Robert-Schumann-Gesellschaft, Düsseldorf (Mainz, 1984), 99–118

L. Kramer: Music and Poetry: the Nineteenth Century and After (Berkeley and Los Angeles, 1984)

B. Turchin: 'Robert Schumann's Song Cycles: the Cycle within the Song', 19CM, viii (1984–5), 231–44

P. McCreless: 'Song Order in the Song Cycle: Schumann's Liederkreis, op.39', Music Analysis, v (1986), 5–28

R. Hallmark: 'Schumanns Behandlung seiner Liedtexte: Vorläufiger Bericht zu einer neuen Ausgabe und zu einer Neubewertung von Schumanns Liedern', Schumanns Werke: Text und Interpretation – 16 Studien, ed. A. Mayeda and K.W. Niemöller (Mainz, 1987), 29–42

W. Rosenberg: 'Paradox, Doppelbödigkeit und Ironie in der Dichterliebe', Dissonanz/Dissonance, no.15 (1988), 8–12

K. Ozawa: Quellenstudien zu Robert Schumanns Liedern nach Adelbert von Chamisso (Frankfurt, 1989)

C. Cacciopo: 'Poem to Music: Schumann's "Mondnacht" Setting', College Music Symposium, xxx (1990), 46–56

J.W. Finson: 'Schumann's Mature Style and the "Album of Songs for the Young"', JM, viii (1990), 227–50

R. Hallmark: 'The Rückert Lieder of Robert and Clara Schumann', 19CM, xiv (1990–91), 3–30

N. Marston: 'Schumann's Monument to Beethoven', 19CM, xiv (1990–91), 247–64

R. Hallmark: 'Textkritische und aufführungspraktische Probleme in Schumanns Liedern', Schumann und seine Dichter: Düsseldorf 1991, 110–21

O. Lossewa: 'Neues über Elisabeth Kulmann', Schumann und seine Dichter: Düsseldorf 1991, 77–86

D. Ferris: From Fragment to Cycle: Formal Organization in Schumann's Eichendorff 'Liederkreis' (diss., Brandeis U., 1993)

J.W. Finson: 'The Intentional Tourist: Romantic Irony in the Eichendorff Liederkreis of Robert Schumann', Schumann and his World, ed. R.L. Todd (Princeton, NJ, 1994), 156–70

R. Brinkman: Schumann und Eichendorff: Studien zum 'Liederkreis' Opus 39, Musik-Konzepte, no.95 (1997)

N: OTHER VOCAL MUSIC

E. Krüger: Review of Das Paradies und die Peri, op.50, AMZ, xlvii (1845), 561–70, 585–9, 606–11, 617–22

F. Brendel: 'R. Schumann's Oper: Genoveva', NZM, xxxiii (1850), 1–4, 17–18

E. Hanslick: 'Robert Schumann als Opernkomponist', Die moderne Oper, i: Kritiken und Studien (Berlin, 1875/R, 6/1911), 256–73

P. von Waldersee: 'Robert Schumann's Manfred', Sammlung musikalischer Vorträge, new ser., ii (Leipzig, 1880), no.13, pp.3–20

H. Abert: 'Robert Schumann's "Genoveva"', ZIMG, xi (1909–10), 277–81; repr. in Robert Schumann, ii, Musik-Konzepte (1982), 177–90 [special issue]

D. Mintz: 'Schumann as an Interpreter of Goethe's Faust', JAMS, xiv (1961), 235–56

H.C. Wolff: 'Schumanns Genoveva und der Manierismus des 19. Jahrhunderts', Beiträge zur Geschichte der Oper, ed. H. Becker (Regensburg, 1969), 89–94

R. Sietz: 'Zur Textgestaltung von Robert Schumanns "Genovefa"', Mf, xxiii (1970), 395–410

E. Sams: 'Schumann and Faust', MT, cxiii (1972), 543–6

G. Probst: Robert Schumanns Oratorien (Wiesbaden, 1975)

L. Siegel: 'A Second Look at Schumann's Genoveva', MR, xxxvi (1975), 17–41

W. Oliver: Robert Schumanns vergessene Oper 'Genoveva' (diss., Freiburg U., 1976)

W. Seyfarth: 'Die unvollendeten "Faust-Szenen": ein bedeutender Beitrag Robert Schumanns zu den Goethe-Gedächtnisfeiern im Jahre 1849', Schumann-Tage I: Karl-Marx-Stadt 1976, 42–51

M. Jarczyk: Die Chorballade im 19. Jahrhundert (Munich and Salzburg, 1978)

L. Zanoncelli: 'Von Byron zu Schumann oder die Metamorphose des "Manfred"', Robert Schumann, i, Musik-Konzepte (Munich, 1981), 116–47 [special issue]

G. Nauhaus: 'Quellenuntersuchungen zu Schumanns "Das Paradies und die Peri"', Robert-Schumann-Tage X: Zwickau 1995, 68–75

G. Rienäcker: 'Romantisches in Robert Schumanns "Genoveva"', ibid., 101–6

G. Nauhaus: 'Schumanns Das Paradies und die Peri: Quellen zur Entstehungs-, Aufführungs-und Rezeptionsgeschichte', Schumanns Werke: Text und Interpretation – 16 Studien, ed. A. Mayeda and K.W. Niemöller (Mainz, 1987), 133–48

W. Best: Die Romanzen Robert Schumanns (Frankfurt, 1988)

G. Nauhaus: 'Der Rose Pilgerfahrt, op.112: Schumanns Abschied vom Oratorium', Schumann in Düsseldorf: Düsseldorf 1988, 179–200

M. Demmler: '"Nicht zuviel Kreuze und Bee": die Tendenz zum Populären in Schumanns späten Vokalwerk', Musica, xliii (1989), 483–6

S. Hoy-Draheim: 'Robert Schumanns Opernpläne nach Dramen von William Shakespeare', Robert Schumann und die Dichter: ein Musiker als Leser, ed. B.R. Appel and I. Hermstrüwer (Düsseldorf, 1991), 100–05

J. Daverio: 'Schumann's "New Genre for the Concert Hall": Das Paradies und die Peri in the Eyes of a Contemporary', Schumann and his World, ed. R.L. Todd (Princeton, NJ, 1994), 129–55

S. Meyer: 'The Trope of the Double in Schumann's Genoveva', Opera Journal, xxvii (1994), 4–26

K. Leven-keesen: Robert Schumanns 'Szenen aus Goethes Faust' (woo3): Studien zu Frühfassungen anhand des Autographs Wiede 11/3 (Berlin, 1996)

J. Daverio: 'Sounds without the Gate: Schumann and the Dresden Revolution', Saggiatore Musicale, iv (1997), 87–112

J. Daverio: 'Schumann's Ossianic Manner', 19CM, xxi (1997–8), 247–73

O: ORCHESTRAL WORKS

D.F. Tovey: Essays in Musical Analysis, ii, Symphonies (London, 1935/R), 45–62 [opp.38, 97, 120]

D.F. Tovey: Essays in Musical Analysis, iii, Concertos (London, 1936/R), 182–9 [opp.54, 92, 129]

G. Abraham: 'The Three Scores of Schumann's D minor Symphony', MT, lxxxi (1940), 105–9

G. Abraham: 'On a Dull Overture [op.136] by Schumann', MMR, lxxvi (1946), 238–41

G. Abraham: 'Schumann's "Jugendsinfonie" in G minor', MQ, xxxvii (1951), 45–60

H. Husmann: 'Schumann als Gestalter: die Einheit und Form in seinen Symphonien', Musica, x (1956), 456–60

A.G. Zlotnik: 'Die beiden Fassungen von Schumanns D-moll Symphonie', ÖMz, xxi (1966), 271–6

M.R. Maniates: 'The D minor Symphony of Robert Schumann', Festschrift für Walter Wiora, ed. L. Finscher and C.-H. Mahling (Kassel, 1967), 441–7

A. Gebhardt: Robert Schumann als Symphoniker (Regensburg, 1968)

A.G. Zlotnik: Orchestration Revisions in the Symphonies of Robert Schumann (diss., Indiana U., 1972)

M. Frager: 'The Manuscript of the Schumann Piano Concerto', CMc, no.15 (1973), 83–7

S. Steinbeck: Die Ouvertüre in der Zeit von Beethoven bis Wagner: Probleme und Lösungen (Munich, 1973)

L. Finscher: '"Zwischen absoluter und Programmusik": zur Interpretation der deutschen romantischen Symphonie', Über Symphonien: Beiträge zu einer musikalischen Gattung: Walter Wiora zum 70. Geburstag, ed. C.-H. Mahling (Tutzing, 1979), 103–15

H. Gal: Schumann Orchestral Music (Seattle, 1979)

J.W. Finson: 'The Sketches for Robert Schumann's C minor Symphony', JM, i (1982), 395–418

P. Gülke: 'Zur "Rheinischen Sinfonie"', Robert Schumann, ii, Musik-Konzepte (Munich, 1982), 237–53 [special issue]

M. Just: Robert Schumann: Symphonie nr. 4 D-moll (Munich, 1982)

R. Kapp: 'Das Orchester Schumanns', Robert Schumann, ii, Musik-Konzepte (Munich, 1982), 191–236 [special issue]

R. Kapp: 'Robert Schumann: Sinfonie Nr. 4 d-moll op.120', NZM, Jg.143/6–7 (1982), 54–6

N.J. Schneider: Robert Schumann: 1. Symphonie B-dur op.38 (Munich, 1982)

J.W. Finson: 'Schumann, Popularity, and the Ouvertüre, Scherzo, und Finale, Opus 52', MQ, lxix (1983), 1–26

A. Newcomb: 'Once more between Absolute and Program Music: Schumann's Second Symphony', 19CM, vii (1983–4), 233–50

R. Hallmark: 'A Sketch Leaf for Schumann's D-minor Symphony', Mendelssohn and Schumann: Essays on their Work and its Context, ed. J.W. Finson and R.L. Todd (Durham, NC, 1984), 39–51

W. Boetticher: 'Das Entstehen von R. Schumanns Klavierkonzert: Textkritische Studien', Festschrift Martin Ruhnke zum 65. Geburtstag (Stuttgart, 1986), 45–55

W. Boetticher: 'Die Frühfassung des ersten Satzes von Robert Schumanns Klavierkonzert op.54 und das Problem seiner Durchführung', Festschrift Arno Forchert zum 60. Geburtstag, ed. G. Allroggen and D. Altenburg (Kassel, 1986), 216–21

J.W. Finson: 'The Sketches for the Fourth Movement of Schumann's Second Symphony, Op.61', JAMS, xxxix (1986), 143–68

A. Gerstmeier: Robert Schumann: Klavierkonzert A-moll, op.54 (Munich, 1986)

C. Macdonald: Robert Schumann's F-major Piano Concerto of 1831 as Reconstructed from his First Sketchbook: a History of its Composition and Study of its Musical Background (diss., U. of Chicago, 1986)

E. Lichtenhahn: 'Sinfonie als Dichtung: zum geschichtlichen Ort von Schumanns "Rheinischer"', Schumanns Werke: Text und Interpretation – 16 Studien, ed. A. Mayeda and K.W. Niemöller (Mainz, 1987), 17–27

M. Struck: '"Gewichtsverlagerungen": Robert Schumanns letzte Konzertcompositionen', ibid., 43–52

Probleme der Symphonischen Tradition im 19. Jahrhundert: Bonn 1989 [inc. A. Edler: 'Ton und Zyklus in der Symphonik Schumanns', 187–202; R. Dusella: 'Symphonisches in den Skizzenbüchern Schumanns', 203–24; M.L. Maintz '". . . in neuverschlungener Weise": Schuberts Einfluss auf die Symphonien Schumanns', 225–38; M. Struck: 'Am Rande der "grossen Form": Schumanns Overtüren und ihr Verhältnis zur Symphonie', 239–78; S. Oechsle: 'Schubert, Schumann und die Symphonie nach Beethoven', 279–94; L.C. Roesner: 'Tonal Strategy and Poetic Content in Schumann's C-major Symphony, op.61', 295–306; G. Nauhaus: 'Final-Lösungen in der Symphonik Schumanns', 307–20]

J.W. Finson: Robert Schumann and the Study of Orchestral Composition: the Genesis of the First Symphony, op.38 (Oxford, 1989)

R. Emans and M. Wendt, eds.: Beiträge zur Geschichte des Konzerts: Festschrift Siegfried Kross (Bonn, 1990)

M.L. Maintz: 'Konzept statt Konzert: Schumanns "Concertsatz" in d-moll', Beiträge zur Geschichte des Konzerts: Festschrift Siegfried Kross, ed. R. Emans and M. Wendt (Bonn, 1990), 185–99
K.W. Niemöller: 'Robert Schumanns Cellokonzert in der Instrumentation von Dmitri Schostakowitsch: ein Beitrag zur Schumann-Rezeption in der Sowjetunion', ibid., 411–21
S. Roe: 'The Autograph Manuscript of Schumann's Piano Concerto', MT, cxxxi (1990), 77–9
B.R. Appel: 'Die Überleitung vom 2. zum 3. Satz in Robert Schumanns Klavierkonzert opus 54', Mf, xliv (1991), 255–61
M.H. Kang: Robert Schumann's Piano Concerto in A minor: a Stemmatic Analysis of the Sources (diss., Ohio State U., 1992)
C. Macdonald: 'The Models for Schumann's F-major Piano Concerto of 1831', Studi musicali, xxi (1992), 159–89
F. Weingartner: 'On Schumann as Symphonist', Schumann and his World, ed. R.L. Todd (Princeton, NJ, 1994), 375–84 [Ger. orig. pubd in F. Weingartner: Die Symphonie nach Beethoven (Leipzig, 1897; Eng. trans., 1904), 27–34, and idem: Ratschläge für die Aufführungen klassischer Symphonien (Leipzig, 1906), 84–6]
C. Macdonald: '"Mit einer eignen ausserordentlichen Composition": the Genesis of Schumann's Phantasie in A Minor', JM, xiii (1995), 240–59
M. Musgrave: 'Symphony and Symphonic Scenes: Issues of Structure and Context in Schumann's "Rhenish" Symphony', Analytical Strategies and Musical Interpretation: Essays on Nineteenth- and Twentieth-Century Music, ed. C. Ayrey and M. Everist (Cambridge, 1996), 120–48
L.C. Roesner: 'Schumann', The Nineteenth-Century Symphony, ed. D.K. Holoman (New York, 1997), 43–77

P: CHAMBER MUSIC

J.A. Fuller Maitland: Schumann's Concerted Chamber Music (London, 1929)
G. Wilcke: Tonalität und Modulation im Streichquartett Mendelssohns und Schumanns (Leipzig, 1933)
D.F. Tovey: Essays in Musical Analysis: Chamber Music (London, 1944/R), 142–54 [op.21 no.8, op.44]
O. Neighbour: 'Schumanns dritte Violinesonate', NZM, Jg.117 (1956), 423–5
A. Molnár: 'Die beiden Klavier-Trios in d-Moll von Schumann (op.63) und Mendelssohn (op.49)', Sammelbände der Robert-Schumann-Gesellschaft, i (Leipzig, 1961), 79–85
L.E. Correll: 'Structural Revisions in the String Quartets opus 41 of Robert Schumann', CMc, no.7 (1968), 87–95
J. Westrup: 'The Sketch for Schumann's Piano Quintet op.44', Convivium musicorum: Festschrift Wolfgang Boetticher, ed. H. Hüschen and D.-R. Moser (Berlin, 1974), 367–71
W. Boetticher: 'Schumanns frühe Klavierquartett c-Moll (1828/29)', Mf, xxxi (1978), 465–7
H. Kohlhase: Die Kammermusik R. Schumanns: Stilistische Untersuchungen (Hamburg, 1979)
H. Kohlhase: 'Robert Schumanns Klavierquintett op.44', Robert Schumann, i, Musik-Konzepte (Munich, 1981), 148–73 [special issue]
M.H. Schmid: Musik als Abbild: Studien zum Werk von Weber, Schumann und Wagner (Tutzing, 1981)
D. Conrad: 'Zu Schumanns Klavierquintett', Robert Schumann, ii, Musik-Konzepte (Munich, 1982), 343–56 [special issue]
H. Kohlhase: 'Die klanglichen und strukturellen Revisionen im Autograph der Streichquartette op.41', Schumanns Werke: Text und Interpretation – 16 Studien, ed. A. Mayeda and K.W. Niemöller (Mainz, 1987), 53–77
B. Smallman: The Piano Trio: its History, Technique and Repertoire (Oxford, 1990)
S. Wollenberg: 'Schumann's Piano Quintet in E flat: the Bach Legacy', MR, lii (1991), 299–305
J.C. Nelson: 'Progressive Tonality in the Finale of the Piano Quintet, op.44 of Robert Schumann', Indiana Theory Review, xiii/1 (1992), 41–51
J. Lester: 'Reading and Misreading: Schumann's Accompaniments to Bach's Sonatas and Partitas for Solo Violin', CMc, no.56 (1994), 24–53
J. Daverio: '"Beautiful and Abstruse Conversations": the Chamber Music of Schumann', Nineteenth-Century Chamber Music, ed. S. Hefling (New York, 1998), 208–41

Q: LATE WORKS

H. Truscott: 'The Evolution of Schumann's Last Period', The Chesterian, xxxi (1956–7), 76–84, 103–11
E. Melkus: 'Zur Revision unseres Schumann-Bildes', ÖMz, xv (1960), 182–90
G. Eismann: 'Zu Robert Schumanns letzten Kompositionen', BMw, x (1968), 151–7
N. Nagler: 'Gedanken zur Rehabilitierung des späten Werks', Robert Schumann, i, Musik-Konzepte (Munich, 1981), 303–46 [special issue]
M. Struck: 'Gerüchte um den "späten" Schumann', NZM, Jg.143/5 (1982), 52–6
D. Schnebel: 'Postscriptum zu Schumanns Spätwerken', Robert Schumann, ii, Musik-Konzepte (Munich, 1982), 367 [special issue]
R. Kapp: Studien zum Spätwerk Robert Schumanns (Tutzing, 1984)
M. Struck: Die umstrittenen späten Instrumentalwerke Schumanns (Hamburg, 1984)
R. Kapp: 'Schumann nach der Revolution: Vorüberlegungen, Statements, Hinweise, Materialien, Fragen', Schumann in Düsseldorf: Düsseldorf 1988, 315–415
M. Struck: 'Zur Relation von Quellenbefunden und analytischen Erkenntnisgewinn im Spätwerk Robert Schumanns', Mf, xliv (1991), 236–54

R: RECEPTION

F. Brendel: 'Robert Schumann mit Rücksicht auf Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, und die Entwicklung der modernen Tonkunst überhaupt', NZM, xxii (1845), 63–7, 81–3, 98–102, 113–15, 121–3, 145–7, 149–50
A. Schubring: 'Die gegenwärtige Musikepoche und Robert Schumann's Stellung in der Musikgeschichte', NZM, liv (1861), 197–8, 205–6, 213–4; Eng. trans. in Schumann and his World, ed. R.L. Todd (Princeton, NJ, 1994), 362–74
O. Alain: 'Schumann und die französische Musik', Sammelbände der Robert-Schumann-Gesellschaft, i (Leipzig, 1961), 47–63
M. Schoppe: 'Die Anfänge der Schumann-Rezeption', Schumann-Tage I: Karl-Marx-Stadt 1976, 6–16
F. Lesure, ed.: C. Debussy: Monsieur Croche et autres écrits (Paris, 1971; Eng. trans., 1977, as Debussy on Music)
L. Crompton, ed.: The Great Composers: Reviews and Bombardments by Bernard Shaw (Berkeley, 1978)
P. Rumenhöller: 'Botschaft von Meister Raro: zum Verständnis von Robert Schumann heute', NZM, Jg.142 (1981), 226–30
J. Thym: 'Schumann in Brendel's Neue Zeitschrift für Musik from 1845 to 1856', Mendelssohn and Schumann: Essays on their Work and its Context, ed. J.W. Finson and R.L. Todd (Durham, NC, 1984), 21–36
M.K. Cerny: 'Schumann und die tschechischen Komponisten um die Mitte des 19. Jahrhunderts', Robert-Schumann-Tage [X]: Zwickau 1985, 46–50
J.D. Degen: 'Schumanns Einfluss auf die skandinavischen Schüler und Schülernachfolger', ibid., 29–35
A. Forchert: 'Mahler und Schumann', Mahler-Interpretation: Aspekte zum Werk und Wirken von Gustav Mahler, ed. R. Stephan (Mainz, 1985), 45–61
R. Kapp: Schumann-Reminiszenen bei Mahler, Gustav Mahler, Musik-Konzepte (1989), 325–61 [special issue]
P. Ramroth: Robert Schumann und Richard Wagner im geschichtsphilosophischen Urteil von Franz Brendel (Frankfurt, 1991)

S: OTHER SPECIAL STUDIES

F. Schnapp: Heinrich Heine und Robert Schumann (Hamburg, 1924)
P. Frenzel: Robert Schumann und Goethe (Leipzig, 1926)
H.C. Wolff: 'Robert Schumann: der Klassizist', Musica, ii (1948), 47–54
G. von Dadelsen: 'Robert Schumann und die Musik Bachs', AMw, xiv (1957), 46–59
U. Martin: 'Ein unbekanntes Schumann-Autograph aus dem Nachlass Eduard Krügers', Mf, xii (1959), 405–15 [on the copy Schumann made, 1837, of Die Kunst der Fuge]
R. Fritsch: Schumanns Vater als Verleger (Frankfurt, 1960)
D. Kämper: 'Zur Frage der Metronombezeichnungen Robert Schumanns', AMw, xxi (1964), 141–55
E. Sams: 'Did Schumann use Ciphers?', MT, cvi (1965), 584–91
E. Sams: 'The Tonal Analogue in Schumann's Music', PRMA, xcvi (1969–70), 103–17; repr. in Robert Schumann: the Man and his Music, ed. A. Walker (London, 1972, 2/1976), 390–405
E. Sams: 'A Schumann Primer?', MT, cxi (1970), 1096–7
S. Keil: Untersuchungen zur Fugentechnik in Robert Schumanns Instrumentalschaffen (Hamburg, 1973)
L.C. Roesner: Studies in Schumann Manuscripts (diss., New York U., 1973)

K. Marsoner: 'Das Sonatenkonzept Robert Schumanns in Theorie und Praxis', Gustav Mahler: Sinfonie und Wirklichkeit, ed. O. Kolleritsch (Graz, 1977), 172–81
W. Boetticher: 'Zum Problem eines "Urtextes" bei Robert Schumann und Anton Bruckner', GfMKB: Bayreuth 1981, 404–7
W. Burde: 'Robert Schumann: ein moderner Komponist', NZM, Jg.142 (1981), 221
J. Draheim: 'Schumann und Shakespeare', NZM, Jg.142 (1981), 237–47
J.W. Finson: 'Schumann and Shakespeare', Mendelssohn and Schumann: Essays on their Work and its Context, ed. J.W. Finson and R.L. Todd (Durham, NC, 1984), 125–36
A. Mayeda: 'Schumanns Gegenwart', 'Die Skizzen Robert Schumanns als stilkritische Erkenntnisquelle', Robert Schumann: ein romantisches Erbe in neuer Forschung – acht Studien, ed. Robert-Schumann-Gesellschaft, Düsseldorf (Mainz, 1984), 9–21, 119–39
K. Bula: 'Zu den Beziehungen Chopins zu Schumann', Robert-Schumann-Tage [X]: Zwickau 1985, 23–8
J. Mainka: 'Schumann und der Realismus', Wegzeichen: Studien zur Musikwissenschaft, ed. J. Mainka and P. Wicke (Berlin, 1985), 74–90
B. Meissner: Geschichtsrezeption als Schaffenskorrelat: Studien zum Musikgeschichtsbild Robert Schumanns (Berne, 1985)
W. Siegmund-Schultze: 'Zu den Beziehungen Robert Schumanns und Johannes Brahms', Robert-Schumann-Tage [X]: Zwickau 1985, 19–22
N. Petrat: Hausmusik des Biedermeier im Blickpunkt der zeitgenössischen musikalischen Fachpresse (1815–1848) (Hamburg, 1986)
R. Kapp: 'Tempo und Charakter in der Musik Schumanns', Schumanns Werke: Text und Interpretation – 16 Studien, ed. A. Mayeda and K.W. Niemöller (Mainz, 1987), 193–222
K.W. Niemöller: 'Zur analytischen Interpretation der Musik Robert Schumanns', ibid., 149–53
M. Wendt: 'Zu Robert Schumanns Skizzenbüchern', ibid., 101–19
C. Macdonald: 'Schumann's Earliest Compositions and Performances', JMR, vii (1987–8), 259–83
A. Newcomb: 'Schumann and Late Eighteenth-Century Narrative Strategies', 19CM, xi (1987–8), 164–74
C.-H. Mahling: 'Nähe und Distanz: Bemerkungen zum Verhältnis von Robert Schumann zu Frédéric Chopin und Franz Liszt', Gattungen der Musik und ihre Klassiker, ed. H. Danuser (Laaber, 1988), 517–25
N. Temperley: 'Schumann and Sterndale Bennett', 19CM, xii (1988–9), 207–20
H.J. Dill: 'Romantic Irony in the Works of Robert Schumann', MQ, lxxiii (1989), 172–95
L.C. Roesner: 'Brahms's Editions of Schumann', Brahms Studies: Analytical and Historical Perspectives, ed. G. Bozarth (Oxford, 1990), 251–82
M. Waldura: Monomotivik, Sequenz und Sonatenform im Werk Robert Schumanns (Saarbrücken, 1990)
J. Draheim: 'Robert Schumann als Übersetzer', Robert Schumann und die Dichter: ein Musiker als Leser, ed. B.R. Appel and I. Hermstrüwer (Düsseldorf, 1991), 40–48
J.A. Kruse: 'Robert Schumanns Lektüre: Zeitgenössischer Kanon, individuelle Schwerpunkte, kompositionsspezifische Auswahl und seine Urteile als Leser', ibid., 123–34
J. Draheim: 'Schumann Erstdrucke: Versuch einer bibliographischen Ergänzung', Mf, xlvi (1993), 53–60
B. Bischoff: Monument für Beethoven: die Entwicklung der Beethoven-Rezeption Robert Schumanns (Cologne, 1994)
L. Botstein: 'History, Rhetoric, and the Self: Robert Schumann and Music Making in German-Speaking Europe, 1800–1860', Schumann and his World, ed. R.L. Todd (Princeton, NJ, 1994), 3–46
D. Brodbeck: 'The Joachim-Brahms Counterpoint Exchange; or Robert, Clara, and "the best harmony between Jos. and Joh."', Brahms Studies, i, ed. D. Brodbeck (Lincoln, NE, and London, 1994), 30–80
R.L. Todd: 'On Quotation in Schumann's Music', Schumann and his World (Princeton, NJ, 1994), 80–112
J. Lester: 'Robert Schumann and Sonata Forms', 19CM, xviii (1994–5), 189–210
J. Bellman: 'Aus alten Märchen: the Chivalric Style of Schumann and Brahms', JM, xiii (1995), 117–35
M.L. Maintz: Franz Schubert in der Rezeption Robert Schumanns: Studien zur Ästhetik und Instrumentalmusik (Kassel, 1995)
C.H. Porter: 'The Schumann Legacy in Germany's Heartland', American Organist, xxix/2 (1995), 56–62
B. Bischoff: 'Das Bach-Bild Robert Schumanns', Bach und die Nachwelt, i: 1750–1850, ed. M. Heinemann and H.J. Hinrichsen (Laaber, 1997), 421–99
H. Krebs: Fantasy Pieces: Metrical Dissonance in the Music of Robert Schumann (New York, 1999)
For further bibliography to 1979 see Grove6

JOHN DAVERIO (work-list with ERIC SAMS)

Schumann-Heink [née Rössler; Heink], Ernestine [Tini] (b Lieben, nr Prague, 15 June 1861; d Hollywood, CA, 17 Nov 1936). Austrian contralto and mezzo-soprano, naturalized American. Among her teachers was G.B. Lamperti (the younger). She made her opera début at Dresden as Azucena in 1878, and remained there for four seasons. After marriage to Ernst Heink, she obtained an engagement at Hamburg under Pollini, and remained there until 1897, taking part in the company's London season under the young Mahler in 1892, when she was much applauded as Erda, Fricka, Waltraute and Brangäne. In 1893, having divorced her first husband, she married the actor Paul Schumann, assuming the familiar hyphenated form of her surname. A long and fruitful relationship with Bayreuth began in 1896, when she sang Erda in five cycles of the Ring, and lasted until 1914.

Between 1897 and 1901 Schumann-Heink took part in four consecutive Covent Garden seasons, and became a regular member of the Metropolitan company for a similar period (1898–1903), returning subsequently for single seasons only. By then she had begun the series of popular and profitable cross-country American concert tours that occupied much of the rest of her long career and made her into a national legend. In 1909 she returned to Dresden to sing the part of Clytemnestra in the première of Elektra (see illustration). Although she could sing (and very well) virtually anything, her English and American stage career centred on Wagner; and it was as Erda that she bade farewell to the Metropolitan in 1932, still captivating the audience, as the American critic Olin Downes wrote, with 'knowledge and imagination embodied in the tone and in every syllable of the text she delivered so memorably'. These words well describe the effect vividly conveyed by her Erda and Waltraute recordings made less than three years before. Although largely unrepresentative of her serious repertory, her many other recordings, made over a period of 25 years, give a splendid impression of her powers: of her opulent and flexible tones from low D to high B, the amazing fullness and evenness of her shake, her artistic conviction, dramatic temperament and vivid enunciation. Among them should be mentioned the brindisi from Lucrezia Borgia (several versions, all good), the prison scene from Le prophète, 'Parto, parto' from La clemenza di Tito, and the duet with Caruso ('Ai nostri monti') from Il trovatore.

Ernestine Schumann-Heink as Clytemnestra (left) with Anny Krull in the title role of Richard Strauss's 'Elektra', Dresden, 1909

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Lawton: Schumann-Heink: the Last of the Titans (New York, 1928; repr. 1977 with discography by W.R. Moran)
J. McPherson: 'Ernestine Schumann-Heink', Record Collector, xvii (1966–8), 99–144 [with discography by W.R. Moran], 154–9; xx (1971–2), 165; xxv (1979–80), 75–7
J.B. Steane: Singers of the Century (London, 1996), 206–10

DESMOND SHAWE-TAYLOR

Schuncke [Schunke], (Christian) Ludwig [Louis] (b Kassel, 21 Dec 1810; d Leipzig, 7 Dec 1834). German pianist and composer. Born into a family of professional musicians – his father Johann Gottfried (1777–1861) and uncle Johann Michael (1778–1821) were distinguished horn players – Ludwig's precocious talents were given every opportunity to develop and he was soon recognized as a pianist of outstanding ability. As early as March 1822 he performed Hummel's A minor Piano Concerto op.85 under the direction of Spohr. This was followed by a concert tour throughout Germany. Before his 16th birthday his earliest compositions received the approval of Weber. In 1827 he left home to earn his living and study composition in Paris. There he lived with the piano maker Duport, whose instruments he demonstrated to support himself while studying composition with Reicha. He remained in Paris until 1830 gaining recognition from the leading musicians there, among them Berlioz, Kalkbrenner, Thalberg and Pixis. With such contacts it is not surprising that when he returned to Germany he formed a friendship with Chopin after hearing him play his E minor concerto in Stuttgart. In memory of this meeting Schuncke dedicated his Capriccio in C minor op.10 to Chopin. An even closer and professionally more important friendship developed with Schumann, who embraced his almost exact contemporary as one of the Davidsbündler and a contributor to the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik; Schumann also accepted the dedication of Schuncke's Sonata in G minor op.3 and in return dedicated to Schuncke his Toccata op.7. Although Schuncke is probably best known today as the dedicatee of this famous work, this does not do justice to his talent as a composer, which was just beginning to develop when he died of consumption two weeks before his 24th birthday. The G minor Sonata op.3, much admired by Schumann, is a four movement work worthy of comparison with the larger scale keyboard works of Weber; of his other known compositions, almost all for solo piano, the Allegro passionato in A minor op.6 and the 2 Capriccios opp.9 and 10 show a distinctive style developing despite clear influences of Weber and Beethoven, whose Sonata op.27 no.2 seems all pervasive in the Capriccio op.10. Schuncke's small corpus of work is well worth the researches of a pianist looking to explore little-known Romantic music.

WORKS

Variations brillantes sur la valse funèbre de F. Schubert, pf, orch, op.14 (Leipzig)
2 pièces caractéristiques, pf 4 hands, op.13 (Leipzig)
Solo pf: Scherzo capricciosos, op.1 (Paris); Variations quasi fantasie brillantes sur une thème originale, op.2 (Paris); Sonata, g, op.3 (Leipzig, 1832); Fantasie brillante, E, op.5 (Vienna); Allegro passionato, a, op.6; Capriccio, C, op.9 (Leipzig); Capriccio, c, op.10; Rondeau brillant, E♭, op.11 (Leipzig); Divertissement brillant sur des aires allemandes, op.12 (Leipzig); Rondeau, D, op.15 (Leipzig)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R.K. Cooper: Ludwig Schuncke (1810–1834) and his Piano Music (DMA diss., U. of North Carolina, 1995)

VIRGIL POMFRET

Schünemann, Georg (b Berlin, 13 March 1884; d Berlin, 2 Jan 1945). German musicologist and music educationist. In addition to practical musical training at the Stern Conservatory in Berlin, Schünemann also studied musicology (under Kretzschmar, Fleischer, Friedländer, Stumpf and Wolf), German literature and philosophy at the University of Berlin. He took the doctorate in 1907 with a dissertation on the history of conducting and then worked as a flautist. During World War I he made a collection of the songs of German colonists in Russian POW camps. From 1919 he taught at Berlin University (where he was appointed reader in 1921); in 1920 he became deputy director of the Berlin Hochschule für Musik and in 1932 he succeeded Schreker as its director. In 1933 he was dismissed without notice by the Nazi régime for suspected Marxist leanings, though shortly afterwards he was appointed director of the State Musical Instrument Collections. In 1934 he became director of the music section of the Prussian State Library, and during World War II he was called upon as a consultant in the German seizure of music collections in France.

Schünemann was one of the founders of modern German music education. He devoted himself to questions of elementary teaching, started a practical class at the music education department of the Berlin Hochschule für Musik as well as advanced classes for choir conductors and he instigated an orchestral school; in the 1930s he and Leo Kestenberg were involved in reorganizing every aspect of institutional and private music education in Prussia. Many of his writings are concerned with music teaching and related problems, but he also contributed to scholarship on J.C.F. Bach, Beethoven and the music history of Prussia.

WRITINGS

Geschichte des Dirigierens (diss., U. of Berlin, 1907; Leipzig, 1913/R)
'Neue "Attestate" Seb. Bachs', Festschrift … Rochus Freiherrn von Liliencron (Leipzig, 1910/R), 290–96
'Beiträge zur Biographie Hammerschmidts', SIMG, xii (1910–11), 207–12
'Johann Christoph Friedrich Bach', BJb 1914, 45–165
'Kasantatarische Lieder', AMw, i (1918), 499–515
'Mendelssohns Jugendopern', ZMw, v (1922–3), 506–45

Das Lied der deutschen Kolonisten in Russland (Munich, 1923)
Die Musica des Listhenius (Berlin, 1927)
Geschichte der deutschen Schulmusik (Leipzig, 1928, 2/1931/R)
Die Musikerziehung, i: Die Musik in Kindheit und Jugend (Leipzig, 1930)
Carl Friedrich Zelter, der Begründer der preussischen Musikpflege (Berlin, 1932)
'J. Gottfried Walther und H. Bokemeyer', BJb 1933, 86–118
Führer durch die deutsche Chorliteratur (Wolfenbüttel, 1935–6)
ed.: Musikerhandschriften von Bach bis Schumann (Berlin,1936, enlarged 2/1960–61 by W. Gerstenberg and M. Hürlimann; Eng. trans., 1968 as Composers' Autographs)
'Die Musikinstrumente der 24 Alten', AMf, i (1936), 42–58
'Musikinstrumente der Indianer', AMf, i (1936), 368–82, 467–83
Carl Friedrich Zelter, der Mensch und sein Werk (Berlin, 1937)
'Beethovens Studien zur Instrumentation', NBeJb 1938, 146–61
'Eine neue Tristan-Handschrift', AMf, iii (1938), 129–37
'Czernys Erinnerungen an Beethoven', NBeJb 1939, 47–74
Geschichte der Klaviermusik (Berlin, 1940, rev. 2/1953 by H. Gerigk, 3/1956)
Die Violine (Berlin, 1940)
Die Singakademie zu Berlin 1791–1941 (Regensburg, 1941)
ed.: Ludwig van Beethovens Konversationshefte (Berlin, 1941–3, rev. 2/1972–83 by K.-H. Köhler and others)
'Carl Maria von Weber in Berlin', Von deutscher Tonkunst: Festschrift zu Peter Raabes 70. Geburtstag, ed. A. Morgenroth (Leipzig, 1942), 78–94

EDITIONS

J.C.F. Bach: Die Kindheit Jesu, Die Auferweckung Lazarus, DDT, lvi (1917/R)
Trompetenfanfaren, Sonaten und Feldstücke des 16.–17. Jahrhunderts, EDM, 1st ser., vii (1936)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Preussner: 'Georg Schünemann', Mf, i (1948), 91–5
S. Ziegler: 'Frühe Aufnahmen traditioneller Musik aus dem Kaukasus im ehemaligen Berliner Phonogrammarchiv', 'Lux oriente' … : Festschrift Robert Günther, ed. K.W. Niemöller and others (Kassel, 1995), 429–40

LOTHAR HOFFMANN-ERBRECHT/PAMELA M. POTTER

Schuppanzigh, Ignaz (b Vienna, 20 Nov 1776; d Vienna, 2 March 1830). Austrian violinist and conductor. The son of a professor at the Realschule, he began his career as a viola player but had switched to the violin by 1793. His acquaintance with Beethoven probably dates from his informal quartet concerts on Friday mornings in Prince Lichnowsky's apartments, a tradition that continued for several years. In 1794 Beethoven wrote a note to himself 'Schuppanzigh, 3 times a W'. Although it has been assumed that Beethoven was studying the violin, Thayer observed that the note could refer to lessons at the Realschule with the elder Schuppanzigh.

According to Hanslick, in 1804–5 Schuppanzigh presented the first series of public quartet concerts in Vienna. The experiment was abandoned after at most three seasons, but this group was probably responsible for the premières of Beethoven's op.59 quartets in early 1807. The expanded roles for viola and cello and the overtly virtuoso passages – elements that made op.59 'long and difficult' according to a review in the Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung – assumed a group of skilled and dedicated performers, which Beethoven clearly had at his disposal (Table 1). A common saying in Vienna, as Ignaz von Seyfried later noted, was that only Schuppanzigh's group could reveal the beauties of Beethoven's music.

In 1807 Schuppanzigh married Fräulein Killitschky, the sister of the singer Josephine Schultz-Killitschky. A year later Count Razumovsky instructed him to assemble 'the finest string quartet in Europe'. This group remained in existence until a fire destroyed the count's palace and fortunes in 1814. However, despite its privileged status it is unlikely that it ever performed in public. After the fire, Schuppanzigh continued to participate in public concerts, but decided in 1816 to move to Russia. Having settled in St Petersburg he actively promoted Beethoven's music, generating an enthusiasm that possibly led to the commission of the Golitsïn quartets, opp.127, 132 and 130. Schuppanzigh returned to Vienna in 1823 (suggestions that he returned on visits before that time are unsubstantiated) and resumed his position as leader of his quartet, replacing Joseph Boehm. The ensemble began a series of subscription concerts that continued until Schuppanzigh's death in 1830. Beethoven agreed in 1825 to allow Schuppanzigh the privilege of giving the first performance of op.127 at one such concert. The failure of this work at its première seems largely to have been a result of lack of preparation and rehearsal time. Furious, Beethoven reinstated Boehm and supervised the rehearsals himself:

TABLE 1: Members of Schuppanzigh's quartet

| Violin II | Viola | Cello | Sources, comments |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1793/4–? (Lichnowsky) | | | |
| — | Franz Weiss | Kraft | Wegeler (p.29) writes '(Link?)' and includes Zmeskall |
| — | Weiss | A. and N. Kraft | Schindler (3/1860), 35; Schindler (1840), 39, conflates 1793 group with 1808 |
| Louis Sina | Weiss | A. and N. Kraft | Thayer, i, 278 |
| Sina | Weiss | N. Kraft | Mahaim, i, 40 |
| Joseph Mayseder | Schreiber (first name unknown) | A. Kraft | Hanslick, i, 203; Thayer, ii, 273; Mayseder was Schuppenzigh's pupil |
| 1808–14 (Rasumovsky) | | | |
| — | Weiss | Josephe Linke | Seyfried, appx, 8 |
| Sina | Weiss | Linke | Schindler (1840), 39; Hanslick, 1, 203; Sina probably played only when Count Rasumovsky did not |
| Mayseder | Weiss | Linke | Thayer, iii, 48; Mayseder probably played only when Count Rasumovsky did not |
| Rasumovsky | Weiss | Linke | Mahaim, 1, 41 |
| 1823–8 (last quartets) | | | |
| Karl Holz | Kaufmann (first name unknown) | Linke | Schindler (1840), 40; precise members of 1823 unclear |
| Holz | Weiss | Linke | Schindler (3/1860), ii, 113; Thayer, iv, 424; Mahaim, i, 42 |

according to Boehm, the composer closely 'followed the bows and was therefore able to judge the smallest fluctuation in tempo or rhythm and correct it immediately'. Schuppanzigh soon returned to favour, however, and was entrusted with the premières of opp.132, 130 and 135, the latter first performed only after Beethoven's death. Schuppanzigh's quartet did not give the first performance of op.131.

In addition to the late quartets, Schuppanzigh took part in the premières of opp.16, 20, 59, 95 and 97, and he led and helped to organize the concert on 7 May 1824 at which the Ninth Symphony and parts of the Missa solemnis were first performed. Despite the composer's teasing about Schuppanzigh's weight (Beethoven's nickname for him was 'Falstaff' – see, for example, WoO 184 and 100), he clearly respected Schuppanzigh's musical judgment. According to Czerny, it was Schuppanzigh's suggestion to place the F major quartet first in op.18, and a note in an 1826 conversation book indicates that Schuppanzigh was responsible for one of the themes in op.29. Along with many other prominent Viennese musicians, Schuppanzigh was one of the torch-bearers at Beethoven's funeral.

Besides playing quartets Schuppanzigh led the Augarten concerts beginning in 1795, and after returning to Vienna in 1823 he joined the court orchestra and became the leader of the court opera. His repertory included Schubert's Octet and Quartet in A minor, of which he is the dedicatee. Beethoven called Schuppanzigh's playing 'fiery and expressive', but contemporaries claimed that, perhaps because of his obesity, he often played out of tune and had trouble in the upper positions. Schuppanzigh was almost solely responsible for redefining the string quartet as a standing ensemble. Although his name is now largely remembered in relation to Beethoven, he is to be recognized as the first musician to make his living and reputation primarily as a string quartet player.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. von Seyfried: Ludwig van Beethoven's Studien im Generalbasse, Contrapuncte und in der Compositions-Lehre (Vienna, 1832)
F.G. Wegeler and F. Ries: Biographische Notizen über Ludwig van Beethoven (Coblenz, 1838)
A.F. Schindler: Biographie von Ludwig van Beethoven (Münster, 1840, enlarged 2/1845, 3/1860)
A.W. Thayer: Ludwig van Beethoven's Leben, i–iii, ed. H. Deiters (Berlin, 1866–79); iv–v, ed. H. Riemann (Leipzig, 1907–8)
E. Hanslick: Geschichte des Concertwesens in Wien (Vienna, 1869)
T. von Frimmel: Beethoven-Handbuch, ii (Leipzig, 1926/R), 161–4
E. Forbes, ed.: Thayer's Life of Beethoven (Princeton, NJ, 1964, 2/1967)
I. Mahaim: Beethoven (Paris, 1964), 39–71
D.W. MacArdle: 'Beethoven and Schuppanzigh', MR, xxvi (1965), 3–14
R. Winter: 'Performing Beethoven's Quartets in their First Century', The Beethoven Quartet Companion, ed. R. Winter and R. Martin (Berkeley, 1994), 29–57

K.M. KNITTEL

Schürer, Johann Georg (b ?Raudnitz [now Roudnice], Bohemia, *c*1720; d Dresden, 16 Feb 1786). German composer. He was working in about 1746 as resident composer and music director of an opera troupe that appeared in Dresden with the Mingotti company at the Zwinger; the Dresden repertory had been dominated by Hasse since 1734. On 29 October 1746 they performed Schürer's opera Astrea placata (which had been given in Warsaw on 7 October in honour of the king's birthday); it was repeated several times. On 8 November of the same year his Galatea was given at Dresden, and repeated with new settings in the presence of the court a week later and again on 28 June 1747, the day before Gluck's festival opera Le nozze d'Ercole e d'Ebe was given at Pillnitz. During the 1747 court festivities Schürer's opera L'Ercole sul Termodonte and his German Singspiel Doris were performed. His last opera was Calandro, a comedy, performed on 20 January 1748 in the little Zwinger theatre; thereafter he confined himself to composing sacred music, beginning with the oratorios Il figliuol prodigo and Isacco. In 1748 he was appointed Kirchencompositeur in royal service.

Schürer was thus one of a notable succession of musicians, headed by Hasse, who worked at the Dresden court of King August III of Poland. Zelenka had died in 1745 and Schürer succeeded him as director of church music, first in the Catholic court chapel at Taschenberg and from 1751 in the newly built Catholic court church, with G.A. Ristori, Tobias Butz and Father M. Breunich assisting him with the church music, and Porpora employed as Kapellmeister and composer. His principal occupation was composing, which he did with enormous industry, especially in 1757 and 1758. In the former year he wrote a requiem on the death of the Electress Maria Josepha. During the 1763 Carnival his cantata Donna Augusta perdona was performed and in the autumn of the same year he wrote the funeral motet for the king, Manus tuae fecerunt me. In autumn 1764 the young J.G. Naumann was appointed second church composer, but he soon left for Italy so that all the work was once again Schürer's responsibility (although between 1765 and 1772 Domenico Fischietti was also contributing church music). In 1767 Schürer sold the manuscript parts of his church compositions (978 sheets) to the Saxon court and in 1772, when Friedrich August was elector, he sold them the scores as well (522, dated 1742 to 1770) for 900 thalers. Schürer himself had compiled an index of these works, giving the opening bars and date of composition of each (Cursus annuus, MS, 1765, D-Bsb). He retired in 1780 and sold a further 68 scores of sacred works written between 1767 and 1772 for 200 thalers in 1782, again with a detailed catalogue. The output of this prolific and indefatigable composer seems to have ceased in his last years in office, which were overshadowed by worry and illness; his pupils Joseph Schuster and Franz Seydelmann were working with him as church composers from 1772.

Although Schürer, according to Reichardt, was a 'very skilful composer', master of his craft and of counterpoint, his music met with only limited appreciation in Dresden because he did not bow to the prevalent neo-Neapolitan taste. Gerber called him one of the most proficient church composers of the 18th century and noted that 'his masses were famed among worthy men outside Dresden'. In fact his six masses dedicated to S Antonio of Padua and his Litaniae Xaverianae are distinguished by their structure and their serious, expressive musical cast. His operas and oratorios also exemplify the changing style of his time, combining use of the traditional figured bass with delicate Rococo sentiment. Stylistically his music places him between the mature Telemann and the 12-year-old Mozart; but his melodic ideas are limited and eventually become tedious. The pastorale Galatea and the German Singspiel Doris have galant, Rococo features also found in Mozart's Bastien und Bastienne.

WORKS
all in D-Dl unless otherwise stated

OPERAS

Astrea placata ovvero La felicità della terra (dramma per musica, 1, B. Campagnari), Warsaw, 7 Oct 1746, lib D-Bsb
La Galatea (componimento drammatico, 2, P. Metastasio), Dresden, 8 Nov 1746; also 4 arias in Ger.
L'Ercole sul Termodonte (dramma per musica, 3, C.F. Bussani), Dresden, 9 Jan 1747
Doris (Spl, 2), Dresden, 13 Feb 1747
Calandro (comedia per musica, 3, S. Pallavicino), Dresden, 20 Jan 1748

ORATORIOS

Il figliuol Prodigo (azione sacra, G.C. Pasquini), solo vv, chorus, orch, Dresden, 1747, lib D-Bsb
Isacco figura del Redentore (Metastasio), solo vv, chorus, orch, Dresden, 1748, lib Bsb
La Passione di Jesu Christo, solo vv, chorus, orch

CANTATAS

Cantata per la nascita di S.A.R. il Principe Carlo, A, insts, 13 July 1753
Cantata per solennizzare il giorno del nome di S.A.R. ... Principe Xaverio, A, insts, Dresden, 1755
Disgrazia accaduta al Nicolino à Sedlitz, A, insts, Dresden and Friedrichstadt, 1759
Donna Augusta perdona, A, 2 hn, 2 fl, 2 vn, va, bc, Dresden, 1763, D-Bsb, Dl
Cantata ... per la nascita di S.P. Carlo, S, A
Nel felicissimo giorno del glorioso ... di Augusto III [characters Nice, Dorisbe, Filli]
Oggi si che più risplende, A, insts

MASSES, MASS MOVEMENTS

6 Missae ad Sanctum Antonium de Padua, 4vv, 2 ob, 2 vn, va, bc, org, 1758–64
Credo, vv, insts; Gl, 4vv, 2 vn, 2 ob, 2 hn, 2 tpt, timp, org; Gl, 4vv, insts: all D-Bsb

OTHER WORKS

Regina coeli, 4vv, insts, org, A-Wn
?2 Litaniae Xaverianae, 4vv, insts
Partitura et Directio sacrae noctis in nativitate Domini, Dresden, 1756
2 arias, S, insts: La sventurata adora, Friedrichstadt, 24 Aug 1759; Delude fallace, Friedrichstadt, 19 Aug 1759

LOST WORKS
presumed lost

for complete list see Haas

Several ops, cants., etc; *c*30 masses; *c*13 motets; 56 offs; 3 requiems; 3 TeD; 15 Litaniae Lauretanae; 17 Sub tuum; 12 Alma Redemptoris; 12 Ave regina; 12 Regina coeli; 29 Salve regina; 6 Miserere; 152 pss; 6 Laudate pueri; 6 Mag; other sacred works

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ADB (R. Eitner); DlabacžKL; EitnerQ; FürstenauG1; GerberL; GerberNL; MGG1 (D. Härtwig); SchillingE
J.F. Reichardt: Briefe eines aufmerksamen Reisenden die Musik betreffend, ii (Frankfurt and Breslau, 1776/R), 176
M. Fürstenau: Beiträge zur Geschichte der königlich sächsischen musikalischen Kapelle (Dresden, 1849)
C. Niessen: Die Kirchenmusik in der katholischen Hofkirche Dresden (Vienna, 1865)
R. Vollhardt: Geschichte der Cantoren und Organisten von den Städten im Königreich Sachsen (Berlin, 1899, rev. 2/1978 by E. Stimme)
R. Haas: J.G. Schürer (1720–1786): ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der Musik in Dresden (Dresden, 1915)
K. Pembaur: Drei Jahrhunderte Kirchenmusik am sächsischen Hofe (Dresden, 1920)
O. Schmid: 'Die Kirchenmusik in der Katholischen (Hof-) Kirche zu Dresden. Ihre Geschichte und ihre Kunst- und Kulturgeschichtliche Bedeutung', Verein für Geschichte Dresdens, i (Dresden, 1921), 1–33
L. Schiedermair: Die deutsche Oper: Grundzüge ihres Werdens und Wesens (Leipzig, 1930/R, 3/1943)
G. Pietzsch: Sachsen als Musikland (Dresden, 1938)
H. Schnoor: Dresden: vierhundert Jahre deutsche Musikkultur, ed. E. Bunkowsky (Dresden, 1948)
E. Steindorf: 'Wie Glanz von allem Gold': 450 Jahre Sächsische Staatskapelle Dresden (Kassel, 1998)

DIETER HÄRTWIG

Schuricht, Carl (b Danzig, 3 July 1880; d Corseaux-sur-Vevey, 7 Jan 1967). German conductor and composer. Born into a family of organ builders, he learnt the piano and the violin at home before studying composition with Humperdinck and the piano with E. Rudorff at the Berlin Hochschule für Musik (1901–3) and with Reger in Leipzig. He worked as a répétiteur and Kappelmeister in regional theatres (Mainz, Zwickau, Dortmund, Bad Kreuznach and Goslar) before becoming chief conductor at Wiesbaden when he was 31. He conducted much contemporary music (especially Debussy, Delius, Ravel, Schoenberg and Stravinsky), worked as a guest conductor in Europe (conducting, for instance, the choir of the Berlin PO) and first appeared in the USA in 1927; but his reputation was essentially built at Wiesbaden, where he made 37 recordings. From 1937 to 1944 he was principal guest conductor of the Frankfurt RSO, and in 1942 he became chief conductor of the Dresden PO; but because of his Jewish wife the Nazis made his life difficult, and he resettled in Switzerland in 1944. He conducted at the reopening of the Salzburg Festival in 1946 and returned to guest conducting, taking the Vienna PO (with André Cluytens) on its first US tour in 1956. He recorded the complete Beethoven symphonies (1957–8), and continued to conduct the BBC SO, the LSO, the Stuttgart RSO and the NDR SO in Hamburg.

Schuricht gradually came to focus on the German Romantic repertory, with interpretations which were less strikingly individual than those of Furtwängler, Klemperer or Walter, but still in the 19th-century German tradition of expressive phrasing and liberal use of rubato. His own compositions include orchestral music, piano pieces and songs. (B. Gavoty and R. Hauert: Carl Schuricht, Geneva, 1954; Eng. trans. 1956)

JOSÉ BOWEN

Schurig, Wolfram (b Bludenz, 30 Dec 1967). Austrian composer. After training as a music teacher at the Feldkirch Conservatory (1987–9), he began studying composition with Hans Ulrich Lehmann at the Zürich Musikhochschule (1989–93); he also studied the recorder with Kees Boeke. After the completion of his studies, he became associated with Lachenmann in Stuttgart. In 1995 he became director of the Bludenzer Tage zeitgemässer Musik. He received the Plön Hindemith prize in 1996.

Schurig's compositional style features stupendous sound techniques, as well as demonstrating a determinedly rational organization of materials. Indeed, works such as (ENT?)FESSELUNG (1989), BLENDUNG?/LICHT STURZ (1990) and the five-part cycle Die Ausschliesslichkeit der Finsternis (1992–3) create a confusing expressivity through the use of novel sound combinations. In GESPINST (1990), independent sound strata are intertwined and brought together to articulate important structural moments. Later works, such as CRWTH (1993), ex cathedra – ex tempore – ex machina (1993–5) and hot powdery snow (1994–5), create a simultaneity of highly differentiated processes. Synchronous procedures also determine the character of Schurig's first orchestral composition, SCHLEIFE SIMULTAN SOLO (1995), a work that imposes strict symmetry on distinct strata by dividing the orchestra into three constantly changing timbral groups.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: SCHLEIFE SIMULTAN SOLO, 1995; Hoquetus, vn, chbr orch, 1997

Chbr and solo inst: (ENT?)FESSELUNG, vc, 1989; BLENDUNG/ LICHT STURZ, org, 1990; GESPINST, solo b cl, fl, cl, pf, hp, vn, vc, 1990; Die Ausschliesslichkeit der Finsternis 1992–3: I die stimme der dunkelheit spricht im diskant, pic, E♭ cl, pf, perc; II mein Herz: ein bunker, vn, vc; III instants enchaînés, vn pf, perc, IV Etwas über Unerbittlichkeit, fl, cl, bn, bc, pf, perc; V ENDE., fl, b cl, pf, vc; CRWTH, v, 1993; ex cathedra – ex tempore – ex machina, 2 hn, 2 tpt, 2 trbn, tuba, 2 perc, 1993–5; hot powdery snow, str qt, 1994–5; MAUERWERK, 2 hn, 2 tpt, 2 trbn, 1994; décalage, fl, ob, cl, vn, va, vc, perc, pf, 1997–8; Str Qt no.2, 1997–8

Vocal: ... für immer ... (G. Ungaretti), 2 S, 2 A, 2 T, 2 B, va, 1987–9

Principal publisher: Ariadne

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Skamletz: 'la fine è/ed il fine: Wolfram Schurig und sein Werk ... für immer ...', KlangArten, ii (1992), 14–21

W. Schurig: ' werkbegriffsstutzigkeitsnotiz', Positionen, xxv/Nov (1995), 40–41

P. Böttinger: 'Sonic Death? (... Im Gegenteil): Analytische Anmerkungen zu drei Werken von Wolfram Schurig', Musik & Ästhetik, no.8 (1998), 67–82

REINHARD KAGER

Schürmann [Schurmann, Scheuermann], Georg Caspar (b Idensen, nr Hanover, 1672/3; d Wolfenbüttel, 25 Feb 1751). German composer. According to Walther, he was the son of a pastor, identified as Statius Caspar Schürmann (d 1678), who went to Idensen in 1666. His son began his career at the age of 20 in Hamburg where he found engagements as a male alto both at the opera and in various churches. During the next six years Schürmann performed in an ideal musical milieu for a young musician, especially at the opera where Conradi, Kusser and Keiser were involved with productions of their works, and the music of Steffani (among other outstanding composers) was often heard. In 1697 he travelled with the Hamburg opera company for a series of guest appearances at the Brunswick court of Duke Anton Ulrich of Brunswick-Lüneburg. Soon after, Duke Anton Ulrich appointed Schürmann as solo alto to the court and also, according to Walther, as a conductor for the opera and court church.

Except for two periods of absence, Schürmann remained at the Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel court until his death 54 years later. He quickly established himself as a gifted composer, and in 1700 his first dramatic work, the Italian pastorale Endimione, was performed at the court theatres at Salzthal and Wolfenbüttel. The following year he wrote and produced two sacred operas, Salomon and Daniel. In late 1701 Duke Anton Ulrich sent him to Venice, no doubt to complete his education in the Italian operatic style. Walther said that he made the acquaintance of the most famous composers and musicians while in Venice, and one can speculate that these would have included Antonio and Carlo Francesco Pollarolo, Tommaso Albinoni, Francesco Gasparini and Francesco Pistocchi. Nothing specific is known of Schürmann's Italian period, and apparently he returned to Germany after only one year to become, on loan from the Duke of Brunswick, Kapellmeister and composer at the court of Meiningen. He remained there until at least 1706 and, in addition to serving as music teacher to the ruling family, he wrote several operas and many church cantatas. In 1706 Schürmann went to produce an opera at Naumburg, where each year an important opera festival was maintained at court during the Petri-Pauli fair (beginning on 29 June and lasting eight days).

Walther stated that Schürmann returned permanently to Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel in 1707. Over more than 30 years his productivity was enormous. After 1739 he is not known to have composed operas, but he remained immersed in court musical life as a conductor, producer of operas, and translator and arranger of the Italian operas which had become the mainstay of the theatre. Schürmann rearranged many of his own works, inserting arias by other composers and creating numerous pasticcios. In his final years he continued to compose for the church as well as occasional pieces for special court festivals.

Schürmann, together with Conradi, Kusser, Keiser and Telemann, was an outstanding contributor to the history of German Baroque opera. It is regrettable that of the more than 30 operas he is known to have written only three seem to survive in their entirety and excerpts from another nine remain in manuscript; none of the three complete operas has been published. An outstanding study of Schürmann's operas was written by G.F. Schmidt, who examined the music in great detail.

Schürmann's operas demonstrate a successful blending of the operatic style developed in north Germany, especially in Hamburg in the music of Keiser, with the Italian practices he observed in Venice. His operas are aria-orientated, and each aria, in characteristic Baroque fashion, is planned to express a single affection or emotional idealization. Most of the arias have fairly extensive da capo structures, but Schürmann filled these stereotyped forms with richly inventive melodic ideas, strong textural variety (including frequent contrapuntal interplay between the voice and instrumental parts) and colourful solo instrumental writing. The recitatives are in the north German tradition of affective, rhetorical declamation, in which vocal line, harmonic colour (in the continuo part as well as the melody) and dramatic accent add strength and theatrical effectiveness. This is not the recitative of contemporary Italian opera, with its rapid parlando patter, and frequent 'dry' punctuations of cadential harmonic formulae in the accompanying harpsichord continuo realization. For Schürmann, as for the Hamburg opera composers, the recitative was still an important component of the musical drama.

Schürmann's melodic gift, undoubtedly in part the result of his own lengthy career as an operatic singer, makes his works impressively lyrical. The voice parts are never overshadowed by the orchestra, and the instrumental parts generally take on the melodic characteristics of the vocal style – not the reverse procedure, as one finds, for example, in Keiser's operas. Schürmann continued the Hamburg opera composers' proclivity for folklike melodies and for arias based on dance rhythms (especially the siciliana, barcarolle and minuet). The dance is in fact a major part of each work, although for the most part other composers (frequently French ones) supplied the music for such ballet insertions. Although Schürmann gave his soloists ample opportunity to excel in written-out coloratura ornamentation, this kind of vocal virtuosity never dominated his arias, as it did for example in much of Keiser's music.

However, Schürmann's operas move clearly beyond his Hamburg heritage and in many ways remind one of the later works of Handel. While the textures are frequently contrapuntal, the use of counterpoint occurs as an element of variation, not as a basic compositional procedure. Harmonic rhythm, especially in his last surviving opera, Ludovicus Pius, is markedly slow, at times static, and often similar to that of the early Classical style in Germany. Bass lines, then, are not generally melodic, and indeed often seem to be in the early Classical mould with their tendency to serve a purely harmonic function. Schürmann's music, in fact, points strongly in the direction of the Classical style and suggests that this composer, who worked with both C.H. Graun and Hasse at Wolfenbüttel, may have played a significant part in the style's development in Germany during the first half of the 18th century.

WORKS

STAGE

performed in Brunswick; music lost unless otherwise stated

Endimione (favola per musica, 3, F. de Lemene), Salzthal, 1700
Salomon (Spl, 3, Duke Anton Ulrich of Brunswick and/or J.C. Knorr von Rosenroth), wint. 1701, D-SWl
Daniel (Spl, 3, Knorr von Rosenroth), sum. 1701
Leonilde, oder Der siegende Beständigkeit (Spl, 3, G. Fielder), 1704/5, 4 arias Bsb
Das verstöhrte Troja (Spl, 5, ? J.C. Frauendorf), wint. 1706, arias and duets Bsb
Telemaque (op, 4, ?Frauendorf), Naumburg, sum. 1706; rev. as Telemachus und Calypso (3), Aug 1717
Giasone, overo Il conquisto del vello d'oro (dramma per musica, 3, F. Parisetti, Ger. trans. Schürmann), 1707, pasticcio incl. music by various It. composers, Bsb
Die schöne Psyche (Spl, 3, C. Postel), 1708 [?adaptation or partial recomposition of R. Keiser: Die wunderschöne Psyche]
Issé, oder Die vergnügende Liebe (pastorale, 3, A.H. de Lamotte), Wolfenbüttel, 3 Oct 1710, [?adaptation or partial recomposition of op by A. Destouches]
Procris und Cephalus (Spl, 3, F.C. Bressand), wint. 1714, pasticcio incl. music by Keiser, A. Lotti and others
Regnero (dramma per musica, prol, 3, P. Pariati), wint. 1715, [?only prol by Schürmann]
Heinrich der Löwe (op, 3, O. Mauro, Ger. trans. Fiedler), wint. 1716, pasticcio with music largely by A. Steffani
L'amor insanguinato, oder Holofernes (Spl, 5, J. Beccau), 1716, pasticcio
Die Plejades oder Das Siebengestirn (Spl, 3, Bressand), 1716
Atis, oder Der stumme Verliebte (op, 3, L. von Bostel), wint. 1717
Claudio ed Agrippina (dramma per musica, prol, 3), wint. 1717, [?only prol by Schürmann]
Heinrich der Vogler, pt 1 (Spl, 3, J.U. König), 1 Aug 1718
Porsenna [Clelia] (Spl, 5, Bressand), 1718, excerpts Bsb
Tiridate, ovvero L'amor tirannico (dramma per musica, 3, D. Lalli), 1718
Die getreue Alceste (op, 3, König, after P. Quinault), Feb 1719, Bsb (1719, Hamburg)
Heinrich der Vogler, pt 2 (Spl, König), 11 Jan 1721
Das eroberte Jerusalem, oder Armida und Rinaldo (Spl, 3, J.S. Müller, after G.C. Corradi), wint. 1722
Ixion (op, 3, Fiedler), wint. 1722, excerpts Bsb
Orlando furioso (dramma per musica, 3, G. Braccioli, arr. and Ger. trans. Schürmann, after A. Ariosti), wint. 1722, pasticcio
Rudolphus Habspurgicus (op, 3, 2 'Anreden', Müller), 4 Feb 1723
Ludovicus Pius, oder Ludewig der Fromme (op, 3, C.E. Simonetti), Feb 1726, incl. some arias by C.H. Graun, ballet music partly from ops by Destouches and A. Campra, Bsommer; partial edn. in PÄMw, xvii (1890)
Hannibal in Capua (op, 3, N. Beregan, arr. Schürmann), wint. 1726
Orpheus (op, 3, Bressand, ?arr. Schürmann), wint. 1727, [?music by Schürmann and Keiser]
Der von Londinen zugleich geliebte und ungeliebte Pharasmanes, König von Iberien (Spl, 3, J.F. von Uffenbach), ?1729
Magnus Torquatus (op, 3, Müller), wint. 1730

Single arias from operas in Bsb, SWl, W

Doubtful: Mario (op, 3, S. Stampiglia), Leipzig, 1709 [? collab. J.D. Heinichen with some music by G.B. Bononcini]; Herodes (Spl, 4, Müller), Wolfenbüttel or Salzthal, 28 May 1718; Doppia festa d'Himeneo (favola pastorale, 25 scenes, Mauro), Salzthal, 1718 [? music partly or entirely by Steffani]; Cadmus (op, 3, König), 1720; Justinus (op, 3, Simonetti, after Beregan), sum. 1725; Ninus und Semiramis (op, 3), sum. 1730

OTHER WORKS

Serenata: Musicalisches Neu-Jahrs Opfer, 1728 [? music by Schürmann and/or C.H. Graun]
Sacred cantatas, *D-Bsb: Aber über das Haus Davids, solo vv, chorus, orch, Meiningen, 27 May 1705; Auf, jauchzet, lobsinget dem König der Ehren, solo vv, chorus, orch [? same as cantata for the dedication of Grauen Hofkapelle, Brunswick, 24 Sept 1724]; Es wird ein Stern aus Jacob aufgehen, 4vv, insts; Gnädig und barmherzig ist der Herr, solo vv, chorus, orch, Meiningen, 29 May 1705; Gott ist unsere Zuversicht und Stärke, solo vv, chorus, orch; Komm, o Tröster, mein Verlangen, A, B, chorus, orch, 1717; Nimm das Opfer unserer Herzen, S, orch, New Year 1720; Pflüget ein Neues und säet nicht, 4vv, 4 insts; Siehe, eine Jungfrau ist schwanger, 4vv, 4 insts; Siehe, ich will meiner Herde selbst annehmen, solo vv, chorus, orch, Meiningen, 30 May 1705
Lost sacred cantatas: Gott hat alles Wohlgemacht, 1713; Jesu, meiner Seelen Weide, A. ?insts, see Schmidt; Trauermusik on death of Princess Christine Louise, Wolfenbüttel, Schlosskirche, 10 Dec 1747, text Wolfenbüttel, Landeshauptarchiv; numerous cantatas, many written after 1727 to texts by J.F. von Uffenbach
Instrumental-Suiten zu Tafel-Musicken, according to Walther, lost

BIBLIOGRAPHY

WaltherML
F. Chrysander: 'Geschichte der Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttelschen Capelle und Oper vom sechzehnten bis zum achtzehnten Jahrhundert', Jb für musikalische Wissenschaft, i (1863), 147–286, esp. 263–5, 284
H. Sommer: 'Die Oper Ludwig der Fromme von G.C. Schürmann', MMg, xiv (1882), 48–51, 53–5
G.F. Schmidt: Die frühdeutsche Oper und die musikdramatische Kunst Georg Caspar Schürmann's (Regensburg, 1933)
E. Rosendahl: 'Wo und wann G.K. Schürmann geboren wurde', AMf, vii (1942), 239–42
R. Brockpähler: Handbuch zur Geschichte der Barockoper in Deutschland (Emsdetten, 1964)
H.J. Marx and D. Schröder: Die Hamburger Gänsemarkt-Oper: Katalog der Textbücher (Laaber, 1995)

GEORGE J. BUELOW

Schurmann [Schürmann], (Edward) Gerard (b Kertosono, Dutch East Indies [now Indonesia], 19 Jan 1924). British-Dutch composer, resident in the USA. Although he studied privately with Rawsthorne at the RCM, he is largely self-taught as a composer. He attracted public attention at an early age and in the early 1940s received many performances in England and the Netherlands. He moved to the USA in 1981. Slow-working and self-critical, he achieves an intensity of expression through telling contrapuntal writing and a rich, individual harmonic language, which often accommodates modality to colouristic advantage. Vivid orchestration and a refined ear for instrumental detail lend clarity to form and structure in his work. The Six Studies of Francis Bacon (1968), a product of close friendship with the painter, is typical, boldly individual in style and forceful in expression. The later Concerto for Orchestra (1992–5) likewise sets off sections of the orchestra in a fusillade of sound to immediate, powerful effect. Chuench'i (1966), an exquisite setting for high voice and piano (orchestrated in 1967) of Chinese poems, captivates by its wistful expressiveness; while both solo concertos, for piano and violin, are, conversely, impassioned virtuosic works. The Gardens of Exile, a cello concerto in all but name, echoes nostalgically the gamelan music, and Hungarian folk melodies, that the composer heard in his childhood. The opera-cantata Piers Plowman conjures up audible magic by the fluidity of its solo vocal writing, spun from a pentatonic opening motif; and in another work for voices, The Double Heart for double choir, Schurmann weaves a tour-de-force of canonic counterpoint. His chamber and solo instrumental works, notably the two piano quartets and the duo for violin and piano (1983–4), are strongly characterized, significant additions to the repertory; they typify his meticulous craftsmanship and elegantly sensuous melodic line.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: 6 Studies of Francis Bacon, 1968; Variants, chbr orch, 1968–70; Attack and Celebration, 1971; Pf Conc., 1972–3; Vn Conc., 1975–8; Intrada, str, 1948; The Gardens of Exile, vc, orch, 1989–90; Conc. for Orch, 1992–5; Man in the Sky, 1996

Vocal: Chuench'i (Chin. poems, trans. A. Waley), 1v, pf, 1966, orchd 1967; Summer is Coming, chorus, 1970; The Double Heart (cant., A. Marvell), double SATB, 1976; Piers Plowman (op-cant., W. Langland); S, A, T, B, mixed chorus, orch, 1979–80

Inst: Bagatelles, pf, 1945; Fantasia, vc, pf, 1963–5; Sonatina, fl, pf, 1968; Serenade, vn, 1969; Contrasts, pf, 1973; Leotaurus, pf, 1974–5; 2 Ballades, pf, 1981–3; Duo, vn, pf, 1983–4; Pf Qt, 1986; Ariel, ob, 1987; Pf Qt, 1997; Sonata, vc, pf, 1998

Other works: 2 ballets, 34 film scores, incid music, arrs. of music by G.C. Schürmann, Telemann, Leo, Rawsthorne

Principal publisher: Novello

WRITINGS

ed. O. Blakeston: 'The Composer', Working for the Films (London, 1947), 169–79

Introduction to A. Poulton: Alan Rawsthorne: The Man and his Music, i (Kidderminster, 1984)

'A Reply to Maurice Jarre about "Lawrence of Arabia"', The Cue Sheet, vii (1990)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

CC1 (R. Dunnett)
K. Loveland: 'The Music of Gerard Schurmann', MT, cxi (1970), 490–93
R. Cooke: 'An Unfashionable Form', Music and Musicians, xii/3 (1973–4), 38–9
G. Victory: 'Chuench'i', MR, xxxiii/3 (1972), 204–9
M. Oliver: 'Schurmann's Violin Concerto', Music and Musicians, xxvii/1 (1978–9), 16–18
R. Matthew-Walker: 'Gerard Schurmann and Piers Plowman', MT, cxxi (1980), 495–9
R. Matthew-Walker: 'A Note on Gerard Schurmann's New Piano Quartet', Music and Musicians (1986), July, 16–17
F. Routh: 'Gerard Schurmann in Conversation with Francis Routh', Composer, no.93 (1987), 9–15
R. Dunnett: 'Schurmann in Focus', MT, cxxxii (1991), 304–5
R. Dunnett: 'Orchestral Showpiece with a Heart of Iron', BBC Music Magazine, iv/7 (1995–6), 12 only

RICHARD COOKE/RODERIC DUNNETT

Schuster, Ignaz (b Vienna, 20 July 1779; d Vienna, 6 Nov 1835). Austrian actor, singer and composer. He was a treble, and later a bass, chorister at the Schottenstift in Vienna; Eybler and Franz Volkert were among his music teachers. At about the same time he was offered posts as a bass in the Esterházy musical establishment and at the Theater in der Leopoldstadt in Vienna. He chose the latter, and despite his rather small, misshapen figure he quickly established himself as a comic actor and singer after a successful début in December 1801. From 1804 he began to figure as a composer too (Baron Barfuss, by Perinet), supplying some 30 or 40 scores for farces, parodies and pantomimes, some of them enjoying a long and distinguished life. In 1806 he was appointed a solo singer at the Hofkapelle; such was the urbanity of Vienna's cultural life that nothing untoward was felt about the city's leading comic actor (which Schuster had by then become) being also employed as singer in the imperial and royal chapel, and in the Stephansdom. A notable date in his career was 22 October 1813, when he created the role of Staberl in Bäuerle's Die Bürger in Wien and thereby inaugurated the last of the comic personae that from Hanswurst via Kasperl formed the principal sources of public delight in the old Viennese popular theatre. He earned special admiration for his brilliant imitation of Borgondio in the Bäuerle-Müller parody of Rossini's Tancredi in 1817. On Christmas Eve 1818 he appeared in the title role of Die falsche Primadonna (the censor had forbidden its original title of Die falsche Catalani), for which he also composed the score. This work, the finest of the long line of Krähwinkel plays that followed Kotzebue's Die deutschen Kleinstädter, was frequently imitated, until it was eclipsed by Nestroy's Freiheit in Krähwinkel (1848). Die falsche Primadonna was given all over the German-speaking lands, and in the Leopoldstadt alone it was performed 161 times in 40 years.

Despite the rising popularity of Raimund, which provoked jealousy from the older Schuster, he continued to enjoy triumphs as actor, singer and composer. During and after the Congress of Vienna, crowned heads praised and honoured him. In his own theatre he held the offices of chorus director and later senior producer. He has been identified as a partner represented in the Beethoven conversation books and was one of the singers who honoured Beethoven's memory with a double quartet on the day of his funeral, before accompanying the coffin to the Minoritenkirche. From 1828 Schuster was increasingly in demand for guest appearances at home and abroad; he retired in October 1835, less than a month before his death. Apart from his theatre scores, some of which were published in vocal score, and which include such parodies as Othello, der Mohr in Wien (1806), Werthers Leiden (1806) and Romeo und Julie (1808), all to texts by J.F. Kringsteiner, he also wrote a mass that was performed at the Schottenkirche in 1817, and songs. His manuscripts and some printed works are now in the major Vienna libraries.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveO (P. Branscombe) [incl. selective list of stage works]; WurzbachL
Biographical sketch (MS, A-Wgm) [with inc. list of works]
L. Eisenberg: Grosses biographisches Lexikon der deutschen Bühne im XIX. Jahrhundert (Leipzig, 1903), 942
E. von Bauernfeld: Erinnerungen aus Alt-Wien (Vienna, 1923)
F. Hadamowsky: Das Theater in der Wiener Leopoldstadt 1781–1860 (Vienna, 1934)
K.-H. Köhler, D. Beck and G. Brosche, eds.: Ludwig van Beethovens Konversationshefte, ii (Leipzig, 1976)

PETER BRANSCOMBE

Schuster, Joseph (b Dresden, 11 Aug 1748; d Dresden, 24 July 1812). German composer and conductor. The son of a court musician in Dresden, he received his first musical instruction from his father and from the composer J.G. Schürer. He received a scholarship from the elector and, together with Franz Seydelmann, spent the years 1765–8 with J.G. Naumann in Italy, where he studied counterpoint with the Venetian Girolamo Pera. In 1772 both he and Seydelmann were appointed church composers in Dresden. From 1774 to 1777 Schuster again visited Italy, where he studied with Padre Martini in Bologna, composed operas for Naples and Venice and received the honorary title of maestro di cappella to the King of Naples. His first opera seria, Didone abbandonata (Naples, 1776), to a text by Metastasio, established his popularity with the Italian public. New opera contracts brought about his last journey to Italy in 1778–81, when he established closer relations with J.A. Hasse and had further stage successes in Naples and Venice. By this time he was also admired in Germany as a composer of opera buffa and Singspiel: his Der Alchymist, oder Der Liebesteufel (1778), one of the most charming and successful examples of the genre, remained popular in Germany into the 19th century. From 1781 he conducted in the Dresden court church and theatre (alternately with Naumann, Schürer and Seydelmann), and in 1787 he was appointed Kapellmeister to the elector, again simultaneously with Seydelmann.

Schuster had an easy social manner, was attracted by everything fashionable and was a very productive composer. Apart from his work as a conductor, his most important duties at court included managing the elector's chamber music and court concerts, giving music instruction, acquiring new music (primarily from Vienna, including works by Haydn, Mozart and Pleyel) and handling new appointments. He was a favourite of Elector Friedrich August III: he taught music to the elector's children and his name was assigned to scores composed in fact by members of the sovereign family. He also participated enthusiastically in Dresden's concert life; his role in it during the last two decades of the 18th century was significant, and during the 1780s he was at the height of his creativity and international success, particularly in opera. By 1792 he was recognized throughout Germany as 'one of our most popular composers' (GerberL).

Apart from his operas Schuster also composed church music, including oratorios, masses and many smaller sacred works, as well as secular songs, Italian cantatas and instrumental music. The cantata Lob der Musik, performed until the mid-19th century, was one of his few published works (1784); its treatment of choir and orchestra is particularly melodious. His initiative is shown in his chamber works, in which, as in Der Alchymist and the piano concertos, he consciously approached the Viennese style. The spirited divertimentos for harpsichord and violin of about 1777 are distinguished both by equal treatment of the violin and the keyboard and by originality of form; they were Schuster's introduction to Munich as he passed through on his last trip to Italy. It was in Munich that Mozart came across them and was prompted to efforts in the same 'gusto' (letter of 6 October 1777), resulting in his sonatas K296, 301–3/293*a–c* and 305/293*d*. Four string quartets formerly attributed to Mozart (KAnh.210–13/C20.01–04) have been proved to be by Schuster (see Finscher). Most of his piano works were composed for the Dresden court and serve as a reminder that he deserves considerable credit as a champion and 'great master' (Schubart, 1806) of the fortepiano; both in Italy and in Dresden he contributed to the popularization of the Hammerflügel. Many of his works survive in autograph manuscript in the Dresden Sächsische Landesbibliothek.

WORKS

STAGE

DKT – Dresden, Kleines Kurfürstliches Theater
NC – Naples, Teatro S Carlo
VM – Venice, Teatro S Moisè

Addl music in F.L. Gassmann: La contessina, Dresden, 2 Jan 1772
La fedeltà in amore (ob, 2), DKT, 1773, D-Dl
L'idolo cinese (ob, 3, G. Lorenzi), DKT, 1776, Dl
L'amore artigiano (ob, 3, C. Goldoni), VM, 1776, B-Bc
La Didone abbandonata (os, 3, P. Metastasio), NC, 1776; D-Dl, I-Nc; 1 song [also attrib. G. Gazzaniga] (London, *c*1790)
Demofoonte (os, 3, Metastasio), Forlì, Nuovo, 1776, D-Dl, F-Pc
La schiava liberata (op seria-comica, 3, G. Martinelli), DKT, 2 Oct 1777; 2 scores and vs, D-Dl
Der Alchymist, oder Der Liebesteufel (comischer Oper, 1, A.G. Meissner, after M.A. Le Grand: L'amour diable), DKT, March 1778, A-Wn, D-Bsb, Dl, DS, Rp; vs, ed. G. Sartorius, Mbs (*R*1985: GOB, V); ed. R. Engländer (Kassel, 1958)
Die wüste Insel (Spl, 1, Meissner, after Metastasio: L'isola disabitata), Leipzig, Ranstädter Tor, 1779, A-Wn, D-Bsb
Creso in Media (os, 3, G. Pagliuca), NC, 1779, Dl, I-Nc
Amor e Psyche (os, 2, after M. Coltellini), NC, 1780, D-Dl, I-Nc
Il bon ton (ob, 2), VM, 1780, ?lost
Il marito indolente (ob, 2, C. Mazzolà), DKT, 1782, D-Dl; Ger. trans. as Der gleichgültige Ehemann, Bsb
Il pazzo per forza (ob, 2, Mazzolà), DKT, 1784, Dl
Lo spirito di contradizione (ob, 2, Mazzolà), DKT, 1785, Dl; Ger. trans. as Dr Murner, DS
Gli avari in trappola (ob, 2, Mazzolà), DKT, 1787, Dl
Rübezahl ossia Il vero amore (ob, 2, Mazzolà), DKT, 14 Feb 1789; Dl, vs, A-Wgm
Il servo padrone ossia L'amore perfetto (ob, 2, Mazzolà), DKT, 1793, D-Dl
Osmano dey d'Algeri (ob, 2, ? G. Cinti), DKT, 1800, Dl
L'amor prigionero (op, Metastasio), DKT, 1801
Il giorno natalizio (ob, 2, Cinti), pasticcio, DKT, 24 Feb 1802, Dl
Der Schauspieldirector (Spl), DS [doubtful; cited in EitnerQ]

SACRED

Orats (most for Catholic court chapel, Dresden): La passione di Gesù Cristo (P. Metastasio), 1778, A-Wgm, D-Bsb, Dl, Rp; Ester, Venice, Conservatorio Ospedaletto, 1781 [cited in GerberNL]; Mosè riconosciuto (G.A. Migliavacca), 1786; La Betulia liberata (Metastasio), 1796, Bsb, Dl; Gioas re di Giuda (Metastasio), 1803, Dl
Masses: 19, Dl; 4 for 4vv, orch, Bsb; 1 for 3vv, orch, I-Mc; 1, A-Wgm; frags. in Wn, Wgm, D-Bsb, LEm
Musikalische Todenfeier den Manen Leopolds des Weisen geheiligt ([?J.C.R.] Heydenreich), vs (Leipzig, 1792)
Other works: 21 offs, 7 lost; 13 Mag, 8 lost; 2 vespers, lost; 19 Marian ants, 4 lost; 2 hymns; 4 lits, 2 lost; Stabat mater; TeD, lost; Compline; many ps settings for soloists, choir and orch; most in D-Dl, others in A-Wgm, D-Bsb, Dl, LEm, LEt, SWl, I-Bc, RUS-KAu; MS catalogue ?1812, D-Dl

OTHER VOCAL

Cants.: Amor prigioniero, 2vv, insts, 1769, D-Dl; Lob der Musik (A.G. Meissner), 1v, choir, orch, Bsb, Dl, SWl, vs (Leipzig, 1784); cant. (Orlandi), 1807, Dl; Il ritorno del sole sull'orizonte, 1808, Dl, LEm; Gesang zur Feyer, des Friedens und der sächsischen Königswürde, T, B, pf (Leipzig, n.d.); Per il felice ritorno di Carlsbad, Dl; La sorpresa, Dl; La tempesta (P. Metastasio), 1v, insts, Dl; Il nome (Metastasio), S, orch, Dl [inc.]
Many arias and songs, A-Wgm, B-Br, D-Bsb, Dl, DS, LÜh, W, I-Bc, Mc, MC, NL-Avnm, RUS-KAu
Numerous songs in contemporary anthologies

INSTRUMENTAL

Syms./ovs.: 9, incl. 2 dated 1765, D-Dl; 4, I-Mc; 3, 1788, D-DS; 2 each, W, Z; 1 each, A-Wgm, D-SWl; 2, CZ-KRa
Chbr: Trio, 2 vn, b, *c*1768, D-Dl; 6 sonatas, hpd, vn, *c*1776, I-Nc [?1 in Mc]; 6 divertimenti da camera, hpd, vn, ?1777, D-Dl, Bsb, ed. W. Plath (Kassel, 1971–3); 4 str qts, Bsb, formerly attrib. W.A. Mozart (KAnh.210–13/C20.01–04), ed. H. Wolheim (Mainz, 1932), 3 also in CZ-Pnm, 1 also in I-Pca; 2 str qts, CZ-Pnm
Many concs. and kbd pieces
3 pieces, mand, D-Dl

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; GerberL; GerberNL; NewmanSCE
C.F.D. Schubart: Ideen zu einer Ästhetik der Tonkunst (Vienna, 1806/R), 115–16
'Nekrolog', AMZ, xiv (1812), 684–5
M. Fürstenau: Beiträge zur Geschichte der königlich sächsischen musikalischen Kapelle (Dresden, 1849)
R. Engländer: 'Zum Aufführungsstil der Dresdner Oper gegen 1800', Der Zwinger, iv (1920), 595–602
R. Engländer: 'Die Opern Joseph Schusters (1748–1812)', ZMw, x (1927–8), 257–91

R. Engländer: 'Dresdner Musikleben und Dresdner Instrumentalpflege in der Zeit zwischen Hasse und Weber', ZMw, xiv (1931–2), 410–19
R. Engländer: 'Les sonates de violon de Mozart et les "Duetti" di Joseph Schuster', RdM, xx (1939), 6–19
R. Engländer: 'Problem kring Mozarts violinsonat i e-moll K. 304', STMf, xxxiii (1951), 127–35
R. Engländer: 'Die Echtheitsfrage in Mozarts Violinsonaten KV 55–60', Mf, viii (1955), 292–8
R. Engländer: 'Die Dresdner Instrumentalmusik in der Zeit der Wiener Klassik', Uppsala Universitets årsskrift, v (1956), 1–160
R. Engländer: 'Nochmals Mozart und der Dresdner Joseph Schuster', STMf, xxxix (1957), 141–3
L. Finscher: 'Mozarts "Mailänder" Streichquartette', Mf, xix (1966), 270–83
H.-G. Ottenberg: 'Das Dresdner Singspiel: Anmerkungen zu seiner Entstehung, Wirkung und Verbreitung', Die italienische Oper in Dresden von Johann Adolf Hasse bis Francesco Morlacchi: Dresden 1987, 495–507
J. Ongley: Liturgical Music in Late Eighteenth-Century Dresden: Johann Gottlieb Naumann, Joseph Schuster and Franz Seydelmann (diss., Yale U., 1992)
L.H. Ongley: 'The Reconstruction of an 18th-Century Basso Group', EMc, xxvii (1999), 269–81

DIETER HÄRTWIG

Schusterfleck (Ger.). See ROSALIA.

Schütter, Meinrad (b Coire, 21 Sept 1910). Swiss composer and pianist. He began composing in 1928, and from 1931 to 1935 he studied at Zürich Conservatory. He travelled abroad, working as an accompanist, and received a scholarship enabling him to spend time in Rome. Largely self-taught as a composer, he carried out a private correspondence course in composition with Willy Burkhard during World War II, and later studied with Hindemith at Zürich University (1950–54). Admirers of his work have included Hermann Scherchen, who performed the Five Variants and Metamorphosis and the Ricercare for orchestra in 1949. Schütter was a ballet répétiteur at the Zürich Opera from 1943 to 1968, and has worked freelance since 1976. His early influences were primarily Schoeck and Hindemith. His strongly polyphonic music is at times tonal, at times atonal, employing a wide range of techniques from serialism to aleatory methods. His artistic personality is, however, strong enough to dispel any danger of incongruity. His songs for voice and piano are especially fine.

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: Medea (op, Schütter, after F. Grillparzer, Euripides, J. Anouilh), 1941, rev. 1957; Dr Joggeli sött go Birli schüttle (ballet, Wenger), 1951; Rübezahl, a Christmas Tale (R. Frickert), 1980

INSTRUMENTAL

Orch: Ricercare, 1946, rev. 1952; Suite, small orch, 1955; Five Variants and Metamorphosis, chbr orch, 1939, rev. 1960; Duo concertante, vn, va, orch, 1966; Conc., pf, str, 1985; 2 Pastorales, small orch, 1988; Pastorale II, cl, str, 1988

Chbr and solo inst: 2 pieces, vc, pf, 1935; Verbunkos, vn, pf, 1957; Clavis Astertis magica I, vn, pf, 1973; Suite, vc, 1979; Sonata, vc, pf, 1984; Octet, fl, ob, 3 cl, 2 bn, hn, 1985; Nachtstück I, fl, cl, pf, 1986; Nachtstück II (Spiegelungen), fl, cl, hpd, 1986; 4 Pieces, cl, 1987; Notturno, vn, pf, 1988; Humoreske, cl, pf, 1989; Str Qt, 1990; Trio, 3 cl/3 basset-hn, 1992; Trio, va, vc, pf, 1996; 2 suites, cl, pf

Pf: Sonatine, 1939, rev. 1955; Variations on a rhythm, 1982

VOCAL

Choral: Great Mass, S, A, T, B-Bar, SATB, org, 1950, rev. 1970

Solo vocal (with pf): 5 songs after Flandrina von Salis, 1991; Chanzuns de la not (A. Peer), 1994; *c*35 other songs for 1v, pf

Solo vocal (with inst): Serenade (H. Hesse), S, vl, va, vc, 1934, rev. 1970; Sonnet 'Der Liebende schreibt' (J.W. von Goethe), S, small orch, 1939; Wunsch des Liebhabers (W. Bethge), S, fl, cl, va, vc, pf, 1958

MSS in CH-Zz

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Kerle: 'Meinrad Schütter: ein kompromissloser Aussenseiter', Bündner Jahrbuch (Coire, 1991), 46–8

CHRIS WALTON

Schütz. German family of musicians. It comprises (1) Gabriel Schütz and his four sons who were active principally as town musicians at Nuremberg in the late 17th and early 18th centuries. Of the sons, the second, (2) Jacob Balthasar, and fourth, (3) Georg Gabriel, are discussed briefly below; the others were Johann Jacob (b Nuremberg, 24 Dec 1659; he probably died young) and Valentin (b Nuremberg, 6 March 1665; d Nuremberg, 13 March 1716).

(1) Gabriel Schütz (b Lübeck, 1 Feb 1633; d Nuremberg, 9 Aug 1710). Composer, viol player and cornettist. He studied at Lübeck for six years with Nicolaus Bleyer, who passed on to him the English viol technique that he had learnt from William Brade at Gottorf and from Thomas Simpson at Bückeburg. After spending about a year at Hamburg he set out for Italy in 1655. However, he got only as far as Nuremberg, which he reached at the beginning of 1656 and where he played so well on the gamba and cornett that, according to Mattheson, 'he was considered one of the greatest masters of his time in the Holy Roman Empire'. Friends and patrons sought to keep him there by holding out the prospect of a post as town musician, and in April 1658 he was made a probationary 'that he might not seek his fortune elsewhere'. From then until his appointment was confirmed in 1666 he played in concerts in various nearby south German courts, among them Ansbach, Bayreuth, Oettingen and Mergentheim, and also at Salzburg. In 1660 his salary was increased, and he was granted Nuremberg citizenship. In November 1666 his salary was again increased, and he was engaged to teach young musicians on the instruments 'on which he excels to perfection': J.P. Krieger and Konrad Höffler were among his pupils. In the same year he refused a post as court musician at Stuttgart. Soon after this he travelled to Regensburg to play before the Emperor Leopold I, who offered through his Kapellmeister J.H. Schmeltzer 'to take him into his most gracious service'. But he refused this offer, too, 'partly from love of the city of Nuremberg, partly from scrupulous enthusiasm for the Protestant religion'. He remained a Nuremberg town musician until his death. His only works to survive are a sonata for two gambas and continuo (GB-DRc) and two partitas for flute, violin, gamba and continuo, signed 'Sign. Schütz' and presumably by him (D-GZsa). They are straightforward pieces, possibly written for teaching purposes, and give little hint of the virtuosity celebrated by his contemporaries. His many other 'beautiful pieces' for gamba mentioned by Doppelmayr appear to be lost. There is a sacred song by him in Heinrich Müller's Der Geistlichen Erquickstunden … poetischer Andachtsklang (Nuremberg, 1691).

(2) Jacob Balthasar Schütz (b Nuremberg, 5 Jan 1661; d Nuremberg, 22 Jan 1700). Violinist and composer, second son of (1) Gabriel Schütz. Like his brothers, he was a pupil of his father. At the age of ten, together with his older brother, Johann Jacob, he played the violin before the Margrave of Ansbach. He was then trained as a singer by Heinrich Schwemmer and in 1674 took up a civic post in Nuremberg as a treble. At this period he also sang twice in operas at the Ansbach court. After his voice broke he turned entirely to the violin, and became so proficient that even the emperor's players respected him. In 1692 he married the daughter of Paul Hainlein. He died of consumption. According to Doppelmayr, he wrote 'many beautiful and skilful suites and pieces, the best of them for solo violin, which connoisseurs have always rated highly'; none, however, survives. There are eight sacred songs by him in Müller's 1691 volume mentioned under (1) Gabriel Schütz; the one reprinted in J. Zahn: Die Melodien der deutschen evangelischen Kirchenlieder (Gütersloh, 1888–93/R) is an attractive piece in allemande rhythm.

(3) Georg Gabriel Schütz (b Nuremberg, 14 Feb 1670; d Nuremberg, 13 March 1716). Musician and composer, youngest son of (1) Gabriel Schütz. He studied with his father. He was a probationary town musician at Nuremberg and a town musician proper in 1702. There is a sacred song by him in Müller's above-mentioned collection of 1691.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Mattheson GEP
J.G. Doppelmayr: Historische Nachricht von den nürnbergischen Mathematicis und Künstlern (Nuremberg, 1730)
P. Evans: 'Seventeenth-Century Chamber Music Manuscripts at Durham', ML, xxxvi (1955), 205–23

LINI HÜBSCH-PFLEGER

Schütz, Françoise Jeanne. See LITVINNE, FÉLIA.

Schütz, Heinrich [Henrich] [Sagittarius, Henricus] (b Köstritz [now Bad Köstritz], nr Gera, bap. 9 Oct 1585; d Dresden, 6 Nov 1672). German composer. He was the greatest German composer of the 17th century and the first of international stature. Through the example of his compositions and through his teaching he played a major part in establishing the traditions of high craftsmanship and intellectual depth that marked the best of his nation's music and musical thought for more than 250 years after his death.

1. CHILDHOOD AND YOUTH (1585–1615). Schütz came from a prominent bourgeois family of Franconian origin that had resided in Saxony since the mid-15th century. His birthplace belonged to the principality of Reuss and lay close to Gera, capital of the region. Albrecht Schütz, his paternal grandfather, owned a local inn, 'Zum goldenen Kranich'; Christoph Schütz, Heinrich's father, served as a town clerk in Gera during the mid-1570s, then took over the inn at Köstritz on behalf of Albrecht, who had moved to Weissenfels in 1571. On 5 February 1583 Christoph, whose first wife had died and left him with three children, married Euphrosyne Bieger, daughter of the burgomaster of Gera; the couple had eight children, of whom 'Henricus' – as his name appears in the baptismal record – was the second-born and the eldest son. Two of Heinrich's four younger brothers, Georg (1587–1637) and Benjamin (1596–1666), became well-known jurists. Schütz remained close to his family throughout his life; he appears to have had a particularly warm relationship with Georg.

According to a biographical sketch that the electoral court chaplain Martin Geier appended to his funeral oration for the composer, Schütz was born on 8 October 1585. Schütz himself, however, described his early years in a petition addressed to Elector Johann Georg I of Saxony on 14 January 1651, and there he gives the date as St Burkhard's Day, which falls on 14 October. Late in the summer of 1590 Christoph Schütz and his family moved to Weissenfels, where Albrecht, who died on 28 July, had bequeathed him an inn named 'Zum güldenen Ring'. Christoph became a figure of considerable eminence in his new city, eventually serving as its burgomaster. In 1615 he purchased a second inn known as both 'Zur güldenen Sackpfeife' and 'Zum güldenen Esel' – which he renamed 'Zum Schützen'. According to Geier, Christoph provided his children with a thorough religious and liberal education. Heinrich quickly showed 'a singular inclination to noble music', learning 'in a short time to sing securely and very well, with particular grace'. He presumably received musical instruction from the local Kantor, Georg Weber, as well as from the organist and sometime burgomaster Heinrich Colander, who had married the widow of Schütz's uncle Matthes.

In 1598 Landgrave MORITZ of Hessen-Kassel, whose varied accomplishments included considerable skill in musical composition, stayed overnight at Christoph Schütz's inn. He heard young Heinrich sing, reported Geier, and the boy's performance so pleased him, that > His Noble Grace was moved to ask the parents to allow the lad to come with him to his noble court, promising that he would be reared in all good arts and commendable virtues.

Encountering resistance, Moritz continued to press his case in letters, and finally, in August 1599, Christoph Schütz took his son to the landgrave's seat at Kassel.

At Moritz's court Schütz served as a choirboy and pursued his education at the Collegium Mauritianum, an academy founded by the landgrave in 1595 primarily for the children of the Hesse nobility but attended also by some of the boys in the Hofkapelle and sons of court servants. Schütz distinguished himself in all his subjects and showed a special aptitude for languages, learning Latin, Greek and French. His musical training lay in the hands of Moritz's Kapellmeister, Georg Otto, who taught at the academy. According to Schütz, 'it was never the will of my late parents that I should make a profession of music either this day or the next'; following their wishes therefore, he > set out, after having lost my treble voice, for the University of Marburg, in order to continue there the studies that I had already begun elsewhere in things other than music, choose a secure profession and eventually gain an honourable degree therein.

He matriculated at the university on 27 September 1608 along with his fellow students Schimmelpfennig, Friedrich Kegel and Friedrich's brother Christoph, also a former choirboy at court. Geier wrote that Schütz elected to study law at Marburg and quickly won distinction for his academic prowess. Nevertheless, he did not remain at the university for long. During a visit to Marburg in 1609 Landgrave Moritz advised him that since Giovanni Gabrieli, 'a widely famed but rather old musician and composer, was still alive, I should not miss the chance to hear him and learn something from him'. The landgrave often provided funds for his most gifted charges to acquire further training abroad; Christoph Kegel and the future Hesse Kapellmeister Christoph Cornet had already gone to Venice on such grants in 1604. Moritz offered Schütz a stipend of 200 thaler a year, evidently for a two-year period; Schütz accepted gratefully, even though the voyage would have countered the wishes of his parents, and left for Italy.

Soon after his arrival in Venice, Schütz later recalled,

I perceived the gravity and difficulty of the study of composition that I had undertaken and that I had had an unsound, poor start in this; and I therefore greatly rued that I had turned away from the studies commonly pursued in German universities.

By the end of 1610, however, he had made such progress that Sigismund, Margrave of Brandenburg, wrote to Moritz from Venice that Giovanni Gabrieli has asked me many times to write to you and urge Your Grace that you be so kind to him as to allow your servant Heinrich Schütz to remain here another year, since he is doing so well not only in composition but also in [organ] playing.

Teacher and pupil evidently developed a close personal relationship. On his deathbed Gabrieli left one of his rings to Schütz, and Schütz never acknowledged anyone else as his teacher.

Gabrieli appears to have given his pupils a rigorous training grounded in traditional contrapuntal procedures but admitting some licence in the treatment of dissonance. Like most of those in Gabrieli's tutelage, Schütz completed his apprenticeship – or at least its initial phase – by producing a book of five-voice madrigals (SWV1–19); he dedicated the volume to Landgrave Moritz. The foreword bears the date 1 May 1611; Schütz may have timed the collection to coincide with the end of his two-year stipend and the beginning of the renewal that Moritz evidently granted. In the petition of January 1651 – which mysteriously dates the appearance of the madrigals a year too late – he recalled with some pride that his first effort won high praise from 'the most prominent musicians in Venice of the time'.

After his third year in Venice, Schütz 'was exhorted and encouraged not only by my teacher ... but also by ... other leading musicians there' to continue his studies even further; he followed their advice and remained in Italy, supported now by his parents, who had presumably become somewhat more tolerant of his musical inclinations. In August 1612, not long after the start of this fourth year in Venice, Gabrieli died. According to Geier, Schütz left Italy soon afterwards; Schütz himself, however, indicated that he did not return to Germany until 1613.

Back in his native country, Schütz resumed his service at Moritz's court; a register of the Hesse Kapelle from the last four months of 1613 lists him as second organist with an annual salary of 80 florins. Although he kept his pledge to publish no music, his efforts to develop his craft bore immediate fruit in a series of polychoral works – SWV36*a*, 467, 470 and 474 – all found in manuscripts copied by 1615 at the latest. His family meanwhile renewed their efforts to dissuade him from pursuing music as anything but an avocation. In the face of their 'repeated and incessant admonition' he finally decided to 'seek out once again the books that I had laid aside so long before'. According to his recollections, however, he never carried out this plan; no sooner had he made up his mind than an unexpected series of events intervened.

On 27 August 1614 the Elector Johann Georg I of Saxony proposed to Moritz that Schütz should come to Dresden for the baptism of the elector's son August on 18 September 1614 and 'stay a while with us'. The roots of the elector's interest in Schütz prove easy to discern. Since the semi-retirement of Rogier Michael in 1613 the electoral Kapelle lacked adequate leadership; Michael Praetorius served as visiting director, but his primary responsibilities lay in Wolfenbüttel. Moritz gave his consent, and Schütz left for the Saxon capital, where he presumably assisted Praetorius at the baptismal ceremonies. On 10 October Johann Georg wrote to the landgrave to announce Schütz's impending return to Kassel. Six months later, in a letter of 25 April 1615, Johann Georg asked Moritz to lend him Schütz's services for two years, 'until we once more have at our disposal those persons' – evidently Johann Nauwach and Johann Klemm – 'whom we have sent to Italy and elsewhere to learn this art'. Moritz, though protesting that he could hardly do without Schütz in his Kapelle for such a long time, acceded to the elector's request. Schütz left for Dresden at the end of August.

2. EARLY MANHOOD (1615–27). By the time Schütz left Kassel for Dresden in August 1615 the increasing pace of his musical activities and the favour shown him by Johann Georg must have persuaded him to abandon any thought of another career. Schütz wrote in January 1651 that the elector's favour also helped reconcile his parents to the course that he now seemed destined to pursue. He became in effect Johann Georg's Kapellmeister. The official title still lay in the hands of Rogier Michael, and Praetorius remained, at least in principle, on call to direct the Kapelle on special occasions; but in practice, as Schütz recollected in a petition of 11 April 1651, 'I served for both of them, as I was still young'.

On 1 December 1616 Landgrave Moritz wrote to Johann Georg asking for Schütz to return; Georg Otto had become incapable of performing his duties. Moritz added that he also wanted Schütz as a tutor for his sons, but Christoph von Loss, who received the letter, advised Johann Georg against complying with the landgrave's request. In a memorandum of 11 December Loss wrote that 'I know at present of no-one preferable to the aforementioned Schütz', and he advised the elector to seek to obtain Schütz permanently.

Moritz replied to the elector on 24 December. Stressing once again Schütz's indispensability to him, he nevertheless agreed to let him remain in Dresden 'a while longer' until he 'might bring your Kapelle to the desired condition'. Soon, however, the landgrave, whose political situation demanded that he remain on good terms with Saxony, had no choice but to capitulate; in a letter of 16 January 1617 he ceded Schütz permanently to the elector. Following the death of Otto in November 1618, Moritz tried once again to regain Schütz from Johann Georg; the elector, replying on 25 January 1619, rejected the idea out of hand, and the post of Hesse Kapellmeister went to Christoph Cornet. Schütz nevertheless maintained amicable ties with Kassel. Not only did he continue to send his music there for at least three decades, but Moritz and his successor, Wilhelm V, seem occasionally to have entrusted young musicians to his care.

Schütz's name appears on a Dresden pay document of 1618 as 'organist and musical director'; in printed and manuscript sources covering the period from July 1617 to June 1618 he described himself as either 'musical director' or 'derzeit Kapellmeister' – a term he probably used to mean 'provisional' or 'interim' Kapellmeister. The final unqualified acceptance of Schütz as Hofkapellmeister coincides with Praetorius's death in 1621. From then on he received an annual salary increase of 200 florins. His duties appear to have consisted above all in the provision of music for major court ceremonies, whether primarily religious or primarily political in nature; as he remarked in his petition of January 1651, he 'most obediently served' Johann Georg at 'imperial, royal, electoral and princely assemblies' as well as at the baptisms of most of the elector's children and the weddings of all of them. He less frequently directed the music performed at ordinary religious observances; from the mid-1620s onwards this task lay increasingly in the hands of a vice-Kapellmeister. Schütz's letters reveal that he also had the responsibilities of keeping the Kapelle adequately staffed, ensuring proper living conditions for its members and supervising the musical education of the choirboys. During the following decades he taught several notable composers, among them his cousin Heinrich Albert, Christoph Bernhard, Johann Klemm, Johann Theile and Matthias Weckmann.

Schütz's first important opportunities to present the kind of sumptuous musical display favoured by his employer came within a few months of his permanent transfer to Dresden. On 15 July 1617 the Emperor Matthias and his family came to the electoral court on a state visit. Schütz furnished the text – and no doubt the music – for a mythological ballet presented in honour of the emperor ten days later; with the possible exception of a single number, only the libretto survives. According to an ordinance for the festivities, Schütz also had to make certain that 'good music ... is not wanting ... in church' and 'in general see to it that His Grace's Kapelle wins the praise and admiration of the visitors'. At the end of October the court held an elaborate celebration for the centenary of the Reformation. A detailed account of the event by the court chaplain Matthias Hoe von Hoenegg indicates that Schütz and his musicians – 16 singers and an even larger body of instrumentalists – performed at least four concerted compositions at each of the three church services that marked the occasion; the works included some pieces that Schütz subsequently published in his Psalmen Davids (SWV41, 43 and 45, and perhaps 35 and 47). Not all the music from this period, however, maintains such a grand scale. The madrigal SWV Anh.1, possibly an adaptation of an Italian model, seems to date from the early Dresden years as well, as may the Marenzio parody SWV450, at least in its first version (SWV450*a*).

As director of the largest and most important musical establishment in Protestant Germany, Schütz inevitably found the scope of his activities widening beyond the confines of Dresden. In December 1617 he went to Gera to advise Prince Heinrich Posthumus of Reuss on the reorganization of music in the town and its schools and at the prince's court. In 1618 the authorities of Magdeburg Cathedral asked Schütz, along with Praetorius and Samuel Scheidt, to oversee the reorganization of their Kapelle. In the same year Schütz applied to the elector for a printing privilege, which was immediately granted (and renewed in connection with the Becker Psalter in 1627/8 and the Kleine geistliche Concerte in 1636). In 1618 he wrote and published the wedding concertos SWV20 and 21, the first for the marriage of the Saxon consistorial councillor Joseph Avenarius and Anna Dorothea Görlitz on 21 April, the second for the wedding of the Leipzig jurist Michael Thomas – a friend of the composer's brothers Georg and Benjamin – to Anna Schultes on 15 June. The following spring he published his first collection of sacred music, the Psalmen Davids sampt etlichen Moteten und Concerten SWV22–47; he dedicated the volume to Johann Georg. The appearance of the psalms, which fulfilled his ambition to 'distinguish myself properly by bringing forth a worthy piece of work', coincided with the preparations for his own wedding: on 1 June 1619 he married Magdalena Wildeck, the 18-year-old daughter of an official at the electoral court. Schütz sent copies of the print along with wedding invitations to church and city councils throughout Germany, several of which responded with generous gifts; he postdated the foreword to the day of the ceremony. On 9 August 1619 Schütz's brother Georg married Anna Gross in Leipzig; the composer no doubt attended the service, for which he wrote the concerto SWV48. Six days later he joined Praetorius, Scheidt and Johann Staden in Bayreuth at the inauguration of an organ that Margrave Christian of Brandenburg-Bayreuth had had built for the Stadtkirche there.

The Psalmen Davids and the three wedding concertos that surrounded them inaugurated a period of steady and varied productivity for Schütz. A number of works in manuscript – SWV263–4*a*, 289*a*, 326*a*, 429*a*, 430*a*, 450, 457, 459, 464, 475, 497 and Anh.k – seem to have originated about 1620 or not long afterwards. The psalm motet SWV51 belongs to this period as well. In 1621 Schütz composed a musical tableau for the elector's birthday, which fell on 5 March; only the libretto survives. In October of the same year he and 16 members of his Kapelle went to Breslau as part of the large retinue that Johann Georg took with him to the ceremonies proclaiming the loyalty of the Silesian estates to the Holy Roman Empire. The elector, who had negotiated the peace between the estates and Emperor Ferdinand II after the Battle of the White Mountain in 1620, served as the emperor's deputy at the formal declaration of loyalty on 3' November. Schütz wrote the Syncharma musicum SWV49, and possibly also the concerto SWV338, to commemorate the occasion.

In 1623 Schütz published the elegy SWV52 – for which he wrote both words and music – to commemorate the interment of Johann Georg's mother, Duchess Sophia, on 28 January at Freiberg. The spring of 1623 saw the appearance of the Historia der ... Aufferstehung ... Jesu Christi SWV50, Schütz's first major publication since the Psalmen Davids. A volume of motets, the Cantiones sacrae SWV53–93, followed two years later; Schütz dedicated it to the imperial adviser Prince Johann Ulrich von Eggenberg, whom he had met on the occasion of the Emperor Matthias's visit to Dresden in 1617. Between these two larger projects came a madrigal, Zwei wunderschöne Täublein zart, for the wedding of the electoral courtiers Reinhart von Taube and Barbara Sibylla von Carlowitz on 10 February 1624; only Schütz's text for this piece survives. In summer 1625 he composed the motet SWV95 on the death of Jacob Schultes – the brother of the Anna Schultes for whose wedding he had provided music in 1618 – and the 'aria' De vitae fugacitate SWV94, a memorial for Magdalena Schütz's sister Anna Maria Wildeck, who died on 15 August.

Only three weeks after the death of his sister-in-law, Schütz suffered perhaps the severest personal blow of his life: on 6 September 1625 Magdalena Schütz died after a short illness. The composer and his wife had enjoyed an unusually warm and happy marriage blessed with two daughters, Anna Justina, born in 1621, and Euphrosina, born on 28 November 1623. Schütz, feeling unable to bring them up by himself, eventually placed them in the care of their maternal grandmother. He expressed his grief over Magdalena's loss in the continuo song SWV501, published as an appendix to Hoe von Hoenegg's funeral oration. Contrary to custom, he never remarried. For more than a year after the loss of his wife, Schütz seems to have devoted himself chiefly to the composition of the so-called Becker Psalter (SWV97*a*–256*a*), a collection of simple partsongs based on the popular psalm paraphrases of the Leipzig theologian Cornelius Becker. The volume appeared early in 1628 with a dedication to the Danish-born Dowager Electress Hedwig, widow of Johann Georg's brother Christian II. In the foreword Schütz wrote that the project had grown out of occasional settings of Becker's psalms that he had made 'for the morning and evening devotions of the choirboys placed in my charge'; he had little thought of adding to these pieces, however, until > it pleased God the almighty … that the sudden death of my late dear wife … bring to a halt such other work as I was engaged in and put this little psalter in my hands, as it were, so that I could draw greater comfort from it in my sorrow.

Schütz dated the foreword on the second anniversary of Magdalena's death.

In speaking of 'other work' that he had set aside, Schütz may have meant a second volume of Psalmen Davids – as late as the 1660s he referred to the publication of 1619 as 'Part i'. He appears to have made at least a start on this undertaking at about the time the Becker Psalter went to press. The Kassel manuscripts include no fewer than four concerted psalms – SWV462, 466, 473 and Anh.7 – evidently copied not long after March 1627; stylistic considerations suggest further that the psalm SWV476, although transmitted in a considerably later source, belongs to this group as well. Yet another psalm, SWV473, survives in a manuscript copied in the late 1620s or early 1630s; but in this instance, the style of the music points to a date after 1629.

In the spring of 1627 Schütz and his Kapelle spent a month at the castle of Hartenfels at Torgau, where the elector mounted a lavish series of entertainments to celebrate the wedding of his daughter Sophia Eleonora to Landgrave Georg II of Hesse-Darmstadt. The ceremony took place on 1 April; 12 days later, in the words of a chronicler, 'the musicians enacted with music a pastoral tragi-comedy about Daphne'. The laconic reporter had in fact witnessed the performance of the first opera (or, better, Singspiel) created in Germany. Martin Opitz adapted the libretto from the Dafne written by Rinuccini for Peri more than 30 years earlier; Schütz's music, like that of all his stage works, does not survive. In a more modest contribution to the festivities he wrote a little duet, SWV96, to conclude a set of German villanellas written by his colleague Johann Nauwach and dedicated to the landgrave and Sophia Eleonora on their wedding day (RISM 1627[9]). A similar work, the canzonetta SWV441, survives in a partially autograph manuscript that dates from about this time or not long afterwards and thus presumably originated in the middle or late 1620s as well. In the autumn Schütz went with Johann Georg to the electoral assembly held at Mühlhausen from 4 October to 5 November. He submitted a memorandum listing a group of six singers and 12 instrumentalists whom he hoped to take with him; as a contingency measure he added a reduced list of performers. The elector apparently let him have the larger ensemble, since the concerto SWV465, written for the assembly, exceeds the instumental forces detailed in the second list.

3. Middle age (1628–45). Although Saxony did not take part in the Thirty Years War for well over a decade after it began in 1618, economic pressures started to make themselves felt at the electoral court towards the end of the 1620s. On Palm Sunday 1628 the singers and instrumentalists of the Kapelle submitted a petition, written for them by Schütz, asking Johann Georg for back wages. On 22 April 1628 Schütz wrote to the elector asking permission to pay another visit to Italy; the letter makes it clear that he had broached the subject on previous occasions. Johann Georg eventually granted the request, and he also wrote a recommendation to the Duchess of Tuscany at the Florentine court. Schütz probably spent some time in Florence in either 1628 or 1629. Since his first visit to Italy, he wrote in his letter to the elector, 'everything has changed and the music in use at princely banquets, comedies, ballets and other such productions has markedly improved'. He directed his energies to absorbing the new developments. In an elegy printed by Geier, the Dresden court poet David Schirmer wrote that Schütz enjoyed the aid of 'the noble Monteverdi', who 'guided him with joy and happily showed him the long-sought path'; Schütz later paid tribute to Monteverdi with the concerto SWV356, an adaptation of the older master's Armato il cor and chaconne Zefiro torna e di soavi accenti. Monteverdi may have advised him on dramatic monody in particular. Writing on 6 February 1633 to Friedrich Lebzelter, the Saxon emissary in Hamburg, Schütz recalled that > during my recent journey to Italy I engaged myself in a singular manner of composition, namely how a comedy of diverse voices can be translated into declamatory style and be brought to the stage and enacted in song – things that to the best of my knowledge … are still completely unknown in Germany.

On 29 June 1629, new style, Schütz reported sending a consignment of music and instruments back to Germany and having engaged the Mantuan violinist Francesco Castelli for the electoral court. During his final weeks in Venice he published his Symphoniae sacrae SWV257–76; in the preface, dated 'XIV. Calend. Sept.' (19 August), he described the collection as the fruits of his encounter with the 'fresh devices' used by the newer Italian composers 'to tickle the ears of today'. He dedicated the volume to the elector's musically inclined eldest son, who also bore the name Johann Georg.

Schütz returned to Germany with Castelli and Caspar Kittel, a former choirboy at Dresden whom the elector had sent to Venice in 1624. They reached court by 20 November 1629 together with three new cornetts and four 'cornettini' that Schütz brought with him. In the months following his return from Italy, Schütz had to provide music for two major celebrations at court: the marriage of the elector's daughter Maria Elisabeth to Duke Friedrich III of Holstein-Gottorf on 21 February 1630, and the centenary of the Augsburg Confession on 5–7 June. In January 1631 he published the motet SWV277 as a memorial to his friend Johann Hermann Schein, who had died in Leipzig the preceding 19 November.

The autumn of 1631 brought further bereavement to Schütz with the deaths of his father and father-in-law in early October. The autumn also saw Saxony enter the Thirty Years War for the first time. At an assembly held in Leipzig from 10 February to 3 April 1631 – to which Schütz and his Kapelle accompanied Johann Georg – the German electors and their allies had resolved to steer a middle course between the Catholic League and the anti-imperial opposition spearheaded by King Gustavus II Adolphus of Sweden. But on 11 September Johann Georg formed an alliance with Gustavus Adolphus, and Saxon troops joined the Swedish army at the Battle of Breitenfeld in November. The expense of Saxony's military effort spelt the end of any hope of improvement in the Kapelle. Although 13 singers and a slightly larger group of instrumentalists remained in 1632, their numbers soon declined drastically, and musical activities at the court ground almost to a halt.

On 6 February 1633 Schütz received a letter from Friedrich Lebzelter, informing him that Crown Prince Christian of Denmark had asked if he would go to Copenhagen to direct the music at the prince's forthcoming wedding to Johann Georg's daughter Magdalena Sibylla. On 1 March Prince Christian sent Schütz a passport and addressed a formal request to Johann Georg for his services; at the same time Christian wrote to his aunt, the Electress Hedwig, seeking her support for his plan. Several months appear to have elapsed, however, before Schütz left for Denmark. In July Prince Christian wrote to urge that he come as quickly as possible; but even this does not seem to have had any immediate result. In all probability the composer remained at the electoral court to prepare and direct the music for thanksgiving services held on 6–7 September to commemorate the victory at Breitenfeld two years before. On 18 November Lebzelter wrote to Christian from Hamburg that Schütz and his entourage had arrived there two months earlier and would proceed to Denmark as soon as the prince reached Haderslev, where the royal family maintained one of its residences. A register of the electoral Kapelle from April 1634 reveals that Matthias Weckmann and the instrumentalist Daniel Hämmerlein accompanied Schütz on his journey. While Hämmerlein may have continued the rest of the way to Denmark, Weckmann would appear to have remained in Hamburg; his pupil Johann Kortkamp later reported that Schütz took Weckmann there to study with Jacob Praetorius (ii) for a period of three years, and this could hardly refer to any other occasion. Schütz presumably left Hamburg shortly after Lebzelter wrote to Christian; he stopped to visit the prince at Haderslev and then, before 7 December, set off for Copenhagen bearing a letter of introduction to the king's privy councillor Ditlev Reventlow. On his arrival in the capital a few days later he received the title of Kapellmeister to King Christian IV, at an annual salary of 800 reichsthaler, starting on 10 December.

The wedding festivities for the crown prince and Magdalena Sibylla lasted from 3 to 18 October 1634. Schütz appears to have brought a number of musicians from Germany for the occasion to augment the already sizable Danish kapel. The organist Michael Cracowit, who had worked in Denmark the previous year, wrote on leaving a post at Danzig that Schütz had invited him to return to his former position; the English flautist John Price came from Dresden and Heinrich Albert, employed at the time at Königsberg, composed an aria for the entry of the Saxon princess into Copenhagen on 30 September. A chronicle published by the Copenhagen bookseller J.J. Holst in Latin (1635), Danish (1637) and German (1648) versions reveals that the entertainments during the celebration included a ballet and two dramatic pieces with music and dancing; a Comoedia de raptu Orithiae, performed on 8 October, and a Comoedia de Harpyriarum profligatione, given on 12 October. Although Holst does not mention him by name, Schütz no doubt wrote the music to both comedies, especially as a notice in the court records states that the king conferred directly with Schütz about 'the monsters that will be employed' in them. Neither work survives, nor, with a single exception – the canzonetta SWV278, sung as part of a tableau in a procession on 13 October – does anything else composed by Schütz for the wedding. Schütz remained in Denmark until May 1635. As a parting gift the king made him a present of 200 reichsthaler and a gold chain with a portrait – perhaps the one shown in paintings of the composer. On 14 June Johann Georg wrote to King Christian announcing Schütz's return. Ten days later the court held a festive service to celebrate the Peace of Prague, which created a unified German front – including Saxony – against the Swedes and seemed to promise an early end to the fighting; Schütz no doubt directed the music.

Directly after his return to Dresden, Schütz appears to have assembled a collection of his most recent works for his former employers at Kassel. On 30 March Wilhelm V had written to the composer recommending a musician for the Danish kapel and taken the opportunity to ask if Schütz – who had 'previously been in the habit of honouring our Kapelle at all times with your new compositions and pieces but not done so for a while' – would 'send at the earliest possible moment those pieces which you have recently composed and our Kapelle still does not have, and also [would] not object to providing us with whatever else you compose in the future'. Manuscripts still at Kassel as well as an inventory of music at the Hesse court from 1638 indicate that Schütz sent several works later published in the Kleine geistliche Concerte (SWV287*a*, 293, 296*a*, 298, 300, 301*a*, 302*a*, 304*a*, 316*a*, 317, 325, 331*a*), the second book of Symphoniae sacrae (SWV341*a*, 348*a*, 349, 352*a*, 361*a*) and the Geistliche Chor-Music (SWV455), along with a handful of compositions never printed (SWV449 and 460, and a lost setting of Christ lag in Todesbanden). One of the pieces in the group, the German Nunc dimittis SWV352*a*, bears a dedication to Christoph Cornet, 'ever to serve him with greatest affection'; Cornet, who died of the plague shortly before 2 August 1635, had no doubt commissioned the work as his funeral music.

On 3 December 1635, barely four months after Cornet's death, Heinrich Posthumus died. Schütz wrote the largest and most important of all his funeral compositions, the Musicalische Exequien SWV279–81, for the prince's interment on 4 February 1636. In keeping with a frequent practice of the time, Heinrich Posthumus had arranged many details of his own funeral, even leaving instructions about the text and character of the music he wished performed. It does not appear, however, that he actually asked Schütz to compose the Exequien for him; the printed order of service for the burial states explicitly that the commission came from Heinrich's widow and sons.

In autumn 1636 Schütz published his first collection of music for seven years, the Erste Theil kleiner geistlichen Concerten SWV282–305; he dedicated the volume to Heinrich von Friesen, head of the appellate court at Dresden. By the time it appeared, the hopes raised by the Peace of Prague had vanished. France, which had tacitly supported Sweden, entered openly into the war, initiating a new phase of the hostilities that brought catastrophe on a scale previously unimagined. Schütz attempted to return to Denmark. As early as September 1635 Prince Christian reported to one of his father's ministers that the composer had written to offer his services. In a petition for leave from February 1637 Schütz noted that he had left his 'best pieces of music' in Denmark and had a stipend from the crown prince as well as other prospects awaiting him there; he hoped Johann Georg would allow him at least to retrieve the music.

The journey to Denmark evidently never materialized; no mention of it occurs either in Danish records or in Geier's biography. Seeking to extend the protection that his compositions enjoyed in Saxony to the neighbouring territories of the Holy Roman Empire, Schütz petitioned Ferdinand III for a copyright privilege; on 3 April 1637 the emperor granted his request, which Schütz had probably made in response to the pirating of the concertos SWV39 and 291 in RISM 1638[5].

After the death of his brother Georg in 1637, Schütz became responsible for the education of Georg's children, one of whom, whose school had fallen into disarray because of the war, he brought to live with him and installed as a treble in the electoral Kapelle. The long series of personal losses that Schütz suffered throughout the 1630s culminated with the death of his elder daughter, Anna Justina, in the early months of 1638. In late autumn Schütz and his Kapelle provided music for the wedding of Prince Johann Georg and Princess Magdalena Sybilla of Brandenburg. Town pipers and trumpeters from Dresden and elsewhere joined the depleted corps of electoral musicians for the festivities, which lasted from 13 to 20 November and concluded with a five-act opera-ballet on the Orpheus legend. Only the libretto of this work, by the Wittenberg poet August Buchner, survives; the title-page describes the music as 'composed by the electoral Kapellmeister Heinrich Schütz in the Italian manner'.

Towards the end of spring 1639 Schütz published his second volume of Kleine geistliche Concerte (SWV306–37); he dedicated the collection to Christian IV's youngest son, Prince Frederik. In the preface, dated 2 June 1639, Schütz apologized for offering the prince 'so small and simple a piece of work', noting once again how the war made it impossible to bring out the 'other and (without boasting) better works that I have at hand'. Within a few months of the concertos' appearance he took another extended leave from the electoral court, going to Hanover and Hildesheim to serve as Kapellmeister to Georg of Calenberg. Schütz stayed less than 18 months; his correspondence shows that he returned to Dresden by the first week of 1641. He found the electoral Kapelle in a state of almost total collapse. In November 1639 Johann Georg had made an effort to strengthen the ensemble by appropriating the services of some young musicians employed by his eldest son; but even with this measure, the group numbered barely ten members, and salaries, despite frequent pleas for assistance, continued to go unpaid. Writing to the elector on 7 March 1641, Schütz likened the situation to that of a patient in his death throes. Mindful that the war prevented an immediate restoration of the Kapelle to full strength, he urged that Johann Georg at least ensure its eventual rebirth by making provision for the training of eight boys as singers and instrumentalists; nothing, however, seems to have come of the proposal. At the close of the letter Schütz revealed that he himself had just recovered from a grave illness; fear of impending death might account for the uncommonly agitated tone of a letter of 17 February concerning the overdue payment of 1000 florins borrowed from a trust that he had established for his daughter. Moser (1936) suggested that Schütz wrote the concerto SWV346–7, published in the second book of Symphoniae sacrae, as a token of gratitude for his recovery; the idea would seem specially plausible in view of the fact that the first part exists in a manuscript version copied in the early or mid-1640s (SWV346*a*).

Schütz spent most of the years 1642–4 in Denmark, where he must have arrived by the end of October 1642, since Geier and others report that he directed the music at the double wedding of King Christian's twin daughters in November. He received his last payment from the Danish court on 30 April 1644. After leaving Copenhagen he went again to the Brunswick-Lüneburg territories until the spring of 1645. His known artistic activities during this period all centred on the nearby court of Wolfenbüttel, the residence of Duke August the younger of Brunswick-Lüneburg. Musical affairs at court appear to have lain chiefly in the hands of August's wife, SOPHIE ELISABETH, a princess from the ducal house of Mecklenburg-Güstrow and a composer of considerable talent. A letter of Schütz's, written from Brunswick on 22 October 1644, reveals that he advised the duchess in her creative efforts and hints at a more ambitious collaboration between her and the composer. Following a visit to Hildesheim on personal business, Schütz wrote, he planned to meet the duchess at Wolfenbüttel 'to discuss and consider whatever is necessary to the completion of the musical work that we have at hand'. The preparations no doubt concerned the Theatralische neue Vorstellung von der Maria Magdalena, a spectacle presented at the end of the year. The court poet Justus Georg Schottelius later published two songs from the work with the remark that Schütz had provided the settings. Sophie Elisabeth presumably contributed to the piece as well, as Schütz's reference to her arias could indicate.

On 23 February 1645 Schütz stood godfather to the third child of Delphin Strungk, the organist at the Marienkirche, Brunswick, and he probably went to Wolfenbüttel to attend a festive birthday celebration for Duke August, held there on 10 April. On his return journey to Dresden he stopped in Leipzig, where he evidently made the acquaintance of the young Johann Rosenmüller, to whose Paduanen ... mit drey Stimmen, published in the autumn of 1645, he contributed a gratulatory poem 'sent from Dresden' following his arrival there.

4. OLD AGE (1645–56). In 1645, when he was almost 60 years of age and with over 30 years of service to the Saxon court, Schütz felt that the time had come to withdraw from active duty as Kapellmeister. He asked for a pension of 200 thalers a year along with the right to retain his title and direct the Kapelle on special occasions, 'particularly when foreign rulers or emissaries are present'. In a memorandum of September 1645 he expressed a wish to absent himself from Dresden during most of the year and to settle in Weissenfels. Johann Georg granted his wishes only in part; he appears to have let him go to Weissenfels almost every autumn or winter for the next decade, but he did not let him retire. On leaving Dresden after Easter 1646, Schütz evidently went first to Calbe an der Saale, where August of Saxony, the administrator of Magdeburg, had a summer residence; August's betrothal, to Princess Anna Maria of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, on 6 September may have provided the occasion for the visit. On 7 September Schütz wrote from Calbe to an otherwise unknown correspondent named Christian Schirmer, who had solicited his opinion on the celebrated dispute between Paul Siefert and Marco Scacchi. In 1643 Scacchi had published a treatise entitled Cribrum musicum ad triticum Syferticum in which he subjected some compositions of Siefert's to a withering critique for their contrapuntal deficiencies; Siefert, who had provoked the attack by claiming that Italians no longer knew how to write correct counterpoint, responded in 1645 with a polemic entitled Anticribratio musica ad avenam Schachianam. Schütz declined to render an immediate judgment on the matter, but wrote,

I for my part would indeed have wished that Master Siefert had not instigated this affair, since in my estimation, as far as I have been able to gather from a quick and casual perusal, Master Scacchi ... is an extremely well-grounded musician; and thus I will have no choice, it seems to me, but to agree with him in many things.

In a second letter, evidently written early in 1648, he affirmed his support for Scacchi.

Midway through winter 1646–7 Schütz made a short visit to Weimar to attend a birthday celebration for Eleonora Dorothea, the wife of Duke Wilhelm of Saxe-Weimar. The duke noted that Schütz and the poet Christian Timotheus Dufft, who had come from Gotha for the occasion, 'had a most excellent song of thanks performed by the Kapelle'. The composition, SWV368, appeared in print soon afterwards. Shortly after his return to Dresden, Schütz brought out his first collection of music for eight years, the Symphoniarum sacrarum secunda pars, SWV341–67; he dedicated the volume to Prince Christian of Denmark. In the prefatory material – the date of which, 1 May 1647, may represent the third anniversary of his departure from Copenhagen – Schütz wrote that he had in fact completed the symphoniae 'some years ago' and presented them in manuscript to Christian while serving at the Danish court. The continuing disruptions caused by the Thirty Years War, as well as the knowledge that few German performers had a sufficient understanding of music composed in the 'modern Italian manner', had made him reluctant to publish them; only when they began to circulate widely in faulty copies did he change his mind. Apart from the Symphoniae sacrae, few compositions of Schütz's occur in sources of the early and mid-1640s. The Breslau organist Ambrosius Profe included the concerto SWV338 and the dialogue SWV339 in a collection (RISM 1641[3]); five years later the concerto SWV340 appeared in another volume assembled by Profe (RISM 1646[4]). Manuscripts from this period in Kassel contain the dialogues SWV444 and 477, and the concerto SWV456. A related group of sources in the same collection includes the madrigals SWV438 and 442, the concerto SWV469 and a handful of works subsequently published in the third book of Symphoniae sacrae (SWV398*a*, 401*a*, 406*a*, 416*a*, 418*a*); but these copies probably originated closer to the end of the decade. The Magnificat SWV468, a work found outside Kassel in a source of uncertain date, so closely resembles the larger pieces in the Kassel manuscripts that its composition must surely have fallen in roughly the same period as theirs.

August 1647 brought one of the few truly happy events of Schütz's later years: the engagement of his daughter Euphrosina to Christoph Pincker, a jurist in Leipzig. The wedding took place in Dresden on 25 January 1648; two days later, the musicians of the electoral Kapelle presented the bride and groom with a ballet whose libretto, signed by the court singer Johann Georg Hofkontz, praised Schütz as 'the Orpheus of our time'. Between 15 and 28 January 1648 Georg of Calenberg's brother Friedrich, the Duke of Celle, ordered a payment to Schütz of 20 thalers. The sum probably represents a combined wedding gift and honorarium for the second book of Symphoniae sacrae, a copy of which appears in a later inventory of music belonging to the Celle Kantorei. Against his original plans, Schütz appears to have stayed in Dresden after the wedding and presumbly devoted the greater part of his time to overseeing the publication of his Geistliche Chor-Music SWV369–97, a set of motets that he had presumably completed during the preceding year. The collection seems to represent a practical response on Schütz's part to the Scacchi–Siefert controversy; several remarks in the foreword echo both Scacchi's Cribrum musicum and the composer's own recent commentary on the dispute.

In a letter of 17 July 1648 Johann Georg placed Schütz at the disposal of his cousin Duke Wilhelm of Saxe-Weimar, whose Kapelle evidently lacked a permanent director at that time. Schütz himself presumably took the letter to Weimar. He no doubt took advantage of his presence there to supply the court with copies of his newest works. An inventory of the ducal Kapelle of 1662 lists a substantial number of compositions by him, several of which no longer exist; the lost works include a pair of German sacred madrigals 'that he left with us the last time he came here'. After further absences from Dresden, Hofkontz wrote in a memorandum of 16 May 1648 to the elector that Schütz 'has now once again sat for a year in Weissenfels and concerned himself with the Kapelle hardly or not at all'. The complaint does not seem wholly unjustified. Whether or not Hofkontz's remarks had any repercussions, Schütz's correspondence shows that he returned to Dresden within little over a month and stayed there without interruption for two years or slightly longer.

During Schütz's absence from Dresden the Peace of Westphalia, signed on 24 October 1648, at last brought the Thirty Years War to a close. But the peace had little immediate effect on musical conditions at the electoral court. Although both Johann Georg and his eldest son increased the size of their Kapellen – by the spring of 1651 the elector had 19 singers and instrumentalists in his employ, the prince 18 – the court remained heavily in debt, and the musicians continued to go without pay. Ceremonies commemorating the end of the war did not take place until 22 July 1650, following the departure of the occupying Swedish forces. An ordinance of the day's events reveals that the music performed included the early psalm SWV45; manuscript and stylistic evidence suggests further that Schütz composed the psalm SWV461 for the occasion. From 14 November to 11 December the court held a series of festivities for the marriage of Johann Georg's youngest sons, Christian and Moritz, to the princesses Christiana and Sophia Hedwig of Holstein-Glücksburg. At the nuptial service on 19 November, a chronicler reported, 'some pieces composed for this princely wedding by the Kapellmeister Heinrich Schütz were performed'.

1. First page of Schütz's petition (dated 14 January 1651) to Elector Johann Georg I of Saxony (D-Dla)

In the brief period between the peace celebration and the wedding Schütz brought out his Symphoniarum sacrarum tertia pars SWV398–418; the foreword bears the date Michaelmas 1650. He accompanied its presentation to the elector with the often quoted petition of 14 January 1651, in which, after recounting the circumstances of his life up to his arrival in Dresden and reviewing what he had achieved there, he made a renewed plea for release from his duties (fig.1). As he had done six years earlier, he asked the elector to > free me from my regular obligations (so that I may gather together and complete what remains of the musical works that I began in my youth and have them printed for my remembrance) and requested a pension and the right to keep his title. He reported that the castrato G.A. Bontempi, a singer in Prince Johann Georg's Kapelle and an aspiring composer, had offered to conduct for him; Schütz warmly supported the proposal and hoped that the elector would acquiesce in it.

Neither this attempt, however, nor a reminder contained in a note of 11 April 1651 to the elector's private secretary, Reichbrodt, appears to have had any effect. Meanwhile the lot of the Kapelle grew worse. Things had got so bad for one of the singers, Schütz had heard, 'that he is living like a sow in a pigsty, has no bedstead, sleeps on straw [and] has already pawned his coat and doublet'. Hopeful nevertheless of some improvement, Schütz suggested a number of measures that he thought might help; he even volunteered to defer his plans for retirement if the elector 'would show me the kindness of assigning me a young, qualified substitute' – Schütz now proposed Christoph Bernhard, Bontempi evidently having become director of Prince Johann Georg's Kapelle – to conduct in his place.

The Weissenfels city records show that Schütz purchased a house there before the end of 1651. He returned to Dresden between 17 November 1651 and 24 January 1652, and on 4 February 1652 wrote to inform Reichbrodt that four members of the Kapelle had resolved to leave the elector's service. On 28 May he reported that the Kapelle now stood to lose the bass about whom he had told him the previous year. The continued lack of response to his petition for retirement finally moved Schütz to seek the aid of the court marshal, Heinrich von Taube, to whom he wrote on 26 June 1652 explaining yet again his reasons for wanting to withdraw from active service. This attempt had no more effect than any of the previous ones. At the close of his note Schütz remarked that he planned to visit Halle and Weissenfels in the near future 'to pull together what few assets I still have'. He presumably did not begin his journey until after 11 October 1652, when the elector's daughter Magdalena Sibylla, the widow of the Danish crown prince, married Duke Friedrich Wilhelm of Saxe-Altenburg. He had written the continuo song SWV434 for the couple's engagement a year earlier, and he no doubt supplied music for the wedding as well. The festivities scheduled for the occasion included a ballet-opera, Der triumphierende Amor, with a libretto by Schirmer; a death in the electoral family two weeks before the wedding, however, forced the cancellation of the performance. Apart from SWV434 only one work of Schütz's appears to survive from this period: the elegy SWV419, written in memory of Anna Margaretha Brehme, the wife of the court librarian, who died on 21 September 1652.

After dealing with various matters of real estate in Dresden and Weissenfels, Schütz returned to Dresden to audition three musicians newly arrived from Italy and also to participate in celebrations planned for the feast of St John the Baptist on 24 June 1653 – the nameday of the elector, the prince and the latter's eldest son. Ernst Geller, the director of entertainments at court, prepared an arcadian drama for the occasion. An account of the performance by the official diarist notes that the Kapelle took part but provides no details about the music itself.

On 11 August Schütz wrote a prefatory letter for the treatise Von den Madrigalen by the poet and jurist Caspar Ziegler, a stepbrother of Benjamin Schütz's wife. Calling the madrigal 'that poetic genre most perfectly suited to the creation of an artfully wrought composition', Schütz observed that Ziegler's demonstration of how German writers could adopt its flexible verse forms for use in their native idiom answered a need long felt by musicians. Ziegler's treatise must have provided a rare moment of satisfaction in a time of mounting troubles.

The increasingly powerful Prince Johann Georg attempted to restore order by having Schütz and Bontempi, each presumably with his own Kapelle, take charge of the performances in alternate weeks. The action came as an affront to Schütz. As he pointed out in a letter of 21 August 1653 to Reichbrodt, Taube and the court chaplain Jacob Welle, the direction of music on ordinary Sundays traditionally lay not in his hands but in those of the vice-Kapellmeister; and notwithstanding his apparent high regard for Bontempi, it added insult to injury that 'an old and, I hope, not undeserving servant' should have to appear before the public on an equal footing with 'a man three times younger than I and castrated to boot'. Whether this protest had any effect remains unknown. On the same day Schütz addressed a new petition for retirement to the elector; once again he appears not even to have received an answer.

To make matters worse for Schütz, Prince Johann Georg, who already had a number of Italian musicians in his service, apparently placed the three who had recently arrived in the electoral Kapelle; the action provoked considerable religious and nationalistic resentment, and rumours began to circulate holding Schütz – who clearly had never concealed his admiration for Italian music – responsible for it. On 21 September 1653 Schütz submitted a list of the foremost motives and reasons moving him to press for his retirement. Advancing age, he noted, had now affected even his creative powers. While he could still 'work out my compositions as soundly and as well as ever before, it all takes much longer and is more difficult'.

Conditions in the electoral Kapelle remained unchanged; although a letter of Schütz's from 19 June 1654 suggests the existence of a plan to give the musicians at least a portion of their long-overdue salaries – for which they had again petitioned earlier in the year – an appeal submitted to Johann Georg by Hofkontz and the organist Christoph Kittel on 30 November makes it clear that the idea never became a reality. Three days later Weller remarked in a note to the elector that it had become all but impossible to have so much as the Lord's Prayer sung in the palace church.

In 1655 Schütz suffered the loss of his daughter Euphrosina, who died in Leipzig on 11 January; her funeral oration reports that he visited her on her deathbed. Poems of condolence, printed with the sermon, came from Bontempi, Hofkontz, Bernhard and Ziegler among others. Schütz returned to Dresden by 29 May, when he addressed yet another – and, as fate eventually decreed, his last – petition for retirement to the elector. The spring, summer and autumn saw an exchange of letters with Sophie Elisabeth of Brunswick-Lüneburg concerning some new appointments to the ducal Kapelle at Wolfenbüttel. After the departure or death of their Kapellmeister Stephanus Körner not long before, the duchess and her husband evidently decided to entrust the supervision of their musical establishment to Schütz. The composer arranged for Johann Jacob Löwe von Eisenach to assume leadership of the Kapelle, helped procure singers and instrumentalists, and provided choirboys whom he had trained. He would also seem once again to have advised Sophie Elisabeth on her compositions; a postscript to a letter of his from 24 July requests payment for a 'copyist who wrote out Your Grace's little psalter for me in Weissenfels'. The work in question probably corresponds, at least in part, to Sophie Elisabeth's Christ-Fürstliches Davids-Harpfen Spiel, published in 1667. In the same postscript Schütz asked for written confirmation of his own position as absentee Kapellmeister and for payment of the salary promised him. Although payments fell into arrears on more than one occasion, the relationship between Schütz and the Wolfenbüttel court remained a warm one and lasted at least until Duke August's death in 1666.

Schütz's activities in Dresden, meanwhile, appear to have continued unabated. He no doubt directed the electoral Kapelle at special services held on 24 and 25 September 1655 for the centenary of the Peace of Augsburg; and the court diaries – which only at this period begin to provide detailed information about the music sung in the palace church – record several performances under his direction in the spring and early summer of 1656: on 6 April he presented his Resurrection History SWV50, and he led the music at Whitsun (25 May), Trinity Sunday (1 June), and the feasts of St John the Baptist (24 June) and the Visitation (2 July). On the last three occasions the Kapelle had to repeat the service in the elector's private chambers; Johann Georg, almost exactly the same age as Schütz, had fallen gravely ill and could no longer attend church. Throughout the summer his condition worsened, and on 8 October he died. The interment took place in Freiberg on 4 February 1657. As a final act of duty to the man whom he had served for more than 40 years – and whose passing, despite everything, must have affected him deeply – Schütz composed the twin settings of the German Nunc dimittis SWV432–3.

5. Last years (1657–72). With the death of Johann Georg I, Schütz's tribulations in Dresden finally came to an end. The new elector, Johann Georg II, combined his own Kapelle with that of his father, placing the entire ensemble under the direction of Bontempi and the recently engaged Vincenzo Albrici. Schütz, freed now from daily responsibilities, received the title of chief – or, in some documents, senior – Kapellmeister and a pension most likely equal to half his former salary. He continued to write new works for major occasions and no doubt helped shape musical policy at court, but he probably spent most of his time during the next few years preparing a revised and expanded version of his Becker Psalter, which he brought out in 1661 (SWV97–256).

In 1657 Christoph Kittel published a group of Schütz's smaller choral works under the title Zwölff geistliche Gesänge (SWV420–31); although, as the edition stated, these products of the composer's 'spare time' appeared with his approval and – as Steude (1982–3) discovered – he himself furnished the paper for the volume, Schütz does not seem to have taken a direct hand in the preparation of the music. On 10 April 1661, Duke August's 82nd birthday, Schütz sent two copies of the new print of the Becker Psalter to Wolfenbüttel, one each for the duke and the duchess: he had spent 'more than eight months in Dresden', he wrote in the accompanying letter, guiding the volume through the press. These months seem also to have witnessed the first performance of the Historia der ... Geburth ... Jesu Christi SWV435. The court diaries describe the music at Christmas Vespers in 1660 as 'the birth of Christ in recitative style'.

Schütz was absent from the electoral court during a major renovation of the palace church, but performances of sacred music did not wholly cease during this period; on 15 June 1662 the court diarist noted the presentation of a motet by Schütz, Aquae tuae, Domine, which does not survive. According to the same chronicler, Schütz wrote a new setting of Psalm c, 'with trumpets', for the festive reopening of the church on 28 September 1662; this work, too, does not survive. Although the composer evidently did not attend the performance, which Vincenzo Albrici conducted, he went to Dresden shortly afterwards for the wedding of the elector's daughter Erdmuth Sophia to Margrave Ernst Christian of Brandenburg-Bayreuth. The festivities lasted from 18 October to 13 November and reached their musical highpoint with the performance of Bontempi's opera Il Paride on 3 November. On his way to Dresden Schütz stopped at Leipzig, where, on 7 October, he wrote a prefatory epigram for the Geistliche Arien, Dialogen und Concerten of Werner Fabricius.

In 1663 Schütz apparently devoted much of his energy to organizing a Kapelle for the elector's brother Moritz, Duke of Saxe-Zeitz. Documents from Zeitz, where Moritz had established a new residence early in the year, reveal that Schütz arranged the appointments of Löwe von Eisenach as Kapellmeister and Clemens Thieme as chief instrumentalist, and himself received the title of 'Kapellmeister von Haus aus'; letters from Schütz of 14 July and 29 September show that he also procured instruments for the new ensemble, supervised the training of three choirboys whom the duke sent to Dresden in mid-April and even suggested architectural modifications to improve the acoustics of the palace church, which was then under reconstruction.

On 10 January 1664 Schütz wrote from Leipzig to August of Brunswick-Lüneburg announcing that he had sent a number of his printed works – 'as many as I am able to muster for now' – to Wolfenbüttel for the duke's library, one of the largest and most famous in Europe. It is noticeable how frequently in his old age Schütz asked for money still owed him by his patrons, and in his letter of 10 January he regretted the fact that he was unable to send copies of pieces still in manuscript, which he described as 'better worked out than those already mentioned'. This would have happened, he wrote, > and I would have proceeded with their publication, if I had not lacked the means to have it done, and if, as was originally my intention, I could have used for this purpose the retainer or allowance that Your Noble Grace has most generously allotted me – which, however, because of my meagre regular income, I have mostly had to take and use for my scanty provisions and succour.

When a partial edition of the Christmas History SWV435, containing only the evangelist's recitatives, appeared later in 1664 – an edition that the composer seems to have neither instigated nor supervised – the preface stated that Schütz had withheld the work's more richly scored concerted movements from publication 'since he has observed that his inventions would hardly attain their proper effect anywhere but in well-appointed princely Kapellen'; similar considerations might have stood in the way of issuing other works for large forces.

On 1 May 1664 Moritz of Saxe-Zeitz celebrated the opening of his rebuilt palace church with a festive consecration service. Schütz evidently attended the ceremony. The autumn and winter months presumably saw him at work on the initial version of his St John Passion (SWV481*a*); according to court diaries, the electoral Kapelle sang the piece for the first time on Good Friday, 24 March 1665. Schütz sent a copy to August of Brunswick-Lüneburg on the occasion of the duke's birthday on 10 April. The Dresden court diaries report that Schütz wrote a new setting of Psalm c – identical, judging from its description, with SWV493 – for the birthday of the elector's wife on 16 October 1665; the music performed also included a concerto Renunciate Johanni quae audistis, which does not survive. Schütz's Passions according to St Matthew, SWV479, and St Luke, SWV480, received their first performances on the second Sunday before Easter and on Palm Sunday 1666 respectively. On Good Friday, 13 April, the choir repeated the St John Passion given the previous year; Schütz probably created the revised version of the work (SWV481) for this presentation.

Few external events mark the final years of Schütz's life. On 1 January 1667 the court diarist reported a performance of Psalm cl in 'Kapellmeister Schütz's new composition with trumpets and timpani'. A second reference to a 'new' setting of Psalm cl, this time without mention of trumpets and drums, occurs in the programme of a service held on 22 July 1668 to celebrate a recently concluded peace treaty; whether this in fact indicates a new composition or merely denotes a repeat presentation of the work heard the previous year remains uncertain since no music survives from either occasion. Towards the end of the 1660s a dramatic increase in the salaries of the electoral Kapelle brought Schütz's retirement pay to 800 thaler per year – twice what he had earned in active service under Johann Georg I, and two-thirds of the amount given to each of the four Italian Kapellmeister who actually led the ensemble. In the last year of the decade the elector presented him with a gilded cup 'in gracious remembrance', possibly to honour the composer on reaching the age of 84, one of the duodecimal Stufenjahre regarded by German tradition as the major dividing-points in life.

As the account of his funeral in the court diaries reveals, Schütz settled, in about 1670, in rented quarters near the electoral palace. Increasingly weak and hard of hearing, he began to make preparations for his end. A poem by Dedekind, dated 1 September 1670 and written at Schütz's behest, commemorates the completion of his tomb in Dresden's Frauenkirche. Mattheson, in Grundlage einer Ehren-Pforte, reported that Schütz also wrote to Christoph Bernhard in Hamburg asking for a five-voice setting, 'in the Palestrina style of counterpoint', of Psalm cxix.54, the words chosen as the motto for his funeral sermon; the composition, which does not survive, reached Schütz in 1670. 'My son,' he told Bernhard in his letter of thanks, 'you have done me a great kindness in sending the motet for which I asked. I do not know how to improve a single note in it'.

Psalm cxix, the source of Schütz's funeral text, served in its entirety as the basis for his last composition, a monumental eight-voice work in 11 partes (SWV482–92). Dedekind recollected in the preface to his König Davids göldnes Kleinod of 1674 that Schütz had written the psalm 'shortly before his blessed end' and had expressly designated it as his swan-song. Schütz died on 6 November 1672, and his funeral took place on 17 November. Geier delivered the funeral oration; before and after the sermon, the diarist reported, the German members of the Kapelle performed four pieces, 'the first of which was composed by the former vice-Kapellmeister Christoph Bernhard, the other three, however, by the late Kapellmeister himself for voices and instruments'.

6. PORTRAITS. Two authentic portraits of Schütz have come to light. The earlier, an engraving by the Dresden artist August John (1603–after 1678), shows the composer at the age of 42 in resplendent court dress with a medallion bearing the image of Johann Georg I (fig.2). The second portrait, executed in oils by the Leipzig painter Christoph Spetner (1617–99) and housed today in the Bibliothek der Leipzig Universität, portrays a considerably older Schütz in his Kapellmeister's robe, with a rolled sheet of music in his hand further indicative of his station (fig.3); this work provided the model for Romstet's engraving in the funeral sermon. An inscription associating Spetner with Stedten, near Querfurt, implies that the painting originated before October 1654, when the artist became a citizen of Leipzig; but Möller (1984), on the other hand, has argued that the medallion worn by Schütz shows the profile of Johann Georg II, which would point to a date of 1657 or later.

Maerker (1937–8) and Benesch (1963) proposed identifying Schütz as the subject of Rembrandt's Portrait of a Musician of 1633 (Corcoran Gallery of Art, Washington DC); but Sass (1971) disposed of this possibility on iconographic grounds – grounds amply confirmed by the more recent discovery of the John portrait – and

2. Heinrich Schütz aged 42; engraving by August John, 1627/8

3. Heinrich Schütz aged 65: portrait by Christoph Spetner, 1650s (D-LEu)

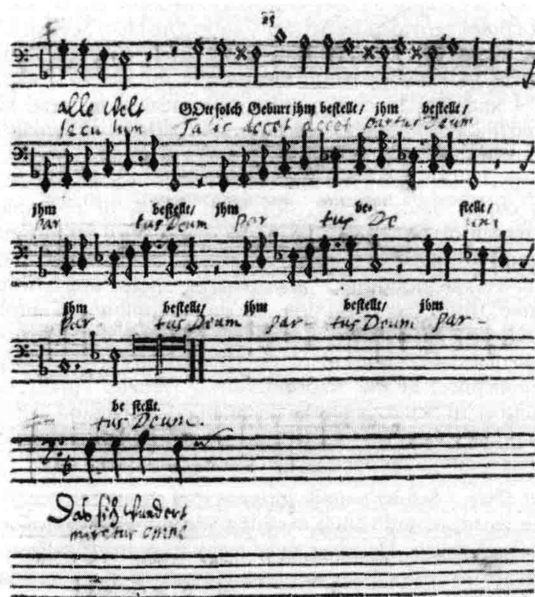
biographical evidence eliminates virtually any chance of a meeting between artist and composer at the time in question. The common identification of Schütz as Kapellmeister in the engraving of the electoral Kapelle done by David Conrad for Bernhard's Geistreiches Gesangbuch of 1676 seems more plausible: the figure not only shows a marked facial resemblance to Schütz but also wears a chain and medallion like that shown in the authentic portraits. Nevertheless, the engraving can hardly count as, or even derive from, an authentic rendering of a scene in which Schütz participated, since it shows the palace church as it looked after the renovations of 1662, by which time he seems no longer to have conducted the Kapelle. Moreover, if Conrad had in fact wished to portray Schütz, he might simply have copied his features from Romstet.



A further likeness of Schütz may appear in an illustrated scroll depicting the funeral of Duke August of Saxony on 4 February 1616. The procession includes a group of eight boys and four men labelled, collectively, 'choirboys and Kapellmeister' (repr. in Schnoor, 1948); the men could represent Schütz, Rogier Michael, Praetorius and the Kapelle administrator. The lack of clearly individuated features, however, as well as the absence of comparative material, renders any attempt at a more precise identification purely speculative.

An anonymous miniature dated 1670, acquired in 1935 by the Prussian State Library – now the Staatsbibliothek zu Berlin – has been exposed as a modern forgery.

7. Works: introduction.

(i) Sources. Schütz's surviving output comprises some 500 works. The major portion of these appears in a series of 14 prints, containing large-scale individual compositions or collections of smaller pieces, that the composer enumerated in a handwritten catalogue sent to August of Brunswick-Lüneburg in 1664 (see Walter, 1973); he had previously published a similar list, covering the first ten volumes in the series, as an appendix to the Symphoniarum sacrarum secunda pars swv341–67. Both lists assign opus numbers to all the prints, though only four of them (opp.10–13) actually bear such designations on their title-pages. With the exception of the Zwölff geistliche Gesänge swv420–31, which he authorized but did not edit, Schütz himself oversaw the production of each volume, and he even supplied the paper – with a watermark containing the family crest and his personal monogram – for several of them. In a number of instances he continued to correct and revise even after publication; the ducal library at Wolfenbüttel (D-W) preserves nine prints in copies given by Schütz to Duke August, several of which show important additions and alterations in the composer's hand (fig.4).

In addition to the pieces contained in the central series of prints, two major works survive in partial printed form. The recitative portions of the Historia, der ... Geburt ... Jesu Christi swv435 appeared in an edition no doubt sanctioned, but not prepared, by the composer. The sole extant copy (in D-Bsb) once belonged to Rudolph August of Brunswick-Lüneburg, the eldest son of August the younger and Sophie Elisabeth, and might have come to the Wolfenbüttel court as a gift from Schütz; several manuscript revisions found in the volume could thus have the composer's authority. In 1671 Schütz had the title-pages and a table of contents printed for the Königs und

4. Page of the Bassus 1 part of Schütz's 'Nun komm, der Heiden Heiland' swv301, from 'Erster Theil kleiner geistlichen Concerten' (Leipzig, 1636); correction and Latin text added in the composer's hand (D-W Cod.Guelf.13.1 Mus.2° (1), p.25)

Propheten Davids hundert und neunzehender Psalm SWV482–94, but the work itself, like most of SWV435, remained in manuscript.

A handful of smaller occasional compositions (SWV20, 21, 48, 49, 52, 94, 95, 277, 278, 432–3, 453, 464) appeared as individual prints, only some of these under Schütz's auspices. Very few works occur in contemporary collections: one each in RISM $1623^{14}$, $1627^{9}$ and $1646^{4}$, two in $1641^{3}$ and three in $1641^{4}$; the funeral sermon RISM $1652^{6a}$ contains one further composition, as does the poetic collection David Schirmers ... poetische Rauten-Gepüsche (Dresden, 1663). Schütz demonstrably or presumably supplied the music to the editors of all these volumes. On the other hand, the printing of excerpts from SWV50 in RISM $1637^{3}$ and of SWV39 and 291 in the companion volume RISM $1638^{5}$ clearly did not have his sanction; SWV39 and the material from SWV50 appear in arrangements verging on falsifications, while SWV291, identical in every respect with the version published in the first book of Kleine geistliche Concerte, seems to represent a simple act of piracy.

As Schütz indicated in several prefaces and letters, war and economic hardship forced him to leave a substantial part of his output unpublished. At least half of these works no longer survive. Fires in the 18th century destroyed the older portions of the Dresden Kapelle library, which Mattheson (1740) described as preserving a 'great number' of compositions by Schütz, and the library of the Danish royal kapel, which presumably contained all the music Schütz wrote during his years in Copenhagen. Important repositories in Lüneburg and Weimar, known through their inventories, exist no longer. The most notable concentration of works in manuscript still extant survives in the Hessische Landesbibliothek, Kassel; these sources, the remains of a larger collection belonging to the Hesse Hofkapelle, originated almost without exception either in Kassel – no doubt on the basis of copies provided by Schütz – or in Dresden. Several of the manuscripts from Dresden have titles or other textual entries in Schütz's hand; the sources for SWV441, 470, 474 and Anh.1 contain autograph musical material as well (fig.5). The manuscript collection of the royal Swedish Kapellmeister Gustav Düben in the Universitetsbibliotek, Uppsala, includes a fair number of works by Schütz, some in copies made locally, others in copies of probable Dresden origin. Before World War II a third important group of Schütz sources existed in the Staats- und Universitätsbibliothek, Königsberg; these apparently came from the collection of the Naumburg Kantor Andreas Unger. The war also accounted for the destruction of a smaller body of manuscripts, mostly of secondary significance, in the Stadtbibliothek, Danzig. Finally, a number of Schütz's works occur in collective and other secondary manuscripts written near Dresden and held there today in the Sächsische Landesbibliothek.

5. Autograph MS from the cantus I partbook of Schütz's madrigal 'Vier Hirtinnen, gleich jung, gleich schon' SWV Anh.1, 1615–c1620 (D-Kl 2° Ms.Mus 58f, f.1r, anon.): the text is completed in another hand

(ii) Style. Schütz's main interest as a composer was in the word, its individual meaning and mimetic depiction through music. He never shied away from madrigalisms, but also developed an exceptional sensitivity in expressing conceptual meaning in a broader context. He used a variety of musical means – rhythmic, melodic, harmonic, textural and structural – to manipulate a text and create specific musical affects to enhance its message, and his greatness stems partly from the integration of many of these stylistic traits. Das ist mir lieb SWV51, from the Grossmann collection of 1623, may serve as an early example. A motet without continuo, in many respects adhering to a homogeneous stile antico, it reveals under closer scrutiny a number of heterogeneous style characteristics, with subtle attention to harmonic detail (including an expressive use of dissonance), a logical harmonic layout that allows for an extended structure of six parts (including an affective shift from cantus durus to mollis) and careful rhythmic declamation. Poignant madrigalisms on 'Stricke des Todes' and 'Angst der Höllen' contribute to a lively surface expressivity. With the final phrase of part 2, 'o Herr, errette meine Seele', Schütz created an intricate fabric dividing the text into three motifs treated as a kind of triple canon: the exclamatio 'o Herr', the syllabically descending motif for 'errette meine Seele' and the scalar ascent for the same text. It is at this juncture that the music relaxes from cantus durus to mollis with the text 'Der Herr ist gnädig', a shift expressing a generalized response to the word 'gnädig' rather than a localized madrigalism.

This type of stratified text treatment is typical throughout Schütz's career, whether in stile antico (motet style) or stile moderno (concerted style), which Schütz used side by side from an early date. A typical German, as opposed to Italian, feature is his frequent use of imitative technique to enrich the texture and thus intensify a text, without, however, obscuring it. All Schütz's extant music is vocal, and almost exclusively to biblical texts. He used more texts from the Old than from the New Testament, and found psalms and passages from the Song of Songs, as well as non-biblical devotional poems, particularly amenable to subjective responses.

Although the chronology of Schütz's printed collections is fixed, the dates of individual works within a print may differ considerably, and this contributes to the compositional heterogeneity found within various collections. Schütz himself distinguished only two compositional categories: those with and those without basso continuo. He made this distinction particularly clear in his preface to the Geistliche Chor-Music where he advocated, firstly, a strict contrapuntal structure without continuo and, only after mastering this, a freer style of writing above an obligatory continuo bass. In the 17th century the madrigal, motet and concerto repertories were stylistically mixed, as will be apparent in the discussion that follows.

8. MADRIGALS AND MOTETS. Schütz's Primo libro de madrigali (1611) was the result of his studies with Giovanni Gabrieli in Venice. They are settings of texts – mostly by Guarini, from his Il pastor fido (Venice, 1590), and Marini – that were set by a number of composers, for example Monteverdi, Priuli and Grabbe. They are all for five unaccompanied voices except for the final eight-voice piece, probably to Schütz's own text, with which he honoured the dedicatee of the collection, his patron Landgrave Moritz of Hessen, and at the same time paid tribute to Gabrieli in his writing for double chorus. Imitative and homophonic sections alternate. Although they betray their roots in the Italian madrigal of the Renaissance, Schütz's examples of the genre explore modern textures, with voices grouped in twos and threes, chromatic harmonies (e.g. in Alma afflitta) and rhythms that contribute to a highly affective style governed by musical rhetoric and the word. Particularly in their harmonic licence they show the beginnings of what Christoph Bernhard later described as the stile luxurians.

In his motets Schütz distinguished between the traditional stile antico type, without basso continuo, and the modern concerted motet with continuo. Among those collections that adhere most closely to the first type are the Cantiones sacrae (1625), for four voices, and the Geistliche Chor-Music (1648), for five to seven voices. Both collections were conceived mainly for a cappella performance, but because of pressure from his publishers Schütz added a figured bass part which acts almost always as a basso seguente. As if to prove his competence in the newer style, however, he composed a few motets with basso obbligato (e.g. SWV84–7 from the Cantiones sacrae). Many of the texts in this earlier collection are from Andreas Musculus's Latin prayer book, a compilation that might have suited both Lutheran and Catholic confessions (see Heidrich, 1996). The Catholic imperial court adviser, von Eggenberg, may have been chosen as addressee because of his political status and his religious tolerance. The emotional intensity of the texts is enhanced by a musical rhetoric rich in dissonances, recalling the late Renaissance techniques of Schütz's madrigals. A few of the Cantiones sacrae (SWV61–2) are reminiscent of a stricter 16th-century contrapuntal style.

Whereas this collection must have been conceived as private devotional music, the Geistliche Chor-Music was dedicated to the Leipzig city council and the choir of the Thomaskirche. The preface states the didactic nature of these compositions. They could serve as model compositions, many of them (e.g. SWV373 and 381) alternating contrapuntal duple sections with effective declamatory sections in triple time or pitting duet and trio textures against each other in a quasi-concerted manner and contrasting them with tutti textures (SWV378). Phrases with drawn-out rhythms alternate with busy syllabic writing or dance-like triple sections. Schütz achieved here a compelling cross-fertilization between musical techniques and text interpretation. Two motets, Die Himmel erzählen and Das ist je gewisslich wahr, exist in early versions from the 1630s (SWV455 and 277), illustrating the difference in time between composition and publication. (Breig, 1996, mentions two other motets which existed in early versions no longer extant, SWV392 and 397.) Schütz's scoring suggestion, 'cum choro duplicato pro capella', and his special mention of 'voces concertate et duplicatae' on the title-page of SWV455 put one in mind of similar compositions in the Psalmen Davids of 1619. Some of the last motets, in six and seven parts with obbligato instruments (SWV392, 395–7), surprise with their relentless imitation without sectional articulation and seem to reflect a much earlier compositional style reminiscent of the Renaissance. It may not be a coincidence that one of them, Der Engel sprach SWV395, is a contrafactum of a motet by Andrea Gabrieli. More substantial and expressive than these four motets is Schütz's above-mentioned setting of Psalm cxvi, Das ist mir lieb, an early motet commissioned in 1619 by the Jena tax official Grossmann, who published it, along with 28 other settings of the same text, in his collection Angst der Hellen und Friede der Seelen in 1623.

Related to the motet genre is the Becker Psalter op.5 (1628; revised and enlarged as op.14, 1661) and the Zwölff geistliche Gesänge op.13 (1657). These collections are for four voices; op.5 is without continuo, but the other two, giving in to the pressures of the market, have an ad libitum organ part. Schütz's settings of Cornelius Becker's rhymed psalm paraphrases (Leipzig, 1602) consist mainly of his own melodies harmonized in simple style. Schütz added further compositions and substantially revised his earlier harmonizations for the 1661 edition commissioned by the Elector Johann Georg II. As several scholars have pointed out, the later versions are not necessarily the better ones. The Zwölff geistliche Gesänge is the only collection not published by Schütz himself. Some of the 'songs' are chordal, like those in the Becker Psalter; others are more motet-like in their combination of chordal and imitative textures as well as their expanded and more complex structures.

Schütz composed several double-choir motets, all with basso seguente; most of them belong to larger collections and are closely allied to the concerted motet and to other polychoral genres. The Psalmen Davids, sampt etlichen Moteten und Concerten (1619) represent a generic hybrid. They seem to combine, as Schütz's title indicates, compositions of both genres, the motet and the concerto (there is also one 'canzon'). These designations depend, however, on differentiations of text (incomplete psalm texts, psalm poetry and other texts; see Küster, 1996) rather than on fixed genres. Schütz's main interest in the Psalmen Davids lay in the contrasts and combinations of various independent choirs. He distinguished between 'cori favoriti', consisting of the most capable singers, and 'capellae' of voices and/or instruments to fill out the texture 'for the sake of sonority and splendour'. All the compositions are for at least two choirs, but in most cases the capellae are ad libitum. The scoring of the last six compositions in the collection goes beyond an eight-voice obligatory texture and builds up, counting all additional capellae, to a 20-voice score. Giovanni Gabrieli instructed Schütz in this multi-choral technique, but Schütz himself developed a broad scope of possibilities within the genre and drew on a compendium of techniques, from small concerto to multi-choral declamatory style.

Among a sizable number of polychoral works in manuscript are psalm settings that Schütz may have intended for a second part of Psalmen Davids (for example SWV462, 466 and 500). Another category of large-scale works is that of occasional music in celebration of political events. Two motet-concertos with elaborate vocal as well as instrumental forces, Psalms lxxxv and cxxvii, were possibly written for the Reichstag at Mühlhausen in 1627. Most effective in their use of voices with instruments are the concertos Syncharma musicum SWV49 and Teutoniam dudum SWV338, composed for the declaration of loyalty of the Silesian estates. The double-choral Da pacem SWV465 was also written for the Reichstag in Mühlhausen; in no other work is the contrast between the two choirs more extreme: one quiet with viols, the other with 'vivat' exclamations from a vocal quartet with organ continuo.

Schütz's repertory of double-choral music closes with the Schwanengesang which he completed in 1671 at the age of 86, a manuscript collection of 13 double-choir motets with basso seguente setting Psalm cxix, Psalm c and the German Magnificat. Compositional techniques and intentions differ here from those of the Psalmen Davids. It is a homogeneous work, but was composed with no particular liturgical function in mind. Psalm cxix, which Luther called the ABC of the Bible, must have had a special significance for Schütz; he singled out one of its verses, 'Thy statutes have been my songs in the house of my pilgrimage', to be set by his pupil Christoph Bernhard in stile gravis and sung at his funeral. Although older compositional techniques – plainchant, a modal harmonic frame, contrapuntal writing and a basso seguente – dominate, Schütz nevertheless superimposed more modern features encompassing declamatory choral recitatives and at times dissonances that belong to the realm of a stile teatrale.

9. SACRED CONCERTOS. Schütz's Kleine geistliche Concerte (1636 and 1639) and his three publications of Symphoniae sacrae (1629, 1647 and 1650) constitute the core of his concerted music. It seems that Schütz regarded the 1647 publication as a kind of culmination, since in it he retrospectively added opus numbers to his earlier publications, starting with the Italian madrigals as opus 1. The second and third books of Symphoniae sacrae thus became op. 11 and 12 respectively.

The term 'symphoniae sacrae' goes back to late 16th-century publications by Giovanni Gabrieli and Kaspar Hassler, but Schütz pointed out in the dedication to his first book of Symphoniae sacrae that the style of composition had changed since his first Italian visit, and this change is reflected in Schütz's use of a few solo voices, with or without obbligato instruments, and basso continuo. Monteverdi and Grandi served as Schütz's compositional models, as is evident from Güldne Haare SWV440 (a contrafactum of Monteverdi's Chiome d'oro), from Es steh Gott auf SWV356 (after Monteverdi's Armato il cor and Zefiro torna) and from O Jesu süss SWV406, which Schütz acknowledged as a reworking of a composition by Grandi.

In his first book of Symphoniae sacrae, dedicated to the Saxon elector's son, Schütz included 20 sacred Latin concertos in three to six parts which presented 'fresh devices' of Italian composition that 'tickle the ears of today'. Although printed in Venice in 1629, during Schütz's second visit to Italy, some of this music was conceived earlier. Anima mea liquefacta est SWV263 and its secunda pars, Adjuro vos, represent striking examples of such a 'tickle' that play with the latest Italian licences in dissonance treatment. In particular, the seven settings of subjective and highly sensuous texts from the Song of Solomon inspired Schütz to expressive levels that reflect the new Italian manner. These concertos incorporate harmonic as well as structural innovations. O quam tu pulchra es SWV265 and the two-part concerto In lectulo per noctes/Invenerunt SWV272–3 may serve as examples. In the first Schütz used the opening as a kind of leitmotif which he worked as a textual and musical refrain. Structural and harmonic devices contribute to a tighter and more sensuous setting than Grandi made of this text. SWV272–3 is a longer composition and scored for larger forces than SWV265. In it Schütz explored contrasting textures of solos and tutti, and a lilting, triple-metre aria style alternatives with duple sections that absorb brief recitative-like passages. While some of these concertos (e.g. SWV257–8 and 265–6) employ modern italianate textures with two violins and continuo, most of them show, with their heterogeneous assortment of wind, brass and string instruments, an affinity with colourful late Renaissance scoring and with Giovanni Gabrieli's by then rather conservative writing for instruments.

In the decade following his second visit to Italy Schütz published his two sets of Kleine geistliche Concerte. With the exception of the dialogue Sei gegrüsset SWV333–4, in which the duet of Mary and the Angel is framed by an instrumental symphony and a final motet with colla parte instruments, all these concertos are for one to five voices with continuo only. As Schütz mentioned in his dedication to the 1636 collection, interest in music and in financing court chapels was declining because of the strictures of the Thirty Years War, and this, he said, was the main reason for composing these concertos without obbligato instruments. Conceptually Schütz's Kleine geistliche Concerte tie in with Viadana's Concerti ecclesiastici, though Schütz's repertory is much more complex. The small-scale concerto form receives in Schütz's hands a varied and most artful treatment. The concertos for one and two voices are particularly intense and express with much freedom the meaning of their texts. Schütz opened his publication with Eile mich, Gott, zu erretten SWV282, for which he specified the 'stylo oratorio' and thus acknowledged his adaptation of the Italian stile rappresentativo here in a combination of simple and expressive recitative style. Some of the duets, such as Habe deine Lust an dem Herren SWV311 and Herr, ich hoffe darauf SWV312, recall Monteverdi's madrigal duos or Grandi's sacred concertos. Schütz constructs his 'small concertos' according to text paragraphs with contrasting metres, or he introduces musical devices such as an ostinato bass for the final 'alleluia' of Habe deine Lust. Among the concertos with four and five voices are a number of chorale settings (SWV301, 303, 305, 327), a type of which Schütz wrote relatively few examples. One easily forgets the rigours of war when listening to the textually rich Veni, Sancte

Spiritus SWV328, which particularly skilfully explores musical rhetoric through monody, duet and quartet textures.

In 1647 and 1650 Schütz published two further collections of Symphoniae sacrae. The title that connects all three books refers to sacred concertos for solo voices with obbligato instruments and continuo. The second and third parts are homogeneous in their italianate and standardized instrumental scoring, with two violins or comparable instruments. Schütz must have viewed the third part as the culmination of his creative work, and he composed it with grand, almost opulent forces and dedicated it to his patron Johann Georg I of Saxony, who had also been the dedicatee of his op.2, the Psalmen Davids.

As in the first book, Schütz systematically arranged the concertos in both later collections in an order determined by the number of obbligato voices, increasing from three to six in the first book, from three to five in the second and from five to eight in the third. In the third book additional power stems from the suggested employment of a four-to-eight-voice complementum which, although structurally redundant, serves 'zum starcken Gethön und zur Pracht', as in the Psalmen Davids of 1619. In the interests of intelligibility, but undoubtedly also as a compositional challenge, Schütz decided to set the biblical texts in the last two parts in the German vernacular.

In his preface to the second part of the Symphoniae sacrae Schütz mentioned that musicians in Germany had only recently become capable of performing music in the Italian manner, for which reason he had delayed publication. The 'Italian manner' here is noticeably more virtuoso than in the first part and, 'with its customary measure and the black notes therein', shows striking textural similarities to Monteverdi's seventh book of madrigals. Some works exist in early versions (Herr, nun lässest du deinen Diener SWV352*a* was written on the death of Schütz's friend Christoph Cornet, Kapellmeister at Kassel, in or before 1635) which place their composition closer to Schütz's second visit to Italy. A presentation copy for Prince Christian of Denmark, the dedicatee of the second part, was ready by the time for Schütz's second visit to Denmark in 1642. Wade (1996, p.238) even suggests that some of the concertos may already have been performed at the 'great wedding' in 1634 of Prince Christian and Magdalena Sibylla, the youngest daughter of the Saxon elector. Some of the 'black-note' configurations in Herr, nun lässest du deinen Diener, with semiquaver passages in echo and written-out trills in parallel 6ths, even recall such stylistic traits in Monteverdi's Orfeo ('Possente spirto') or his Marian Vespers (1610), printed music that Schütz may have been familiar with.

Part iii of the Symphoniae sacrae contains a few adaptations of much earlier compositions (Siehe, wie fein und lieblich SWV412 is adapted from the 1619 wedding concerto for Schütz's brother Georg, SWV48, and O Herr, hilf SWV402 from the Kleine geistliche Concerte SWV297 of 1636), but there are also five early manuscript versions which probably date from the late 1740s, that is close to the date of publication (see Grove6 and Gottwald, 1990). Breig (Heinrich Schütz: Neue Ausgabe sämtlicher Werks, xvi) suggested that Schütz may have intended the first three psalm settings for a sequel to the Psalmen Davids of 1619, which in his work-list of 1647 he specified as Psalmen Davids 'Erster Theil'. Both Part ii and Part iii of the Symphoniae sacrae use a 'doubled' continuo, with organ and violone, to add sonority to the compositions' fundament, and in nearly all the concertos in the 1650 collection Schütz employed the by then standard obbligato instrumentation of two violins. He also commonly opened a work with an instrumental symphony and included instrumental episodes or even independent instrumental sections within a composition. More and longer sections resulted in pieces of greater overall length, and with well worked-out tonal plans that point towards a scheme of separate movements with functional tonal relationships. Yet harmonic procedures within such sections are mostly without tonal functionality and often create surprises characteristic of 17th-century music.

Although the complementa are ad libitum, Schütz undoubtedly conceived the concertos in Part iii of the Symphoniae sacrae with affectively contrasting sonorities in mind. Saul, Saul, was verfolgst du mich, setting a text from Acts, may serve as an example. Without an introductory symphony, the music builds up tension in four consecutive duets from the lowest to the highest register before bursting into a melodically static, but rhythmically percussive, tutti reinforced with two SATB capellae indicated in the print as a complementum ad libitum. Schütz worked with this frenzied tutti force to create the power that blinds Saul, causes him to fall from his horse and instigates his conversion. Schütz maximizes contrast by juxtaposing this explosive scoring with an expressive monody, and the work as a whole bears testimony to Schütz's skill at bringing a text alive through technical means. Among other noteworthy pieces in Part iii is the dramatic dialogue Mein Sohn, for which Schütz himself arranged a combination of Gospel and psalm text. Comparison of an earlier manuscript version with the final printed one provides evidence of Schütz's compositional process, involving some harmonic and melodic tightening. In Es ging ein Sämann aus he manipulated the Gospel text to use the last phrase as a refrain, but with musical variants that reflect their context in the parable. In Vater unser, as well as employing a rich harmonic language, he moulded the structure by using the word 'Vater' as an ostinato.

A number of works in manuscript sources date from about the time of Symphoniae sacrae Part iii, among them the Latin Magnificat SWV468, Herr, der du bist vormals genädig gewest (Psalm lxxxv) SWV461 and Surrexit pastor bonus SWV469. All three compositions share the opulent scoring of Schütz's 1650 collection, with four to six voices, two violins, three trombones (not included in the Symphoniae sacrae) and one or two capallae ad libitum. The Magnificat is a highly structured work combining sensitive text declamation with unexpected and expressive harmonic progressions and lofty homophonic tuttis with fragmentary polyphonic solo sections.

The third collection of Symphoniae sacrae came at a high point in Schütz's creative life. Although reminiscent of much earlier Psalmen Davids, it constituted, along with other compositions from that time, a culmination in Schütz's adaptation of Italian techniques to German sacred music. Rich varieties of scoring, tonal planning, expressive monody and contrasts are among the resources of musical technique with which Schütz moulded his texts.

10. REQUIEM, HISTORIES AND PASSIONS. The Musicalische Exequien SWV279–81 (1636) was commissioned for the funeral of Prince Heinrich Posthumus of Reuss by his widow. Schütz divided the work into three parts. The first, a 'Concerto in the form of a German burial Mass', alternates a six-voice tutti texture with duets and trios; the tutti sections, with optional capella reinforcement, are used for the Kyrie text and employed as a refrain. This innovative structural technique is continued in the second part of the 'concerto', where the solos correspond to settings of biblical texts and the tuttis to chorale interpolations. Part ii, the double-chorus motet Herr, wenn ich nur dich habe, recalls the antiphonal writing in Gabrieli's large-scale works and Schütz's requiem ends with a 'Concerto for two choruses in which each chorus has its own words'. The SSB trio of the chorus secundus – two seraphims and the 'beata anima' – provides an 'angelic' gloss on the solemn and registrally dark AATTB quintet of the Nunc dimittis. In the Musicalische Exequien Schütz brought together older compositional techniques (plainchant intonations, modal associations, chorale harmonizations and motet textures) and the modern small concerto and double-chorus concerted style of the last part. They contribute to the varied and serenely intense style of Schütz's only extended funeral music.

Schütz's sacred works with dramatic and narrative content include the Resurrection History (1623) the Christmas History (a late work) and three Passions (also late works). Although without the specific designation, the epic Seven Last Words also belongs to the historia genre.

The Resurrection History SWV50, although modelled on a 16th-century work by Antonio Scandello, shows modern 17th-century features. Schütz still uses choraliter notation for the Evangelist's recitation on the lectio tone, with a change to mensural notation at cadences; organ or lute accompaniment is possible, but Schütz's preference is for four viols in a modern Italian falso bordone manner, allowing for some improvised passaggi. More expressive are the italianate small concertos, with figured bass that depict the different characters of the narrative. Both in this work and in the Christmas History SWV435 Schütz framed the composition with oratorio-like motets, adding an instrumental second chorus in the later work. The Evangelist's narration in the Christmas History has evolved into a true Italian recitative of a kind that, 'to the best of the author's knowledge, has never before been printed in Germany'. Only the Evangelist's part, consisting of recitatives for tenor, organ and violone, appeared in print (1664); eight 'Concerte' or 'Intermedia' with obbligato instruments survive in manuscript. Pairs of wind and string instruments lend supporting colour to the different characters in the story. This diversified instrumentarium more closely resembles that of Italian Renaissance intermedi than that of the 17th-century sacred concerto, which normally employed the standard pair of violins.

The Seven Last Words SWV478 is transmitted in manuscript and recent research indicates that it must be counted among Schütz's late works (Steude), probably before 1657 (Konradt). The work is set up symmetrically. Christ's words, scored for second tenor, two instruments (possibly violins) and continuo, are set in a modern concertato style and alternate with passages from the Gospels scored for different voice combinations and continuo only. Some of these narratives use modern monody, others rather old-fashioned four-part motet writing. The first and last verses of a chorale in five-voice motet style and a five-part instrumental piece frame this work, which combines Passion traditions with the style of an oratorio.

In the three Passions SWV479–81, which are entirely unaccompanied, Schütz abandoned the oratorio and returned to a more archaic manner of composition. The Evangelist's narratives, as well as the soliloquies, are in choraliter notation and the turba choruses in a four-voice a cappella motet style. The music strictly adheres to a modal idiom: the St Luke Passion (the earliest of the three) uses the traditional lectio tone on F in the Ionian mode; the St John and St Matthew Passions are in the Phrygian and transposed Dorian modes respectively.

11. Secular dramatic works. None of Schütz's dramatic music is extant except for an italianate strophic song, Gesang der Venus-Kinder SWV278, for four sopranos and continuo, performed as part of a masqued tournament invention at the 1634 wedding in Copenhagen. Schütz assisted at various spectacles for dynastic celebrations in connection with the courts of Dresden and Copenhagen. As can be deduced from the poetic organization of some of the librettos, early German operas, including Schütz's Dafne (1627), are spoken plays with inserts of mostly strophic songs. Schütz's other theatrical works include Zwo Comoedien (1635, text by Johann Lauremberg), an operatic ballet, Orpheo und Euridice (1638, libretto by August Buchner), and Theatralische neue Vorstellung von der Maria Magdalena (1644, text by J.G. Schottelius). They all lack the recitative and madrigal poetry of early Italian opera, and point rather to pieces with spoken dialogue.

12. Achievement and reputation. Schütz's historical achievement lay in moving German music from its peripheral position to one of central importance. He was praised by many contemporary musicians and theorists, and in 1690 the writer and composer W.C. Printz mentioned him as 'the very best German composer' of the mid-17th century, but during Schütz's lifetime transmission of his music was restricted mainly to German-speaking Lutheran regions. Although he had received his training in Italy, the popularity of his music at the Dresden court eventually gave way to a taste for more fashionable Italian works performed by the numerous Italian musicians employed there.

Research into 17th-century performing practices, together with developments in the restoration, construction and playing techniques of 17th-century instruments, have resulted in a new approach to the performance of Schütz's music. Over-respectful, 'pious' performances of his sacred works have been largely replaced by more vibrant interpretations, and these in turn have deepened appreciation of the sensitive and complex manipulation and enrichment of the text that is one of the chief hallmarks of Schütz's best music.

WORKS

Editions: Heinrich Schütz: Sämtliche Werke, ed. P. Spitta and others (Leipzig, 1885–1927/R) [G]

Heinrich Schütz: Neue Ausgabe sämtlicher Werke, ed. W. Bittinger, W. Breig, W. Ehmann and others (Kassel, 1955–) [N]

Heinrich Schütz: Sämtliche Werke, ed. G. Graulich and others (Stuttgart, 1971–) [S; references without vol. nos. indicate separately pubd single edns]

Catalogue: Schütz-Werke-Verzeichnis (SWV): kleine Ausgabe, ed. W. Bittinger (Kassel, 1960); suppl. in W. Breig (1979); complete, ed. Breig (in preparation) [SWV; A = Anhang]

Unless otherwise stated, entries in parentheses are earlier versions of the preceding work, with the same scoring. Opus nos. in square brackets come from the list of publications appended to Symphoniarum sacrarum secunda pars, and from the handwritten catalogue of works sent by Schütz to August of Brunswick-Lüneburg in 1664 (see §7(i)). Indications of scoring retain the nomenclature of the source in ambiguous cases. This applies particularly to designations of subensembles; 'capella' in the sources means (a) doubling ensemble, (b) optional ensemble included intermittently, or (c) ensemble always used as a whole; 'complementum' corresponds to (b), 'ripieno' and 'tutti' to (a). (The marking 'tutti' is retained when it seems to prescribe the addition of doubling voices.) Voices left undesignated in the sources, or labelled according to function rather than type (e.g. 'quinta pars'), are assigned on the basis of their notated range (with parts in Mez clef normally given to S, parts in Bar clef listed as B), unless the source includes directions for transposition, in which case the transposed range determines the labelling. 'Alternating' reflects the layout within a single part and does not necessarily indicate mode of performance. Lost parts are given in square brackets. Only principal sources are given for works in MS; all MS nos. for D-Bsb, Dl, DS and Z have prefix Ms.Mus., all for Kl have prefix 2° Ms.Mus., all for W have prefix Cod.Guelf., all for S-Uu have prefix Vok. mus. i hdskr. Dates and places of provenance of MSS are given in square brackets; place of provenance is present location of source unless otherwise stated.

cap. – capella compl. – complementum
rip. – ripieno
Δ – inst part (or part of uncertain scoring) fully or partly texted
+ – doubling part or parts
† – Schütz's personal copy survives in D-W
†† – only known or complete copy lost since 1945

SWV

Il primo libro de madrigali, [op.1] (Venice, 1611)†; G ix, N xxii, Si

1 O primavera (B. Guarini), 2 S, A, T, B
2 2p.: O dolcezze amarissime (Guarini), 2 S, A, T, B
3 Selve beate (Guarini), 2 S, A, T, B
4 Alma afflitta, che fai (G.B. Marino), S, A, 2 T, B
5 Così morir debb'io (Guarini), S, A, 2 T, B
6 D'orrida selce alpina (A. Aligieri), 2 S, A, T, B
7 Ride la primavera (Marino), 3 S, A, B
8 Fuggi, fuggi, o mio core (Marino), 3 S, A, B
9 Feritevi, ferite (Marino), 2 S, A, T, B
10 Fiamma ch'allacia (A. Gatti), 2 S, A, T, B
11 Quella damma son io (Guarini), 2 S, A, T, B
12 Mi saluta costei (Marino), 3 S, A, B
13 Io moro (Marino), 3 S, A, B
14 Sospir che del bel petto (Marino), 3 S, A, B
15 Dunque à Dio (Guarini), 3 S, A, B
16 Tornate, o cari baci (Marino), 2 S, A, T, B
17 Di marmo siete voi (Marino), 3 S, A, B
18 Giunto è pur, Lidia (Marino), 3 S, A, B
19 Vasto mar, nel cui seno (Dialogo) (?Schütz), I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, B

Die Wort Jesus Syrach ... auff hochzeitlichen Ehrentag des ... Herrn Josephi Avenarii (Dresden, 1618)

20 Wohl dem, der ein tugendsam Weib hat, I: T, Δ3 cornetts; II: S, A, T, B; bc (org), for wedding of Joseph Avenarius and Anna Dorothea Görlitz, Dresden, 21 April 1618; G xiv

Concert mit 11 Stimmen: auff des ... Herrn Michael Thomae ... hochzeitlichen Ehren Tag (Dresden, 1618)

21 Haus und Güter erbet man von Eltern, I: T, Δ3 trbn/bn; II: T, Δ3 cornetts/vn; III: 2 S, B; bc (+ lutes, hpd), for wedding of Michael Thomas and Anna Schultes, Leipzig, 15 June 1618; G xiv

Psalmen Davids sampt etlichen Moteten und Concerten, [op.2] (Dresden, 1619)

22 Der Herr sprach zu meinem Herren (Psalmus 110), I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, B; cap. a Δ5 ad lib; bc; G ii, N xxiii
23 Warum toben die Heiden (Psalmus 2), I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, B; 2 cap. a Δ4 ad lib; bc; G ii, N xxiii
24 Ach Herr, straf mich nicht (Psalmus 6), I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, B; bc; G ii, N xxiii
25 Aus der Tiefe (Psalmus 130), I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, B; bc; G ii, N xxiii
26 Ich freu mich des (Psalmus 122), I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, B; 2 cap. a Δ4 ad lib; bc; G ii, N xxiii
27 Herr, unser Herrscher (Psalmus 8), I: 2 S, A, T; II: A, T, 2 B; cap. a Δ5 ad lib; bc; G ii, N xxiii
28 Wohl dem, der nicht wandelt (Psalmus 1), I: 2 S, A, B; II: A, 2 T, B; bc; G ii, N xxiii, S
29 Wie lieblich sind deine Wohnunge (Psalmus 84), I: 2 S, A, B; II: 2 T, 2 B; bc; G ii, N xxiii, S
30 Wohl dem, der den Herren fürchtet (Psalmus 128), I: 2 S, A, T; II: A, T, 2 B; bc; G ii, N xxiii, S
31 Ich hebe meine Augen auf (Psalmus 121), I: S, A, T, B (+ cap. ad lib); II: S, A, T, B (+ cap.); bc; G ii, N xxiv, S
32 Danket dem Herren, denn er ist freundlich (Psalmus 136), I: 3 S, T; II: A, 2 T, B; 2 cap. a Δ4 ad lib; bc; G ii, N xxiv
33 Der Herr ist mein Hirt (Psalmus 23), I: 2 S, A, T (+ cap. ad lib), II: S, A, T, B (+ cap.); bc; G ii, N xxiv, S
34 Ich danke dem Herrn (Psalmus 111), I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, B; 2 cap. a Δ4 ad lib, bc (doxology 'Imitatione sopra: Lieto godea ... di Gio.[vanni] Gab.[rieli]'), G ii, N xxiv
35 Singet dem Herrn ein neues Lied (Psalmus 98), I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, B; bc (?= Singet dem Herrn ein newes Lied, Ps.98, perf. Dresden, 31 Oct 1617, according to Hoe von Hoenegg (1618)); G iii, N xxiv, S
36 Jauchzet dem Herren, alle Welt (Psalmus 100), I: S, A, T, B, bc; II: S, A, T, B, bc; G iii, N xxiv
(36*a* Jauchzet dem Herren, alle Welt (Ps c), I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, B; III: S, A, T, B, D-Kl 49*r* [1614–15] (bc in source added 1616–17, unauthentic); N xxviii)
37 An den Wassern zu Babel (Psalmus 137), I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, B, bc; G iii, N xxiv
38 Alleluja, lobet den Herren (Psalmus 150), I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, B; 2 cap. (I: Δcornett/vn (alternating with cornett, vn), Δ2 cornetts/vn, Δtrbn/bn (alternating with bn, bn/trbn); II: Δcornett/rec (alternating with cornett, rec), Δ2 trbn, Δtrbn/bn (alternating with bn, trbn, bn/trbn)) ad lib; bc; G iii, N xxv
39 Lobe den Herren, meine Seele (Concert), I: S, A, T, B (+ cap. ad lib); II: S, A, T, B (+ cap.); bc (org); G iii, N xxv
40 Ist nicht Ephraim mein teurer Sohn (Moteto), I: 2 cornetts/S, cornett/T, Δcornett/trbn; II: A, Δ3 trbn; 2 cap. a Δ4 ad lib; bc; G iii, N xxv
41 Nun lob, mein Seel, den Herren (Canzon), I: S, A, T, B (+ cap. ad lib if inst cap. not used); II: S, A, T, B (+ cap. ad lib if inst cap. not used); 2 cap. (I: 2 vn, 2 viole, vle; II: 4 cornetts, trbn) ad lib if vocal cap. not used; bc (= Nun lob mein Seel den Herrn, auff 4 Chor, perf. Dresden, 1 Nov 1617, according to Hoe von Hoenegg (1618)); G iii, N xxv
42 Die mit Tränen säen (Moteto), I: S, T, Δ3 trbn; II: S, T, Δ3 trbn; bc; G iii, N xxv
43 Nicht uns, Herr (Psalmus 115), I: T, Δ3 cornetts; II (cap.): S, A, T, B; III: A, Δ3 trbn; bc (= Nicht uns Herr ... Psalm 115 mit drey Choren, perf. Dresden, 2 Nov 1617, according to Hoe von Hoenegg (1618)); G iii, N xxv
44 Wohl dem, der den Herren fürchtet (Psalmus 128), I: T, Δ4 cornetts; II: A, Δvn, Δ3 trbn; cap. I: S, A, T, B; cap. II a Δ4 ad lib; bc; G iii, N xxvi
45 Danket dem Herren, denn er ist freundlich (Psalmus 136), I: 2 S, A, T; II: A,Δ3 trbn; cap. a Δ5; tpts and timp; bc (= 136. Psalm mit Trommeten und Heerpauken, perf. Dresden, 2 Nov 1617, according to Hoe von Hoenegg (1618)); G iii, N xxvi
46 Zion spricht, der Herr hat mich verlassen (Concert), I: S, T, Δ3 cornetts, Δbn; II: S, T, Δ4 trbn; 2 cap. a Δ4 ad lib; bc; G iii, N xxvi
47 Jauchzet dem Herren, alle Welt (Concert), I: A, T, Δ2 fl (alternating with Δ2 cornetts), Δbn; II: S, T; III: S, Δvn, Δ3 viole; cap. a Δ5 ad lib; bc (+ lutes) (? = Concert mit 4 Choren Jubilate Deo, perf. Dresden, 2 Nov 1617, according to Hoe von Hoenegg (1618)); G iii, N xxvi, S

Der 133. Psalm ... auff die hochzeitliche Ehrenfrewde Herrn Georgii Schützen (Leipzig, 1619)††

48 Siehe, wie fein und lieblich ists, 2 S, A, T, B, mute cornett/vn, vn/fl, vle/bn, bc (org), for wedding of Georg Schütz and Anna Gross, Leipzig, 9 Aug 1619 (earlier version of no.412); G xiv

Syncharma musicum (Breslau, 1621)††

49 En novus Elysiis, I: T, 3 cornetts; II: T, 3 bn; III (coro aggiunto): 3 S, B; bc (org), for declaration of loyalty of the Silesian estates, Breslau, 3 Nov 1621 (copy formerly in Stadtbibliothek, Breslau, incl. 2nd text, Wo Gott nicht selbst bei uns wäre, added in later hand); G xv, N xxxviii

Historia der frölichen und siegreichen Aufferstehung unsers einigen Erlösers und Seligmachers Jesu Christi, [op.3] (Dresden, 1623)
50 Die Auferstehung unsres Herren Jesu Christi, 3 S, 2 A, 3 T, 2 B, 4 viols, bc (swv50 Anm.2–3, in D-Kl 49*v*, 53*x* [1623–7], unauthentic); G i, N iii

in RISM 1623[14]:
51 Das ist mir lieb, 2 S, A, T, B; G xii, N xxviii, S

Kläglicher Abschied von der churfürstlichen Gruft zu Freybergk (Freiberg, 1623*R*)
52 Grimmige Gruft, so hast du dann (Schütz), S, bc, for burial of Duchess Sophia of Saxony, Freiberg, 28 Jan 1623; G xviii, N xxxvii

Cantiones sacrae, [op.4] (Freiberg, 1625)†
53 O bone, o dulcis, o benigne Jesu, 2 S, A, B, bc (org); G iv, N viii
54 2p.: Et ne despicias, 2 S, A, B, bc (org); G iv, N viii
55 Deus misereatur nostri, 2 S, A, B, bc (org); G iv, N viii
56 Quid commisisti, o dulcissime puer, S, A, T, B, bc (org), G iv, N viii
57 2p.: Ego sum tui plaga doloris, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N viii
58 3p.: Ego enim inique egi, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N viii
59 4p.: Quo, nate Dei, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N viii
60 5p.: Calicem salutaris accipiam, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N viii
61 Verba mea auribus percipe, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N viii
62 2p.: Quoniam ad te clamabo, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N viii
63 Ego dormio, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N viii
64 2p.: Vulnerasti cor meum, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N viii
65 Heu mihi, Domine, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N viii
66 In te, Domine, speravi, 3 S, T, bc (org); G iv, N viii
67 Dulcissime et benignissime Christe, 3 S, T, bc (org); G iv, N viii
68 Sicut Moses serpentem in deserto exaltavit, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N viii
69 Spes mea, Christe Deus, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N viii
70 Turbabor, sed non perturbabor, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N viii
71 Ad Dominum cum tribularer clamavi, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N viii
72 2p.: Quid detur tibi, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N viii
73 Aspice, Pater, piissimum filium, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N ix
74 2p.: Nonne hic est, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N ix
75 3p.: Reduc, Domine Deus meus, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N ix
76 Supereminet omnem scientiam, 2 S, A, B, bc (org); G iv, N ix
77 2p.: Pro hoc magno mysterio pietatis, 2 S, A, B, bc (org); G iv, N ix
78 Domine, non est exaltatum cor meum, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N ix
79 2p.: Si non humiliter sentiebam, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N ix
80 3p.: Speret Israel in Domino, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N ix
81 Cantate Domino canticum novum, 2 S, A, B, bc (org); G iv, N ix, S
82 Inter brachia Salvatoris mei, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N ix
83 Veni, rogo, in cor meum, 3 S, T, bc (org); G iv, N ix
84 Ecce advocatus meus apud te, S, A, T, B, bc (org) (see also no.304); G iv, N ix
85 Domine, ne in furore tuo, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N ix
86 2p.: Quoniam non est in morte, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N ix
87 3p.: Discedite a me omnes qui operamini, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G iv, N ix
88 Oculi omnium in te sperant, 3 S, T, bc (org) (on no.429*a*); G iv, N ix
89 2p.: Pater noster, qui es in coelis, 3 S, T, bc (org) (as no.88; see also no.92); G iv, N ix
90 3p.: Domine Deus, pater coelestis, 3 S, T, bc (org) (as no.88); G iv, N ix
91 Confitemini Domino, 3 S, T, bc (org) (on no.430*a*); G iv, N ix
92 2p.: Pater noster, qui es in coelis, 3 S, T, bc (org) (as no.91; text and music = no.89); G iv, N ix
93 3p.: Gratias agimus tibi, 3 S, T, bc (org) (as no.91); G iv, N ix

De vitae fugacitate: aria … bey Occasion des … Todesfalles der … Jungfrawen Anna Marien Wildeckin (Freiberg, 1625)
94 Ich hab mein Sach Gott heimgestellt, 2 S, A, T, B, bc, on death of Anna Maria Wildeck, Dresden, 15 Aug 1625 (earlier version of no.305); G xii, N xxxi

Ultima verba psalmi 23 … super … obitu … Jacobi Schultes (Leipzig, 1625)
95 Gutes und Barmherzigkeit werden mir folgen, S, [S], A, T, [T, B], bc (org), on death of Jacob Schultes, Leipzig, 19 July 1625; G xviii, N xxxi

in RISM 1627[9]:
96 Glück zu dem Helikon (?M. Opitz), A, T, bc; G xv, N xxxvii

Psalmen Davids, hiebevorn in teutzsche Reimen gebracht, durch D. Cornelium Beckern, und an jetzo mit ein hundert und drey eigenen Melodeyen … gestellet, [op.5] (Freiberg, 1628, 2/1640) [all versions with a nos.]; rev. and enlarged 3rd edn, as Psalmen Davids … jetzund … auffs neue übersehen, auch … vermehret, [op. 14] (Dresden, 1661)† [nos.97–256]
97 Wer nicht sitzt im Gottlosen Rat, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(97*a* Wer nicht sitzt im Gottlosen Rat, 2 S, A, B; N xl)
98 Was haben doch die Leut im Sinn, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(98*a* Was haben doch die Leut im Sinn, S, A, T, B; N xl)
99 Ach wie gross ist der Feinde Rott, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(99*a* Ach wie gross ist der Feinde Rott, S, A, T, B; N xl)
100 Erhör mich, wenn ich ruf zu dir, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(100*a* Erhör mich, wenn ich ruf zu dir, S, A, T, B; N xl)
101 Herr hör, was ich will bitten dich, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(101*a* Herr hör, was ich will bitten dich, 2 S, A, B; N xl)
102 Ach Herr, mein Gott, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi
(102*a* Ach Herr, mein Gott, S, A, T, B; N vi, xl)
103 Auf dich trau ich, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi
(103*a* Auf dich trau ich, S, A, T, B; N vi, xl)
104 Mit Dank wir sollen loben, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi
(104*a* Mit Dank wir sollen loben, S, A, T, B; N vi, xl)
105 Mit frohlichem Gemüte, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(105*a* Mit frohlichem Gemüte, 2 S, A, B; N xl)
106 Wie meinst du's doch, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(106*a* Wie meinst du's doch, S, A, T, B; N xl)
107 Ich trau auf Gott, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(107*a* Ich trau auf Gott, S, A, T, B; N xl)
108 Ach Gott vom Himmel, sieh darein, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(108*a* Ach Gott vom Himmel, sieh darein, S, A, T, B; N xl)
109 Ach Herr, wie lang willt du, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(109*a* Ach Herr, wie lang willt du, S, A, T, B; N xl)
110 Es spricht der Unweisen Mund wohl, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(110*a* Es spricht der Unweisen Mund wohl, S, A, T, B; N xl)
111 Wer wird, Herr, in der Hütten dein, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(111*a* Wer wird, Herr, in der Hütten dein, 2 S, A, B; N vi, xl)
112 Bewahr mich, Gott, ich trau auf dich, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(112*a* Bewahr mich, Gott, ich trau auf dich, S, A, T, B; N xl)
113 Herr Gott, erhör die Grechtigkeit, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi
(113*a* Herr Gott, erhör die Grechtigkeit, 2 S, A, B; N vi, xl)
114 Ich lieb dich, Herr, von Herzen sehr, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(114*a* Ich lieb dich, Herr, von Herzen sehr, 2 S, A, B; N xl)

115 Die Himmel, Herr, preisen sehr, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi
(115*a* Die Himmel, Herr, preisen sehr, 2 S, A, B; N vi, xl)
116 Der Herr erhör dich in der Not, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(116*a* Der Herr erhör dich in der Not, 2 S, A, T; N xl)
117 Hoch freuet sich der König, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi
(117*a* Hoch freuet sich der König, 2 S, A, B; N vi, xl)
118 Mein Gott, mein Gott, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(118*a* Mein Gott, mein Gott, S, A, T, B; N xl)
119 2p. of no.118: Ich will verkündgen in der Gmein, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(119*a* 2p. of no.118*a*: Ich will verkündgen in der Gmein, S, A, T, B; N xl)
120 Der Herr ist mein getreuer Hirt, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(120*a* Der Herr ist mein getreuer Hirt, S, A, T, B; N xl)
121 Die Erd und was sich auf ihr regt, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi
(121*a* Die Erd und was sich auf ihr regt, S, A, T, B; N vi, xl)
122 Nach dir verlangt mich, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(122*a* Nach dir verlangt mich, S, A, T, B; N xl)
123 Herr, schaff mir recht, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(123*a* Herr, schaff mir recht, 2 S, A, B; N xl)
124 Mein Licht und Heil ist Gott der Herr, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(124*a* Mein Licht und Heil ist Gott der Herr, 2 S, A, B; N xl)
125 Ich ruf zu dir, Herr Gott, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(125*a* Ich ruf zu dir, Herr Gott, 3 S, T; N xl)
126 Bringt Ehr und Preis dem Herren, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi
(126*a* Bringt Ehr und Preis dem Herren, S, A, T, B; N vi, xl)
127 Ich preis dich, Herr, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(127*a* Ich preis dich, Herr, 2 S, A, B; N xl)
128 In dich hab ich gehoffet, Herr, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(128*a* In dich hab ich gehoffet, Herr, S, A, T, B; N xl)
129 Der Mensch für Gott wohl selig ist, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(129*a* Der Mensch für Gott wohl selig ist, S, A, T, B; N xl)
130 Freut euch des Herrn, ihr Christen all, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(130*a* Freut euch des Herrn, ihr Christen all, S, A, T, B; N xl)
131 Ich will bei meinem Leben, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(131*a* Ich will bei meinem Leben, S, A, T, B; N xl)
132 Herr, hader mit den Hadern mein, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(132*a* Herr, hader mit den Hadern mein, S, A, T, B; N xl)
133 Ich sags von Grund meins Herzen frei, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(133*a* Ich sags von Grand meins Herzen frei, S, A, T, B; N xl)
134 Erzürn dich nicht so sehre, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(134*a* Erzürn dich nicht so sehre, S, A, T, B; N xl)
135 Herr, straf mich nicht in deinem Zorn, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(135*a* Herr, straf mich nicht in deinem Zorn, 2 S, A, B; N xl)
136 In meinem Herzen hab ich mir, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi
(136*a* In meinem Herzen hab ich mir, S, A, T, B; N vi, xl)
137 Ich harrete des Herren, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(137*a* Ich harrete des Herren, S, A, T, B; N xl)
138 Wohl mag der sein ein selig Mann, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(138*a* Wohl mag der sein ein selig Mann, S, A, T, B; N xl)
139 Gleichwie ein Hirsch eilt mit Begier S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(139*a* Gleichwie ein Hirsch eilt mit Begier, S, A, T, B; N xl)
140 Gott, führ mein Sach, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(140*a* Gott, führ mein Sach, S, A, T, B; N xl)
141 Wir haben, Herr, mit Fleiss gehört, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(141*a* Wir haben, Herr, mit Fleiss gehört, S, A, T, B; N xl)
142 Mein Herz dichtet ein Lied mit Fleiss, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(142*a* Mein Herz dichtet ein Lied mit Fleiss, S, A, T, B; N xl)
143 Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(143*a* Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott, S, A, T, B; N vi, xl)
144 Frohlockt mit Freud, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(144*a* Frohlockt mit Freud, S, A, T, B; N xl)
145 Gross ist der Herr, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(145*a* Gross ist der Herr, S, A, T, B; N xl)
146 Hört zu, ihr Völker in gemein, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(146*a* Hört zu, all Volker in gemein, S, A, T, B; N xl)
147 Gott, unser Herr, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(147*a* Gott, unser Herr, 2 S, A, B; N xl)
148 Erbarm dich mein, o Herre Gott, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(148*a* Erbarm dich mein, o Herre Gott, S, A, T, B; N xl)
149 Was trotzst denn du, Tyrann, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
150 Es spricht der Unweisen Mund wohl, S, A, T, B, bc (org) (text and music = no.110); G xvi, N vi
151 Hilf mir, Gott, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
152 Erhör mein Gbet, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(152*a* Erhör mein Gbet, S, A, T, B; N xl)
153 Herr Gott, erzeig mir Hülf und Gnad, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
154 Sei mir gnädig, o Gott, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(154*a* Sei mir gnädig, o Gott, S, A, T, B; N xl)
155 Wie nun, ihr Herren, seid ihr stumm, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
156 Hilf, Herre Gott, errette mich, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
157 Ach Gott, der du vor dieser Zeit, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
158 Gott, mein Geschrei erhöre, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(158*a* Gott, mein Geschrei erhöre, 2 S, A, B; N xl)
159 Mein Seel ist still in meinem Gott, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
160 O Gott, du mein getreuer Gott, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi
(160*a* O Gott, du mein getreuer Gott, 2 S, A, B; N vi, xl)
161 Erhör mein Stimm, Herr, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(161*a* Erhör mein Stimm, Herr, S, A, T, B; N xl)
162 Gott, man lobt dich in der Still, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
163 Jauchzet Gott, alle Lande sehr, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
164 Es wollt uns Gott genädig sein, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(164*a* Es wollt uns Gott genädig sein, S, A, T, B; N xl)
165 Es steh Gott auf, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(165*a* Es steh Gott auf, S, A, T, B; N xl)
166 Gott hilf mir, denn das Wasser dringt, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(166*a* Gott hilf mir, denn das Wasser dringt, S, A, T, B; N xl)
167 Eil, Herr, mein Gott, zu retten mich, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi
(167*a* Eil, Herr, mein Gott, zu retten mich, 2 S, A, B; N vi, xl)
168 Auf dich, Herr, trau ich allezeit, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
169 Gott, gib dem König auserkorn, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
170 Dennoch hat Israel zum Trost, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(170*a* Dennoch hat Israel zum Trost, S, A, T, B; N xl)
171 Warum verstösst du uns so gar, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
172 Aus unsers Herzen Grunde, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
173 In Juda ist der Herr bekannt, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
174 Ich ruf zu Gott mit meiner Stimm, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
175 Hör, mein Volk, mein Gesetz und Weis, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi
(175*a* Hör, mein Volk, mein Gesetz und Weis, 2 S, A, B; N vi, xl)
176 Ach Herr, es ist der Heiden Heer, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(176*a* Ach Herr, es ist der Heiden Heer, S, A, T, B; N xl)
177 Du Hirt Israel, höre uns, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
178 Singet mit Freuden unserm Gott, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
179 Merkt auf, die ihr an Gottes Statt, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
180 Gott, schweig du nicht so ganz und gar, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi

(180*a* Gott, schweig du nicht so ganz und gar, S, A, T, B; N xl)
181 Wie sehr lieblich und schöne, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi
(181*a* Wie sehr lieblich und schöne, 2 S, A, B; N vi, xl)
182 Herr, der du vormals gnädig warst, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
183 Herr, neig zu mir dein gnädigs Ohr, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
184 Fest ist gegründet Gottes Stadt, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
185 Herr Gott, mein Heiland, Nacht und Tag, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
186 Ich will von Gnade singen, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(186*a* Ich will von Gnade singen, S, A, T, B; N xl)
187 2p. of no.186: Ach Gott, warum verstösst du nun, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(187*a* 2p. of no.186*a*: Ach Gott, warum verstösst du nun, S, A, T, B; N xl)
188 Herr Gott Vater im höchsten Thron, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(188*a* Herr Gott Vater im höchsten Thron, S, A, T, B; N xl)
189 Wer sich des Höchsten Schirm vertraut, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(189*a* Wer sich des Höchsten Schirm vertraut, S, A, T, B; N xl)
190 Es ist fürwahr ein köstlich Ding, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(190*a* Es ist fürwahr ein köstlich Ding, S, A, T, B; N vi, xl)
191 Der Herr ist König herrlich schön, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
192 Herr Gott, dem alle Rach heimfällt, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(192*a* Herr Gott, dem alle Rach heimfällt, 3 S, T; N xl)
193 Kommt herzu, lasst uns fröhlich sein, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
194 Singet dem Herrn ein neues Lied, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
195 Der Herr ist König überall, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
196 Singet dem Herrn ein neues Lied, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(196*a* Singet dem Herrn ein neues Lied, S, A, T, B; N xl)
197 Der Herr ist Köng und residiert, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
198 Jauchzet dem Herren alle Welt, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(198*a* Jauchzet dem Herren alle Welt, S, A, T, B)
199 Von Gnad und Recht soll singen, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
200 Hör mein Gebet und lass zu dir, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
201 Nun lob, mein Seel, den Herren, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi
(201*a* Nun lob, mein Seel, den Herren, 2 S, A, B; N vi, xl)
202 Herr, dich lob die Seele mein, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(202*a* Herr, dich lob die Seele mein, S, A, T, B; N xl)
203 Danket dem Herren, lobt ihn frei, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
204 Danket dem Herren, erzeigt ihm Ehr, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
205 Danket dem Herren, unserm Gott, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
206 Mit rechtem Ernst, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
207 Herr Gott, des ich mich rühmte viel, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(207*a* Herr Gott, des ich mich rühmte viel, S, A, T, B; N xl)
208 Der Herr sprach zu meim Herren, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi
(208*a* Der Herr sprach zu meim Herren, S, A, T, B; N vi, xl)
209 Ich will von Herzen danken Gott dem Herrn, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(209*a* Ich will von Herzen danken Gott dem Herrn, S, A, T, B; N xl)
210 Der ist fürwahr ein selig Mann, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(210*a* Der ist fürwahr ein selig Mann, S, A, T, B; N xl)
211 Lobet, ihr Knecht, den Herren, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
212 Als das Volk Israel auszog, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
213 Nicht uns, nicht uns, Herr, lieber Gott, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(213*a* Nicht uns, nicht uns, Herr, lieber Gott, S, A, T, B; N xl)
214 Meim Herzen ists eine grosse Freud, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(214*a* Meim Herzen ists eine grosse Freud, S, A, T, B; N xl)
215 Lobt Gott mit Schall, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(215*a* Lobt Gott mit Schall, S, A, T, B; N xl)
216 Lasst uns Gott, unserm Herren, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
217 Wohl denen, die da leben, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(217*a* Wohl denen, die da leben, S, A, T, B; N xl)
218 2p. of no.217: Tu wohl, Herr, deinem Knechte, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
219 3p.: Lass mir Gnad widerfahren, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
220 4p.: Du tust viel Guts beweisen, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
221 5p.: Dein Wort, Herr, nicht vergehet, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
222 6p.: Ich hass die Flattergeister, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
223 7p.: Dir gbührt allein die Ehre, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
224 8p.: Fürsten sind meine Feinde, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
225 Ich ruf zu dir, mein Herr und Gott, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
226 Ich heb mein Augen sehnlich auf, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi
(226*a* Ich heb mein Augen sehnlich auf, S, A, T, B; N vi, xl)
227 Es ist ein Freud dem Herzen mein, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(227*a* Es ist ein Freud dem Herzen mein, S, A, T, B; N xl)
228 Ich heb mein Augen auf zu dir, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
229 Wär Gott nicht mit uns diese Zeit, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(229*a* Wär Gott nicht mit uns diese Zeit, S, A, T, B; N xl)
230 Die nur vertraulich stellen, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
231 Wenn Gott einmal erlösen wird, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
232 Wo Gott zum Haus nicht gibt sein Gunst, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(232*a* Wo Gott zum Haus nicht gibt sein Gunst, S, A, T, B; N xl)
233 Wohl dem, der in Furcht Gottes steht, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
234 Die Feind haben mich oft gedrängt, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(234*a* Die Feind haben mich oft gedrängt, S, A, T, B; N xl)
235 Aus tiefer Not schrei ich zu dir, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(235*a* Aus tiefer Not schrei ich zu dir, S, A, T, B; N vi, xl)
236 Herr, mein Gemüt und Sinn du weisst, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(236*a* Herr, mein Gemüt und Sinn du weisst, S, A, T, B; N xl)
237 In Gnaden, Herr, wollst eindenk sein, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
238 Wie ists so fein, lieblich und schön, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(238*a* Wie ists so fein, lieblich und schön, S, A, T, B; N xl)
239 Den Herren lobt mit Freuden, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
240 Lobt Gott von Herzengrunde, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(240*a* Lobt Gott von Herzengrunde, S, A, T, B; N xl)
241 Danket dem Herren, gebt ihm Ehr, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(241*a* Danket dem Herren, gebt ihm Ehr, 2 S, A, B; N xl)
242 An Wasserflüssen Babylon, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(242*a* An Wasserflüssen Babylon, S, A, T, B; N xl)
243 Aus meines Herzen Grunde, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(243*a* Aus meines Herzen Grunde, S, A, T, B; N xl)
244 Herr, du erforschst mein Sinne, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
245 Von bösen Menschen rette mich, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
246 Herr, mein Gott, wenn ich ruf zu dir, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(246*a* Herr, mein Gott, wenn ich ruf zu dir, S, A, T, B; N xl)

247 Ich schrei zu meinem lieben Gott, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
248 Herr, mein Gebet erhör in Gnad, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
249 Gelobet sei der Herr, mein Hort, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
250 Ich will sehr hoch erhöhen dich, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
251 Mein Seel soll loben Gott den Herrn, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(251*a* Mein Seel soll loben Gott den Herrn, S, A, T, B; N xl)
252 Zu Lob und Ehr mit Freuden singt, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi
(252*a* Zu Lob und Ehr mit Freuden singt, S, A, T, B; N vi, xl)
253 Lobet, ihr Himmel, Gott den Herrn, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
(253*a* Lobet, ihr Himmel, Gott den Herrn, S, A, T, B; N xl)
254 Die heilige Gemeine, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi, N vi
255 Lobt Gott in seinem Heiligtum, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi
(255*a* Lobt Gott in seinem Heiligtum, 2 S, A, B; N vi, xl)
256 Alles was Odem hat, lobe den Herrn (Responsorium), S, A, T, B, bc (org); G xvi
(256*a* Alles was Odem hat, lobe den Herrn (Responsorium), 2 S, A, B; N vi, xl)

Symphoniae sacrae, [op.6] (Venice, 1629)†
257 Paratum cor meum, S/T, 2 vn, bc (org); G v, N xiii, 5 vii
258 Exultavit cor meum in Domino, S, 2 vn, bc (org); G v, N xiii, 5 vii
259 In te, Domine, speravi, A, vn, bn/trbn, bc (org); G v, N xiii, 5 vii
260 Cantabo Domino in vita mea, T, 2 vn, bc (org); G v, N xiii, 5vii
261 Venite ad me, T, 2 vn, bc (org); G v, N xiii, 5 vii
262 Jubilate Deo omnis terra, B, 2 flautinos/vn, bc (org); G v, N xiii, 5 vii
263 Anima mea liquefacta est, 2 T, 2 fl/cornettinos, bc (org) (on 263/4*a*); G v, N xiii, 5 vii
(263/4*a* Anima mea liquefacta est, 2 T, 2 vn, [vle], bc, Dl Pi 8 [1625–30, Pirna], Pi 57 [1630–*c*1635, Pirna])
(263/4*b* Anima mea liquefacta est, [4 S], bc, Dl 54a [*c*1635, Pirna], probably inauthentic arr. of 263/4*a*)
264 2p.: Adjuro vos, filiae Hierusalem, 2 T, 2 fl/cornettinos, bc (org) (as no.263); G v, N xiii, 5 vii
265 O quam tu pulchra es, T, Bar, 2 vn, bc (org); G v, N xiii, 5 vii
266 2p.: Veni de Libano, T, Bar, 2 vn, bc (org); G v, N xiii, 5 vii
267 Benedicam Dominum in omni tempore, S, T, B, cornett/vn, bc (org); G v, N xiv, 5 vii
268 2p.: Exquisivi Dominum, S, T, B, cornett/vn, bc (org); G v, N xiv, 5 vii
269 Fili mi, Absalon, B, 2 trbn/vn, 2 trbn, bc (org); G v, N xiv, 5 vii
270 Attendite, popule meus, B, 2 trbn/vn, 2 trbn, bc (org); G v, N xiv, 5 vii
271 Domine, labia mea aperies, S, T, cornett/vn, trbn, bn, bc (org); G v, N xiv, 5 vii
272 In lectulo per noctes, S, A, 3 bn/viole, bc (org); G v, N xiv, 5 vii
273 2p.: Invenerunt me custodes, S, A, 3 bn/viole, bc (org); G v, N xiv, 5 vii
274 Veni, dilecte mi, I: S, trbn/T, 2 trbn; II: S, T; bc (org, theorbo) (text for I: T added by Schütz to his copy); G v, N xiv, 5 vii
275 Buccinate in neomenia tuba, 2 T, B, cornett, tpt/cornett, bn, bc (org); G v, N xiv, 5 vii
276 2p.: Jubilate Deo in chordis et organo, 2 T, B, cornett, tpt/cornett, bn, bc (org); G v, N xiv, 5 vii

Verba D. Pauli ... beatis manibus Dn. Johannis-Hermanni Scheinii ... consecrata (Dresden, 1631)††
277 Das ist je gewisslich wahr, 2 S, A, 2 T, B, bc (org) ad lib, on death of Johann Hermann Schein, Leipzig, 19 Nov 1630 (earlier version of no.388); G xii, N xxxi

An hoch printzlicher Durchläuchtigkeit zu Dennenmarck ... Beylager: Gesang der Venus-Kinder in der Invention genennet Thronus Veneris (Copenhagen, 1634)
278 O der grossen Wundertaten (Canconetta), 4 S [III lost], [2 vn], bc, for wedding festivities of Prince Christian of Denmark and Princess Magdalena Sibylla of Saxony, Copenhagen, 13 Oct 1634; G xviii, N xxxvii

Musicalische Exequien ... dess ... Herrn Heinrichen dess Jüngern und Eltisten Reussen, [op.7] (Dresden, 1636)††; G xii, N iv, S viii
279 Nacket bin ich vom Mutterleibe kommen (Concert ... in Form einer teutschen Missa), 2 S, A (alternating with B II), 2 T, B (+ cap. ad lib), bc (org, vle), for burial of Prince Heinrich Posthumus of Reuss, Gera, 4 Feb 1636
280 Herr, wenn ich nur dich habe (Motet), I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, B; bc (org, vle) ad lib (as no.279)
281 Herr nun lässest du deinen Diener/Selig sind die Toten (Canticum B. Simeonis), I: 2 A, 2 T, B; II: 2 S, B; bc (org, vle) (as no.279)

Erster Theil kleiner geistlichen Concerten, [op.8] (Leipzig, 1636)†
282 Eile mich, Gott, zu erretten, S, bc (org); G vi, N x, S
283 Bringt her dem Herren, Mez, bc (org); G vi, N x
284 Ich danke dem Herrn, A, bc (org); G vi, N x
285 O süsser, o freundlicher, T/S, bc (org); G vi, N x
286 Der Herr ist gross, 2 S, bc (org); G vi, N x
287 O lieber Herre Gott, 2 S, bc (org); G vi, N x, S
(287*a* O lieber Herre Gott, D-Kl 59i [1635, Dresden])
288 Ihr heiligen, lobsinget dem Herren, 2 S, bc (org); G vi, N x
289 Erhöre mich, wenn ich rufe, 2 S, bc (org); G vi, N x
(289*a* Erhöre mich, wenn ich rufe, 2 S [II lost], [B], bc, Dl Pi 8 [1625–30, Pirna], Pi 57 [1630–*c*1635, Pirna])
290 Wohl dem, der nicht wandelt, S, A, bc (org); G vi, N x
291 Schaffe in mir, Gott, ein reines Herz, S, T, bc (org); G vi, N xi
292 Der Herr schauet vom Himmel, S, B, bc (org); G vi, N xi
293 Lobet den Herren, der zu Zion wohnet, 2 A, bc (org) (?earlier version, lost, in inventory of Kassel Hofkapelle, 1638); G vi, N x
294 Eins bitte ich vom Herren, 2 T, bc (org); G vi, N x
295 O hilf, Christe, Gottes Sohn [Christe Deus adjuva], 2 T, bc (org) (Lat. text added by Schütz to his copy); G vi, N x, S
296 Fürchte dich nicht, ich bin mit dir, 2 B, bc (org); G vi, N x
(296*a* Fürchte dich nicht, ich bin mit dir, Kl 49y [1635, Dresden])
297 O Herr hilf; 2 S, T, bc (org) (earlier version of no.402); G vi, N xi, S
298 Das Blut Jesu Christi, 2 S, B, bc (org) (?earlier version, lost, in inventory of Kassel Hofkapelle, 1638); G vi, N xi, S
299 Die Gottseligkeit ist zu allen Dingen nütz, 2 S, B, bc (org); G vi, N xi, S
300 Himmel und Erde vergehen, 3 B, bc (org) (?earlier version, lost, in inventory of Kassel Hofkapelle, 1638); G vi, N x
301 Nun komm, der Heiden Heiland [Veni, Redemptor gentium], 2 S, 2 B, bc (org) (Lat. text added by Schütz to his copy); G vi, N xi, S
(301*a* Nun komm, der Heiden Heiland, Kl 49*g* [1635, Dresden])
302 Ein Kind ist uns geboren, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G vi, N xi, S
(302*a* Ein Kind ist uns geboren, Kl 50*c* [1635, Dresden])
303 Wir gläuben all an einen Gott, 2 S, T, B, bc (org); G vi, N xi
304 Siehe, mein Fürsprecher ist im Himmel, S, A, T, B (+ cap.), bc (org) (later version of no.84); G vi, N xi, S
(304*a* Siehe, mein Fürsprecher ist im Himmel, S, A, T, B, bc (org), Kl 50*a* [1635, Dresden])
305 Ich hab mein Sach Gott heimgestellt [Meas dicavi res Deo] (Aria), 2 S, A, T, B (+ cap.), bc (org) (later version of no.94; Lat. text added by Schütz to his copy); G vi, N xii

Anderer Theil kleiner geistlichen Concerten, [op.9] (Dresden, 1639)†
306 Ich will den Herren loben allezeit, S, bc (org); G vi, N x, S
307 Was hast du verwirket, A, bc (org); G vi, N x, S
308 O Jesu, nomen dulce, T, bc (org); G vi, N x
309 O misericordissime Jesu, T, bc (org); G vi, N x
310 Ich liege und schlafe, B, bc (org); G vi, N x
311 Habe deine Lust an dem Herren, 2 S, bc (org); G vi, N x
312 Herr, ich hoffe darauf, 2 S, bc (org); G vi, N x, S
313 Bone Jesu, verbum Patris, 2 S/T, bc (org); G vi, N x
314 Verbum caro factum est, 2 S, bc (org); G vi, N x
315 Hodie Christus natus est, S, T, bc (org); G vi, N xi
316 Wann unsre Augen schlafen ein [Quando se claudunt lumina], S, B, bc (org); G vi, N xi

(316*a* Wann unsre Augen schlafen ein, Kl 59*k* [1635, Dresden])
317 Meister, wir haben die ganze Nacht gearbeitet, 2 T, bc (org) (earlier version, ?lost, in inventory of Kassel Hofkapelle, 1638, ?identical to MS in Rp) G vi, N x
318 Die Furcht des Herren, 2 T, bc (org); G vi, N x, S
319 Ich beuge meine Knie, 2 B, bc (org), G vi, N x
320 Ich bin jung gewesen, 2 B, bc (org); G vi, N x
321 Herr, wann ich nur dich habe, 2 S, T, bc (org); G vi, N xi, S
322 Rorate coeli desuper, 2 S, B, bc (org); G vi, N xi
323 Joseph, du Sohn David, 2 S, B, bc (org); G vi, N xi, S
324 Ich bin die Auferstehung, 2 T/S, B, bc (org); G vi, N x, S
325 Die Seele Christi heilige mich, A, T, B, bc (org) (earlier version, lost, in inventory of Kassel Hofkapelle, 1638); G vi, N xi
326 Ich ruf zu dir, Herr Jesu Christ [Te Christe supplex invoco] (Hymnus), 3 S, Bar, bc (org); G vi, N xi, S
(326*a* Ich ruf zu dir, Herr Jesu Christ, 3 S, bc, Dl Pi 8 [1625–30, Pirna], Pi 57 [1630–*c*1635, Pirna])
327 Allein Gott in der Höh sei Ehr (Hymnus), 2 S, 2 T, bc (org); G vi, N xi
328 Veni, Sancte Spiritus (in concerto), 2 S, 2 T, bc (org), G vi, N xi
329 Ist Gott für uns, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G vi, N xi, S
330 Wer will uns scheiden von der Liebe Gottes, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G vi, N xi, S
331 Die Stimm des Herren S, A, T, B, bc (org); G vi, N xi
(331*a* Die Stimm des Herren, Kl 52*h* [1635, Dresden])
332 Jubilate Deo omnis terra, S, A, T, B, bc (org); G vi, N xi
333 Sei gegrüsset, Maria (Dialogus), 2 S, A, T, B, 5 insts, bc (org) (see also no.334); G vi, N xii, S
334 Ave Maria, gratia plena (Dialogus), 2 S, A, T, B, 5 insts, bc (org) (Lat. version of no.333); G vi, N xii, S
335 Was betrübst du dich, 2 S, A, T, B, bc (org); G vi, N xii, S
336 Quemadmodum desiderat cervus, S, A, 2 T, B, bc (org); G vi, N xii 337 Aufer immensam, Deus, aufer iram, S, A, 2 T, B, bc (org); G vi, N xii

in RISM 1641[3]:
338 Teutoniam dudum belli [Adveniunt pascha pleno], 2 S, A, T, B, 2 vn, bc (org); G xv, N xxxviii
339 Ich beschwere euch, ihr Töchter zu Jerusalem (Dialogus), 2 S, 2 S/vn, A, T, B, bc (org); G xiv

in RISM 1646[4]:
340 O du allersüssester und liebster Herr Jesu, 2 S, A, T, B, 2 vn, bc (org); G xiv

Symphoniarum sacrarum secunda pars, op.10 (Dresden, 1647)†
341 Mein Herz ist bereit, S/T, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G vii, N xv
(341*a* Mein Herz ist bereit, [S], 2 vn, bc (org); Kl 49*k* [1635, Dresden; title on wrapper is autograph]; N xv)
342 Singet dem Herren ein neues Lied, S/T, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G vii, N xv
343 Herr, unser Herrscher, S/T, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G vii, N xv
344 Meine Seele erhebt den Herren, S, 2 vn (alternating ad lib with 2 viole/trbn, 2 cornetts/tpt, 2 flautinos, 2 cornettinos/vn), bc (org, vle); G vii, N xv
345 Der Herr ist meine Stärke, S/T, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G vii, N xv
346 Ich werde nicht sterben, S/T, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G vii, N xv
(346*a* Ich werde nicht sterben, S/T, 2 vn, bc, Kl 49*t* [1640–47]; N xv)
347 2p. of no.346: Ich danke dir, Herr, S/T, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G vii, N xv
348 Herzlich lieb hab ich dich, o Herr, A, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G vii, N xv
(348*a* Herzlich lieb hab ich dich, o Herr, A, 2 vn, bc (org), Kl 49*d* [1635, Dresden; title on wrapper is autograph]; N xv)
349 Frohlocket mit Händen, T, 2 vn, bc (org, vle) (earlier version, lost, in inventory of Kassel Hofkapelle, 1638); G vii, N xv
350 Lobet den Herrn in seinem Heiligtum, T, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G vii, N xv
351 Hütet euch, dass eure Herzen, B, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G vii, N xv
352 Herr, nun lässest du deinen Diener, B, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G vii, N xv
(352*a* Herr, nun lässest du deinen Diener (Canticum Simeonis), B, 2 vn, bc (org), Kl 50*e* [1635, Dresden; title and dedication to Christoph Cornet on wrapper are autograph]; N xv)
353 Was betrübst du dich, 2 S/T, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G vii, N xvi
354 Verleih uns Frieden genädiglich, 2 S/T, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G vii, N xvi
355 2p.: Gib unsern Fürsten, 2 S/T, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G vii, N xvi
356 Es steh Gott auf, 2 S/T, 2 vn, bc (org, vle) (as stated in preface, based on Monteverdi: Armato il cor and Zefiro torna e di soavi accenti); G vii, N xvi
357 Wie ein Rubin in feinem Golde leuchtet, S, A, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G vii, N xvi
358 Iss dein Brot mit Freuden, S, B, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G vii, N xvi
359 Der Herr ist mein Licht, 2 T, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G vii, N xvi
360 Zweierlei bitte ich, Herr, 2 T, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G vii, N xvi
361 Herr, neige deine Himmel, 2 B, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G vii, N xvi
(361*a* Herr, neige deine Himmel, 2 B, 2 vn, bc (org), Kl 49*i* [1635, Dresden, title on wrapper is autograph], N xvi)
362 Von Aufgang der Sonnen, 2 B, 2 vn, bc (org, vle), G vii, N xvi
363 Lobet den Herrn, alle Heiden, A, T, B, 2 vn, bc (org, vle), G vii, N xvii
364 Die so ihr den Herren fürchtet, A, T, B, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G vii, N xvii
365 Drei schöne Dinge seind, 2 T, B, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G vii, N xvii
366 Von Gott will ich nicht lassen, 2 S, B, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G vii, N xvii
367 Freuet euch des Herren, A, T, B, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G vii, N xvii

Danck-Lied: für die hocherwiesene fürstl. Gnade in Weymar (Gotha, 1647)
368 Fürstliche Gnade zu Wasser und Lande (C.T. Dufft), T, 2 insts, bc, for birthday celebration for Duchess Eleonora Dorothea of Saxe-Weimar, perf. Weimar, 12 Feb 1647, according to diary of Duke Wilhelm; G xv, N xxxvii

Musicalia ad chorum sacrum, das ist: Geistliche Chor-Music ... erster Theil, op.11 (Dresden, 1648)†; G viii, N v, S
369 Es wird das Szepter von Juda, S, A, 2 T, B, bc
370 2p.: Er wird sein Kleid in Wein waschen, S, A, 2 T, B, bc
371 Es ist erschienen die heilsame Gnade Gottes, 2 S, A, T, B, bc
372 Verleih uns Frieden genädiglich, 2 S, A, T, B, bc
373 2p.: Gib unsern Fürsten, 2 S, A, T, B, bc
374 Unser keiner lebet ihm selber, 2 S, A, T, B, bc
375 Viel werden kommen, S, A, 2 T, B, bc
376 Sammlet zuvor das Unkraut, S, A, 2 T, B, bc
377 Herr, auf dich traue ich, 2 S, A, T, B, bc
378 Die mit Tränen säen, 2 S, A, T, B, bc
379 So fahr ich hin zu Jesu Christ, 2 S, A, T, B, bc
380 Also hat Gott die Welt geliebt (Aria), S, A, 2 T, B, bc
381 O lieber Herre Gott, 2 S, A, 2 T, B, bc
382 Tröstet, tröstet mein Volk, 2 S, A, 2 T, B, bc
383 Ich bin eine rufende Stimme, 2 S, A, 2 T, B, bc
384 Ein Kind ist uns geboren, 2 S, A, 2 T, B, bc
385 Das Wort ward Fleisch, 2 S, A, 2 T, B, bc
386 Die Himmel erzählen die Ehre Gottes, 2 S, A, 2 T, B (+ tutti [ad lib]), bc (later version of no.455)
387 Herzlich lieb hab ich dich, o Herr (Aria), 2 S, A, 2 T, B, bc
388 Das ist je gewisslich wahr, 2 S, A, 2 T, B (+ tutti [ad lib]), bc (later version of no.277)
389 Ich bin ein rechter Weinstock, 2 S, A, 2 T, B, bc
390 Unser Wandel ist im Himmel, 2 S, A, 2 T, B, bc
391 Selig sind die Toten, 2 S, A, 2 T, B, bc
392 Was mein Gott will, das gscheh allzeit, A, T, 4 insts, bc (earlier version, lost, in inventory of Kassel Hofkapelle, 1638; not identical with anon. setting, 2 S, A, 2 T, B, Kl 53*u* [*c*1610])
393 Ich weiss, dass mein Erlöser lebt, 3 S, A, T, 2 B, bc
394 Sehet an den Feigenbaum, S, T, 5 insts, bc

395 Der Engel sprach zu den Hirten (super Angelus ad pastores, Andreae Gabrielis), S, T, inst/B, Δ4 insts, bc
396 Auf dem Gebirge, 2 A, 5 insts, bc
397 Du Schalksknecht, T, 6 insts, bc (earlier version, lost, in inventory of Kassel Hofkapelle, 1638)

Symphoniarum sacrarum tertia pars, op.12 (Dresden, 1650)†
398 Der Herr ist mein Hirt, S, A, T, 2 vn, compl. 4vv and insts ad lib, bc (org, vle); G x, N xviii, S
(398*a* Der Herr ist mein Hirt, S, A, T, 2 vn, 3 trbn ad lib, bc (org), Kl 49*s* [1640–50], trbn parts ?inauthentic; N xviii)
399 Ich hebe meine Augen auf, A, T, B, 2 vn, compl. 4vv and insts ad lib, bc (org, vle); G x, N xviii, S
400 Wo der Herr nicht das Haus bauet, 2 S, B, vn, cornettino/vn, compl. 4vv and insts ad lib, bc (org, vle); G x, N xviii, S
401 Mein Sohn, warum hast du uns das getan (in dialogo), S, Mez, B, 2 vn, compl. 4vv and insts ad lib, bc (org, vle); G x, N xviii, S
(401*a* Mein Sohn, warum hast du uns das getan (Dominica 1. post Epiphan.[ias], in dialogo), S, Mez, B, 2 vn, bc (org), Kl 49*w* [1640–50]; G x, N xviii)
402 O Herr hilf, 2 S, T, 2 vn, bc (org, vle) (later version of no.297); G x, N xviii, S
403 Siehe, es erschien der Engel des Herren, S, 2 T, B, 2 vn, compl. 4vv and insts ad lib, bc (org, vle); G x, N xix, S
404 Feget den alten Sauerteig aus, S, A, T, B, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G x, N xix
405 O süsser Jesu Christ, 2 S, A, T, 2 vn, compl. 4vv and insts ad lib, bc (org, vle); G x, N xix, S
406 O Jesu süss, wer dein gedenkt (super Lilia convallium, Alexandri Grandis), 2 S, 2 T, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G x, N xix, S
(406*a* O Jesu süss, wer dein gedenkt (super Lillium convallium Alexandri Grandi), [2 S, 2 T], 2 vn, bc (+ vle), Kl 59*q* [1640–50]; N xix)
407 Lasset uns doch den Herren, unsern Gott, loben, 2 S, T, B, 2 vn, compl. 4vv and insts ad lib, bc (org, vle) (?earlier version, without compl., lost, in inventory of Weimar Hofkapelle, 1662); G x, N xix, S
408 Es ging ein Sämann aus zu säen, S, A, T, B, 2 vn, bn, compl. 4vv and insts ad lib, bc (org, vle); G xi, N xx, S
409 Seid barmherzig, S, A, T, B, 2 vn, bn (+ B), compl. 4vv and insts ad lib, bc (org, vle), G xi, N xx, S
410 Siehe, dieser wird gesetzt zu einem Fall, 2 S, A, T, B, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G xi, N xx, S
411 Vater unser, der du bist im Himmel, S, Mez, 2 T, B, 2 vn, compl. 4vv and insts ad lib, bc (org, vle, Lat. version, MÜs); G xi, N xx, S
412 Siehe, wie fein und lieblich ist, 2 S, A, T, B, 2 vn, bn, compl. 2 insts ad lib, bc (org, vle) (later version of no.48); G xi
413 Hütet euch, dass eure Herzen, 2 S, A, 2 T, B, 2 vn, bc (org, vle); G xi, S
414 Meister, wir wissen, dass du wahrhaftig bist, 2 S, A, T, B, 2 vn, bn, compl. 4vv and insts ad lib, bc (org, vle), G xi, S
415 Saul, Saul, was verfolgst du mich, 2 S, A, T, 2 B, 2 vn, 2 cap. S, A, T, B ad lib, bc (org, vle); G xi, S
416 Herr, wie lang willt du mein so gar vergessen, 2 S, A, 2 T, B, 2 vn, compl. 4 viole ad lib [IV not pr.], bc (org, vle); G xi, S
(416*a* Herr wie lang willt du mein so gar vergessen, 2 S, A, 2 T, B, 2 vn, 4 viole ad lib, bc, Kl 49*l* [1640–50])
417 Komm, heiliger Geist, S, Mez, 2 T, Bar, B, 2 vn, 2 cap. S, A, T, B ad lib, bc (org, vle); G xi, S
418 Nun danket alle Gott, 2 S, A, 2 T, B, 2 vn, compl. 4vv and insts ad lib, bc (org, vle); G xi, S
(418*a* Nun danket alle Gott, 2 S, A, 2 T, B, 2 vn, bc, Kl 52*c* [1640–50])

in RISM 1652[6a]:
419 O meine Seel, warum bist du betrübet (Trauer-Lied) (C. Brehme), S, A, T, B, on death of Anna Margaretha Brehme, Dresden, 21 Sept 1652; G xviii, N xxxvii

Zwölff geistliche Gesänge, op.13 (Dresden, 1657)†; G xii, S xv
420 Kyrie, Gott Vater in Ewigkeit (super Missam Fons bonitatis), S, A, T, B, bc ad lib
421 All Ehr und Lob soll Gottes sein (Das teutsche Gloria in excelsis), S, A, T, B, bc ad lib
422 Ich gläube an einen einigen Gott (Der nicänische Glaube), S, A, T, B, bc ad lib
423 Unser Herr Jesus Christus, in der Nacht (Die Wort der Einsetzung des heiligen Abendmahls), 2 S, A, B, bc ad lib
424 Ich danke dem Herrn von ganzem Herzen (Der 111. Psalm), 2 S, A, B, bc ad lib
425 Danksagen wir alle Gott, 2 S, A, T, bc ad lib
426 Meine Seele erhebt den Herren (Magnificat), S, A, T, B, bc ad lib
427 O süsser Jesu Christ (Des H. Bernhardi Freudengesang), 2 S, A, B/I: 2 S, A, B; II: 2 S, A, B; bc ad lib
428 Kyrie eleison, Christe eleison (Die teutsche gemeine Litaney), S, A, T, B, bc ad lib
429 Aller Augen warten auf dich (Das Benedicite vor dem Essen), S, A, T, B, bc ad lib
(429*a* Aller Augen warten auf dich, 2 S, B, Dl Pi 8 [1625–30, Pirna])
430 Danket dem Herren, denn er ist freundlich (Das Gratias nach dem Essen), S, A, T, B, bc ad lib
(430*a* Danket dem Herren, denn er ist freundlich, 2 S, B, Dl Pi 8 [1625–30, Pirna])
431 Christe fac ut sapiam (Hymnus pro vera sapientia), S, A, T, B/I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, B; bc ad lib

Canticum B. Simeonis ... nach dem hochseligsten Hintritt ... Johann Georgen (Dresden, 1657)
432–3 Herr, nun lässest du deinen Diener, [S], S, A, 2 T, B, bc ad lib, on death of Elector Johann Georg I of Saxony, Dresden, 8 Oct 1657; G xii, N xxxi, S in David Schirmers ... poetische Rauten-Gepüsche (Dresden, 1663):

434 Wie wenn der Adler sich aus seiner Klippe schwingt, S, bc, on engagement of Princess Magdalena Sibylla of Saxony and Duke Friedrich Wilhelm of Saxe-Altenburg, Dresden, 1651; G xv, N xxxvii

Historia, der freuden- und gnadenreichen Geburt Gottes und Marien Sohnes, Jesu Christi (Dresden, 1664)
435 Die Geburt unsers Herren Jesu Christi, Chor des Evangelisten: T, bc (org, vle); [Chor der Concerten in die Orgel: S, 3 A, 3 T, 4 B, chorus 4vv, chorus 6vv (+ viole ad lib), 2 vn, 2 violettas, 2 va (? = violettas), vle, 2 rec, bn, 2 tpt/cornetts, 2 trbn, bc (org)] (only Chor des Evangelisten printed; Chor der Concerten in MS, possibly = no.435*a* (ii)); G i, N i
(435*a* Die Geburt unsers Herren Jesu Christi (2 versions): (i) [S, 3 A], T, [3 T, 4 B, chorus 4vv, chorus 6vv (+ viole ad lib), 2 vn, va, 3 viole, 2 rec, bn, 2 tpt/cornetts, 2 trbn], bc (org, hpd, viola), S-Uu Caps. 71 [1660–64, Dresden] (probably = die Geburth Christi, in stilo recitativo, perf. Dresden, 25 Dec 1660, according to court diaries); G xvii (recitatives only); (ii) [Chor des Evangelisten: T, bc]; (Chor der Concerten in die Orgel:) 2 S, 2 A, A/T, 3 T, 4 B, 2 vn, va, 2 violettas/viole, 6 viole [II–VI lost], 2 rec, bn, 2 tpt, 2 trbn [II lost], bc (org), Uu Caps.71 [?1664, Dresden] (possibly = Chor der Concerten of no.435; 2 trbn in final chorus spurious); G xvii, N i)
(435*b* Die Geburt unsers Herren Jesu Christi, 2 S, 3 A, 3 T, 4 B, 2 vn, [va], 2 violettas, vle, 2 rec, bn, 2 tpt, 2 trbn, bc, formerly Singakademie, Berlin [origins unknown] (inc.; recit = 435, Chor des Evangelisten, incorporating MS corrections to unique copy in D-Bsb; intermedia possibly inauthentic); N i)
436 Ego autem sum, [B], bc, formerly Marienkirche, Helmstedt [1638, Helmstedt; MS now W 323 Mus.Handschr., but partbook containing no.436 no longer extant]; G xviii
437 Veni, Domine, [S], bc, formerly Marienkirche, Helmstedt [1638, Helmstedt; MS now W 323 Mus.Handschr., but partbook containing no.437 no longer extant]; G xviii
438 Die Erde trinkt für sich (Madrigal) (Optiz), A, T, bc, Kl 59*l* [1640–50]; G xv, N xxxvii
439 Heute ist Christus der Herr geboren, 3 S, bc, Kl 52*g* [1632–8]; G xiv, S
440 Güldne Haare, gleich Aurore (Canzonetta), 2 S, 2 vn, [bc], Kl 58*i* [before 1650, ?] (contrafactum of Monteverdi: Chiome d'oro); G xv, N xxxvii
441 Liebster, sagt in süssem Schmerzen (Opitz), 2 S, 2 vn, bc, Kl 49*h* [1627–32, Dresden; insts are autograph]; G xv, N xxxvii

442 Tugend ist der beste Freund (Opitz), 2 S, 2 vn, bc, Kl 49*f* [1640–50]; G xv, N xxxvii

443 Weib, was weinest du (Dialogo per la pascua), 2 S, A, T [+ rip.], bc, Kl 49*x*/2 [?*c*1645, Dresden; text is autograph]; G xiv, facs. edn (Kassel, 1965)

(443*a* Weib, was weinest du, [2 S, A, T, B + rip.], bc, Dl 1479/E/502 [?. ?Grimma]; Kl 49*x*/1 [origins unknown; title-page only])

444 Es gingen zweene Menschen hinauf (in dialogo), 2 S, A, Bar, bc, Kl 49*u* [1640–50]; G xiv

445 Ach bleib mit deiner Gnade, see 'Doubtful works'

446 In dich hab ich gehoffet, Herr, see 'Doubtful works'

447 Erbarm dich mein, o Herre Gott, S, 2 viole/vn, 2 viole, vle, bc, S-Uu 34:1 [before 1665, ?]; G xviii, N xxxii, S

448 Gelobet seist du, Herr (Gesang der dreyer Menner im feurig Ofen), 2 S, A, T, B, 2 cornettinos ad lib, 3 trbn ad lib, [cap. 2 S, A, T, B ad lib], cap. 2 vn, 2 viole, vle ad lib, bc, formerly Staats- und Universitätsbibliothek, Königsberg [1652, ?Naumburg]; G xiii, S

449 Herr, unser Herrscher (Psalmus 8), 2 S, A, T, B (+ cap. ad lib), cornettino/vn ad lib, vn/cornett ad lib, 4 trbn ad lib, bc (org, vle), D-Kl 50*d* [1635, Dresden; title is autograph] (contrary to N, insts authentic); G xiii, N xxvii

450 Ach Herr, du Schöpfer aller Ding (Madrigale spirituale), S, A, 2 T, B, bc, Kl 52*k* [1615–27, Dresden] (on Marenzio: Deh poi ch'era ne' fati); G xiv, N xxxii, S

(450*a* Ach Herr, du Schöpfer aller Ding (sopra Deh poi ch'era ne' fati del Marentio), 2 S [I lost], B, bc, Dl Pi 8 [1625–30, Pirna], Pi 57 [1630–*c*1635, Pirna])

451 Nachdem ich lag in meinem öden Bette (Opitz), S, B, 2 vn, 2 insts, bc, formerly Stadtbibliothek, Breslau [origins unknown]; G xv, N xxxvii

452 Lässt Salomon sein Bette nicht umgeben (Opitz), S, B, 2 vn, 2 insts, bc, formerly Stadtbibliothek, Breslau [origins unknown]; G xv, N xxxvii

453 Freue dich des Weibes deiner Jugend, S, A, T, B (+ tutti [ad lib]), tpt, cornett, 3 trbn ad lib, bc, Dl Löb 56 [*c*1640, Löbau] (= Freue dich des Weibes, à 6 et 9, listed as pr. work in catalogue of A. Unger's collection, Naumburg, 1657); G xiv

454 Nun lasst uns Gott dem Herren, see 'Doubtful works'

455 Die Himmel erzählen die Ehre Gottes (Psalmus 19), 2 S, A, 2 T, B (+ cap. ad lib), bc (+ vle), Kl 50*f* [1635, Dresden; title on wrapper and revision are autograph] (earlier version of no.386); G xiv, N xxvii, S

456 Hodie Christus natus est, 2 S, A, 2 T, B, bc, Kl 49*c* [1640–50]; G xiv, S

457 Ich weiss, dass mein Erlöser lebet, 2 S, A, 2 T, B, FBo XI 8 47 [origins unknown]; formerly Dreikönigskirche, Dresden [before 1628, ?]; S

458 Kyrie eleison, Christe eleison (Litania), 2 S, A, 2 T, B, bc, formerly Staats- und Universitätsbibliothek, Königsberg [before 1657, ?Naumburg]; G xii

459 Saget den Gästen (Dominica XX. post Trinitatis), S, A, T, B, 2 vn, bn, bc, D-Kl 52*u* [1623–7]; G xiv, S

460 Itzt blicken durch des Himmels Saal (Madrigal) (Opitz), 2 S, A, T, B, 2 vn, bc (+ vle), Kl 49*e* [1635, Dresden]; G xv, N xxxvii

461 Herr, der du bist vormals genädig gewest, 2 S, 2 T, B, 2 vn, 3 trbn ad lib, cap. S, A, T, B ad lib, [bc], Kl 49*n* [*c*1650] (contrary to N, insts authentic); G xiii, N xxviii

462 Auf dich, Herr, traue ich (Psalmus 7), I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, B; coro aggiunto (2 vn, viola cornett, 3 trbn), ad lib, bc (org); Kl 49*q* [1627–32] (contrary to N, insts probably authentic); G xiii, N xxvii

463 Cantate Domino canticum novum, I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, [B], bc (org), Kl 51*q* [1650–51] (rev. version of G. Gabrieli: Cantate Domino, 1615); S

464 Ich bin die Auferstehung, I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, B, WRh AW B 1334 [origins unknown] (probably = Ich bin die Auferstehung ... mit 8 Stimmen, listed in Leipzig fair catalogue, aut. 1620); N xxxi, S

465 Da pacem, Domine, I: 5 viole + 1/2vv; II: S, A, T, B, bc, formerly Staats- und Universitätsbibliothek, Königsberg [before 1657, ?Naumburg], for electoral assembly, Mühlhausen, 4 Oct–5 Nov 1627; G xv, N xxxviii, S

466 Herr, wer wird wohnen in deiner Hütten (Psalmus 15), I: A, B, 2 vn, vle; II: S, T, 3 trbn; bc, D-Kl 49*p* [1627–32], G xiii, N xxvii

467 Wo Gott der Herr nicht bei uns hält, I: S, lutes; II: S, 3 viols; III: S, 3 trbn, bc, Kl 49*m* [1615–18] (bc in source added *c*1625, unauthentic); G xiii, N xxxii

(467*a* Wo Gott der Herr nicht bei uns hält, see 'Doubtful works')

468 Magnificat anima mea, S, A, T, B, 2 vn, 3 trbn, 2 cap. S, A, T, B ad lib, bc (+ vle), S-Uu 34:4 [before 1665, Dresden]; G xviii, S

469 Surrexit pastor bonus, 2 S, A, 2 T, B, 2 vn, 3 trbn, 2 cap. S, A, T, B ad lib, bc (org), D-Kl 49*a* [1640–50]; G xiv

470 Christ ist erstanden von der Marter alle, S, A, T, 4 viole [III lost], 4 trbn, [2 cap. a 4], bc (+ lutes, org piccolo, org grande), Kl 52*b* [1614–15; bc and lute are autograph] (variant sinfonia in late bc part [*c*1650], pr. in critical reports to G and N, from A. Hammerschmidt, Nehmet hin und esset, 1645 (DTÖ, xvi)); G xiv, N xxxii

(470*a* Christ ist erstanden von der Marter alle, S, [?parts], Kl 52*b* [*c*1613]; facs. in Breig, 1984)

471 O bone Jesu, fili Mariae, 2 S, 2 A, T, B [+ rip. ad lib], 2 vn/viole, 4 viole, [vle], bc (org), S-Uu 34:5 [?1666]; G xviii, S

472 Herr Gott, dich loben wir, see 'Doubtful works'

473 Wo der Herr nicht das Haus bauet (Psalmus 127), I: 2 S, A, T, B, 2 vn, 3 trbn; II (cap.): S, A, T, B; bc (org), D-Kl 50*b* [1627–32, Dresden] (contrary to N, insts authentic); G xiii, N xxviii

474 Ach wie soll ich doch in Freuden leben, I: [S], lutes; II: [S], 3 viole; III: [S], 3 trbn; cap. A, T, B, vn, cornett; bc, Kl 56*d* [1614–15; vn is autograph]; G xviii, N xxxviii

475 Veni, Sancte Spiritus, I: 2 S, bn; II: B, 2 cornetts; III: 2 T, 3 trbn; IV: A, T, vn, fl, vle; bc (org), Kl 49*b* [*c*1620, Dresden; summary of scoring in bc and text for A are autograph] (swv, G, N and S give various alternative scorings based on inauthentic additions to MS); G xiv, N xxxii, S

476 Domini est terra, I: S, A, T, B (+ tutti [ad lib]); II: S, A, T, B (+ tutti [ad lib]); cornett, Δcornett, bn, Δ4 bn, vn, Δvn, 4 trbn; bc, formerly Staats- und Universitätsbibliothek, Königsberg [before 1657, ?Naumburg] (contrary to N, insts authentic; tutti indications, texting of insts in source probably inauthentic); G xiii, N xxvii, S

477 Vater Abraham, erbarme dich mein (Dialogus divites Epulonis cum Abrahamo), 2 S, A, T, B, 2 vn (alternating with 2 fl), vle, bc, D-Kl 53*y* [1640–50]; G xviii, S

Die sieben Wortte unsers lieben Erlösers und Seeligmachers Jesu Christi

478 Da Jesus an dem Kreuze stund, S, A, 2 T, B [+ cap. ad lib], 5 insts, bc, Kl 48 [origins unknown] (final chorus listed in catalogue of A. Unger's collection, Naumburg, 1657); G i, N ii, S

Historia des Leidens und Sterbens unsers Herrn und Heylandes Jesu Christi nach dem Evangelisten S. Matheum, 1666

479 Das Leiden unsers Herren Jesu Christi, wie es beschreibet der heilige Evangeliste Matthaeus, 2 S, A, 3 T, 2 B, chorus 4vv, LEm II 2, 15 [*c*1700, Dresden] (= die Passion unsers Herrn Jesu Christi aus dem Evangelisten S. Matthaeo des Capelmeisters Schützes neue Composition, perf. Dresden, 1 April 1666, according to court diaries; final chorus ?M.G. Peranda); G i, N ii, S, facs. (Leipzig, 1981)

Historia des Leidens und Sterbens ... Jesu Christi nach dem Evangelisten St. Lucam

480 Das Leiden unsers Herren Jesu Christi, wie uns das beschreibet der heilige Evangeliste Lucas, S, A, 3 T, 2 B, chorus 4vv, LEm II 2, 15 [*c*1700, Dresden] (anon., but transmitted with nos.479 and 481; presumably = die Passion unsers Herrn Jesu Christi aus dem Evangelisten S. Luca, des Cap. Schützens Neue Composit., perf. Dresden, 8 April 1666, according to court diaries); G i, N ii, S, facs. (Leipzig, 1981)

Historia des Leidens und Sterbens ... Jesu Christi nach dem Evangelisten St. Johannem

481 Das Leiden unsers Herren Jesu Christi, wie uns das beschreibet der heilige Evangeliste Johannes, S, 3 T, 2 B, chorus 4vv, LEm II 2, [*c*1700, Dresden] (presumably = version perf. Dresden, 13 April 1666, according to court diaries); G i, N ii, S, facs. (Leipzig, 1981)

(Historia dess Leidens und Sterbens ... Jesu Christi aus dem Evangelisten S Johanno)

(481*a* Das Leiden unsers Herren Jesu Christi, wie uns das beschreibet der heilige Evangeliste Johannes, W 1.11.1 Aug 2° [1665, Weissenfels] (= die Passion aus dem Evangelisten Johanne nach der neuen Composit Cappelm. Heinrich Schützens, perf. Dresden, 24 March 1665, according to court diaries); G i, S)

Königs und Propheten Davids hundert und neunzehender Psalm ... nebenst dem Anhange des 100. Psalms ... und eines deutschen Magnificats, Dl 1479/E/504, ?GB-Lbl (formerly Stefan Zweig's private collection, London) [1671, Dresden] (title-page and index pr. Dresden, 1671; dedication to Johann Georg II, other notes and corrections are autograph); N xxxix

482 Wohl denen, die ohne Wandel leben (Ps cxix: Aleph et Beth), I: S, A, T, B; II: [S], A, [T], B; bc (org)
483 Tue wohl deinem Knechte (Ps cxix: Gimel et Daleth), I: S, A, T, B; II: [S], A, [T], B; bc (org)
484 Zeige mir, Herr, den Weg deiner Rechte (Ps cxix: He et Vau), I: S, A, T, B; II: [S], A, [T], B; bc (org)
485 Gedenke deinem Knechte an dein Wort (Ps cxix: Dsain et Chet), I: S, A, T, B; II: [S], A, [T], B; bc (org)
486 Du tust Guts deinem Knechte (Ps cxix: Thet et Jod), I: S, A, T, B; II: [S], A, [T], B; bc (org)
487 Meine Seele verlanget nach deinem Heil (Ps cxix: Caph et Lamed), I: S, A, T, B; II: [S], A, [T], B; bc (org)
488 Wie habe ich dein Gesetze so lieb (Ps cxix: Mem et Nun), I: S, A, T, B; II: [S], A, [T], B; bc (org)
489 Ich hasse die Flattergeister (Ps cxix: Samech et Aiin), I: S, A, T, B; II: [S], A, [T], B; bc (org)
490 Deine Zeugnisse sind wunderbarlich (Ps cxix: Pe et Zade), I: S, A, T, B; II: [S], A, [T], B; bc (org)
491 Ich rufe von ganzem Herzen (Ps cxix: Koph et Resch), I: S, A, T, B; II: [S], A, [T], B; bc (org)
492 Die Fürsten verfolgen mich ohne Ursach (Ps cxix: Schin et Thau), I: S, A, T, B; II: [S], A, [T], B; bc (org)
493 Jauchzet dem Herrn alle Welt (Ps c), I: S, A, T, B; II: [S], A, [T], B; bc (org) (probably = composition perf. Dresden, 15 Oct 1665, according to court diaries: Zum Introitu, intonierte der mittlere Hofprediger ... Jauchzet dem Herren, worauff der Chor musicaliter antwortete und den 100. Psalm vollents absolvierte, dessen Composition hatt der Capellmeister Schüze izo hierzu von neuem gemacht)
494 Meine Seele erhebt den Herren (Teutsch Magnificat), I: S, A, T, B; II: [S], A, [T], B; bc (org); N xxviii, S
(494*a* Meine Seele erhebt den Herren (Teutzsch Magnificat), I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, B; bc, D-Dl 1479/E/501 [1671–8, Grimma]; N xxviii)
495 Unser Herr Jesus Christus, in der Nacht, I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, B, Dl 1/C/ 2 [*c*1630, ?Sangerhausen]; ed. W. Braun (Kassel, 1961)
496 Esaja, dem Propheten, das geschah, B, [8vv], 2 cornetts (alternating with 2 rec), [7vv], [bc], WF partbooks without call no. [origins unknown]; N xxxii
497 Ein Kind ist uns geboren, 2 T [II lost], bc, Dl Pi 57 [1630–*c*1635, Pirna]
498 Stehe auf; meine Freundin, I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, B, BIB VI/ 2.2 [*c*1650], ed. W. Steude (Leipzig, 1972)
499 Tulerunt Dominum, 4 tpt [I, II lost], [20 parts], Dl Pi 50 [*c*1635, Pirna]
500 An den Wassern zu Babel (Psalmus 137), I: T, 4 trbn [IV lost]; II: 2 S, B; bc (org, lutes, hpd), Kl 49*o* [1627–32]; N xxviii

in Christliche LeichPredigt, beim Begräbnis ... der ... Frawen Magdalenen, Herrn Heinrich Schützens ... ehelicher Haussfrawen (Leipzig, 1625)

501 Mit dem Amphion zwar mein Orgel und mein Harfe (Klag-Lied) (?Schütz), T, bc (lutes/hpd), on death of Magdalena Schütz, Dresden, 6 Sept 1625; ed. (with facs.) E. Möller (Leipzig and Kassel, 1984)
A1 Vier Hirtinnen, gleich jung, gleich schon, 2 S, A, T, bc, Kl 58*f* [1615–*c*1620, Dresden; music and part of text are autograph] (anon., but identifiable by description in inventory of Friedrich Emanuel Praetorius's private collection, Lüneburg, 1684, and by character of source); G xviii, N xxxvii
A2 Ach Herr, du Sohn David, see 'Doubtful works'
A3 Der Gott Abraham, see 'Doubtful works'
A4 Stehe auf, meine Freundin, see 'Doubtful works'
A5 Benedicam Dominum in omni tempore, see 'Doubtful works'
A6 Freuet euch mit mir, see 'Doubtful works'
A7 Herr, höre mein Wort, see 'Doubtful works'
A8 Machet die Tore weit, see 'Doubtful works'
A9 Sumite psalmum, see 'Doubtful works'
A10 Dominus illuminatio mea, see 'Doubtful works'
A11 Es erhub sich ein Streit, see 'Doubtful works'
A*a* Das Leiden unsers Herrn Jesu Christi, wie es uns St. Marcus beschreibet, see 'Doubtful works'
A*b* Zeuchst du nun von hinnen, see 'Doubtful works'
A*c* Wo seid ihr so lang gelieben, see 'Doubtful works'
A*d* Deus in nomine tuo, see 'Doubtful works'
A*e* Tancredi, der Clorindam vor ein Manns Person, see 'Doubtful works'
A*f* Kyrie eleison, Christe eleison, see 'Doubtful works'
A*g* Domine Deus virtutem, see 'Doubtful works'
A*h* Damit, dass diese Gsellschaft wert, see 'Doubtful works'
A*i* O höchster Gott, see 'Doubtful works'
A*k* Jesu dulcissime, see 'Doubtful works'

DOUBTFUL WORKS

445 Ach bleib mit deiner Gnade, S, A, T, B, formerly Preussische Staatsbibliothek Berlin [*c*1650, ?] (contrafactum of C. Cramer: Sag, was hilft alle Welt, 1641); G xvi, N xxxii
446 In dich hab ich gehoffet, Herr, [S, A], T, B, B 40 200 [origins unknown]; G xviii, N xxxii
454 Nun lasst uns Gott dem Herren, 2 S, A, 2 T, B, formerly Staats-und Universitätsbibliothek, Königsberg [origins unknown] (contrafactum of section of no.279); G xvi, N xxxii
(467*a* Wo Gott der Herr nicht bei uns halt, 3 S, bc, Kl 58*n* [1640–50] (spurious arr. of no.467); N xxxii)
472 Herr Gott, dich loben wir, I: [S] (+ cornett/vn/trbn ad lib), [A, T, B]; II: S, A, T, B (+ 3 trbn [III lost]), 2 clarinos, 2 tpt, timp, 2 vn/cornetts, bc (org), D-Bsb 20 374 (1677, Erfurt]; G xviii, N xxxii
A2 Ach Herr, du Sohn David, 3 S, T, B, bc, formerly Stadtbibliothek, Breslau [origins unknown] (anon., attrib. by Moser, 'Unbekannte Werke' (1935), on grounds of presumed identity with lost work of this title; not by Schütz); S
A3 Der Gott Abraham, A, T, B, Δ2 vn, Δ3 trbn, bc, Kl 52*s* [1640–50] (anon., attrib. by Engelbrecht, 1958, on stylistic grounds; not by Schütz); S
A4 Stehe auf, meine Freundin, I: 2 S, A, T; II: A, 2 T, B, formerly Preussische Staatsbibliothek, Berlin [?1643] (anon., attrib. by Moser, 'Unbekannte Werke' (1935), on grounds of presumed identity with lost work of this title, since discovered, see no. 498; A4 not by Schütz); S
A5 Benedicam Dominum in omni tempore, I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, B, bc, Kl 55*c* [*c*1660, ?Vienna] (anon., attrib. by Engelbrecht, 1958, on stylistic grounds; not by Schütz); ed. C. Engelbrecht (Kassel, 1959)
A6 Freuet euch mit mir, S/T, T/S, bc (org), or I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, B; bc (org), Kl 52*t* [1640–50] (anon., attrib. by Engel on stylistic grounds; possibly = Dialogus vom verlohrnen Schaaff, und Groschen, H. Heinrich Schützens, listed in inventory of Katherinenkirche, Zwickau, 1634–61); ed. H. Engel (Berlin, 1950, 2/1960)
A7 Herr, höre mein Wort (Psalmus 5), I: S, A, T, B (+ rip. Δ4 insts); II: S, A, T, B (+ rip. Δ4 insts); bc (org), Kl 52*o* [1627–32] (anon., attrib. by Engel on stylistic grounds; probably by Schütz); ed. H. Engel (Berlin, 1950); N xxvii
A8 Machet die Tore weit, I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, B, Dl Löb 8, Löb 70 [1624–5, Löbau], KMs 2920–27 [after 1637] (both attrib. Schütz), formerly Stadtbibliothek, Breslau [origins unknown] (attrib. S. Rüling); ed. H.J. Moser (Leipzig, 1935)
A9 Sumite psalmum, 2 S, A, T, B, 2 vn, 3 trbn, bc, Kl 53*p* [*c*1660, ?Vienna] (anon., attrib. by Engelbrecht, 1958, on stylistic grounds; not by Schütz); ed. C. Engelbrecht (Kassel, 1959)
A10 Dominus illuminatio mea, S, A, 2 T, B, 2 vn, 2 va, bn, bc, Kl 53*q* [*c*1660, ?Vienna] (anon., attrib. by Engelbrecht, 1958, on stylistic grounds; not by Schütz)
A11 Es erhub sich ein Streit (in Festo S. Michaelis angeli), I: S, A, T, B; II: S, A, T, B; III: T, 3 cornetts; IV: T, tpt, 3 bn; bc

(org), Kl 53g [*c*1630–1638] (anon., attrib. by H. Spitta chiefly on stylistic grounds, see G xviii; probably not by Schütz); G xviii, S

Historia des Leidens und Sterbens ... Jesu Christi nach dem Evangelisten St. Marcum

A*a* Das Leiden unsers Herrn Jesu Christi, wie es uns St. Marcus beschreibet, S, A, 3 T, 2 B, chorus 4vv, D-LEm II 2, 15 [*c*1700, Dresden] (anon., transmitted with nos.479–81 and sometimes considered possibly authentic, identifiable through Dresden court diaries as work of M.G. Peranda); G i, facs. (Leipzig, 1981)

A*b* Zeuchst du nun von hinnen, S, bc, DS 1196 [*c*1630] (anon., attrib. suggested by F. Noack; probably not by Schütz); ed. in Noack, 1924

Frewden-Lied bey und über dem ... fürstl. Willkommen zu gebrauchen, Geschehen auff dem Friedenstein den 10. Christmonats im Jahr 1646 (Gotha, 1646)

A*c* Wo seid ihr so lang geblieben (C.T. Dufft), S, bc (anon., attrib. by Thiele; not by Schütz); ed. in Thiele, 'Thüringer Meister' (1954)

A*d* Deus in nomine tuo, [4vv], B, [3 insts, bc], Kl 62f [*c*1660, ?Vienna] (anon., attrib. by Engelbrecht, 1958, on basis of common origin with A5, 9 and 10; not by Schütz)

Tancredus et Clorinda

A*e* Tancredi, der Clorindam vor ein Manns Person, [S], T, [T, str, bc], J-Tma without call no. [?Reinsdorf, 1638–57] (contrafactum of Monteverdi: Il combattimento di Tancredi e Clorinda; anon., attrib. by W. Osthoff; by D. von dem Werder), facs. in Osthoff, 1961

A*f* Kyrie eleison, Christe eleison (Litania), 3 S, A, T, B, bc (org), S-Uu Caps.69:7 [?1660–64, Dresden] (anon., attrib. by Grusnick, 1969, on grounds of style and evident Saxon origin; written on Schütz's own paper and hence very probably by him); S

A*g* Domine Deus virtutem, I: A, T, B, 2 vn; II: 2 S, 3 trbn/viole ad lib [III lost; ? = fagotto grosso/vle]; III: cap. S, A, T, B ad lib; bc (+ fagotto grosso/vle), Uu 40: 13 [before 1665, Dresden] (anon., attrib. by Grusnick, 1966, on provenance of source and stylistic grounds; possibly by Schütz); S

A*h* Damit, dass diese Gsellschaft wert (Intrada Apollinis) (Schütz), 2 S, [?parts], D-DS Mus.1194 [origins unknown] (anon., attrib. by E. Noack, 1967, chiefly on basis of textual identity with section of Schütz's Wunderlich Translocation, 1617; probably not by Schütz)

A*i* O höchster Gott, 2 S/T, bc, Dl Pi 8 [1625–30, Pirna], Pi 57 [1630–*c*1635, Pirna] (anon., attrib. by Steude, 1967, chiefly on stylistic grounds; not by Schütz)

A*k* Jesu dulcissime, S, A, 3 T, B, Kl 52k [1615–27, Dresden] (on G. Gabrieli: O Jesu Christe; anon., attrib. by Breig, 1974, chiefly on stylistic grounds; probably by Schütz), ed. W. Breig (Kassel, 1974)

— [without text], [?parts], bc, Dl Gri 7 [*c*1640, Grimma] (attrib. 'Ex Sagittario'; ? by J. Sagittarius)

— Die nur vertraulich stellen (C. Becker), S, [A, T, B], S pr. as top part of setting for 5vv in Geistlicher Leider ... Ander Theil (Gotha, 1648) with attrib. 'Melod. Schützii'; no relation to no.230

— Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott, [I: S, A], T, [B; II: S], A, [T], B, Z 80.3 [1617–22]

LOST WORKS

References principally in inventories, other information in librettos and Dresden court diaries; see also nos. 293, 298, 300, 317, 325, 349, 392, 397, 407, 464, 493, A6

Inventories:

Gotha – inventory of works performed at the dedication of the palace church, 1646 (see Schneider, 1905–6)

Grimma – inventory of Christian Andreas Schulze's private collection, 1699 (see Steude, 1967)

Kassel – inventory of the Hofkapelle, 1638 (see Zulauf, 1902)

Leipzig – inventory of Gottfried Kühnel's private collection, 1684 (see Schering, 1918–19)

Lüneburg – inventory of Friedrich Emanuel Praetorius's private collection, 1695 (see Seiffert, 1907–8)

Naumburg – inventory of Andreas Unger's private collection, 1657 (see Werner, 1926)

Pirna – inventory of Cantorey und Musicorum Gesellschaft, 1654 (see Nagel, 1896)

Waldenburg – inventory of the church, before 1642 (see Möller, 1987)

Weimar – inventory of the Hofkapelle, 1662 (see Aber, 1921, and Möller, 1988)

all probably including bc

Ach Herr, du Sohn Davids, a 6, Naumburg (not A2); Ach Herr, strafe mich nicht, S, T, in index of D-W 323 Mus.Handschr. [1638, Helmstedt]; Ach Herr, wie ist meiner Feinde so viel, a 8, Waldenburg; Alleluia, lobet den Herrn (Psalm 150), with tpts, timp, first perf. Dresden, 1 Jan 1667; ?another setting perf. Dresden, 22 July 1668; Alleluia, lobet ihn in seinem Heiligtum, a 16 or 18, Weimar (catalogue includes incipit); Anima mea liquefacta est, a 3, Kassel; Aquae tuae Domine, perf. Dresden, 15 June, 23 Nov 1662; Audite coeli, Kassel; Auf, auf, meine Harfe, a 10, Weimar; Auf dich, Herr, traue ich, a 16 or 24, Naumburg

Beati omnes qui timent Dominum, probably perf. Copenhagen, 1634; Benedicite omnia opera Domini, a 20, Leipzig; Canite, psallite, plaudite, a 12, Kassel; Christ lag in Todesbanden, Kassel; Confitebor tibi, 5vv, 5 insts, Weimar; Dafne (op, Opitz), perf. Torgau, 13 April 1627, for marriage of Landgrave Georg II of Hesse-Darmstadt and Princess Sophia Eleonora of Saxony, text extant; Das ander Maria, a 6, Weimar (listed with Maria, sei gegrüsset; ? inaccurate reference to no.334, or one of 'Zwey deutsche geystl. Madrial H. Sag.' listed elsewhere in Weimar inventory); Der Herr ist mein Hirt, 5vv, 5 insts, Weimar (? inaccurate reference to no.398*a*); Der Herr ist mein Hirt, a 8 (Strasbourg, 1657) (? = no.33 or 398*a*); Der Herr sprach zu meinem Herren, a 11, Weimar, a 17, Naumburg; Der Wind beeist das Land, d Dorian, 2 T, Lüneburg

Dies ist der Tag des Herrn, a 6, Naumburg; Die, so ihr den Herren fürchtet, Weimar; Dies Ort, mit Bäumen ganz umgeben, a, S, bc, Lüneburg; Domine, exaudi orationem, a 7 or 10, Naumburg, a 7, 10 or 14, Weimar; Dorinda, Weimar; Du bist aller Dinge schöne, 'finalis G', 2 S, A, T, B, 2 vn, 3 trbn, Grimma; Du hast mir mein Herz, a 8, Naumburg; Ego dormio, a 5, Kassel; Ein Kindelein so lobelich, Kassel; Ein Kind ist uns geboren, a 8, Naumburg; Einsmals der Hirte Coridon, g Dorian, 2 S, 2 vn, Lüneburg (? = anon. work with same incipit, Kassel); Einsmals in einem schönen Tal, d Dorian, a 2 and a 6, Lüneburg; Ein wunder Löwe, Kassel

Erhör mich, wenn ich rufe, a 8, Naumburg; Esaja, dem Propheten, a 8, Naumburg (? variant version of no.496; see also Mattheson, 1740); Es ist erschienen, 3vv, Weimar; Es ist Zeit, die Stund ist da, 4vv, Weimar; Es sei denn eure Gerechtigkeit, a 8, Naumburg; Es stehe Gott auf; a 13, Weimar; Exultate Deo adjutori nostro, probably perf. Copenhagen, 1634; Factum est praelium magnum (in festo Mich.[aelis]), C, a 9, Lüneburg (probably not A11);

Fröhlich auf, ihr Himmels Volk (J.G. Schottelius), see Theatralische neue Vorstellung; Gelobet sei der Herr, a 5, 10, 11 or 20, Weimar (? inaccurate reference to no.448); Glückwündschung des Apollinis und der neun Musen, 12vv, 12 cornetts, tpts, timp, for birthday of Johann Georg I, Dresden, 5 March 1621, text extant (facs., Kassel, 1929); Gott, man lobet dich in der Stille, a 8, Naumburg

Herr, komm hinab (Dominica XXI. post Trin.[itatem]), a 9, Kassel, Naumburg; Herr, warum trittest du so ferne (Ps x), e Phrygian, a 8, 12 or 18, Lüneburg; Heut ist Christus der Herr geboren, a 6, Kassel (? variant version of no.439 or 456); Jauchzet dem Herrn (Ps c) with tpts, first perf. Dresden, 28 Sept 1662; Jauchzet dem Herrn, a 6, Gotha; Jauchzet, jauchzet, a 4, Weimar; Jesus trat in ein Schiff, a 8, Naumburg; Kyrie, Weimar (probably = one of following works or no.458); Kyrie eleison (Littaney), a 5, Weimar (? = A*f*, see 'Doubtful works'); [Kyrie eleison] (Deutsche Littaney), a 12 or 18, Weimar (catalogue includes incipit); Kyrie, Gott Vater in Ewigkeit, e, 6vv, 6vv in rip., 6 insts, Lüneburg; Lobsinget Gott, ihr Männer von Galilea (in fest.[o] Ascens.[ionis] Christi), d Dorian, a 5 or 10, Naumburg, a 10, Lüneburg

Machet die Tore weit, a 20, Naumburg; Magnificat, 3vv, 2 vn, Weimar; Magnificat, d Dorian, S, T, B, 2 vn, 3 trbn, bn, cap. a Δ4, Lüneburg, (? = preceding work with ad lib parts); Maria, sei gegrüsset, a 5, Weimar (listed with Das ander Maria; ? = no.333, or one of 'Zwey deutsche geystl. Madrial H. Sag.' listed elsewhere in Weimar inventory); Mein Freund, ich tu dir nicht Unrecht, a 6, Weimar; Mein Freund, komme, a 6, Pirna; Meister, wir haben die ganze Nacht, a 8, Naumburg; Misericordias Domini, a 6, Naumburg; Nun hat recht die Sünderin (Schottelius), see

Theatralische neue Vorstellung; Orpheó und Euridice (opera-ballet, A. Buchner), for marriage of Prince Johann Georg of Saxony and Princess Magdalena Sybilla of Brandenburg, Dresden, 20 Nov 1638, text extant

Preise, Jerusalem, den Herrn (Ps cxlvii), a 6 in concerto, Gotha; Renunciate Johanni quae audistis, perf. Dresden, 16 Oct 1665; Saget den Gästen, a 4, Naumburg, a 9, Pirna (? both inaccurate references to no.459); Sag, o Sonne meiner Seelen, G Mixolydian, a 4, Lüneburg; Siehe, wie fein und lieblich ist, a 6, Kassel, Naumburg (? inaccurate reference to no.48); Singet dem Herrn ein neues Lied (Ps cxlix), 2 choirs, Gotha; Theatralische neue Vorstellung von der Maria Magdalena, Wolfenbüttel, Dec 1644 [collab. Sophie Elisabeth]; text of 2 numbers, Fröhlich auf, ihr Himmels Volk and Nun hat recht die Sünderin, in J.G. Schottelius: Fruchtbringender Lustgarten (Lüneburg, 1647/R) (Schütz's authorship of the rest uncertain); Tröste uns, Gott, Weimar (anon., but following 2 works by Schütz and headed 'so er gesezet'; catalogue includes incipit); Unser Leben währet siebzig Jahr, a 5, Naumburg

Venus, du und dein Kind, Weimar; Wenn der Herr die gefangenen Zion, 6vv, 6 insts, Weimar; Wer ist der, so von Edom kömmt, d Dorian, a 10 or 18, Lüneburg; Wer sich dünken lasset, a 4, Weimar; Wer unter dem Schirm des Höchsten, 5vv, 2 vn, Weimar (? = anon. work with same incipit, d Dorian, 2 S, A, T, B (+ cap.), 2 vn, Lüneburg); Wie ein Rubin, a 3, Weimar (? inaccurate reference to no.357); Wunderlich Translocation des weitberümbten und fürtrefflichen Berges Parnassi (Schütz), for visit of Emperor Matthias, Dresden, 25 July 1617, music lost, text in Panegyrici Caesario-Regio-Archiducales (Dresden, 1617); source does not name composer but music presumably by Schütz (see also Damit, dass diese Gsellschaft wert, A*h*, listed under 'Doubtful works'); Zwei wunderschöne Täublein zart (Madrigal), for wedding of Reinhart von Taube and Barbara Sybilla von Carlowitz, Dresden, 10 Feb 1624, text extant

'9 Madrigalien oder weltliche Stükke, H. S. darunter das Jägerliedt. A[dam] D[rese]', Weimar, incl. Das Zielbachische Jägerliedt, 1 work attrib. Schütz; also 7 anon. titles possibly by Schütz: Ach liebste, lass uns eilen (Opitz), a 4; Der Kuckuck hat sich zum Tode, a 4; Distel und Dorn stechen sehr, a 4; Gehet meine Seufzer hin, a 5; So bist du nun, mein Lieb, a 6; Täglich geht die Sonne unter (Opitz), a 6; Wenn dich, o Sylvia, a 6

'28 zusammengebundene Kirchen Stükke, H. Schützens', Weimar, incl. 20 works attrib. Schütz, 1 work attrib. ? Michael Cracowit; also 6 anon. titles: Bleib bei uns, 5vv, 5 insts; Es gingen zweene Menschen hinauf, 5vv, 2 va; Ich freue mich des, 5vv, 5 insts; Jesus Christus, unser Heiland, a 6; Kyrie, Gott Vater in Ewigkeit, 'ex E', 6vv, 11 parts (? = work of this title attrib. Schütz in Lüneburg, see above); O du allersüssester Herr Jesu, a 7 (? = no.340)

Schütz may also be presumed to have composed most, if not all, of the theatrical music for the Danish royal wedding of 1634.

ALPHABETICAL KEY

German

Latin

268; Exultate Deo adjutori nostri, lost; Exultavit cor meum, 258; Factum est praelium, lost; Fili mi, Absalon, 269; Gratias agimus tibi, 93; Heu mihi, Domine, 65; Hodie Christus natus est, 315, 456; In lectulo per noctes, 272; In te, Domine, speravi, 66, 259; Inter brachia, 82; Invenerunt me, 273; Jesu dulcissime, A*k*; Jubilate Deo in chordis, 276; Jubilate Deo omnis terra, 262, 332; Magnificat (2 works), lost; Magnificat anima mea, 468; Meas dicavi res Deo, 305; Misericordias, lost

Nonne hic est, 74; O bone Jesu, 471; O bone, o dulcis, 53; Oculi omnium in te sperant, 88; O Jesu, nomen dulce, 308; O misericordissime Jesu, 309; O quam tu pulchra es, 265; Paratum cor meum, 257; Pater noster, 89, 92; Pro hoc magno mysterio, 77; Quando se claudunt lumina, 316; Quemadmodum desiderat cervus, 336; Quid commisisti, 56; Quid detur tibi, 72; Quo, nate Dei, 59; Quoniam ad te clamabo, 62; Quoniam non est in morte, 86; Reduc, Domine Deus meus, 75; Renunciate Johanni, lost; Rorate coeli desuper, 322; Sicut Moses serpentem, 68; Si non humiliter sentiebam, 79; Speret Israel in Domino, 80; Spes mea, Christe Deus, 69; Sumite psalmum A9; Supereminet omnem scientiam, 76; Surrexit pastor bonus, 469

Te Christe supplex invoco, 326; Teutoniam dudum belli, 338; Tulerunt Dominum, 499; Turbabor, sed non perturbabor, 70; Veni de Libano, 266; Veni, dilecte mi, 274; Veni, Domine, 437; Veni, Redemptor gentium, 301; Veni, rogo, in cor meum, 83; Veni, Sancte Spiritus, 328, 475; Venite ad me, 261; Verba mea auribus percipe, 61; Verbum caro factum est, 314; Vulnerasti cor meum, 64

Italian

Alma afflitta, che fai, 4; Così morir debb'io, 5; Di marmo siete voi, 17; D'orrida selce alpina, 6; Dunque à Dio, 15; Feritevi, ferite, 9; Fiamma ch'allacia, 10; Fuggi, fuggi, o mio core, 8; Giunto è pur, 18; Io moro, 13; Mi saluta costei, 12; O dolcezze amarissime, 2; O primavera, 1; Quella damma son io, 11; Ride la primavera, 7; Selve beate, 3; Sospir che del bel petto, 14; Tornate, o cari baci, 16; Vasto mar, nel cui seno, 19

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ADB (P. Spitta); FürstenauG, i; GerberNL; GöhlerV; MatthesonGEP; MGG1 (K. Gudewill and W. Bittinger); SmitherHO, ii; WaltherML

DOCUMENTS, SOURCES

R. Eitner: 'Heinrich Schütz (Sagittarius): Verzeichnis seiner bis heute aufbewahrten Werke', MMg, xviii (1886), 47–54, 57–61, 65–70

M. Seiffert: 'Die Chorbibliothek der St. Michaelisschule in Lüneburg zu Seb. Bach's Zeit', SIMG, ix (1907–8), 593–621

A. Schering: 'Die alte Chorbibliothek der Thomasschule in Leipzig', AMw, i (1918–19), 175–88

F. Noack: 'Die Tabulaturen der hessischen Landesbibliothek zu Darmstadt', Musikwissenschaftlicher Kongress: Basle 1924, 276–85

A. Werner: 'Die alte Musikbibliothek und die Instrumentensammlung an St. Wenzel in Naumburg an der Saale', AMw, viii (1926), 390–415

F.A. Drechsel: 'Ein unbekanntes Schreiben von Heinrich Schütz', ZMw, ix (1926–7), 627–31

G. Kinsky: 'Ein Schütz-Fund', ZMw, xii (1929–30), 597–8

H.J. Moser: 'Unbekannte Werke von Heinrich Schütz', ZMw, xvii (1935), 332–42

O. Wessely: 'Zwei unveröffentlichte Heinrich-Schütz-Dokumente', Musikerziehung, vii (1953–4), 7–10

C. Engelbrecht: Die Kasseler Hofkapelle im 17. Jahrhundert und ihre anonymen Musikhandschriften aus der Kasseler Landesbibliothek (Kassel, 1958); see also reviews by H.H. Eggebrecht, Mf, xiii (1960), 81–4

W. Bittinger, ed.: Schütz-Werke-Verzeichnis (SWV): kleine Ausgabe (Kassel, 1960)

H.R. Jung: 'Ein neuaufgefundenes Gutachten von Heinrich Schütz aus dem Jahre 1617', AMw, xvii (1961), 241–7

H.R. Jung: 'Ein unbekanntes Gutachten von Heinrich Schütz über die Neuordnung der Hof-, Schul- und Stadtmusik in Gera', BMw, iv (1962), 17–36

B. Grusnick: 'Die Dübensammlung: ein Versuch ihrer chronologischen Ordnung', STMf, xlvi (1964), 27–82; xlviii (1966), 63–186

W. Braun: 'Mitteldeutsche Quellen der Musiksammlung Gotthold in Königsberg', Musik des Ostens, v (1969), 84–96

B. Grusnick: 'Litania Upsaliensis: eine unbekannte Litanei von Heinrich Schütz', Sagittarius, ii (1969), 39–62

W. Steude: 'Die Markuspassion in der Leipziger Passionen-Handschrift des Johann Zacharias Grundig', DJbM, xiv (1969), 96–116

W. Breig: 'Neue Schütz-Funde', AMw, xxvii (1970), 59–72

H. Walter: 'Ein unbekanntes Schütz-Autograph in Wolfenbüttel', Musicae scientiae collectanea: Festschrift Kark Gustav Fellerer zum siebzigsten Geburtstag, ed. H. Hüschen (Cologne, 1973), 621–5

H. Glahn and S. Sørensen, eds.: Musikhåndskrifterne fra Clausholm/The Clausholm Music Fragments (Copenhagen, 1974)

T. Seebass, ed.: Musikhandschriften in Basel aus verschiedenen Sammlungen, Kunstmuseum, 31 May – 13 July 1975 (Basle, 1975) [exhibition catalogue]

W. Breig: 'Schützfunde und –zuschreibungen seit 1960: aud dem Wege zur Grossen Angabe des Schütz-Werke-Verziechnisses', Schütz-Jb 1979, 63–92

R. Brünner: 'Bibliographie des Schütz-Schrifttums 1951–1975', Schütz-Jb 1979, 93–142; Schütz-Jb 1981, 64–81

W. Steude: 'Das wiedergefundene Opus ultimum von Heinrich Schütz: Bemerkungen zur Quelle und Werk', Schütz-Jb 1982–3, 9–18

R. Brünner: 'Bibliographie des Schütz-Schrifttums 1672–1925', Schütz-Jb 1984, 102–24

D. Berke: Heinrich Schütz: Texte, Bilder, Dokumente (Kassel, 1985)

Heinrich Schütz und die Musik in Dänemark: Copenhagen 1985 [incl. K. Gudewill: 'Die aktuelle Lage der Schütz-Forschung' 9–18; O. Kongsted: 'Archivalische Quellen zum Wirken von Heinrich Schütz in Kopenhagen', 33–41; W. Steude: 'Auskünfte Dresdner Quellen zu Heinrich Schütz' Dänemarkreisen', 43–56]

H. Krause-Graumnitz: Heinrich Schütz: sein Leben im Werk und den Dokumenten seiner Zeit (Leipzig, 1985–8)

A. Kobuch: 'Neue Sagittariana im Staatsarchiv Dresden: Ermittlungen unbekannter Quellen über den kursächsischen Hofkapellmeister Heinrich Schütz', Heinrich Schütz im Spannungsfeld seines und unseres Jahrhunderts: Dresden 1985 [Jb Peters 1986–7], 119–62; also in Jb für Regionalgeschichte, xiii (1986), 79–124

E. Möller: 'Ein Waldenburger Inventarium als Schütz-Quelle', Heinrich Schütz im Spannungsfeld seines und unseres Jahrhunderts: Dresden 1985 [Jb Peters 1986–7], 117–18

E. Möller: 'Die Weimarer Noteninventare von 1662 und ihre Bedeutung als Schütz-Quellen', Schütz-Jb 1988, 62–85

R. Brunner: 'Bibliographie des Schütz-Schrifttums 1976–1985', Schütz-Jb 1989, 104–29

C. Gottwald: 'Neue Forschungen zu den Kasseler Schütz-Handschriften', Schütz Congress: Landau 1989 [Schütz-Jb 1990], 31–42

G. Spagnoli: The Letters and Documents of Heinrich Schütz, 1656–1672: Annotated Edition and Translation (Ann Arbor, 1990)

A. Watty: 'Bericht über neue Schütz-Quellen', Schütz-Jb 1992, 56–61

BIOGRAPHY, BACKGROUND

M. Hoe von Hoenegg: Chur sächsiche evangelische Jubel Frewde (Leipzig, 1618)

H. Schütz: Memorial (1651); ed. K. Vötterle (Kassel, 1936); facs. as Autobiographie (Leipzig, 1972)

M. Geier: Kürtze Beschreibung des … Herrn Heinrich Schützens … Lebens-Lauff (Dresden, 1672, repr. 1935/R)

J. Mattheson: Critica musica, ii (Hamburg, 1725/R)

C. von Winterfeld: Johannes Gabrieli und sein Zeitalter (Berlin, 1834/R)

M. Fürstenau: Beiträge zur Geschichte der königlich sächsischen musikalischen Kapelle (Dresden, 1849)

W. Schäfer: 'Einige Beiträge zur Geschichte der kurfürstlichen musikalischen Capelle oder Cantorei unter den Kurfürsten August, Christian I. u. II. u. Johann Georg I.', Sachsen-Chronik, i (1854), 404–51

W. Schäfer: 'Heinrich Schütz: kurfürstlich sächsischer Kapellmeister, 1617 bis 1672', ibid., 500–87

F. Chrysander: 'Geschichte der Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttelschen Capelle und Oper vom sechzehnten achtzehnten bis zum 18. Jahrhundert', Jb für musikalische Wissenschaft, i (1863), 147–286, esp. 159–72

L.H. Fischer: 'Heinrich Schütz und Christoph Kaldenbach', MMg, xv (1883), 91–4

J. Sittard: Zur Geschichte der Musik und des Theaters am württembergischen Hofe, i (Stuttgart, 1890–91/R)
P. Spitta: 'Heinrich Schütz' Leben und Werke', Musikgeschichtliche Aufsätze (Berlin, 1894), 3–60; rev. of ADB entry
W. Nagel: 'Die Kantoreigesellschaft zu Pirna', MMg, xxviii (1896), 148–56, 157–66
M. Seiffert: 'Anecdota Schütziana', SIMG, i (1899–1900), 213–18
E. Zulauf: Beiträge zur Geschichte der landgräflich-hessischen Hofkapelle zu Cassel bis auf die Zeit Moritz des Gelehrten (Kassel, 1902); repr. in Zeitschrift des Vereins für hessische Geschichte und Landeskunde, new ser., xxvi (1903), 1–144
M. Schneider: 'Die Einweihung der Schlosskirche auf dem "Friedenstein" zu Gotha im Jahre 1646', SIMG, vii (1905–6), 308–13
A. Pirro: Schütz (Paris, 1913/R)
K. Lütge: 'Heinrich Schütz, Kläglicher Abschied', Festschrift Hermann Kretzschmar (Leipzig, 1918/R), 85–7
A. Werner: 'Ein Albumblatt von Heinrich Schütz', NZM, Jg.86 (1919), 181 only
E.H. Müller von Asow: Heinrich Schütz: Leben und Werke (Berlin, 1922)
A. Einstein: 'Schütz-Miszellen, i', ZMw, v (1922–3), 432–3
A. Einstein: 'Heinrich Schütz', Ganymed, v (1925), 104; pubd separately (Kassel, 1928); repr. in Von Schütz bis Hindemith (Zürich, 1957), 9–24
E.H. Müller von Asow: Heinrich Schütz (Leipzig, 1925)
C. Mahrenholz: 'Heinrich Schütz und das erste Reformations-Jubiläum 1617', Musik und Kirche, iii (1931), 149–59; repr. in Musicologica et liturgica: Gesammelta Aufsätze, ed. K.F. Müller (Kassel, 1960), 196–204
E.H. Müller, ed.: Heinrich Schütz: Gesammelte Briefe u. Schriften (Regensburg, 1931/R)
H. Rauschning: Geschichte der Musik und Musikpflege in Danzig (Danzig, 1931)
M. Gondolatsch: 'Richtiges und Falsches um einen Heinrich-Schütz-Brief', ZMw, xv (1932–3), 428–30
L. Kruger: 'Johann Kortkamps Organistenchronik, eine Quelle zur hamburgischen Musikgeschichte des 17. Jahrhunderts', Zeitschrift des Vereins für hamburgische Geschichte, xxxiii (1933), 188–213
H. Birtner: 'Heinrich Schütz und Landgraf Montz von Hessen', Hessenland, xlvi/7–8 (1935), 100–04
F. Blume: 'Heinrich Schütz 1585–1672', Die grossen Deutschen, ed. W. Andreas and W. von Scholz, i (Berlin, 1935), 627–43
W. Dane: 'Briefwechsel zwischen dem landgräflich-hessischen und dem kurfürstlich sächsischen Hof um Heinrich Schütz (1614–1619)', ZMw, xvii (1935), 343–55
W. Gurlitt: 'Heinrich Schütz: zum 350. Geburtstag am 8. Oktober 1935', JbMP 1935, 64–83; repr. in Musikgeschichte und Gegenwart, i (Wiesbaden, 1966), 140–58
H.J. Moser: 'Neues über Heinrich Schütz', AcM, vii (1935), 146–52
A. Schering: 'Aus der Selbstbiographie eines deutschen Kantors (Elias Nathusius, †1676)', Festschrift Max Schneider zum 60. Geburtstag, ed. H.J. Zingel (Halle, 1935), 84–91
H.J. Moser: Heinrich Schütz: sein Leben und Werk (Kassel, 1936, 2/1954; Eng. trans., 1959)
R. Mohr: 'Ein Brief von Heinrich Schütz an die Stadt Frankfurt am Main', Deutsche Musikkultur, i (1936–7), 103–4
G. Schünemann: 'Ein neues Bildnis von Heinrich Schütz', ibid., 47–8
B. Maerker: 'Rembrandts Bildnis eines Musikers – ein Schützportrait?', Deutscke Musikkultur, ii (1937–8), 329–45
R. Casimiri: 'Enrico Sagittario (Heinrich Schütz) alla scuola di Giovanni Gabrieli', NA, xv (1938), 88–92
G. Ilgner: Matthias Weckmann, ca. 1619–1674: sein Leben und seine Werke (Wolfenbüttel and Berlin, 1939)
W. Serauky: Musikgeschichte der Stadt Halle, ii/1 (Halle and Berlin,1939/R)
H.J. Moser: Kleines Heinrich-Schütz-Buch (Kassel, 1940, 3/1952; Eng. trans., 1967)
H.J. Moser: 'Heinrich Schütz und Dresden', Dresdner Kapellbuch, ed. G. Hausswald (Dresden, 1948), 77–83
H. Schnoor: Dresden: vierhundert Jahre deutsche Musikkultur, ed. E. Bunkowsky (Dresden, 1948)
I. Becker-Glauch: Die Bedeutung der Musik für die Dresdener Hoffeste bis in die Zeit Augusts des Starken (Kassel, 1951)
G. Weizsäcker: Heinrich Schütz: Lobgesang eines Lebens (Stuttgart, 1952, 2/1956)
O. Wessely: 'Zur Frage nach dem Geburtstag von Heinrich Schütz', AÖAW, xc (1953), 231–8
E.P. Kretzschmer: 'Schütz und Gera', Festschrift zur Ehrung von Heinrich Schütz (1585–1672), ed. G. Kraft (Weimar, 1954), 57–61
R. Petzoldt: 'Zur sozialen Lage des Musikers der Schütz-Zeit', ibid., 20–35
A. Thiele: 'Heinrich Schütz und Weimar', ibid., 62–82
A. Thiele: 'Thüringer Meister im Umkreis von Heinnch Schütz und Heinrich Albert', Festschrift zur Ehrung von Heinrich Albert (1604–1651), ed. G. Kraft (Weimar, 1954), 65–98
A. Werner: 'Begegnungen mit Heinrich Schütz', Festschrift zur Ehrung von Heinrich Schütz (1585–1672), ed. G. Kraft (Weimar, 1954), 86–8
F. Blume: 'Geistliche Musik am Hofe des Landgrafen Moritz von Hessen', Zeitschrift des Vereins für hessische Geschichte und Landeskunde, lxviii (1957), 131–40
W. Gurlitt: 'Heinrich Schütz 1585–1672', Die grossen Deutschen, v (Berlin, rev. 2/1957 by H. Heimpel, T. Heuss and B. Reifenberg), 109–17
W. Braun: 'Theodor Schuchardt und die Eisenacher Musikkultur im 17. Jahrhundert', AMw, xv (1958), 291–306
A. Schmiedecke: 'Die Familie Schütz in Weissenfels', Mf xii (1959), 180–84
P. Várnai: Heinrich Schütz (Budapest, 1959)
W. Haacke: Heinrich Schütz: eine Schilderung seines Lebens und Wirkens (Königstein, 1960)
W. Osthoff: 'Monteverdis Combattimento in deutscher Sprache und Heinrich Schütz', Festschrift Helmuth Osthoff, ed. L. Hoffman-Erbrecht and H. Hucke (Tutzing, 1961), 195–227
E. Schmidt: Der Gottesdienst am kurfürstlichen Hofe zu Dresden: ein Beitrag zur liturgischen Traditionsgeschichte von Johann Walter biz zu Heinrich Schütz (Göttingen, 1961)
O. Wessely: 'Ein unbekanntes Huldigungsgedicht auf Heinrich Schütz', AÖAW, xcviii (1961), 132–8
O. Benesch: 'Schütz und Rembrandt', Festschrift Otto Erich Deutsch, ed. W. Gerstenberg, J. LaRue and W. Rehm (Kassel, 1963), 12–19; repr. in Sagittarius, iii (1970), 49–55; Eng. trans. in E. Benesch, ed.: Otto Benesch: Collected Writings, i (London, 1970), i, 228–34
F. Krummacher: Die Überlieferung der Choralbearbeitungen in der frühen evangelischen Kantate (Berlin, 1965)
H. Haack: 'Heinrich Schütz und Lodovico Viadana', Mf, xix (1966), 28–9
J.H. Schmidt: 'Heinrich Schützens Beziehungen zu Celle: ein Beitrag zur Schütz-Biographie', AMw, xxiv (1966), 274–6; repr. in Sagittarius, ii (1969), 36–8
E. Stimmel: 'Die Familie Schütz: ein Beitrag zur Familiengeschichte des Georgius Agricola', Abhandlungen des Staatlichen Museums für Mineralogie und Geologie zu Dresden, xi (1966), 377–417
E. Noack: Musikgeschichte Darmstadts vom Mittelalter bis zur Goethezeit (Mainz, 1967)
W. Steude: 'Neue Schütz-Ermittlungen', DJbM, xii (1967), 40–74
R. Tellart: Heinrich Schütz: l'homme et son oeuvre (Paris, 1968)
J.P. Larsen: 'Schütz und Dänemark', ibid., 9–16; repr. in BMw, xiv (1972), 215–10; also repr. in Heinrich Schütz in seiner Zeit, ed. W. Blankenburg (Darmstadt, 1983), 229–39
E. K. Sass: Comments on Rembrandt's Passion Paintings and Constantijn Huygens's Iconography (Copenhagen, 1971)
D. Arnold: 'Schütz in Venice', Music and Musicians, xxi/1 (1972–3), 30–35
O. Brodde: Heinrich Schütz: Weg und Werk (Kassel, 1972, 2/1979)
H. Eppstein: Heinrich Schütz (Stockholm, 1972; Ger. trans., 1975)
H. Haase, ed.: Heinrich Schütz (1585–1672) in seinen Beziehungen zum Wolfenbütteler Hof, Herzog August Bibliothek, 7 Nov–30 Dec 1972 (Wolfenbüttel, 1972) [exhibition catalogue]
H.R. Jung: 'Zwei unbekannte Briefe von Heinrich Schütz aus den Jahren 1653/54', BMw, xiv (1972), 231–6
R. Petzoldt and D. Berke: Heinrich Schütz und seine Zeit in Bildern/ Heinrich Schütz and his Times in Pictures (Kassel, 1972)
U. Prinz: 'Anmerkungen zur Neuausgabe des "Beckerschen Psalters" von Heinrich Schütz', Mf, xxv (1972), 175–81
A. Schmiedecke: 'Heinrich Schütz' Beziehungen zu Köstritz, Gera, Weissenfels und Zeitz', Heinrich Schütz 1585–1672: Festtage 1972, ed. W. Siegmund-Schultze (Gera, 1972), 24–8
O. Biba: 'Heinrich Schütz und Österreich', Singende Kirche, xx (1972–3), 73–6
H. Haase: 'Nachtrag zu einer Schütz-Ausstllung', Sagittarius, iv (1973), 85–97
R.A. Leaver: 'The Funeral Sermon for Heinrich Schütz', Bach, iv/4 (1973), 3–17; v/1 (1974), 9–22; v/2 (1974), 22–35; v/3 (1974), 13–20

K. Petzoldt: 'Das Schicksal des Grabes von Heinrich Schütz', Sagittarius, iv (1973), 34–43
D.L. Paisey: 'Some Occasional Aspects of Johann Hermann Schein', British Library Journal, i (1975), 171–80
K. Gudewill: Der 'Gesang der Venuskinder' von Heinrich Schütz (1634) (Keil, 1978) repr. Schütz-Jb 1984, 72–92
M. Ruhnke: 'Zur Hochzeit: die Psalmen Davids: ein Brief von Heinrich Schütz an die Stadt Braunschweig', Beiträge zur Musikgeschichte Nordeuropas: Kurt Gudewill zum 65. Geburtstag, ed. U. Haensel (Wolfenbüttel, 1978), 155–8
J.J. Berns: '"Theatralische neue Vorstellung von der Maria Magdalena": ein Zeugnis für die Zusammenarbeit von Justus Georg Schottelius und Heinrich Schütz', Schütz-Jb 1980, 120–29
E. Möller: 'Ein unbekanntes Bild von Heinrich Schütz in der Ratsschulbibliothek Zwickau', BMw, xxv (1983), 297–8
J.U. Fechner: '"Wie die Sonne unter den Planeten in der Mitte leuchtet, so die Musik unter den freien Künsten": zu Heinrich Schütz', Eintragung in das Stammbuch des Andreas Möring', SJB, vi (1984), 93–101
M. Gregor-Dellin: Heinrich Schütz: sein Leben, sein Werk, seine Zeit (Munich, 1984)
Heinrich Schütz im Spannungsfeld seines und unseres Jahrhunderts: Dresden 1985 [Jb Peters 1985] [incl. W. Steude: 'Sächsische Musik- und Theologietraditionen', 47–54; A. Kobuch: 'Neue Aspekte zur Bibliographie von Heinrich Schütz und der Geschichte der Dresdner Hoftkapelle', 55–68; E. Möller: 'Heinrich Schütz und das Jahr 1617', 69–80; J. Rifkin: 'Weib, was weinest du und Veni, Sancte Spiritus: zwei Dresdner Schürt-Handschriften in Kassel', 81–98; E. Stimmel: 'Herkunft und Abstammung von Heinrich Schütz: zum gegenwärtigen Stand der Schütz-Genealogie', 99–111]
S. Köhler: Heinrich Schütz: Anmerkungen zu Leben und Werk (Leipzig, 1985)
W. Steude: 'Zum gegenwärtigen Stand der Schütz-Ikonographie', Schütz-Jb 1985–6, 50–61
H. Krause-Graumnitz: Heinrich Schütz: sein Leben im Werk und den Dokumenten seiner Zeit (Leipzig, 1985–8)
W. Steude and L. Güttler: 'Die kursächsischen Hoftrompeter der Schützzeit und ihre musikalischen Aufgaben', Heinrich Schütz im Spannungfeld seines und unseres Jahrhunderts: Dresden 1985 [Jb Peters 1986–7], 33–52
H.R. Jung: 'Neues zum Thema "Heinrich Schütz und Weimar"', ibid., 105–16
J. Rifkin: 'Heinrich Schütz: auf dem Wege zu einem neuen Bild von Persönlichkeit und Werk', ibid., 5–21
G. Spagnoli: 'Nunc dimittis: the Royal Court Musicians in Dresden and the Funeral of Johann Georg I', Schütz-Jb 1988, 30–40
E. Möller: 'Heinrich Schütz als Pate', Schütz-Jb 1989, 23–31
W. Steude: 'Zum gegenwärtigen Stand der Schütz-Biographik', Schütz Congress: London 1989 [Schütz-Jb 1990], 7–30
M.R. Wade: 'Heinrich Schütz and der Store Bilager in Copenhan (1634)', Schütz-Jb 1989, 32–52
E. Möller: 'Schütziana in Chemnitz, Freiberg und Schneeberg', Schütz-Jb 1991, 56–90
M. Heinemann: Heinrich Schütz und seine Zeit (Regensburg, 1993)
K. Küster: 'Weckmann und Mölich als Schütz-Schüler', Schütz-Jb 1995, 39–61
W. Werbeck: 'Heinrich Schütz und der Streit zwischen Marco Scacchi und Paul Siefert', ibid., 63–79
W. Herbst: 'Das religiöse und das politische Gewissen: Bemerkungen zu den Festpredigten anlässlich der Einhundertjahrfeier der Reformation im Kurfürstentum Sachsen', Schütz-Jb 1996, 25–37
W. Steude: 'Zur Frage nach einer deutschen Monteverdi-Rezeption im 17. Jahrhundert', In Teutschland noch gantz ohnbekandt: Monteverdi-Rezeption und frühes Musiktheater im deutschsprachigen Raum, ed. M. Engelhardt (Frankfurt, 1996), 227–42
B. Smallman: Schütz (Oxford, 1999)

INDIVIDUAL WORKS AND COLLECTIONS

Cantiones sacrae, Geistliche Concerte

R. Gerber: 'Wort und Ton in den "Cantiones sacrae" von Heinrich Schütz', Gedenkschrift für Hermann Abert, ed. F. Blume (Halle, 1928/R), 57–71
A.A. Abert: Die stilistischen Voraussetzungen der 'Cantiones sacrae' von Heinrich Schütz (Wolfenbüttel and Berlin, 1935)
C. Roskowski: Die "Kleinen geistlichen Konzerte" von Heinrich Schütz (diss., U. of Münster, 1947)
C.B. Agey: A Study of the 'Kleine geistliche Konzerte' and 'Geistliche Chormusik' of Heinrich Schütz (diss., Florida State U., 1955)
W. Ehmann: 'Die "Kleinen geistlichen Konzerte" von Heinrich Schütz und unsere musikalische Praxis', Musik und Kirche, xxiii (1963), 9–23
R. Bray: 'The "Cantiones sacrae" of Heinrich Schütz Re-examined', ML, lii (1971), 299–305
M. Seelkopf: 'Italienische Elementen in den Kleinen geistlichen Konzerten von Heinrich Schütz', Mf, xxv (1972), 452–64
W. Breig: 'Zur Werkgeschichte der Kleinen geistlichen Konzerte von Heinrich Schütz', Heinrich Schütz und die Musik in Dänemark: Copenhagen 1985, 95–116
M. Just: 'Rhythmus und Klang als Formfaktoren in den Kleinen geistlichen Konzerten von Heinrich Schütz', Schütz-Jb 1987, 44–60; Schütz-Jb 1995, 121–40
J. Heidrich: 'Die Cantiones sacrae von Heinrich Schütz vor dem Hintergrund reichspolitischer und konfessioneller Auseinandersetzung', Schütz-Jb 1996, 53–64

Histories and Passions

F. Spitta: Die Passionen nach den vier Evangelisten von Heinrich Schütz (Leipzig, 1886)
F. Spitta: Die Passionsmusiken von Sebastian Bach und Heinrich Schütz (Hamburg, 1893)
R. Gerber: Das Passionsrezitativ bei Heinrich Schütz und seine stilgeschichtlichen Grundlagen (Gütersloh, 1929/R)
M. Schneider: 'Zum Weihnachtsoratorium von Heinrich Schütz', Theodor Kroyer: Festschrift, ed. H. Zenck, H. Schultz and W. Gerstenberg (Regensburg, 1933), 140–43
W. Blankenburg: 'Zu Heinrich Schütz' Passionen', Musik und Kirche, vii (1935), 2–6
K. Hofmann: 'Zwei Abhandlungen zur Weinachtshistorie von Heinrich Schütz', Musik und Kirche, xl (1970), 325–30; xli (1971), 15–20
F.P. Constantini: 'Über die Ausführung des Falsobordone in der Auferstehungs-Historia von Heinrich Schütz', Musik und Kirche, xlvii (1977), 55–61
A. Botti Caselli: 'La Storia delle Resurrezione: un debito di Heinrich Schütz nei confronti di Antonio Scandello?: vitalitaà di un'opera radicata nella tradizione', Heinrich Schütz il suo tempo: Urbino 1978, 58–98
W. Witzenmann: 'Problemi di modalità nelle Passioni di Schütz', ibid., 129–39; Ger. trans. in Schütz-Jb 1980, 103–19
E. Linfield: 'A New Look at the Sources of Schütz's Christmas History', Schütz-Jb 1982–3, 19–36
G. Konradt: Die Vertonung der Sieben Worte Jesu Christi am Kreuz im 17. Jahrhundert: Heinrich Schütz und Augustin Pfleger (thesis, U. of Heidelberg, 1992)

Musikalische Exequien

R. Gerber: 'Die "Musikalischen Exequien" von Heinrich Schütz', Musik und Kirche, vi (1934), 296–310
S. Schöneich: 'Zum Aufbau des Gloria-Teils in Schützens Musikalischen Exequien', Musik und Kirche, xx (1950), 182–90
G.A. Trumpff: 'Die "Musikalischen Exequien" von Heinrich Schütz', NZM, Jg.123 (1962), 120–23
G. Mittring: 'Totendienst und Christuspredigt: zum Text der Musikalischen Exequien von Heinrich Schütz', Musik als Lobgesang: Festschrift für Wilhelm Ehmann, ed. G. Mittring and G. Rödding (Darmstadt, 1964), 43–63
H. Reich: 'Händels Trauer-Hymne und die Musikalischen Exequien von Schütz', Musik und Kirche, xxxvi (1966), 74–8
H. Krause-Graumnitz: 'Heinrich Schütz' schöpferische Gestaltung der zyklischen Grossform dargestellt an seinen Musikalischen Exequien des Jahres 1636', Heinrich Schütz und seine Zeit: Berlin 1972, 38–49
R. Henning: 'Zur Textfrage der "Musikalischen Exequien" von Heinrich Schütz', Sagittarius, iv (1973), 44–56
W. Breig: 'Heinrich Schütz' Musikalische Exequien: Überlegungen zur Werkgeschichte und zur textlich-musikalischen Konzeption', Schütz-Jb 1989, 53–68
G.S. Johnston: 'Rhetorical Personification of the Dead in Seventeenth-Century German Funeral Music: Heinrich Schütz's Musikalische Exequien (1636) and Three Works by Michael Wiedemann (1693)', JM, ix (1991), 186–213
G.S. Johnston: 'Textual Symmetrics and the Origins of Heinrich Schütz's Musikalische Exequien', EMc, xix (1991), 213–25

Psalmen Davids

A. Schering: 'Zur Metrik der "Psalmen Davids" von Heinrich Schütz', Festschrift Peter Wagner, ed. K. Weinmann (Leipzig, 1926/R), 176–80

W. Ehmann: 'Heinrich Schütz: Die Psalmen Davids, 1619, in der Aufführungspraxis', Musik und Kirche, xxvi (1956), 145–71

A. Roeseler: Studien zum Instrumentarium in den Vokalwerken von Heinrich Schütz: die obligaten Instrumente in den Psalmen Davids und in den Symphoniae sacrae I (Berlin, 1958)

D. Arnold: 'Schütz's "Venetian" Psalms', MT, cxiii (1972), 1071–3

D. Arnold: 'Venetian and Non-Venetian Elements in Schütz's Psalms of David', Heinrich Schütz und die Musik in Dänemark: Copenhagen 1985, 145–53

K. Küster: 'Musik an der Schwelle des Dreißigjährigen Krieges: Perspektiven der Psalmen Davids von Heinrich Schütz', Schütz-Jb 1996, 39–51

Symphoniae sacrae

A. Roeseler: Studien zum Instrumentarium in den Vokalwerken von Heinrich Schütz: die obligaten Instrumente in den Psalmen Davids und in den Symphoniae sacrae I (Berlin, 1958)

Q. Faulkner: The 'Symphoniae sacrae' of Heinrich Schütz: a Manual for Performance (New York, 1975)

F. Piperno: 'La sinfonia strumentale nel 1° volume dell "Symphoniae sacrae" di Heinrich Schütz (1629)', Heinrich Schütz e il suo tempo: Urbino 1978, 187–219

H. Grüss: 'Die Symphoniae sacrae von Heinrich Schütz im Kontext der Aufführungspraxis der 1. Hälfte des 17. Jahrhunderts', Heinrich Schütz im Spannungsfeld seines und unseres Jahrhunderts: Dresden 1985 [Jb Peters 1986–7], 25–32

W. Steinbeck: 'Der Instrumentalcharakter bei Schütz: zur Bedeutung der Instrumente in den Symphoniae sacrae', Schütz-Jb 1987, 22–43

G. Drebes: 'Schütz, Monteverdi und die "Vollkommenheit der Musik": Es steh Gott auf aus den Symphoniae sacrae II (1647)', Schütz-Jb 1992, 25–55

E. Linfield: 'Rhythm, Rhetorik and Harmony as a Key to Schütz's Saul, Saul, was verfolgst du mich?', Festschrift in Honor of Paul Brainard's 65th Birthday (Rochester, 1996)

J. Heidrich: 'Dramatische Konzeptionen in den Symphoniae sacrae I von Heinrich Schütz: Veni dilecte mi und die lateinische Dialogkomposition um 1630', Schütz-Jb 1997, 37–53

other sacred works

C.B. Agey: A Study of the 'Kleine geistliche Konzerte' and 'Geistliche Chormusik' of Heinrich Schütz (diss., Florida State U., 1955)

J. Heinrich: Stilkritische Untersuchnungen zur 'Geistlichen Chormusik' von Heinrich Schütz (diss., U. of Göttingen, 1956)

C. Ganz: 'Der Beckerpsalter von Heinrich Schütz', Musica sacra [Regensburg], lxxxvii/2 (1967), 46–52; lxxxvii/3 (1967), 71–4

W. Breig: 'Heinrich Schütz' Parodiemotette "Jesu dulcissime"', Convivium musicorum: Festschrift Wolfgang Boetticher, ed. H. Hüschen and D.-R. Moser (Berlin, 1974), 13–24

U. Siegele: 'Musik als Zeugnis der Auslegungsgeschichte: Heinrich Schützens Motette Die mit Tränen säen aus der Geistlichen Chormusik', Schütz-Jb 1982–3, 50–56

W. Breig: 'Schütz's Osterkonzert "Christ ist erstanden" SWV 470, seine Kasseler Ersatz-Symphonia und Hammerschmidts "Dialogi" von 1645', Schütz-Jb 1984, 52–61

W. Breig: 'Die erste Fassung des Beckerschen Psalters von Heinrich Schütz', Schütz-Jb 1985–6, 22–49

W. Steude: 'Bemerkungen zu Machet die Tore weit (SWV Anhang 8)', Schütz-Jb 1988, 50–61

W. Breig: 'Zur Vorgeschichte zweier Werke von Heinrich Schütz: Ist nicht Ephraim mein teurer Sohn (SWV 40) und Siehe, dieser wird gesetzt zu einem Fall (SWV 410)', Schütz-Jb 1994, 87–98

W. Breig: 'Zum Werkstil der Geistlichen Chormusik von Heinrich Schütz', (I), Schütz-Jb 1996, 65–81

secular works

R. Engländer: 'Zur Frage der "Dafne" (1671) von G.A. Bontempi und M.G. Peranda', AcM, xiii (1941), 59–77

A. Heller: 'Heinrich Schütz in seinen italienischen Madrigalen', Gustav Becking zum Gedächtnis, ed. W. Kramolisch (Tutzing, 1976), 373–412

P.E. Carapezza: 'Scelte poetiche e vincoli stilistici del Sagittario madrigalista', Heinrich Schütz e il suo tempo: Urbino 1978, 105–25

W. Breig: 'Höfische Festmusik im Werk von Heinrich Schütz', Daphnis: Zeitschrift für mittlere deutsche Literatur, x (1981), 711–33

J.U. Fechner: 'Ein unbekanntes weltliches Madrigal von Heinrich Schütz', Schütz-Jb 1984, 23–51

W. Braun: 'Das Ballett zum grossen Kopenhagener Beilager 1634', Heinrich Schütz und die Musik in Dänemark: Copenhagen 1985, 69–79

J.U. Fechner: 'Zur literaturgeschichtlichen Situation in Dresden 1627: Überlegungen im Hinblick auf die Dafne-Oper von Schütz und Opitz', Schütz-Jb 1988, 5–29

W. Steude: 'Heinrich Schütz und die erste deutsche Oper', Von Isaac bis Bach: Festschrift Martin Just zum 60. Geburtstag, ed. F. Heidlberger, W. Osthoff and R. Wiesend (Kassel, 1991), 169–79

J.P. Aikin: 'Heinrich Schütz's Die Bußfertige Magdalena (1636)', Schütz-Jb 1992, 9–24

K. Küster: 'Madrigaltext als kompositorische Freiheit: zu Schütz' Italienischen Madrigalen und ihrer Umgebung', Schütz-Jb 1993, 33–48

K. Küster: Opus Primum in Venedig: Traditionen des Vokalsatzes 1590–1650 (Darmstadt, 1995)

M. Heinemann: 'Eine absonderliche Art der Composition: zur Gestaltung von Rezitativen in musikdramatischen Werken von Heinrich Schütz', In Teutschland noch gantz ohnbekandt: Monteverdi-Rezeption und frühes Musiktheater im deutschsprachigen Raum, ed. M. Englehardt (Frankfurt, 1996), 195–209

M.R. Wade: Triumphus nuptialis danicus. German Court Culture and Denmark: the "Great Wedding" of 1634 (Wiesbaden, 1996)

E. Rothmund: 'Dafne und kein Ende: Heinrich Schütz, Martin Opitz und die verfehlte erste deutsche Oper', Schütz-Jb 1998, 123–47

other studies

P. Spitta: 'Händel, Bach und Schütz', Zur Musik (Berlin, 1892/R), 59–92

A. Pirro: 'Les formes de l'expression, dans la musique de Heinrich Schütz', Tribune de Saint-Gervais, vi (1900), 314–21

J. Smend: 'Zur Wortbetonung des Lutherischen Bibeltextes bei Heinrich Schütz', ZMw, v (1922–3), 75–8

J.M. Müller-Blattau, ed.: Die Kompositionslehre Heinrich Schützens in der Fassung seines Schülers Christoph Bernhard (Leipzig, 1926, 2/1963)

W. Schuh: Formprobleme bei Heinrich Schütz (Leipzig, 1928/R); see also review by H. Engel, ZMw, xv (1932–3), 281–4

H.J. Moser: 'Schütz und das evangelische Kirchenlied', Jb der Staatlichen Akademie für Kirchen- und Schulmusik Berlin, iii (1929–30), 7–28; repr. in Musik in Zeit und Raum (Berlin, 1960), 75–93

F. Blume: 'Heinrich Schütz in den geistigen Strömungen seiner Zeit', Musik und Kirche, ii (1930), 245–54

W. Blankenburg: 'Heinrich Schütz und der protestantische Choral', Musik und Kirche, vii (1935), 219–223

H. Hoffmann: 'Die Gestaltung der Evangelisten-Worte bei Heinrich Schütz und J.S. Bach', Festschrift Max Schneider zum 60. Geburtstag, ed. H.J. Zingel (Halle, 1935), 49–58

K. Gudewill: Das sprachliche Urbild bei Heinrich Schütz (Kassel, 1936)

F. Blume: 'Heinrich Schütz: Gesetz und Freiheit', Deutsche Musikkultur, i (1936–7), 36–46

H. Birtner: 'Fragen der Aufführungspraxis, insbesondere der Continuo-Besetzung bei Heinrich Schütz', Deutsche Musikkultur, iii (1938–9), 269–83

H. Hoffmann: 'Bearbeitungsfragen bei werken von Schütz', AMz, l xvi (1939), 491–3

H. Hoffmann: Heinrich Schütz und Johann Sebastian Bach: zwei Tonsprachen und ihre Beadeutung für die Auffuhrungspraxis (Kassel, 1940)

J. Piersig: Das Weltbild des Heinrich Schütz (Kassel, 1949)

G. Toussaint: Die Anwendung der musikalisch-rhetorischen Figuren in den Werken von Heinrich Schütz (diss., U. of Mainz, 1949)

W. Ehmann: 'Besetzungsfragen bei Heinrich Schütz', Musik und Gottesdienst, vi (1952), 97

H. Federhofer: 'Die Figurenlehre nach Christoph Bernhard und die Dissonanzbehandlung in Werken von Heinrich Schütz', GfMKB: Bamberg 1953, 132–5

A. Adrio: 'Heinrich Schütz und Italien', Bekenntnis zu Heinrich Schütz (Kassel, 1954), 55–64

W. Ehmann: 'Heinrich Schütz in unserer musikalischen Praxis', Bekenntnis zu Heinrich Schütz (Kassel, 1954), 9–39

L. Schrade: 'Heinrich Schütz and Johann Sebastian Bach in the Protestant Liturgy', The Musical Heritage of the Church, ed. T. Hoelty-Nickel, iv (Valparaiso, IN, 1954), 43–63; repr. in De scientia musicae studia atque orationes, ed. E. Lichtenbahn (Berne, 1967), 396–423

W. Ehmann: 'Die geistliche Chormusik von Heinrich Schütz in ihrer musikalischen Darstellung', Kirchenmusik, Vermachtris und Aufgabe, 1948–1958, ed. W. Ehmann (Darmstadt, 1958), 75–83
H.H. Eggebrecht: Heinrich Schütz: Musicus poeticus (Göttingen, 1959, enlarged 2/1984)
H.H. Eggebrecht: 'Zum Figur-Begriff der Musica poetica', AMw, xvi (1959), 57–69
S. Hermelink: 'Rhythmische Struktur in der Musik von Heinrich Schütz', AMw, xvi (1959), 378–90
G. Kirchner: Der Generalbass bei Heinrich Schütz (Kassel, 1960)
A. Mendel: 'A Brief Note on Triple Proportion in Schuetz', MQ, xlvi (1960), 67–70
A.E. Rowley: A Bibliography of Heinrich Schütz (diss., U. of London, 1960)
H.H. Eggebrecht: 'Ordnung und Ausdruck im Werk von Heinrich Schütz', Musik und Kirche, xxxi (1961), 1–9; pubd separately (Kassel, 1961)
W.S. Huber: Motivsymbolik bei Heinrich Schütz (Basle, 1961)
L. Schrade: Das musikalische Werk von Heinrich Schütz in der protestantischen Liturgie (Basle, 1961)
M. Geck: 'Ein textbedingter Archaismus im Werke von Heinrich Schütz', AcM, xxxiv (1962), 161–3
W. Blankenburg: 'Vom Verhältnis von Musik und Sprache bei Heinrich Schütz', ÖMz, xxi (1966), 163–6
K. Gudewill: 'Die textlichen Grundlagen der geistlichen Vokalmusik bei Heinrich Schütz', Sagittarius, i (1966), 52–65
O. Söhngen: 'Heinrich Schütz und die zeitgenössische Musik', ibid., 15–29
T.G. Georgiades: Schubert: Musik und Lyrik (Göttingen, 1967) [incl. 'Schubert und Schütz']
D. McCulloch: 'Heinrich Schütz (1585–1672) and Venice', Church Music [London], ii (1967), no.20, pp.8–13; no.21, pp.4–9
H. Wichmann-Zemke: Untersuchungen zur Harmonik in den Werken von Heinrich Schütz (diss., U. of Kiel, 1967)
H. Drude: Heinrich Schütz als Musiker der evangelischen Kirche (diss., U. of Göttingen, 1969)
H.H. Eggebrecht: Schütz und Gottesdienst: Versuch über das Selbstverständliche (Stuttgart, 1969, 2/1984)
D. Manicke: 'Heinrich Schütz als Lehrer', Sagittarius, ii (1969), 17–28
W. Braun: 'Musikalische Inspiration: zwischen systematischer und historischer Forschung', Mf, xxiii (1970), 4–22
W. Gerstenberg: 'Heinrich Schütz im Konzert der europäischen Nationen', Sagittarius, iii (1970), 9–16
S. Hermelink: 'Bemerkungen zur Schütz-Edition', Musikalische Edition im Wandel des historischen Bewusstseins, ed. T.G. Georgiades (Kassel, 1971), 203–15
W. Blankenburg: 'Die Dialogkompositionen von Heinrich Schütz', Musik und Kirche, xlii (1972), 121–30
W. Blankenburg: 'Heinrich Schütz 1672–1972', Musik und Kirche, xlii (1972), 3–11
W. Blankenburg: 'Schütz und Bach', Musik und Kirche, xlii (1972), 219–26
K. Blum and M. Elste: Internationale Heinrich Schütz Diskographie 1928–1972 (Bremen, 1972)
F. Blume: 'Heinrich Schütz nach 300 Jahren', Neue Zurcher Zeitung (5 Nov 1972); repr. in Syntagma musicologicum, ii, ed. A.A. Abert and M. Ruhnke (Kassel, 1973), 139–47; Eng. trans. in SMA, vii (1973), 1–9
W. Breig: 'Zum Parodieverfahren bei Heinrich Schütz', Musica, xxvi (1972), 17–20
H.H. Eggebrecht: 'Musikalische Analyse (Heinrich Schütz)', MZ, viii (1972), 17–39
Heinrich Schütz und seine Zeit: Berlin 1972 [incl. W. Rackwitz: 'Festansprache' 13–17; E.H. Meyer 'Gedanken zu Heinrich Schütz' musikgeschichtlicher Rolle', 18–25; S. Köhler 'Heinrich Schütz in Venedig: die Bedeutung der musikalischen Renaissance für sein Werk', 26–37; W. Siegmund-Schultze: 'Das Spätschaffen von Heinrich Schütz', 50–61; F. Streller 'Anmerkungen zur werkgerechten Interpretation Schützer Musik', 103–12]
J. Rifkin: 'Schütz and Musical Logic', MT, cxiii (1972), 106–70
J. Roche: 'What Schütz Learnt from Grandi in 1629', MT, cxiii (1972), 1074–5
S. Schmalzriedt: Heinrich Schütz und andere zeitgenössische Musiker in der Lehre Giovanni Gabrielis (Neuhausen-Stuttgart, 1972)
M. Seelkopf: 'Italienische Elementen in den Kleinen geistlichen Konzerten von Heinrich Schütz', Mf xxv (1972), 452–64
H.H. Eggebrecht: 'Heinrich Schütz: Rede 1972', Musik und Kirche, xliii (1973), 58–62
T.G. Georgiades: 'Heinrich Schütz zum 300. Todestag', Sagittarius, iv (1973), 57–70; repr. in Heinrich Schütz in seiner Zeit, ed. W. Blankenburg (Darmstadt, 1985), 299–316, 177
R.A. Leaver: 'Heinrich Schütz as a Biblical Interpreter', Bach, iv/3 (1973), 3–8
R. Gerlach: 'Lateinische und deutsche Komposition bei Heinrich Schütz: eine vergleichende Interpretation zweier Psalmvertonungen', Convivium musicorum: Festschrift Wolfgang Boetticher, ed. H. Hüschen and D.-R. Moser (Berlin, 1974), 83–105
R. Grunow, ed.: Begegnungen mit Heinrich Schütz: Erzählungen über Leben und Werk des Henricus Sagittarius (Berlin, 1974)
W. Osthoff: Heinrich Schütz: l'incontro storico fra lingua tedesca e poetica musicale italiana nel Seicento (Venice, 1974); Ger. trans. in Schütz-Jb 1980 78–102
K. Gudewill: 'Heinrich Schütz und Italien', Heinrich Schütz e il suo tempo: Urbino 1978, 19–44
M. Lange: 'Begegnung von Sprache und Musik: dargestellt an Beispiel einer Schütz-Mottete', Bachstunden: Festschrift für Helmut Walcha, ed. W. Dehnhard and G. Ritter (Frankfurt, 1978), 129–43
S. Kunze: 'Instrumentalität und Sprachvertonung in der Musik von Heinrich Schütz', Schütz-Jb 1979, 9–43
W. Breig: 'Mehrchörigkeit und individuelle Werkkonzeption bei Heinrich Schütz', Schütz-Jb 1981, 24–38
S. Kunze: 'Rhythmus, Sprache, musikalische Raumvorstellung: zur Mehrchörigkeit Giovanni Gabrielis', Schütz-Jb 1981, 12–23
A.B. Skei: Heinrich Schütz: a Guide to Research (New York and London, 1981)
W. Steinbeck: 'Sprachvertonung bei Heinrich Schütz als analytisches Problem', Schütz-Jb 1981, 61–3
A. Forchert: 'Heinrich Schütz als Komponist evangelischer Kirchenliedtexte', Schütz-Jb 1982–3, 57–67
S. Kunze: 'Sprachauslegung und Instrumentalität in der Musik von Schütz', ibid., 39–49
H. Birtner: 'Grundsätzliche Bermerkungen zur Schütz-Pflee in unserer Zeit (1935)', Musica, xxxviii (1984), 532–4
W. Blankenburg: 'Zur Bedeutung der Andachtstexte im Werk von Heinrich Schütz', Schütz-Jb 1984, 62–72
W. Breig: 'Schütz-Aspekte im Vorfeld des Jubiläumsjahres 1985', Musica, xxxviii (1984), 527–31
F. Krummacher: 'Spätwerk und Moderne: über Schütz und seine Schüler', Heinrich Schütz und die Musik in Dänemark: Copenhagen 1985, 155–75
B. Smallman: The Music of Heinrich Schütz (Leeds, 1985)
W. Steinbeck: 'Lyrik und Dramatik im italienischen Madrigal: zur Sprachvertonung und Musiksprache bei Schütz und Monteverdi', Heinrich Schütz und die Musik in Dänemark: Copenhagen 1985, 217–40
W. Steinbeck: 'Schütz als Kompositionslehrer: die Geistlichen Madrigals (1619) von Gabriel Mölich', Schütz-Jb 1985–6, 69–92
W. Braun: 'Schütz und der "scharfsinnige Herr Claudius Monteverde"', Heinrich Schütz im Spannungsfeld seines und unseres Jahrhunderts: Dresden 1985 [J.B. Peters 1986–7], 16–23
S. Kunze: 'Bedeuten durch Musik: Beobachtungen zur Sprachvertonung in der Musik von Schütz', ibid., 53–64
W. Steinbeck: 'Motettisches und madrigalisches Prinzip in der geistlichen Musik der Schütz-Zeit Monteverdi – Schütz – Schein', Schütz-Jb 1989, 5–14
E. Linfield: 'Toni und Modi und ihre Bedeutung für Schütz' Harmonik', Schütz Congress: Landau 1989 [Schütz-Jb 1990], 150–70
W. Steinbeck: 'Zum Stand der Schütz-Analyse', ibid., 43–58
E. Linfield: 'Formal and Tonal Organization in a 17th-Century Ritornello/Ripieno Structure', JM, ix (1991), 145–64
M.H. Schmid: 'Trompetenchor und Sprachvertonung bei Heinrich Schütz', Schütz–Jb 1991, 28–55
E. Linfield: 'Modal and Tonal Aspects in Two Compositions by Heinrich Schütz', JRMA, cxvii (1992), 86–122
A. Forchert: 'Heinrich Schütz und die Musica poetica', Schütz-Jb 1993, 7–23
E. Linfield: 'Modulatory Techniques in Seventeenth-Century Music: Schütz, a Case in Point', Music Analysis, xii (1993), 197–214
P. Weber-Bockholdt: 'Die lateinische Sprache im Werk von Heinrich Schütz', Schütz-Jb 1993, 51–61
R.L. Kendrick: '"Sonet vox tua in auribus": Song of Songs Exegesis and the Seventeenth-Century Motet', Schütz-Jb 1994, 99–118

E. Rothmund: Henrich Schütz (1585–1672): conscience identitaire allemande et patriotisme culturel entre musique et littérature (diss., U. of Paris, 1994)
F. Krummacher: 'Geschichte als Erfahrung: Schütz und Bach im Blick Philipp Spittas', Schütz-Jb 1995, 9–27
M.E. Frandsen: 'Allies in the Cause of Italian Music: Schütz, Prince Johann Georg II and Musical Politics in Dresden', JRMA, cxxv (2000), 1–40

JOSHUA RIFKIN/EVA LINFIELD (1–7(i), work-list with DEREK McCULLOCH, bibliography with STEPHEN BARON), EVA LINFIELD (7 (ii)–12)

Schütz Choir of London. London professional choir founded in 1973 to continue the work of the Heinrich Schütz Choir and the Heinrich Schütz Chorale, both founded in 1962. See LONDON, §VI, 3(ii).

Schützendorf, Gustav (b Cologne, 1883; d Berlin, 27 April 1937). German baritone. He studied in Cologne and Milan, and made his début in Krefeld in 1905 as Don Giovanni. From 1914 to 1920 he sang with the Munich Hofoper. After two seasons at the Berlin Staatsoper (1920–22) he was engaged by the Metropolitan; he made his début as Faninal in 1922 and remained with the company until 1935, taking a wide range of roles including Beckmesser, Alberich and Klingsor. He sang the Foreman of the Mill in Janáček's Jenůfa (1924), the Chamberlain in Stravinsky's The Nightingale (1926) and the Devil in Weinberger's Svanda the Bagpiper (1931), all American premières. His younger brother Leo Schützendorf and his elder brothers Guido (1880–1967), bass, and Alfons (1882–1946), bass-baritone, were opera singers of international stature; Alfons sang Klingsor at Bayreuth (1910–12) and Wotan at Covent Garden (1910). A famous performance of Die Meistersinger at Bremen in 1916 featured Guido as Kothner, Alfons as Hans Sachs, Gustav as Pogner and Leo as Beckmesser, the only time all four brothers appeared in the same performance.

HAROLD ROSENTHAL/R

Schützendorf, Leo (b Cologne, 7 May 1886; d Berlin, 18 Dec 1931). German bass-baritone, brother of Gustav Schützendorf. He studied with D'Arnals in Cologne and made his début at Düsseldorf in 1908. After engagements in Krefeld, Darmstadt, Wiesbaden and Vienna, he joined the Berlin Staatsoper in 1920. In nine years he made 445 appearances in a repertory of 47 roles, including Ochs, Boris, Beckmesser, Faninal, Méphistophélès and Wozzeck, which he created in 1925. In 1929 he sang in Der Bettelstudent at the Metropoltheater, Berlin, but as he had not obtained leave from the Staatsoper he was dismissed, an event that contributed to his final breakdown and early death. He was a versatile actor, as much at home in tragic roles as in comic ones.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Dennis: 'Leo Schützendorf', Record Collector, xvi (1964–6), 229–37 [with discography]

HAROLD ROSENTHAL/R

Schuyler, Philippa Duke (b New York, 2 Aug 1931; d Da Nang, Vietnam, 9 May 1967). American pianist, composer, and writer. She made her first major New York appearance in 1946, playing Saint-Saëns's Concerto in G minor with the New York PO, and her Town Hall recital début in 1953. Her later life was spent in concert tours of Europe, South America, East Asia, and Africa. Among her teachers were Josef Hoffman, Dean Dixon and Paul Wittgenstein. Her best-known works are the orchestral Manhattan Nocturne (1943), Sleepy Hollow Sketches (1945–6), Rhapsody of Youth (1948) and Nile Fantasy (1965); her later works show the influence of Bartók and of African music. Five books related to her travels were published between 1960 and 1962. She died in a helicopter accident while helping in the evacuation of school-children in Vietnam. Subsequently a Philippa Duke Schuyler Memorial Foundation was established in New York. Her manuscripts are in the Schomberg Center for Research and Black Culture (New York).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

SouthernB
Obituary, New York Times (10 May 1967)
J. Schuyler: Philippa the Beautiful American: the Travelled History of a Troubadour (New York, 1969)
O. Williams: American Black Women in the Arts and Social Sciences: a Bibliographic Survey (Metuchen, NJ, 1973, rev. 2/1978)
K. Talalay: 'Philippa Duke Schuyler, Pianist/Composer/Writer', BPM, x/1 (1982), 43–68 [incl. list of works]
K. Talalay: Composition in Black and White (Oxford, 1995)

DOMINIQUE-RENÉ DE LERMA/R

Schuyt [Schuit], Cornelis (Floriszoon) (b Leiden, 1557; d Leiden, 9 June 1616). Dutch composer and organist. He was probably trained as a choirboy at St Pieterskerk in Leiden where his father, Floris, was organist from 1558 until 1572, when the city adopted the Reform. In his madrigal book of 1600 Cornelis mentioned that he had travelled to Italy; this was most likely in the mid-1570s. Floris Schuyt was reappointed organist and a city player at Leiden in 1584, and his son Cornelis was named second organist on 11 March 1593. Each played daily in alternate weeks at St Pieterskerk and the Hooglandse Kerk, and provided Tafelmusik for city banquets as well. Cornelis was also responsible for the musical training of two choirboys. From 1598 he looked after the bell-chimes of two city towers, setting the melodies on the chime barrels. After his father's death in 1601 he became first organist of St Pieterskerk. Upon his own death, he was succeeded by his pupil and assistant Jan Pieterszoon van Reynsburch.

Schuyt was one of the leading Dutch madrigalists, cultivating Italian forms for many years after his trip there. His collections of 1600 and 1611, for five and six voices respectively, mirror the classic Italian madrigal in their restrained chromaticism and settings of texts by Tasso. His style includes northern contrapuntal techniques as well: the first book opens with a four-part prayer for his native city, Bewaert, Heer, Hollandt, set as a puzzle canon. Schuyt published a detailed explanation to the canon's resolution in his Dutch-texted Hollandsche madrigalen (1603). As resolved by Annegarn, the canon moves through a descending circle of 5ths to its midpoint, then returns through thematic inversion to the opening mode. Other texts, including O Leyda gloriosa, celebrate Schuyt's native land as well. His last madrigal collection, published in 1611, includes a 12-voice polychoral Echo doppio. A short six-voice picture motet, Domine fiant anima mea, survives in an engraving of St Cecilia by Zacharias Dolendo. Schuyt's instrumental ensemble collection of 1611 contains homophonic dance pairs (pavan-galliard) for six-part ensemble in each of 12 modes, framed by two closely related canzone alla francese. The two canzona titles, Fortuna guide and La barca, combine to form a pun on the composer's name: 'May good fortune steer the boat [schuit]'. An extant auction catalogue documenting the sale of Schuyt's music library in 1617 confirms his taste for Italian secular music and lists several unpublished collections, including instrumental ensemble canzonas and keyboard works.

WORKS

Edition: Cornelius Schuyt: Opera Omnia, ed. A. Annegarn, MMN, x/1–3 (1980–84) [A i–iii]

published in Leiden

Il primo libro de madrigali, 5vv (1600); 3 madrigals ed. in UVNM, v (1873); 9 madrigals, puzzle canon ed. in UVNM, xlv (1937–8); canon ed. in A i

Hollandsche madrigalen, 6–8vv (1603), inc.

Hymneo, overo Madrigali nuptiali et altri amorosi, 6vv, con un echo doppio, 12vv (1611); A ii

12 padovane et altretante gagliarde ... con 2 canzone alla francese, a 6 (1611); A iii

Lute arrangement, 1601[18]; madrigal, 1605[9]

Picture motet, 6vv, copper engraving by Z. Dolendo after J. de Gheyn, NL-Au; motet and engraving in Niederländische Bildmotetten, ed. M. Seiffert, Organum, xix–xx (Leipzig, 1929); picture in Seiffert (1919–20); A i

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Seiffert: 'Cornelis Schuijt', TVNM, v/4 (1897), 244–59 [incl. list of works]

M. Seiffert: Niederländische Bild-Motetten vom End des 16. Jahrhunderts (Leipzig, 1929), ii, 16–19

A. Smijers: 'Een canon van Cornelis Schuyt', RBM, viii (1954), 100–05

A. Annegarn: Floris en Cornelis Schuyt: muziek in Leiden van de vijftiende tot het begin van de zeventiende eeuw (Utrecht, 1973), 67, 132–3, 135 [with Eng. summary]

E. Schonberger: 'Nervi d'Orfeo, een Leidse madrigaal bundel vit 1605', TVNM, xxiii (1973), 18–29

W. Elders: Componisten van de lage Landen (Utrecht, 1985; Eng. trans , 1991), 119, 176 [pages nos. refer to Eng. trans.]

R. Rasch and T. Wind: 'The Music Library of Cornelis Schuyt', From Ciconia to Sweelinck, donum natalicium Willem Elders, ed. A. Clement and E. Jas (Amsterdam, 1994), 327–54

R.B. LENAERTS/KRISTINE FORNEY

Schuyt, Nico [Nicolaas Peter] (b Bergen-aan-Zee, 2 Jan 1922; d Amsterdam, 25 Jan 1992). Dutch composer. In his home town he received private lessons in piano and harmony from Jacob van Domselaer. After World War II he studied in Amsterdam with Eberhard Rebling (piano), Willem Hijstek (theory) and Bertus van Lier (composition, 1949–52). For a few years Schuyt worked as a choir conductor and music critic, until he became director of the documentation department at the Donemus Foundation (1964–77). From 1970 to 1975 he was secretary and chairman of GeNeCo (Association of Dutch Composers). Schuyt fought hard for recognition by the Dutch government of the profession of composer, efforts which in 1982 led to the establishment of the Fonds voor de Scheppende Toonkunst (Fund for the Creation of Music). Schuyt wrote orchestral and choral works, ballets, songs and chamber music, especially for amateurs. His idiom is accessibly modern and often highly figurative, which is also apparent from such titles as 'Whimsical Conversations' (Discorsi capricciosi for 12 winds and percussion, 1965). The melodic and harmonic material of his compositions can regularly be reduced to one central idea, as in the passacaglia in Quasi in modo di valzer (1973).

WORKS

(selective list)

Discorsi capricciosi, 12 wind, perc, 1965; Quasi in modo di valzer, orch, 1973; Razernijen voor vier [Frenzies for Four], 1975; Festa seria, orch, 1980; 3 pièces, 2pf, 1981; Alla deriva (Schuyt, P. Verlaine), SATB, orch, 1982; Down the Shades, 11 winds, pf, db, 1985, revised 1986; Atlanta, fl, vn, vc, hp, 1986

Amateur music: De varkenshoeder [The Swineherd], school op, 1951; Sonatina, youth orch, 1961; Hymnus, orch, 1966

Other orch works, choral pieces, chbr music, ballets, songs

Principal publisher: Donemus

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Flothuis: 'Schuyts Varkenshoeder', Mens en melodie, vi (1951), 255–7

W. Paap: 'Discorsi capricciosi van Nico Schuyt', Mens en melodie, xxi (1966), 344–5

J. Van Vlijmen: 'Nico Schuyt (1922–1992)', Entr'acte [Amsterdam] (1992), March, p.14

EMILE WENNEKES

Schwab [Suevi], Felician [Bonifacius] (b Altdorf, nr Ravensburg, Swabia, bap. 1 June 1611; d 1661 or later). German composer and organist. He studied at the monastery Gymnasium at Weingarten, where he probably received his first musical training from the monastery's organist and composer Michael Kraf. In 1630 he became a student at the Jesuit college at Lucerne and later the same year a novice at the Franciscan monastery there. He took his monastic vows in 1631 and adopted the monastic name Felician in place of his baptismal name, Bonifacius. He was affiliated to the convent at Konstanz, but remained at Lucerne until 1639. After spending a short time as organist at the Franciscan monastery at Solothurn, Switzerland, he was attached to the convent at Fribourg until 1642; he subsequently returned to Solothurn. In 1645 he was prior of the Franciscan monastery at Schwäbisch Gmünd but in 1651 had to exchange his priorate for a curacy. In 1653 he went to the Franciscan monastery at Speyer as a curate, and he became prior there in 1655. Since in some of his later publications he described himself as 'Argentorensis Provinciae Magister Capellae' and 'Ordinis S. Francisci Argentoratensis Provinciae Magister Musices', it may be supposed that from about 1645 he was entrusted with musical activities in the Upper German (Strasbourg) province of his order.

Schwab's output consists wholly of sacred music and includes both liturgical works (masses and Magnificat settings) and others not intended for specific use in worship but for more general purposes, even as domestic music. The three collections of concerted masses, all incomplete, contain for the most part parody masses whose models are drawn from both sacred and secular music. The eight Magnificat settings are also in the stile concertato. All these works, and the motets and sacred concertos too, illustrate the extent to which church music in southern Germany and Switzerland was susceptible to Italian influence in the mid-17th century.

WORKS

Granarum sacrum in aliquot formices (12 sacred songs), 2vv, bc (Würzburg, 1634)

Sacra parnassi musici promulsis (Innsbruck, 1639), lost

Sacra eremus piarum cantionum liber II (22 motets, 1 sonata, 1 canzona), 2–3vv, bc (Innsbruck, 1641)

Psalmodia vespertini liber IV, 3vv, bc (Lucerne, 1642)

Tuba sacra [26] modulationum sacrarum liber III, 1–3vv, bc (Innsbruck, 1642)

Quadriga Mariana ex 4 antiphonis . . . cum cantico Mariano adjectisque Litaniis Lauretanis cantata, 1–4vv (Innsbruck, 1643)

Liber I [6] missarum concertatarum, 4–5vv, bc (Innsbruck, 1645)

Cithara patientis Jobi (Würzburg, 1647), lost

Odae latinae-germanicae de . . . Christi resurrectione (Würzburg, 1651)

[8] Magnificat seu Vaticinium Dei parentis . . . cum hymno Ambrosiano et falsi bordoni, 4vv, bc (Innsbruck, 1651)

Liber II [6] missarum concertatarum, 5–6vv, bc (Innsbruck, 1654)

Liber III [6] missarum concertatarum, 2, 5vv, bc (Innsbruck, 1655)

Fasciculus musicus [22] sacrorum concentuum pars I, S, A, T, B, 2 vn, bc (Innsbruck, 1656)

Lytaniae duodecim BVM (Innsbruck, 1661), lost

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ

A. Schubiger: Die Pflege des Kirchengesanges und der Kirchenmusik in der deutschen katholischen Schweiz (Einsiedeln, 1873)

K. Eubel: Geschichte der oberdeutschen (Strassburger) Minoritenprovinz (Würzburg, 1886)

K. Eubel: 'Geschichte des Franziskaner-minoriten-klosters Schwäbisch Gmünd', Württembergische Vierteljahrshefte für Landesgeschichte, xiii (1890), 123–37

W. Vogt: Die Messe in der Schweiz im 17. Jahrhundert (Schwarzenburg, 1940)

E. Stiefel: Musikgeschichte der ehemaligen Reichsstadt Schwäbisch Gmünd (diss., U. of Tübingen, 1949)

EBERHARD STIEFEL

Schwab, Heinrich W(ilhelm) (b Ludwigshafen am Rhein, 8 May 1938). German musicologist. After private instruction on the piano and violin, he studied musicology, German literature, philosophy, pedagogy and history at the universities of Mainz (1957), Kiel (1958–61) and Saarbrücken (1961–4). Among his teachers in musicology were Schmitz at Mainz, A.A. Abert and Wiora at Kiel and Salmen at Saarbrücken. He received the doctorate from Saarbrücken University in 1964 with a dissertation that examined certain late 18th-century concepts of importance for the development of the so-called Romantic period. From 1966 he was attached to Kiel University, where in 1972 he became leader of a research group for studies in Scandinavia and the Baltic Sea area. He completed the Habilitation at the same university in 1977 with a work on the origin of the profession of the secular town musician in the Middle Ages, and was made professor there in 1982. In 1998 he was appointed professor of musicology at the University of Copenhagen. Schwab's wide range of interests and interdisciplinary competence is reflected in his large number of scholarly publications. Though he has written about both the 16th-century madrigal and 20th-century jazz, the main focus of his research lies in the period from the 17th century to the 19th and includes studies of genre as well as studies of sociological aspects of the musical profession.

WRITINGS

Lied und Liedästhetik der mittleren Goethezeit, 1770–1814 (diss., U. of Saarbrücken, 1964; Regensburg, 1965, as Sangbarkeit, Popularität und Kunstlied: Studien zu Lied und Liedästhetik der mittleren Goethezeit, 1770–1814, 2/1971)

Konzert: Öffentliche Musikdarbietung vom 17. bis 19. Jahrhundert (Leipzig, 1971, 2/1980)

with W. Salmen: Musikgeschichte Schleswig-Holsteins in Bildern (Neumünster, 1971)

'Zur sozialen Stellung des Stadtmusikanten', Der Sozialstatus des Berufsmusikers vom 17. bis 19. Jahrhundert, ed. W. Salmen (Kassel, 1971), 9–25

Das Einnahmebuch des Schleswiger Stadtmusikanten Friedrich Adolph Berwald (Kassel, 1972)

'Das Vereinslied des 19. Jahrhunderts', Handbuch des Volksliedes, i, ed. R.W. Brednich, L. Röhrich and W. Suppan (Munich, 1973), 863–98

'"Jonny spielt auf": Berichte und Bilder vom Auftreten des schwarzen Musikers in Europa', Opernstudien: Anna Amalie Abert zum 65. Geburtstag, ed. K. Hortschansky (Tutzing, 1975), 175–87

Die Anfänge des weltlichen Berufsmusikertums in der mittelalterlichen Stadt: Studie zu einer Berufs- und Sozialgeschichte des Stadtsmusikantentums (Habilitationsschrift, U. of Kiel, 1977; Kassel, 1982)

'Zur Geschichte des Arbeiterkonzerts', Musik und Industrie: Beiträge zur Entwicklung der Werkschöre und Werksorchester, ed. M. Steegmann (Regensburg, 1978), 85–106

'Zur Liedkunst Gabriel Voigtländers', Weltliches und geistliches Lied des Barock: Lund, Sweden, 1978, 183–207

'Zur Rezeption des Jazz in der komponierten Musik', DAM, x (1979), 127–78

ed., with F. Krummacher: Gattung und Werk in der Musikgeschichte Norddeutschlands und Skandinaviens: Kiel 1980 [incl. 'Das Lyrische Klavierstück und der nordische Ton', 136–53]

'Zur Musikkultur des Adels in Schleswig-Holstein gegen Ende des 18. Jahrhunderts', Staatsdienst und Menschlichkeit: Studien zur Adelskultur des späten 18. Jahrhunderts in Schleswig-Holstein und Dänemark: Kiel 1977, ed. C. Degn and D. Lohmeier (Neumünster, 1980), 187–209

'Das Madrigalwerk von Johann Grabbe: Beobachtungen zu Parallelvertonungen des Madrigals "Alma afflitta, che fai"', Heinrich Schütz und die Musik in Dänemark: Copenhagen 1985, 241–67

ed., with F. Krummacher: Weber: jenseits des 'Freischütz': Eutin 1986 [incl. 'Die Sonett-Kompositionen von Carl Maria von Weber: Probleme und Lösungen bei der Vertonung von Exemplaren einer literarischen Gattung', 215–34]

'Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach und das geistliche "Lied im Volkston"', Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach und die europäische Musikkultur: Hamburg 1988, 369–88

'Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach og hans komponering "for Publikum"', SMN, xv (1989), 51–72

'Musik der Franzöischen Revolution', 1789, Aspekte des Zeitalters der Revolution: eine Ringvorlesung der Christian-Albrechts-Universität zu Kiel, ed. F. Büttner (Kiel, 1990), 123–49

'"Menuettlied" und "Sing-Menuett": zu speziellen Formen des Liedes im 18. Jahrhundert', Studien zum deutschen weltlichen Kunstlied des 17. und 18. Jahrhunderts, ed. G. Busch and A.J. Harper (Amsterdam, 1992), 213–34

'Die musikalischen Aktivitäten von Johann Abraham Peter Schulz: zur deutsch-dänischen Musikkultur im Zeitalter der Aufklärung', Der dänische Gesamtstaat: Kopenhagen, Kiel, Altona: Eutin 1992, ed. K. Bohnen and S.-A. Jørgensen (Tübingen, 1992), 181–90

'Fidelio (Leonore), op.72', Beethoven: Interpretationen seiner Werke, i, ed. A. Riethmüller, C. Dahlhaus and A. Ringer (Laaber, 1994), 536–59

'"Høit staar Kunzen blandt Nutidens Sangcomponister. . ." (1817): Bericht über Forschungsinitiativen zu Leben und Werk des Friedrich Ludwig Aemilius Kunzen (1761–1817)', DAM, xxii (1994), 27–56

'Italianità in Danimarca: zur Rezeption des Madrigals am Hofe Christians IV.' Europa in Scandinavia: Kiel 1992, ed. R. Bohn (Frankfurt, 1994), 127–53

Friedrich Ludwig Aemilius Kunzen (1761–1817): Stationen seines Lebens und Wirkens, Kongelige Bibliotek, Copenhagen, 9 Nov 1995–31 Jan 1996, Bibliothek der Hansestadt Lübeck, May–July 1996, Schleswig-Holsteinische Landesbibliothek, Kiel, May–July 1996 (Heide in Holstein, 1995) [exhibition catalogue]

'La musique scandinave et les Expositions Universelles Parisiennes', Grieg et Paris: romantisme, symbolisme et modernisme franco-norvégiens, ed. H. Herresthal and D. Pistone (Caen, 1996), 111–24

'Carl Loewes Klaviersonate E-Dur, op.16: Gattungstradition und Unikum', Carl Loewe (1796–1869): Beiträge zu Leben, Werk und Wirkung, ed. E. Ochs and L. Winkler (Frankfurt, 1998), 329–49

EDITIONS

Johann Grabbe: Werke (Kassel, 1971)

C. Arnold: Fantasie für Klavier, Op.20 (AWV 37) (Wilhelmshaven, 1993)

JOHN BERGSAGEL

Schwaen, Kurt (b Kattowitz [now Katowice, Poland], 21 June 1909). German composer. He studied at the universities of Breslau and Berlin, where his teachers included Curt Sachs and Arnold Schering. In 1930 he met Hanns Eisler who had a profound impact on his compositional style. After becoming active in an anti-fascist student group, he joined the German Communist Party; from 1935 to 1938 he was imprisoned because of his political views. Following World War II, he made a major contribution to the rebuilding of musical culture in Berlin, writing compositions for amateur music groups, choirs, music schools and chamber ensembles, publishing and serving as a musical advisor. Between 1953 and 1956 he worked with Brecht, an experience which had a considerable influence on his aesthetic stance. In 1961 he became a member of the DDR Akademie der Künste, where he was head of the music department from 1965 to 1970. Between 1973 and 1981 he directed the children's musical theatre in Leipzig. His awards include an honorary doctorate from Leipzig University (1983) and several state awards. Schwaen's extensive oeuvre comprises over 620 titles. A number of works, such as the Piano Concerto no.2 (1987), show the influence of his several visits to Vietnam. Later works include the collaborative musical poem Potsdamer Platz (1998).

WORKS
(selective list)

Dramatic: Fetzers Flucht (radio op, G. Kunert), 1959 [rev. for TV, 1962]; Leonce und Lena (op, after G. Büchner), 1960; Ballade vom Glück (ballet, E. Dörwaldt-Kühl), 1965–6; Pinocchios Abenteuer (children's op, W. and C. Küchenmeister, after C. Collodi), 1969–70, rev. 1997; Der eifersüchtige Alte (chbr op, after M. de Cervantes), 1978–9; Craqueville, oder Die unschuldige Sünderin (comic op, W. and C. Küchenmeister), 1984

Vocal: 26 Deutsche Volksdichtungen (W. and C. Küchenmeister), 1v, pf, 1953–4; Die Horaher und die Kuriaher (B. Brecht), chorus, fl, cl, 2 tpt, trbn, perc, pf, b, 1955/8; König Midas (children's cant., Kunert), spkr, solo children's vv, children's chorus, fl, cl, vn, va, vc, pf, 1958; Komm wieder zur künftgen Nacht (folk poetry), solo vv, mixed/female chorus, 1959–60; Spanische Liebeslieder (R. Alberti), S, fl, cl, hn, bn, pf, 1959; Der neue Kolumbus (musical poem, H. Rusch), spkr, T, B, chorus, orch, 1961; Parabolisch (J.W. von Goethe), S/T, pf, 1965–7; Eine Brücke zu allen Kindern (A. Könner), 1973–4; Lob der Massen (V. Braun), chorus, 1975; Nimm an die Weisheit (Bible: Proverbs), chorus, 1986; Potsdamer Platz (musical poem, H. Baierl, K. Lutz), spkr, 4 solo vv, orch, 1998, collab. H. Jörns, rev. 1999

Orch: Sinfonietta, chbr orch, 1957–8; Pf Conc. no.1, 1963–4; Chbr Conc., chbr orch, 1968, rev. 1970; Promenaden, 1971; Vn Conc., 1979; Mischa, der Honigbär (Schwaen), spkr, orch, 1980; Concerto grosso, str qt, str orch, 1982; Concerto da camera, accdn, str orch, 1985; Pf Conc. no.2 'Vietnamesisches Konzert', 1987

Chbr: Kleine Suiten, vn, 1932; Abendmusik, 2 mand, mandola, gui, kbd, 1948–9; Concertino Apollineo, pf, 7 wind, 1957; 8 Miniaturen, str qt, 1968; Sonatine no.2, tpt, pf, 1977; Pf Trio no.3, 1982; Concertino, hpd, 2 mand, mandola, gui, kbd, 1985; Pf Trio no.5 'en miniature', 1987; Concertino, vc, pf/chbr orch, 1991–4; Suiten, sax qt, 1992; Batuque, suite, 3 bn, dbn, 1993; 8 kuriose Walzer, vc, pf, 1995; Nachtszenen, str qt, 1996; Sequenzen, t sax, pf, 1996

Pf: 5 Tanzbilder, 1940; Movimenti, 1976–82; 17 Intermezzi, 1971; Waldvögel I–IV, 1971–3; Nocturne lugubre, 1992; Duo carattere, 2 pf/pf 4 hands, 1997

MSS in Kurt Schwaen's private collection, Berlin

Principal publishers: Breitkopf & Härtel, Deutscher Verlag, Dresdener Verlag, Hofmeister, Peters, Salabert, Joachim Trekel, Verlag Neue Musik

BIBLIOGRAPHY

KdG (R. Groth/W. Hanke) [incl. discography, writings and further bibliography]

C. Kaden: 'Themen und Motive: Bemerkungen über Kurt Schwaen und seine Musik', in K. Schwaen: Stufen und Intervalle (Berlin, 1976/R), 167ff

N. Schüler: 'Zwischen Noten- und Gesellschaftssystemen', Festschrift Kurt Schwaen zum 85. Geburtstag, ed. E. Ochs and N. Schüler (Frankfurt, 1994), 17–33 [interview]

ROSEMARIE GROTH

Schwaiger [Schweiger], Georg (b probably at either Wasserburg am Inn or Landshut, Bavaria; d Munich, between 17 May and 20 Sept 1581). German composer and musician. In his posthumously published Psalmi poenitentiales (1588) he is described as 'Aquiburgensis' (i.e. from Wasserburg). It is not clear whether this denotes that he was born there (his father certainly worked there from 1555 at the latest) or whether it refers only to his later residence there. He may be the Georg Schwaiger 'ex Landhuta' (i.e. from Landshut) who matriculated at the University of Ingolstadt on 15 June 1545, in which case he must have been born no later than 1529. In 1569, after his father's death, he took over his position of Stadtpfeifer at Wasserburg. In 1576 he became chief Stadtpfeifer at Munich and remained there until his death. Eitner's theory, adopted by some later writers, that he lived at a Benedictine monastery in Bavaria has now been disproved. His extant music comprises motets with Latin texts or in organ transcriptions. The published ones are all for four or five voices; so are most of those in manuscript, though a few are for eight. Schwaiger's music circulated widely in manuscript and was evidently much admired in the late 16th century. It is closer in style to the expressive polyphony of Lassus and the Netherlandish school than to the Palestrina ideal. This is particularly true of the seven penitential psalms, which were inspired by, and modelled on, Lassus's works in this genre. Schwaiger handled imitation very freely and contrasted it with passages of syllabic declamation, including repeated notes, or with scalic melismatic writing. In the five-part works he created double-choir effects by the simulated division of the voices into two opposing groups. Schwaiger was clearly a composer of some stature whose music deserves further investigation. (EitnerQ; MGG1 (F. Krautwurst))

WORKS

Moduli aliquot sacri, 4vv, insts (Munich, 1572)

Fasciculus selectiorum aliquot cantionum sacrarum … secunda pars, 5vv (Munich, 1579)

Hymni sacri (Erfurt, 1587), lost

Regii prophetae Davidis septem psalmi poenitentiales sacratissimi, 5vv (Munich, 1588)

FRANZ KRAUTWURST

Schwanenberger [Schwanberg, Schwanberger], Johann Gottfried (b probably at Wolfenbüttel, *c*1740; d Brunswick, 29 March 1804). German composer and Kapellmeister. The birthdate 28 December 1737 (or 1740) given by Gerber is not confirmed by church records. He studied in Wolfenbüttel with G.C. Schürmann and Ignazio Fiorillo, and from 1756 to 1761 (on a court stipend) in Venice with Hasse, Gaetano Latilla and Giuseppe Saratelli. From 1762 to 1802 he was Kapellmeister at the court of the Duke of Brunswick. During this period he made a number of competent settings of Italian opere serie for the court, which though unimportant to the development of the genre reflect the court's prevailing taste for Italian melody. He later declined an invitation from Frederick the Great to succeed Agricola as court composer in Berlin. His operas and keyboard works were highly praised by Burney (and by Burney's translator Ebeling, who regretted that so few reached print); he was also known as an excellent keyboard player.

WORKS
some MSS in D-W, Wa

OPERAS
all performed in Brunswick

Adriano in Siria (os, 3, P. Metastasio), Aug 1762; Il Temistocle (os, 3, Metastasio), Aug 1762; Solimano (os, 3, G.A. Migliavacca), 4 Nov 1762; La Galatea (favola pastorale, Metastasio), Feb 1763; Ezio (os, 3, Metastasio), 1763; La buona figliuola maritata (dg, 3, ? C. Goldoni), Feb 1764; Talestri regina delle amazoni, 1764

La Didone abbandonata (os, 3, Metastasio), Aug 1765; Zenobia (Metastasio), 1765; L'Issipile (os, Metastasio), 1766, rev. 10 Feb 1767 with 3 new ballets; Antigono (os, 3, Metastasio), 2 Feb 1768; Romeo e Giulia (os, 2, J.R. Sanseverino), 1776; Le isole fortunate (festa teatrale, 1778); L'Olimpiade (os, 3 Metastasio), 1782; Il trionfo della Costanze (2, D. Poggi), 13 March 1790; Recits in Il Creso, 1760

OTHER WORKS

Vocal: Il Parnaso accusato e difeso (cant., Metastasio), 1768, only recits, choruses, ov. by Schwanenberger; Das Gericht Apollos, dramatic prol; 2 sacred cants.; motet; psalm; 4 duets, 2 S, hpd

Inst: 23 syms.; 4 hpd concs.; 25 hpd sonatas; Sonatina, hpd; [3] Sonate a 3 (Brunswick, 1767)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BurneyGN; GerberL; GerberNL

HEINRICH SIEVERS

Schwann, William (Joseph) (b Salem, IL, 13 May 1913; d Lincoln, MA, 7 June 1998). American discographer and publisher. He attended the University of Louisville (BA 1935) and did graduate work at Boston University (1935–7) and Harvard (1937–9), where his teachers included Hill, Leichtentritt and Piston. He also studied organ privately with Biggs and was a critic for the Boston Herald, 1937–41. From 1939 to 1953 Schwann owned a record shop in Cambridge, and in 1949, a year after Columbia Records had introduced the long-playing microgroove record, he began to compile a comprehensive catalogue of these recordings to facilitate his retail operations. He issued the first instalment of the Long Playing Record Catalog in October 1949 (*R*1979), which listed the 674 LPs then available on 11 labels. This monthly compilation, the first issued in any country, grew to a listing each month of some 45,000 items from about 1000 labels.

A Schwann Supplementary Catalog was published from 1965 to 1971 and became Schwann 2: Record and Tape Guide (1972–83). This was a biannual publication listing monaural and less frequently catalogued recordings (e.g. folk and children's music and the spoken word). When the supplement ceased publication these items were listed in the December issue of the main catalogue which had become New Schwann (1983–6). The guide was then published as Schwann (1986–90) and eventually superseded by three speciality catalogues: Spectrum (1990–96/7/9) for popular titles, Opus (1990–) for classical titles, and In Music (1990–91) for new releases. In 1999 Schwann began its publication Schwann DVD Advance, which is a monthly catalogue devoted to digital video discs. His other publications include the Schwann Artist Issue (1953–92), which classifies concert music recordings by performer; the Schwann Children's and Christmas Record & Tape Guide (annually since 1965); the Schwann Catalog of Country & Western Long Playing Records (three issues, 1966–71); and the Basic Record Library (four volumes, 1962–71). Schwann also compiled and edited The White House Record Library (Washington DC, 1973–80). His annual statistical studies provide information about the recording industry and its markets. After W. Schwann, Inc. was sold to ABC Publishing Company in 1976, Schwann remained president of the new affiliate. He received the Honorary Gold Recording Award of the Recording Industry Association of America in 1984.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Dalton, ed.: 'New Music News: More on Mags', Ear, xv/[2] (1990–91)

I. Horowitz: 'Schwann commits to CD-oriented catalog: Critics of move contend decision is premature', Billboard (31 May 1986)

LEONARD BURKAT/GEORGE BOZIWICK

Schwantner, Joseph (b Chicago, 22 March 1943). American composer. His formative musical experiences were of playing the tuba in his high school orchestra and the guitar (classical music, folk music, jazz). While still in high school he began studying music theory, and one of his early jazz works, Offbeat, won the National Band Camp Award (1959). He received his BM in composition from the American Conservatory of Music in Chicago (1964), where his principal teacher was Bernard Dieter. At Northwestern University (MM 1966, DM 1968) he studied with Alan Stout and Anthony Donato. Three of his early works won BMI Student Composer Awards, including Diaphonia intervallum (1967), which, though essentially serial, contains elements that would become pervasive in his more mature works: a fascination with timbre, extreme instrumental range, juxtaposed instrumental groupings, pedal points, and a highly personal, even idiosyncratic compositional style.

Schwantner taught at the Chicago Conservatory College (1968–9), Pacific Lutheran University in Tacoma, WA (also 1968–9) and Ball State University (1969–70) before joining the faculty of the Eastman School in 1970. That year Richard Pitman and the Boston Musica Viva gave the première of his Consortium I, which is typical of his serial works in its disregard for the usual strictures of 12-note technique. It employs several discrete 12-note rows, which are employed freely, with certain repeated intervallic structures to provide formal coherence. With Consortium II (1971), also commissioned by Musica Viva, he continued his exploration of free serialism, but subsequent works of the 1970s reveal a growing preoccupation with tone colour. In aeternum (1973) and Elixir (1976), which was performed at the 1978 ISCM Festival in Helsinki, are among several of his works to use extended percussion, including watergongs and glass crystals. Aftertones of Infinity (1978), commissioned by the American Composers Orchestra and awarded the Pulitzer Prize in 1979, also shows an increasing reliance on tonal centres, as do Music of Amber (1981) and New Morning for the World: 'Daybreak of Freedom' (1982). Incorporating texts from Martin Luther King, New Morning was first performed by the Eastman Philharmonic with the Pittsburgh Pirates star Willie Stargell as narrator. Recordings and performances by a number of American orchestras have helped make it his best-known work.

In 1982 he took leave of absence from the Eastman School and began what would prove to be a fruitful relationship with Leonard Slatkin and the St Louis SO with whom he stayed as composer-in-residence until 1985. Magabunda 1983, a large-scale song cycle, was his first commission for the orchestra, followed by A Sudden Rainbow (1986) and the guitar concerto From Afar ... (1987). The New York International Festival of the Arts commissioned his Piano Concerto (1988), which Slatkin, the St Louis SO and Emanual Ax introduced. Slatkin also conducted the New York PO and its principal percussionist Christopher Lamb in 1995 in the first performances of the Percussion Concerto.

Just as Schwantner's handling of 12-note materials is individual, so is his use of tonality. Tonal centres are created through pitch emphasis, rather than tonic-dominant function. Like his atonal, his tonal music employs a variety of pitch sets (but rarely major or minor scales) that are often symmetrical in design. His later works show the influence of minimalism, particularly in the repeated rhythmic and melodic figurations of works such as the Percussion Concerto, and his interest in orchestral colour remains paramount. His most extroverted pieces have a boisterous, even theatrical quality, have earned an important place in the American orchestral repertory, and have helped win an audience for new music.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Aftertones of Infinity, 1978; New Morning for the World: 'Daybreak of Freedom' (M.L. King), nar, orch, 1982; Magabunda (A. Pizarro), S, orch, 1983; Dreamcaller (J. Schwantner), S, vn, orch, 1984; Distant Runes and Incantations, amp pf, orch, 1984; A Sudden Rainbow, 1986; Toward Light, 1987; From Afar . . ., amp gui, orch, 1987; Pf Conc., 1988; Freeflight: Fanfares and Fantasy, 1989; A Play of Shadows, fl, chbr orch, 1990; Through Interior Worlds, 1992; Perc Conc., 1994; Sym. 'Evening Land' (P. Lagerkvist, trans. W.H. Auden, L. Sjoberg), S, orch, 1995; In Memories Embrace . . ., str, 1996

Band: . . . and the mountains rising nowhere, 1977; From a Dark Millennium, 1981; In Evening's Stillness, 1996

Chbr and solo inst: Chronicon, bn, pf, 1967; Diaphonia intervallum, ens, 1967; Consortium I, 8 insts, 1970; Consortium II, fl, cl, vn, vc, pf, perc, 1971; In aeternum II, org, 1972; In aeternum, vc, a fl, b cl, vn, perc, 1973; Canticle of the Evening Bells, ens, 1975; Elixir, fl, cl, pf qt, 1976; Music of Amber fl, cl, vn, vc, pf, perc, 1981; Veiled Autumn (Kindertoteslied), pf, 1987; Velocities, mar, 1990

Vocal: Wild Angels of the Open Hills (U. LeGuin), S, fl, hp, 1978; Sparrows (K. Issa), S, 8 insts, 1980; 2 Poems (Pizarro), S, pf, 1980

Principal publishers: Helicon, Peters

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.L. Briggs: The Recent Music of Joseph Schwantner: Unique and Essential Elements (diss., U. of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign, 1984)

C.J. Folio: 'The Synthesis of Traditional and Contemporary Elements in Joseph Schwantner's Sparrows', PNM, xxiv (1985–6), 184–96

JAMES CHUTE

Schwarbrook [Schwarbrick, Swarsbrick, Swabridge, Swarbrick, Swarbutt], Thomas (b c1679; d ?c1753). Organ builder, active in England and probably of English birth. For a fuller discussion of his nationality, see Speller (1980). He settled in London and worked for Renatus Harris and possibly Mark Anthony Dallam; in 1705 and 1706 he was working on his own, building the organ for All Saints, Northampton, in 1705. Early in the 18th century he left London, and by 1716 he was settled in Warwick. He is mentioned in connection with Worcester Cathedral for repairs costing £300 (1752). As this organ was rebuilt by Jordan and Bridge, and as Bridge took over the cleaning of Schwarbrook's organ at Salisbury in 1754, it is probable that Schwarbrook died between these dates. He built in Renatus Harris's French style with five-rank Cornets extending down to c′, separate high mutations – 'lesser Tierce' (19th) as well as Cart and Tierce – and Great and Choir departments on the same wind-chest with the possibility of borrowing by communication. His organs include St Saviour, Southwark (1703); St Nicholas's, Bristol (1713); St Philip's, Birmingham (1715; now the cathedral; part of the case survives); St Chad's, Shrewsbury (1716; removed in 1794); St Mary's, Warwick (1717; now much enlarged; case survives); Holy Trinity, Coventry (1732; cost £600); St Michael's, Coventry (1733; his masterpiece, much admired by Handel); Magdalen College, Oxford (1737; three manuals, 20 stops, including three percussion registers); St Thomas's, Salisbury (1738; west gallery); Lichfield Cathedral (1740); St Mary the Virgin, Nottingham (1742; sold in 1777 to Uppingham parish church, though the present case is almost certainly not his); Shepton Mallet parish church (1744); and Holy Trinity, Stratford-upon-Avon (1745; removed in 1842). The case of the organ in St Martin's, Birmingham, was removed to St Alphege's, Solihull, probably in 1809.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.E.G. de Montmorency: A Brief History of the Church of St. Alfege (Greenwich, 2/1923), 19

J. Speller: 'Some Notes on Thomas Swarbrick', The Organ, lix (1980), 87–90

B. Matthews: Letter to the Editor, The Organ, lx (1981), 61 only

N. Thistlethwaite: 'Notes Relating to the Organization of Organ-Building in England, to c1740', JBIOS, v (1981), 46–51

GUY OLDHAM, NICHOLAS PLUMLEY

Schwärmer (Ger.). See BOMBO (i).

Schwartz, Arthur (b Brooklyn, NY, 25 Nov 1900; d Kintnersville, PA, 3 Sept 1984). American composer. The son of a prosperous lawyer, Schwartz was groomed for the legal profession but he loved music and wrote songs during his law studies at New York University and Columbia University Law School. He began practising law in 1924 but, encouraged by lyricist Lorenz Hart, left the bar in 1928 when he teamed up with lyricist Howard Dietz. Their first success together, the revue The Little Show (1929), led the team to a series of Broadway revues that were among the finest of the 1930s. Three's A Crowd (1930), The Band Wagon (1931) and At Home Abroad (1935) were highlights during this golden age of the sophisticated musical revue. The team had less success with book musicals, even though Revenge With Music (1934) and Between the Devil (1937) had superior scores. By the end of the decade, Schwartz settled in Hollywood where he scored some dozen film musicals with various lyricists and with uneven success.

By the 1950s he had returned to Broadway, writing stage musicals with Ira Gershwin, among others. A Tree Grows in Brooklyn (1951), written with lyricist Dorothy Fields, revealed a new facet to Schwartz's music. Inspired by Fields' perceptive character lyrics, Schwartz's compositions for that show explored longer and fuller musical lines and unsettling harmonies not previously heard in his music. He collaborated again with Dietz for two short-lived musicals in the early 1960s, The Gay Life (1961) and Jennie (1963). Schwartz was also a capable film producer (Cover Girl in 1944 and Night and Day in 1946). His music ranges from the broodingly romantic, such as Dancing in the Dark, to the bright and sophisticated, as in his signature song That's entertainment.

WORKS
(selective list)

lyrics by Dietz, unless otherwise stated

STAGE
dates are those of the first New York performance

The Little Show, Music Box, 30 April 1929 [incl. I guess I'll have to change my plan]

Three's a Crowd, Selwyn, 15 Oct 1930 [incl. Right at the Start of It, Something to Remember You By]

The Band Wagon, New Amsterdam, 3 June 1931 [incl. I love Louisa, Dancing in the Dark, New Sun in the Sky; film, 1953]

Flying Colors, Imperial, 15 Sept 1932 [incl. Alone Together, A Shine on your Shoes, Louisiana Hayride]

Revenge With Music, New Amsterdam, 28 Nov 1934 [incl. If there is Someone Lovelier than You, You and the Night and the Music]

At Home Abroad, Winter Garden, 19 Sept 1935 [incl. Thief in the Night, Love is a dancing thing]

Between the Devil, Imperial, 22 Dec 1937 [incl. By Myself, I see your face before me, Triplets]

Park Avenue (I. Gershwin), Shubert, 4 Nov 1946 [incl. Don't be a woman if you can]

Inside U.S.A., Century, 30 April 1948 [incl. Haunted Heart]

A Tree Grows in Brooklyn (D. Fields), Alvin, 19 April 1951 [incl. Make the man love me, I'll buy you a star, Love is the reason]

By the Beautiful Sea (Fields), Majestic, 8 April 1954 [incl. Alone Too Long]
The Gay Life, Shubert, 18 Nov 1961 [incl. Magic Moment, Something you Never Had Before]
Jennie, Majestic, 17 Oct 1963 [incl. Before I Kiss the World Goodbye]

FILM

Follow the Leader (R. Rainger and E.Y. Harburg), 1930 [Brother just laugh it off]
That Girl from Paris (E. Heyman), 1937 [incl. Seal it with a kiss]
Thank Your Lucky Stars (F. Loesser), 1943 [incl. They're either too young or too old, Love isn't born, it's made]
The Time the Place and the Girl (L. Robin), 1946 [incl. Through a Thousand Dreams, On a Rainy Night in Rio]
The Band Wagon, 1953 [incl. That's entertainment]
Dangerous When Wet (J. Mercer), 1953 [incl. I got out of bed on the right side]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Wilder: American Popular Song: the Great Innovators, 1900–1950 (New York, 1972), 313–30
H. Dietz: Dancing in the Dark (New York, 1974)
S. Green: The World of Musical Comedy: the Story of the American Musical Stage as told through the Careers of its Foremost Composers and Lyricists (New York, 1960, rev. and enlarged 4/1980), 423–6

THOMAS S. HISCHAK

Schwartz, Elliott (Shelling) (b Brooklyn, NY, 19 Jan 1936). American composer and writer on music. He studied at Columbia University (BA 1957, MA 1958, EdD 1962) with Otto Luening and Jack Beeson, and privately with Paul Creston (composition) and Alton Jones (piano). During the summers of 1961 to 1969 he studied and collaborated with Henry Brant, Chou Wen-Chung, Stefan Wolpe and Edgard Varèse at the Bennington Composers Conference. He has taught at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst (1960–64), and Bowdoin College (1964– ), and held visiting appointments at Ohio State University (1988–92) and Cambridge University (1993, 1998) among others. His many awards include the Gaudeamus Prize (1970), two Bellagio residencies from the Rockefeller Foundation (1980, 1989) four fellowships from the National Endowment for the Arts (1974, 1976, 1980, 1983) and a commission from the Library of Congress (1988).

Schwartz established his reputation as a musical pioneer in the mid-1960s, writing compositions that emphasize theatrical innovation, audience participation and game-orientated processes. After the mid-1970s he developed a distinctly eclectic style, employing an idiosyncratic blend of traditional and aleatory notations. References to music of the past emerge from, recede into, or starkly juxtapose radically dissonant and rhythmically fluid textures. In 1978 he began to concentrate exclusively on instrumental works. His compositions have been performed internationally by major orchestras and chamber ensembles.

WORKS
(selective list)

Dramatic: Elevator Music, 1967; Areas, fl, cl, trbn, vn, vc, pf, dancers, 1968; Music for Soloist and Audience, 1970; Telly, 5 ww/brass, 4 perc, 3 TVs, tape, 1972; Scales and Arpeggios, tape, 1973; Spaces, tape, 1974; Pentagonal Mobile, pf, tape, audience, 1978
Orch: Music for Orch, orch, tape, 1965; Texture, chbr orch, 1966; Magic Music, pf, orch, 1968; Voyage, concert band, 1969; Island, 1970; Dream Ov., 1972; Eclipse II, concert band, 1972; The Harmony of Maine, synth, orch, 1974; Eclipse III, chbr orch, 1975; Janus, pf, orch, 1976; Celebrations/Reflections, 1985; 4 American Portraits, chbr orch, 1986; Purple Transformation, wind, 1987; Equinox, 1994; Timepiece 1794, chbr orch, 1994; Chiaroscuro, wind, 1995; Rainbow, 1996
Chbr and solo inst: Eclipse I, 2 cl, 2 bn, tpt, trbn, vn, vc, perc, kbd, 1971; The Decline and Fall of the Sonata, vn, pf, 1972; Octet, fl, ob, cl, vn, vc, perc, 2 kbd, 1972; Chbr Conc. II, cl, 10 insts, 1977; Souvenir, cl, pf, 1978; Bellagio Variations, str qt, 1980; Chbr Conc. IV, sax, 10 insts, 1981; Dream Music with Variations, pf, str trio, 1983; Octagon, 8 perc, 1984; Spirals, fl, cl, str qt, db, pf, 1985; Northern Pines, 2 ob, cl, 2 hn, pf, 1988; Celebration Ov., org, 1989; Fantastic Prisms, 6 db, pf, 1990; Elan, fl, cl, vn, vc, pf, 1991; Chbr Conc. V, bn, str, pf, 1992; Aerie, 7 fl, 1993; Aria with Interruptions, va, perc, 1993; Rows Garden, wind qt, 1993; Reflections, 6 bn, 1995; Alto Prisms, 8 va, 1997; Dreamscape, ob, vc, pf, 5 theremins, 1997; Over 20 other works for chbr groups and solo inst, 1963–1999
Tape and insts: Interruptions, wind qnt, tape, 1965; Music for Napoleon and Beethoven, tpt, pf, 2 tapes, 1969; Music for Prince Albert, pf, 2 tapes, 1969; Options I, trbn, tape/perc, 1970; Options II, cl, perc, tape, 1970; Memorabilia, vc, tape, 1971; Echo Music I, cl, va, tape, 1973; Grand Conc., pf, tape, 1973; Mirrors, pf, tape, 1973; Echo Music II, wind qt, tape, 1974; Prisms, org, tape, 1974; Cycles and Gongs, tpt, org, tape, 1975; Extended Cl, cl, tape, 1975; Extended Ob, ob, tape, 1975; 5 Mobiles, fl, tpt, org, tape, 1975; A Bowdoin Anthology, nar, insts, tape, 1976; Ziggurat, fl, tape, 1976; Extended Pf, pf, tape, 1977

Principal publishers: Margun, MMB-Norruth, Merion (Presser), Pembroke (C. Fischer), Tetra/A. Broude, Fallen Leaf, American Composers Edition

WRITINGS

ed. with B. Childs: Contemporary Composers on Contemporary Music (New York, 1967/R)
Electronic Music: a Listener's Guide (New York and London, 1973, 2/1975/R) with D.S. Godfrey: Music since 1945 (New York, 1993)

DANIEL S. GODFREY

Schwartz, Francis (b Altoona, PA, 10 March 1940). American composer. After studies with Lonny Epstein, Vittorio Giannini and Louis Persinger at the Juilliard School (BS 1961, MS 1962), he moved to Puerto Rico (1965), where he became a faculty member and later chair (1971–80) of the music department, director of cultural activities (1981–6) and dean of the faculty of humanities (from 1995–9) at the University of Puerto Rico. He also served as music critic for the newspaper the San Juan Star (1966–88), composer-in-residence at the Centro de Investigaciones de Comunicación Masiva y Tecnología in Buenos Aires (1975) and visiting professor of experimental music at the University of Paris (1977–9). In 1981 he was awarded the doctorate in musical aesthetics by the University of Paris, where he had studied with Daniel Charles. Together with Aponte-Ledée, Schwartz was a key figure in the introduction of avant-garde music in Puerto Rico during the 1960s and 70s. Since that time his work has included compositions for a wide range of performance media, from solo guitar to the 'musicalization' of an entire university campus, with synchronized international telephonic communication (Cosmos). Mon oeuf, a multi-sensorial ovoid theatre for one, was installed in the Museum of Modern Art, Paris after its première at the Pompidou Centre (Paris, 1979). Schwartz has received many commissions, mainly for mixed-media works, from the French government, the Puerto Rico Casals Festival, the Sainte Baume Music Festival (France) and others. In 1987 he was appointed Chevalier of the Order of Arts and Letters.

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: Auschwitz, tape, lights, odours, movt, 1968; My Name's Caligula what's Yours?, 3 actors + insts, 1970; Geo-Flux, ballet, 1974; Time, Sound, and the Hooded Man, actors, tape, videotape, 1975; Is there Sex in Heaven?, 1976; Hommage à K …, 1978; Mon oeuf (F. Schwartz), tape, videotape, odours, sculpture, audience, 1979; Musique pour Juvisy, tape, videotape, synth, 1979, collab. C. Miereanu; Cosmos, 1980; La guerra de las flores, 1982; New World Youth Cant., solo vv, chorus, chbr ens, 1992

Orch: Plegaria, 1973; Yo protesto, 1974; The Tropical Trek of Tristan Trimble, 1975; Amistad III, 1979; Un sourire festif, 1981; Gestos, orch, audience, 1983; Fantasía de la Libertad, 1986; Papageno's Dream, 1991

Chbr and solo inst: Ergo sum, fl, tape, 1979; Eros by any other Name, db, pf, 1983; We've got (Poly) Rhythm, gui, body perc, vocal sounds, 1984; Let There be Peace (Homage to Segovia), 4 gui, 1987; The Night of the Fiery Angels, wind qnt, 1987; The Headless Glory of André Chenier, pf, 1989; Toward the New Millennium, fl, gui, 1992; Leaping Lenny, gui, 1995; Flaming June, fl, ob, cl, bn, tpt, hn, pf, vn, va, vc, db, 1998

Vocal: Caníbal-Calibán, 1v, ens, 1976; 4+3=Paris VIII, 1v, vn, a sax, tpt, trbn, gui, perc, 1978; Grimaces, 1v, fl, a sax, db, perc, tape, 1984; Songs of Loneliness (J.L. Barges, A. Ginsberg, J. Gonzalez, A. Akhmatova, M. de Ferdinandy), 1v, vn, cl, pf, 1990; Bolívar, S, pf trio, 1990; John Cage and the Coquís, vv, elecs, 1995; Songs of Life (V.L. Suris), 1v, pf, 1995; several songs with insts/tape Visions, Mez, fl, vc, pf, 1999

Principal publishers: Peer-Southern, Salabert, ZAMI, Transatlantiques

WRITINGS

with M.L. Muñoz: El mundo de la música (San Juan, 1982) with D. Thompson: Concert Life in Puerto Rico 1957–1992: Views and Reviews (San Juan, 1998)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Pilon: 'Au delà de l'objet musical', Revue d'esthetique, iii–iv (1979), 295–302

K. Degláns and L.E. Pabón Roca: Catálogo de música clásica contemporánea en Puerto Rico (Río Piedras, Puerto Rico, 1984), 147–55

DONALD THOMPSON

Schwartz [Shvarts], Isaak Iosifovich (b Romnï, Chernihov province, Ukraine, 13 May 1923). Russian composer. He spent his early years in Leningrad (1930–37); his father, an archaeologist, was arrested in 1936 and shot a year later in Kolïma and was only exonerated in 1956. In 1937 Isaak was exiled to Frunze with his mother, a teacher; there he began to study composition with Fere. After serving in the army (1942–5) he returned to Leningrad and attended the conservatory there (1945–51) where he studied with Arapov and then Yevlakhov. He joined the Composers' Union in 1954 and the Union of Cinematographers in 1964. He became an Honoured Representative of the Arts of the RSFSR in 1984, received the Nika prize for several film scores in 1992 and was granted the State Prize of Russia in 1998. Although he is acknowledged as one of leading composers for film in the world, he lives a secluded life in a St Petersburg suburb.

Schwartz's early works, such as the Violin Sonata in G minor, are characterized by a passionate emotional language and a melodic and harmonic freshness. If the influence of Prokofiev and, in part, Tchaikovsky is evident in the instrumental and ballet music – Nakanune ('On the Eve') was commissioned by the Bol'shoy Theatre at the suggestion of the ballerina Galina Ulanova in 1960 and was the first of many stage works – then it is the influence of Shostakovich that dominates his orchestral writing. Schwartz had begun a symphony while still at the conservatory and, after its première in 1954 he won the approval of Shostakovich. Jewish subject matter is of significance in Schwartz's music, from the early choreographic miniature Vesyolïy portnoy ('The Merry Tailor') composed for Leonid Yakobson in 1958 to the concerto for orchestra Zhyoltïye zvyozdï ('Yellow Stars'), written in memory of Raul Vallenberg in 1988. Schwartz has a profound knowledge of secular and sacred traditional Jewish music, partly because his grandfather was a rabbi at a St Petersburg synagogue. The many years spent writing music for plays, television programmes and films has brought Schwartz considerable success. The requirements particular to writing such music have not compromised his creativity; he conveys with great economy the emotional atmosphere of a film's content and lends rhythmic diversity to visual sequences. His film scores are frequently heard in concerts and broadcast on radio. The subtle emotional response which characterizes these scores is also a hallmark of his many romances. These range in scope from the dazzling stylizations of 19th-century popular genres which feature in films to the 30 songs written in collaboration with the poet and bard Bulat Okujava. Recordings of these were made in millions and during the 1960s they represented an integral part of the spiritual life of the Russian intelligentsia. During the 1980s his songs appeared in the journals Sovetskiy Ekran and Muzïkal'naya zhizn', and since then many interviews have appeared in the Russian press.

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: Vesyolïy portnoy [The Merry Tailor] (choreographic miniature, choreog. L. Yakobson), 1958; Nakanune [On the Eve] (ballet, after I. Turgenev), 1960, Leningrad, Malïy, 1960; Strana chudes [A Land of Miracles] (ballet), 1966

Inst: Sonata, g, vn, pf, 1947; Str Qt, 1948; Sym., orch, 1954; Kontsertnaya syuita no.3 [Conc. Suite no.3], orch, 1980–81; Grustnïy val's [Melancholy Waltz], gui, orch, 1984; Zhyoltïye zvyozdï [Yellow Stars], conc., orch, 1988; Sinfonietta, orch, 1990; Ov., orch, 1998

Vocal: Romansï [Romances] (A.S. Pushkin and others), 1940s–80s; Soldat i v'yuga [The Soldier and a Snowstorm] (ballad, M. Svetlov), 1v, orch, 1949; Duma o rodine [Thoughts about our Homeland] (cant., A. Chepurov), B, chorus, orch, 1950

TV scores and 110 film scores, incl.: Beloye solntse pustïni [The White Sun of the Desert] (dir. V. Motïl), 1969; Stantsionnïy smotritel' [The Station Inspector] (dir. S. Solov'yov), 1974; Dersu-Uzala (dir. Akira Kurosava), 1975; Zvezda plenitel'nogo schast'ya [The Star of Captivating Happiness] (dir. Motïl), 1976; Nas venchali ne v tserkvi [We weren't Married in Church] (dir. B. Tokarev), 1982; Captain Fracas (A. Vladimirov), 1988; Cyrano de Bergerac (dir. N. Birman), 1988

WRITINGS

'Baletmeyster i muzïka' [The ballet master and music], Leonid Yakobson: tvorcheskiy put' baletmeystera, yego baletï, miniatyurï, ispolniteli: sbornik statey, ed. S.M. Vol'fson (Moscow and Leningrad, 1965), 33

'U menya dva obraztsa; Charlie Chaplin i Nino Rota' [I have two models: Chaplin and Rota], Izvestiya (9 June 1993)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Orlov: 'Simfoniya I. Shvartsa', Sovetskaya muzïka, i (Moscow, 1956), 274–77

S.M. Slonimsky: Isaak Shvarts: Simfoniya (Leningrad, 1958)

S.M. Slonimsky: Isaak Shvarts (Leningrad, 1960)

LYUDMILA KOVNATSKAYA

Schwartz, Jean (b Budapest, 4 Nov 1878; d Sherman Oaks, CA, 30 Nov 1956). American composer of Hungarian birth. He studied piano with his sister, a pupil of Liszt. He moved to the USA with his family when he was about ten years old and continued his studies, but held a number of non-musical jobs before becoming a pianist in a band which played at Coney Island. Shortly afterwards he published an instrumental cakewalk, Dusky Dudes (1899), and accepted a position as a song plugger with the Tin Pan Alley publisher Shapiro-Bernstein. Some of his melodies were interpolated in Broadway shows, among them 'When Mr. Shakespeare Comes to Town' (in Weber and Fields's Hoity-Toity, 1901), 'Rip Van Winkle was a lucky man' (in The Sleeping Beauty and the Beast, 1901) and 'Bedelia' (in The Jersey Lily, 1903). From 1904 to 1928 Schwartz composed music for nearly 30 Broadway musicals, including many of The Passing Show series (some in collaboration with Romberg). At first he was considered a promising new writer who could produce songs comparable with those of Kern or Berlin, but in time, as his hits proved few and far between, he was perceived as little more than a superior hack. Most of the lyrics for his songs were provided by William Jerome (b Cornwall on the Hudson, NY, 30 Sept 1865; d New York, 25 June 1932), including the very popular 'Chinatown, my Chinatown' (from Up and Down Broadway, 1910). His most enduring melody, 'Rock-a-bye your baby with a dixie melody', was introduced by Al Jolson in Romberg's Sinbad (1918). Schwartz spent his later years in California, where he found only small success; among his better-known songs from this period is Au revoir, pleasant dreams (1930), which the bandleader Ben Bernie employed as a radio theme song.

WORKS
(selective list)

STAGE
revues unless otherwise stated; dates are those of first New York performance

Piff! Paff!! Pouf!!! (musical, W. Jerome), 2 April 1904
The Ham Tree (musical, Jerome), 28 Aug 1905 [incl. Good-bye sweet old Manhattan Isle]
In Hayti (musical, Jerome; J.J. McNally), 30 Aug 1909
Up and Down Broadway (musical, Jerome), 18 July 1910 [incl. Chinatown, my Chinatown]
The Passing Show of 1913 (H. Atteridge), 24 July 1913
The Passing Show of 1918 (Atteridge), 25 July 1918 [collab. S. Romberg]
Monte Cristo, Jr. (musical, Atteridge), 12 Feb 1919 [collab. Romberg]
The Passing Show of 1919 (Atteridge), 23 Oct 1919 [collab. Romberg]
The Passing Show of 1921 (Atteridge), 29 Dec 1920
The Passing Show of 1923 (Atteridge), 14 June 1923 [collab. Romberg]
The Passing Show of 1924 (Atteridge, A. Gerber), 3 Sept 1924 [collab. Romberg]

SONGS
lyrics by W. Jerome unless otherwise stated

Any old place I hang my hat is home sweet home to me (1901); When Mr. Shakespeare Comes to Town, in Hoity-Toity, 1901; Rip Van Winkle was a lucky man, in The Sleeping Beauty and the Beast, 1901; Mr. Dooley, in A Chinese Honeymoon, 1902; Bedelia, in The Jersey Lily, 1903; My Irish Molly-O (1905); When the girl you love is loving, in Follies of 1908; I love the ladies (G. Clarke) (1914); Hello, Central, give me no man's land, Rock-a-bye your baby with a dixie melody, Why do they all take the night boat to Albany? (S.M. Lewis, J. Young), in Sinbad, 1918; Au revoir, pleasant dreams (J. Meskill) (1930); One Little Raindrop (Meskill) (1931); Trust in me (M. Ager) (1937)

BIBLIOGRAPHY
S. Spaeth: A History of Popular Music in America (New York, 1948/R)
D. Ewen: Popular American Composers (New York, 1962; suppl. 1972)

GERALD BORDMAN

Schwartz, Rudolf (b Berlin, 20 Jan 1859; d Halle, 27 April 1935). German musicologist. He studied philosophy and then musicology with Spitta in Berlin (1882–7), taking the doctorate in Leipzig in 1887 with a dissertation on the influence of Italian madrigalists on H.L. Hassler. He was conductor of the Greifswald University Choir (1887–97), music critic of the Signale für die musikalische Welt in Leipzig (from 1897) and succeeded Emil Vogel as director of the Musikbibliothek Peters (appointed 1901), where he edited the Jahrbuch and compiled a new bibliographic edition of the catalogue. In 1907 he was appointed professor; he retired in 1909. His major research was on Renaissance secular music and included a valuable edition and study of 15th-century frottolas, as well as editions of Hassler's Canzonette (1590) and Neue teutsche Gesang (1596).

WRITINGS

'Die Frottole im 15. Jahrhundert', VMw, ii (1886), 427–66
H.L. Hassler unter dem Einfluss der italienischen Madrigalisten (diss., U. of Leipzig, 1887; VMw, ix (1893), 1–61)
'Magister Statius Olthof', VMw, x (1894), 231
'Das erste deutsche Oratorium', JbMP 1898, 59–65
Die Musik des 19. Jahrhunderts: ein historischer Überblick (Leipzig, 1900) ed.: Jahresbericht der Musikbibliothek Peters, viii–xxxv (Leipzig, 1902–29)
'Die Musikwissenschaft', Spemanns goldenes Buch der Musik, ed. H. Abert and others (Berlin and Stuttgart, ?1904), 673–93
'Zu den Texten der weltlichen Madrigale Palestrinas', JbMP 1906, 95–7
'Zur Hassler-Forschung', JbMP 1906, 93–5
'Zur Geschichte des Taktschlagens', JbMP 1907, 59–70
ed.: Katalog der Musikbibliothek Peters, i: Bücher und Schriften (Leipzig, 1910)
'Zur Geschichte der liederlosen Zeit in Deutschland', JbMP 1913, 15–27
'Die Bach-Handschriften der Musikbibliothek Peters', JbMP 1919, 56–73
'Nochmals "Die Frottole im 15. Jahrhundert"', JbMP 1924, 47–60
'Musikwissenschaft', Literarisches Zentralblatt für Deutschland, lxxv–lxxx (1924–9) [series of 66 articles]
'Der Stettiner Ratskantor Paul Praetorius (Schulz) 1520–1597', Gedenkboek aangeboden aan Dr. D.F. Scheurleer (The Hague, 1925), 283–9
'Zur Musikkultur der Renaissance', Beethoven-Zentenarfeier: Vienna 1927, 193–5
'Zur Charakteristik Zelters', JbMP 1929, 71–4
'Zum Formproblem der Frottole Petruccis', Theodor Kroyer: Festschrift, ed. H. Zenck, H. Schultz and W. Gerstenberg (Regensburg, 1933), 77–85

EDITIONS

H.L. Hassler: Canzonette von 1590 und neue Teutsche Gesang von 1596, DTB, ix, Jg.v/2 (1904); Madrigale, DTB, xx, Jg.xi/1 (1962)
P. Dulichius: Prima parts Centuriae octonum et septenum vocum (1607), DDT, xxxi (1907, rev. 2/1958 by H.J. Moser); Secunda pars Centuriae octonum et septenum vocum (1608), DDT, xli (1911, rev. 2/1958 by H.J. Moser)
O. Petrucci: Frottole, Buch I und IV, Publication älterer Musik (Leipzig, 1935/R)

BIBLIOGRAPHY
A. Schering: 'R. Schwartz zum Gedächtnis', JbMP 1935, 10–11
K. Taut: 'Verzeichnis der Veröffentlichungen von Rudolf Schwartz', JbMP 1935, 12–14

ALFRED GRANT GOODMAN

Schwartzenberg [Schwartzenberger, Clouart Cebergue], Jean-Louis, dit Le Noble (d Versailles, 25 May 1736). French musician and copyist. His father was Christian Schwartzenberg, a Swiss, and his mother Marie Le Noble. He was appointed to the French court in 1703. He first played the drum in the Fifres et Tambours, and is recorded as a hautboy player in the 1720s; he also played the bassoon. By 1730 he had the title ordinaire de la musique du roy. By 1711 he had married Hélène Philidor, daughter of A.D. Philidor (i), and in about 1726 he inherited Philidor's post as garde de la bibliothèque de musique, with the responsibility of supplying all the court's music. In 1727 he copied his own 'simphonie en parties' (lost, mentioned in BenoitMC), performed for the queen.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BenoitMC

N. Dufourcq and M. Benoit: 'Les musiciens de Versailles à travers les minutes notariales de Lamy', Recherches, iii (1963), 189–206

F. Waquet: 'Philidor l'ainé, ordinaire de la Musique du Roy: un essai de biographie d'après des documents inédits', RdM, lxvi (1980), 203–16

BRUCE HAYNES

Schwartzkopff, Theodor (b Ulm, bap. 6 Nov 1659; d Ludwigsburg, 13 May 1732). German composer. He was the son of Georg Reinhard Schwartzkopff (1631–1705), a town musician in Ulm as well as organist and organ builder. Theodor probably received his early instruction in music from his father as well as from S.A. Scherer, the organist at Ulm Cathedral. He was employed as an Aspirant in the Württemburg Hofkapelle at Stuttgart around 1678 and was promoted to Hofmusicus in 1682. Following the success at court of his French-style ballet Le rendez-vous des plaisirs he was sent to study in Paris towards the end of 1684. On his return to Stuttgart in 1686 he was made vice-Kapellmeister. In December 1688 the Kapellmeister Johann Friedrich Magg sided with the invading French forces, leaving Schwartzkopff fully in charge of the Hofkapelle; on 21 March 1690 he was promoted officially to the vacant post.

Following a major retrenchment at court in 1709, caused by the cost of continuing hostilities with France coupled with the expense of building a new ducal residence at Ludwigsburg, Schwartzkopff was released from service with an inadequate annuity of 300 gulden 'until better times'. It seems that he sought work at the nearby Baden-Durlach court, since he is listed as a member of the Hofkapelle there between 1712 and 1716. Schwartzkopff returned to Stuttgart early in 1717, probably hoping for the post of Oberkapellmeister, which was vacant following the death of Pez, but this post went to Brescianello. A serenata by Schwartzkopff was performed for the annual Order of St Hubert festivities on 3 November 1721 and court documents after that date continue to describe him as Kapellmeister. In 1725 Schwartzkopff wrote to Duke Eberhard Ludwig suggesting that he direct a small ensemble for services in the Stuttgart Schlosskapelle while Brescianello continued to lead the full church music at Ludwigsburg. Unfortunately Schwartzkopff's dramatic and sacred music is lost, but a significant selection of his instrumental music written for the Württemberg court musicians does survive. These works display a blend of French and Italian elements typical of the time, with conspicuous writing for the bass viol.

WORKS

lost unless otherwise stated

DRAMATIC

first performed in Stuttgart unless otherwise stated

Le rendez-vous des plaisirs, ballet, 1684

Paradis Urthel, singendes Schauspiel mit Balletten, 1686

Endymion, Singspiel mit Balletten, 1688

Amalthea, musicalisches Dramate, 1697, possibly by Schwartzkopff

Serenata an dem … Jäger-Ordens-Fest, Ludwigsburg, 1721

SACRED

Mag, 7vv, insts, formerly D-DS

Fuga melancholiae harmonica, 4vv, 5 insts ad lib, Stuttgart, 1684, formerly D-Bsb

Harmonia sacra, hoc est Psalmi, 1–6vv, insts, Stuttgart, 1697

INSTRUMENTAL

all D-ROu

Concerto a 7, C, 2 ob, 2 vn, 2 va, bn, violon, hpd; Concerto a 4, D, fl, 2 vn, vle, hpd; Concerto a 8, D, 2 clarini, 2 ob, 2 vn, va, vle, hpd; Concerto a 6, F, 2 ob, 2 vn, va, vle, bc; Concerto da Camera â 10–11, C, 2 ob, 2 vn, 2 va, 2 va da gamba, clarino ad lib, bn, violon, bc

Ouverture a 6, B♭, 2 ob, vn, 2 va, bn, vle, hpd; Overture, C, clarino, vn, 2 va, violon, hpd

Partie, a, va da gamba/vn, hpd; Partie a 2, a, va da gamba, hpd; Partie, d, va da gamba, hpd

Pieces a 3, a, 3 va da gamba, violon, hpd

Sonata, A, 2 vn, vc, hpd; Sonata Al'imitatione del Rossignuolo e del Cucco, C, rec, 2 vn, 2 va, violon, hpd; Sonata a 3, d, 2 vn, violon, hpd; Sonata, d, 2 fl, hpd; Sonata a 3, g, va da gamba, bn, violon, hpd; Sonata a 3, g, 2 vn, violon, hpd

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Sittard: Zur Geschichte der Musik un des Theaters am württembergischen Hofe (Stuttgart, 1890–91)

L. Schiedermair: 'Die Oper an den badischen Höfen des 17. u. 18. Jahrhunderts', SIMG, xiv (1912–13), 369–90

W. Pfeilsticker: Neues württembergisches Dienerbuch (Stuttgart, 1957–74)

S. Owens: The Württemberg Hofkapelle c. 1680–1721 (diss., Victoria U. of Wellington, 1995)

SAMANTHA OWENS

Schwarz, Boris (b St Petersburg, 26 March 1906; d New York, 31 Dec 1983). American musicologist, violinist and conductor, of Russian birth. He studied musicology with Schering, Wolf and Sachs at the University of Berlin (1930–36) and completed his studies at Columbia University with Paul Henry Lang. In 1950 he was awarded the doctorate for his dissertation on French instrumental music between the revolutions. He studied the violin with Flesch in Berlin (1922–5), continuing with Jacques Thibaud and Lucien Capet in Paris (1925–6). At the age of 14 he made his violin concert début in Hanover with his father, the pianist Joseph Schwarz; he was first heard in London in 1931. After performing throughout Europe he settled in the USA in 1936. He was leader of the Indianapolis SO (1937–8) and a member of the NBC Symphony Orchestra under Toscanini (1938–9). From 1941 to 1976 he was professor of music at Queens College, CUNY. Besides serving as chairman of its music department (1948–51, 1952–5), he also founded in 1945 the Queens College Orchestral Society and the Queens College Faculty String Quartet (1952–70). A violin scholarship bearing Schwarz's name was founded at Queens College in 1982.

After becoming an American citizen in 1943 Schwarz made a number of extended visits to the Soviet Union. A Guggenheim Fellowship (1959–60) allowed him to begin a serious study of Soviet music history, and in 1962 an exchange scholarship awarded by the Soviet Academy of Sciences gave him an opportunity to discuss music and educational policies with many leading Soviet specialists. With the information collected during these visits he wrote the first comprehensive study of Soviet music in English, Music and Musical Life in Soviet Russia, 1917–70, for which he was awarded the 1972–3 ASCAP prize. Although he was recognized primarily as an authority on Russian and Soviet music, Schwarz was also in the forefront of scholarship on the history of the violin and violin playing.

WRITINGS

French Instrumental Music between the Revolutions 1789–1830 (diss., Columbia U., 1950; New York, 1987)

ed. and trans.: C. Flesch: 42 Etuden: Violin (Zürich, 1953) [Schwarz's edn in Eng., Ger.]

'Karol Rathaus', MQ, xli (1955), 481–7

'Beethoven and the French Violin School', MQ, xliv (1958), 431–47

'Beethoveniana in Soviet Russia', MQ, xlvii (1961), 4–21; xlix (1963), 143–9

'Stravinsky in Soviet Russian Criticism', Stravinsky: a New Appraisal of his Work, ed. P.H. Lang (New York, 1963), 74–95

'Music', Russia and the Soviet Union: a Bibliographic Guide, ed. P. Horecki (Chicago, 1965), 379–94

'Soviet Music since the 2nd World War', Contemporary Music in Europe, ed. P.H. Lang and N. Broder (New York, 1965), 259–81
ed.: Violin Fingering: its Theory and Practice (London, 1966/R) [trans. of C. Fleisch: Die hohe Schule des Fingersatzes auf der Geige]
'Arnold Schoenberg in Soviet Russia', Perspectives on Schoenberg and Stravinsky, ed. B. Boretz and E.T. Cone (Princeton, NJ, 1968, 2/1972/R), 111–21
'Beethovens Op.18 und Haydns Streichquartette', GfMKB: Bonn 1970, 75–9
'Zur Uraufführung von Beethovens Missa Solemnis in St Petersburg', ibid., 559–61
'A Little-Known Beethoven Sketch in Moscow', The Creative World of Beethoven, ed. P.H. Lang (New York, 1971), 37–48
Music and Musical Life in Soviet Russia, 1917–70 (New York and London, 1972, enlarged 2/1983)
'Problems of Chronology in the Works of G.B. Viotti', IMSCR XI: Copenhagen 1972, 644–6
'Viotti: eine Neubewertung seiner Werke', Violinspiel und Violinmusik: Graz 1972, 41–6
'New Trends in Soviet Music', The Cultural Scene in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe: Hamilton, ON, 1972, ed. G. Thomas (Hamilton, 1973), 108
'Joseph Joachim and the Genesis of Brahms's Violin Concerto', Brahms Congress: Detroit 1980, 503–26
'Geiger um Mozart', Mozart und seine Umwelt: Salzburg 1976 [MJb 1978–9], 228–35
Great Masters of the Violin: from Corelli and Vivaldi to Stern, Zukerman, and Perlman (New York, 1983)

EDITIONS

with K.R. Schwarz: F. Hérold: Two Symphonies; G. Onslow: Two Symphonies, The Symphony 1720–1840, ser. D, ix (New York, 1981)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M.H. Brown, ed.: Russian and Soviet Music: Essays for Boris Schwartz (Ann Arbor, 1984) [incl. list of writings, 309–18]

HENRY BURNETT

Schwarz, Gerard (b Hoboken, NJ, 19 Aug 1947). American conductor and trumpeter. He studied with William Vacchiano (1962–8) and from 1965 to 1973 was a member of the American Brass Quintet, with which he toured the USA, Europe and Asia. He played with the American SO (third trumpet, 1966–8; first, 1969–72), the Aspen Festival Orchestra (1969–75) and the Casals Festival Orchestra (1973). From 1966 he conducted for the Erick Hawkins Dance Company; he also studied composition with Paul Creston. Schwarz has commissioned works from Brant, Cervetti, Dlugoszewski, Hellerman, Moryl and Whittenberg; he has made several recordings, notable for their unusual programmes, with the American Brass Quintet and as a soloist. He was the only wind player to receive the Ford Foundation Award for concert artists (1971–3), which enabled him to commission Schuller to write a trumpet concerto. In 1973 Schwarz was accepted without an audition to succeed Vacchiano as co-principal trumpet of the New York PO; he resigned in 1977 to commit himself to a full-time conducting career and has since made guest appearances with major orchestras in the USA and abroad. Between 1976 and 1980 he served as music director of the Eliot Feld Dance Company, meanwhile founding the 'Y' (later New York) Chamber SO (1977), which he conducted until 1986. From 1978 to 1985 he was music director of the Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra, with which he made many recordings. He became music adviser of the Seattle SO in 1983 and principal conductor the following year. His recordings with the orchestra include eloquent readings of symphonies and other works by Hanson. After holding the position of music adviser of the Mostly Mozart Festival (New York) for two seasons, he became the festival's music director in 1984. Schwarz has conducted many premières, including Krenek's Arc of Life (1982), Panufnik's Arbor cosmica (1984) and Barbara Kolb's Yet That Things Go Round (1987).

EDWARD H. TARR

Schwarz, Gerhard (b Waldenburg [now Wałbrzych, Poland], 22 Aug 1902; d Bebra, 13 Oct 1994). German composer, organist and teacher. He attended the Akademie für Kirchen- und Schulmusik and Berlin University, studying the organ with Heitmann and composition with Schoenberg. In 1929 he became director of the Evangelische Schule für Volksmusik in Berlin-Spandau (later the Berliner Kirchenmusikschule) and organist of the Stiftskirche. He became a freelance church musician in 1935. After army service during the war, he was organist and a member of the ecclesiastical council in Waldenburg (1945–7). In 1947–9 he lectured on improvisation in Leipzig and Berlin. From 1949 to 1967 he was organist of the Johanneskirche and director of the Kirchenmusikschule der Evangelischen Kirche in Rheinland, in Düsseldorf, and professor of improvisation at the Cologne Musikhochschule. Awards made to him include the Kulturpreis Schlesien des Landes Niedersachsen in 1984. It has been said that he created a 'Düsseldorf organ landscape', as various churches – at his suggestion – acquired interesting new organs of different types.

Schwarz's importance lay in his teaching activities and in the field of organ improvisation; his improvisations on hymns during church services acquired a certain fame. On concert tours he organized whole evenings of improvisation, including not only hymn preludes but large-scale genres such as the concerto, the canzona and the fugue. His compositions – which include hymns that feature in German-language hymnbooks – are mainly choral, marked by his encounter with the Singbewegung of Fritz Jöde and Walter Hensel. His Psalmen of 1960 and works that derive from it show a French influence, as well as a growing emphasis on elements of serial technique. Schwarz's examination of different contemporary elements – from French Impressionism to 12-note music – has led to an unconventional stylistic synthesis.

WORKS
(selective list)

Choral unacc.: Kleiner Kalender (J. Weinheber), 1938; Stimme der Heimat (F. Bischoff), 1938; Chorsätze in 'Das Wochenlied', 1952; Psalmen, 1960; Eichendorff Gesänge, 1967; Lieder (T. Storm); Liebe und Leid (C. von Brentano); Europäische Weihnachtslieder, 1970

Choral and inst: Osterkantate, 1939; Kleine Weinachtskantate, 1939; Geschichte vom verlorenen Sohn, 1957; Jesu, meine Freude, cant., 1961; Ps cxlvi, 1966; Der Turmbau zu Babel, orat, choir, solo vv, orch, 1966; 2 geistliche Konzerte für Singstimme und Orgel, 1949

Other cants., songbooks, hymns, chorale preludes

Principal publishers: Bärenreiter, Merseburger/Kassel

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F. Soldemann: 'Gerhard Schwarz: seltene Kunst der Improvisation', Hohe Schule der Virtuosität (Hildesheim, 1969)
O.G. Blarr and T. Kersken: Orgelstadt Düsseldorf: Instrumente, Spieler, Komponisten (Düsseldorf, 1982)

FRIEDEMANN GOTTSCHICK

Schwarz, Hanna (b Hamburg, 15 Aug 1943). German mezzo-soprano. She studied at Essen and Hanover, where she made her début as Maddalena in Rigoletto in 1970. In Hamburg her roles included Cherubino and Dorabella; at Bayreuth in 1975 she graduated to Rhinemaiden and Valkyrie, appearing as Erda the following year. Her American début (San Francisco, 1977) as Fricka was praised in Opera as 'radiant-toned', and at Covent Garden in 1980 her Waltraute was 'stunningly sung'. Thought to be miscast as Carmen in San Francisco and as Charlotte in Amsterdam, she scored a particular success as Dido in Les Troyens at Hamburg in 1983. She has sung parts as diverse as the Princess in Adriana Lecouvreur and Prince Orlofsky in Die Fledermaus, but has continued to appear regularly at Bayreuth, and her Waltraute was widely considered to be vocally the greatest asset of Covent Garden's Götterdämmerung in 1990. Her rich, steady voice has taken well to recording, though the voice alone hardly suggests the attractiveness and animation of her stage appearance. Success in Hamburg as Mephistophilia in the 1995 première of Schnittke's Historia von D. Johann Fausten, and as Herodias in Salome at the Metropolitan in 1996, helped to confirm her as one of the leading mezzos of her time, a position strengthened by her work in concert and oratorio.

J.B. STEANE

Schwarz, Jean (b Lille, 20 May 1939). French composer. After musical studies in Paris and at Versailles, Schwarz divided his activities between jazz drumming, the study of non-European music and composition. He joined the Groupe de Recherches Musicales in 1969, and shared in the adventure of musique concrète. As professor of electro-acoustic music at the Ecole Nationale de Musique de Gennevilliers and an engineer at the Centre National de Recherche Scientifique in the ethnomusicological department of the Musée de l'Homme in Paris, he has composed works for concert performance (some purely acousmatic, others employing live instruments), for cinema (music for Serge Moati, Jean-Luc Godard, Gérard Follin and Alain Resnais) and for dance (in particular Year of the Horse and Undici onde for Carolyn Carlson, works performed respectively at the Paris Opéra in 1978 and at La Fenice in Venice in 1981).

As a composer Schwarz favours electronic sounds, the raw material from which he fashions large architectural forms and powerful, vigorous structures of sound (Erda, 1972; Quatre saisons, 1983; Suite symphonique, 1989; Makinak, 1995). He has often taken his inspiration from non-European music (Anticycle, 1972; Mosaïques, 1997), and in his works involving live instruments he often combines a pre-recorded tape with brilliant improvisations by jazz musicians (And around, 1981; Medley Body Music, 1988; Canto, 1993).

WORKS

Tape (2-track unless otherwise stated): Hoiku, 1971; Erda, 1972; Sonances, 1973; Il était une fois, 1974; Symphonie, 1975; Variations, 1976; Don Quichotte, 1976; Fotoband, 1977; Year of the Horse, 1978; L'enfance de Vladimir Kobalt, 1979; Windmills, 1980; Undici onde, 1981; Suite N, 1982; Bran, 1982; Interurbain, 1982; Perpetuum mobile I–III, 1984–5; Quatre vingts, 1988; Suite symphonique, 1989; Vent d'est, 1990; Mano a mano, 1991, collab. Teruggi; Capriccio, 1994; Makinak, 1995; Octosax, 8-track tape, 1997; Mixed up, 1997

Tape (2-track) and insts: Anticycle, perc, tape, 1972; Roundtrip, 3 jazz pfmrs, tape, 1977; Klavierband, pf, tape, 1978; Pianoband, pf, tape, 1978; Blue Chicken, 2 jazz pfmrs, tape, 1979; Gamma plus, 3 synth, tape, 1979; Surroundings, 2 jazz pfmrs, tape, 1980; La glace à trois faces, inst ens, tape, 1981; And around, 3 jazz pfmrs, tape, 1981; Eveil, fl, tape, 1981; Quatre saisons (Vierjahreszeiten), Bar, tape, 1983; Nocturne, fl, tape, 1983; Chantakoa, cl, tape, 1986; Medley Body Music, 3 jazz pfmrs, tape, 1988; The Seamaid's Music, 1v, tape, 1990, collab. E. Caron; Pyramides, bn, tape, 1990; Voicescape, 1v, tape, 1990; Up, bn, db, tape, 1990; Sculptures, bn, db, tape, 1990; Mi, bn, db, tape, 1990; So long, 1v, bn, tape, 1990; Encore, bn, db, tape, 1990; Sokoa Tanz, bn, db, gui, perc, tape, 1991; Concertino, bn, tape, 1992; Olé, gui, tape, 1992; Blue Ensemble, bn, db, gui, perc, tape, 1992; Canto, cl, bn, db, gui, live elecs, tape, 1993; Le chevalier de Goñi, 1v, spkr, tape, 1994; Transe, pf, live elecs, tape, 1994; Chasin', 2 db, tape, 1996; Mosaïques, perc, tape, 1997

Principal recording companies: INA-GRM, Celia

BRUNO GINER

Schwarz, Joseph (b Riga, 10 Oct 1880; d Berlin, 10 Nov 1926). German baritone. He studied in Berlin and Vienna, making his début in 1900 as Amonasro at Linz. After appearances in Riga, Graz and St Petersburg, he was engaged at the Vienna Volksoper and then at the Hofoper, where he made his début in 1909 as Luna. In 1915 he became a member of the Berlin Hofoper (later the Staatsoper). He made his American début in 1921 at Chicago as Rigoletto, returning as Iago and Germont; he sang Rigoletto again at the Paris Opéra (1923) and at Covent Garden (1925). His many distinguished recordings reveal a lyrical voice of considerable beauty which he used with innate intelligence to project dramatic intensity. He was generally considered one of the most notable singing actors in the early years of the 20th century.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Scott: The Record of Singing, ii (London, 1979), 226–8
G. Walter: 'Joseph Schwarz', Record Collector, xxvi (1980–81), 215–34 [incl. discography by C.N. Welsh]

LEO RIEMENS/ALAN BLYTH

Schwarz, Rudolf (b Vienna, 29 April 1905; d London, 30 Jan 1994). British conductor of Austrian birth. He studied in Vienna, and was prompted by the example of Nikisch to seek a career as a conductor. At 18 he joined the Düsseldorf Opera as répétiteur; he made his conducting début there the following year (1924), and went to Karlsruhe (1927–33) under Josef Krips. In 1936, at a time of increasing Nazi hostility, he was appointed musical director of the Jewish Cultural Organization in Berlin; this caused his internment in German labour camps (1943–5). While recuperating in Sweden he competed for, and obtained, the post of musical director to Bournemouth Corporation, where from 1947 he reorganized and considerably developed what became the Bournemouth SO.

Schwarz became a British citizen in 1952, was musical director of the City of Birmingham SO (1951–7), then succeeded Sargent as principal conductor of the BBC SO (1957–62). During this period he furthered the performance of much British music, including new works by Bliss, Gerhard, Hamilton, Rubbra and Tippett; and in 1958 he conducted the première of Britten's Nocturne. In 1964 he began a regular association with the Bergen Harmonien SO in Norway and the same year became principal conductor (from 1967, artistic director) of the Northern Sinfonia, Newcastle upon Tyne, to 1973. Less use was made in Britain of his operatic experience, except as a guest conductor with Sadler's Wells Opera, 1955–6, and with the English Opera Group in 1967. His conducting could be idiosyncratic (especially in late Romantic works such as Mahler's symphonies) and on occasion provoked adverse criticism; but he was generally admired for his perceptive skill in a variety of Classical and, especially, contemporary music. He was made a CBE in 1973. (Obituary, The Times, 14 Feb 1994)

NOËL GOODWIN

Schwarz, Thomas (Jakob) (b Heroltovice, northern Moravia, 17 Dec 1695; d Tuchoměřice, nr Prague, 22 Feb 1754). German organ builder, active in Bohemia, Moravia and Silesia. He studied with J.D. Sieber in Brno until 1720, and after that with A. Richter in Bressanone. In 1727 Schwarz became a Jesuit lay brother and from then on he carried out work in various houses of the order, building organs at the Collegium Clementinum, Prague; St Ignatius, Jihlava (1732); Bohosudov (1734); Litoměřice (1736); Głogów (1741); Jesuit Church, Brno (1744); and three organs at St Nicholas in the Little Quarter, Prague (1745–8; three manuals, 43 stops; one manual, 13 stops; two manuals, 17 stops), of which the third survives. His organ in Jihlava and the case of his organ at Chomutov (1727) also survive. His last work was the organ in Tuchoměřice (1754), finished in 1755 by Vojtěch Jan Beer. His organs are typical examples of late Baroque work in Bohemia and Moravia.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ČSHS; MGG1 (R. Quoika)
J. Gartner: Kurze Belehrung über die innere Einrichtung der Orgeln (Prague, 1832)
L. Burgemeister: Der Orgelbau in Schlesien (Strasbourg, 1925, enlarged 2/1973)
V. Němec: Pražské varhany (Prague, 1944)
R. Quoika: 'Fr. Thomas Schwarz SJ (1695–1754) und der Orgelbau der Gesellschaft Jesu in Böhmen', KJb, xxxix (1955), 94–107
A. Reichling: 'Mährische Orgelbauer in Südtirol', Organa Austriaca, ii (1978), 64–75
J. Sehnal: 'Varhanáři na Moravě, 1500–1880: II: M-Z', ČMm, lxv (1980), 93–139
A. Toriser: 'Die Orgelbauerfamilie Richter aus Linz', Historiches Jb der Stadt Linz (1997), 137–41

HANS KLOTZ/JIŘÍ SEHNAL

Schwarz, Vera (b Agram [now Zagreb], 10 July 1888; d Vienna, 4 Dec 1964). Croatian soprano. She studied in Vienna and made her début in operetta at the Theater an der Wien in 1908. Her clear voice and good looks quickly brought her leading roles such as Rosalinde (Die Fledermaus). She graduated to opera, first at Hamburg, then with the Berlin Staatsoper, and in 1921 at Vienna, where she had a great success as Tosca. Known as 'the poor man's Jeritza', she sang in a repertory ranging from Countess Almaviva to Aida, Ariadne, Marietta (Die tote Stadt) and even Carmen. In 1927 she sang in the Viennese première of Jonny spielt auf and in the Berlin première of Lehár's Der Zarewitsch. This marked the beginning of a noted partnership with Richard Tauber in Lehár operettas. In 1938 at short notice she appeared at Glyndebourne as Lady Macbeth, where her acting was found 'outstandingly impressive' though her voice sounded tired. She spent the next ten years in the USA, singing and later teaching, and returned to Europe in 1948 to give classes at Salzburg and Vienna. Her versatility, as well as a less than perfect technical control over a fine but hard-worked voice, is well illustrated on records.

J.B. STEANE

Schwarzendorf, Johann Paul Aegidius. See MARTINI, JEAN-PAUL-GILLES.

Schwarzerd, Philipp. See MELANCHTHON, PHILIPP.

Schwarzkopf, (Olga Maria) Elisabeth (Friederike) (b Jarotschin [now Jarocin], Posen province, 9 Dec 1915). German soprano. The outstanding lieder singer of the postwar decades, pre-eminent among women as was Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau among men (the two joined in memorable recitals of Wolf's Italian and Spanish songbooks), and an operatic artist in whom personal beauty, beauty of tone and line, and rare musical intelligence were combined. Schwarzkopf, the highly educated daughter of a classics master, entered the Berlin Hochschule für Musik in 1934, studying voice with Lula Mysz-Gmeiner (but for a year only; the celebrated lieder singer wished to make a contralto of her). In 1938 she joined the Berlin Städtische Oper, making her début as a Flowermaiden and soon graduating from second-soprano roles to Adele, Musetta, Zerbinetta etc. Recordings from this period show a rather dark middle voice and a brilliant coloratura top. She became a pupil of Maria Ivogün, whom she regards as her real teacher. After studying lieder with Ivogün and Ivogün's husband, the accompanist Michael Raucheisen, Schwarzkopf gave a very successful début recital in 1942 in the Beethoven Saal, Berlin. Karl Böhm invited her to join the Vienna Staatsoper, and after the war it was as a leading member of this troupe that she made her Covent Garden début (Donna Elvira, and Marzelline in Fidelio) in 1947. Invited to join the newly founded Covent Garden company, she remained with it for five seasons, singing not only in the German repertory (Pamina, Susanna, Eva, Sophie) but also Violetta, Gilda, Mimì, Butterfly, and Massenet's Manon – all in English. The voice became a lustrous, powerful lyric soprano, full-toned, warm and flexible, and her international reputation grew. At the Salzburg Festival (début in 1947, Mozart's Susanna) she appeared most years until 1964; at La Scala (début in 1949, Countess Almaviva) most years until 1963; with the San Francisco Opera (début in 1955, Marschallin) most years until 1964. Internationally she was sought as, above all, a peerless Fiordiligi, Countess Almaviva, Elvira and Marschallin (Metropolitan début as the last, 1963; Elvira, 1964), but her repertory ranged from Mélisande, Marguerite, and Iole in Handel's Hercules, all at La Scala, to Mařenka in an English Bartered Bride in San Francisco. She retired from the stage after singing the Marschallin in Brussels in 1972.

In most major musical centres, Schwarzkopf's lieder recital was an annual event eagerly awaited and attended. In concert, her repertory embraced the Bach Passions, oratorios of Handel and Haydn, Beethoven's choral works, the Requiems of Verdi and Brahms, and Tippett's A Child of our Time. In 1975 she made a farewell recital tour of the USA, but she continued to give occasional recitals in Europe.

In 1951 Schwarzkopf created the role of Anne Trulove in Stravinsky's The Rake's Progress in Venice. In 1953, in Switzerland, she was the Leonore of some concert performances of Fidelio under Karajan. And although Italian opera played a relatively small part in her career after she left Covent Garden, one notable exception was her inimitably merry, dexterous Alice Ford in Verdi's Falstaff (Milan, Salzburg, Vienna) – happily captured on disc, as was her Bayreuth Eva of 1951. Schwarzkopf's fame was furthered by many excellent recordings; in 1953 she married Walter Legge, artistic director of EMI records, and the two perfectionists combined to record not only a great deal of her wide concert, recital and theatre repertory but also some Johann Strauss (ii) and Lehár operetta heroines. Richard Strauss's Ariadne, Arabella (in excerpt) and Countess (Capriccio), and his Four Last Songs, are among her best recorded performances, as are numerous Wolf songs.

All Schwarzkopf's interpretation and execution was marked by great care for detail; the care was often apparent, and she did not escape charges of over-inflection and artfulness, particularly in later years when the voice had lost its earlier freedom. Yet even then she could reveal the subtleties of an intricate song such as Wolf's Wer rief dich denn? in a way that made simpler performances seem but half-realized. In an inspiring series of masterclasses (Juilliard School, 1976, and then elsewhere), she and Legge strove to instil their understanding of style and execution. Among Schwarzkopf's many honours are a Cambridge MusD and Grosses Verdienst-Kreuz der Bundesrepublik Deutschland. She was created a DBE in 1992.

Elisabeth Schwarzkopf

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Moore: Am I Too Loud? (London, 1962), 162ff
A. Porter: A Musical Season (New York, 1974), 93ff
J.B. Steane: The Grand Tradition (London, 1974, 2/1993), 348–53
W. Legge: 'Her Master's Voice', ON, xxxix/22 (1974–5), 9; also in Opera, xxvii (1976), 316–24
E. Greenfield: 'Elisabeth Schwarzkopf', Gramophone, liv (1976), 555, 751
L'avant-scène opéra (1983) [whole issue; incl. discography]
A. Sanders and J.B. Steane: Elisabeth Schwarzkopf: a Career on Record (London, 1995) [incl. discography]
A. Jefferson: Elisabeth Schwarzkopf (London, 1996)

ANDREW PORTER

Schwebung (i) (Ger.). See under ORGAN STOP (Celeste, Tremulant). See also TREMULANT.

Schwebung (ii) (Ger.). A type of ornament. See BEBUNG, (2).

Schwebungen (Ger.). See BEATS.

Schwedler, Maximilian (b Hirschberg [now Jelenia Góra, Poland], 31 March 1853; d Leipzig, 16 Jan 1940). German flautist, teacher and inventor. He performed as principal flautist in the Gewandhaus Orchestra from 1881 to 1917, and taught at the Leipzig Conservatory from 1908 to 1932. Schwedler was the last major exponent of the conical-bore 'simple-system' flute, whose advantages he strove to retain whilst matching the manifest advantages of Boehm's 1847 system. In 1885 he designed the 'Schwedler-Kruspe flute', built for him by F.W. KRUSPE. In 1898 Schwedler designed his 'Reformflöte', collaborating with F.W. Kruspe's son, Carl jr (established since 1893 in Leipzig), which he later improved in 1912. Among improved features of these models were head-joint in metal, redesigned embouchure-hole and a mechanism to facilitate the fingering of F/F♯. After a rift with Krupse, Schwedler's later models were made from 1917 by Moritz-Max Mönnig (1875–1949), the last of which Hindemith dubbed 'the six-cylinder flute', because of its technical complexity. These developments are documented in his Katechismus (1897), a treatise on his aesthetic of flute-playing, and its two later revisions.

Schwedler was highly esteemed as executant; in February 1886 Brahms praised his 'besonders volltönenden, schönen und kräftigen Ton' after the Leipzig première of the composer's Fourth Symphony. His interests in early music were reflected in a pioneering performance on one-keyed traverso with gamba and cembalo in 1892 and in his numerous editions of early flute repertory. As flute reformer, his instruments failed in Germany to displace the ubiquitous 'Meyerflöte'. A long and distinguished career ended sadly when in 1940 he took his own life.

See also FLUTE, §II, 4(iii)(c).

WRITINGS

Katechismus der Flöte und des Flötenspiels: ein Lehrbuch fur Flötenbläser (Leipzig, 1897, 2/1910, 3/1923 as Flöte und Flötenspiel: ein Lehrbuch für Flötenbläser); Eng. trans. in J.R. Bailey: Schwedler's Flute and Flute Playing: Translation and Study of Late Nineteenth-Century German Performance Practice (DMA diss., Northwestern U., 1987)

Des Flötenspiels erster Lehrmeister: theoretisch praktische Flötenschule allen Anfängern im Flötenspiel gewidmet (Heilbronn, 1899)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (H.-P. Schmid); Waterhouse-LangwillI
E. Maske: 'Maximilian Schwedler anlässlich seiner 40 jährigen Tätigkeit in Leipzig', ZfM, Jg.88 (1921), 544–5
L. de Lorenzo: My Complete Story of the Flute (New York, 1951, enlarged 2/1992)

WILLIAM WATERHOUSE

Schwegel [Schwiegel, Swegel] (i) (Ger.). The pipe of the PIPE AND TABOR (see also GALOUBET).

Schwegel (ii) (Ger.). See under ORGAN STOP.

Schweher, Christoph [Hecyrus, Christoph] (b Český Krumlov, 1520/21; d Prague, 1593). German composer and hymnologist living in Bohemia. He studied at Leipzig University, and from 1541 to 1558 he was a teacher and headmaster at the grammar school in České Budějovice. He then served as a town clerk in the same town until in 1569 he became a Catholic priest. In 1572 he became priest of České Budějovice and in the following year of Chomutov and Kadaň. Schweher returned to České Budějovice as dean in 1583 and remained there until 1593 when he was appointed canon of the chapter of Prague Cathedral. He died, however, in the same year.

Schweher's musical works include Veteres ac piae cantiones (Nuremberg, 1561), a collection of 63 settings of Latin and German texts for use in grammar schools. This is the earliest extant source for 12 German sacred songs. Most of the settings are of Schweher's own words. During the 1560s Schweher was in contact with Johannes Leisentrit and provided him with texts for 25 hymns published in his German Catholic hymnbook in Bautzen in 1567. Schweher's own hymnbook, Die Christliche Gebet- und Gesäng (Prague, 1581), was the first German Catholic hymnbook published in Bohemia. It contains 52 hymns, 28 with musical notation. Hymnological analysis has shown that nine of the melodies were taken from Czech models not preserved elsewhere.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Wolkan: Böhmens Anteil an der deutschen Literatur des XVI. Jahrhunderts (Prague, 1890–94), i, 93–4

W. Bäumker: Das katholische deutsche Kirchenlied, iii (Freiburg, 1891), 352

K. Pletzer: 'Tomáš Babler a Kryštof Hecyrus: dva českobudějovičtí literáti z 16. století' [Babler and Hecyrus: two 16th-century literati from České Budějovice], Jihočeský sborník historický, xxvii (1968), 1–9

W. Lipphardt: 'Das erste in Böhmen gedruckte katholische Gesangbuch Prag 1581 und sein Verfasser Christoph Hecyrus aus Budweis', Musica bohemica et europaea: Brno V 1970, 33–45

M. Härting: 'Die kirchlichen Gesänge in der Volkssprache', Geschichte der katholischen Kirchenmusik, ed. K.G. Fellerer (Kassel, 1972–6), i, 453–63

W. Lipphardt: 'Das katholische deutsche Kirchenlied in den böhmischen Ländern während des 16. Jahrhunderts', De musica disputationes pragenses, ii (1974), 20–55

JIŘÍ SEHNAL

Schweiger, Georg. See SCHWAIGER, GEORG.

Schweitzer, Albert (b Kaysersberg, Upper Alsace, 14 Jan 1875; d Lambarené, Gabon, 4 Sept 1965). Alsatian organist and musicologist. After receiving piano lessons at the age of five from his father, he studied the organ and, while still at school, had private music lessons from Eugen Münch, who gave him an early introduction to Bach's work. At Strasbourg University (1893–9) he studied theology and philosophy, continuing his musical education privately. He perfected his organ technique under Widor in Paris, and played the organ under Ernst Münch in Strasbourg in the performances of Bach cantatas and Passions with the choir of St Wilhelm. He studied music theory with Jacobsthal in Strasbourg, took piano lessons with Philipp and Marie Jaëll in Paris and participated in Stumpf's studies of the psychology of sound in Berlin. In 1896 he paid his first visit to Bayreuth, where he established friendly relations with Cosima and Siegfried Wagner. His aversion to the modern organ as an instrument for the interpretation of Bach's polyphonic music dates from the same year and as a result he devoted himself to a careful study of organs and organ building.

Schweitzer's most important publications in the field of music appeared in the period 1905–13 when he was organist of the Paris Bach Society, both a practising minister and theology lecturer at Strasbourg University and, at the same time, studying medicine in preparation for his first journey to Lambarené, where he founded his famous hospital in 1913. When in Europe on leave from Lambarené, he engaged in intensive concert activities in most countries, always writing the programme and record notes himself. He wrote an epoch-making French study of Bach (1905), in which his principal concern was the interpretation of the essence of Bach's music and an inquiry into authentic performance techniques. He also specialized in German and French organ building of the period 1850–80, asserting that French organ builders excelled over the German inasmuch as they remained in many instances true to old building practices. At the 1909 IMS congress he helped write the manifesto Internationales Regulativ für den Orgelbau, which marked a turning-point in organ building and became the basis of the later Orgelbewegung. His last musical publication was the historic edition, commissioned for American organists, of Bach's complete organ works, which contains, among comprehensive introductions dealing with performing techniques, a treatise on ornamentation in volumes vi–viii.

WRITINGS

Eugène Munch, 1857–1898 (Mulhouse, 1898) [pubd anonymously]; Eng. trans. in Joy (1951) as 'My First Organ Teacher', 9–24

Auschlag: neues Klavierstudium auf physiologischer Grundlage (Leipzig, 1902) [Schweitzer's anon. trans. of M. Jaëll: Le toucher: enseignement du piano basé sur la physiologie, Paris, 1895]

J.S. Bach, le musicien-poète (Leipzig, 1905; Ger. trans., enlarged 1908; Eng. trans., 1911/R)

'Französische und deutsche Orgelbaukunst und Orgelkunst', Die Musik, v/3 (1905–6), 75–90, 139–54; pubd separately, rev., Leipzig, 1906/R, enlarged 2/1927; Eng. trans., 1984; see also Eng. trans. in Joy (1951) as 'The Art of Organ Building and Organ Playing in Germany and France', 138–77 and 'The 1927 Epilogue', 200–17

'Die Reform unseres Orgelbaues auf Grund einer allgemeinen Umfrage bei Orgelspielern und Orgelbauern in deutschen und romanischen Ländern', IMusSCR III: Vienna 1909, 581–607; Eng. trans. in Joy (1951) as 'The Organ that Europe Wants', 255–89

with F.X. Mathias: Internationales Regulativ für Orgelbau', IMusSCR III: Vienna 1909, 636–79

'Warum es so schwer ist in Paris einen guten Chor zusammenzubringen: eine sozial-musikalische Studie', Die Musik, ix/4 (1909–10), 23–30; Eng. trans. in Joy (1951) as 'The Chorus in Paris', 48–58

'Zur Reform des Orgelbaus', Monatschrift für Gottesdienst und kirchliche Kunst, xxxii (1927), 148–54; Eng. trans. in Joy (1951) as 'Reform in Organ Building', 217–24

'Gutachten über die Orgel zu St. Jacobi in Hamburg', in K. Mehrkens: Die Schnitger-Orgel in der Hauptkirche St. Jacobi zu Hamburg (Kassel, 1930), 15

Aus meinem Leben und Denken (Leipzig, 1931; Eng. trans., 1931/R; new Eng. trans., 1990)

'Der runde Violinbogen', SMz, lxxiii (1933), 197–203; Eng. trans. in Joy (1951) as 'The Round Violin Bow', 231–42; enlarged as 'Der für Bachs Werke für Violine Solo erforderte Geigenbogen', Bach-Gedenkschrift, ed. K. Matthaei (Zürich, 1950), 75–83

'Mes souvenirs sur Cosima Wagner', Alsace française, xiii/7 (1933), 124–5; Eng. trans. in Joy (1951) as 'My Recollections of Cosima Wagner', 58–62; enlarged as 'Erinnerungen an Cosima und Siegfried Wagner', Bayreuther Festspiele 1955: Der fliegende Holländer, 4–16 [with Eng. and Fr. trans.]

'Souvenirs d'Ernest Münch', Le choeur de St. Guillaume de Strasbourg, ed. E. Jung (Strasbourg, 1947), 51–62; Eng. trans. in Joy (1951) as 'Ernest Munch, as I Remember him', 31–4

'Souvenirs et appréciations', Un grand musicien français, Marie-Joseph Erb: sa vie et son oeuvre, ed. T. Gérold (Strasbourg, 1948), 83–8; Eng. trans. in Joy (1951) as 'Marie-Joseph Erb', 183–6

ed. E.R. Jacobi: Albert Schweitzers nachgelassene Manuskripte über die Verzierungen Dei Johann Sebastian Bach (Leipzig, 1984)

G. Fischer, ed.: Albert Schweitzer: Aus meinem Leben: Selbstdarstellung und Erinnerungen (Berlin, 1988)

S. Hanheide, ed.: Albert Schweitzer: Aufsätze zur Musik (Kassel, 1988)

H. Schützeichel: Albert Schweitzer: Briefe und Erinnerungen an Musiker (Berne, 1989) [incl. 'Albert Schweitzers Schriften zur Musik', 186–91]

H. Schützeichel: Albert Schweitzer: Die Orgelwerke Johann Sebastian Bachs: Vorworte zu den 'Sämtlichen Orgelwerken' (Hildesheim, 1995)

EDITIONS

Johann Sebastian Bach: Complete Organ Works: a Critico-Practical Edition (New York, 1912–67) [i–v (1912–14) with C.M. Widor; vi–viii (1954–67) with E. Nies-Berger; vi contains 'The Ornaments in Bach's Organ Compositions']

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Aus meiner Kindheit und Jugendzeit (Munich, 1924/R; Eng. trans., 1924, as Memoirs of Childhood and Youth; new Eng. trans., 1997)
A.A. Roback, J.S. Bixler and G. Sarton, eds: Albert Schweitzer Jubilee Book (Cambridge, MA, 1945) [incl. L. Schrade: 'Schweitzer's Aesthetics: an Interpretation of Bach', 173; A.T. Davison: 'The Transcendentalism of Albert Schweitzer', 199–211; C. Weinreich: 'Albert Schweitzer's Contribution to Organ-Building', 215–25; A. Ehlers: 'Musical Days with Albert Schweitzer', 227]
G. Seaver: Albert Schweitzer: the Man and his Mind (London, 1947, 6/1969)
G. Bret: 'Bach, Schweitzer et la Société J.-S. Bach de Paris', Saisons d'Alsace, ii (1950), 155
C.R. Joy, ed. and trans.: Music in the Life of Albert Schweitzer, with Selections from his Writings (New York, 1951/R)
R. Amadou: Albert Schweitzer: éléments de biographie et de bibliographie (Paris, 1952)
J. Feschotte: Albert Schweitzer (Paris, 1952)
R. Minder: 'Schweitzer: professeur de piano', Hommage à Albert Schweitzer pour son quatre-vingtième anniversaire (Paris, 1955), 75–80
W. Picht: Albert Schweitzer: Wesen und Bedeutung (Hamburg, 1960; Eng. trans., 1964)
J. Müller-Blattau: 'Albert Schweitzers Weg zur Bach-Orgel und zu einer neuen Bach-Auffassung', Albert Schweitzer: sein Denken und sein Weg, ed. H.W. Bähr (Tübingen, 1962), 243–61
R. Quoika: Ein Orgelkolleg mit Albert Schweitzer (Freising, 1970)
G. Marshall and D. Poling: Schweitzer: a Biography (London and New York, 1971)
E.R. Jacobi: Albert Schweitzer und die Musik (Wiesbaden, 1975)
B. Billeter: 'Albert Schweitzers Einfluss auf den europäischen Orgelbau am Beginn des 20. Jahrhunderts', Acta organologica, xv (1981), 168–79
H.W. Bähr, ed.: Albert Schweitzer: Leben, Werk und Denken, 1905–1965, Mitgeteilt in seinen Briefen (Heidelberg, 1987)
H. Schützeichel: 'Zur Geschichte der von Widor und Schweitzer herausgegebene Gesamtausgabe Bachscher Orgelwerke', Ars organi, xxxv (1987), 159–67
H. Schützeichel: 'Orgelbau als Kulturreform: Albert Schweitzer in neuer Sicht', Orgel-Colloquium: Berlin 1988, 45–64
C. Günzler and others, eds.: Albert Schweitzer heute: Brennpunkte seines Denkens (Tübingen, 1990) [incl. S. Hanheide: 'Schweitzers musikästhetische Ambitionen: zur Bedeutung der ästhetischen Reflexionen während der Strassburger Jahre', 305–18; H. Schützeichel: 'Musik und Ethik: Anmerkungen zu Albert Schweitzer als musiker', 319–46]
S. Hanheide: Johann Sebastian Bach im Verständnis Albert Schweitzers (Munich, 1990)
H. Schützeichel: Die Konzerttätigkeit Albert Schweitzers (Berne, 1991)
H. Schützeichel: Die Orgel im Leben und Denken Albert Schweitzers (Murrhardt, 1991; suppl. 1992) [incl. 'Schriften Albert Schweitzers', 357–63]
M. Murray: Albert Schweitzer, Musician (Brookfield, VT, 1994)

ERWIN R. JACOBI

Schweitzer, Anton (b Coburg, bap. 6 June 1735; d Gotha, 23 Nov 1787). German composer. As a young man he served the Duke of Hildburghausen as chamber musician. To groom him in composition, the duke sent him to Bayreuth (1758) and later Italy (1764–6), after which he promoted him to Kapellmeister. When financial pressures forced the duke to dissolve his opera company in 1769, Schweitzer found employment as music director of the itinerant theatrical company of Abel Seyler, which was just beginning to add German operas to its spoken offerings.

Schweitzer's first work for the Seyler company, the one-act occasional piece Elysium (1770), gained considerable popularity as a musical afterpiece and was published in vocal score in 1774. He composed other celebratory pieces on mythological themes, but also comic operas. His re-setting of the popular musical farce Der lustige Schuster is lost, but surviving arias from Walmir und Gertraud show the italianate clarity and verve of Schweitzer's comic style. Seyler sent his music director on an expedition to recruit new singers in order to expand and elevate his musical productions in directions towards which Schweitzer's music clearly pointed. By a stroke of good fortune, the music-loving Duchess Anna Amalia of Saxe-Weimar engaged Seyler's company at this time (1771), and Schweitzer's ambitions were at last given full rein.

A heated rivalry with the duchess's leading musician (later Kapellmeister), Ernst Wilhelm Wolf, flared up immediately. Through a series of bold new works composed in collaboration with major writers, Schweitzer quickly established himself as the superior figure. While Wolf continued composing the Hillerian comic operas in which the duchess delighted, Schweitzer turned to the witty, more urbane tone of F.W. Gotter's farce Die Dorfgala (1772). On a more elevated plane, he composed not only celebratory dramas but also several dramatic ballets for the birthdays of the duchess and her sons, Karl Eugen and Konstantin.

Two other experiments at Weimar opened new vistas for the German theatre. In May 1772 the Seyler company gave the première of the first German melodrama, Schweitzer's setting of a translation of Rousseau's Pygmalion. A year later it was able to mount a serious five-act opera in German, Christoph Martin Wieland's Alceste, the achievement for which Schweitzer is chiefly remembered. Theatrical collaboration between Schweitzer and Wieland had begun in mid-1772 with the dramatic ballet Idris und Zenide and continued that year with two dramatic prologues of Metastasian stamp, Aurora and Die Wahl des Herkules. When Wieland proposed the Alceste project to the duchess, he insisted that Schweitzer and not Wolf compose it.

A brilliant success at Weimar, Alceste made its way quickly to many other German stages, establishing at a stroke seria-style opera in German as a musical reality. Out of practical necessity, the singing roles had been limited to just four, but the virtuoso part of Parthenia (Alcestis' sister and confidante), written for the brilliant voice of Josepha Hellmuth, yields to no other opera of the day in difficulty. Elsewhere, the moderation of tone that Wieland thought proper to dramatic music predominates in the arias and extensive obbligato recitatives of Alcestis, Admetus and even the champion of virtue Heracles. Musically, the score is northern – expressively rich but monochromatic and formally conservative, without so much as a trace of Gluck's inspiration. Its high points are poignant, reflective moments in the obbligato recitatives of Alcestis and Admetus.

After Alceste Schweitzer began work on a new melodrama, Ariadne auf Naxos, adapted from a cantata text by H.W. von Gerstenberg by a member of the Seyler company, Johann Christian Brandes, in order to display the talents of his wife Charlotte. The work was only partly complete when a fire destroyed the Hoftheater at Weimar in May 1774. The Seyler troupe, by now one of the most respected in Germany, was immediately engaged by Duke Ernst II at the nearby court of Gotha. There Schweitzer found a far more formidable rival than Wolf in the court Kapellmeister Georg Benda. Benda supplanted Schweitzer almost immediately as the chief purveyor of important new dramatic compositions. The first of these, tellingly, was Brandes's melodrama Ariadne auf Naxos (27 January 1775); it eclipsed the rather tame, if lyrical, specimen in the same genre that Schweitzer produced that April, Polyxena, to a text by the Weimar courtier F.J. Bertuch.

As Benda scored one triumph after another, creative inertia seemed to overcome Schweitzer. His artistic ties remained firmly with the Weimar court, the scene of his greatest triumphs. In 1775 he set Goethe's early German libretto, Erwin und Elmire, but the opera was not performed at Gotha. When the Seyler company left Gotha, he elected not to travel with it, but remained as music director of the Gotha Hoftheater, which Duke Ernst II founded to replace the departed troupe in 1775. That March Schweitzer's incidental music to Goethe's tragedy Clavigo made a deep impression. Other than that he composed nothing for the new enterprise except for the brief occasional piece with which it was inaugurated, Das Fest der Thalia.

Schweitzer's main compositional challenge during these years came from elsewhere. The success of Alceste in 1775 at Schwetzingen and Mannheim prompted the Palatine court to commission another serious opera from Wieland and Schweitzer in 1777. Possibly the example of Holzbauer's Günther von Schwarzburg induced Wieland to contemplate a more full-blooded drama. Against his own inclinations, he worked hard to make his Rosamunde 'everything that a true Mannheim opera should be'. Schweitzer composed it with enthusiasm, and travelled to Mannheim in December 1777 to conduct rehearsals. The death of the Bavarian Elector Maximilian III Joseph on 30 December forestalled the performance, however, and the opera was not produced until two years later, at the Mannheim Nationaltheater, without success.

After Rosamunde Schweitzer wrote nothing more for the stage. He remained in Gotha as Benda's successor after the latter resigned as the duke's Kapellmeister in 1778. The Hoftheater was disbanded in September of the following year. Early in 1780 Benda remarked acidly in a letter to the composer F.W. Rust: 'For the labours one now demands of a Kapellmeister here my successor Schweitzer is quite good, for he has nothing to do and does just that'.

Although Die Dorfgala showed how well Schweitzer could acquit himself in 'the valley of the farce' (in the words of its librettist, Gotter), his fame was made by devoting himself to serious opera, both in the occasional pieces he was required to compose during his first years with Seyler, and in his two through-composed operas, Alceste and Rosamunde. It was Alceste alone, however, that sustained his reputation to the end of the century, and that inspired other composers to establish opera of a more or less Metastasian character on the German stage. Both the libretto and the music evoked censure as well as praise. The young Goethe was revolted that Wieland could claim Euripides as his model for such 'meaningless pap'. Mozart found Schweitzer hopeless as a composer for the voice and the tone of the opera dreary. Gerber summed up the opera's fortunes in 1792: 'Many and diverse things have the critics found to fault in it, and indeed not without cause. In spite of this, it has now held up on our German stage for 16 years, always with the same enthusiastic praise and applause'.

WORKS

STAGE

Der Wucherer ein Edelmann (incid music, M.A. le Grand), Celle, 9 Nov 1769, lost

Walmir und Gertraud, *c*1769 (Operette, 3, J.B. Michaelis), 2 arias pubd in Theater-Kalender (Gotha, 1776)

Elysium (Vorspiel mit Gesang, 1, J.G. Jacobi), Hanover, Schloss, 18 Jan 1770, D-Dl, LEm, GB-Lcm (vs), vs (Königsberg, 1774)

Der lustige Schuster (komische Oper, 3, C.F. Weisse, after C. Coffey: The Merry Cobler), Celle, 21 May 1770, lost

Apollo unter den Hirten (Vorspiel mit Gesang, 1, Jacobi), Halberstadt, 4 June 1770, *RUS-KAu

Herkules auf dem Oeta (Spl, J.B. Michaelis), Hanover, 4 June 1771, also attrib. J.G. Grafe, J.A. Schmittbaur, lost

Die Stufen des menschlichen Alters (Vorspiel mit Gesang, J.C. Musaeus), Weimar, 24 Oct 1771, lost

Der Bürger ein Edelmann (incid music, Molière), Hanover, 1771, lost

Richard III (incid music, C.F. Weisse), 1771, lost

Pygmalion (Melodram, 1, J.-J. Rousseau, trans. J.C.F. Schmidt), Weimar, Hof, 13 May 1772, lost

Die Dorfgala (komische Operette, 3, F.W. Gotter), Weimar, Hof, 18 May 1772; rev. version (2), Hamburg, Gänsemarkt, 21 Jan 1779, D-Bsb, Dl, F, US-Wc, vs (Leipzig, 1777), aria pubd in Theater-Kalender (Gotha, 1774)

Aurora (Vorspiel, 1, C.M. Wieland), Weimar, Hof, 24 Oct 1772, *D-LEm

Philemon und Baucis (incid music, C.G. Pfeffel), 1772, lost

Ariadne auf Naxos, 1772–3 (Duodrama, 1, J.C. Brandes, after H.W. von Gerstenberg), inc.

Alceste (Spl, 5, Wieland, after Euripides: Alkestis), Weimar, Hof, 28 May 1773, A-Wn (facs. in GoB, iii, 1986), Wgm, D-Bsb, Dl, Ds, LEm, F-Pc, US-Wc, vs/short score (Leipzig, 1774)

Die Wahl des Herkules (lyrisches Drama, 1, Wieland, after Xenophon: Memoirs), Weimar, Hof, 4 Sept 1773, D-Bsb

Polyxena (lyrisches Monodram, 1, F.J. Bertuch), Gotha, Schloss Friedenstein, 7 April 1775, *F (Weimar, 1793)

Das Fest der Thalia (Vorspiel mit Gesang, H.A.O. Reichard), Gotha, 2 Oct 1775, lib pubd, music lost

Erwin und Elmire, 1775 (Schauspiel mit Gesang, 2, J.W. von Goethe, after O. Goldsmith: The Vicar of Wakefield), unperf., aria pubd in Theater-Kalender (Gotha, 1777)

Clavigo (incid music, Goethe), Gotha, 16 March 1776, lost

Rosamunde, 1777 (Spl, 3, Wieland, after J. Addison), Mannheim, National, 20 Jan 1780, Bsb, US-Wc

Other lost works: 46 ballets, 1772–5 [for titles, see Maurer, 68–9]; arrs. of 3 ops by Grétry, all before 1776

OTHER VOCAL

Mass, C, 4vv, insts, D-Bsb; Grabgesang (Reichard) (Gotha, 1783)

Cants: Furibonde tempeste (J.F. von Hildburghausen), 1769, *RUS-KAu; Hallelujah Heil und Kraft (E.F.K. von Sachsen-Hildburghausen), before 1770, D-Bsb; Ein feierliches Kirchenstück, 1787, frag.; Kommet her und schauet

INSTRUMENTAL

3 syms., G, D, E♭, D-RUl, SWl, WRdn, 1 pubd (Amsterdam, 1796); 6 syms. and 1 pf trio announced in Breitkopf catalogue, 1836

Pf works in contemporary anthologies pubd Gotha and Leipzig

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GerberL; GerberNL

C.M. Wieland: 'Briefe an einen Freund [F.H. Jacobi] über das deutsche Singspiel, Alceste', Der Teutsche Merkur, i (1773), no.1, pp.34–72; no.3, pp.223–43

E.C. Dressler: Gedanken, die Vorstellung der Alceste, ein deutsches ernsthaftes Singspiel betreffend (Frankfurt and Leipzig, 1774)

[G.J. Vogler]: 'Ueber die Musik der Oper Rosamunde', Rheinische Beiträge zur Gelehrsamkeit, no.6 (Mannheim, 1780); repr. in Klein

A. Klein: Ueber Wielands 'Rosamund', Schweizers Musik und die Vorstellung dieses Singspiels in Mannheim (Frankfurt and Leipzig, 1781)

E. Istel: Die Entstehung des deutschen Melodramas (Berlin, 1906)

J. Maurer: Anton Schweitzer als dramatischer Komponist (Leipzig, 1912)

A.A. Abert: 'Der Geschmackswandel auf der Opernbühne, am Alkestis-Stoff dargestellt', Mf, vi (1953), 214–35

J. van der Veen: Le mélodrame musical de Rousseau au Romantisme (The Hague, 1955)

T. Bauman: 'Wieland's Aufklärungsoper', IMSCR XII: Berkeley 1977, 245–9
R. Würtz: 'Anton Schweitzer and Christoph Martin Wieland: the Theory of the Eighteenth Century Singspiel', Crosscurrents and the Mainstream of Italian Serious Opera: London, ON, 1982 [SMC, vii (1982)], 148–54
R. Würtz: 'Christoph Martin Wieland's Versuch (1775)', Acta mozartiana, xxxi (1984), 55–61
T. Bauman: North German Opera in the Age of Goethe (Cambridge, 1985)
T. Bauman: 'Courts and Municipalities in North Germany', Man & Music: the Classical Era, ed. N. Zaslaw (London, 1989), 240–67
K. Hortschansky: 'Musiktheater in Mannheim als gestelltes Bild', Mozart und Mannheim: Mannheim 1991, 65–80
P.E. Corneilson: Opera at Mannheim, 1770–1778 (diss., U. of North Carolina, 1992)

THOMAS BAUMAN/R

Schweiz (Ger.). See SWITZERLAND.

Schweizelsperg [Schweizelsberg, Schweizelsperger], Casimir [Caspar] (b Rosenheim, Upper Bavaria, 3 Dec 1668; d after 1722). German composer. He held the title of 'court musician' in a document recording his marriage in Stuttgart to Anna Barbara Leder on 2 November 1706. Records also show that on 3 July 1708 he was employed as a performing musician under Kapellmeister Rau at the court of Ansbach. Between 1712 and 1714 Schweizelsperg served as Kapellmeister for the private chapel of the cathedral provost and later for Prince-Bishop Johann Philipp Franz von Schönborn in Würzburg and Frankfurt. Between 1714 and 1717 he composed a number of operas for the court of Durlach-Karlsruhe. In 1717 he and his wife, an opera singer, established their own opera company in Coburg, which gave a highly successful guest season in Nuremberg in 1719. From about 1720 he was Kapellmeister for the prince-bishop, Cardinal Damian Hugo von Schönborn in Bruchsal (Speyer), a position he seems to have lost in 1722 after some difficulties with the clergy regarding his 'morality'. Only one of his works is partly extant, the opera Die romanische Lucretia. According to Baser, Schweizelsperg's operatic style is similar to that of Reinhard Keiser and reminiscent of other Hamburg opera composers at the turn of the 18th century.

WORKS

OPERAS

all performed in Durlach and lost unless otherwise stated

Artemisia und Cleomedes, 1716; Die romanische Lucretia, 1716, revived Nuremberg, 1719; some arias in D-KA; Die unglückselige Liebe zwischen der egyptischen Königin Cleopatra und die romischen Trium-Vir Antonio, 1716; Diomedes, 1717

Der verstellte Dorindo, 1712, revived Nuremberg, 1719, authorship not established; Die in ihrem Christentum standhaft gebliebene Märtyrerin Margaretha, *c*1714, revived Nuremberg, 1719, authorship not established

INSTRUMENTAL

6 ovs., insts (Augsburg, 1715)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (F. Baser); WaltherML
L. Schiedermair: 'Die Oper an den badischen Höfen des 17. und 18 Jahrhunderts', SIMG, xiv (1912–13), 191–207
H. Rott: Kunst und Künstler am Baden-Durlacher Hof (Karlsruhe, 1917)

GEORGE J. BUELOW

Schweizerische Musikforschende Gesellschaft (Fr. Société Suisse de Musicologie). Swiss musicologial society. It was founded in 1899 as the national section of the Internationale Musikgesellschaft, under the presidency of C.H. Richter, to promote and coordinate musicology in Switzerland and to publish scholarly editions of Swiss music and musicological studies. Between 1916 and 1934 it was known as the Neue Schweizerische Musikgesellschaft; Ernst Mohr was president from 1946 to 1974, when he was succeeded by Ernst Lichtenhahn. The society has six sections, based in Basle, Berne, Zürich, Lucerne, St Gallen and the French-speaking area, and there were about 600 members in 1999. It organizes regular lectures and has its own library and archive of microfilm, housed in CH-Bu. Its publications include volumes in the series Schweizerische Musikdenkmäler, numerous musicological studies and two volumes of Schweizer Beiträge zur Musikwissenschaft (a continuation of the Schweizerisches Jahrbuch für Musikwissenschaft, of which seven volumes appeared, 1924–38). The society collaborated in the complete editions of Goudimel and Senfl.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Refardt: Die Ortsgruppe Basel der Schweizerischen musikforschenden Gesellschaft 1899–1949 (Basle, 1949)

□

Schweizerpfeife [Schweytzer Pfeiffe] (i) (Ger.: 'Swiss pipe'). A Fife associated with Swiss mercenary foot soldiers. The term was used by Agricola (Musica instrumentalis deudsch, 1529) and Praetorius (Syntagma musicum, ii, 2/1619); the latter referred to the same instrument as Feldpfeife. It is known today, especially in the Canton Valois, as Natwarischpfiffe.

Schweizerpfeife (ii) (Ger.). See under ORGAN STOP.

Schweller (Ger.). See SWELL. A Schwellkasten is a swell box; a Jalousieschweller a Venetian swell; and Schwellwerk, a swell organ. Schwellton is a MESSA DI VOCE, i.e. a crescendo and diminuendo sung on a single sustained note.

Schwemmer, Heinrich (b Gumpertshausen bei Hallburg, Lower Franconia, 28 March 1621; d Nuremberg, bur. 31 May 1696). German teacher and composer. After his father's death in 1627, he and his mother fled the ravages of the Thirty Years War. His mother died at Weimar in 1638, after which he was at Coburg until 1641, when he settled in Nuremberg, enrolled at the Sebaldusschule and began to study music with Kindermann. Both of these steps led to positions that he was to hold for the rest of his life: beginning in 1650 he was a teacher in Nuremberg's schools, functioning as a Kantor, though he was never given that title; and beginning probably in 1656 he was Director chori musici, a post he shared with Paul Hainlein. His chief contribution was as a teacher. He and Georg Caspar Wecker (also a pupil of Kindermann) taught Nuremberg's next generation of musicians: Nikolaus Deinl, Johann Krieger, Johann Löhner, Johann Pachelbel, J.B. Schütz and Maximilian Zeidler. After learning singing and the rudiments of music from Schwemmer, the pupils would go to Wecker for keyboard training and composition. Schwemmer's role as a singing teacher is reflected in the fact that all his extant works are vocal. As with Hainlein and Wecker, the bulk of his output consists of sacred strophic songs, most of which he was asked, as Director chori musici, to write for weddings and funerals. Nearly all his other works are either cantatas or choral concertos. Here the general lack of harmonic variety found in German music of the period is partly compensated for by frequent inventive and imaginative contrasts of texture, tone-colour and note values that identify him as a master of the concertato style.

WORKS

printed works published in Nuremberg unless otherwise stated

Siehe! der Gerechte kommet umb, funeral cant., 3vv, 2 vn, va, bc (1659)
Jura mihi curae fuerant [Was recht ist, muss auch recht auf immer fortan bleiben], funeral motet, 1v, 2 vn, va, vc, bc (Altdorf, 1661)
O wie manchen Berg bin ich (Tobias Franck), funeral cant., 5vv, 2 vn, 2 va, vc, bc (1665)
Der Gerechten Seelen sind in Gottes Hand, funeral cant., 5vv, 2 vn, 2 va, bc (1669) [for J.M. Dilherr]
53 sacred lieder, 1v, bc, in collections (1659–91); 10 ed. in Zahn i–v, 1 ed. in WinterfeldEK, ii
Occasional works for weddings and funerals: 9 sacred lieder, 1v, bc; 41 sacred lieder, 1, 2vv, 2–4 str, bc; 16 sacred lieder, 4, 5vv (1656–84); 2 funeral songs, 1v, 3 viols, bc (1661), ed. in MAM, iii (1955)
9 sacred lieder, listed in catalogues, now lost

Deus in nomine tuo (Ps liv), 5vv, 2 vn, 2 tpt, 3 trbn, bc, S-Uu
Halleluja, hodie Christus natus est, 5vv, 2 vn, 2 tpt, 3 trbn, bc, Uu
Jauchtzet Gott alle Land, cant., 5vv, 2 vn, 2 va, vc, bn, bc, dated 1682, Uu
Magnus es Domine, 5vv, 2 vn, 3 va, bc, D-Bsb
Scintilla vel pusilla, cant., 5vv, 2 vn, 2 va, vc, bc, S-Uu (tablature)
Surgite populi clangite buccina, cant., 6vv, 2 tpt, 3 trbn, bc, D-Bsb
Victoria plaudite coelites, 5vv, 2 clarinos, 2 tpt, 2 trbn, bn, timp, bc, dated 1689, Bsb; ed. in DTB, x, Jg.vi/1 (1905)
2 Benedicamus Domino, liturgical responses, 5vv, Nla
3 vocal works, formerly in Lm, now lost (see SIMG, ix, 1907–8, p.618)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GerberNL; ZahnM
Z. Händler: Lebens-Läuffe unterschiedlicher in Nürnbergischen Kirchen- u. Schul-Diensten gestandener Männer (MS, D-Nst Amb. 624.4°), 804
J.J. Carbach: Nürnbergisches Zion, das ist Wahrhaffte Beschreibung aller Kirchen und Schulen in und ausserhalb der Reichsstadt Nürnberg (Nuremberg, 1733)
G.E. Waldau: Nürnbergisches Zion (Nuremberg, 1787)
M. Seiffert: Introduction to DTB, x, Jg.vi/1 (1905/R)
H.E. Samuel: The Cantata in Nuremberg during the Seventeenth Century (Ann Arbor, 1982)

HAROLD E. SAMUEL

Schwencke. German family of musicians.

(1) Christian Friedrich Gottlieb Schwencke [Schwenke] (b Wachenhausen, Harz, 30 Aug 1767; d Hamburg, 27 Oct 1822). Pianist, composer and music editor, son of a bassoonist and Hamburg town musician, Johann Gottlieb Schwencke (1744–1823). He became a proficient pianist at an early age and performed a concerto by his father in Hamburg in 1779. In 1782 he went to Berlin, where he studied with Marpurg and Kirnberger. In 1787–8 he studied at the universities of Leipzig and Halle, and in 1788 succeeded C.P.E. Bach as Hamburg Stadtkantor, a post he held for the rest of his life. He became a contributor to the Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung in 1799. His compositions include incidental music, settings of Klopstock's Vater unser (1790; D-SWl; vs, Leipzig, 1799), performed at the poet's funeral, and the ode Der Frohsinn (AMZ, i, 1799), oratorios and cantatas (several in D-Bsb), two piano concertos, an oboe concerto, three piano sonatas (Halle, 1789), three violin sonatas (Berlin, 1792), six fugues for organ (published in Leipzig) and lieder (many published in Hamburg). He had a keen interest in the music of J.S. Bach, some of whose autographs he owned, and made one of the first editions of Das wohltemperirte Clavier (Bonn, 1801), adding an extra bar (after bar 22) in the first prelude that was perpetuated in several subsequent editions, including Czerny's. His other editions include rescored versions of choral works by Bach and Handel.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. Hobohm: 'Das Rechnungsbuch der hamburgischen Musikdirektoren Telemann, C.Ph.E. Bach und Schwenke', Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach: Frankfurt an der Oder 1988, 70–78
W. Maertens: Georg Philipp Telemanns sogenannte hamburgische Kapitänsmusiken (1723–1765) (Wilhelmshaven, 1988)
R. von Zahn: 'Hamburgs letzter Kirchenmusikdirektor: Epigone, Plagiator oder Opfer seiner Zeit?', Concerto, no.48 (1989), 18–22
R. von Zahn: 'Autographe Johann Sebastian Bachs im Besitz von C.F.G. Schwenke (1767–1822)', Musik und Kirche, lxi (1991), 332–8
H.-J. Schulze: 'Bach-Überlieferung in Hamburg: der Quellenbesitz von Christian Friedrich Gottlieb Schwencke (1767–1822)', BJb 1993, 69–80

(2) Johann Friedrich [Fritz] Schwencke (b Hamburg, 30 April 1792; d Hamburg, 28 Sept 1852). Organist, cellist, clarinettist and composer, son of (1) Christian Friedrich Gottlieb Schwencke. He studied theory and composition with his father and in 1829 became organist of the Nikolaikirche in Hamburg. He had numerous pupils and was a prolific composer and arranger. His most important work is the Choralbuch zum Hamburgischen Gesangbuch (1832); among his other works are cantatas with organ accompaniment and a septet for five cellos, double bass and timpani. He also harmonized many chorales and Russian folksongs, orchestrated Beethoven's Adelaide and Wachtelschlag and arranged works of other composers, including Spohr.

(3) Karl [Carl] Schwencke (b Hamburg, 7 March 1797; d ?Nussdorf, nr Vienna, 7 Jan 1870). Pianist and composer, son of (1) Christian Friedrich Gottlieb Schwencke. At the age of 19 he began a life of travelling; in 1824 he met Beethoven, who wrote the canon Schwenke dich (WoO187) for him. His compositions include a Symphony in D, performed successfully at the Paris Conservatoire in 1843, a mass, a violin sonata and piano music.

(4) Friedrich Gottlieb Schwencke (b Hamburg, 15 Dec 1823; d Hamburg, 11 June 1896). Pianist, organist and composer, son of (2) Johann Friedrich Schwencke. He succeeded his father as organist of the Nikolaikirche and made successful appearances both as an organist and as a pianist in Paris (1855) and elsewhere. His compositions include two fantasies for organ, trumpet, trombones and timpani, sacred songs for female voices and organ, songs and chorale preludes. He re-edited his father's collection of chorales (1886) and collected documents concerning the family's history.

□

Schwerin. City in north Germany, capital of Mecklenburg-Vorpommern. Pre-Christian instruments are the earliest evidence of musical activity in the area. The cathedral was consecrated in 1171, and Bishop Rudolf I founded its choir in 1249. Among the earliest printed music in the city was the Missale swerinense (*c*1500). Under Duke Johann Albrecht I (1526–76) Schwerin became the most important musical centre in north Germany: from 1548 Hieronymus Mors was court and cathedral organist, and in 1563 the duke appointed David Köler as leader of the court orchestra; among the apprentices was Thomas Mancinus, who became Kantor at Wolfenbüttel in 1572. After the duke's death the court was dissolved.

In 1664 Duke Christian Louis I (1623–95), a Catholic convert, married a French duchess and engaged string players who had worked under Lully and who brought the French style to the court. Duke Friedrich Wilhelm (1675–1713) also cultivated this style, appointing a pupil of Lully, J.C.F. Fischer, as Konzertmeister. During the reign of Christian Ludwig II (1683–1756) the first German academy of drama was founded (1751) and the orchestra improved considerably, particularly under A.C. Kunzen, appointed Konzertmeister in 1749. Kunzen's Passion music and cantatas initiated a series of attempts in Schwerin and nearby Ludwigslust to create a German national oratorio style. Ludwig II's son, the pietist Duke Friedrich (1717–85), supported these attempts, but nullified his father's work towards creating a national theatre by prohibiting secular art at court (1756). In 1753 Kunzen was succeeded by J.W. Hertel, a prolific composer who remained in Schwerin when the orchestra moved, together with the court, to Ludwigslust in 1767. He composed numerous oratorios for the twice-weekly concerts spirituels, as did C.A.F. Westenholz, J.F. Reichardt, E.W. Wolf, J.G. Naumann, F.L. Benda and F.A. Rosetti. Many outstanding singers and instrumentalists were members of the Kapelle, including Eligio Celestino, H.O.C. Zinck, F.X. Hammer and Johannes Sperger; it was one of the finest in Germany at the end of the 18th century. Under Friedrich Franz I (1756–1837) secular music was reinstated (1785) and in 1789 Rosetti was appointed Kapellmeister. In 1788 the ballroom was converted to a theatre where operas were performed.

Under Konzertmeister Louis Massonneau the court orchestra took part in civic music for the first time, in the Mecklenburg festivals (Wismar and Rostock, 1815–20). In the new theatre (1836) the orchestra participated in regular opera productions; Jenny Lind sang Bellini there, and a production of Tannhäuser was mounted as early as 1852. In 1840 the second Norddeutsche Musikfest was held in Schwerin; Mendelssohn conducted Haydn's The Creation and his own St Paul. In 1848 evenings of chamber music were organized and in 1851 the first season of concerts was held. Flotow was theatrical director from 1855 to 1863, and appointed G.A. Schmitt (1807–1902) as Hofkapellmeister in 1856. Schmitt completely reorganized the orchestra and the opera. Under him the first performance of Die Walküre outside Bayreuth was given in 1878; Siegfried was produced in the same year. Schmitt directed nine of the 15 Mecklenburg festivals held between 1860 and 1922 and was also an important figure in the development of the city's choral societies. One of these, the Schweriner Schlosschor founded by Julius Schaeffer in 1855, achieved renown under Otto Kade for its performances of a cappella polyphony.

In 1862 the première of Genée's Der Musikfeind took place in Schwerin under the direction of the composer. A new theatre, the Demmlersches Schauspielhaus, was built in 1882. It was renamed the Landestheater after 1918 and the Staatstheater in 1926. Schmitt's distinguished successor as Hofkapellmeister was Herman Zumpe (1897–1901). From 1906 to 1931 Willibald Kaehler was Generalmusikdirektor, and in 1936 Pfitzner presented his Armer Heinrich in Schwerin.

After World War II Schwerin became a regional capital of the DDR until German reunification in 1990. In addition to classical and contemporary opera, the Mecklenburg Staatstheater of Schwerin concentrated on Slav composers; the first German performances of Dzerzhinsky's Quiet Flows the Don (1955) and Janáček's From the House of the Dead (1960) were given there. Principal conductors of the opera have included Rudolf Neuhaus (1945–53), Karl Schubert, Kurt Masur (1958–60), Heinz Fricke (1960–61), Klaus Tennstedt (1962–71), Horst Förster (1975–6), Hartmut Haenchen (1976–9), Johannes Winkler (1983–5), Fred Buttkewitz, Ruslan Raichew and (since 1993) Ivan Törzs. The Schwerin State SO, founded in 1946 by Fritz Thiede and later renamed the Schwerin Philharmonie, acted as a second orchestra to the Mecklenburg Staatskapelle until its dissolution after reunification in the early 1990s. Notable figures in the field of church music have been George Gothe, H.-G. Görner and W. Bruhns, while the city's outstanding composers are Claus Clauberg (1890–1963) and Dieter Nowka (b 1924), who lived in Schwerin during the 1950s and 60s. The former conservatory is now the J.W. Hertel Musikschule. Since 1991 the annual Mecklenburg-Vorpommern summer music festival has been held in Schwerin, and there are regular festivals of chamber music.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG2 (H. Erdmann)

O. Kade: Die Musikalien-Sammlung des Grossherzoglichen Mecklenburg-Schweriner Fürstenhauses aus den letzten zwei Jahrhunderten (Schwerin and Wismar, 1893–9/R)

W. Jesse: Geschichte der Stadt Schwerin (Schwerin, 1913–20)

C. Meyer: Geschichte der Mecklenburg-Schweriner Hofkapelle (Schwerin, 1913)

H. Milenz: Mecklenburgische Musikgeschichte bis zum Jahre 1933 (Schwerin, 1939)

Schwerin und die Musik (Schwerin, 1955)

H. Erdmann: Schwerin als Stadt der Musik (Lübeck, 1967)

DIETER HÄRTWIG

Schwermer (Ger.). See BOMBO (i).

Schwertsik, Kurt (b Vienna, 25 June 1935). Austrian composer. After studying at the Vienna Music Academy (1949–57) with Joseph Marx, Karl Schiske and Gottfried Ritter von Freiberg, he started a career as an orchestral horn player, performing with the Niederösterreichisches Tonkünstlerorchester (1955–9, 1962–8) and the Vienna SO (1968–89). He continued to study composition, particularly under Stockhausen, at the Darmstadt summer school (1955, 1957–62) and the West German Radio electronic studio. He took additional private lessons with Josef Polnauer (1963–4). In 1958 he co-founded the ensemble Die Reihe with Cerha, both conducting and playing the horn. The group performed new music concerts regularly from 1959 with the aim of introducing the widest possible spectrum of contemporary music to Viennese audiences. He later taught composition at the Vienna Conservatory (1979–89) and the Vienna Hochschule für Musik (from 1989).

Schwertsik's early works, such as Duo und Double, the op.3 Trio, and the op.4 String Quartet, reflect the compositional priorities of the Darmstadt school in the late 1950s. Influenced by Cage and the Fluxus movement, however, his style soon changed as he adopted a kind of Dadaist philosophy. His farewell from a Darmstadt associated style was marked by a performance of his neo-tonal work Liebesträume at Darmstadt in 1962. From that time on, he abandoned any identification with the European avant garde, which seemed to him to be too esoteric, earnest and restrictive in its claims of aesthetic absolutism and its demand for technical rigidity.

In the following years he co-founded the Vienna Salonkonzerte with Zykan (1965) and the MOB-art and tone-ART ensemble (1968), which led to the composition of a number of works including the Symphonie im MOB-Stil. These projects realized aesthetic and compositional ideals invoked by the allusive concept of 'MOB-art und tone-ART', a term coined by Schwertsik in 1966 to signify music that is both accessible and entertaining. A wish to communicate with the audience is illustrated in his later compositions by the inclusion of audience participation (in the Salonkonzerte) and a return to a tonal musical language. He also borrowed elements from pop (Symphonie im MOB-Stil) and Scottish and Irish folk music (Twilight Music). Despite his dramatic change in compositional philosophy, Schwertsik retained high standards of musical craftsmanship, something he attributed to the influence of Stockhausen and Boulez.

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: Der lange Weg zur grossen Mauer (op, 2, R. Bletschacher), op.24, 1974, Lucerne, 14 May 1975; Das Märchen von Fanferlieschen Schönefüsschen (op, 10 scenes, K. and T. Körner, after C. von Brentano), op.42, 1981, Stuttgart, 24 Nov 1983; Macbeth (dance score, choreog. J. Kresnik), pf 4 hands, 1988; Der ewige Frieden (operetta, T. Körner), op.58, 1990, Bonn, 8 Jan 1995; Die Welt der Mongolen (op, 2, M. Köhlmeier), op.72, 1996, Linz, 9 Feb 1997

Orch: Symphonie im MOB-Stil, op.19, 1971, rev. 1984; Conc. '. . .in keltischer Manier', op.27, alphorn, chbr orch, 1975; Irdische Klänge, orch cycle, 1980–92; Irdische Klänge, op.37; 5 Naturstücke, op.45; Uluru, op.64; Irdische Klänge mit obligaten Pauken, op.54; Mit den Riesenstiefeln, op.60

Vocal: da uhu schaud me so draurech au . . ., op.20 (H.C. Artmann), 1v, pf, 1969; Ich sein Blumenbein (E. Jandl), op.38, 1v, pf, 1980; Gedichte an Ljuba (P. Altenberg), op.53, 1v, pf, 1986

Chbr and solo inst: Duo und Double, op.2, vn, pf, 1957; Str Qt, op.4, 1960; Trio, op.3, vn, hn, pf, 1960; Liebesträume, op.7, cl, sax, trbn, db, hmn, perc, 1962–3; 5 Nocturnes, op.10b, pf, 1964; Musik vom Mutterland Mu, op.22, 11 insts, 1971, rev. 1972; Twilight Music (Keltische Serenade), op.30, cl, bn, hn, str qt, db, 1976

Principal publisher: Boosey & Hawkes

BIBLIOGRAPHY

KdG (C. Heindl); LZMÖ (incl. further bibliography)
R. Buland: Die 'Neuen Wilden': die musikalische Entwicklung der Komponisten Otto M. Zykan, Kurt Schwertsik und Heinz-Karl Gruber bis zu den Salonkonzerten und der Konzeption der 'Mob art & tone art' (diss., U. of Vienna, 1989)
F. Spangemacher, ed.: Kurt Schwertsik (Bonn, 1990)
M. Grassl and R. Kapp, eds.: Darmstadt-Gespräche: die Internationale Ferienkurse für Neue Musik in Wien (Vienna, 1996)

MARKUS GRASSL

Schwetzingen. Town in Germany. Lying between Mannheim and Heidelberg, it was the summer residence of the Mannheim electoral court; see MANNHEIM, §2. An opera festival is held each May in the 18th-century theatre of the palace.

Schwickert. German firm of publishers, active 1772–1845. Founded by Engelhard Benjamin Schwickert, it was the most important typographic printer in Leipzig in the late 18th century. It issued many important works, including keyboard sonata collections by J.W. Hässler (1776, 1778) and D.G. Türk (1787, 1789), and other works by Türk; Georg Benda's keyboard concertos (1779, 1784) and violin concertos (1783); anthologies of keyboard pieces and songs (1779, 1783–8); and numerous opera vocal scores. His theoretical and pedagogical works include reprints of Leopold Mozart's violin school (1792), Albrechtsberger's Gründliche Anweisung zur Composition (1790), two editions of C.P.E. Bach's Versuch (1780, 1787) and J.N. Forkel's Allgemeine Litteratur der Musik (1792) as well as many other musical and literary works. The firm had a branch in Halle, 1792–1802.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Kirchhoff: 'Lesefrüchte aus den Acten des städtischen Archivs zu Leipzig', Archiv für Geschichte des deutschen Buchhandels, xiv (1891), 262
F.G. Meyer: 'Zum Transitrecht', ibid, 275

THOMAS D. WALKER

Schwieger [Schwiger], Jacob (b Altona, 1624; d after 1660). German poet. He studied philosophy, theology and German (the last under August Buchner) at the University of Wittenberg from March 1650. In 1653 Schwieger moved to Hamburg, where he became the friend of Zesen, Neumark and many musicians. In 1654 he joined the Teutschgesinnte Genossenschaft, a philological society founded by Zesen; his pseudonym was 'Der Flüchtige', under which he published some works. From 1654 to 1656 he was active at Gottesdorf, probably either as teacher or as Protestant minister, and from 1656 to at least 1660 he worked at Glückstadt.

Under the influence of Opitz, Fleming, Rist (whom he personally disliked) and Voigtländer, Schwieger wrote some of the best German lyric poetry of the mid-17th century. His earthy tone combined with his exceptional skill gave his poetry great power and depth. Under his supervision many German composers, chief among them Albert Schop, Michael Zachaeus and Johann Kruss, set his poems to music that he then published in his collections; he was also one of the poets set by C.C. Dedekind in his Aelbianische Musen-Lust (Dresden, 1657). In all cases his strophic poems are set in a simple syllabic style for one voice and continuo. A few poems use dialogue and echo effects, which the music accentuates. Seven poems in his Liebes-Grillen (Hamburg, 1654–6) are translations from the Dutch (five are based on poems by Jacobus Westerbanus), and in general there is Dutch influence throughout the collection. Adam Krieger parodied some of his songs.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

K. Goedeke: Grundriss zur Geschichte der deutschen Dichtung (Dresden, 2/1887), iii, 105–7
H. Osthoff: Adam Krieger (1634–1666) (Leipzig, 1929/R)
J.H. Baron: Foreign Influences on the German Secular Solo Continuo Lied in the Mid-Seventeenth Century (diss., Brandeis U., 1967)
J.H. Baron: 'Dutch Influences on the German Secular Solo-Continuo Lied in the Mid-Seventeenth Century', AcM, xliii (1971), 43–55

JOHN H. BARON

Schwilge [Schwilgi], Andreas (b Thann, Alsace, *c*1608–9; d Ulm, 1688). Alsatian composer and teacher of German origin, resident for some time in Switzerland. As a boy he received singing, violin and organ lessons from his father, who came from Stuttgart. From 1623 to 1628 he attended the Jesuit school at Ensisheim, Alsace, and then studied philosophy at Würzburg. He entered the Franciscan order and after serving his novitiate at Lucerne continued his philosophy studies at Fribourg and then spent four years studying theology in Vienna. A journey to Rome and Milan persuaded him to renounce Catholicism. He returned to Switzerland and applied in 1639 for a post in Zürich either as a preacher or as a teacher of philosophy or music. After three months' instruction from Pastor Theobald Dürrysen at Winterthur and with recommendations as a philosopher, musician and scribe, he was appointed precentor at the Grossmünster, Zürich, and teacher of singing at the German school. In 1646 he was promoted to become Kantor at the Grossmünster and in 1652 preacher at the Spannweid infirmary but was dismissed a few weeks later after an argument with a barber's assistant. He then went to Ulm, where he became a teacher at the Gymnasium and Kantor of the Lutheran church and from 1659 until he retired in 1681 was musical director of the weekly concerts. At Zürich in 1648 he published 37 four-part settings of Johann Wilhelm Simler's Teutsche Gedichte in Goudimel's note-against-note style, though with the melody in the top part instead of in the tenor, as formerly. In the second edition (1653) he included 30 additional pieces, and in the third (1663) he further added six motets with continuo, which he called 'fugues'; a fourth edition appeared in 1688. Six of these pieces appeared anonymously with different texts in the New Year issues of the Zürich Bürgerbibliothek for 1646–9 and 1658–9, and 11, likewise anonymously, in Christian Huber's Geistliche Seelenmusik (St Gall, 1682). Schwilge may well have been the anonymous composer of eight songs for Rudolf Meyer's Todtentanz (Zürich, 1650): like the 'fugues', they begin with imitative passages and contain clumsinesses similar to those found in pieces that are definitely by him. He also wrote pieces in honour of the mayors of Zürich in 1653 and 1655 (manuscripts in CH-Zz).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Baechtold: Deutsche Literatur in der Schweiz (Frauenfeld, 1892)
W. Nagel: 'Andreas Schwilge', MMg, xxiv (1892), 121–31
E. Bernoulli: 'Proben vokaler Kleinkunst aus dem 17. und beginnenden 18. Jahrhundert', IMusSCR II: Basle 1906, 104–56
W. Nagel: 'Andreas Schwilge', Schweizerisches Jb für Musikwissenschaft, ii (1927), 61–7
E. Refardt: Historisch-biographisches Musikerlexikon der Schweiz (Leipzig and Zürich, 1928)
W. Schuh: 'Die Sterbegesänge des Meyer'schen Totentanzes von 1650', Schweizerisches Jb für Musikwissenschaft, v (1931), 127–44
W. Schuh: 'Caspar Diebold (1601–1674): Sein Leben und Seine Werke', Mitteilungen der Schweizerischen musikforschenden Gesellschaft, iii (1936), 8–15

ARNOLD GEERING

Schwindl [Schwindel], Friedrich (b 3 May 1737; d Karlsruhe, 7 Aug 1786). Composer, violinist and teacher, active in Germany, the Netherlands and Switzerland. Fétis named Amsterdam as his place of birth. He was married in Jungbunzlau, Bohemia (now Mladá, Czech Republic) in the late 1750s; a daughter, Anna Christina (later a singer in Cologne and the mother of Bernhard Klein), was born in 1759. During the 1760s Schwindl held at least two posts, first as Konzertmeister to the Margrave of Wied-Runkel, and then as virtuoso di camera to the Count of Colloredo (later Colloredo-Mansfield). He may have accepted the latter position as early as 1763, as both he and Colloredo are listed in Leopold Mozart's travel notes of October 1763 (Brussels); a set of symphonies (op.3, 1765) carries the same title. In 1770, shortly before or after becoming a resident of The Hague, Schwindl travelled to Switzerland for a three-month engagement as violinist with the Zürich Musiksaalgesellschaft. During his stay in The Hague he composed, taught (one of his pupils was the composer and harpsichordist J.A. Just), and also served as first violinist to Prince William V of Orange. Apparently still in the latter's employ in 1772, Schwindl travelled to Trier to appear in a concert of his music given on 22 July. Towards the mid-1770s Switzerland became the centre of his interests: besides giving concerts in Zürich, between 1774 and 1780 he organized and performed in a number of concerts in Geneva; and in the late 1770s he directed a Liebhaberkonzert in Mulhouse. On 21 September 1780 Schwindl became Konzertmeister to the Margrave of Bad Durlach (Karlsruhe), an appointment he held until his death. Further travels took place in 1783 and again in 1786 (Lausanne).

Schwindl's instrumental music enjoyed wide circulation, especially between the 1760s and 80s, when his symphonies and chamber works appeared in numerous publications. Records of performance also attest the popularity of his music: in Paris, the Concert Spirituel of 5 April 1767 began with a performance of one of his symphonies; a concert given at Nymphenburg (near Munich) during the summer of 1772 not only opened with two symphonies by Schwindl, but also included a performance of one of his trios, with the elector playing the bass viol; and a programme that began with Schwindl's 'Overture 1st' was presented by Josiah Flagg in Boston on 17 May 1771.

Contemporary criticism was generally favourable. J.A. Hiller ranked Schwindl among those composers who had contributed worthwhile pieces to the symphonic repertory, while Burney found his name 'well known in the musical world, by his admirable compositions for violins, which are full of taste, grace, and effects'. C.F.D. Schubart discussed the appeal of Schwindl's music both to amateurs and to adherents of Empfindsamkeit.

Schwindl's symphonies are scored mostly for eight parts (four strings with pairs of woodwind and horns). They include three- and four-movement structures (typically, Allegro–Andante–Minuet and Trio–Presto) which exhibit a variety of internal designs (e.g. sonata-form types with or without complete recapitulation). Viewed chronologically they reflect an increasingly expanded scope, made possible in the late works by a firm grasp of harmonic processes, broad control of phrasing, and by a heightened thematic specialization. Particularly significant are the symphonies in substantially revised versions (frequently with enlarged first movements and new, noticeably longer finales), which furnish cogent evidence of Schwindl's maturing style.

WORKS

ORCHESTRAL

28 pubd syms., incl.: nos.2–3 of 3 symphonies modernes ... par Mrs. Canabich et Schwindl (Paris, 1761), 6 simphonies, op.1 (Amsterdam and The Hague, 1762) [facs. of no.6 (Zwenkau, 1932)], 6 simphonies, op.2 (Amsterdam and The Hague, 1764), 6 sinfonie, op.3 (Paris, 1765) [no.1 as The Periodical Overtures, Bremner no.39 (London, n.d.)], Simphonie périodique, Hummel no.2 (Amsterdam, 1769), 3 simphonies, op.9 (The Hague, 1775), Ouverture a 8 parties obligées (Geneva, *c*1775) [abridged as no.3 of 3 simphonies, op.1 (The Hague, *c*1882)], 3 simphonies, op.10 (Amsterdam and The Hague, 1782); 3 unpubd syms., listed in Breitkopf catalogues, 1767, 1774; symphonie concertante, C, lost; several concs.; further syms., CH-Bu, CZ-Pnm, D-MÜu, Rtt, Z, S-L, elsewhere

CHAMBER

Duets: VI duetti, 2 fl, op.1 (Paris, n.d.), lost, cited in Breitkopf catalogue (1774); 12 Duets, 2 vn, op.3 (Amsterdam, *c*1766); XII Divertissements (Duos faciles), 2 vn, op.4 (Amsterdam, *c*1767); 6 duetti, vn, vc, op.6 (Amsterdam, *c*1769), ed. Y. Morgan (Winterthur, 1997); 6 Duets, 2 fl/vn (London, *c*1775); 12 Duetts ... (a Second Sett), 2 vn (London, *c*1785); 6 sonatas, vn, b (Paris, n.d.); Airs choisis des opéras français, 2 vn/fl (The Hague, n.d.)

Trios: 6 Sonatas, 2 fl, bc, op.3 (London, ?1765); 6 sonates, 2 vn, bc, op.5 (Amsterdam, *c*1768); 4 Sonatas, hpd/pf, vn, vc, op.8 (Amsterdam, *c*1773); XXIV Menuettos, 2 vn, bc (London, 1778); 6 sonate, fl/vn, fl/vn, bc (Paris, n.d.); others

6 quatuor, op.7 (Amsterdam, *c*1770); 6 Easy Quartettos, 2 vn, fl, b (London, *c*1790); 6 quintettes ou trios (2 fl, 2 vn, bc)/(2 vn, bc), op.10 (London, n.d.); Divertissement militaire (The Hague, n.d.)

SACRED

Die Pilgrime auf Golgatha (orat, J.F.W. Zachariä) (Cologne, 1772)
Marianens Trauengesang (cant.), solo vv, SSATB orch, excerpts CH-Zz
Mass, E♭, solo vv, SATB, orch, org, Zz, BM, EN, Fcu, SAf, SGd, SO, D-OB, TEGha, KZa [inc.]
Herr Gott dich loben wir (TeD), SSATB, orch, org, CH-Zz; arr. SATB, orch, BM, SAf, SO; Lat. text, SATB, orch, EN

OTHER VOCAL

Operettas (all lost): Die drey Paechter, Mulhouse, 1778; Das Liebesgrab, Mulhouse, 1779; 4 Fr. operettas, before 1780
Arias (all CH-Bu): De longtemps les troupeaux, S, S, orch; Quand l'amour et l'innocence, S, orch; Sans soupirs et sans larmes, S, S, orch
Songs: 1 in A Select Collection of Vocal Music, Serious and Comic (London, 1770); 1 in J.K. Pfenniger: Ausgewählte Gesänge mit Melodieen (Zürich, 1792)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BurneyGN; BurneyH; FétisB; GerberL; GerberNL; NewmanSCE
J.A. Hiller, ed.: Wöchentliche Nachrichten und Anmerkungen die Musik betreffend (Leipzig, 1766–70/R)
C.F.D. Schubart: Ideen zu einer Ästhetik der Tonkunst (Vienna, 1806/R)
K. Nef: Die Collegia musica in der deutschen reformierten Schweiz (St Gall, 1896/R)
L. Schiedermair: 'Die Oper an den badischen Höfen des 17. und 18. Jahrhunderts', SIMG, xiv (1912–13), 191–207, 369–449, 510–50
K. Nef: Geschichte der Sinfonie und Suite (Leipzig, 1921/R)
R. Laugg: Studien zur Instrumentalmusik im Zisterzienserkloster Ebrach in der zweiten Hälfte des 18. Jahrhunderts (diss., U. of Erlangen, 1953)
R. Münster: Die Sinfonien Toeschis: ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der Mannheimer Sinfonie (diss., U. of Munich, 1956)
K.W. Niemöller: Kirchenmusik und reichsstädtische Musikpflege im Köln des 18. Jahrhunderts (Cologne, 1960)
A. Downs: The Symphonies of Friedrich Schwindl (diss., New York U., 1973)
D.W. Jones: 'Robert Bremner and The Periodical Overture', Soundings, vii (1978), 62–84
K.G. Fellerer: 'Musikbeziehungen zwischen den nördlichen Niederlanden und dem Reich im 18. Jahrhundert', TVNM, xxx/1 (1980), 51–69
A. Callen: '"Veter Michel" and the Symphony', Jb für Volksliedforschung, xxxiii (1988), 81–7

ANNELIESE DOWNS

Schwirrholz (Ger.). See BULLROARER.

Schwungzither (Ger.). See BELL HARP.

Schytte, Ludvig (b Århus, 28 April 1848; d Århus, 10 Nov 1909). Danish pianist and composer. Although he did not have any musical education until he was 22, he made such rapid progress as a pianist and teacher that at an early age he had a successful career abroad. His teachers included Gade, Taubert in Berlin and Liszt in Weimar in 1884. From 1887 he taught at various conservatories in Vienna, including Horak's, and in 1907 he settled in Berlin as a teacher at the Stern Conservatory. Today Schytte is still known for his numerous pedagogical piano methods, of which his various collections of Etudes (especially opp.75, 95, 106, 161 and 174) as well as the piano primer Horneman's børneklaverskole (1892), which he revised and re-edited, are best known. His other compositions can be described as salon music; they are efficiently worked, but completely without distinction. Only his Piano Concerto op.28, in which the influence of Schumann is clearly felt, and a piano sonata op.53 bear witness to a more serious approach to the problems of musical form. His brother Henrik Schytte (1827–1909) was a cellist and critic whose best-known work is the first important Danish music dictionary, the Nordisk musik-lexicon (Copenhagen, 1888–92, suppl., 1906; based on Riemann's Musik-Lexikon, 1882).

BO MARSCHNER

Scialla, Alessandro (fl Tropea, Calabria, 1610). Italian composer. He was a gentleman member of an academy at Tropea, possibly the Accademia degli Amorosi. He is known only by Primo libro de' madrigali (Naples, 1610), for five voices. The 23 madrigals it contains, settings of poems by Guarini and Marino, are slightly longer and have fewer chordal phrases than madrigals by his Neapolitan contemporaries. With very little Gesualdian chromaticism and with old-fashioned sequential motifs forming many of the imitative points, they are the work of a serious, conservative composer, who nevertheless added at the end of the book a galliard to a text by Sannazaro.

KEITH A. LARSON

Sciarrino, Salvatore (b Palermo, 4 April 1947). Italian composer. A precociously gifted child, he at first gravitated towards the visual arts: he displayed a talent for figurative painting by the age of four and by the age of ten was guiding himself towards 'informal' abstraction. But he found himself increasingly fascinated and challenged by music and so began experimenting with composition in 1959 under the guidance of Antonino Titone. Within three years he had achieved a first public performance at the 1962 Palermo New Music Week. A brief academic training under Turi Belfiore in 1964 provided the only interruption to this autodidactic progress, crowned by public performances in Rome (Quartetto II) and Palermo (Aka Aka to) in 1968. In 1969 he moved to Rome, where he continued to pursue his own path under the aegis of Franco Evangelisti whose course on electronic music at the Accademia di S Cecilia he attended. He quickly developed one of the most distinctive (and widely imitated) voices of his generation, making an obsessive, but impeccably calculated language from sound resources marginalized by previous generations such as string and wind harmonics and ancillary performance noises. At first these were deployed in baroque abundance – and to striking critical acclaim in his first theatre work, Amore e Psyche (1972). But during the 1970s, Sciarrino became increasingly concerned to pare down his resources to a characteristic play between sound and silence that has underpinned much of his subsequent work. This was explored extensively in the daring Un'immagine di Arpocrite (1974–9), a 45-minute adagio for piano, orchestra and chorus.

Although based in Rome until 1976, and then in Milan (where he taught at the Conservatory during the period 1977–82), Sciarrino has always shared with Luigi Nono a sense of music's obligation to accomplish a 'flight towards the new', rather than to be subsumed by the shared conventions of the time. In consequence, in 1982, as soon as his expanding compositional career permitted, he withdrew to the Umbrian town of Città di Castello. In a characteristic refusal to elaborate upon autobiographical details, he noted that he 'left the metropolises and sought the shadows', wishing to be one of those artists that remain apart, dedicating themselves solely to their work. He has, however, continued to teach at the Florence Conservatory, in Bologna and in his home town. The influence of the later Nono is equally clear in the demands that Sciarrino makes upon his listeners. In a characteristic commentary upon his percussion work Un fruscio lungo trent'anni (1998), he asserted that 'there is one thing without which no delight in sound makes sense, and that is the intensity of silence. The tension and the thoughts of the person who listens made perceptible by the person who plays'. But unlike Nono, Sciarrino has balanced the demand for such questioning, meditative intensity with a sustained interrogation of musical worlds to which he does not, or cannot, belong. Throughout his compositional career, he has produced transcriptions and elaborations of works from the past – some indeed have assumed a role in his own large-scale works: two of the Venetian Canzoni da batello (1977) flank the interval in his Aspern (1978); an elegy by Claude Le Jeune furnishes the departure-point for Luci miei traditrici (1996–8). Indeed, his two-act ballet Morte a Venezia (1991) consists entirely of reworked movements from J.S. Bach. An even more powerful presence has been his encyclopaedic knowledge of classic American popular song, celebrated in Blue Dream (1980) or the Nove canzoni del XX secolo (1991), but also treated with allusive, but telling, effect in Cailles en sarcophage (1979) or Efebo con radio (1981).

Sciarrino has produced large-scale works for both theatre and the concert hall with a fluency the more remarkable for his non-dependence on the organic motivic traditions of pitch and rhythm central to the classical tradition. Large-scale planning has in consequence entailed the preparation of huge diagrammatic flow charts that have themselves been the subject of several exhibitions: for Sciarrino, the history of musical structures – his own and others' – is that of the spatialization of sound. Granted Sciarrino's devotion to a dramaturgy – on and off stage – of individualistic nuance, this planning has translated, in many of his large-scale works for the concert-hall, into the deployment of virtuoso soloists against a fluid, resonating backdrop of orchestral sound, whose very rarification opens up vast aural spaces to the imaginative ear. For practical reasons familiar to most living composers, Sciarrino's wider international reputation has been consolidated through a substantial range of works for soloist or small ensemble. The challenge of his virtuoso solo string works from the mid-1970s – most notably the Tre notturni brillanti (1974–5) for viola, and the Sei Capricci (1975–6) for violin – attracted interpreters of the calibre of Aldo Bennici and Salvatore Accardo. But over the longer term – and particularly from All'aure in una lontananza (1977) onwards – the instrument that has most consistently engaged his attention is the flute, transformed into a creature of infinite nuance at the hands of Roberto Fabbricciani. As is evident from the literary titles that frequently adorn his works for the instrument, the flute assumes the role of emanation, subtle and sensuous, from the world of classical myth to which Sciarrino's imagination so readily returns. His other favoured solo instrument, the piano, demanded a very different approach. Lacking the flute's breathed intimacy, but being embedded in an expressive tradition so integral to its sound that such works as the Etude de concert (1976) or the 'Camille' section of Cailles en sarcophage (1979–80) sought to conjure up a bloodless and spectral simulacrum by way of exorcism, the piano's rhetorical capacities have mostly drawn Sciarrino away from his habitual fascination for working at the boundary of sound and silence. His sequence of five piano sonatas (1976–1994) are, on the contrary, increasingly assertive and percussive. Like a number of more recent works, the Terza Sonata (1987) achieves a particular energy and density by the mutual interruption of parallel dimensions – a process described by Sciarrino as 'windows form'. The piano has also played a particular role within the substantial list of works for small ensemble, notably in the remarkable sequence of quintets for different instrumental combinations with (usually) piano written between 1984 and 1986.

The inventive dramaturgy that lies at the heart of Sciarrino's musical theatre is rooted in the surreal, but it also casts a rueful and sardonic eye upon myths ancient and modern. Despite a remarkable diversity of musico-dramatic solutions, these works repeatedly anatomize the precariousness of human attempts at relationships, the unsteady but obsessive balance between misplaced hope and invincible solipsism. Such themes add resonance to the ever sparer, and sometimes obsessively repetitive musical idiom that has sustained them. The luxurious style and elaborately symbolical libretto of Amore e Psyche apart, each of the theatre works produced from the late 1970s on has insisted upon an increasingly eloquent clarity and parsimony. Aspern (1977–8) with its wry retelling of Henry James's narrative of a writer seeking (and failing) to extract from two Venetian ladies papers belonging to a vanished poet, presents its images of isolation, of a lifeless existence, through actors, while the spare, mesmeric 'numbers' of the singspiel – sometimes resetting fragments from Da Ponte's texts for Le nozze di Figaro – are given over to a soprano and chamber ensemble. A Mozart otherwise in absentia makes a dessicated and fleeting appearance in the overture.

Other musical worlds become more omnipresent – though again fleetingly – in the 'museum of obsessions' that followed. Cailles en sarcophage (1979) turned the surrealism latent in Amore e Psyche into a full-scale dramaturgical principle. A vast collage of text-sources, from Genet to Wedekind, were amalgamated to form three tripartite acts, each section conjuring up its own obsessive figure (including Dietrich and Garbo among others). Brief fragments of Sciarrino's favoured repertoire of classic American songs come and go, absorbed into a web of sound materials precious to Sciarrino for their tactile immediacy and their affirmation (in the true humanist tradition) of the human body. Three singers adopt a long series of parallel roles while the texts are otherwise delivered by actors. A chamber version of the same principle operated in his subsequent 'one-act still life' Vanitas (1981), where the three performers (voice, cello and piano) pursue an oneiric tissue of fragments, musically grounded in 'a gigantic anamorphosis' of Hoagy Carmichael's Stardust. The two operas derived by Sciarrino from Jules Laforgue's ironic Moralités légendaires, Lohengrin (1982–4) and Perseo e Andromeda (1990) mark a recuperation of some measure of narrative continuity. Lohengrin in particular set the seal upon Sciarrino's vivid grasp of a theatre of spare vocal gesture. Laforgue's mordant and oblique version of the Lohengrin story presents Elsa as a vestal virgin, accused of impurity. Lohengrin arrives on his swan to defend her honour. In the nuptial villa made available to the happy couple by the Ministry of Cults, Elsa makes a gauche attempt to create the ambiance appropriate to a wedding night. Lohengrin remains awkward and unresponsive, clinging to his cushion which then mutates into a swan, astride which our relieved hero makes a rapid departure back to the moon. Sciarrino intervenes to cast a more disconcerting light upon Laforgue's ésprit blagueur: Elsa and Lohengrin are given voice by the same actress-singer, and the order of the two episodes is reversed. Ruffled Wagnerian sensibilities are ambiguously soothed by the final revelation that she is a patient in a mental hospital; only at this juncture does Elsa cross from brilliantly inventive vocal gesture to infantile song. A more direct demonstration that heroic male intervention may not be worth the wait is provided by Perseo e Andromeda. Marooned on her island, a bored Andromeda is indulged by an avuncular Dragon (sung by two male voices). Perseus arrives on his winged horse, and makes a botched but ultimately successful kill. His doltish lack of finesse proves more than Andromeda can bear: she suggests that he has picked the wrong island. Perseus departs piqued; Andromeda is left alone to mourn her slaughtered Dragon. The score combines singing voices with live electronics, the latter providing Sciarrino with fresh means to pursue a favoured tour de force: that of creating an exquisitely artificial mimesis of the natural, here embodied by the wind and sea that frame Andromeda's insular existence. The later Luci miei traditrici (1996–8) confronts the eternal theme of personal jealousy and betrayal but with a spare, unblinking clarity. As infidelity is progressively unmasked in the course of a day, the singing voices (each at first lyrically celebrating their own delusion) move towards naked speech, while the instrumental ensemble maps a stylized progress towards the sounds of night, here, as ever in Sciarrino's work, the dimension of a more subversive truth.

WORKS

STAGE

Amore e Psyche (op, 1, A. Pes), 1972, Milan, Piccola Scala, 2 March 1973

Aspern (Spl, 2, G. Marini and Sciarrino, after H. James, with frags. from L. Da Ponte), 1977–8, Florence, Pergola, 8 June 1978

Cailles en sarcophage (atti per un museo delle ossessioni, 3 pts, G. Marini), 1979, Venice, Malibran, 26 Sept 1979; rev. Venice, Fenice, 17 Oct 1980

Vanitas (natura morta, 1, Sciarrino, after Sempronius and others), 1981, Milan, Piccola Scala, 11 Dec 1981

Lohengrin (azione invisibile, Sciarrino, after J. Laforgue), 1982, Milan, Piccola Scala, 15 Jan 1983, rev. Catanzaro, Spaizzo del Sole, 9 Sept 1984

Perseo e Andromeda (1, Sciarrino, after Laforgue), 1990, Stuttgart, Staats, 27 Jan 1991

Morte a Venezia (ballet, after T. Mann), 1991 [based on music by J.S. Bach], Verona, Filarmonica, 24 May 1991

Luci miei traditrici (op, 2, Sciarrino, after A. Cicognini), 1996–8, Schwetzingen, Rokokotheater, 19 May 1998

Infinito nero (estasi, 1, Sciarrino, after S Maddalena de' Pazzi), 1998, Witten, Theatersaal, 25 April 1998

OTHER DRAMATIC

Orlando furioso (incid music, L. Ariosto, dir. L. Ronconi), 1969; I bei colloqui (radio score, Pes, dir. C. Quartucci), 1970 [based on Orlando furioso]; All'uscita (radio score, L. Pirandello, dir. G. Pressburger), 1978 [incl. vocal-orch work Kindertotenlied, frags. from vocal work Il paese senza tramonto and orch work Il paese senz'alba], rev. as film score, 1985; Trachinie (incid music, Sophocles, dir. G. Cobelli), 1980; Lectura Dantis (incid music, C. Bene), 1981; La divina commedia (TV score, Dante), 1988 [based on recording of orch work Sui poemi concentrici]; Paradiso (incid music, Dante, dir. F. Tiezzi), 1993 [incl. orch works Alfabeto oscuro, L'invenzione della trasparenza, Postille]

VOCAL

Vocal-orch: Introduzione e aria 'Ancora il duplice' (Pes), Mez, orch, 1971 [from op Amore e Psyche]; Il paese senza tramonto (Marino), S, orch, 1977; Kindertotenlied (J. Ruckert), S, T, chbr orch, 1978; Efebo con radio (Sciarrino), 1v, orch, 1981; Flos florum (Sciarrino, after Egyptian Book of the Dead, other texts), SATB, orch, 1981; Morte di Borromini, spkr, orch, 1988; L'immaginazione a se stessa (E. Montale), SATB, orch, 1996; see also ORCHESTRAL (Un immagine di Arpocrate)

Other vocal: Aka Aka to I, II, III, S, 12 insts, 1968; 2 melodie (Marino), S, pf, 1978; Aspern Suite (Da Ponte, anon.), S, 2 fl, perc, hpd, va, vc, 1979 [from op Apsern]; La donne di Trachis (Sophocles), S, Mez, C, female chorus, 1980 [from incid music Trachinie]; Canto degli specchi, 1v, pf, 1979–81 [arr. from stage work Cailles en sarcophage]; 2 nuove melodie (B. Dylan, P. Pasolini), Bar, pf, 1979–82; La perfezione di uno spirito sottile (anon.), 1v, fl, perc, 1985; Tutti i miragi delle acque (Sciarrino), SATB, 1987; L'alibi della parola (A. de Campos, F. Petrarch), Ct, 2 T, Bar, 1994; Nuvolario (Sciarrino, after I. Hamdìs), 1v, fl, tpt, perc, 2 va, 1995; Due risvegli e il vento (H. Heine, F. Hölderlin), S, 2 cl, str trio, 1997; Waiting for the Wind (H. Luke), 1v, Javanese gamelan, 1998; Cantare con silenzio (Sciarrino), chorus, fl, perc, 1999

ORCHESTRAL

With soloists: Rondo, fl, chbr orch, 1972; Romanza, va d'amore, orch, 1973; Variazioni, vc, orch, 1974; Un immagine di Arpocrate (J. von Goethe, L. Wittgenstein), chorus, pf, orch, 1974–9; Clair de lune, pf, orch, 1976; Che sai guardiano, della notte?, cl, chbr orch, 1979; Cadenziario, soloists, orch, 1982–91; Autoritratto nella notte, vn, orch, 1985; Frammento e adagio, fl, orch, 1986–2; Sui poemi concentrici, 1987: I, vc, orch, II, fl, cl, vc, orch, III, fl, vn, va d'amore, orch; Lettura da lontano, db, orch, 1989; L'invenzione della trasparenza, soloists, orch, 1993; Recitativo oscuro, pf, orch, 1999; Il clima dopo Harry Partch, pf, orch, 1999–2000

Other works: Berceuse, 1967–8, rev. 1977; Da a da da, 1970; Grande sonata da camera, 1972; Il paese senza'alba, 1977; Berceuse variata, 1977; Autoritratto nella notte, 1982; 9 canzoni del XX secolo, 1985–7; Alfabeto oscuro, chbr orch, 1993; Postille, fl, vn, va, orch, 1993; Soffio e forma, 1995; I fuochi oltre la regione, 1997

CHAMBER

(5 or more insts): . . . da un divertimento, 10 insts, 1968–70; Sonata da camera, 16 insts, 1971; Di Zefiro e Pan, 2 fl, 2 ob, 2 cl, 2 bn, 2 hn, 1976; Qnt no.1, cl, str qt, 1976; Qnt no.2, wind qnt, 1977; Attraverso i cancelli, 14 insts, 1977; Introduzione all'oscuro, 12 insts, 1981; Nox apud Orpheum, 2 org, insts, 1982; Centauro marino, cl, vn, va, vc, pf, 1984; Codex purpureus II, pf qnt, 1984; Raffigurar Narciso al fonte, 2 fl, 2 cl, pf, 1984; Lo spazio inverso, fl, cl, cel, vn, vc, 1985; Appendice alla perfezione, 14 bells, 1986; La ragioni delle conchiglie, pf qnt, 1986; Il silenzio degli oracoli, wind qnt, 1989; La bocca, I piedi, il suono, 4 a sax, 100 peripatetic sax, 1997; 4 intermezzi, insts, 1997 [from op Luci miei traditrici]

(2–4 insts): Sonata, 2 pf, 1966; Arabesque, 2 org, 1971; Sonatina, vn, pf, 1974; 6 quartetti brevi, str qt, 1967; Danse, 2 vn, va, 1975; Pf Trio, 1975; Siciliano, fl, hpd, 1975; Esplorazione del bianco, 1986; I, db, II, fl, b cl, gui, vn, III, drum kit; D'un faune, a fl, pf, 1980; Fauno che fischia a un merlo, fl, hp, 1980; La malinconia, vn, va, 1981; Melencolia, vc, pf, 1981; Codex purpureus, str trio, 1983; Il motivo degli oggetti di vetro, 2 fl, pf, 1986–7; Pf Trio no.2, 1987; 6 quartetti brevi, str qt, 1991–2; Omaggio a Burri, vn, a fl, b cl, 1997; Muro d'orizzonte, a fl, eng hn, b cl, 1997; Un fruscio lungo trent'anni, 4 perc, 1999; Settimo quartetto, str qt, 1999

Pf: Prelude, 1969; De la nuit, 1971; Esercizio, 1971; Sonata no.1, 1976; Etude de concert, 1976; Anamorfosi, 1980; Sonata no.2, 1983; Sonata no.3, 1987; Variazione su uno spazio ricurvo, 1990; Perduto in una città d'aque, 1991; Sonata no.4, 1992; Sonata no.5, 1994, rev. 1995; Polveri laterali, 1997; Notturni, 1999– [incl. 2 notturni crudele]

Other solo inst: De o de do, hpd, 1970; 2 studi, vc, 1974; 3 notturni brillanti, va, 1974–5; Toccata, hpd, 1975; Per mattia, vn, 1975; 6 capricci, vn, 1975–6; All'aure in una lontananza, a fl, 1977; Ai limiti della notte, va, 1979, arr. vc; Let me die before I wake, cl, 1982; Hermes, fl, 1984; Canzona di ringraziamneto, fl, 1985; Come vengano prodotti gli incantesimi?, fl, 1985; Fra i testi dedicati alle nubi, fl, 1989; L'addio a Trachis, hp, 1980, arr. gui as L'addio a Trachis II, 1989; L'orizzonte luminoso di Aton, fl, 1989; Venere che le Grazie la fioriscono, fl, 1989; Addio case del vento, fl, 1993; Sonata no.5, pf, 1994–5; Vagabonde blu, accdn, 1998

TAPE AND ELECTRONIC

Implocor, tape, 1971; La voce dell'Inferno (Dante), tape, 1981; Noms des airs, live elecs, 1994

TRANSCRIPTIONS AND ARRANGEMENTS

A. Il Verso: 6 ricercari, vn, vc, 1969 [transcrs. of motets from Il primo libro della musica a due voci (Palermo, 1596)]
Anon.: Mottetti, 1v, insts, 1969
Anon.: 12 canzoni da batello, S, ob, bn, 2 vn, va d'amore, vc, gui, mand, 1977
Anon.: Premi, via, premi o stali, 1v, gui, 1977
Blue Dream, S, pf, 1980 [transcrs. of 15 Amer. popular songs by I. and G. Gershwin, C. Porter and others]
3 canzoni del XX secolo, fl, pf, 1984 [transcrs. of 3 Amer. popular songs by M. Parish and others]
G. de Machaut: Rose, Liz, 1v, fl, cl, bn, va, vc, 1984
5 canzoni del XX secolo, S, pf, orch, 1985 [transcrs. of 5 Amer. popular songs by J. Mercer and others]
C. Porter: Night and Day, orch, 1987
A. Barroso: Brazil, pic, cl, bn, hn, hp, vn, va, vc, db, 1988, arr. chbr orch, 1991
G. Rossini: Giavanna D'Arco, Mez, orch, 1989
9 canzoni del XX secolo, S, orch, 1991 [transcrs. of 9 Amer. popular songs by J. Mercer and others]
J.S. Bach: Toccata and Fugue, d, BWV565, amp. fl, 1993
Mozart a nove anni, orch, 1993 [arrs. of 10 movts by Mozart]
W.A. Mozart: Adagio K356/617a, fl, tpt, perc, 2 va, 1994
Medioevo presente, fl, tpt, perc, 2 va, 1994 [transcrs. of 3 vocal works by J. de l'Escurel, anon.]
Le voci sottovetro, 1v, insts, 1998 [arrs. of 4 works by C. Gesualdo]
Pagine, sax qt, 1998 [arrs. of 10 vocal and inst works by C. Gesualdo and others]

Principal publisher: Ricordi

WRITINGS

Le figure della musica (Milan, 1998)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

CC (R. Barret); Grove6 (C. Annibaldi); GroveO (D. Osmond-Smith); KdG (S. Drees)
S. Bussotti: I mei teatri (Palermo, 1982), 377–86, 384–5
O. Poce: Il processo compositivo di Salvatore Sciarrino e la musica per strumento solo (diss., U. of Rome, 1987)
'Dossier Salvatore Sciarrino', Entretemps, ix (1990)
M. Mazzolini: 'Del interrogare', Sonus [Potenza], ii/3 (1990), 45–56 [interview]
G. Borio: 'Der italienische Komponist Salvatore Sciarrino', NZM, Jg.152, no.5 (1991), 33–6
D. Osmond-Smith: 'Salvatore Sciarrino', Viking Opera Guide, ed. A. Holden and others (London, 1993), 268–9
G. Thomas: 'The Poetics of Extremity', MT, lxxxix (1993), 193–6
C. Vincoletto: Salvatore Sciarrino: una poetica del silenzio (diss., U. of Turin, 1993)
N. Hodges: 'A Volcano Viewed from Afar: the Music of Salvatore Sciarrino', Tempo, no.194 (1995), 22–4
F. Giomi and M. Ligabue: 'Gli oggetti sonori incantati di Salvatore Sciarrino: analisi estetico-cognitiva di Come vengano prodotti gli incantesimi?', NRMI, xxx (1996), 155–79
P. Petazzi: Percorsi viennesi e altro Novecento (Potenza, 1997)
R. Giuliani: Salvatore Sciarrino: catalogo delle opere (Milan, 1999) [incl. further bibliography]

DAVID OSMOND-SMITH

Ścigalski, Franciszek (b Grodzisk, 29 Jan 1782; d Gniezno, 27 Aug/Sept 1846). Polish composer, violinist, conductor and teacher. He began his musical studies with his father Stanisław (1750–1823), Kapellmeister at Grodzisk, and probably continued with Adalbert Dankowski, a member of the orchestra in Obra. In about 1797 he went to Poznań, where he studied with Augustyn Braun at the Maria Magdalena Gymnasium. During this period he became an accomplished violinist and was a member of Antoni Radziwiłł's string quartet; he was also in great demand as a violin teacher. From about 1821 he assumed the duties of orchestra conductor in a parish church in Poznań, and from 1825 to 1834 he was a music teacher at the Maria Magdalena Gymnasium. From April 1834 until his death he was musical director and first violinist of the cathedral orchestra in Gniezno, earning great admiration for his technique and dedication. He also directed the music school there.

Ścigalski's compositions, which are in a mature, classical style, are mainly sacred music. He wrote more than 60 pieces, including some for large-scale forces, and about 30 are still extant. Many show his use of polonaise motifs. His Symphony in D major remains in the Polish repertory.

WORKS

MSS in PL-CZ, GNd, KO, Pa

Sacred: 12 Masses; Requiem, F; 3 cants., 1839, 1840, 1844; Responsorium, perf. Poznań, 1817; Veni Creator; TeD, *c*1810; Salve regina, *c*1815; 7 grads; 6 offs; 3 lits
Other: Sym., D, *c*1810 (Kraków, 1956); 8 vn duets; 3 polonaises, pf, a, D, a (Poznań, 1825)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

T. Strumiłło: 'Do dziejów symfonii polskiej' [History of the Polish symphony], Muzyka, iv/5–6 (1953), 26–45
G. Abraham: 'Some Eighteenth-Century Polish Symphonies', Studies in Eighteenth-Century Music: a Tribute to Karl Geiringer, ed. H.C.R. Landon and R.E. Chapman (New York and London, 1970), 13–22, esp.16
D. Idaszak: Grodzisk Wielkopolski: katalog tematyczny muzykaliów [Grodzisk in Wielkopolska: a thematic catalogue of 'musicalia'] (Kraków, 1993), 171–4, 306–9
A. Nowak-Romanowicz: Klasycyzm: 1750–1830, Historia muzyki polskiej [History of Polish music], ed. S. Sutkowski, vol. 4 (Warsaw, 1995), 53–4, 238–239, 257

BARBARA CHMARA-ŻACZKIEWICZ

Scimone, Claudio (b Padua, 23 Dec 1934). Italian conductor and musicologist. He studied with Zecchi, Mitropoulos and Ferrara. In 1959 he founded at Padua the chamber ensemble I Solisti Veneti, which specializes in 18th-century Italian instrumental music and in contemporary works; Bussotti, Donatoni, Malipiero and Guaccero are among the composers to have written works specially for the group. Scimone has continued to direct it on tours in Europe, the USA and Japan. His work has helped to introduce rediscovered 18th-century Italian instrumental music to a wide audience, and he has edited a number of concertos by Tartini. From 1952 until 1957 he wrote the music column in La gazzetta del Veneto, and from 1961 he taught at conservatories: at Venice until 1967, then at Verona, where he taught chamber music, and from 1974 to 1983 at Padua, where he was director of the conservatory and where in 1968 he became permanent conductor and artistic director of the chamber orchestra. From 1979 to 1986 he was conductor of the Gulbenkian Orchestra in Lisbon.

In the 1970s Scimone became closely associated with the Rossini revival originating at Pesaro; he also participated in a complete edition of Rossini's works. He conducted performances of such works as Mosè in Egitto and Maometto II at Pesaro in the 1980s, Ermione at Padua in 1986, Armida at Amsterdam and Zelmira at Venice in 1988. He conducted L'elisir d'amore at Covent Garden in 1981, and at Venice in 1984 conducted his own reconstruction of Albinoni's Il nascimento dell'aurora. He wrote Segno, significato, interpretazione (Padua, 1970), and was awarded the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Memorial Medal (1969).

CLAUDIO CASINI/R

Scio, Etienne (b Bordeaux, 1766; d Paris, 21 Feb 1796). French composer. He made his début as a composer at the Grand Théâtre, Marseilles, where he was engaged as first violinist in 1788. The impresario Boursault-Malherbe brought him and his colleague Joseph Arquier to Paris in June 1791, when he opened the Théâtre Molière and acted as its first conductor. He left it in 1792 to play second violin in the orchestra of the Théâtre Feydeau, where his two main operas were performed. Lisidore et Monrose (1792) was criticized for plagiarizing Grétry's Richard Coeur-de-lion and Dalayrac's Raoul sire de Créqui; nevertheless it was a success. Lisia (1793), on an exotic subject derived from Dalayrac's Azémia, is notable for the important part played by the chorus and for its constant search for novel sonorities within the French operatic tradition.

Scio's wife, née Julie-Angélique Le Grand (b Lille, 1768; d Paris, 14 July 1807), was a successful soprano. She sang in Montpellier, Avignon and Marseilles before her Paris début in 1792. At the Théâtre Feydeau she created the title role of Cherubini's Médée (1797) and Constance in Les deux journées (1800). (GroveO, 'Scio, Julie-Angélique', E. Forbes; StiegerO).

WORKS

all first performed in Paris; printed works published in Paris

Le réveil de Kamailliaka, ou Le mariage de la folie (op, 2, Monnet), Molière, 4 July 1791

Le sopha (opéra féerie mêlé de vaudevilles et d'ariettes, 2), Molière, 26 Aug 1791, F-Mc

La France régénérée (comédie mêlée de vaudevilles et d'airs nouveaux, 1, Chaussard), Molière, 14 Sept 1791

Lisidore et Monrose (drame héroï-lyrique, 3, Monnet, after F.-T.-M. de Bacular d'Arnaud: Le sire de Créqui), Feydeau, 26 April 1792, excerpts (n.d.)

Lisia (cmda, 2, Monnet), Feydeau, 8 July 1793, *F-Pc, excerpts (n.d.)

Le tambourin de Provence, ou L'heureuse incertitude (comédie mêlée de chant et de danses, 1, Monnet), Palais-Variétés, 13 Sept 1793

MICHEL NOIRAY

Sciolto (It. 'loose', 'free', 'detached'; past participle of sciogliere, to untie, undo, loosen). A word with several distinct meanings in music, mainly applied to bowing. (1) A synonym for staccato, as described by Burney and as seen in the Larghetto of Vivaldi's B minor concerto for four violins (RV580).

(2) A bowing indication for grand détaché, a clear and aggressive separation of the bowstrokes; this seems implied by the direction sciolto in the first movement of Mozart's Haffner Symphony.

(3) A lighter and freer kind of staccato with flexible delivery, described by Joseph Fröhlich (1810–11) as 'with an ease without stiffness, but above all with great agility of the wrist', and found in Szymanowski's Miti, op.30.

(4) An indication that notes are not to be slurred, as described in J.A. Hiller's Anweisung zum Violinspielen (1792): 'Without the word legato, without slurs over the notes, all the notes will be articulated; and if this is the case throughout a passage, it will sometimes be marked with the word sciolto (free)'.

The terms con scioltezza and scioltamente are also found. Closer to the dictionary sense, the term fuga sciolta ('free fugue') was contrasted with the rigorous fuga obbligata; dissonanze sciolte are 'free dissonances'.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BoydenH

C. Brown: 'String Playing Practices in the Classical Orchestra', Basler Jb für historische Musikpraxis, xvii (1993), 41–64

ERIC BLOM/DAVID FALLOWS

Sciortino, Patrice (b Paris, 26 July 1922). French composer. He is the son of the composer Edouard Sciortino, a pupil of d'Indy, who was professor of Gregorian chant and composition at the Schola Cantorum in Paris. Patrice Sciortino began studying music at the age of six with his parents (his mother, a poet, was also an amateur pianist). In 1936 he prepared for entrance both to the Ecole des Beaux-Arts, in drawing, and to the Schola Cantorum, where he went on to study piano with Jules Gentil, harmony and counterpoint with Achylle Philippe and composition with his father (1936–40).

After a spell as cathedral organist and schoolmaster in Alès (1942–6), he returned to Paris, where he pursued several occupations, including organist, accompanist, choral director, orchestrator, poet and dramaturge, in addition to composing for the theatre, cinema, radio and television; he also taught composition at the Conservatoire Européen de Paris, the Conservatoire du XIII e Arrondissement (1979–92) and the Schola Cantorum (from 1995). At the start of the 1960s he studied electro-acoustic techniques of musique concrète at the Groupe de Recherches Musicales. His research into non-European musics led to the composition of Cyclopes for nine percussionists and 52 instruments in 1968. Throughout his oeuvre run the threads of spiritualist questing (Malédictions et lumières, 1969), prolific lyricism and vigorous rhythmic life, as well as a highly characteristic contrapuntal, if not fugal, style. He is the author of L'inventeur d'imaginaire (Paris, 1991), a book on analysis.

WORKS

(selective list)

Op: Atsmeuk, 1965; Strenze, 1973; L'affaire ffopp, 1975; Kio-tchaï, 1980; Round, 1990

Orch: Sym. no.1, 1961; Sym. no.2, 1962; Les cyclopes, 9 perc, 52 exotic insts, 1968; Soleil papier, sym., str, 1972; Ciels pour d'autres hommes, wind band, 1976; La mécanique surnaturelle, wind band, 1976; Society, sym., 1978; Phonie sans cordes, wind, brass, hp, pf, timp, 3 perc, 1979; Cercile, sym., 1982; Vents et vermeil, 1983; Tombeau de Cyr, quadruple conc., tpt, trbn, hn, tuba, str, 3 perc, 1990; Transformes, double conc., accdn, perc, str, 1990; L'orgue des oiseaux, sym., brass, perc

Vocal-orch: Sym. no.3, S, orch, 1963; Malédictions et lumières, orat, S, SATB, large orch, 1969

Other vocal: Edgar Poe, SATB, 9 brass, pf, perc, str, 1977; 7 souffles, 3S, 3A, 3T, 3B, 1980; Entrailles, SATB, 6 perc, 1983; Comptines cosmolitaines, SA, str qt, 1986

Chbr: Chanson d'enfer, 2 pf, 1970; Corps et graphismes, 2 pf, 2 perc, 1973; Contrecordes, 2 vn, 1975; Le vitrail éparpillé, 3 pf, 1976; 3 signatures, 3 cl, 1977; Exultrance, 6 cl, 1978; Salicionaux, 10 rec, 1978; Quadratura d'archi, str qt, 1981; La septième saison, pf trio, 1981; Scanzion, 5 perc, 1985; Avatars conventionnels, vn, pf, 1989; Nosergfol, fl, gui, 1992; Shamisen, str trio, 1994; Quadratura di corde, str qt, 1996

Principal publishers: Arpèges/IMD, Billaudot, Choudens, Transatlantiques

LAURENT FENEYROU

Sciroli [Schiroli, Scivoli, Siroli], Gregorio (b Naples, 5 Oct 1722; d after 1781). Italian composer. He was the son of Salvatori Sciroli, a member ('ripostiere') of the culinary staff of the Duke of Caprigliano. The duke was the composer's godfather and promoted his studies at the Conservatorio della Pietà dei Turchini, which he entered on 1 October 1732. He remained there for ten years, studying with Fago and Leo. His operatic career was characteristic of the time: from 1747, for some ten years, he composed intermezzos, farsettas and full-length comic works for the smaller theatres of Naples, Rome and Palermo. Having then gained some reputation, he appears to have spent the next decade mostly in north Italy writing more important (and better-paid) serious operas for Pisa, Venice, Milan and Bologna.

In his early years he began to teach singing, notably to the soprano Giuseppe Aprile who made his Neapolitan début at the Teatro S Carlo in December 1753, and who derived his nickname 'il Scirolino' from his teacher. In 1752 Sciroli was maestro di cappella to the Prince of Bisignano, and he also directed the Palermo Conservatory (1753–7). Meanwhile the S Carlo engaged him for the season of 1753–4 as second harpsichordist, even though, as the appointment reads, he might find himself obliged to go to Palermo for production of his comic works. His contract in 1756 with the Teatro dei Fiorentini is illustrative of production practices of the time. Sciroli was to write the season's first and third comic operas, to rehearse and conduct the performances and 'to alter arias, recitatives, duets, quartets, finales and even whole acts, as needed'. The first of these works was perhaps La Zita correvata; P. Mililotti, who adapted the libretto of the other, La marina di Chiaia, complained that the production had been beset with constant difficulties, not least of which was Sciroli's need to be in Rome to oversee performances there, and that hence the whole undertaking had had to be put together in greatest haste.

Judging from the amount of his surviving sacred music Sciroli may later have held a church post, possibly in Genoa. His serious opera Merope, for Carnival 1761 in Milan, achieved some réclame, and in November that year, when he was in Genoa, the S Carlo impresario urged the king in Naples to recall him to work at home. Sciroli then received commissions to compose the prologue for the theatre's Carnival opening (perhaps Cafaro's Ipermestra or the revival of J.C. Bach's Alessandro nell'Indie) and the spring opera, Sesostri. But the latter, which may have been a revival of music written for Pisa in 1759, was a failure, and he seems then to have left Naples permanently; he may have settled in Venice about 1766. In 1777 he was in Milan, whence he recommended to the S Carlo management the tenor Gaetano Scovelli (he was eventually engaged for the 1779–80 season).

Sciroli's surviving operas are professionally competent but unimaginative. Merope, written when many new forces were making themselves felt in opera seria, is a conservative work containing arias mechanically following the full da capo form, with the middle section almost invariably in the subdominant. Towards the end of each part of the first section the vocalise had become so stereotyped a feature that it could occur on any word containing the right vowel, regardless of meaning. He had little gift for affective lyricism and constructed his melodies almost obsessively out of triadic members and half-octave scale passages; the number of arias opening with such patterns must make the opera as a whole monotonous. His harmonic vocabulary was limited and the arias contain frequent long activated tonic or dominant pedals. Although he regularly used a fuller orchestra than some composers of the period, with oboes and horns either in C or G, the accompaniments contain little contrapuntal interest. Perhaps the most attractive aria in the opera is 'Misero core amante', marked 'Alla veneziana', a piece in 6/8 metre with some flavour of a popular song, and a frequently repeated rhythmic motif to open phrases. His uninspired melodic style may be more effective in comic arias, where it is mitigated by livelier rhythmic effects, achieved especially through use of rests that interrupt regularity of phrasing. His chamber music also appears more accomplished. A flute concerto a quattro, while conservative in its use of ritornello form for the first and last movements, is fully idiomatic for the instrument. His sonata for B♭ clarinet is one of the earliest for his instrument, and may have been written as the result of a visit to Milan around 1770.

WORKS

DRAMATIC

Capitan Giancocozza (farsa, D.A. Di Fiore), Naples, Fiorentini, carn. 1747
La Smorfiosa (int), Rome, Valle, carn. 1748
Madama Prudenza (farsetta), Rome, Valle, carn. 1749
Ulisse errante (dramma per musica, G. Badoaro), Palermo, S Cecilia, carn. 1749
Il Corrivo (ob, P. Trinchera), Naples, Pace, carn. 1751–2
Il Barone deluso (int, G. Petrosellini), Rome, Capranica, carn. 1752
Linnamorate correvate (ob, Trinchera), Naples, Nuovo, aut.–wint. 1752
La Canterina (int), Messina, Jan 1753
Introduzione alla comedia per musica (B. Bonaiuto), Palermo, Valguarnera, 1753
Il finto pastorello (ob, A. Palomba), Naples, Nuovo, sum. 1755
La caffettiera astuta (farsetta), Naples, carn. 1756, I-Gl
La Zita correvata (ob, P. Mililotti, after G.A. Federico), Naples, Fiorentini, 1756
La marina di Chiaia (ob, B. Saddumene), Naples, Fiorentini, carn. 1757
Il Conte Gian Pascozio in villeggiatura (farsetta), Rome, Capranica, Jan 1757, Gl
L'Ipermestra (pasticcio), Casale Monferrato, aut. 1757
La sposa alla moda (int), Rome, Pace, carn. 1758
La contadina scaltra (int), Lucca, Pubblico, carn. 1759
Nell'amor l'honor, Genoa, Falcone, carn. 1759, ?I-Gl
Sesostri re d'Egitto (dramma per musica, after P. Pariati), Pisa, Pubblico, spr. 1759, P-La [a perf. with this title in Naples, S Carlo, 30 May 1762 may have had new music]
Bellerofonte (dramma per musica), Genoa, Falcone, spr. 1760
Olimpiade (dramma per musica, P. Metastasio), Venice, S Benedetto, aut. 1760, La
Merope (dramma per musica, Zeno), Milan, Regio Ducal, Jan 1761, I-Nc, P-La
Lo Saglemmanco [Act 1] (ob), Naples, ?Nuovo, 1762
Prologo (Venere, Ercole, Espero), Naples, S Carlo, carn. 1762
Alessandro nelle Indie (dramma per musica, Metastasio), Bologna, Pubblico, 31 May 1764, La
Solimano (dramma per musica, G.A. Migliavacca), Venice, S Cassiano, 22 Nov 1766, La
Le nozze in campagna (dg, ?C. Goldoni), Venice, S Moisè, aut. 1768
Il vagabondo fortunato (ob, A. Papi), Brescia, Erranti, Aug 1769
Zemira e Azor (dramma pantocomico), Nice, Maccarini, carn. 1778 (recits only)
La finta ammalata (int), I-Gl [incl. aria by G. Cocchi and trio by R. da Capua]
La villanella innocente (ob), Gl (Act 3 missing)

Duets and arias P. Guglielmi: Antigono, Cremona, carn. 1776–7; arias in N. Jommelli: Don Falcone, Venice, 1762, *I-Gl

Doubtful: Achille in Sciro (dramma per musica, Metastasio), Naples, 1751; Artaserse (Metastasio), 1752, aria Gl; Li negromanti (ob), Naples, Nuovo, 1752; La commediante (ob, after Palomba), Naples, ?before 1754

Arias in HR-OMf, I-Fc, Gl, MAav

SACRED

Primum fatale homicidium (orat), Venice, 1768
La morte di Eleazaro (orat), Genoa, S Filippo Neri, I-Gl
5 Masses, 2 choirs [3–4vv each], 1 dated 1779, Gl; 3 Masses (Ky–Gl), 4–5vv, 1 dated 1739, CH-A; Kyrie, 3–4vv, 1781, I-Gl; Gloria, 4vv CH-EN; 2 Credo, I-Bc, Gl; Gratias agimus, Gl
Miserere, 3vv, 1734, Gl; Miserere, S, A, T, B, insts, GB-Cu; Caelestis urbs Jerusalem, 1772, *S-Smf; Iste confessor, 1772, *Smf; Laudate pueri, 1774, I-BGi, Gl; Lauda Jerusalem, 3vv, 1775, Gl; Iste confessor, 1776, BGi; Salve Regina, 1776, GB-Lbl, I-BGi, 1776, Gl; Lectio VII, 1778, Gl; Magnificat, 3–4vv, 1778, BGi, Gl; 2 Laetatus sum, 1779, Gl; Nisi Dominus, 1779, BGi; 2 Tantum ergo, 1779, Gl, 1780, BGi, Beatus vir, Gl; Deus in adiutorium e Dixit, Gl; Dixit, CH-E; Dixit Dominus, 5vv, BM, I-Sd; Litanie, 4vv, Gl

5 motets, Gl; Fremat irato mare, Sd; A sexta hora tenebrae factae sunt, 1770, *S-Smf

INSTRUMENTAL

6 Terzetti, 2 vn, bc, op.1 (Paris, 1770)
Sonata, cl, bc, B♭, ed. N. Delius (Mainz, 1990)
5 concs., orch, 1764–9, CH-A, I-Gl; Vn Conc., Gl; Ob Conc., Gl; Fl Conc., Nc
Ovs.: Gl (5), MAav, Mc

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Scherillo: L'opera buffa napoletana durante il Settecento: storia letteraria (Naples, 1883, 2/1916/R), 259–60, 281
G. Sorge: I teatri di Palermo (Palermo, 1926), 399
U. Prota-Giurleo: Nicola Logroscino, 'il dio dell'opera buffa' (Naples, 1927)
F. De Maria: Il Regio Conservatorio di musica di Palermo (Florence, 1941)
E. Santaro: Il teatro di Cremona, i (Cremona, 1969), 141, 273
F. Dorsi: 'Un intermezzo di Niccolò Jommelli: Don Falcone', NRMI, xix (1985), 432–57
N. Delius: 'Wiederentdeckte italianische Klarinettenmusik', Tibia, xv (1990), 41–2
G. Feder: Dramaturgische Aspekte der Cantarina-Intermezzi von Sciroli (1753), Conforto (1754), Piccinni (1760) und Haydn (1766), Napoli e il teatro musicale in Europa tra Sette e Ottocento: Studi in onore di Friedrich Lippmann, ed. B.M. Antolini and W. Witzenmann (Florence, 1993), 55–67

JAMES L. JACKMAN

Sciutti, Graziella (b Turin, 17 April 1927). Italian soprano. She studied in Rome and made her début as Lucy in The Telephone at the 1951 Aix-en-Provence Festival. There she also sang Susanna, Despina and Zerlina and in 1954 created the title role of Sauguet's Les caprices de Marianne. That year she made her British début as Rosina at Glyndebourne and sang the Duchess in Paisiello's Don Chisciotte to reopen the restored Teatrino di Corte in Naples. In 1955 she sang Carolina (Il matrimonio segreto) to inaugurate the Piccola Scala. She appeared many times in both the smaller and the larger auditoriums; her parts included the title role in La Cecchina, Adèle (Le comte Ory), Norina and Paisiello's Nina.

Sciutti made her Covent Garden début as Oscar in 1956 and returned to sing Nannetta, Susanna and Despina. She made her American début at San Francisco in 1961 as Susanna. She sang regularly at Salzburg and in Vienna and also appeared in Paris in Sacha Guitry and Reynaldo Hahn's Mozart and as Polly (Die Dreigroschenoper). In 1970 she returned to Glyndebourne as Fiorilla and in 1977 she sang in her own production of La voix humaine there. Her vivacity, pointed phrasing and clear diction made her an outstanding soubrette singer. Among her recordings are her Mozart roles, Marzelline (in Maazel's Fidelio) and French song. In the 1980s she worked as a director in New York and Chicago.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GV (R. Celletti, incl. discography)
H. Rosenthal: Great Singers of Today (London, 1966)
J.T. Hughes: 'The Art of Graziella Sciutti', International Classical Record Collector, ii/8 (1996–7), 37–44

HAROLD ROSENTHAL/ALAN BLYTH

Scliar (Cabral), Esther (b Porto Alegre, 28 Sept 1926; d Rio de Janeiro, 18 March 1978). Brazilian composer, pianist and teacher. She first studied the piano and harmony in Porto Alegre and undertook further studies, in composition, in Rio de Janeiro with Hans Joachim Koellreutter, Cláudio Santoro and Edino Krieger from 1948 to 1952, with a period spent in Italy in 1948 as a conducting pupil of Hermann Scherchen. In 1952, in Porto Alegre, she formed the chorus of the Associação Juvenil Musical, with which she toured Europe the following year. In 1956 she settled in Rio de Janeiro and taught musical analysis and form at the Instituto Villa-Lobos and at the Pró-Arte music school (1962–75). She composed mainly chamber and vocal works, and among the awards she received were first prize for her Piano Sonata in the 1961 Brazilian National Radio competition and a prize at the Brasília film festival in 1966 for her music for the film A Derrota; she also wrote two theoretical works, Elementos de teoria musical (São Paulo, 2/1985–7) and Fraseologia musical (Porto Alegre, 1982).

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: O auto da barca do inferno, prelude, 1962
Chamber and solo inst: Pf Sonata, 1961; Sonata, fl, pf, 1962; Str Qt, 1963; Imbricata, fl, ob, pf, 1976; Estudo no.1, gui, 1976
Choral and vocal: Desenho leve, chorus, 1962; Canto menor com final heróico, chorus, 1964; A busca da identidade entre o homem e o rio, chorus, 1971; Entre o ser e as coisas, 1v, pf, 1973; Toada de gabinete, chorus, 1976

Principal publisher: Fundação Nacional de Arte (Rio de Janeiro)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.M. Neves: Música contemporânea brasileira (São Paulo, 1977), 104, 141
V. Mariz: História da música no Brasil (Rio de Janeiro, 2/1983), 281

IRATI ANTONIO

Scofield, John (b Dayton, OH, 26 Dec 1951). American electric guitarist. He became attracted to rhythm and blues, urban blues and rock and roll at an early age, particularly the playing of the guitarists B.B. King, Albert King and Chuck Berry. He attended the Berklee College of Music (1970–73), where he studied with Gary Burton and Mick Goodrick. In 1974 the latter recommended him for a reunion concert at Carnegie Hall of the band led by Gerry Mulligan and Chet Baker. Shortly thereafter Scofield was invited to join the jazz-rock group led by Billy Cobham and George Duke; he remained with this ensemble for two years. Later he played with Burton for a year and also performed and recorded with such musicians as Charles Mingus (1977), Jay McShann (1977–8), Ron Carter and Lee Konitz. In 1977 he formed his own band, with Richard Beirach, George Mraz and Joe LaBarbera, with which he toured Europe and recorded John Scofield Live, his first album as a leader. He recorded again the following year, and in 1980 formed a trio with Adam Nussbaum and Steve Swallow which made three highly acclaimed albums. At the end of 1982 he joined Miles Davis's band, which had two guitarists until Mike Stern left in 1983. After leaving Davis he continued to record as a leader; his recordings for Gramavision, beginning with Still Warm (1987), display his blend of blues and country styles with the harmonic sophistication of bop. Later albums have included the critically acclaimed Time on my Hands (1990, BN) and the acoustic Quiet (1996, Verve). Scofield is also a member of the band Bass Desires with Peter Erskine and Bill Frisell. He has composed many pieces for his own albums.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveJ
L. Jeske: 'Profile: John Scofield', Down Beat, xlvii/2 (1980), 51
J. Ferguson: 'John Scofield', Guitar Player, xxi/6 (1987), 78–80; repr. in Secrets from the Masters: Conversations with Forty Great Guitar Players, ed. D. Menn (New York, 1992), 232–5
B. Milkowski: 'John Scofield: All Shades of Blue', Down Beat, liv/1 (1987), 16–18, 59 only [incl. discography]

BILL MILKOWSKI

Scola, Adamo (fl London, 1739–48). Italian editor and music teacher. He is known through two publications that appeared in London in the mid-18th century. The first, Essercizi per gravicembalo di Don Domenico Scarlatti, a handsome edition mostly engraved by Fortier, with an ornate frontispiece by Jacopo Amigoni, carries this warning: 'Beware of incorrect printed Editions, a Scandal in this great Nation, and let not its fundamental Principles of Liberty and Prosperity be abus'd by vile Worms that gnaw the Fruit of others ingenious Labour and Expence'. Scola's other piece of work, published by Walsh, is Venetian Ballad's Compos'd by Sigr Hasse and all the Celebrated Italian Masters; it appeared in three volumes, 1742–8, and is introduced by Scola's dedication in Italian to 'Carlo Sackvill Conte di Middlesex'. In 1744 Scola was a governor of the Fund for the Support of Decay'd Musicians and their Families. The only record of his being a performer himself appears in the advertisement for the Scarlatti Essercizi in the Country Journal, 27 January 1739: these sonatas were to be obtained from 'Mr Adamo Scola, Musick Master in Vine Street, near Swallow Street, Piccadilly, over against the Brewhouse, London'. (Grove5 (W.C. Smith); Humphries-SmithMP)

OWAIN EDWARDS/R

Scolari, Giuseppe (b Vicenza, ?1720; d ?Lisbon, after 1774). Italian composer. He appears to have led the life of a travelling opera composer, with no fixed appointment. For many years he was in Venice, but from 1750 to 1752 or 1753 he was evidently at Barcelona. He may have been married to the Bolognese singer Barbara Narici (who is called Narici Scolari in one of the Barcelona librettos). Perhaps as early as 1766, certainly by 1768, he was in Lisbon; the presence of a fairly extensive collection of his scores (including one dated 1774) in the library of the Palácio Nacional da Ajuda suggests that he died in Lisbon some years later.

Scolari was among the first north Italian composers to take up the new style of comic opera that emanated from Naples and Rome in the early 1740s and dominated the European stage in the second half of the century. Though overshadowed by Galuppi and others, he appears to have enjoyed considerable success, notably with La cascina, written for him by Goldoni, which spread far and wide (in Spain it eventually joined the nascent zarzuela repertory, as Las queseras); and since the libretto has very little merit, the credit for the opera's success must be imputed to Scolari, who displayed a gift for ingratiating melody in some of its best numbers.

WORKS

OPERAS

dg – dramma giocoso
dm – dramma per musica

Il Pandolfo (commedia per musica, 3), Venice, S Samuele, aut. 1745
La fata maravigliosa (dg, 3), Venice, S Cassiano, carn. 1745–6
L'Olimpiade (dm, 3, P. Metastasio), Venice, S Moisè, carn. 1746–7
Il vello d'oro (dm, 3, G. Palazzi), Venice, S Cassiano, carn. 1748–9
Alessandro nell'Indie (dm, 3, Metastasio), Vicenza, Piazza, carn. 1749, arias I-Gl
Il chimico (dg, A. Palomba), Barcelona, Santa Cruz, 23 Sept 1750
Didone abbandonata (dm, 3, Metastasio), Barcelona, Santa Cruz, 30 May 1752; rev., Ferrara, carn. 1763
Chi tutto abbraccia nulla stringe (dg, 3, B. Vitturi), Venice, S Moisè, aut. 1753, D-Dl according to Eitner; as L'avaro schernito, Lugo, 1754; as L'avaro burlato, Copenhagen, aut. 1762
Adriano in Siria (dm, 3, Metastasio), Venice, S Samuele, carn. 1753–4
Il filosofo chimico poeta (dg), Jerez de la Frontera, 1754
Cajo Fabricio (dm, 3, A. Zeno), Rome, Capranica, 2 Jan 1755, P-La
La cascina (dm, 3, C. Goldoni), Venice, S Samuele, 26 Dec 1755, F-Pn, I-Fc, P-La; as La Campagna, Bassano, 1763; also as Las queseras
Statira (dm, 3, Goldoni), Venice, S Samuele, Ascension 1756, duet I-MOe
L'Andromaca (dm, G.M. Viganò), Lodi, Sociale, 20 Jan 1757
Artaserse (dm, 3, Metastasio), Pavia, Homodei, carn. 1757, aria Nc, aria CMbc
Rosbale (dg, 3, F. Silvani), Padua, Nuovo, June 1757, P-La
La conversazione (dg, 3, Goldoni), Venice, S Samuele, carn. 1758, A-Wn, I-Fc
Il ciarlatano (dg, 3), Venice, S Moisè, aut. 1759, as Il finto cavaliero, Modena, aut. 1760
Lo staffiere finto nobile (operetta comica), Copenhagen, Danish, aut. 1760
La buona figliuola maritata (dg, 3, Goldoni), Murano, 24 April 1762
Il viaggiatore ridicolo (dg, 3, Goldoni), Milan, Ducale, sum. 1762 [with some music from Mazzoni setting of 1757], F-Pc
La famiglia in scompiglio (dg, 3), Parma, Ducale, 26 Oct 1762, D-Dl according to Eitner
Il Tamerlano (dm, 3, A. Piovene), Milan, Ducale, 26 Dec 1763, I-Nc, P-La
La costanza delle donne (dg), Turin, Carignano, spr. 1764
Cajo Mario (dm, 3, G. Roccaforte), Milan, Ducale, Jan 1765, I-Nc, P-La
Il ciarlone (int, Palomba), Rome, Valle, carn. 1765
La schiava riconosciuta (dg, 3 'Alcindo Isaurense, P.A.') Bologna, Formagliari, sum. 1765, collab. Piccinni; rev., Venice, 1766, ?entirely by Scolari
La donna stravagante (dg, 3, 'Alcindo Isaurense, P.A.'), Venice, S Samuele, carn. 1765–6, La
Antigono (dm, 3, Metastasio), Naples, S Carlo, 30 May 1766, La; S-Skma according to Eitner
Il trionfo di Camilla (dm), Modena, Rangoni, carn. 1767
L'Arcifanfano (dg, 2, Goldoni), Lisbon, Rua dos Condes, Sept 1768
La betulia liberata (op, Metastasio), Lisbon, 1768
Il viaggiatore ridicolo (dg, Goldoni), Lisbon, 1770 [? unrelated to 1762 setting]
Il Bejglierbej di Caramania (dg, G. Tonioli), Lisbon, Bairro Alto, sum. 1771
Eponina (dm, 3, G.F. Fattiboni), Cádiz, 20 Jan 1772
Alle dame (burletta), ?Lisbon, 1774, P-La
Giulia Mammea, F-Pn

Substitute arias in G.M. Rutini's I matrimoni in maschera, as Il tuttore burlato (dg, 3), Rovigo, aut. 1764

OTHER VOCAL

Serenata a sei voci, Padua, Nuovo, 15 July 1760
Arias: 2 arias, S, insts; Già la morte; all D-Dl; Sì mora l'audace, T, orch, SWl; Se al labbro mio non credi, A, insts, 1758, I-Pca; En ti espero dueño amado; Grandi è ver son le mie pene; both E-Bc: all cited in EitnerQ
Canzonetta nuova e geniale, S, bc, D-Dl

INSTRUMENTAL

Ov. in Sei Overture a più stromenti: composte da vari autori (Paris, *c*1760)
Sym., D; Vn Conc., G: both listed in Breitkopf catalogues, 1766
Sinfonia, Bsb: cited in EitnerQ

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; GerberL
G. Ortolani and others, eds.: Opere complete di Carlo Goldoni (Venice, 1907–71)
E. Cotarelo y Mori: Origines y establecimiento de la ópera en España hasta 1800 (Madrid, 1917)
E. Cotarelo y Mori: Historia de la zarzuela (Madrid, 1934)

PIERO WEISS

Scolica [Scholica, Scolia] enchiriadis. See MUSICA ENCHIRIADIS, SCOLICA ENCHIRIADIS.

Scolium (Lat.). See SKOLION.

Scone Antiphoner (GB-En 5.1.15). See SOURCES, MS, §IX, 19.

Scontrino, Antonio (b Trapani, Sicily, 17 May 1850; d Florence, 7 Jan 1922). Italian double bass player and composer. His father, a carpenter, was an ardent music lover and amateur instrument maker. Antonio joined the family orchestra at the age of seven, playing on a cello adapted to serve as a double bass. From 1861 to 1870 he studied at the Palermo Conservatory where his teachers included Luigi Alfano (harmony) and Pietro Platania (counterpoint and composition). He then toured as a double bass virtuoso throughout southern Italy. In 1871 he obtained the libretto of an opera from Leopoldo Marenco, but the work, Matelda, was not produced until 1879.

Aided by a grant from the municipality and province of Trapani, Scontrino went in 1871 to Munich, where for two years he studied German music. In 1874 he went to England as a member of Mapleson's orchestra and afterwards settled in Milan as a teacher of instrumental, vocal and theoretical music. He was appointed professor of counterpoint and composition at the Palermo Conservatory in 1891, and the following year gained a similar professorship at the Istituto Musicale in Florence.

WORKS
(selective list)

published in Milan unless otherwise stated

STAGE

Matelda (op, 4, L. Marenco), Milan, Verme, 19 June 1879 (1879)
Il progettista (farsa, 1, U. Barbieri), Rome, Argentina, 8 Feb 1882 (1882)
Il sortilegio (op, 3, G. de Nobili), Turin, Alfieri, 21 June 1882 (1882)
Gringoire (op, 1, V. Treves, after T. de Banville), Milan, private perf., 24 May 1890 (1890)
Cortigiana (op, 4, G.F. Cimino), Milan, Verme, 30 Jan 1896 (1896)
Francesca da Rimini (incid music, G. D'Annunzio), Rome, Costanzi, 10 Dec 1901

OTHER WORKS

Choral and vocal: Gloria, fugue, 8vv (1890); Tota pulchra es, motet, 4vv (1894); Piccola cant, female vv, I-TRP; Salva regina, S, str qt, TRP; Intima vita (E. Panzacchi), song cycle, PLcon; 31 separate songs, 1v, pf
Orch: Ov. to Celeste (L. Marenco), Milan, Scala, 29 May 1881 (1882); Sinfonia marinaresca, Florence, 12 Feb 1897 (1897); Db Conc, Hamburg, 18 Oct 1908, Fc; Sinfonia romantica, Berlin, 9 March 1914, Nc; Preludio religioso, 22 Dec 1919, PLcon; Bn Conc., Florence, 20 Dec 1920, PLcon; Pf Conc, PLcon
Chbr: Valzer capriccioso, str qt, PLcon; Preludio e fuga, str qt (Leipzig, 1895); Str Qt, g (Leipzig, 1901); Str Qt, C (Leipzig, 1903); Str Qt, a (Leipzig, 1905); Bozzetto, cl, pf (Florence, 1909); Str Qt, F (Leipzig, 1918); 8 pubd works, vn, pf, incl. Sonata, F (Leipzig, n.d.); Adagio, vn, wind insts, PLcon; Works for vc, pf, pubd and PLcon
Solo inst: 2 mazzurche (1865); Bizzarrie (1870); 12 bozzetti (1895); Marcia paesana (Florence, 1910): all pf; 7 pezzi, db (n.d.); Works for vc, pubd and PLcon

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Antonio Scontrino nella vita e nell'arte (Trapani, 1935)
A. Damerini: 'Ricordo di Antonio Scontrino', I grandi anniversari del 1960 e la musica sinfonica e da camera nell'Ottocento in Italia, Chigiana, xvii (1960), 101–7
L. Summer: 'Un esponente della rinascita strumentale italiana di fine Ottocento: Antonio Scontrino', Ottocento e oltre: scritti in onore di Raoul Meloncelli, ed. F. Izzo and J. Streicher (Rome, 1993), 437–50 [with list of works]

J.A. FULLER MAITLAND/R

Scop (Old Eng.; Old Norse skop: 'mocking'; Old Swedish skiup: 'contumely'). A poet or singer. The word may be derived from the proto-Germanic skopon ('dance'), suggesting that the scop originally danced as well as sang. Late Latin sources record that the Germanic tribes had professional singers who accompanied themselves on the harp; the singers served as tribal historians, entertainers and teachers, and also composed satirical verses. Old English and Anglo-Latin literature provides further information about the scop. Widsith mentions that kings rewarded scops' performances, and the scop in Beowulf is a nobleman.

Fragments of lap harps or lyres have been discovered in burial mounds at Sutton Hoo and Taplow Barrow in England, but it is unclear whether they were used to accompany all poetic recitation. In Beowulf the sound of the harp and the clear song of the scop are heard in Hrothgar's hall; however, the use of parallelism in Old English poetry makes it possible to interpret the lines as saying either that the harp accompanied the scop's performance or that the performance of harp music was separate. Bede's Historia ecclesiastica gentis Anglorum states that Caedmon left the table when he was supposed to perform verses accompanied by the harp, but that he composed poetry without musical accompaniment for the angel who came to him in a vision. Both the Scop's method of playing the harp and the nature of the accompaniment (if any) are disputed. Some sources refer to playing with the hand, and some indicate that a plectrum (sceacol) was used. Since extant Old English poetry is formulaic, it may have had a somewhat monotonous melodic accompaniment such as that provided by the gusle in contemporary south Slavic poetry. Other theories hold that the harp provided a rhythmic base without melody, or that the harp was plucked only during 'rests' in the poem.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L.F. Anderson: The Anglo-Saxon Scop (diss., U. of Toronto, 1902)
J.B. Bessinger: 'Beowulf and the Harp at Sutton Hoo', University of Toronto Quarterly, xxvii (1957), 148–68
C.L. Wrenn: 'Two Anglo-Saxon Harps', Comparative Literature, xiv (1962), 118–28
E. Werlich: Der westgermanische Skop: der Aufbau seiner Dichtung und sein Vortrag (diss., U. of Münster, 1964)
J.B. Bessinger: 'The Sutton Hoo Harp Replica and Old English Musical Verse', Old English Poetry: Fifteen Essays, ed. R.P. Creed (Providence, RI, 1967), 3–26
I.M. Hollowell: 'Scop and Woðbora in OE Poetry', Journal of English and Germanic Philology, lxxvii (1978), 317–29

ALEXANDRA H. OLSEN

Scordatura [descordato, discordato] (It., from scordare: 'to mistune'; Fr. discordé, discordable, discordant; Ger. Umstimmung, Verstimmung). A term applied largely to lutes, guitars, viols and the violin family to designate a tuning other than the normal, established one. Scordatura was first introduced early in the 16th century and enjoyed a particular vogue between 1600 and 1750. It offered novel colours, timbres and sonorities, alternative harmonic possibilities and, in some cases, extension of an instrument's range. It could also assist in imitating other instruments, and facilitate the execution of whole compositions or make possible various passages involving wide intervals, intricate string crossing or unconventional double stopping. North American and Scottish fiddlers commonly adopt 'open' tunings such as a–e′–a′–e″, which emphasize particular keys (ex.1), for greater resonance when playing chords and arpeggios and to facilitate the use, as drones, of open strings adjacent to the one on which the melody is being played.

Ex.1

The term scordatura has also been applied to instruments which had no standard tuning, such as the VIOLA D'AMORE (before about 1750), the LYRA VIOL, and folk instruments such as the Norwegian HARDANGER FIDDLE and the Romanian vioară, but in such cases the term 'accordatura' (It.; Fr. accord; 'tuning') is more well suited.

1. Violin and viola. 2. Violoncello and double bass. 3. Lute and guitar. 4. The viol family.

1. VIOLIN AND VIOLA. Any tuning of the violin and viola other than their established tunings (g–d′–a′–e″ and c–g–d′–a′ respectively) is defined as scordatura. The required tuning is usually indicated at the beginning of a piece, the notation of which is generally such that the player reads and fingers it as if the violin were in the normal tuning (in effect, a species of tablature), and presupposes that open strings and 1st position will be used unless otherwise indicated. Accidentals in key signatures apply only to the specific note and not to its octave above or below, thus resulting in some strange signatures and a confusing relationship between the appearance and the actual sound of the score, as shown in ex.2 (from Biber's 'Mystery' Sonata no.11, ?1674). Only rarely have composers prescribed the actual sounding notes in a scordatura piece and left performers to determine their own fingering (e.g. Biagio Marini, Sonate op.8 no.2, 1629; Baillot, L'art du violon, 1834; and Szigeti's transcription for violin and piano of M.F. Gnesin's Spielmannslied), because this is harder for the player to realize quickly. Composers seldom require a string to be retuned during a piece, despite the examples in Marini's Sonate op.8, Biber's Sonatae violino solo no.6 (1681), Baillot's Etudes op. posth. nos.15 and 23 (1851), Stravinsky's Firebird Suite (1910), and Bax's First Symphony (1922), because such retuning is hard to achieve with accuracy and tends to be unstable.

Inspired by the practice of 16th-century French lutenists, who used the term avallé or ravallé (or avalé or ravalé) to refer to a 'lowered' string (see CORDES AVALLÉES), violinists introduced scordatura in the early 17th century, Marini providing the first known example (Sonate op.8). Many others followed suit in Italy (Uccellini, Giovanni Bononcini, Lonati), in Germany (C.H. Abel, Georg Arnold, Johann Fischer, J.E. Kindermann, Pachelbel, J.H. Schmelzer, N.A. Strungk, P.H. Erlebach), and in England, where the earliest examples are found in some unaccompanied violin pieces by Thomas Baltzar and Davis Mell (in GB-Och 433), and in Playford's The Division Violin (1684). Biber, however, made the most extensive use of scordatura. 14 of his 'Mystery' or 'Rosary' Sonatas (?1674) specify different scordaturas, as well as two of his Sonatae violino solo (1681) and six suites of his Harmonia artificiosa-ariosa (n.p., 1696; Nuremberg, 1712). Each of the tunings in the 'Mystery' Sonatas is related either to the main notes of the tonality of its sonata, thus reinforcing the sonority, or is intended to overcome technical problems. The extraordinary tuning g–d′–g′–d″, produced by interchanging the D and A strings) for no.11 ('The Resurrection of Christ'; ex.2) opens up a whole new range of possibilities on the instrument; it affords very different combinations of notes for double and multiple stopping, as well as a variety of different timbres, and enables the violinist to play difficult 10ths (and octaves) with relative ease. That of no.12 ('The Ascent of Christ to Heaven'; ex.3) is contrived to imitate the trumpet. For the tunings of Sonatas nos.7, 9 and 12, the raising of the lowest string to c′ makes it advisable for a D string to be substituted for the G string in order to avoid imposing extreme tension on the instrument. Biber's imaginative application of such tunings far transcended the simple purposes of the original scordaturas by making possible special arpeggio and bariolage effects in a particular key. His works marked the zenith of scordatura practice, making it, according to Georg Falck (Idea boni cantoris, 1688), a device for the 'masters'. However, J.J. Walther, in the preface to his Hortulus chelicus (1688), emphatically rejected its use.

Ex.2

Ex.3

From the 18th century the use of scordatura declined in Germany and by 1752 Quantz (Versuch) considered it obsolete, but it became more popular in France and Italy. La Laurencie claimed that it was adopted in about 1713 by French violinists for the execution of certain préludes; however, Corrette was the first Frenchman to introduce it in published violin music ('Pièces à cordes ravallées' in L'école d'Orphée, 1738), specifying four different tunings. He was emulated by Jean Lemaire (Sonata no.1, 1739), Tremais (Sonates op.4 nos.2, 4 and 6, *c*1740) and Isidore Bertheaume (Sonate pour le violon dans le stile de Lolly, 1786, and Sonata op.4 no.2, 1787). Tremais offered two notations for each of his three sonatas, one in scordatura and the other in the normal tuning for the benefit of those unfamiliar with the device.

Pietro Castrucci, Emanuele Barbella, Lolli, Vivaldi, Tartini, Nardini and Bartolomeo Campagnoli are among the Italians who persevered with scordatura. Vivaldi used it in some of his violin concertos (e.g. op.9 nos.6 and 12, 1727). Lolli specified lowering the g string of the violin to d (ex.4), thus allowing the violin to accompany itself; pieces in this particular scordatura were described as 'in the style of Lolli'. Similarly, the tuning for the Sonate énigmatique for solo violin, attributed to Nardini, enables the performer to 'play his own bass'. The upper two strings, normally tuned, are notated as normal in the treble clef on the upper staff, while the lower two strings, raised to c′ and f′, are notated in the bass clef on the second staff as G and d respectively, an octave below the normal tuning (ex.5). Barbella contrived to imitate the viola d'amore with another tuning, a–d′–f♯′–c♯″ (ex.6), which was later also adopted by Campagnoli (who recommended using thick a′ and e″ strings for the f♯′ and c♯″, and playing con sordino for the optimum effect) and the Spanish composer Pablo Rosquellas.

Ex.4

'Transcription scordaturas', in which all four strings were raised either a tone or a semitone for greater brilliance, carrying power and facility of execution, were used in several late 18th-century pieces for viola. The most significant example is Mozart's Sinfonia concertante for violin and viola K364/320*d* (1779–80), in which all the strings of the viola are tuned a semitone higher than usual. Other notable examples include Vanhal's Concerto in F (written in E♭ for the viola), Carl Stamitz's Sonata in B♭ (written in A for the viola), and, according to one manuscript source (US-Wc), Stamitz's Symphonie concertante for violin and viola, which involves both solo instruments being tuned up a semitone.

Most 19th-century composers believed that there was more to be lost than gained from scordatura, on account of its special notation and playing requirements, the detrimental effect of higher tensions on the strings and the instrument, the inherent intonation problems (especially if several pieces with different tunings were to be performed in the course of a concert), the need to adapt the bow speed, bow pressure and contact point to suit string textures, tensions and thicknesses, and the resultant changes in instrumental timbre. Nevertheless, it was exploited by various violin virtuosos to broaden the technical and expressive boundaries of their art. Its usage was generally limited either to transposition scordaturas for greater facility of execution, additional tonal colour, intensity, and brilliance over the orchestra (e.g. Paganini's Violin Concerto no.1, 1816; I palpiti, 1819; and Il carnevale di Venezia, 1829; also some of Spohr's duets for violin and harp); or a raised tuning of the g string for the una corda bravura of such virtuosos as Paganini, Bériot and Vieuxtemps. Paganini most commonly tuned the g string up to b♭ (Introduction and Variations on 'Dal tuo stellato soglio' from Rossini's Mosè in Egitto, ?1819), while Vieuxtemps's 'Norma' fantasia op.18 (*c*1845) requires it to be raised to c′. Berlioz (Grand traité d'instrumentation, 1843) reported that Bériot, like Mazas (Barcarolle français op.9) frequently raised 'merely the g' a whole tone in his concertos. Baillot and Winter, on the other hand, sometimes lowered that string to f♯ or f in order to 'produce softer and deeper effects'. Baillot's Etude no.15 involves lowering the string to f♯ during the course of the piece, while in Etude no.23 a cadenza-like passage is introduced by tuning the g string downwards through semitones to d (while playing), persisting with the resultant tuning to the end (ex.7).

Although the incidence of scordatura declined towards the end of the 19th century, it never became obsolete: sonority, as opposed to brilliance, became the principal reason for its use. Significant late 19th-century examples include Saint-Saëns's Danse macabre (1874), in which the solo violin is required to tune the e″ string down to e♭″, enabling diminished chords to be played on open strings, and Strauss's Ein Heldenleben (1897–8, violin) and Don Quixote (1897; the range of a solo viola is extended by lowering the c string to B). In the 20th century composers such as Mahler (Fourth Symphony, completed in 1900; solo violin in the second movement), Stravinsky (Firebird Suite, 1910; first violins), Bax (First Symphony, second movement, 1922; violins and violas), Hindemith (Symphonische Tänze, third movement, 1937; second violins), Inghelbrecht (La valse retrouvée, 1937; viola), Bartók (Contrasts, 1938; violin), Giacinto Scelsi (String Quartets nos.3 and 4, 1963–4, and Xnoybis, 1964; violin), Aldo Clementi (Concerto for violin, small orchestra and carillon, 1977), Reinhard Febel (Polyphonie, 1981; solo violin) and Fabio Vacchi (Quintetto, 1987; violin) were also attracted to the novel sonorities offered by the device. Stravinsky, for example, required the first violins to tune their e″ strings down a tone in order to play arpeggios in natural harmonics all on this string and in the key of D (ex.8). Clementi raised the a′ and e″ strings of the solo violin by a quarter-tone, while Albert Stoessel's tuning (a♭–d′–a′–e♭″) for the violin in his Flitting Bats for violin and piano (1925) facilitates the playing of glissandos in diminished 5ths. Scelsi's (f′–g′–b′–d♯″ for Xnoybis) and Vacchi's (g–d′–c′–g′) tunings are somewhat extreme and experimental, Scelsi using his to 'explore the phenomena of wavering single-note surfaces'.

2. Violoncello and double bass. Although the normal cello tuning is C–G–d–a, and any deviation from this may be regarded as scordatura, the tunings B♭′–F–c–g (associated with the Bass violin in the 16th and 17th centuries) and C–G–d–g (the so-called 'Italian' tuning, employed by Domenico Gabrielli, B.G. Marcello, Giuseppe Torelli and others at the end of the 17th century) were also occasionally used as established tunings, and are thus not always scordaturas as such. However, the earliest known instance of a cello tuning being considered by a composer to be a variation from the normal is, in fact, C–G–d–g: the 'Capricio' from Sonata no.2 of Luigi Taglietti's Suonate da camera, op.1 (1697), bears the instruction 'discordatura' and indicates this tuning by an incipit. The earliest example of a cello transposition scordatura is found in Jacob Klein's VI sonates op.1, bk3 (1717); all six sonatas employ the tuning D–A–e–b. In Klein's VI duetti op.2 (1719), C–G–d–g is employed only in the sixth duet. J.S. Bach's solo cello suite no.5 in C minor (BWV1011) is the latest example of cello scordatura from the Baroque period and uses the 'Italian' tuning.

Cello scordatura was abandoned as a technique for most of the 18th century and was used sparingly in the 19th-century chamber music repertory (e.g. Schumann's Piano Quartet op.47, which uses B♭′–G–d–a). 20th-century chamber and orchestral works that employ cello scordatura include Alban Berg's Lyric Suite, Stravinsky's The Rite of Spring and Respighi's Pini di Roma, which all employ the tuning B′–G–d–a. Solo works for cello scordatura include Kodály's Sonata op.8 (which uses B′–F♯–d–a) and Ralph Shapey's Krosnick Soli (A′–G–d–a).

The unique evolution of the double bass as a three-, four- and five-string instrument has made it difficult to establish a single tuning as standard. While the generally accepted bass 'orchestral' tuning is E′–A′–D–G, the use of different tunings has been an idiomatic feature of the development of the double bass, being chiefly used to enhance sound projection and clarity. Much of the solo bass repertory requires the use of scordatura, the most common being the 'solo' tuning F♯′–B′–E–A (i.e. tuning all four strings up a whole tone). Scordatura has also been adopted in the jazz bass tradition; Red Mitchell employed a tuning in 5ths, C′–G′–D–A, and Ron Carter tuned a piccolo bass A′–D–G–c.

3. LUTE AND GUITAR. The lute, having the largest surviving solo repertory of any instrument before the 19th century, has the greatest number of pieces in scordatura tunings (approximately 1600). A distinction should be made between simple CORDES AVALLÉES, a lowering of one course (usually the lowest of the 16th-century lute) in order to achieve a slightly wider open-string range, and true scordatura tunings, which exploit special effects such as drones and, more importantly, enhance the instrument's resonances in various keys.

For the lute, as well as the early guitar, other plucked instruments, and viols played in the lyra-viol fashion, the development of scordatura is linked to the use of TABLATURE, a form of notation from which even the most unusual of tunings can be read and played as easily as the most normal one. The standard lute tuning throughout the 16th century (in Italy up to the 18th century) employed the following intervals, from the lowest to the highest main fingered courses: 4th–4th–major 3rd–4th–4th. (Interval patterns are given, rather than specific note names, due to the considerable variance of letter names and relative pitches used in the sources; however, for a lute with a top course tuned to g′, this pattern would result in the tuning G–c–f–a–d′–g′, disregarding any octave stringing on lower, doubled courses.) An early example of an altered tuning is 4th–5th–major 3rd–4th–4th (J.A. Dalza: Intabolatura de lauto, 1508), used for a quasi-drone effect. There are several other individual examples of this type of re-tuning during the 16th century, but the main period of scordatura was the 17th century.

Anthoine Francisque was the first to publish a substantial section of pieces in scordatura (minor 3rd–5th–4th–major 3rd–4th for the six main courses of his nine-course instrument) among pieces in standard tuning (Le trésor d'Orphée, 1600). Of course, for this and all other scordatura tunings, the extra basses beyond the first six courses were variably tuned according to key. Francisque used the term 'cordes avalées' for his scordatura tuning, as did J.-B. Besard (Thesaurus harmonicus, 1603) for his few pieces tuned to 4th–5th–4th–major 3rd–4th. They, and a few other early writers, retained this term from the previous century. The first publication consisting entirely of scordatura was P.P. Melli's Intavolatura di liuto … libro terzo (Venice, 1614) which used 'una cordatura differente dall'ordinaria', 4th–major 3rd–minor 3rd–major 3rd–4th, plus seven bass courses for his 13-course 'liuto attiorbato'. Melli made excellent use of scordatura, as evinced by the lush sonorities of the music in this collection. The first French publication to use a scordatura tuning exclusively ('accords nouveau') was Pierre Ballard's Tablature de luth de differens autheurs (Paris, 1631), containing music by Chancy, Bouvier, Dufaut and other important musicians at the court of Louis XIII, who used two of the most common scordatura tunings of the period: 4th–4th–major 3rd–minor 3rd–major 3rd and 4th–4th–minor 3rd–major 3rd–minor 3rd. At least 30 different scordaturas were known throughout the 17th century, but the fashion for variant tunings waned in the first quarter of the 18th, and one of them – 4th–minor 3rd–major 3rd–4th–minor 3rd (the so-called D minor tuning) – became the standard tuning in later French and German high-Baroque usage. A comprehensive discussion of these tunings and their sources is found in Schulze-Kurz.

The early guitar employed scordatura during the same period as the lute, and its variant tunings were even more complicated than the lute's due to the re-entrant stringings and octave dispositions, which the guitar normally employed. A five-course instrument, the guitar's normal tunings were predominantly: a/a–d′/d′–g/g–b/b–e′ (entirely re-entrant) or a/a–d/d′–g/g–b/b–e′ (with a low d on the fourth course). In addition, some players used a high g′ on the third course, and others, a low A on the fifth. The re-entrant stringing made possible a technical idiom unique to the early guitar. By playing scale passages that used as many open strings as possible, an effect was achieved which enhanced resonance. Scordatura facilitated this aspect of guitar technique even further. For details on guitar technique and a comprehensive bibliography of sources, see Tyler.

The first examples of scordatura for the guitar are found in G.P. Foscarini (I quatro libri della chitarra spagnola, *c*1632) with the intervals: minor 3rd–4th–major 3rd–minor 3rd (ignoring octave displacements). Later writers, such as Corbetta (Varii capricci, 1643), Granata (Soavi concenti, 1659) and Bottazzari (Sonate nuove, 1663), used a variety of other scordaturas. Although throughout most of the 17th century scordatura was used mainly by Italian writers, Jakob Kremberg (Musicalische Gemüths-Ergötzung, 1689) employed up to six different tunings and François Campion (Nouvelles découvertes sur la guitarre, 1705) up to seven, in addition to the standard tuning. The number of guitar sources using scordatura is substantial, and among them about 20 variants are found, with major 3rd–4th–4th–4th being the most common.

For the six-string guitar (from the 19th century to the present), different tunings in true scordatura are rare, but the lowering of the sixth string by one tone is quite common (e.g. M. Castelnuovo-Tedesco, Sonata op.77, 1934). With the emergence of the new guitar, tablature was abandoned in favour of staff notation, which made reading and playing scordaturas difficult, and might explain the subsequent decline of unusual tunings for the instrument, except for music grounded in aural tradition. Some modern folk and popular guitarists use open-string tunings based upon a G or D chord (called 'dropped tunings'), which enable simple fingerings to be used for basic harmonies (see GUITAR, §7).

4. THE VIOL FAMILY. Ever since viol tunings were first recorded the sequence of intervals 4th–4th–3rd–4th–4th has been established as the standard for six-string instruments from which any deviation might be regarded as 'scordatura' (for a discussion of these sources, see VIOL, §§1 AND 3). The most notorious use of alternative tunings on the viol was associated with the LYRA VIOL of 17th-century England, for which nearly 60 tunings have been uncovered. Most would have been used on a standard six-string bass viol (or one rather small in size, perhaps with lighter stringing and a flatter bridge). Other instances where scordatura is specified are rarer. Most common, probably, is the instruction to 'set your lowest string double see fa ut' (i.e. tune the D string to C; Tobias Hume, 'The Old Humor', The First Part of Ayres, 1605). Christopher Simpson (Chelys/The Division-Viol, 2/1659, p.8) states 'I will set your next Example in C fa ut with the lowest String put down a Note, as we commonly do when we play in that Key'. A similar practice is found in lute music (see ABZUG (1) and CORDES AVALLÉES), and modern six-string bass viol players sometimes tune their lowest string to C when the music requires (this practice is obviated if a French high Baroque-style viol with a seventh string tuned to A′ is used).

In addition to several six-string viol tunings based on the standard interval pattern, Praetorius (Syntagma musicum, ii, 1618, 2/1619) reported tunings with a 4th–3rd–4th–4th–4th pattern, and two tunings consisting entirely of 4ths (he also included tunings for three-, four- and five-string viols, some taken from Agricola). Five tunings for VIOLA BASTARDA were given:

(1) D–G–c–e–a–d′

(2) C–G–c–e–a–d′

(3) A′–E–A–e–a–d′

(4) A′–D–A–d–a–d′

(5) A′–D–G–d–g–d′

Praetorius did not suggest what music these various tunings would be suitable for. Tuning (2) is the same as the English practice of tuning the bass string down a tone. The very wide tunings of (3), (4) and (5) extend the range of the instrument down to A′. Vicenzo Bonizzi's Alcune opere (1626), for viola bastarda, demands a compass of G′–d′, but this could be played on a large bass viol in a standard G′ tuning.

In his Basse-continües des pieçes a une et a deux violes (1689) Marin Marais published a suite for bass viol and continuo in F♯ minor which he suggests the continuo player could transpose to G minor if the original key proves troublesome to play. In which case, he says, the viol player would have to retune the instrument up a semitone (in order to use the same fingering). He says that the suite could also be transposed up to A minor, and likewise another suite, whose original key is B minor, could be played in D minor, with the viol retuned accordingly. Marais seemed to have great confidence in the ability of his instrument to respond well to being tuned up a minor 3rd.

Several suites by or attributed to Gottfried Finger feature scordatura bass viols, mostly tuned E–A–c♯–e–a–c♯′ (one of these also features a scordatura violin tuned a–e–a′–e″), but in one suite for two scordatura viols, E–G–B–e–a–d′ is used.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BoydenH; DoddI
M. Schneider: 'Zu Bibers Violinensonaten', ZIMG, viii (1906–7), 471–4
G. Adler: 'Zu Bibers Violinensonaten', ZIMG, ix (1907–8), 29–30
G. Beckmann: Das Violinspiel in Deutschland vor 1700 (Leipzig, 1918, music suppl., 1921)
A. Moser: 'Die Violin-Skordatur', AMw, i (1918–19), 573–89
L. de La Laurencie: L'école française de violon, de Lully à Viotti (Paris, 1922–4/R)
T. Russel: 'The Violin "Scordatura"', MQ, xxiv (1938), 84–96
M. Abbado: 'La scordatura negli strumenti ad arco e Nicolo Paganini', RaM, xiii (1940), 213–26
D.D. Boyden: 'Ariosti's Lessons for Viola d'amore', MQ, xxxii (1946), 545–63
G.J. Kinney: The Musical Literature for Unaccompanied Violoncello (diss., Florida State U., 1962)
F. Traficante: 'Lyra Viol Tunings: "All Ways have been Tryed to do It"', AcM, xlii (1970), 183–205
J. Tyler: The Early Guitar: a History and Handbook (London, 1980)
P. Brun: Histoire des contrebasses à cordes (Paris, 1982; Eng. trans., 1989)
R. Stowell: Violin Technique and Performance Practice in the Late Eighteenth and Early Nineteenth Centuries (Cambridge, 1985)
J. Paras: The Music for Viola Bastarda (Bloomington, IN, 1986)
D. Ledbetter: Harpsichord and Lute Music in 17th-Century France (London, 1987), 38–40, 185
P. Rosquellas: 'Un ejemplo de "scordatura" violinística en la música española: la sonata de Pablo Rosquellas', RdMc, x (1987), 965–74
E. Schulze-Kurz: Die Laute und ihre Stimmungen in der ersten Hälfte des 17. Jahrhunderts (Wilsingen, 1990)
M. Chambers: The Mistuned Cello: Precursors to J.S. Bach's Suite V in c minor for Unaccompanied Violoncello (DMA diss., Florida State U., 1996)

DAVID D. BOYDEN/ROBIN STOWELL (1), MARK CHAMBERS (2), JAMES TYLER (3), RICHARD PARTRIDGE (4)

Score (Fr. partition; Ger. Partitur; It. partitura). The use of the word score (Old Norse skor; Old Eng. scoru: 'incision') derives from the act of marking vertical lines through one or more staves of music to form bars. This process was originally described, in Latin, as partire or cancellare, whence came the term partitura cancellata (abbreviated partitura), a score divided into compartments (cancelli). Morley (A Plaine and Easie Introduction, 1597/R) used 'partition' for the sections in score.

1. DEFINITIONS, TYPES. The noun 'score' means: (a) a form of manuscript or printed music in which the staves, linked by bar-lines, are written above one another, in order to represent the musical coordination visually (see §3(vi) below); (b) a page, volume, fascicle or other artefact containing a complete copy of a musical work; and (c) by extension, a piece of music customarily written 'in score', i.e. in the form of a score as defined under (a) above. The verb 'to score' means to compose or arrange for ensemble performance, either with or without voices. 'Scoring' in its creative sense may thus mean either 'orchestration' or 'instrumentation'. 'To score up' means to write out a score from a given set of parts. (See also INSTRUMENTATION AND ORCHESTRATION and NOTATION.)

A 'full score' is a score as in (a) above, for orchestra with or without voices, containing complete details of a work as it is intended to be performed. If printed, it is generally large enough to conduct from. A 'miniature score' is a printed score of pocket size (usually 13·5 × 18·5 cm) for individual use. An 'open score' is a score normally of more than two staves, showing each individual voice of a polyphonic composition on a separate staff. Open scores have in the past been used for solo keyboard works. A 'piano score' is an arrangement for solo piano of any ensemble composition; this term is sometimes used as a synonym for 'vocal score'. A 'short score' is either an ensemble score in which the whole is condensed or reduced on to a small number of staves (as distinct from a full score, and also called a 'condensed score'), or a composer's score of an ensemble work, showing his or her intentions on a few staves, with annotations, to be elaborated and fully written out later. A 'vocal score' or 'piano-vocal score' is an arrangement of an ensemble composition including voices, in which the instrumental parts are reduced for piano (normally solo) or organ, while the vocal parts appear on separate staves. 'Study score' is a term used either synonymously with 'miniature score' or to denote a printed full score, often of a substantial or fully scored piece, reduced to a size greater than 'miniature' but smaller than 'full'.

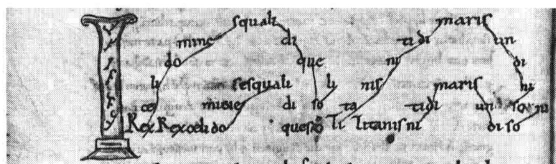
2. Standard form of a full score. A full score is ordered in groups from the top down as follows: woodwind, brass, percussion, strings. Two or more opposing ensembles, as in music for double orchestra, are laid out in self-contained areas. Each group is subdivided in roughly descending order of tessitura: flutes (with piccolo etc.), oboes (with english horn), clarinets (with bass clarinet), bassoons (with double bassoon); horns, trumpets, trombones, tuba; timpani, side drum, bass drum, triangle etc.; first violins, second violins, violas, cellos, double basses. The untuned percussion may be written on single-line staves.

The harp, celesta or orchestral piano is usually placed between percussion and first violins; an accompanying organ part may either appear here or below the double basses. The solo part of a concerto is written immediately above the first violins. Presence of an electronic tape may be indicated by a thick independent line at the bottom of the page. Voice parts, if present, are situated either in traditional position between the violas and the cellos or above the first violins. Soloists are placed above the chorus. Within these groups of singers the descending order of voices is adopted. Precise numbers of players or singers may be indicated on the opening page or on a prefatory page opposite it.

For clarity, the staves of an orchestra score are, normally, linked from top to bottom only at the beginning of a page. Bar-lines connect only those staves belonging to each group, and keyboard instruments, concerto or vocal soloists, timpani etc., have separate bar-lines. These subdivisions may be indicated against the initial brace by means of brackets.

In scores of chamber music a piano part is normally placed lowest. The other instruments may be written either according to the orchestral conventions described above, or throughout in descending order of tessitura.

Some deviations from the standard form of the full score are dealt with in §3(v) below; for exceptional forms of score used in modern music see §3(vi) below. For wind ensemble scores see Band (i), §III, 1–4. For details of clefs and transpositions see Instrumentation and orchestration and Transposing instruments.



3. History.

(i) To 16th century. Profound differences in composing, teaching and performing music at this period, relative to our own, meant that permanent scores in our sense were largely redundant. Memory played a large part in all the above processes: paper was very expensive; the erasable pencil had not been invented. Teaching and sketching of music that required the functions of a score made use of an erasable slate (a cartella, or tabula [compositoria] or tabella) provided with permanent staves (see Owens, 1997, for complete accounts of all these and other related considerations, fully illustrated). The treatise known as Musica enchiriadis (anonymous, end of 9th century; D-BAs Var.1) contains the first known notation of polyphony. The pitches, but not the rhythms, of a four-voice organum are indicated by their text syllables (fig.1). Organa, conductus and clausulas were later written on staves of varying dimensions; 12th- and 13th-century manuscripts show two or three staves of four or five lines each, set one under the other, sometimes separated by a red line (E-SC Codex Calixtinus; D-W 677 and 1206; GB-Lbl Harl.978 and Arundel 248; see also other manuscripts with single staves of many lines carrying two or three voice parts). There is a continuous tradition of quasi-score notation of this type in English sources through to manuscripts containing carols of the 15th century (GB-Ob Selden B.26).

From about 1225, the development of the motet prompted a different, choirbook layout, in which each voice occupied a different area of the page; such principles were still to govern the design of Dowland's First Booke of Songs or Ayres in 1597.

However, the modern concept of a score is shown to have been in existence as early as the 14th century by surviving manuscripts of instrumental music which employ two staves and regular bar-lines (fig.2). The Reina Manuscript (F-Pn n.a.fr.6771, f.85) contains two pages in score of a 14th-century instrumental version of a ballata by Landini, Questa fanciulla; there are two staves of six lines each. Furthermore, the Faenza Codex (I-FZc 117; *c*1400) contains 104 pages of score notation, and is in effect a unified collection of instrumental music. Although no instruments are specified by name, it is thought that most of the pieces were for a keyboard instrument, with some possibly intended for two or more suitable melody instruments, such as lutes. In vocal music, however, no manuscript scores have been found that date from before 1500: the first known example is datable not later than 1560 (I-Rvat Chigi VIII.206, ff.156–67).

(ii) 16th century. Polyphonic music for voices continued to be worked out and performed using separate partbooks,

1. Sequence 'Rex coeli Domini', in two-voice organum, from an early 12th-century source of 'Musica enchiriadis' (F-Pn lat.7211, f.9v); see also Organum, ex.1

2. Instrumental version, in score, of the opening of Landini's ballata 'Questa fanciulla' from the Reina MS, Italian, 14th century (F-Pn n.a.fr.6771, f.85r)

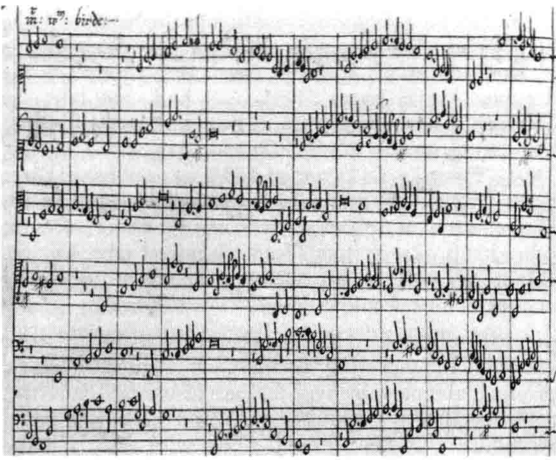
music' (Owens, p.39). Examples include Andreas Ornithoparchus, Musice activae micrologus (Leipzig, 1517). Composing in orthodox score format became a regular recommendation near the end of the century. In 1577 the first two surviving score publications with more than two staves were issued in Venice: Musica de diversi autori and Tutti i madrigali di Cipriano di Rore a quattro voci. The latter was 'scored and arranged for performance on any keyboard instrument and for any student of counterpoint' and so was not primarily designed to be sung from.

Printed music was, however, expensive; many musicians therefore needed to score up music for their own use, but they did not always include the text underlay. If the musical intervals made keyboard performance impossible, the score might be studied or sung from using solmization syllables. The Baldwin Manuscript (GB-Lbl R.M. 24.d.2, compiled between 1581 and 1606; fig.4) is a personal anthology in which the scribe, John Baldwin, wrote out in score music composed by himself and by others, 'the scyence to sett foorthe'. (Other English scores include Lbl Eg.3665; US-NYp Drexel 4302.) Some compact Italian copy scores do contain textual underlay, but they are rather small to sing from (I-Bc Q28–9, Q33, Q35, Q42, U92–3, T105). Italian scores were sometimes prepared (presumably from parts) with the bass part at the top: this layout was to enable them to be made into Italian lute tablature.



but teaching and composition made seemingly ever-greater use of score formats during the course of the century. An 'important principle' revealed by Owens is that 'composers generally employed the same kinds of notation and format for composing that they would use for preparing the final version for performance or transmission' (p.113) – that is, separate parts for vocal music, but in score (on two or more staves) for keyboard music. Around 1520, music for keyboard performance was first printed, using two staves each with a variable number of lines. Most notable were Antico's Frottole intabulate da sonare organi (Rome, 1517), M.A. Cavazzoni's Recerchari, motetti, canzoni ... libro primo (Venice, 1523; see LEGER LINE, illustration) and Attaingnant's Parisian editions from early 1531. In appearance, these anticipate the first known example of a regular score for voices. This too is printed, being simply a short example in the treatise Compendium musices by Lampadius (Berne, 1537). It consists of the opening bars of Verdelot's motet Sancta Maria succurre miseris as it would appear on a tabula compositoria (fig.3).

In the second half of the century, the fairly numerous surviving examples of manuscript music in score show regular bar-lines, frequently ruled from top to bottom of the page and thus able to serve more than one system of staves. In vocal music, manuscript scores always took the breve as bar unit. The number of lines per staff could be more than five, especially in keyboard music. Little or no information appeared beyond any superscription, the notes and the words, if any. Scores, with bar-lines, of music for voice and lute (in tablature) were widespread from the beginning of the 16th century.

A ten-line staff became a common aid to teaching at this time, evidently conceived of as a form of score which served 'as a visual image of the tonal system of early

3. 'Tabula compositoria': opening bars of Verdelot's motet 'Sancta Maria succurre miseris', in score, from Lampadius's treatise 'Compendium musices' (1537)

4. Part of Byrd's Great Service, as written out in score in the Baldwin MS, compiled 1581–1606 (GB-Lbl R.M.24.d.2, ff.84v–85r, upper portions only)

Two large German manuscripts owned by Adam Gumpelzhaimer (1559–1625) contain evidence of use in musical performance and rehearsal (D-Bsb 40027–8). They show numerous added accidentals and marginal comments, but their general appearance is close to that of other contemporary scores. It is sometimes wrongly stated that the 1582 publication of the Balet comique de la Royne, with music by Jacques Salmon and either Girard or Lambert de Beaulieu, was the first 'orchestra score'. In fact it does not contain any music in score. The four-staff 1577 open score of Cipriano di Rore's music, noted above, was particularly designed for study at the keyboard; manuscript scores on four staves intended for the organ have been found in Brussels (B-Bc 26660–61). The music, by Annibale Padovano and Florentio Maschera, had originally been printed in parts in 1582 and 1593. The practice of writing out and printing keyboard music in open score lasted into the 18th century.

(iii) 17th century. Apart from composition itself, the three primary functions of 17th-century ensemble scores were to make possible: the direction of larger vocal performances, particularly opera; the supply of material for the copying or printing of parts; and the study of music either mentally or at the keyboard. Secondary functions dependent on publication included the advertisement of a patron and the production of a commodity for profit.

The five-line staff became standard, except in some keyboard music. Performance details apart from the mere notes were added sparingly, but not invariably. Whereas in the score of Jacopo Peri's Euridice (published 1601: the second complete opera score issued in print; fig.5) there is no instrumental or expressive labelling and the instrumental parts are never notated when the chorus sings, a score such as Purcell's Te Deum and Jubilate (1694) presents a relatively modern appearance. Expressive marks are in words rather than letters or symbols (e.g. 'play soft', 'fast'). Detailed instrumental and vocal labelling is included, though at times the chorus still occupies all the available staves and the orchestra is simply assumed to play the same notes. The nature of such doubling is sometimes expressed in words, as, for example, 'Leuti, Tiorbe, Arpe, 3 Violini suonino sopra i soprani che cantano' (Stefano Landi, Sant'Alessio, 1634). If the score had a preface, this might indicate some or all of the possible instrumentation (as occurs in the preface to Peri's Euridice).

The continuo bass in all scores represents in its notes and figures the most freely interpreted part. This single line formed the basis of music played by a flexible subgroup centred on the chord-playing instruments such as the harpsichord or organ. It could thus be labelled in a variety of ways, or split between two staves, separating keyboard from plucked and bowed instruments.

5. The second complete printed opera score, Peri's 'Euridice' (Florence: Giorgio Marescotti, 1601); instruments double the chorus at the top of the page, though they are not separately notated, while the continuo appears under the solo part below

The layout of a full score was regular only in two respects. First, any vocal parts were placed immediately above the continuo line, which always occupied the lowest staff. Secondly, the strings were always ordered with violins above violas. It was common for any brass instruments to be placed at the top of the page.

Scores could now be substantial or small (Sant'Alessio is 182 pages). Additional space could be saved by showing the repeat of a ritornello merely by repeating the word.

The basic scoring of many 17th-century pieces was for strings and continuo, in a total of three, four or five parts. It is thought that in some places (e.g. Paris) fewer staves meant the use of smaller forces, while in others (e.g. Venice) no such proportional relation existed. Lully's five-part textures, with their origins in Italian opera, spread in printed scores to the German-speaking nations, where they were adopted for orchestral suites. A three-part score sometimes disguised the fact that the violas might double the bass: as McCredie (1964) has asserted, 'the absence of one or more middle parts in a score did not necessarily imply that these were absent in a performance', since the filling out of the middle parts of scores for the Baroque theatre was often left to the composer's assistants.

Keyboard music was written either in open score on four staves (e.g. Frescobaldi's Fiori musicali, 1635; see SOURCES OF KEYBOARD MUSIC TO 1660, fig.2) or on two staves (his Toccate e partite, 1615). For clarity and for study purposes, the contrapuntal forms of ricercare, canzona and fantasia normally appeared on four staves, especially in Portugal (Manuel Rodrigues Coelho's publication of 1620), France (Titelouze, 1623) and Germany (Scheidt, Tabulatura nova, 1624, and Tabulatur-Buch, 1650).

Scores were far from universally used in directing, and least of all in purely instrumental pieces. Andreas Werckmeister (in the Musicalische Paradoxal-Discourse, 1707) declared that, in Germany, 'Directors put their scores into German tablature and conduct[ed] from this', and for some time the practice continued whereby sacred music was directed from a continuo partbook. But the obvious utility of the score in general performance was recognized by composers like Jacobus Handl (Opus musicum, iii, 1587) and Scheidt (1624); the opposition of some musicians to the figured bass (G.D. Rognoni Taeggio, 1605) may also, though less directly, have helped the cause of the score.

A score was not, however, an unchangeable mandate from composer to performer. Even if printed it represented a basis for performance rather than a rigid template, if the composer was not present in person. Some printed scores with a slightly different function sought to perpetuate information about one particular performance. These were scores produced (especially in Italy in the first half of the century) as valuable souvenirs either for the benefit of the composer or, more usually, for his patron who had sponsored the original performance. Like the performances themselves, such scores were not necessarily designed to be models for imitation.

By the end of the century a full score could be printed for direct profit by a composer or publisher. This was done in England by soliciting subscriptions in advance. In such cases the musical information in the score might be a highly accurate statement of the composer's intentions: 'Advertisement: ... I have ... been very carefull in the Examination of every Sheet ... I find, too late, the Subscription-money will scarcely amount to the Expence of compleating this Edition' (Purcell, score of Dioclesian, 1691). Purcell's Te Deum of 1694 was published three years later by his widow, 'that I might ... gratifie the Desires of several Gentlemen to see the Score'. On the other hand, scores of smaller-scale music, especially the gamut of sung music, were produced in increasing quantities for sale and domestic 'consumption'.

(iv) 18th century. The 18th century saw the definitive adoption of engraving as the chief method of music printing, and movable type fell into disuse (see PRINTING AND PUBLISHING OF MUSIC, §I, 3(iii)). Engraving could reproduce passages of rapid notes with ease, and the increasing use of punches assisted the enormous expansion in the production of large and small scores. Some printed scores datable around 1800 appear scarcely at all archaic typographically; others are of inferior quality and accuracy. 18th-century scores also reflect the desire of composers to impart their intentions precisely. The quantity of verbal and symbolic information in scores grew considerably, both in manuscript and print; as the expected circulation increased, so the temptation to add written instructions also grew. A few late 18th-century scores from Paris even have mathematically fixed tempo indications to be used in conjunction with a 'chronomètre', a primitive form of metronome. The issue of purely instrumental scores (trio sonatas, concerti grossi) was a mere fraction of the quantity of music produced in parts. However, the last three decades of the century saw a prodigious output of engraved opera full scores from Parisian publishers.

6. Opening of Handel's anthem 'Zadok the Priest' (1727), published in 'Celebrated Coronation Anthems' (1743), scored for trumpets 1, 2 and 3, timpani, oboes 1 and 2, bassoons 1 and 2, strings and continuo

The strings in any orchestral ensemble score displayed a normal constitution of first and second violins, violas, cellos and double basses (or violone). But the order of staves in a full score was still subject to only those uniform principles described above for the 17th century. Three main types of layout prevailed, the first two of which were used throughout the century: brass, woodwind, strings, bass (fig.6); upper strings, woodwind, brass, bass (used, for example, by Mozart; fig.7); and woodwind, brass, strings, bass. The last plan, which was eventually to become the standard one, is found at the end of the century, for example in Die Zauberflöte. However, when brass was absent, the normal order in the earlier 18th century was woodwind, strings, bass, although the presence of oboes (doubling violins) is often implicit, not explicit. Within these possibilities infinite variations were adopted, and composers, copyists and engravers were often inconsistent between pieces. Other principles of staff ordering were by register or orchestral 'colour'.

A constant factor in 18th-century scores of many types before the high Classical period is the principle of orchestral subdivision. The two terms 'solo' and 'tutti' appeared against a single line of music in, for example, a concerto grosso, to indicate alternating performance between one player and several players. This form of notational shorthand also operated in other genres, more particularly opera and oratorio, wherever numbers of players permitted. (In French music the terms were 'petit choeur' and 'grand choeur'.) Although it is not always evident from the score, the use of a small concertino band to accompany solo singers and the tutti to accompany the choruses and play the overture and dances was universally understood.

Publication of keyboard music in open score was effectively concluded by Bach, who published one movement each in the Musical Offering (1747) and the canonic variations Vom Himmel hoch (1748), and the whole of the Art of Fugue (1751), in open score. That the last of these was a keyboard work was not doubted at the time, since the layout was traditional.

By the close of the 18th century scores possessed as many varied uses as they do today, as if in response to a greater sense of discipline. Several writers had urged more comprehensive use of scores. For Walther (1732) the purpose of the score was 'to avoid mistakes the sooner' in performance, and the Encyclopédie (1765) edited by Diderot and d'Alembert concluded: 'He who conducts a concert must have a score in front of him'. The publication of instrumental scores in England shows the progression in function from study to practical utility. Pepusch's score edition of Corelli's trio sonatas (London, 1732) is unwieldy to play from and in any case was issued 'that the Eye should have the Pleasure of discovering, by what unusual Methods ye Ear is Captivated by this Most Celebrated Authors Compositions'. The 'Advertisement' in Avison's score of his own Twenty Six Concertos (Newcastle, 1758) says, however: 'a complete and legible score is the best plan for any musical publication, not only as it renders the study of music more easy and entertaining, but also the performance of it more correct and judicious'. Moreover the whole score could be rendered at the keyboard: 'a skilful hand on the organ or harpsicord, may give a pleasing idea of a general performance in concert'. Additionally, the printing layout contained no turnovers in the course of individual movements, so that even a violinist could play from the score, as Avison pointed out.

The traditional hazard of piracy affected the livelihood of the 18th-century composer, who stood to lose or gain more by it than was the case before. This was a natural result of the progressive tendency in Western music for ensemble performance to take place without the presence of the composer and for profit. Some composers, like Handel, held back most of their larger pieces from publication, which carried no copyright protection. The flourishing trade in music resulted in innumerable cases of mistaken identity and misattribution. The first legal steps towards grappling with the complex problems of copyright in printed scores and music generally were taken in France during the Revolution and First Empire.

7. Opening of the first movement of the autograph MS (now dispersed) of Mozart's Serenade K185/167a (1773), scored for violins 1 and 2, violas, oboes 1 and 2, horns, trumpets and basses

Thus while manuscript full scores were in general only as accurate as the circumstances allowed, the authority of the printed score as a source for performance according to modern principles (i.e. with emphasis on literal fidelity rather than embellishment) was slowly but gradually gaining ground. A herald of this is seen in a letter by Grétry published in 1791 in the Journal de Paris: 'I beg the directors of the said theatres to use the printed score to correct the manuscript score of Raoul Barbe-Bleu, which was given them by disloyal hands: it is the only recompense I ask them for having performed my works without my consent'.

(v) 1800 to 1945. In this period the use of mass-circulation printing methods, and the invention of lithography, transformed the dissemination of music. The great moves towards higher standards of public education resulted in the production of a sizeable body of smaller forms of score, such as vocal scores, piano scores and small-format full scores. Treatises were published on how to score for ensembles and how to play full scores at the keyboard. Educators proclaimed the need for scores to study: 'Foreigners are before the English, I am sorry to acknowledge, in two points, viz. They certainly do not print much musical trash; and what they do print is, generally, in full score' (J. Kemp: The New System of Musical Education, London, *c*1819). Linked to the education movements was the publication early in the century of scores of older music and sets of scores of the works of leading Baroque and Classical composers (e.g. Bach, Haydn) never perhaps before seen in printed score; this culminated in the German historical editions (see EDITIONS, HISTORICAL).

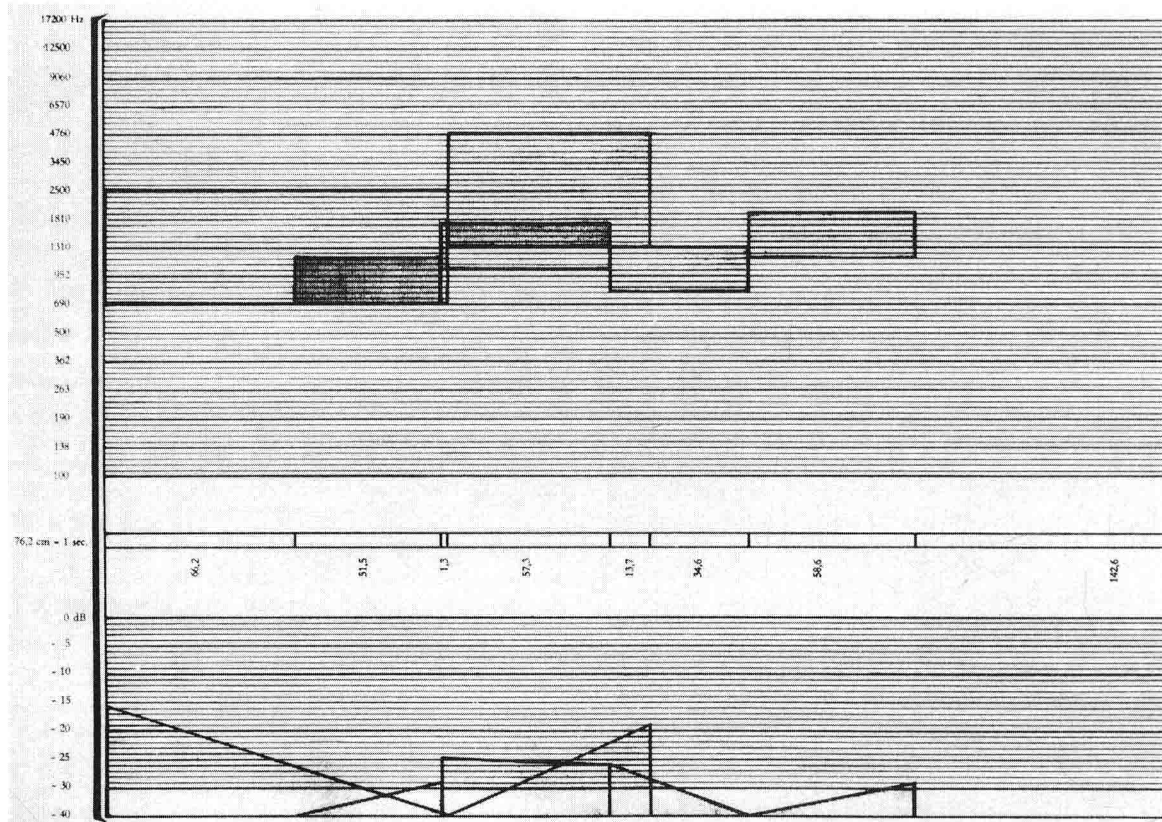
The expansion of the orchestra and the changes in musical style similarly led to increased sophistication in the design of orchestral scores. The layout of staves often followed the standard outline (see §2 above), although some composers (e.g. Spontini, Schubert and Schumann) at times departed radically from it and used one of the earlier 18th-century formats. Wagner, preceded by Spontini, Berlioz and others, placed the horns between the clarinets and the bassoons. There was no fixed place for instruments like the harp, the bass clarinet and (in France) the saxophone, or for the rarer instruments (fig.8).

Such complexities of score notation naturally prompted calls for its reform (see 'Score, Playing from', Grove1) which still persist. In particular, the idea that transposing instruments should be written at sounding pitch has been hard to relinquish.

However, the development of atonality has led to the rejection of transposing notation (other than the usual octave transpositions) in many scores. This practice is seen in Schoenberg, for example, from the Variations for Orchestra op.31 (1927–8) onwards. Experimental traits of many kinds are anticipated in the score of Skryabin's Prométhée (1908–10), whose part for a colour organ ('tastiera per luce') appears as a horizontal line.



In editing old music, the scoring of music of which no original score survives has sometimes accommodated new principles in editing: the use of dotted or broken bar-lines; 'bar'-lines linking staves but not passing through the staves (Ger. Mensurstriche); and the abandonment of bar-lines and adoption of a symbol representing the tactus. There is no consensus of opinion as to the most satisfactory of these barring systems.

(vi) After 1945. The period from 1945 brings the history of the score full circle. Although a great number of contemporary scores follow the format of traditional orchestral, instrumental and vocal scores, experiments in musical language after serialism have resulted in a proliferation of score variants that range from unprecedentedly precise scores to scores exhibiting non-specific notation that recall the mnemonic systems of the earliest extant musical sources. In general, it can be said that the diversity in scores and score-types after 1945 reflects the widespread pluralism of postwar culture, as well as the tendency of the postwar generation to equate structure and form with musical expression and the 'idea' of a musical work.

Scores of the later 1940s reflect composers' developing interest in the organizational potential of each of the parameters of sound. Messiaen's Modes de valeur et d'intensité (the second of his Quatre études de rythme, 1949–50) introduces a third staff to emphasize the structural importance of the low, middle and high registers of the piano, while John Cage's scores for prepared piano, such as Sonatas and Interludes (1946–8), include directions ('preparations') for inserting objects into the piano to expand its timbre. From 1951, the role of the performer and listener became increasingly central to the conception of some works. Cage's interest in 'non-intentionality' led him to toss coins in conjunction with the I Ching in writing Music of Changes (1951), a procedure that resulted in some highly complex musical structures. Cage introduced 'time-space notation' (crotchet = 2·5 cm = 1 second) to compensate for the rhythmic complexity, and he allowed the performer to 'employ his own discretion' when combinations become unplayable, an act that marks the beginning of the relaxing of the connection between the specific notation of the score and the general intention of a piece in the postwar period. Interest in the 'white paintings' of Robert Rauschenberg, the aesthetic of ambient sound and a belief that duration was the basis of all music led Cage to create the provocative 4′ 33″ (1952), arguably his most profound work. The single-page score encourages a tripartite structure overall ('I Tacet; II Tacet; III Tacet') but otherwise consists of only a set of written instructions about the performer's (silent) role in creating a performance context, and an account of the work's first performance. The final sentence in the score – that the piece 'may be performed by any instrument and last any length of time' – is thought by some to be heretical, by others, a stroke of genius. Whichever may be the case, 4′ 33″ continues to generate discussion about the centrality – some would say essentiality – of the score to the idea of a musical work in performance.

The substitution of written directions for musical notation coincided with the rise of the graphic score in works such as Morton Feldman's Projection I (1950; see FELDMAN, MORTON, ex.1) and Earle Brown's December 1952 (1952; see BROWN, EARLE, illustration). Despite the difficulty in establishing a consistent performing tradition

8. Opening of Act 1 of 'Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg' in Wagner's autograph: horns are placed among the woodwind, and the organ directly below the voice staves (and above the cellos)

9. Electronic score: opening of Stockhausen's 'Elektronische Studie II' (1954) for single-track tape for these works the production of graphic scores persisted until the mid-1960s, and later composers have periodically indulged in the flexibility offered by graphics (e.g. Stephen Montague, String Quartet no.1, 1989–93). The introduction of transparencies to scores like Cage's Fontana Mix (1958; see ALEATORY, fig.4) was an interesting development in the otherwise somewhat repetitive early graphic period. By the early 1960s, much of this interest had become subsumed in scores that blur the boundary between music and theatre, such as Cage's 0′ 00″ (4′ 33″

10. Stephen Montague's 'Behold a Pale Horse' (1990–91) for organ, bars 42–57

(a)

Mehrere Bündel Indischer Schellen an verschiedenen Körperstellen befestigen (Hand- und Fußgelenke, Kopf, Schultern usw.)
und bei jedem kurz schütteln, bei etwas länger, kontinuierlich (mit der vorgeschriebenen Dynamik), bei ff Schüttelfrost.

Mit Sender verstärkt: Man soll immer ein leises Geklirre der Schellen hören, verursacht durch die Spielbewegungen.

1. Formel-Glied

Indische Schellen

Intervalle möglichst klein, aber deutlich.

BREIT

legato ad lib.

Ampl.-Vibrato

gliss.

(b)

1. Formel-Glied

BREIT a tempo

verinnerlicht: Kopf etwas senken

Indische Schellen

mit cresc. etwas aufrichten langsam Oberkörper nach links

langsam wieder Mitte

in Pose erstarren, Flöte hoch nach rechts

Ampl.-Vibr.

glisa.

tenuto

(zurück-bewegen)

nach vorne

11. Stockhausen's 'Ypsilon' (1989): (a) opening of Stockhausen's score; (b) realization for B♭ flute by Kathinka Pasveer

no.2; 1962) – the score consists of the instruction 'In a situation provided with maximum amplification (no feedback) perform a disciplined action' – and his later text-only works, for example Sixty-Two Mesostics re Merce Cunningham (1971).

Boulez, who was 'not interested in giving the musicians cartoons to improvise', produced mobile-form scores not unlike those of Cage but vehemently rejected the idea of 'non-intentionality'. In his unfinished Third Piano Sonata (1955–7), 'Parenthèse' includes optional – 'parenthetical' – musical material, while 'Constellation-Miroir' features colour-coded notation and a detailed network of arrows leading the performer through a complex (but limited) pattern of directed permutations. The formal premise of 'Constellation-Miroir' relies heavily on the spatial distribution of material possible in a two-dimensional score and trades on the belief that the composition 'exists' only in a series of interpretations of the score across the dimension of time. Boulez's inspiration was purportedly Mallarmé's Livre, which uses language in a similar way, but the piece closely resembles works like Stockhausen's Klavierstück XI (1956), which differs only in that the performer may move randomly between sound blocks, and that tempo, dynamic and touch are notated independently of pitch.

Musique concrète (developed from the early 1950s), and its later counterpart computer music, eradicated the relevance of performance and hence the score. Electronic pieces like Elektronische Studie II (1954; fig.9) and Gesang der Jünglinge (1955–6) by Stockhausen preserve the score, employing a notational system that translates the spatial, timbral and dynamic aspects of sound to corresponding visual images. The inorganic nature of the combination of electronic with acoustic sound has perplexed some composers, not least Boulez, who abandoned early electro-acoustic projects 'until better methods were discovered'. His Répons (1981) is said to vindicate his reticence, although the published score still lacks any reference to the electronic transformations in 'real time' that are central to its realization. This fact illustrates both the importance of the spontaneous association of sounds in performance to the form of electro-acoustic works and the difficulty in achieving a representative notation. Contemporary composers continue to marry the two media, as scores like James Dillon's Introitus (1990) and George Benjamin's Antara (1985–7) show. In recent years, however, composers have returned readily to traditional scores in works such as Harrison Birtwistle's opera Gawain (1991), Judith Weir's The Bagpiper's String Trio (1985) and Peter Maxwell Davies's Time and the Raven (1995) or combined traditional and graphic notation, as in Stephen Montague's organ piece Behold a Pale Horse (1990–91; fig.10). Perhaps the most vivid scores from the end of the century are those of Stockhausen, who has included in his scores extensive directions and elaborate photographs of past performances (Jahreslauf vom Dienstag aus Licht, 1977) and has placed complete transcriptions of individual performers' interpretations of his pieces alongside the notation of the original work (Ypsilon, 1989; fig.11).

For further illustration see NOTATION, §III, 6.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GENERAL, HISTORICAL

KingMP; WaltherML

F.J. Fétis: Traité de l'accompagnement de la partition sur le piano ou l'orgue (Paris, 1829)

W. Tappert: 900–1900: Tausend Jahre Entwicklungsgeschichte der musikalischen Zeichenschrift (MS, 1901, enlarged 1903, D-Bsb)

J. Wolf: Musikalische Schrifttafeln (Bückeburg and Leipzig, 1922–3, 2/1927)

W. Apel: The Notation of Polyphonic Music, 900–1600 (Cambridge, MA, 1942, 5/1961; Ger. trans., rev., 1970)

S. Hermelink: 'Die Tabula compositoria', Festschrift Heinrich Besseler, ed. E. Klemm (Leipzig, 1961), 221–30

K. Haller: Partituranordnung und musikalischer Satz (Tutzing, 1970)

H. Besseler and P. Gülke: Schriftbild der mehrstimmigen Musik, Musikgeschichte in Bildern, iii/5 (Leipzig, 1973)

K. Haller: 'Partitur' (1976), HMT

Notenschrift und Aufführung: Munich 1977

J. Chailley: 'Tabulae compositoriae', AcM, li (1979), 51–4

I. Barsova: 'Iz istorii partiturnoy notatsii' [From the history of score notation], in A. Klimovitsky, L. Kovnatskaya and M. Sabinina: Istoriya i sovremennost' (Leningrad, 1981)

P. van Nevel: 'Historiek van de partituurvormen', Adem, xxiv (1988), 141–8

B. Bujić: 'Notation and Realization: Musical Performance in Historical Perspective', The Interpretation of Music: Philosophical Essays, ed. M. Krausz (Oxford, 1993), 129–40

R.L. Martin: 'Musical Works in the Worlds of Performers and Listeners', ibid., 119–27

A. Schneider: 'Musik sehen – Musik hören', HJbMw, xiii (1995), 123–50

SPECIAL STUDIES TO 1900

O. Kinkeldey: Orgel und Klavier in der Musik des 16. Jahrhunderts (Leipzig, 1910/R), chap.7

R. Schwartz: 'Zur Partitur im 16. Jahrhundert', AMw, ii (1920), 73–8

L. Ellinwood: 'The Conductus', MQ, xxvii (1941), 165–204

G. Kinsky: 'Eine frühe Partitur-Ausgabe von Symphonien Haydns, Mozarts und Beethovens', AcM, xiii (1941), 78–84

E.E. Lowinsky: 'On the Use of Scores by Sixteenth-Century Musicians', JAMS, i/1 (1948), 17–23

D. Plamenac: 'Keyboard Music of the 14th Century in Codex Faenza 117', JAMS, iv (1951), 179–201

E.E. Lowinsky: 'Early Scores in Manuscript', JAMS, xiii (1960), 126–73

J. Eppelsheim: Das Orchester in den Werken Jean-Baptiste Lullys (Tutzing, 1961)

A.D. McCredie: Instrumentarium and Instrumentation in the North German Baroque Opera (diss., U. of Hamburg, 1964)

G. Rose: 'Agazzari and the Improvising Orchestra', JAMS, xviii (1965), 382–93

L. Lockwood: 'On Beethoven's Sketches and Autographs: Some Problems of Definition and Interpretation', AcM, xlii (1970), 32 [see also AcM, xliii (1971), 125–204, esp. 142]

C. Hopkinson: 'The Earliest Miniature Scores', MR, xxxiii (1972), 138–44

R. Benton: 'Pleyel's Bibliothèque musicale: the Earliest Miniature Scores', MR, xxxvi (1975), 1–4

B. Baselt: 'Händels Suites de pièces (1720) und Six Fugues or Voluntarys (1735) in der Bearbeitung und Interpretation von Gottlieb Muffat (1736)', Vom Notenbild zur Interpretation: Blankenburg, Harz, 1977, 31–8

C. Beck: 'Use of the Dot for Articulation and Accent in Orchestral Repertoire (1880–1920)', Journal of the Conductors' Guild, x (1989), 12–23

R. Eberlein: 'The Faenza Codex: Music for Organ or for Lute Duet?', EMc, xx (1992), 461–6

J.A. Owens: Composers at Work: the Craft of Musical Composition 1450–1600 (New York, 1997) [incl. extensive bibliography]

20TH CENTURY

M. Clynes: 'Music Beyond the Score', Reason, Emotion and Music: Ghent 1983, 279–304

G. Haus: 'EMPS: a System for Graphic Transcription of Electronic Music Scores', Computer Music Journal, vii/3 (1983), 31–6

T. Delio, ed.: Contiguous Lines: Issues and Ideas in the Music of the 60's and 70's (Lanham, MD, 1984)

P. Frank: 'Zwischen Bild und Partitur', Vom Klang der Bilder: die Musik in der Kunst des 20. Jahrhunderts, ed. K. von Maur (Munich, 1985), 444–9

E. Brown: 'The Notation and Performance of New Music', MQ, lxxii (1986), 180–201

F. Delalande: 'En l'absence de partition: le cas singulier de l'analyse de la musique electroacoustique', Analyse musicale, no.3 (1986), 54–8
S. Davis: 'Authenticity in Musical Performance', British Journal of Aesthetics, xxvii (1987), 39–50
K.W. Niemöller: 'John Cage und das Zeitproblem in der Musik des 20. Jahrhunderts', Charles Ives und die amerikanische Musiktradition bis zur Gegenwart: Cologne 1988, 223–48
N. Gligo: 'Die musikalische Avantgarde als ahistorische Utopie: die gescheiterten Implikation der experimentellen Musik', AcM, lxi (1989), 217–37
G.L. Edwards: 'Involuntary Affinities: New Music and Performance in the Twentieth Century', Southwest Review, lxxv (1990), 424–43
G. Mathon: 'Aria de John Cage', Cahiers du CIREM, nos.18–19 (1990–91), 41–9
N. Meeùs: 'Apologie de la partition', Analyse musicale, no.24 (1991), 19–22
D. Smalley: 'Can Electro-Acoustic Music be Analysed?', Analisi musicale II: Trent 1991, i, 423–34
J. Voigt and C. Ritt: 'Printed Jazz Music: a Selected Bibliography', Black American Literature Forum, xxv (1991), 633–53
J.-C. François: 'Writing without Representation, and Unreadable Notation', PNM, xxx/1 (1992), 6–21
L. Koblyakov: 'Score/Music Interpretation: an Interview with Robert Rowe', Computer Music Journal, xvi/3 (1992), 22–32
C. Ballarini: Les partitions processus de J. Cage et de K. Stockhausen (thesis, U. of Montpellier III, 1993)
H. Loos: 'Die Befreiung der musikalischen Avant-garde vom Notentext und die Technik der unendlichen Reproduzierbarkeit von Musik', Glasba v tehničnem svetu: Ljubljana 1993, 178–90
E.S. Schwartz and D. Godfrey: Music since 1945: Issues, Materials, and Literature (New York, 1993)
Neue Musik und Interpretation: Darmstadt 1994
J. Holzaepfel: David Tudor and the Performance of American Experimental Music, 1950–1959 (diss., CUNY, 1994)

DAVID CHARLTON (1–3(v)), KATHRYN WHITNEY (3(vi))

Scorpione, Domenico (fl 1672–1703). Italian composer and theorist. A Franciscan friar, he was maestro di cappella of S Francesco, Bologna, from 1672 to 1674, of the basilica of the SS Apostoli, Rome, in 1675 and again in 1703, of Messina Cathedral, and of Benevento Cathedral in 1702. All his surviving music is for the church and is conservative in style. His treatise Riflessioni armoniche includes a section on speculative theory, which shows a knowledge of the musical thought of his time, and a section teaching strict counterpoint and contrapuntal devices in the prima pratica tradition. His Istruzioni corali is a plainchant manual. (G. Donato: 'La policoralità a Messina nel 16° e 17° secolo', La policoralità in Italia nei secoli XVI e XVII: Messina 1980, 135–48)

WORKS

Sacra modulamina, cum litaniis BMV, 2–3vv, op.1 (Bologna, 1672)
Compieta da cappella con le 4 antifone e litanie, 5vv, bc, op.2 (Bologna, 1672)
Motetti, 2–4vv, con una messa concertata, 5vv, libro 2, op.3 (Rome, 1675)
Armonia sacra, 2–3vv, [?op.4] (Naples, 1691)

WRITINGS

Riflessioni armoniche, op.5 (Naples, 1701)
Istruzioni corali, op.7 (Benevento, 1702)

IMOGENE HORSLEY

Scorzuto, Giovanni Maria (fl 1625–36). Italian composer. He was maestro di cappella and organist at Asolo, near Treviso, from at least 1625 to 1636. This information derives from Leonardo Simonetti's popular anthology of solo motets, Ghirlanda sacra (Venice, 1625[2], 2/1636[2]), which contains Scorzuto's only known piece, O bone Jesu, for soprano and continuo. Compared with the fine solos of Monteverdi and Grandi in this collection, his motet illustrates on a simpler level the varied musical means adopted by the composer of solo motets: he used transpositions, sequences, repeated notes, chromatic inflections and even a short interlude for continuo. (J. Roche: North Italian Church Music in the Age of Monteverdi, Oxford, 1984)

JEROME ROCHE

Scotch snap. A melodic figuration consisting of a stressed semiquaver followed by an unstressed dotted quaver, usually applied to melodies that fall or rise by step. It was current in European art music between 1680 and 1800, and in Scottish strathspeys from 1760 to the present. Its origins are obscure. In Italy it was regarded as a Lombard characteristic; in France it was called the manière lombarde. Quantz (Versuch, 1753) wrote: 'This style began [in Italy] about 1722, but it seems to resemble Scottish music'. Burney, writing of Italian opera in London in 1748, deprecated the over-use of the 'Scots catch or cutting short of the first of two notes of a melody', blaming Cocchi, Perez and Jommelli for this fault. These comparisons imply that Scottish dance music was performed with Scotch snaps many years before the first printed strathspeys appeared in the 1760s. The art sonatas of the Scottish composers James Oswald (Airs for the Four Seasons, 1755) and John Reid (flute sonatas, 1762) show confluence of the Italian and Scottish traditions.

Purcell was using Scotch snaps long before Quantz's date of 1722. None appear in his earliest works, but they are well established in the coronation anthem My heart is inditing (1685). Purcell's source for the figure may have been the French NOTES INÉGALES or Scottish folksong: both French and Scottish music were in vogue in London in the 1680s. In his song Twas within a furlong of Edinborough town (1694) the figure has rustic overtones; elsewhere (e.g. in the recitative leading to 'When I am laid in earth', Dido and Aeneas, 1689) it is associated with elegance and passion. In Handel (e.g. Musette of Concerto Grosso op.6 no.6, 1739) and other British composers of the mid-18th century the figure has exclusively rustic or naive associations. The same is generally true of its appearances in the works of Mozart (several serenades and string quartets) and Beethoven (finale of the Serenade op.25).

After 1800 art music melodies became concerned with Romantic expressiveness at the expense of speech-rhythm; at this point composers lost interest in the Scotch snap. It continued, however, as one of the main figurations of Scottish dance music, and has occasionally been used for its Caledonian flavour by such later composers as Mackenzie, MacCunn and F.G. Scott. It is also a staple rhythm of present-day Scottish folksongs, giving melodies a flexibility that matches the irregular rhythms of Scots dialect.

DAVID JOHNSON

Scotch tune. A type of melody popular in England from the Restoration until well into the 18th century, either genuinely Scottish in origin or written in a style purporting to be Scottish. Under titles such as 'An Aire, Scotch', 'Scottish March' or simply 'Scotch Tune', with or without a text, these pieces occur in collections of keyboard music, music for solo flute, violin or lyra-viol, instrumental theatre music and songs. Their melodies are often constructed on gapped scales, and in the fabricated tunes the Scotch snap often occurs more frequently than it would in genuine Scottish folk music; sometimes harmonization in terms of a double-tonic sequence is present or implied. Purcell's 'New Scotch Tune' in the second part of Musick's Handmaid (1689) is a good example of a composer attempting to come to terms with a genuine Scottish melody in a manner almost as quaint as that of Haydn or Beethoven more than a century later. (D. Johnson: 'The Harmonization of Folk-Tunes', Music and Society in Lowland Scotland in the Eighteenth Century (London, 1972), 150–63)

See also SCOTLAND, §II, 5.

MICHAEL TILMOUTH/JEREMY BARLOW

Scotland. Region of the United Kingdom bounded by the Atlantic Ocean to the north and west, by the North Sea to the east and by England to the south. The west coast in particular is broken by lochs, and the mainland is surrounded by many islands including the Inner and Outer Hebrides, Orkney and the Shetlands.

I. Art music. II. Folk music.

I. Art music

1. Introduction. 2. Early developments. 3. The later 16th and 17th centuries. 4. The 18th and 19th centuries. 5. Later developments.

1. INTRODUCTION. Any account of music in Scotland must inevitably be halting and fragmentary, not only because of the ravages of time and the lack of sources but also because of powerful and even destructive political, religious and social factors. In the Middle Ages music appears to have developed peaceably in church and court until the 13th century. The 14th century was disrupted by English aggression. The 15th and 16th centuries marked another period of flowering in both church and court music. In the mid-16th century Scotland was saddled with an anti-musical national church, and in the 17th century was abandoned by a fugitive court, its music consigned to limbo. The tradition was revived by the Scottish aristocracy in the 18th century but lapsed into English-orientated provincialism in the 19th, to be reawakened by resurgent nationalism and its aftermath in the 20th century.

2. EARLY DEVELOPMENTS. The earliest surviving traces of music in Scotland are of the late 13th century. The Celtic Church had been established as long ago as the 4th century, the Roman rite introduced only in the 8th and a solid feudal monarchy established by the 11th century. Ensuing Anglo-Norman and Gothic influences contributed to the foundation of great ecclesiastical centres (incorporating song schools) such as Dunfermline, St Andrews, Glasgow and Elgin. Two 13th-century sources of plainsong may preserve alongside Gregorian/Sarum material some of the repertory of the Celtic church: the Inchcolm Antiphoner contains what is probably much earlier music in honour of St Columba, as does the Sprouston Breviary of music for St Kentigern. One of the earliest surviving records of polyphonic music in Scotland (Wolfenbüttel manuscript D-W 677, associated with St Andrews Augustinian Priory) contains some of the early 13th-century Notre Dame repertory of organum and conductus, as well as some other music perhaps of more local origin. The 13th century was also the time when a distinctive Scottish literature began to emerge, but the only song with music to survive from the period is the Latin hymn for the wedding of Princess Margaret of Scotland in 1281 (see Elliott, 1985).

The 14th century saw Scotland's struggle for independence, England's persistent attempts at appropriation and the consolidation of Scotland's alliance with France. There are few references to court music, but, in spite of the destruction of the great Border abbeys, provision for music is recorded in some contemporary church statutes. Some fragments of 14th-century polyphony survive in Wolfenbüttel manuscript D-W 499. The three older Scottish universities – St Andrews, Glasgow and Aberdeen – were founded in the 15th century: in all three music played an important part in chapel services, if not as a subject for study in the medieval Quadrivium. Mid-century fragments in D-W 499 and inscribed slates from Paisley Abbey are all that survive from that period today. The founding of collegiate chapels increased during the 15th century and during the reigns of James III and IV the most important of these, the Chapel Royal, cultivated, besides Scottish music, English compositions in the decorative style, music by the Burgundian DuFay and Netherlandish-inspired polyphony of the later century, all contained in the early 16th-century Carver choirbook. The development of the imitative style of the high Renaissance can be observed in Scottish music of the early 16th century. The masses and motets of Robert Carver (otherwise decorative), also in the Carver choirbook, show it in an early stage; an early motet of David Peebles is transitional; while in the works of Robert Johnson (most of which admittedly were written in England, where a parallel stylistic development took place) it is fully developed. Secular music at the Scottish court reflects the interests of English and French factions, the latter dominating when James V twice brought a French princess home to Scotland to be queen in 1537 and 1538, and French culture flooded into the country. The chanson style, developed by Claudin de Sermisy in the second quarter of the century, found expression in Scotland in a number of songs for four voices to texts by John Fethy, Steill, Scott and others, that subscribe to most of the structural and songlike features of French chansons of this period.

3. THE LATER 16TH AND 17TH CENTURIES. With the Reformation in 1560, Lutheran chorale melodies and French and English psalm tunes were adopted by the Scottish Reformed Church. Scottish composers such as David Peebles, Andrew Kemp, John Angus, Andrew Blackhall and John Buchan set them chordally or imitatively according to current European practice, composed some new tunes and set psalm texts as imitative anthems in syllabic style. The first printed Scottish psalter (tunes only) appeared in 1564; but without any adequate provision for music in the service, composition and performance of church music lapsed, and by royal decree song schools were made the responsibility of the burghs. Music at the Chapel Royal and court under Mary Queen of Scots fared somewhat better, the French influence and the Roman tradition being represented by French-inspired instrumental consorts and Latin sacred music. From the reign of Mary's son, James VI, we have Franco-Scottish 'chansons' of the Castalian Band (a group of poets and musicians led by the poet Alexander Montgomerie) and music in English keyboard and Italian madrigal styles. Among the musicians were Thomas Hudson, William Kinloch, James Lauder and Andrew Blackhall. Even after the departure of the court in 1603 attempts were made to keep the Chapel Royal going, but James VI's and Charles I's leanings towards episcopacy eventually brought about a violent reaction in Scotland: a narrow Presbyterianism triumphed, though it just managed to produce several printed psalters with part-music; and an interesting but retrospective psalter inspired by the Chapel Royal was printed in 1635, edited by its director, Edward Millar. The most characteristic Presbyterian church music of the age was a handful of all-purpose Common Tunes, which remained staple fare throughout the 17th and 18th centuries.

Despite the fragmentation of court culture in the 17th century the Scottish musical tradition managed to survive for a time among the musical amateurs of the northern castles and in one or two burgh song schools such as those of Aberdeen and Glasgow. At the latter the composer Duncan Burnett produced keyboard music in sombre Jacobean style in the early decades of the century. But in general native musical composition declined, and although works by foreign composers circulated, Scottish music was represented either by favourite pieces of an earlier age or by that other Scottish musical tradition, the native air or folksong. It was during the 17th century that folk music first began to be recorded, although as a tradition it must have existed for long before that. The music is arranged for instrumental performance on mandora (the Skene Manuscript), cittern (Edwards, MacAlman), lute (e.g. Wemyss, Balcarres), harpsichord (e.g. Edwards), lyra viol (e.g. Leyden) or violin (e.g. Panmure) – indeed, few song texts seem to have been written down at this time (see §II). After the Restoration some of the song-tunes of the Scottish courtly repertory belatedly reached print in Forbes's Songs and Fancies (Aberdeen, 1662–82), the first book of secular music ever printed in Scotland. But after a century torn by civil war and religious strife that tradition was fading rapidly. The last songbook to contain samples of its music dates from the closing years of the 17th century, just at the time when a young musician from a prominent Scottish family, John Clerk of Penicuik, was studying composition with Corelli in Rome. Clerk's career as composer of cantatas in later Baroque style was promising but unfortunately short-lived, due to traditional family constraints and public duties.

4. The 18th and 19th centuries. Musical composition in Scotland began to revive in the more stable social and economic conditions of the 18th century, and the growth of musical societies and concerts in the major cities attracted many foreign and especially Italian musicians such as Francesco Barsanti and Domenico Corri. Throughout the century native composers such as William McGibbon, Charles McLean, James Oswald, David Foulis and Thomas Erskine, 6th Earl of Kelly, wholeheartedly adopted the prevailing international styles of Baroque, Rococo and Classical in their songs, sonatas, concertos and symphonies. But events leading up to and following the Union of 1707, when Scotland lost its parliament, also coincided with an upsurge in national feeling that was reflected in a whole series of publications of folksongs (see §II). James Watson and Allan Ramsay, and later David Herd and Robert Burns, began to collect, edit or rewrite texts, and such song collections as Orpheus Caledonius (1725–33) and The Scots Musical Museum (1787–1803), while serving contemporary needs, could also be said to extend and develop the 17th-century aristocratic taste for arranged folk music. Some Scottish composers cultivated both styles, but this dualism of interest was eventually to produce an unfortunate division of loyalties between those champions of the so-called 'true' Scottish (i.e. folk) music and those of the so-called 'foreign' importation (i.e. art music). Even men of the Age of Enlightenment in Scotland failed to realize that music need be no less Scots for being European. But folksong, once the novelty of an aristocracy without a court, proved to be the hardier survivor and even achieved a European currency with the collections (1793–1841) of George Thomson, who turned to composers such as Haydn and Beethoven for his harmonizations. With the collapse of aristocratic patronage at the end of the century, the remarkable flowering of music in 18th-century Scotland came to an end and a period of relative stagnation in composition once more ensued. Ironically this flowering of creative activity could only have existed because of the equivocal 'Union', but tragically it could not sustain itself due to the lack of an international Scottish identity.

In the second quarter of the 19th century composition was revived briefly in the songs, chamber and dramatic music of John Thomson, which show elements of early German Romanticism. Throughout the century national song received much attention from collectors, arrangers and imitators – some of it worthwhile but much of it in doubtful taste. Manuscripts of early music began to draw the interest of antiquarians; such was the climate of opinion, however, that commentators doubted the value or even genuineness of court songs simply because they contained no traces of folk music. The national church (which had hardly progressed beyond the 12 Common Tunes during the 18th century) now fostered the publication of a flood of largely worthless books of psalms. It retained its 300-year-old hatred of the organ until the end of the century, although some attempts were made to improve standards of choral singing from about the 1860s. It was the Episcopal (and to a lesser extent the Roman Catholic) Church that since the previous century had provided some sort of musical standards in taste and performance. The new interest in choral singing was paralleled about the mid-century by the formation of choral societies, with their attendant orchestras. These were to develop and become important features of the Scottish musical scene that have continued to the 20th century.

5. Later developments. Towards the end of the 19th century a group of nationalist composers began to emerge on to a musical scene lately dominated by Anglo-German interests, and laid the foundations for important later developments. All of them showed an interest in large-scale forms and displayed considerable skill in handling the orchestra. In the cantatas and oratorios of Alexander Mackenzie, the native idiom of folksong is blended with the cosmopolitanism of the German style. The national idiom is even stronger in the choral and orchestral works and operas of Hamish MacCunn and Learmont Drysdale, both working at the turn of the century; while the music of William Wallace, a late Romantic exponent of the Lisztian symphonic poem, and of J.B. McEwen, a composer of delicate post-impressionist chamber music, is more individual in character. Some subsequent 20th-century Scottish composers, such as Ian Whyte and Erik Chisholm, could almost be said to have developed individuality to the point of eccentricity; whereas Francis George Scott transformed obsolescence into individuality – a rarer achievement. In the work of later composers a wide range of 20th-century techniques of international currency may be found. Composers such as Robin Orr, Cedric Thorpe Davie and Ronald Stevenson retain leanings in a more or less marked degree towards traditional tonality in neo-classical, folksong revival, even late Romantic terms; Iain Hamilton, Thomas Wilson and Thea Musgrave have cultivated the more recent developments of serialism and aleatory technique; while David Dorward, Sebastian Forbes and Martin Dalby represented a younger group of Scottish composers whose work was significant for a developing musical culture. Among composers who have settled in Scotland for a considerable period of time are Kenneth Leighton, Peter Maxwell Davies and Lyell Cresswell. Native Scottish composers working today in many different musical styles include John MacLeod, Edward Maguire, William Sweeney, Judith Weir and James McMillan. Among a younger group of composers there is a growing interest in the new techniques of electro-acoustic/computer music.

Taking a more general view of the contemporary musical scene in Scotland, however, it may be observed that the 200-year-old dualism of Scottish music still operates today in many quarters. It is obviously a much more complex phenomenon than 19th-century nationalism. Attempts to treat folk music in the 20th century have ranged from well-meaning transformation of folksong into art song, idiomatic absorption into a musical language, sensitive arrangement, commercial tartan-and-bagpipe image-making (the persistent curse of Scottish music at the international cultural level) to neo-primitive popular styles. But since the mid-20th century there has been a remarkable growth in every sphere of Scotland's musical life. The 20th-century patrons – the BBC, the Saltire Society, the Scottish Arts Council, the McEwen Bequest and, more recently, the Edinburgh Contemporary Arts Trust – have encouraged composition and performance of new music and have also stimulated interest in the music of Scotland's past. Orchestral music, opera and ballet are regularly presented on a national basis by the Scottish National (since 1990 the Royal Scottish National), Scottish Chamber and BBC Scottish orchestras and by Scottish Opera and Scottish Ballet. Among a wealth of smaller professional groups making regular appearances are Cappella Nova, the Scottish Early Music Consort, the Chamber Group of Scotland and BT Scottish Ensemble. Festivals have proliferated: apart from the long-established Edinburgh International Festival, perhaps the most notable are the St Magnus Festival, Mayfest and the Perth Festival of the Arts. The teaching and fostering of music in schools, music academies and universities are firmly established, and an ambitious project to document Scotland's music has been under way since 1968 at the Scottish Music Information Centre (formerly the Scottish Music Archive), Glasgow.

See also ABERDEEN; EDINBURGH; GLASGOW.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. Dauney: Ancient Scottish Melodies, from a Manuscript of the Reign of King James VI (Edinburgh, 1838)
J. Johnson: The Scots Musical Museum, 1787–1803, ed. D. Laing and W. Stenhouse (Edinburgh, 1853)
N. Livingston, ed.: The Scottish Metrical Psalter of A.D. 1635 (Glasgow, 1864)
C. Rogers: The History of the Chapel Royal of Scotland (Edinburgh, 1882)
D. Baptie: Musical Scotland Past and Present (Paisley, 1894/R)
H.G. Farmer: A History of Music in Scotland (London, 1947/R)
M. Patrick: Four Centuries of Scottish Psalmody (London, 1949)
I.B. Cowan: Medieval Religious Houses: Scotland (London, 1957, rev. 2/1976 by I.B. Cowan and D.E. Easson)
K. Elliott and H.M. Shire, eds.: Music of Scotland, 1500–1700, MB, xv (London, 1957, 3/1975)
K. Elliott: Music of Scotland, 1500–1700 (diss., U. of Cambridge, 1959)
H.M. Shire: Song, Dance and Poetry of the Court of Scotland under King James VI (Cambridge, 1969)
D. Johnson: Music and Society in Lowland Scotland in the Eighteenth Century (London, 1972)
C. Wilson: Scottish Opera: the First Ten Years (London, 1972)
K. Elliott and F. Rimmer: A History of Scottish Music (London, 1973)
J.C. Ottenberg: 'Musical Currents of the Scottish Enlightenment', IRASM, ix (1978), 99–110
C. Thorpe Davie: Scotland's Music (Edinburgh, 1980)
D. Johnson: Scottish Fiddle Music in the 18th Century (Edinburgh, 1984)
K. Elliott, ed.: 'Ex te lux oritur': Wedding Hymn of Margaret of Scotland and Eric of Norway, 1281, MS, Scottish Music Information Centre (Glasgow, 1985)
M. Everist: 'From Paris to St Andrews: the Origins of $W_1$', JAMS, xliii (1990), 1–42
K. Elliott: 'The Musical Slate Fragments', Paisley Abbey: Investigations, 1991, ed. P. Johnston and S.T. Driscoll (Glasgow, 1991), 25–9
J. Purser: Scotland's Music (Edinburgh, 1992)
B.M. Ross: Writings about Scotland's Music: an Annotated Bibliography (diss., Claremont Graduate School, 1993)
D.J. Ross: Musick Fyne: Robert Carver and the Art of Music in Sixteenth Century Scotland (Edinburgh, 1993)
I. Preece: '$W_3$: some Fragments of Scottish Fourteenth-Century Polyphony' [unpubd paper given at 22nd Annual Conference on Medieval and Renaissance Studies: Glasgow 1994]
K. Elliott, ed.: Musica Scotica (Glasgow, 1995–8)

II. Traditional music

1. INTRODUCTION. Traditional music in Scotland includes locally-made music, whether of known authorship or not, and whether extant in written or recorded form or not, which has had a significant life in oral tradition. The notion of traditional music belonging to amateurs cannot be rigidly applied in the case of Scotland, as professional musicians have played an important role in traditional music since at least the 17th century. Traditional music in Scotland includes a wide variety of styles, many related to linguistic and/or geographic influences. The three main languages of Scotland (English, Scots and Gaelic) are all represented in traditional song; instrumental traditions, especially those of piping and fiddling, are closely related to these worlds of singing. Scotland has significant populations descended from South Asian, Cantonese, Polish and Italian immigrant groups, but their music-making in Scotland has been little studied and is not included in this article.

The 'Highland line' is conventionally regarded as dividing Scotland into two major areas of language and culture: the north and west being predominantly Gaelic and the south and east principally Scots. The line has shifted further to the west as Gaelic has declined and in the 20th century, has become less distinct as far as music is concerned. By the end of the 20th century there were no monolingual Gaelic-speaking areas left but Gaelic continues to be culturally important in the Western Isles and the Highlands. Owing to internal migration from rural areas, the largest number of Gaelic speakers is in and around the city of Glasgow.

2. SOURCES AND RESEARCH. Scots is considered by some to be a distinct language, while English speakers not educated in Scots often include it as a dialect of English. This distinction has had important ramifications for traditional song in Scotland as some editors and collectors, particularly during the 18th and 19th centuries, have 'corrected' Scots-language texts for English readers. 20th-century field recordings of ballad singing have all but eliminated this notion in modern publications of Scots song.

Traditional music in Scotland is unusual among European folk traditions in that there is a long history of mixed oral and literate transmission of melodies, tunes and songs, and in that much of what is accepted as folk music in Scotland is of known authorship. This is because much of the early song poetry, although of known authorship, began to be printed only in the early 18th century, and until then was transmitted solely by oral means. For example, many of the songs of the Gaelic poet Mary Macleod (Mairi nighean Alasdair Ruaidh, *b c*1615) have survived for centuries in the repertories of singers without having been written down. Some of their tunes were first printed in 1911, in Tolmie's collection of Gaelic songs (D1911); others are still being recovered. Similarly the chief composers of pìobaireachd, notably the MacCrimmons, are known by name, though only a few of the earlier pìobaireachd can be ascribed with certainty 'in individual composers.

Significant publication of Scottish song and fiddle tunes began in the mid-18th century, while the Highland Society of London encouraged staff notation of pipe music beginning in the early 19th century (see Bibliography: C). Although many traditional musicians today also use written musical sources, aural methods continue to be the primary means of disseminating repertory, including both personal contact and mass mediated sound recordings. The internet is primarily used as a means of advertising for professionals and of discussion for computer-literate amateurs rather than as a source of musical sound or notation.

Despite a few 17th-century sources (notably the Skene manuscript of lute music), there is little direct contemporary evidence concerning traditional music in Scotland before the 18th century. Heroic poetry in Gaelic became one of the first examples of spurious publication when Ossianic lays were presented by MacPherson. Little contemporary evidence of this music and song exists (but see Angus Fraser manuscript, Bibliography: A n.d.) but much pipe music and song has been collected from later generations of musicians (see Mackay, E1838; Tolmie, D1911).

Recent research in traditional music in Scotland has concentrated on collection of items of music, with the most important repository of sound archives being at the School of Scottish Studies, University of Edinburgh. Two major areas for research have been on historical aspects of the tradition, especially in piping, fiddle music and Gaelic song, and on performers at the margins of Scottish society. Researchers associated with the School of Scottish Studies have worked with travelling people since the 1950s to collect a large repertory of music and song from a solely oral tradition.

Other recent research includes musical ethnograpies of Shetland and Galloway that have produced significant conclusions about the relations between population groups, social life and traditional music; more studies of this kind covering other areas of Scotland are needed. Studies of important individual performers (e.g. the traveller singer Jeannie Robertson, the Fisher family) have led to further work on the importance of individual life histories and psychology in the creation and performance of traditional music in Scotland. Study of traditional music and the mass media has led to a broader perspective on the workings of this mixed oral and literate tradition.

3. FUNCTION AND CONTEXT. Traditional music may be heard at a variety of events ranging from the most intimate and informal to the most highly organized and public. Pipers are in demand at rituals associated with the life-cycle, especially weddings and funerals. Wedding parties also include traditional dancing usually with live music, as do parties celebrating significant wedding anniversaries.

Hogmanay is the main point in the calendar year at which traditional music is indispensable. This includes music at home during first-footing and, starting in the 1990s, outdoor amplified music at large urban street parties to bring in the New Year. At these events, traditional musicians are placed in a physical context originally designed for rock musicians. At Stonehaven, pipers accompany the march of fire-throwers on Hogmanay, while Shetland's Up-Helly-Aa festival has its own repertory of song to accompany fire rituals.

Burns Suppers, held in January to celebrate the life of the poet, song collector and editor Robert Burns, include piping to accompany the ritual entrance of the haggis, singing of Burns's songs, and music for dancing. All of the above events are usually ended with community singing and dancing of Auld Lang Syne.

Traditional music has little place in most formal religious worship, the exception being psalm singing in churches of the Gaels (see §5 (iii)). Popular psalm singing and playing of psalm tunes on the fiddle represent a paraliturgical role for traditional musicians.

Beyond these ritual functions of traditional music in Scotland is the prominence of traditional music at civic celebrations and important events. Pipe bands are used for parades of all kinds, while concerts and céilidhs are held to welcome and honour important guests. For example, the opening of the new Scottish Parliament in 1999 included the traditional singer Sheena Wellington performing Burns's A Man's a Man for A' That.

Traditional music also forms an essential part of a lively group of dance traditions in Scotland. A standard ensemble of accordion(s), fiddle, piano, bass and drums developed in the mid-20th century to accompany Scottish country dancing. Since the 1980s, a more eclectic type of band, often featuring bagpipes, fiddle and electronic accompanying instruments has developed for a new youth céilidh dance movement. Solo pipers are the norm for Highland dancers and, along with solo fiddlers, some are involved in the late-20th century revival of step dancing in Scotland.

The traditional CÉILIDH is the most important informal context for music-making. Although rooted in Gaelic culture, céilidhs can be found at homes throughout Scotland, including travellers' camp sites.

The earliest known patronage for traditional musicians was in the Gaelic courts of clan chiefs, where musicians had important roles: pipers led men into battle and played at funerals and other important occasions. Bards and harpers provided entertainment and homage to important guests. The 18th-century break-up of clan society meant that the original context for this music disappeared; the harp was largely supplanted by fiddle and bagpipe by this time, and the bagpipe repertory was preserved away from establishment centres following the Jacobite rebellions. In the Lowlands, town pipers were employed, and in the 18th century it became fashionable to have a tune by a prominent fiddle composer named after members of the upper classes (e.g. Lady Charlotte Campbell). In the 20th century, mass media organizations have become important patrons and supporters of traditional music. BBC Radio Scotland provides regular traditional music programming, while both the BBC and commercial television stations have important though sporadic coverage.

Another important context for traditional music is the folk club. Developed largely in the 1950s and 1960s, most of these clubs meet weekly to hear an outside, paid performer and to give a platform to local musicians. The inclusive nature of folk clubs may be related to the same ethos at céilidhs of all descriptions, and is an important feature of the Scottish tradition of music-making.

Folk festivals, many of them emphasizing local music making, can be found throughout Scotland. Most Scottish folk festivals are small and local but in the 1990s a new kind of festival aimed at large audiences hearing star performers has evolved, notably the Celtic Connections festival in Glasgow. The smaller festivals may include formal concerts, dances, pub sessions, workshops and competitions. This last area, the competition, is also prominent at the Highland Games and is one of the main platforms for performance of some traditional forms (especially pìobaireachd). The role of competitions has been controversial in that, along with encouraging performance and providing a meeting place for far-flung musical friends, competitions impose standards that may tend to ossify a musical tradition.

Traditional music in Scotland exists alongside mainstream forms such as Western art music and popular music. Despite the use of traditional music for significant civic and personal celebrations, the wealth of traditional music is sometimes hidden from the general population. Those seeking traditional music find it easily, but it is also easy to avoid it through total immersion in mass-mediated global popular music. The devolution of Parliament may begin to change this through both practical support and positive identification with Scotland's traditional music.

4. General characteristics. Although many musicians and writers on music emphasize the differences in musical styles in different areas of the country, traditional music-making in Scotland has an underlying unity featuring a common repertory of melodies; these are sung and played on virtually all the instruments of traditional music. Other unifying characteristics are the participation in traditional music and dance by all social classes, regardless of geography, language or period of history, and a nurturing attitude to young musicians along with an inclusive approach towards performance; this results in the traditional céilidh, in public performance opportunities such as at folk clubs, formal céilidhs and concerts, in pub session playing, and in informal teaching.

Prominent musical characteristics found in the traditional music of Scotland include pentatonic modes, double-tonic tunes, cyclical melodies, and the Scotch snap. Pentatonicism in Scottish traditional music is regarded by the outside world as a cliché. Study of

Ex.1 Hebridean waulking-song scale / compass — Verse A. ♩. = 66

'S beag an t-ioghn - adh, Ho i o hó, Ho ro ghealladh o, O hì — o hó; Mi bhi diur - ach, Ho i o hó Ho ro ghealladh o, O hì — o hó (Verse B.; solo refrain; chorus refrain; Fine)

Ex.2 Green grow the rashes-o (words by Robert Burns, tune in James Oswald: Caledonian Pocket Companion)

There's naught but care on ev - 'ry han' In ev -'ry hour that passes o; What sig - ni-fies the life o' man, An 't'were na' for the lass-es o. Green grow the rashes o!, Green grow the rashes o! The sweetest hours that e'er I spend Are spent a-mang the lass - es o!

Scottish pentatonic melodies reveals that, in Gaelic song, six pentatonic modes can be identified (see Gilchrist, D1910–13) all involving anhemitonic scales. Pentatonic songs in Scots include a greater number of five-note scales (e.g. C–D–E–F–G) in addition to pentatonic scales with a wider compass. Songs and tunes from Scotland also include hexatonic and heptatonic melodies, and Collinson (F1966) has pointed out Hebridean songs of four notes only (ex.1).

Another important modal feature of traditional music in Scotland, particularly in pipe tunes, is the double tonic. Double-tonic tunes feature a melodic phrase, usually based on a major triad, which is stated, then repeated a tone lower, and often repeated again at the original pitch. This effect suits the nine notes of the Highland bagpipe chanter, and the changing relationship to the fixed drone pitch accentuates the effect of a double-tonic figure. The use of double-tonic effects in tunes played on other instruments creates a bagpipe feel to the performance and, when well executed at speed, creates a feeling of wildness.

Some Lowland song-tunes are characterized by a dual modality, where the melody apparently begins in one mode and finishes in another. One of the best-known examples of this is in Green grow the rashes-o (ex.2), which may be described as beginning in the major key and ending in the relative minor (i.e. a mixture of Ionian and Aeolian modes). Sometimes the mode seems ambiguous because the tune ends on a note other than the tonic. For example, the tunes Roy's wife of Aldivalloch and The Campbells are coming both end on the third of the scale; Tullochgorum (ex.3), Jenny dang the weaver and other songs end on the second degree of the mode. These may all have been cyclic dance-tunes. Final cadences on the fifth of the mode are almost commonplace, particularly in Gaelic songs. However in pìobaireachd the theme of the piece is often deliberately restricted to the notes of the pentatonic scale, even though the pipe chanter has a range of nine notes (an octave plus one). The MacCrimmons wrote their pìobaireachd compositions almost exclusively in the pentatonic scale.

The SCOTCH SNAP is a rhythmic cliché of Scottish music that has been misunderstood by composers elsewhere in Europe. Most closely associated with the strathspey, this two-note dotted rhythm consists of a emphasized short note on the beat, leading to a longer, off-beat pitch (see ex.8). The snap is also used for special effect in reels and is characteristic of pipe marches. Correct speed and emphasis in the Scotch snap is a marker of traditional performance style, as is the placement of snaps within heavily dotted-rhythm genres.

The modal aspects of traditional Scottish melodies, as outlined above, present difficulties for accompanists. Musicians are known to have experimented with harmonizing these tunes according to current norms of mainstream musical styles since the first flush of fiddle tune publications in the 18th century. More recent efforts have included the standard common-practice harmony used by Scottish country dance bands, harmonic experimentation inspired by jazz musicians, and imitation of bagpipe drones in effects produced by electronic instruments.

In addition to harmonization of traditional melodies, there have also been frequent attempts at more extended arrangements according to the norms of current European art and popular music. The first evidence of this are fiddle tunes arranged in 18th-century variation sets in the style of Corelli. More recently, a marriage of bothy bands and the swing music of big bands in the 1930s and 1940s led to dance bands able to play for both Scottish country dances and for ballroom dances such as the foxtrot and various quicksteps. At the end of the 20th century, crossover musics involving traditional melodies include jazz, Western art music and rock, along with experiments in electronic sound. The maintenance of traditional repertory and style in the face of constant experimentation and interchange of specialist traditional musics with more mainstream musical styles is one of the distinguishing features of traditional music-making in Scotland.

Ex.3 Tullochgorum (words by the Rev. John Skinner) with spirit. ♩ = 104

(a) Come gie's a sang Montgom – ery cried, And lay your disputes a' aside, What sig-nifies 't for folks to chide, For what was done be-fore them? Let (b) Whig and To - ry now agree, Whig and To - ry, Whig and To - ry, Whig and To - ry a' agree to drop their Whigmigmor - um; Let (c) Whig and To - ry a' agree, To spend the night in mirth and glee, And cheerfu' sing alang wi' me, The

5. SONG. Scotland has a singing culture, with a repertory that may be classified by its source, language and musical style.

(i) Ballads. Scotland is perhaps best known as the source for a large body of narrative song kept alive in oral tradition throughout the 20th century. The Scottish muckle sangs (lit. 'big ballads') form one of the most important European collections of sung tales, with many having cognate forms throughout northern Europe. F.J. Child (B1882–98) collected manuscript versions of the texts in the late 19th century, while in the mid-20th century, B.H. Bronson (B1959–72) collected and classified tunes sung to these texts (ex.4). Child was unaware that the repertory, which he classified into what are now known as the Child ballads, was still being sung by Scottish travellers. In the era of magnetic tape recording following World War II, several important collectors, starting with Hamish Henderson and Alan Lomax, recorded great traveller singers such as Jeannie Robertson and the Stewarts of Blair performing these tales of love, loyalty and often murder, in a unique, powerful and highly ornamented style.

Traditional singing in Scots also includes songs associated with calendar customs (the best known being Auld Lang Syne), children's songs and occupational songs. Of the latter, bothy songs concerned with the life of 19th- and early 20th-century farm labourers are the most important, both in numbers and in widespread dissemination and popularity. Many bothy songs describe actual events and were composed not long after they happened.

During the early to mid-18th century, large collections of Scots song were collected, composed and published by figures such as Ramsay (F1802) and Oswald (B*c*1761–2). These especially emphasized lyric songs and led to a boom in composition in a pseudo-traditional style by Romantics such as Walter Scott, Lady Nairne and Robert Burns. This body of song, with texts composed both by and for the upper classes to tunes either newly composed or

Ex.4 Lord William (Child no.7)

They grew and grew, and bet-ter they grew, till at last they_ reach'd one an - oth - er,__ So that an - y one that__ pass - èd by__ would have known they were lov - ers to - geth - er.

'improved' from oral tradition, are often identifiable by musical traits making them more difficult to sing (e.g. large range, long lines, big leaps). In spite of these traits, many of these songs have entered oral tradition and form an important part of the Scots heritage of song.

Bawdy song has been a somewhat hidden tradition, not much highlighted within officially sanctioned Scots song due to the bowdlerization of texts prepared for publication. Bawdy songs have been present in oral tradition regardless of the sensibilities of those able to purchase published books of song and an increasing number of bawdy versions of well-known 'clean' songs have been published and recorded in the late 20th century. This is particularly true of some well-known Burns songs (e.g. John Anderson My Jo, Dainty Davie).

Comic song moving into and out of the music hall forms another significant strand of the repertory of songs in Scots. Performers at the turn of the 20th century such as Harry Lauder and Will Fyffe built careers in music hall using material closely related to traditional song, as well as composing new songs. Some of this repertory has also been taken up in oral tradition.

Songs in English should not be left out of any account of song in Scotland. These range from Scots songs which have been anglicized for reasons similar to those for bowdlerization, loans from other English-speaking countries, and local songs composed in English. One of the most popular of the loan categories of song is the Country and Western repertory imported from the USA. These are especially popular with groups on the margins of Scottish society, either literally, as in those from the islands surrounding the mainland of Scotland, or figuratively, as in socially marginal groups such as the travelling community.

Writers on music have conventionally regarded the singing style of Scots song, particularly the ballads, as both impersonal and straightforward. While the higly ornamented singing style of some travellers may be an exception to a generally simple and clear singing style, the notion of an impersonal approach to singing is ill founded. Scottish singers want their audiences to understand their texts and strive to make a personal statement in their songs; for example, some singers may interpret Ca' the Yowes as relating to sheep while others would treat this metaphorically and associate the text to the subject of personal relationships. This approach is augmented by the telling of the tale of a ballad before it is performed, or in relating the personal significance of a song in introducing it.

(ii) Gaelic song. Gaelic musical culture was exclusively oral until the early 18th century. The notation in manuscript or print of Gaelic songs began a great deal later than that of Lowland Scots music, but examples of Gaelic song can be found in oral circulation whose origins predate anything from Lowland Scotland.

Most Scottish Gaelic poetry is intended to be sung. Like Irish Gaelic poetry, it has evolved from the ancient bardic court poetry. Some of the Scottish bardic poetry was written down but unfortunately none of its associated music survives in its original form. The verses were in syllabic metre, i.e. with a fixed number of syllables to the line but without any regular stress-pattern, following instead the natural stresses of the language. A later, more popular and vernacular form of syllabic verse has survived with its music in the Heroic Ballads. These tell variously of the deeds of Cú Chulainn in the Ulster Cycle, of Fionn and Ossian in the Ossianic Ballads and of the Knights of the Arthurian legends. Of the latter only one example, Am bron binn ('The sweet sorrow'), has been found; it was recorded in the Hebrides in the early 1950s (ex.5). These songs originated in prose folk legends of an early period, and were put into ballad form with music in about the 12th century.

As Gaelic poets have always tended to use existing tunes for their songs, the tunes of the Heroic Ballads may well incorporate melodies belonging to the older court poetry. Some of them, too, may have been borrowed from ecclesiastical chants, for they possess features resembling those of plainchant, and it is not impossible that at least some of them may retain unaltered parts of their originals. The Heroic Ballads are still sung today.

After the era of the Heroic Ballads, there is a gap of several centuries from which very few examples of Gaelic folksong have been found. Fewer than half a dozen datable songs survive from a period spanning 300 years. Among them are the Lullaby for Coinnich Oig (b 1569), and a song about the battle of Carinish in North Uist (1601). This period without song records coincides with one of extreme political confusion in the Highlands and Islands following the breakdown of the Lordship of the Isles in the 15th century. The upheaval seems to have caused a definite change in clan tradition.

In the late 17th century, a new type of song developed, the òran mòr (great song) in praise of the Highland chiefs. These songs were in a verse form not previously used, having stressed metres. One of the most notable composers in the new style was Mary MacLeod (see §2 above). Though many of the earlier songs in stressed metre retain much of the rhythmic freedom of syllabic verse (e.g. the songs of Iain Lom), the rise in popularity of stressed metre can be said to represent a new stage in Gaelic song, one that was to lead eventually to the rhythmic type of Gaelic song as we know it today.

It is probable however that songs with regular stress and rhythm existed long before this, in the form of labour songs. Such songs are an important and extensive part of Gaelic folksong. Though few of them are now used for the tasks for which they were originally intended, they are sung for pleasure throughout Gaelic Scotland. They include songs formerly used to coordinate regular movement and exertion, in such communal tasks as rowing, waulking (i.e. cloth-fulling), reaping and corn-grinding with the quern (a job for two people), as well as songs used to lighten solitary tasks, spinning, milking, churning, and nursing an infant or lulling it to sleep.

These songs, particularly the waulking-songs, are characterized by stereotyped series of non-lexical vocables

Ex.5 Heroic Ballad (Arthurian Cycle): Am bron binn

(Reciting note)

'S chunnaic Righ Al (a) ba 'na shuain, 'N aon - a bhean bu ghil - e snuagh fo'n ghréin, 'S gum b'fheàrr leis tuit -

- eam dha cion, Na còmhr - adh fir mar bha (a) fhéin.

in the refrains, such as hao ri ri, o ho lebh o, hò ró eile, etc. (see ex.1). These would appear to have the mnemonic, quasi-notational function of enabling the singer to recall the melody. The technique is somewhat akin to that of pipers' canntaireachd (see §6(i)). They have their own rules of construction; only certain consonants and vowels are used, and these only in selected combinations. Though the same refrain syllables recur throughout the labour songs, a sequence of syllables constituting a complete musical phrase is almost never duplicated in different songs. The syllables are in fact used like the words of a language.

Some of the older Heroic Ballads have been adapted as waulking-songs by addition of such refrain syllables. Many of the tunes of the waulking-songs may be older than their words; and a number of the song texts may originally have been extemporized to known tunes at the waulking-board. Some scholars have suggested that extemporization of words to existing tunes is common practice of the Gael.

The old custom of singing waulking-songs (fig.1) while shrinking the web of newly woven cloth (soaked in urine) has now practically ceased; but groups of young women in parts of the Outer Hebrides, notably in the Isle of Lewis, now sing the songs as a form of communal music-making, going through the movements of pounding the cloth on the table with a web of dry cloth already machine-shrunk. Waulking-songs are also popular on the concert stage. The memory of the cloth being passed from hand to hand by singers still lingers among the Gaelic Scots in Canada, although many of their ancestors left Scotland 200 years ago. They sit in a circle holding between them a scarf or other piece of cloth which they gently swing inwards and outwards towards the centre of the circle as they sing Gaelic songs (for a full analytical account of waulking and waulking-songs see Campbell, F1862, and Collinson, F1966).

Puirt-a-beul, or 'mouth-music', instrumental dance-tunes sung to words, is also a popular form of folk music in Gaelic Scotland. PORT (plural puirt) means 'a tune for a musical instrument'; puirt-a-beul therefore implies the substitution of the voice for an instrument. Puirt-a-beul exist for all the common dance forms (strathspey, reel and jig) as well as for the sword dance Gillie-Calum. Other rhythmic measures sung in puirt-a-beul, sometimes with interesting cross-rhythms, are not identifiable as known dance-tunes. They may be the tunes for dances now forgotten in Scotland, such as the step-dances performed around lighted candles on the floor by the Scottish Gaels in Canada.

While theoretically for dancing, puirt-a-beul is more often sung alone, as an entertainment in itself and for the opportunity it gives the singer to display vocal and rhythmic expertise, amounting sometimes, in the fast tempo of the reel, to a tour de force. The words are often of the nonsense-rhyme type, and sometimes sharply satirical. There are examples of refrains with meaningless syllables, such as huradal, huradal, a ri um o, pihili-ho-um hum-am-im-bo, etc.

1. Women singing a waulking-song: engraving from Thomas Pennant's 'A Tour in Scotland' (1722)

An account of Gaelic song would be incomplete without reference to the fascinating 'fairy songs', which according to tradition are the work of 'fairy composers'. The songs are concerned both with the 'little people' of diminutive human form, and with supernatural creatures such as the water-horse (each-uisge) which takes human form to entice and woo a maiden. The each-uisge is usually personalized as the singer of the song. The theme of nearly all the fairy songs is that of a love affair between fairy and mortal (ex.6).

Ex.6 Fairy song: A phiuthrag 's a phiuthar

♩ = 55

A phiu - thrag 's a phiu - thar, *Hu*___ ru,___
Ghaoil a phiu-thar, *Hu*___ ru,_ Nach truagh leat fhein,
Ho hol ill eo, Mi 'gad chumh-a. *Hu*___ ru.___

(iii) Gaelic psalms. The unaccompanied unharmonized singing of Gaelic versions of the psalms of David is a striking feature of Protestant worship in the Gaelic-speaking areas of Scotland because of the unusual and highly ornamental style of performance. The psalms were introduced after the Reformation, but it was not until 100 years later, in 1659, that 50 of the psalms were printed in Gaelic. The texts were in ballad metre, presumably so that they would fit the tunes already in use in Lowland Scotland. Because of the scarcity of texts and because few of the worshippers could read or write it was ordained that each line of text should first be read out and when necessary its meaning explained. Precentors were therefore appointed for leading the singing and 'reading the line'. This is still normal practice in Gaelic-speaking areas. Texts are generally sung in Gaelic but the practice also take place using English. The precentor intones musically the words of each line (except the first, which is read by the prayer leader) before being joined in singing the line by the main body of worshippers whether in family or congregational worship. Performance is unconducted and slow, and in some areas (notably the Isle of Lewis) the tunes are so highly embellished by each singer in his own way that the result is rhythmic and melodic heterophony.

In 1844 Joseph Mainzer published several transcriptions of ornamental psalm singing. They were later given the label 'long tunes' by the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland, which included further examples of the 'old long tunes' in several editions of its Gaelic Psalmody. Nevertheless Gaelic congregations tend to sing all their small repertory of psalm tunes in the same style whether the tunes are 'old' or of more recent introduction. Knudsen's studies (F1968) provide valuable illustrations of this style based on the highly ornamental singing of one Lewis family. Mainzer's version of the psalm tune 'French' is sung in harmony each year at the close of the National Gaelic Mod.

6. INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC. The Highland bagpipes, the fiddle and harp are conventionally regarded as the national instruments of Scotland. In addition to this triumvirate, a number of other instruments, notably the accordion, have had an important role in traditional music-making. During the early period of industrialization, pianos were bought by many of the factor/large farmer/merchant class, while commercialization in the production of instruments such as the harmonica, jews harp and concertina led to widespread usage of these instruments as well. A resurgence of interest in the clàrsach was much helped by the provision of instruments available for hire by the Clàrsach Society after its formation in 1931.

By the 1880s, the combination of inexpensive instruments and increased leisure time led to a boom in the formation of amateur community music-making groups including brass bands and pipe bands (both especially associated with collieries), amateur orchestras, including Strathspey and Reel Societies, and choirs.

(i) Bagpipes. The Highland bagpipe is pre-eminent in Scotland. Consisting of a nine-note chanter, two tenor drones and a bass drone, this is the instrument of pìobaireachd, of clan society, of British Army regiments, and of community pipe bands (fig.2). The Highland bagpipe has emigrated, along with its players, to many parts of the world, especially the countries of the British Commonwealth; players from these countries still travel to Scotland to perform in competitions. There are also a number of bellows-blown bagpipes in Scotland; their revival since the 1980s has been one of the most important innovations in traditional music at the end of the 20th century.

2. Highland bagpipe played by George S. MacLennan, one of the leading competition pipers of the early 20th century

The Highland bagpipe chanter has a scale of nine notes: g′–a′–b′–c♯″–d″–e″–f♯″–g″–a″ (the c♯″ is considerably flatter than in the tempered scale). This scale has been described as Mixolydian beginning on a′, with a flat subtonic (g′) below but this does not take account of bagpipe modes. There are three drones: two tenor drones on a and a bass drone on A.

The notes names given here are those used conventionally. It is important to note, however, that the actual pitches of modern chanters is considerably higher, usually approaching B♭. As pipers increasingly perform with musicians playing diatonic instruments, there are signs that the traditional tonality of the chanter is giving way to standard Western tuning systems.

The music of the Scottish Highland bagpipe is usually taught and practised on the practice chanter, a cylindrical mouth-blown wooden pipe with a double reed enclosed in a chamber or cap. The practice chanter is unique to the Scottish and to the Spanish bagpipe. It is possibly derived from the old stock-and-horn or shepherd's pipe (for illustration, see STOCK-AND-HORN), which in some features it resembles, though the latter had a single reed. The practice chanter is the same length as the chanter of the bagpipe; but having a cylindrical bore (in contrast to the conical bore of the bagpipe chanter) it sounds an octave lower. A fully accurate standard of pitch however is not maintained in its manufacture.

Many pieces of Highland bagpipe music are pentatonic in character. Seamus MacNeill (F1968) identified three pentatonic scales (beginning on A, G, and D), each of which may be used in different ways so as to produce either a major or minor feeling. Joseph MacDonald, in his Compleat Theory of 1760 pointed out that the relationship of these pitches to the fixed drone pitch helps to convey a specific taste (Gaelic 'blas'). The importance of these tastes is especially emphasized in tunes featuring a double-tonic construction.

There are two major categories of bagpipe music: pìobaireachd (lit. 'playing on bagpipe'), also known as ceòl mór, and ceòl beag (lit. 'small music'). Ceòl mór includes a variety of laments, salutes, gathering tunes, etc. all in the form of a theme and variations; this is now an esoteric repertory performed only by and for afficionados. At the height of Gaelic clan society, pìobaireachd tunes were closely related to song airs known to performers and listeners. Ceòl beag consists of dance music genres (marches, strathspeys, reels, jigs, hornpipes) and is a much more popular idiom.

The earliest records of the Highland bagpipe in Scotland concern the MacCrimmons in the 16th century. The first certain record of the MacCrimmons, who became hereditary pipers to the chiefs of the Clan MacLeod, concerns Donald Mór MacCrimmon (*c*1570–1640) who is credited with having invented pìobaireachd. The form of pìobaireachd is (briefly) that of variations, most of which are played slowly, on a theme or 'ground' (urlar) (ex.7*a*). The ground, after being played in its original version, is then reduced to skeletal form by selection of its essential 'theme-notes' (ex.7*b*). These theme-notes are decorated with chains or 'ripples' of stereotyped figurations (or 'movements') which increase in complexity with each succeeding variation of the pìobaireachd, until each theme-note may be transformed into a swift ripple of up to ten notes (ex.7*c–e*). Finally the pìobaireachd is rounded off nowadays with a return to the calm mood of the ground. The main pìobaireachd movements are urlar (ground), siubhal, taorluath and crunluath, to which may be added the taorluath a-mach and crunluath amach. The ground itself may be followed by one or more variations of conventional melodic type before the pìobaireachd

Ex.7 Specimens of the movements in pibroch (over an octave drone on A and a)
From the piobaireachd The Macintyres' Salute (from Glen's Collection; variations up-dated by F. Collinson)

(a) Urlar (ground) Adagio

(b) Thumb variation

(c) Siubhal

(d) Taorluath

(e) Crunluath

variations proper. In the type known as a 'G pìobaireachd' the melody is in the key of G but is accompanied throughout by the drones sounding A. The apparent clash of keys adds a curious piquancy to the sound, and some of the finest pìobaireachd are composed in this implied bitonality.

The MacCrimmons were the supreme pìobaireachd composers and players for just over 250 years. After Donald Mór MacCrimmon, the most famous MacCrimmons were Patrick Mór (*c*1959–*c*1670), Patrick Òg (*c*1646–1730) and Donald Bàn MacCrimmon (1710–46). There were other notable piping families, the MacArthurs, Campbells and Rankines. After the death of the last of the great 'hereditary' MacCrimmon pipers, Donald Ruadh, in 1825, their piping tradition descended through their pupils, notably Iain Dall (i.e. blind) MacKay and his son Angus at Gairloch; and John and Angus MacKay in Raasay. The art of pìobaireachd all but perished in the repressive measures against the Highland way of life following the Jacobite rising about 1745. It was saved partly by the encouragement of piping in the new Highland regiments, formed towards the end of the 18th century, and partly by the formation in 1778 of the Highland Society of London, which instituted annual Scottish competitions in pìobaireachd playing. These continue to the present day.

Musical notation for Highland bagpipe music is loosely based on standard Western staff notation, but with several unique conventions. As noted above, the use of the name and staff-note 'a' refers to a chanter pitch closer to B♭ on modern instruments. A key signature of three sharps may be included simply to indicate the approximate pitches of the chanter, or it may be left out altogether on the basis that the chanter pitches are fixed. Stereotypical ways of writing ornaments are used (see ex.7 for those used in pìobaireachd) which indicate finger patterns rather than necessarily perceivable pitches; these gracings also give no rhythmic indications. Pipers learn to interpret this specialized notation as part of their training, and most pipers find it difficult to read standard Western staff notation.

Notation is often supported, or entirely supplanted, by the use of canntaireachd (lit. 'humming a tune'), a system of vocables indicating bagpipe melodies and specific gracings. Several systems of canntaireachd have been written down, including some associated with the MacCrimmons, and a very systematic method compiled *c*1800 by Colin Campbell. Most pipers today sing in quite loose forms of canntaireachd, but it remains an important form for teaching and musical discussions. Many of these loose canntaireachd syllables are similar to the vocables used in the choruses of Gaelic song.

Ceòl beag, unlike ceòl mór, includes many tunes also played on other instruments. The earliest publication of pipe tunes are to be found in 18th-century fiddle collections, but more significant early publication was in collections such as Patrick MacDonald's Highland Vocal Airs (D1784) and Donald MacDonald's Collection of Quicksteps, Strathspeys, Reels and Jigs (C1828). By the mid-19th century, army regiments supported pipe bands, each developing (and many eventually publishing) its own material.

Pipe marches are largely in 2/4 or 6/8 and, although there was considerable experimentation with expanded variation sets in the early 20th century, most have two parts followed by a single variation. These tunes are used by pipe bands for marching and in concert, by céilidh dance bands for round-the-room couple dances such as the Gay Gordons, Canadian Barn dance, etc., and by solo fiddlers and accordion players in listening medleys. Despite their wide currency among non-pipers, these tunes are classified as 'pipe' marches because the pitches used are possible on the chanter and because the large majority have been composed by pipers (e.g. Willie Lawrie, G.S. MacLennan, Duncan Johnstone and many others).

Pipe bands consist of a group of Highland pipers accompanied by side, tenor and bass drummers. They are found in both military and civilian contexts. Until the 1970s, the pipers generally played in unison but the best bands now include arrangements featuring a second part played a 3rd below the main melody line. The repertory of pipe bands emphasizes tunes of lesser complexity, as a strict unison sound is desired.

Pipe-band drummers are led by a drum-major responsible for arranging parts. Evidence from 19th-century descriptions points to a fairly simple set of standard beatings; in the 20th century these have been increasingly elaborate and some bands exhibit drummers with an astonishing degree of virtuosity. Drum beatings follow or complement the melodic rhythm of pipe tunes; modern drum majors make sophisticated use of silence, syncopation and dynamics. Drumming was transmitted entirely orally, often using an informal drum canntaireachd, until the mid-20th century, when drum scores based on the single-line notation system of the Basle school were introduced.

As in the case of pìobaireachd, pipe band music has, since the 19th century, dwelt in a world regulated by competitions and institutions (i.e. the Army School of Pipe, Royal Scottish Pipe Band Association). Partly influenced by the mid-20th-century folk revival, and partly in reaction against this regulated world, pipers began composing a significant body of new tunes which break rules concerning finger patterns, variation forms, and also introduce new rhythmic ideas. This trend, known as 'kitchen piping' for its informality, began in Canada but quickly gained popularity in Scotland, particularly among younger pipers. Public address systems also have brought a major change to the role of the Highland bagpipes in ensembles as it is now possible to balance the volume of this outdoor instrument with the softer fiddle, accordion, flute, clàrsach and voice.

In addition to the Highland bagpipe, Scotland has a variety of bellows-blown, or cauld wind, bagpipes. Historically, bellows-blown bagpipes are known from records concerning official pipers of Lowland burghs. These musicians played through the town at morning and evening, and at civic occasions. Cauld wind pipes had nearly died out by the mid-20th century but several have been revived, notably the Scottish small-pipes and the Border pipes. Both instruments are played in largest numbers by Highland pipers seeking an indoor instrument. These pipers simply transfer the Highland bagpipe repertory to the bellows-blown instrument. The Lowland and Borders Pipers Society (established 1984) seeks to revive repertory meant especially for bellows-blown instruments. There are now several important pipe makers, including Hamish Moore and Julian Goodacre,

3. 'A Highland Wedding at Blair Atholl': drawing by David Allan, pen and ink with watercolour, c1780 (private collection); the fiddler is Niel Gow, and the cellist his brother Donald as well as composers (e.g. Gordon Mooney) concentrating on Scottish bellows-blown pipes.

Much Scottish bagpipe music is esoteric and is listened to and understood principally by other pipers and a small number of expert listeners. Competitions form one of the major outlets for performance of both pìobaireachd and pipe band music, and a large proportion of competition audiences is made up of pipers. Pipe bands play more popularly for a large number of civic occasions, and solo pipers are often called on to perform at weddings and funerals.

The growth of phenomena such as kitchen piping and the use of both Highland and bellows-blown pipes in bands featuring other melody instruments has, in the late 20th century, created wider audiences for sustained piping performances. Despite the esoteric nature of the most advanced and complicated forms of bagpipe music, the Highland pipes have a strong cultural resonance for Scots; they are considered emblematic of Scotland by the rest of the world. The strong connection with Highland society before the Jacobite rebellions, the emotive presence of pipes for army personnel, and the unique nature of the instrument all add to the Highland bagpipe's status as a national cultural icon.

(ii) Fiddle. The fiddle is played throughout Scotland, with particular areas of concentration in the north-east and in Shetland, each of which has numerous fiddlers and a distinctive solo fiddle tradition. The west Highlands, though having a smaller number of players, also features a distinctive tradition of solo fiddle playing. Ubiquitous throughout Scotland is the presence of the fiddle in dance bands; stylistically, there is less regional differentiation here than in solo playing for a purely listening audience.

There are iconographic and literary records of string instruments as the feydl, rebec and croud in Scotland from about the 10th century; but the violin proper is first mentioned there at the beginning of the 18th century. The first collections of music for the instrument were mostly of song-tunes with instrumental variations, in which the violin was often an alternative to the flute or oboe.

There are records of noted Scots fiddle players living before the accredited date for the appearance of the violin in Scotland: Patrick Birnie (*b c*1635), Nichol Burne ('the violer', probably also 17th century) and the famous fiddler-freebooter James Macpherson, composer of Macpherson's Rant (b 1675; hanged 1700). His fiddle, which he broke in pieces on the gallows (it is now in the Macpherson Museum, Newtonmore), was made on the Italian model.

From the mid-18th century, Scottish fiddle playing was dominated for nearly 100 years by the Gow family. The first of the Gow fiddlers was Niel Gow (1727–1807; fig.3). He is thought to have developed the trick of the up-bow stroke which characterizes the 'Scotch snap' of the strathspey. This style of playing has been handed down among fiddle players of the Gow tradition. One of the best known of the 20th century is Hector MacAndrew at Aberdeen, whose grandfather was taught by a pupil of Niel.

Niel Gow was the accredited composer of some 70 tunes; but some of these attributions are doubtful, the Gows being notorious for appropriating other people's tunes as their own. Of Niel's four sons the youngest, Nathaniel (1766–1831), even more famous as a composer than his father, is probably best known for his descriptive piece Caller Herrin, to which Lady Nairne wrote the well-known words of the same title. His Largo's Fairy Dance, commonly used in the eightsome reel, is also eternally popular. Nathaniel Gow was also significant as a publisher of fiddle tunes.

Of the Gows' contemporaries, one of the best known player composers for the fiddle was William Marshall (1748–1833). His compositions include Miss Admiral Gordon's Strathspey (to which Robert Burns wrote the words Of a' the airts the wind can blaw), The Marquis of Huntly's Farewell, Craigellachie Bridge (ex.8) and other favourites. Other fiddle composers were Angus Cumming (*b c*1750), Isaac Cooper (*c*1755–1820), John Bowie (1759–1815), Robert Petrie (1767–1830) and 'Red Rob' Mackintosh (1745–1807), all of whom published collections of their own compositions.

In the 19th and early 20th century, the most famous Scottish fiddler was James Scott Skinner (1843–1927). His background included both traditional fiddle playing and dancing, as well as training in Western classical violin playing. This combination led to a virtuosic performance style, along with composition of violinistic variation sets, owing much to the world of the orchestral violin. Skinner published over 600 original tunes, some of which are so embedded in the national repertory in oral tradition that players are unaware of their composer. Skinner was highly influential through his live performances as a soloist in concert parties and, continuing after his death, through his numerous commercial recordings. He was the first Scottish fiddler to record commercially, starting in 1899.

Ex.8 Strathspey (south east Scotland)
William Marshall: Craigellachie Bridge

In the 20th century, the fiddle declined in popularity after Skinner's death; this coincided with a rise in the popularity of free-reed instruments. After a major competition sponsored by the BBC in 1969, and in tune with the revival of song in Scotland and elsewhere, interest in the fiddle has grown enormously. Important performers of the last 30 years of the 20th century include Hector MacAndrew, Bill Hardie, Angus Grant, Aly Bain and Alasdair Fraser. Some sections of the fiddle world have taken a strong interest in related traditions, especially in Cape Breton and Donegal, both of which have strong communities of emigrant Scots.

The repertory of Scottish fiddlers consists primarily of dance tunes (marches, strathspeys, reels, jigs, waltzes and, to a lesser extent, hornpipe) but slower tunes meant for a non-dancing audience are important as well; these include song airs (from both Gaelic and Scots songs), other slow airs and the slow strathspey. This latter genre, first developed by William Marshall, features an exaggerated form of the jagged rhythms of the dance strathspey. Many slow strathspeys are in B♭ and E♭ major, keys not normally associated with traditional fiddling in Scotland. The typical medley for solo listening sets begins with a slow tune, and continues with a march, strathspey and reel or other combination of genres increasing in speed. These medleys generally feature tunes all in the same key. In contrast, medleys required for dance music generally include 3 to 4 tunes of the same genre.

Some writers have highlighted the use of scordatura tunings by Scottish and Shetland fiddlers, but these are rarely heard in modern times. Instruments in use today are standard European violins, often amplified in public performance through a variety of electronic means. Although there are makers of electric violins in Scotland, this form of the instrument has not been taken up by many traditional players.

(iii) Clàrsach. Unlike the bagpipe and fiddle traditions, the harp in Scotland suffered a complete break in its tradition. Having flourished during the Lordship of the Isles with clan chiefs retaining official harpists, the role of the chief's harper declined throughout the 17th century. The last known professional harper, Murdoch MacDonald, retired in 1734 from service to MacLean of Coll. Another important late harper of this era was Roderick Morrison, harper to the MacLeod chiefs at Dunvegan Castle.

The instruments played by early Scottish harpers are represented by the 'Queen Mary' and 'Lamont' harps (National Museum of Antiquities, Edinburgh) and the 'Trinity' or 'Brian Boru' harp (Library of Trinity College, Dublin). Bannerman judges that, on internal evidence of decoration of these instruments, they came from a west Highland workshop before the 16th century. Lowland households before the 18th century also supported harpers, mainly playing gut-strung instruments. The range of modern clàrsachs is variable but is normally from G to a♭''' with semitone tuning blades.

The repertory of pre-18th century harpers playing either wire- or gut-strung instruments is largely unknown. Modern scholar-performers, notably Alison Kinnaird and Keith Sanger, have pieced together evidence based on harp tunes in fiddle manuscripts, tunes with harpers' names in their titles, a few pieces known to be harp compositions (notably those in the Angus Fraser manuscript), along with evidence from Irish and Welsh sources. Kinnaird, along with harpists including Ann Heymann and the harp duo 'Sileas' have attempted modern reconstructions of early harp music; though musically successful, their connection to older traditions is somewhat speculative.

Collinson, Bannerman (F1991) and others have speculated that 16th-century harpists in the Highlands and Islands played variation forms which were taken up by pipers to form pìobaireachd. This is particularly likely in the case of official musicians to the MacLeod chiefs at Dunvegan, who included both prominent harpers (e.g. Roderick Morrison) and the MacCrimmon family of pipers.

Revival of the gut-strung clàrsach began in the late 19th century, when Lord Archibald Campbell instituted a competition for clàrsach playing to accompany Gaelic song at the National Mod; he also had instruments made in conjuction with this new competition. An arpeggiated accompaniment style developed which was related more closely to Western orchestral use of the concert harp than to anything known about indigenous Scottish harp music. Marjorie Kennedy Fraser and her daughter popularized this approach and it was further supported when the Clàrsach Society (Comunn na Clàrsach) was formed in 1931. The Clàrsach Society has provided instruments available for hire, individual lessons, publications of harp arrangements and performance opportunities. In the 1980s, influenced by the historical work of Alison Kinnaird and the increasing popularity of traditional music generally, a new generation of harpers engaged in further experimentation, playing fiddle and pipe melodies on both gut- and wire-strung harps, and using a more syncopated and varied style of accompaniment. Patsy Seddon and Mary MacMaster have been most prominent in the movement. As with other traditional instruments, electronic versions of the clàrsach have been used but only to a limited extent.

(iv) Free reed instruments. Free reed instruments, especially the mouth organ and accordion, are among the most popular instruments of traditional music in Scotland. Despite their popularity, free-reed instruments have low prestige because of their relatively recent origin and lack of art-music associations.

Jimmy Shand (b 1908), ex-miner turned accordion salesman and then professional musician, single-handedly boosted the popularity of the button-key accordion in the mid-20th century to the point that the fiddle was largely supplanted as the main instrument of the dance. The piano-key accordion has since become dominant. Bobby MacLeod of the Isle of Mull was one of the most distinguished accordion players who also played the Highland bagpipes. He interpreted, on the accordion, aspects of piping style, particularly the swing of march playing, and some gracings. At the same time, he and others experimented with jazz harmonies in using accordion chord structures for accompaniment of Gaelic song airs. At the end of the 20th century, the piano accordion continues to flourish in Scotland, with prominent exponents including Jim Johnstone, Freeland Barbour and Phil Cunningham. The accordion is primarily associated with dance music, but it is also used in concert bands. The concertina retains a minority-interest position but has a devoted following and some virtuoso performers.

7. EDUCATION. Traditional music education has ranged from apprenticeship systems among clan pipers to self-teaching during immersion in oral tradition, to individual and group lessons of varying formality. Traditional musicians sometimes speak of the need of heroes to emulate; in the modern world, this takes place through a combination of personal contact and learning from recorded sound. Alan Lomax referred to Scotland's traditional music as 'bookish' and reference, though not strict adherence, to written collections forms an important part of literate musicians' education.

After a mid-20th century lull in traditional music conventionally attributed to the rise of disco dancing, there appeared a generation lacking personal contact with traditional musicians. As interest grew in the 1970s and 1980s, newer organizations (e.g. The Traditional Music and Song Association) joined older ones (e.g. Clàrsach Society) in providing workshops and lessons in traditional music. The Feisean movement in the Highlands and Islands has been most successful in encouraging young musicians and giving them contact with some of the best teachers of traditional music.

Tom Anderson began a highly successful programme of fiddle teaching in Shetland in the 1970s, as well as helping to initiate summer vacation classes at Stirling University. His first and most famous pupil was Aly Bain, but he went on to found a schools fiddle programme in Shetland that is still flourishing at the end of the 20th century. Bagpipe instruction has also entered schools, particularly in the Highlands, and the College of Piping and Piping Centre in Glasgow, along with the Army School of Piping in Edinburgh, have provided further formal training for pipers. Other instruments and singing have not been so well supported in formal primary and secondary education. In 1996, the Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama began a degree course for traditional musicians featuring principal studies in accordion, bagpipes, clàrsach, fiddle, Gaelic song, Scots song and percussion. The presence of this course has done much to bolster formal recognition for traditional music throughout Scotland.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A Manuscript sources. B Vocal collections. C Dance and instrumental collections. D Gaelic collections. E Pìobaireachd collections. F Studies.

A: MANUSCRIPT SOURCES

in modern notation unless otherwise stated

Rowallan MS, French 6-line tablature, lute, 1612–28, GB-Eu

Straloch MS, French 6-line tablature, lute, 1627–9, lost, transcr. of more important tunes by G.F. Graham, 1847, En

Skene MS, French 4-line tablature, mandora, 1630–33, En; transcr. G.F. Graham in Dauney (1838)

Lady Margaret Wemyss MS, songs, tablature, lute, 1643–8, En

Guthrie MS, Italian 4-line tablature, vas da braccia, 1675–80, Eu; transcr. H.M. Willsher (*c*1942)

Panmuir [Panmure] MSS, some vn, some cittern, *c*1680, En

Newbattle Abbey MS (Lessones for ye Violin), 1680, En

Blaikie MSS, va da gamba, 1682–92, lost, 40 of the 122 tunes transcr. A.J.Wighton, GB-DU

Balcarres Lute Book MS, 1692–4, En

Atkinson MS, 1694, Society of Antiquaries Library, Newcastle upon Tyne

Leyden MS, French 6-line tablature, lyra viol, *c*1695, University Library, Newcastle upon Tyne, transcr. G.F. Graham, En

A ?17th-century lutebook, Mr, photocopy, SA

Scone Palace MS, 6–line tablature, lyra viol, and part modern notation, *c*1700, Earl of Mansfield's collection, Scone Palace, Perth

James Gairdyn MS, vn, 1700, En

James Thomson MS, some rec, some vn, 1702, En
Agnes Hume MS, 1704, En
Francis Collinson/George Bowie MS, fiddle, 1705, En, 78ff
Mrs. Crockat's MS. 1709, lost, mentioned by W. Stenhouse in his notes to J. Johnson, The Scots Musical Museum (Edinburgh, 1820)
Margaret Sinkler MS, hpd, 1710, En, over 100 tunes
Waterston MSS, 1715–19th century, Waterston family collection, Edinburgh, photocopies, En
George Skene MS, fiddle and pipe, 1717, En
Cuming MS (For the Violin: Patrick Cuming his Book), 1723–4, En
McFarlan MSS, 1740, vol.i (243 tunes), lost; vols.ii (150) and iii (292), En
A Collection of the Newest Country Dances perform'd in Scotland, 1740, Ob
Joseph MacDonald MS (A Compleat Theory of the Scots Highland Bagpipe), 1803, Eu
McLean-Clephane MS, 1816, En
Angus Fraser MS, n.d., GB-Eu

B: VOCAL COLLECTIONS

J. Forbes: Songs and Fancies to Three, Four or Five Parts (Aberdeen, 1662, 2/1666)
T. D'Urfey: Pills to Purge Melancholy (London, 1698–1720)
W. Thomson: Orpheus Caledonius, or A Collection of the Best Scotch Songs (London, *c*1725, rev. 2/1733
A. Stuart: Musick for Allan Ramsay's Collections of Scotch Songs (Edinburgh, *c*1726)
R. Bremner: Thirty Scots Songs for a Voice and Harpsichord . . . the Words by Allan Ramsay (Edinburgh, 1757, enlarged 3/*c*1795)
J. Oswald: A Collection of the Best Old Scotch and English Songs set for the Voice (London, *c*1761–2)
N. Stewart: A Collection of Scots Songs (Edinburgh, *c*1762)
J. Johnson: The Scots Musical Museum (Edinburgh, 1787–1803, rev. 1853/R by W. Stenhouse and D. Laing) [with notes]
D. Corri: A New and Complete Collection of the Most Favourite Scots Songs (Edinburgh, 1788, 4/*c*1795)
W. Napier: A Selection of the Most Favourite Scots-Songs (London, 1790–94)
P. Urbani: A Selection of Scots Songs (Edinburgh, 1792–*c*1794)
G. Thomson: A Select Collection of Original Scotish Airs for the Voice (London, 1793–7)
J. Ritson: Scotish Songs (London, 1794) [with Historical Essay]
J. Elouis: A Selection of Favourite Scots Songs (Edinburgh, 1807)
J. Hogg: Jacobite Relics (Paisley, 1819–21/R)
R.A. Smith: The Scottish Minstrel (Edinburgh, 1820–24)
W. Motherwell: Minstrelsy Ancient and Modern (Glasgow, 1827)
G.F. Graham: The Songs of Scotland (Edinburgh, 1848–9) [with notes]
G.F. Graham: Lyric Gems of Scotland (Glasgow, 1856)
F.J. Child: English and Scottish Popular Ballads (Boston, 1882–98/R)
D. Balfour: Ancient Orkney Melodies (Edinburgh, 1885)
R. Ford: Vagabond Songs and Ballads (Paisley, 1899)
J.C. Dick, ed.: The Songs of Robert Burns (London, 1903)
A.E. Moffat: The Minstrelsy of the Scottish Highlands (London, 1907)
J.M. Diack and others: The Festival Series of Scottish Songs (Glasgow, 1925)
G. Greig and J.B. Duncan: Last Leaves of Traditional Ballads and Ballad Airs, ed. A. Keith (Aberdeen, 1925)
J. Ord: Bothy Songs and Ballads (Edinburgh, 1930)
J.L. Campbell: Highland Songs of the '45 (Edinburgh, 1933)
B.H. Bronson: The Traditional Tunes of the Child Ballads with their Texts According to the Extant Records of Great Britain and America (Princeton, NJ, 1959–72)
E. MacColl: Personal Choice of Scottish Folksongs and Ballads (New York, 1963)
E. MacColl: Folksongs and Ballads of Scotland (New York, 1965)
R. Orr: The Kelvin Series of Scots Songs (Glasgow, 1965)
C.T. Davie and G.C. MacVicar: The Oxford Scottish Song Book (Oxford, 1969)
P. Kennedy: Folksongs of Britain and Ireland (London, 1975)
E.B. Lyle: Andrew Crawfurd's Collection of Ballads and Songs (Edinburgh, 1975)
E. MacColl and P. Seeger: Travellers' Songs from England and Scotland (Knoxville, 1977)
N. Buchan and P. Hall: The Scottish Folksinger (Glasgow, 1978)
E. Lyle, P. Shuldham-Shaw and others, eds.: The Greig-Duncan Folk Song Collection (Aberdeen and Edinburgh, 1981–2000)
D. Williamson and L. Williamson: A Thorn in the King's Foot: Stories of the Scottish Travelling People (Harmondsworth, 1985)
N. Gatherer: Songs and Ballads of Dundee (Edinburgh, 1986)
D. Groves: James Hogg Selected Poems and Songs (Edinburgh, 1986)
E. MacColl and P. Seeger: Till Doomsday in the Afternoon: the Folklore of a Family of Scots Travellers, the Stewarts of Blairgowrie (Manchester, 1986)
A. McMorland, ed.: Herd Laddie o' the Glen: Songs of a Border Shepherd Willie Scott, Liddesdale Shepherd and Singer (Edinburgh, 1988)
E. McVicar: One Singer One Song: Songs of Glasgow Folk (Glasgow, 1990)
S. Douglas, ed.: Come Gie's a Sang: 73 Traditional Scottish Songs (Edinburgh, 1995)
S. Douglas: Lines Upon the Water: a Collection of Original Songs (Cork, 1997)

C: INSTRUMENTAL AND DANCE COLLECTIONS

J. Playford: The English Dancing Master (London, 1651/R as The Dancing Master)
H. Playford: A Collection of Original Scotch Tunes (London, 1700, rev. 2/1701)
J. Young: A Collection of Original Scotch Tunes (London, *c*1700–05)
A. Craig: A Collection of the Choicest Scots Tunes (Edinburgh, 1730)
J. Oswald: A Curious Collection of Scots Tunes (Edinburgh, *c*1739, enlarged 2/*c*1775)
J. Oswald: The Caledonian Pocket Companion (London, *c*1742–60)
F. Barsanti: A Collection of Old Scots Tunes (Edinburgh, 1742)
W. M'Gibbon: A Collection of Scots Tunes (Edinburgh, 1742, enlarged 3/1755)
B. Thumoth: Twelve Scotch and Twelve Irish Airs with Variations (London, *c*1745)
R. Bremner: A Curious Collection of Scots Tunes (Edinburgh, 1759)
R. Bremner: A Collection of Scots Reels and Country Dances (Edinburgh, 1759–61)
N. Stewart: A Collection of the Newest and Best Reels and Country Dances (Edinburgh, 1761–2)
F. Peacock: Fifty Favourite Scotch Airs for a Violin (Aberdeen, 1762)
N. Stewart: A New Collection of Scots and English Tunes (Edinburgh, *c*1762)
C. M'Lean: A Collection of Favourite Scots Tunes (Edinburgh, 1772)
D. Dow: A Collection of Ancient Scots Music (Edinburgh, *c*1775)
D. Dow: Thirty-Seven Reels (Edinburgh, *c*1775)
D. Dow: Twenty Minuets (Edinburgh, *c*1775)
J. Aird: A Selection of Scotch, English, Irish and Foreign Airs (Glasgow, 1775–*c*1897)
A. Cumming: A Collection of Strathspey or Old Highland Reels (Edinburgh, 1780, 3/*c*1798)
A. MacGlashan: A Collection of Strathspey Reels (Edinburgh, 1780)
A. MacGalshan: A Collection of Scots Measures (Edinburgh, 1781)
A. MacGlashan: A Collection of Reels (Edinburgh, 1786)
J. Bowie: Collection of Strathspey Reels and Country Dances (1789)
W. Napier: Napier's Selection of Dances and Strathspeys (London, *c*1795)
D. MacDonald: A Collection of Quicksteps, Strathspeys, Reels and Jigs arranged for the Highland Bagpipe (Edinburgh, 1828)
J. McLachlan, ed.: The Piper's Assistant: a new Collection of Marches, Quicksteps, Strathspeys, Reels and Jigs (Edinburgh, 1854)
J. Kerr: Collection of Merry Melodies for the Violin (Glasgow, n.d.)
E. Koehler and son: Violin Repository of Dance Music (Edinburgh, 1881–85)
K.N. MacDonald: The Skye Collection of the Best Reels and Strathspeys Extant (Edinburgh, 1887)
J. Glen: The Glen Collection of Scottish Dance Music (Edinburgh, 1891–5) [with critical matter]
W.C. Honeyman: The Strathspey, Reel and Hornpipe Tutor (Edinburgh, 1898)
J.S. Skinner: The Scottish Violinist, Consisting of Strathspeys, Reels, Pibrochs, Marches, Hornpipes, Pastoral Airs, Violin Solos, Slow Airs, etc., etc. (Glasgow,1904)
Scottish Country Dance Society: The Scottish Country Dance Book (Glasgow, 1924–)
J.M. Henderson: Flowers of Scottish Melody Especially Arranged for Violin and Piano (Glasgow, 1935)
W. Ross: Pipe-Major W. Ross's Collection of Highland Bagpipe Music (London, *c*1950)

A. Fitchet: The Angus Fitchet Scottish Dance Album (Glasgow, 1954)
Scots Guards: Standard Settings of Pipe Music (London, 1954–81)
J. MacFadyen: Bagpipe Music (Glasgow, *c*1966)
W. Bryson: The Edcath Collection of Highland Bagpipe Music (Edinburgh, *c*1968)
T. Anderson and T. Beorgeson: Da Mirrie Dancers: a Book of Shetland Fiddle Tunes (Lerwick, 1970)
R. Cooper: Shetland Music, i–iv (Lerwick, 1971–72)
D. Richardson and others: Music and Song from the Boys of the Lough (Edinburgh, 1977)
A. Harper: Music for the Scottish Dance Band (Wick, 1979)
J. Hunter: The Fiddle Music of Scotland (Edinburgh, 1979)
A.J. Hardie: The Caledonian Companion (London, 1981)
G. Mooney: A Collection of the Choicest Scots Tunes (1982)
T. Anderson: Ringing Strings: Traditional Shetland Music and Dance (Lerwick, 1983)
D. Johnson: Scottish Fiddle Music in the Eighteenth Century: a Music Collection and Historical Study (Edinburgh, 1984)
F. Barbour: The Hills of Atholl (Muirhead, Angus, 1985)
The Cavendish Collection (Edinburgh, 1985)
G. Mooney: A Tutor for the Cauld Wind Pipes (1985)
B. Murray: The Bon-Accord Collection of Scottish Music (Aberdeen, 1985–)
R. Wallace: The Glasgow Collection of Bagpipe Music (Glasgow, 1986)
T. Anderson and Shetland's Young Heritage: 'Gie's an A': Shetland Fiddle Tunes (Lerwick, 1986)
I. Hardie: A Breath of Fresh Airs (Nairn, 1986, 2/1991)
A. Kinnaird: The Harp Key: Music for the Scottish Harp (Temple, Midlothian, *c*1986)
I. Powrie: Original Compositions by Ian Powrie for Fiddle and Accordion (Forfar, 1986)
G. Dixon: The Lads Like Beer: the Fiddle Music of James Hill (Pathead, Midlothian, 1987)
J. Sutherland: The Flow Country (Edinburgh, 1987)
Battlefield Band: Forward with Scotland's Past (Temple, Midlothian, 1988)
B. Hardie: The Beauties of the North (Edinburgh, 1988)
A. MacDonald: The Moidart Collection (1991)
R.B. Mathieson: Marking Time: Tunes for the Highland Bagpipe (Glasgow, 1990)
I. Hardie, ed.: The Nineties Collection: New Scottish Tunes in Traditional Style (Edinburgh,1995)
P. Cunningham: The Cunningham Collection (Beauly, 1995)
M. Seattle, ed.: The Master Piper: Nine Notes that Shook the World: a Border Bagpipe Repertoire Prick'd Down by William Dixon AD 1733 (Newbiggin-by-the-Sea, Northumberland, 1995)

D: GAELIC COLLECTIONS

P. MacDonald: A Collection of Highland Vocal Airs (Edinburgh, 1784)
A. Campbell: Albyn's Anthology (Edinburgh, 1816–18)
S. Fraser: Airs and Melodies peculiar to the Highlands of Scotland and the Isles (Edinburgh, 1816/R)
F. Dun: Orain na h-Albain (Edinburgh, 1848)
K.N. MacDonald: The Gesto Collection of Highland Music (Leipzig, 1895)
Gunn and M. MacFarlane: Songs and Poems by Rob Donn Mackay (Glasgow, 1899)
K.N. MacDonald: Puirt-a-Beul, or Mouth Tunes (Glasgow, 1901)
M. Kennedy Fraser and K. MacLeod: Songs of the Hebrides (London, 1909–21)
A. Gilchrist: 'A Note on the Modal System of Gaelic Tunes', JFSS iv (1910–13), 150–53
F. Tolmie: A Collection of Gaelic Songs (Journal of the Folk Song Society, iv, 1911)
Coisir a'Mhoid: The Mod Collection of Gaelic Part Songs (Glasgow, 1912–53)
B.H. Humble: The Songs of Skye (Inverness, 1934)
D.M. Morison: Ceol Mara: Songs of the Isle of Lewis (London, 1935)
G. Calder, ed.: Songs of William Ross in Gailic and in English (Edinburgh, 1937)
W. Matheson, ed.: The Songs of John MacCodrum, Bard to Sir James MacDonald of Sleat (Edinburgh, 1938)
K.C. Craig, ed.: Orain Luaidh Mairi Nighean Alasdair (Glasgow, 1949)
M.F. Shaw: Folksongs and Folklore of South Uist (London, 1955)
H. Creighton and C. Macleod: Gaelic Songs in Nova Scotia (Ottawa,1964)
J.L. Campbell and F. Collinson: Hebridean Folksongs (Oxford, 1967–81)
D. Bowman, ed.: The Old Songs of Skye (London, 1977)
Comunn Gaidhealach Leodhais: Eilean Fraoich: Lewis Gaelic Songs and Melodies (Stornoway, 1982)
J.C. Watson, ed.: Gaelic Songs of Mary MacLeod (Edinburgh, 1982)
J.L. Campbell, ed.: Songs Remembered in Exile – Traditional Gaelic Songs from Nova Scotia Recorded in Cape Breton and Antigonish Country in 1937 with an Account of the Causes of Hebridean Emigration, 1790–1835 (Aberdeen, 1990)
V. Bryan, ed.: Ceòl nam Feis: a collection of songs and music from the Scottish Gaelic tradition complete with translations and source notes (Portree, 1996)

E: PÌOBAIREACHD COLLECTIONS

D. MacDonald: A Collection of the Ancient Martial Music of Caledonia called Pìobaireachd (Edinburgh, 1822)
A. MacKay: A Collection of Ancient Pìobaireachd (Edinburgh, 1838)
W. Ross: Pipe Music (1875)
General Thomason: Ceol Mor (Glasgow,1893)
D. Glen: A Collection of Ancient Pìobaireachd (Edinburgh, early 20th century)
Communn na Pìobaireachd: Pìobaireachd (Glasgow, 1925–90)
G.F. Ross: Some Pìobaireachd Studies (Glasgow, 1926)
G.F. Ross: A Collection of MacCrimmon and other Piobaireachd (Glasgow, 1929)
A. Campbell, ed.: The Kilberry Book of Ceol Mor (Glasgow, 1953)
R. Ross: Binneas is Boreraig (Edinburgh, 1959) [with 11 discs, played by Malcolm Macpherson]
W. Matheson, ed.: The Blind Harper (Edinburgh, 1970)
Pìobaireachd Society: Coel Mor Composed During the Twentieth Century (Glasgow, n.d.)

F: STUDIES

A. Ramsay: Poems (Edinburgh, 1802) [with 21 song-tunes]
W. Dauney: Ancient Scotish Melodies, with an Introductory Enquiry Illustrative of the History of the Music of Scotland (Edinburgh, 1838)
D. Campbell: A Treatise on the Language, Poetry and Music of the Highland Clans (Edinburgh, 1862)
J.F. Campbell: Canntaireachd: Articulate Music or Piper's Language (Glasgow, 1880)
D. Baptie: Musical Scotland (Paisley, 1894)
J. Glen: Early Scottish Melodies (Edinburgh, 1900)
J.S. Skinner: A Guide to Bowing Strathspeys, Reels, Pastoral Melodies, Hornpipes, etc. (London, *c*1900)
J.C. Dick, ed.: Notes on Scottish Song, by Robert Burns (London, 1908/R)
P. Grainger: 'Collecting with the Phonograph', JFSS, iii (1908–9), 147–242
W. Honeyman: Strathspey Players Past and Present (London, 1922)
J.S. Skinner: My Life (Dundee, 1923)
H.M. Willsher: Music in Scotland during Three Centuries, 1450–1750 (diss., U. of St Andrews, Scotland, *c*1942)
H.M. Willsher: A Collection of Airs Manuscripts and other Sources (MS, GB-SA, *c*1942) [suppl. to above]
H.G. Farmer: A History of Music in Scotland (London, 1947/R)
O. Andersson: 'The Shetland Gue, the Welsh Crwth and the Northern Bowed Harp', Budkavlen, iv (1956), 1–22
J.P. and T.M. Flett: Traditional Dancing in Scotland (London, 1964)
F. Collinson: The Traditional and National Music of Scotland (London, 1966)
T. Knudsen: 'From the Folk Scene', DFS Information (1968), nos. 3–4
T. Knudsen: 'Ornamental Hymn/Psalm Singing in Denmark, the Faroe Islands and the Hebrides', DFS Information (1968), no.2
B.H. Bronson: The Ballad as a Song (Berkeley, 1969)
T. Knudsen: 'Calum Ruadh, Bard of Skye', DFS Information (1969), no.1
H.M. Shire: Song, Dance and Poetry of the Court of Scotland under King James VI (Cambridge,1969)
H. Henderson: 'Scottish Tradition 1: Bothy Ballads: Music from the North East', TNGM 109 (1971) [disc notes]
J. MacInnes and others: 'Scottish Tradition 2: Music from the Western Isles', TNGM 110 (1971) [disc notes]
G.S. Emmerson: Rantin' Pipe and Tremblin' String: a History of Scottish Dance Music (London, 1971)
D. Buchan: The Ballad and the Folk (London, 1972)

P. Cooke: 'Problems of Notating Pibroch: a Study of "Maol Donn"', Scottish Studies, xvi (1972), 41–59
J. MacInnes and others: 'Scottish Tradition 3: Waulking Songs from Barra', TNGM 111 (1972) [disc notes]
D. Johnson: Music and Society in Lowland Scotland in the Eighteenth Century (London, 1972)
C. O'Boaill: Bardachd Shilis na Ceapaich (Edinburgh, 1972)
C. O'Baoill: 'Some Irish Harpers in Scotland', Transactions of the Gaelic Society of Inverness, no.47 (1972), 143–4
P. Cooke: 'Scottish Tradition 4: Shetland Fiddle Music', TNGM 117 (1973) [disc notes]
W. Boag: 'The Tenor Drum, Drums on Parade, the Rise of the Scottish Style of Side Drumming, Pipers in the Scottish Regiments', Bulletin of the Military Historical Society (1975)
F. Collinson: The Bagpipe: the History of a Musical Instrument (London, 1975)
H. Henderson and A. Munro: 'Scottish Tradition 5: The Muckle Sangs: Classic Scots Ballads', TNGM 119/D (1975) [disc notes]
M. Macleod: 'Scottish Tradition 6: Gaelic Psalms from Lewis', TNGM 120 (1975) [disc notes]
A.D. Shapiro: The Tune-Family Concept in British-American Folk Song Scholarship (diss., Harvard U., 1975)
P.N. Shuldham-Shaw and E.B. Lyle: 'Folk-Song in the North-East', Scottish Studies, xviii (1975), 1–37
P. Cooke: 'The Pibroch Repertory: Some Research Problems', PRMA, cii (1975–6), 93–102
J. Porter: 'Jeannie Robertson's "My Son David": a Conceptual Performance Model', Journal of American Folklore, lxxxix (1976), 7–26
E. Bassin: The Old Songs of Skye: Frances Tolmie and her Circle (London, 1977)
P. Cooke: 'The Fiddle in Shetland Society', Scottish Studies, xxii (1978), 69–81
F.G. Andersen and T. Pettitt: 'Mrs Brown of Falkland: A Singer of Tales?', Journal of American Folklore, xcii (1979), 1–24
B. Whyte: The Yellow's on the Broom: the Early Days of a Traveller Woman (Edinburgh,1979)
A. Campsie: The MacCrimmon Legend: the Madness of Angus Mackay (Edinburgh, 1980)
R.D. Cannon: A Bibliography of Bagpipe Music (Edinburgh, 1980)
E.J. Cowan: The People's Past: Scottish Folk, Scottish History (Edinburgh, 1980)
A.J. Haddow: The History and Structure of Ceol Mor (Glasgow, 1982)
J.W. Irvine: Up-Helly-Aa: a Century of Festival (Lerwick, 1982)
J. MacInnes: 'Scottish Tradition 7: Calum Ruadh – Bard of Skye', TNGM 128 (1982) [disc notes]
M.A. Alburger: Scottish Fiddlers and their Music (London, 1983)
E. Hobsbawm and T. Ranger, eds.: The Invention of Tradition (Cambridge, 1983)
J. Porter, ed.: The Ballad Image: Essays Presented to Bertrand Harris Bronson (Los Angeles, 1983)
D. Thomson, ed.: The Companion to Gaelic Scotland (Oxford, 1983)
J. MacInnes: 'Scottish Tradition 8 : James Campbell of Kintail, Gaelic Songs', TNGM 140 (1984) [disc notes]
D. Buchan: 'The Historical ballads of the Northeast of Scotland', Lares (1985) 4, 443–51
P.R. Cooke: The Fiddle Tradition of the Shetland Isles (Cambridge, 1986)
R.D. Cannon: The Highland Bagpipe and its Music (Edinburgh, 1988)
P.R. Cooke: 'Scottish Tradition 9 : The Fiddler and His Art', TNGM 141 (1988) [disc notes]
W. Donaldson: The Jacobite Song (Aberdeen, 1988)
J. Porter: The Traditional Music of Britain and Ireland: A Research and Information Guide (New York, 1989)
W.B. McCarthy: The Ballad Matrix: Personality, Milieu and the Oral Tradition (Bloomington, NJ, 1990)
E. MacColl: Journeyman: an Autobiography (London, 1990)
B. Whyte: Red Rowans and Wild Honey (Edinburgh, 1990)
J. Bannerman: 'The Clarsach and the Clarsair', Scottish Studies, xxx (1991), 9–12
T. Morton: Going Home: The Runrig Story (Edinburgh, 1991)
A. Munro: 'The Role of the School of Scottish Studies in the Folk Music Revival', Folk Music Journal 6 (1991), 132–68
J.M. Neil: The Scots Fiddle: Tunes, Tales and Traditions (Moffat, Scotland, 1991)
C.A. Shoupe: 'Music and Song Traditions in Scotland: Springthyme Records', Journal of American Folklore, civ (1991), 182–97
M. Bennett: Scottish Customs from the Cradle to the Grave (Edinburgh, 1992)
S. Douglas, ed.: The Sang's the Thing: Scottish Folk, Scottish History (Edinburgh, 1992)
H. Henderson: Alias MacAlias: Writings on Songs, Folk and Literature (Edinburgh, 1992)
D. McLaughlin: Donegal and Shetland Fiddle Music (Cork, 1992)
J. Purser: Scotland's Music: a History of the Traditional and Classical Music of Scotland from Early Times to the Present Day (Edinburgh, 1992)
K. Sanger and A. Kinnaird: Tree of Strings (Crann nan teud): a History of the Harp in Scotland (Temple, Midlothian, 1992)
A. Clark: Aly Bain: Fiddler on the Loose (Edinburgh, 1993)
N. Mackinnon: The British Folk Scene: Musical Performance and Social Identity (Buckingham, 1993)
R.D. Cannon, ed.: Joseph MacDonald's Compleat Theory of the Scots Highland Bagpipe (c1760) (Glasgow, 1994)
C. Gore and others, ed.: The Scottish Fiddle Music Index: The 18th and 19th Century Printed Collections (Musselburgh, Scotland, 1994)
D. Murray: Music of the Scottish Regiments: Cogath no sith (war or peace) (Edinburgh, 1994)
K. Simpson: Burns Now (Edinburgh, 1994)
D. Williamson: The Horsieman: Memories of a Traveller 1928–1958 (Edinburgh, 1994)
F. Buisman: 'Melodic Relationships in Pibroch', British Journal of Ethnomusicology, iv (1995), 17–39
R.D. Cannon: 'What we can Learn about Pìobaireachd?', British Journal of Ethnomusicology, iv (1995), 1–15
S. Eydmann: 'The Concertina as an Emblem of the Folk Music Revival in the British Isles', British Journal of Ethnomusicology, iv (1995), 41–9
J. Porter and H. Gower: Jeannie Robertson: Emergent Singer, Transformative Voice (Knoxville, TN, 1995)
J.F. and T.M. Flett: Traditional Step-Dancing in Scotland (Edinburgh, 1996)
A. Munro: The Democratic Muse: Folk Music Revival in Scotland (Aberdeen, 1996)
T. Neat: The Summer Walkers: Travelling People and Pearl-Fishers in the Highlands of Scotland (Edinburgh, 1996)
T.A. McKean: Hebridean Song-Maker: Iain MacNeacail of the Isle of Skye (Edinburgh, *c*1997)
I. Cameron: The Jimmy Shand Story (Edinburgh, 1998)
J.G. Gibson: Traditional Gaelic Bagpiping 1745–1945 (Montreal, 1998)
G.W. Lockhart: Fiddles and Folk: A Celebration of the Re-Emergence of Scotland's Musical Heritage (Edinburgh, 1998)
B. Mackenzie: Piping Traditions of the North of Scotland (Edinburgh, 1998)

KENNETH ELLIOTT (I), PEGGY DUESENBERRY (II, 1, 3, 7), FRANCIS COLLINSON/PEGGY DUESENBERRY (II, 2, 4–6)

[General Information]
书名=新格罗夫音乐与音乐家辞典　第2版　22
作者=斯坦利·萨迪（STANLEY SADIE）主编
页数=922
SS号=13762898
DX号=
出版日期=2012.10
出版社=长沙湖南文艺出版社